

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

000)

L.L. DI. 1000

L. Gen. B. 54d. Shipping 1000

Cw. U. K.

120

M 35

REPORTS,

OF CASES RELATING TO

MARITIME LAW;

CONTAINING ALL THE

DECISIONS OF THE COURTS OF LAW AND EQUITY

IN

The United Kingdom,

AND SELECTIONS FROM THE MORE IMPORTANT DECISIONS

IN

The Colonies, and the United States.

---

EDITED BY

JAMES P. ASPINALL, Barrister-at-Law.

---

VOL. III.,

New Series, from 1875 to 1878.

(VOL. VI., O.S.)

LONDON:

HORACE COX, 10, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C.

1878.

---

LONDON :

PRINTED BY HORACE COX, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C.

---

INDEX

TO

NAMES OF THE CASES

REPORTED IN THIS VOLUME.

ADAMS v. HALL .....	page 406	DAIOS, THE.....	page 477
ADRIATIC, THE .....	16	DE BUSSCHE v. ALT.....	584
ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.....	178	DE GASTRIG v. THE MESSY DOCKS AND HAR- BOUR BOARD .....	500
ALLKINS AND ANOTHER v. JUPE, PEMBROKE, OFFENHEIM, AND CHOIST .....	449	DELTA, THE .....	256
AMSTEL, THE .....	488	DOLPHIN, THE .....	287
ANDERSON AND OTHERS v. MORICE .....	31, 290	DOOLAN v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY ...	485
ANEROID, THE .....	418	DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE ..	101, 393
ANGLO-INDIAN, THE .....	1	EARL OF EGLINTON, THE, v. NORMAN AND ANOTHER .....	471
ANNA, THE.....	237	EARL SPENCER, THE .....	4
ANNANDALE, THE.....	383, 489, 504	EASTERN BELLE, THE .....	19
ARTHUR AVERAGE ASSOCIATION, Re (DE WINTON AND Co.'s CASE) .....	245	EASTMAN v. HARRY .....	117
ATWOOD (app.) v. CASE (resp.) .....	84	EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSUR- ANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED) .....	154
AUSTRALASIAN INSURANCE COMPANY, THE (apps.), v. WILLIAM TOWNLEY JACKSON (resp.) .....	26	ELLIS AND CO. v. GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (LIMITED) .....	581
AUSTRALIAN AGRICULTURAL COMPANY, THE, v. SAUNDERS .....	63	EMMA, THE.....	218
BANDA AND KIEWEE BOOTY .....	66	ELMORE AND ANOTHER v. HUNTER .....	555
BARING v. STANTON .....	246, 294	ENGLISHMAN, THE .....	506
BARROW, Ex parte ; Re WORSDELL.....	387	EVANGELISTRIA, THE .....	264
BARWICK v. BURNYEAT, BROWN, AND COMPANY ...	376	EVANS v. BULLOCK AND OTHERS .....	552
BAYLEY AND OTHERS v. CHADWICK .....	453, 543	EXPERT, THE .....	381
BELGIC, THE .....	348	FALCON, THE .....	566
BELINOPHON, H. M. S. ....	58	FISHER v. SMITH .....	211, 492
BIOLA, THE .....	125	FRANCONIA, THE .....	295, 415, 435
BLESSING, THE .....	561	FRENCH AND ANOTHER v. GERBER AND OTHERS	403
BLISS v. GOMEZ .....	456	FRENCH AND SONS v. NEWGRASS AND COMPANY	574
BORROWMAN AND OTHERS v. DEAYTON .....	303	FYEMOORD, THE .....	218
BOWES AND OTHERS v. SHAND AND OTHERS .....	461	GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREFT; KREFT v. THOMPSON .....	26
BOYNE, THE .....	352	GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY .....	92, 260,
BRELAUNE v. BARWICK .....	355	GENERAL BIRCH, THE .....	99
BRIDGWATER, THE .....	506	GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. LON- DON AND EDINBURGH SHIPPING COMPANY ....	454
CADIZ, THE .....	332	GLANNIRANTA, THE .....	830
CARGO vs SCHILLER .....	226, 439	GLEANEER, THE .....	506
CARGO vs WOOSUNG .....	50, 239	HANNA, THE .....	508
CARLOTTA, THE BARQUE .....	456	HELVETIA, THE .....	46
CARMARON CASTLE, THE .....	607	HICKOX AND ANOTHER v. ADAMS AND ANOTHER	142
CAROLINA, THE .....	141	HINGSTON v. WENDT .....	126
CATTARINA CHIASEARO, THE .....	170	HOPPER v. BURNES AND OTHERS.....	149
CITY OF BERLIN, THE .....	491	HOBLOCK, THE .....	421
CITY OF BROOKLYN, THE .....	230	HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER .....	85, 220
CITY OF CAMBRIDGE, THE .....	307	INNISFAIL, THE .....	337
CLUTHA, THE .....	225	JAMES ARMSTRONG, THE .....	46
CLYDE NAVIGATION COMPANY v. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.....	390	JENNIE S. BARKER, THE.....	42
COHEN v. DAVIDSON.....	374	JOHN BOYNE, THE.....	342
COHN v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COM- PANY .....	248	JONES BROTHERS, THE.....	476
COMMERCIAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY v. BOULTON AND ANOTHER .....	111	JONES v. ADAMSON AND ANOTHER.....	253
CORINNA, THE .....	307	JULIA FISHER, THE .....	380
CORBIN v. COULTHARD .....	546n	JULINA, THE .....	264
CORRE v. WRIGHT .....	254	JUNO, THE .....	217
CUNNINGHAM v. DUNN AND ANOTHER.....	595
CYBELE, THE .....	478, 532
CYPRINA, THE .....	378

NAMES OF CASES.

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER page 280, 427, 481	RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.....page 242, 521
KLEINWORT AND OTHERS v. THE CASSA MARI- TIMA OF GENOA..... 358	ROBINSON v. PRICE AND OTHERS ..... 321, 407
KOPITOFF v. WILSON ..... 163	ROSARIO, THE ..... 334
LAKE MEGANTIC, THE ..... 382	BOWENA, THE ..... 506
LAKE ST. CLAIR, THE, v. THE UNDERWRITER ... 361	ST. OLAF, THE ..... 268, 341
LEASK v. SCOTT..... 352, 469	SANGUINETTI v. THE PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY..... 300
LEWIS v. GRAY ..... 136	SARAH, THE ..... 542
LIMERICK, THE ..... 206	SARPEDON, SPECIE ex ..... 509
LISTER v. VAN HAANSBERGEN..... 145	SAUNDERS AND ANOTHER v. BERING AND ANOTHER 133
LOCKHART v. FALK ..... 8	SCETRE, THE ..... 269
LOHRE v. AITCHINSON AND ANOTHER..... 445	SCHILLER, CARGO ex ..... 226, 439
LUTSCHER v. COMPTOIR D'ESCOMPTE DE PARIS... 209	SCHUSTER AND OTHERS v. FLETCHER ..... 577
MACKENZIE v. WHITWORTH..... 81	SCUTTON v. CHILDS ..... 373
MARIE CONSTANCE, THE ..... 505	SECRET, THE ..... 337
MAUDE, THE ..... 338	SFACTORIA, THE ..... 271
McMILLAN AND SON v. LIVERPOOL AND TEXAS STEAMSHIP COMPANY (LIMITED) AND C. GRIM- SHAW AND CO..... 579	SHAND AND OTHERS v. BOWES AND OTHERS 208, 367
MEDINA, THE..... 219, 305	SHEPHERD AND OTHERS v. KOTTGEN AND OTHERS 544
MEIKLEHEID (app.) v. WEST (resp.)..... 129	SIMPSON AND OTHERS v. THOMSON AND OTHERS 567
METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS COM- PANY ..... 813, 407	SISTERS, THE ..... 122, 224
MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS..... 324	SKIBLANDER, THE..... 558
MINTO, Ex parte ..... 323	SMITH AND OTHERS, Re ..... 259
MIRABITA v. THE IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK..... 591	SPECIE ex SARPEDON ..... 509
MOORE v. HARRIS..... 173	SPINDRIFT, THE ..... 42
MORICE v. ANDERSON AND OTHERS ..... 290	STANTON v. RICHARDSON ..... 23
MORRIS v. LEVISON ..... 171	STAR OF INDIA, THE ..... 261
MOULD AND ANOTHER v. ANDREWS AND OTHERS 329	STEEL AND ANOTHER v. THE STATE LINE STEAM- SHIP COMPANY ..... 516
M. MOXHAM, THE ..... 95, 191	STEEL v. LESTER AND LILEE ..... 537
NATIVE PEARL, THE..... 515	STONE AND OTHERS v. OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF GOTHENBURG..... 152
NILE, THE ..... 11	STORY, Ex parte ..... 549
NORMA, THE ..... 272	STRATHNAVER, THE..... 113
N. P. NELSEN, THE ..... 169	STRIBLEY v. IMPERIAL MARINE INSURANCE COM- PANY ..... 134
NUGENT v. SMITH ..... 87, 198	SWALLOW, THE ..... 371
OGG AND ANOTHER v. SHUTER ..... 77	SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUN- CAN FOX AND CO..... 166, 245
OMOA AND CLELAND COAL AND IRON COMPANY, THE, v. HUNTLEY..... 501	THIS AND OTHERS v. BYERS..... 147
OFFENHEIM v. FRASER..... 146	THOMAS LEA, THE ..... 260
OQUENDO, THE ..... 558	THRIFT v. YOLE..... 357
ORIGINAL HARTLEPOOL COLLIERIES COMPANY (LIMITED) v. GIBB ..... 411	TRANSIT, THE ..... 233
PALMER v. ZARIFI BROTHERS ..... 540	TULLY v. HOWLING ..... 368
PARANA, THE..... 220, 399	TURNBULL AND OTHERS v. JANSON ..... 433
PENNSON v. THE COMMERCIAL ASSURANCE COM- PANY ..... 275	TWO BROTHERS, THE ..... 99
PECKFORTH CASTLE, THE..... 511, 533	UNDERWRITER, THE..... 361
PETER DEE GROSSE, THE ..... 195	UNION BANK OF LONDON, THE, v. LENANTON ... 600
PHILOTAKE, THE ..... 512	VICTORIA, THE ..... 230
POLYMEDE, THE ..... 124	VIRGO, THE ..... 285
PRINCETON, THE ..... 562	VIVAR, THE ..... 308
QUEEN'S AVERAGE ASSOCIATION, Re; Ex parte LYNES ..... 576	WATSON, Ex parte; Re LOVE ..... 396
RAFFAELLUCCIA, THE ..... 505	WETTERHORN, THE ..... 168
RANKEN v. ALFARO ..... 309	WHITWORTH AND CO., Re; Ex parte BLACKBURN; Ex parte GIBBS AND CO. ..... 74
RIO GRANDE DO SUL STEAMSHIP COMPANY (LIMITED), Re The ..... 424	WILLIAMS AND OTHERS v. THE NORTH CHINA INSURANCE COMPANY ..... 342
	WILSON AND ANOTHER v. GENERAL SCREW COL- LIER COMPANY ..... 536
	WINGATE, BIRRELL, AND CO., v. FOSTER ..... 598
	WOOSUNG, CARGO ex ..... 50, 239
	ZETA, THE ..... 73

ERRATUM.

In head-note to The Star of India, p. 261, read "and cancelled by charterers by reason of delay occasioned by the collision," before "should be taken into consideration."

REPORTS

OF

All the Cases Argued and Determined by the Superior Courts

RELATING TO

MARITIME LAW.

[Priv. Co.]

THE ANGLO-INDIAN.

[Priv. Co.]

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ON APPEAL FROM THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY OF ENGLAND.

April 28 and 29, 1875.

(Present: The Right Hons. Sir J. W. COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir MONTAGUE SMITH, Sir
R. P. COLLIER, and Sir H. S. KEATING.)

THE ANGLO-INDIAN.

Collision—Lights—Duty to show light astern to following ship.

It is primâ facie the duty of an overtaking ship to keep out of the way of a ship ahead of her, but if the latter ship sees another approaching her from a direction where her lights are not visible, and which vessel she has reason to suppose does not, in fact, whether keeping a good look-out or not, see her and is likely to come into collision with her, it is her duty to give some warning to the overtaking ship, not necessarily by exhibiting a light, but by some signal, such as the firing of a gun, the showing a light, or otherwise, which will indicate her whereabouts to the overtaking ship, and call the attention of that ship to the danger of a collision. (a)

THIS was an appeal from a decree of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Phillimore, Knight, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, in a cause of damage promoted in that court by the respondents, the owners of the brigantine Excel and of the cargo laden on board her; and also by the personal representatives of her late master, and others of the crew of the Excel, against the barque Anglo-Indian, of which the appellants were owners, for the recovery of damages arising out of a collision between the said two vessels.

The Excel was a brigantine of 210 tons register, or thereabouts. The Anglo-Indian was a barque of 440 tons register.

The collision happened about 2.30 a.m. on the 14th April 1874, in the Bay of Biscay, about fifty miles south by west of Cape Finisterre.

The wind at the time was blowing a gale from the north-north-west, and the night was dark and cloudy, with passing showers.

The case set up in the court below on behalf of the respondents, as stated in their petition, was, that the Excel, whilst in the prosecution of a voyage from Swansea to Barcelona, was hove to on the starboard tack, under double-reefed mainsail and mainstay sail, heading about west, and fore-reaching at the rate of between one and two knots an hour, making considerable lee way. The regulation lights were said to be duly placed and burning brightly at the time. Shortly before 2.15 a.m. a green light—which afterwards proved to be that of the Anglo-Indian—was observed astern of the Excel, and distant about 300 yards. The Anglo-Indian, it was alleged, instead of keeping out of the way of the Excel, approached her in a direction which involved risk of collision, and exhibited her red light to those on board the Excel; and, as it was further alleged, although the Anglo-Indian was loudly hailed from the Excel, and a light was exhibited over the stern of the Excel, the Anglo-Indian ran into and struck the Excel upon the stern, and did her so much damage that she shortly afterwards foundered and was lost, together with her cargo and everything then on board her. Upon this occasion the master was unfortunately drowned.

The case on the part of the appellants was, that on the occasion in question the Anglo-Indian, bound from London to Jamaica, was close-hauled on the starboard tack under reefed upper topsails, foresail, and foretopmast staysail, heading about west, and making about five knots an hour. Her proper regulation lights were duly exhibited and burning brightly, and a good look-out was being kept.

Under these circumstances, about 2.30 a.m., on the 14th April, the hull of the Excel was made out a very short distance ahead and a little on the starboard bow of the Anglo-Indian. The helm of the Anglo-Indian was thereupon immediately put hard astarboard, but it was impossible to avoid a collision, and the stem of the Anglo-Indian struck the Excel on the port side of her stern.

The respondents alleged that the collision was caused by the negligence of those on board the Anglo-Indian, and by reason of their neglect to keep a proper look-out and to keep the Anglo-Indian out of the way of the Excel.

The appellants denied the statements of the respondents that a light was exhibited over the stern of the Excel and that the Anglo-Indian was

(a) See notes to The Earl Spencer, post, p. 4.—ED.
VOL. III., N. 8.

PRIV. CO.]

THE ANGLO-INDIAN.

[PRIV. CO.]

hailed, and attributed blame to those on board the Excel for improperly neglecting to keep a good look-out, for improperly neglecting to take any measures to show the position of the Excel to those on board the Anglo-Indian, and for improperly neglecting to observe the provisions of article 20 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

The evidence was taken orally in open court before the learned judge of the court below, who was assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity Corporation. The learned judge found the Anglo-Indian alone to blame for the collision, giving his reasons as follows:

Sir R. Phillimore.—There is no question at all as to the duty of the Anglo-Indian, that is clearly prescribed by the 17th article: "Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel;" and her defence for not keeping out of the way, as I understand it, is that the night was so dark that it was the duty of the Excel to have shown a light over her stern, and that if she had done so the collision would not have taken place. But on the evidence I am satisfied that the night was not of the character described by the Anglo-Indian witnesses. I am satisfied that the Excel ought to have been visible to those on board the Anglo-Indian at the distance that she says, viz., at the distance of at least 300 or 400 yards, and that if there had been a proper look-out on board the Anglo-Indian—and in my opinion and the opinion also of the Elder Brethren there was not—she would have seen the Excel in time to have got out of her way, and to have crossed her stern by star-boarding at an earlier period. The question, therefore, does not arise, nor does the court intend to discuss it, whether in the present state of the sailing regulations it would or would not have been the duty of the Excel to have shown a light over her stern, because I am satisfied, as I have already said upon the evidence, that this vessel ought to have been visible to those on board the Anglo-Indian at a sufficient time to have avoided the collision. And, indeed, there is a dilemma out of which the Anglo-Indian, in my judgment, would find it difficult to escape, even if she had not been going at a speed of about six knots an hour, she being the overtaking vessel. She was going about six knots, and that rate of speed would only be justifiable if she could have seen a vessel in sufficient time to get out of her way. I am satisfied upon the evidence, as I have already said, that if there had been a proper look-out this vessel would have been seen in due time to have prevented the collision, and therefore I pronounce the Anglo-Indian alone to blame. The cross action must be dismissed.

From the decree made in accordance with the above judgment the owners of the Anglo-Indian appealed for the following among other reasons:

1. Because the evidence taken in the court below shows that the collision was attributable to the negligence of those on board the Excel.

2. Because those on board the Excel neglected to keep a good look-out.

3. Because those on board the Excel neglected to take any measures to show the position of the Excel to those on board the Anglo-Indian.

4. Because on the evidence adduced by the respondents themselves it is evident that those on board the Excel considered it necessary to show a light over the stern, and that no light was shown in time to give those on board the Anglo-Indian warning.

5. That the learned judge ought to have held the Excel to blame for neglecting to show a light to indicate her position to the Anglo-Indian.

6. Because the collision was not occasioned by any negligence of those on board the Anglo-Indian.

Butt, Q.C. and R. E. Webster, for the appellants.—It was the duty of those on board the Excel to have kept a better look-out. It was, further, their duty to have exhibited a light over the stern of the Excel in sufficient time to have given warning to the Anglo-Indian and to have enabled her to keep out of the way of the Excel. This duty arises out of the general maritime law, which requires a ship, being approached by another ship from such a direction that the former is not as visible as the latter, to exhibit a light or give a signal so as to warn the approaching vessel:

The Iron Duke, 4 Notes of Cases, 94, 585; 9 Jur. 476; The Osmanti, 7 Notes of Cases, 509.

And this duty is continued and enforced by the 20th article of the regulations for preventing collisions, which provides that "nothing in these rules shall exonerate any ship or the owner or master, or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper look-out, or of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or by the special circumstances of the case." The duty to exhibit a light being under such circumstances an obligation of the general maritime law, was a "precaution required by the ordinary practice of seamen." There is no obligation to carry a fixed light over the stern, but a light should be shown in proper time as a signal.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the respondents.—There is no duty to exhibit any light except those provided by the regulations. By article 2, it is expressly provided that the lights therein provided, and "no others," shall be carried, and to find that it was the duty of a sailing vessel to carry more than the side lights at night would be an overruling of the regulations. But even if there was such a duty, it can only arise when there is danger of collision, and in the present case there was no reason to apprehend danger until the ships were close together, and then the green light was actually shown. Those on board the Excel kept a bad look-out.

Butt, Q.C., in reply.

April 29, 1875.—The judgment of the court was delivered by Sir R. P. COLLIER.—This was a suit brought by the owners of the Excel, a brigantine of 210 tons, against the Anglo-Indian, a barque of 440 tons, in consequence of a collision, for which the Excel maintained that the Anglo-Indian alone was to blame. The collision took place in the Bay of Biscay, about fifty miles off Cape Finisterre, in the open sea, at between 2 and 3 a.m. in Dec. 1874. The Excel was going in a westerly direction, at about 1½ or 2 knots an hour. The Anglo-Indian was proceeding at a rate of somewhere about 6 knots an hour in the same course, behind the Excel. The Anglo-Indian ran into the stern of the Excel, and the Excel was sunk. The learned judge of the Admiralty Court has found that the Anglo-Indian was alone to blame.

PRIV. CO.]

THE ANGLO-INDIAN.

[PRIV. CO.]

The question involved in this case is chiefly one of fact, and their Lordships repeat what, indeed, they have often said, that they are extremely loath to interfere with the finding of the court below on a question of fact, that court having had the advantage, which they have not, of seeing and hearing the witnesses, unless they come to a very clear conclusion that that finding was wrong.

Now, the findings of fact of the learned judge are these: First, with respect to the state of the night, in regard to which there was some conflicting evidence, those on board the Excel representing that the night, though dark, was clear, with passing clouds; those on board the Anglo-Indian representing that it was dark and very stormy, with rain, or, at all events, occasional rain. The learned judge says: "But on the evidence I am satisfied that the night was not of the character described by the Anglo-Indian witnesses. I am satisfied that the Excel ought to have been visible to those on board the Anglo-Indian at the distance that she says, viz., at the distance of at least 300 or 400 yards." Their Lordships accept that finding, and are of opinion that it is borne out by the evidence. Then the learned judge goes on and finds another most material fact, namely, "that if there had been a proper look-out on board the Anglo-Indian—and in my opinion," the learned judge says, "and the opinion also of the Elder Brethren, there was not—she would have seen the Excel in time to have got out of her way, and to have crossed her stern by starboarding at an earlier period." Their Lordships are of opinion that this finding also is entirely supported by the evidence. Indeed, in their Lordships' view, it might not be incorrectly said that upon the evidence there was no look-out at all on board the Anglo-Indian. The man upon the look-out says that when he first saw the vessel the Excel was "ahead, a little on the starboard bow;" that he first saw her masts; that when he saw the masts "she was at no distance at all," and "When I saw the masts," he says, "on the starboard bow, I wheeled round and sung out, 'There is a vessel on the starboard bow,' but I was too late; we were foul of her already." And he subsequently says, "I was foul of her the moment I saw her." He further adds that he saw no light whatever on board her, and also that he heard no hailing on board her, which other people on board the Anglo-Indian did hear. This certainly would point to the conclusion that the man Robinson, who was keeping the look-out, as it is supposed, on board the Anglo-Indian, was really keeping no look-out at all. That being so, and having reference to the 17th article, which provides that "Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel," their Lordships have no doubt whatever that the finding of the learned judge was right, that the Anglo-Indian was to blame.

The question remains, whether there was negligence contributing to the accident on the part of those navigating the Excel. On this subject there has been a discussion before their Lordships as to the meaning of three articles in the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea; those articles being the 2nd, the 19th, and the 20th. The second is to the effect that "the lights mentioned in the following articles," numbering them, "and no others, shall be carried in all weathers, from sunset to sunrise." Article 19 is in these terms: "In obeying and construing these rules, due regard must be had to all dangers of navigation; and due regard must also be had to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case rendering a departure from the above rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger." Then the 20th is: "Nothing in these rules shall exonerate any ship, or the owner or master, or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper look-out, or of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or by the special circumstances of the case." It has been argued on the one side that Article 2 is absolutely prohibitory to a vessel under any circumstances showing any light except the lights prescribed. On the other hand it has been argued that, although undoubtedly it would not be proper for a vessel under the circumstances in which the Excel was to keep up a fixed light at her stern, nevertheless, that under the circumstances of a vessel approaching her which would not be able to see her as well as she would see that vessel, it was her duty to have exhibited a light in time to avoid the collision; that she might have done this, but neglected to do so. Their Lordships do not entirely accept either of the views which have been thus expressed. Undoubtedly it is prima facie the duty of the overtaking vessel to keep out of the way of the vessel ahead of her, but their Lordships would be loath to lay it down that no duty whatever attaches under such circumstances as the present to the vessel ahead. If that vessel saw another approaching her, whether keeping a good look-out or not, which she had reason to suppose did not in fact see her, and was likely to come into collision with her, they would be loath to say that no duty was cast upon her. On the contrary, they are of opinion, under those circumstances, it would be her duty to give some warning to the approaching vessel, not necessarily by exhibiting a light, but by some signal, such as the firing of a gun, the showing a light, or otherwise, which would indicate her whereabouts to the approaching vessel, and call the attention of that vessel to the danger of a collision. The question, therefore, comes to this, whether in this case it has been established that the Excel, in the words of Article 20, did neglect any precaution which might be required by the ordinary practice of seamen, whereby she might have avoided the collision?

Now, the facts with reference to this subject may be taken to be these: The Excel saw the Anglo-Indian approaching at a distance of about 300 or 400 yards. That is found as a fact by the learned judge, and their Lordships think rightly. It appears that, simultaneously with her sighting this vessel she sighted the green light of the vessel, and that green light would then indicate that there was no danger of collision; that the Anglo-Indian would pass behind her stern. Very soon after both lights opened, the red and the green, and then undoubtedly there was imminent danger of a collision. The evidence on the part of the Excel is that, under those circumstances, after an ineffectual attempt to obtain the globe light, the green light was taken from the starboard side of the vessel and exhibited from the stern. That fact appears to be proved, and their Lordships are by no means satisfied upon the evidence that that green light was not shown in sufficient time to have enabled the overtaking vessel, if she had kept a good look-out, to have avoided the collision, which might have been in all probability prevented by a very trifling starboarding of the helm.

[Priv. Co.]

THE EARL SPENCER.

[Priv. Co.]

Under these circumstances, in their Lordships' view, it is not established that the Excel did neglect any precaution "which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen," and that no case of contributory negligence has been made out against her.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Admiralty Court, and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Stokes, Saunders, and Stokes.

Solicitor for the respondents, Thomas Cooper.

Thursday, June 17, 1875.

(Present: Sir JAMES W. COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir MONTAGUE SMITH, and Sir ROBERT P. COLLIER.)

THE EARL SPENCER.

Collision—Ship overtaken—Duty to show a light astern—Speed.

Although a ship is, under some circumstances, bound to keep a look-out astern, and to show a light or give a signal to another ship overtaking her and evidently unable to see her, nevertheless, where a steamer going at a high rate of speed in a fairway overtakes a sailing ship showing no light or signal, and does not see her until too near to avoid a collision, although keeping a good look-out, the steamer will be held alone to blame, if a lower rate of speed would have given the steamer time to have avoided the collision upon sighting the sailing ship.(a)

Thus was an appeal from a decree of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Phillimore, the learned Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, in a case of damage lately pending in that court, promoted by the respondents, as the owners, master, and crew of the Merlin, and the owners of her cargo, against the steamship the Earl Spencer, owned by the appellants, the London and North-Western Railway Company.

The cause arose out of a collision which took place between the two vessels about 4.30 a.m., on Saturday morning, the 17th Oct. 1874, within Holyhead Bay, North Wales, a little inside the breakwater. The Merlin was a schooner of 65 tons register, manned by a crew of four hands, all told, and whilst proceeding from Carmarthen to Liverpool with a cargo of tin plate, was in Holyhead Bay, inside the breakwater. The Earl Spencer, a paddle-wheel steamship of 431 tons register and 350 horse power, was proceeding from Greenore, Ireland, to Holyhead, with cargo and passengers.

The case for the appellants, as set up in their answer, was, that under the foregoing circumstances, the Earl Spencer proceeded on her said voyage in safety until about 4.25 a.m. on the 17th Oct. 1874, when the tide being ebb, the weather dark and rainy, and a gale blowing from the S.S.W., the Earl Spencer was rounding the breakwater of and entering Holyhead Outer Harbour, heading about S.½E., with her regulation lights burning brightly, and a good look-out being kept on board of her at such time; and after rounding the breakwater those on board the Earl Spencer suddenly sighted a vessel, which turned out to be the Merlin, with no lights visible, bearing about half a point on the starboard bow of the Earl Spencer, and close ahead of the latter vessel, and inside the breakwater. The captain of the Earl Spencer, thinking that the Merlin was a vessel at anchor, starboarded the helm of the Earl Spencer to go to the eastward, and outside of her and of the other shipping, there being several vessels at anchor to the westward of the Merlin; but, discovering immediately afterwards that the Merlin was under weigh, the captain of the Earl Spencer ordered the engines of that vessel to be stopped and reversed full speed, which order was immediately obeyed, but the time which had elapsed from the sighting of the Merlin was so short, and as the Merlin was steering a course which crossed the course of the Earl Spencer, that latter vessel was unable to avoid the Merlin, but her bow came into contact with the stern and port quarter of the Merlin. The captain of the Earl Spencer attempted to tow the Merlin into safety, but, after an unsuccessful attempt to do so, was compelled, through fear of risking the lives and property under his care, to abandon her, after taking on board her crew.

The appellants charged those on board the Merlin with improperly omitting, under the circumstances of the case to hail the Earl Spencer or to show a light, or to take any proper measures in due time to warn those on board the Earl Spencer of the proximity and position of the Merlin, although, from the relative position of the two ships, the regulation lights of the Merlin were not visible to those on board the Earl Spencer. The appellants further charged that those on board the Merlin neglected to comply with the provisions of articles 19 and 20 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The appellants further charged that the said collision was occasioned or contributed to by the negligence of those on board the Merlin.

The case of the Merlin, as stated in her petition was, that she was on the starboard tack, heading about S.E. by S., with a moderate gale from the S.S.W., weather rainy, and tide about one and a half hour's ebb, and was making about 1½ to 2 knots per hour, with her proper regulation lights duly exhibited and burning brightly; that she was under double-reefed mainsail, reefed topsail, standing jib, and fore staysail, and her crew were engaged in setting her double-reefed foresail, the captain having charge of the helm. That the Earl Spencer, with her three lights open, was seen at the distance of about a cable's length astern of the Merlin, and coming towards her under steam. The Earl Spencer, though loudly hailed from the Merlin, ran against and with her stern struck the Merlin a violent blow on

(a) This decision and the one preceding it, The Anglo-Indian (ante, p. 1), have the effect of overruling the decision of the Admiralty Court in The Earl Spencer (ante, vol. 2, p. 523), where it was decided that there was no duty upon any ship to exhibit lights other than the lights provided by the regulations, and that, in fact, such exhibition of lights would be contrary to law. Now, however, a vessel seeing another overtaking her will be bound to show a light or signal if there is danger of collision, and the headmost ship has reason to believe that the following ship cannot make her out; in effect, where the special circumstances or the ordinary practice of seamen require the exhibition of such a light. Whether the exhibition of the stern light is required will of course be a question for the court or the assessors in each case.—Ed.

PRIV. Co.]

THE EARL SPENCER.

[PRIV. Co.]

her port quarter, doing her a great deal of damage. The crew of the Merlin got on board the Earl Spencer, to save their lives, and the Earl Spencer, after an unsuccessful attempt to take the Merlin in tow, proceeded into Holyhead Harbour, and the Merlin and her cargo, and everything on board her, were totally lost.

The respondents charged those on board the Earl Spencer with neglecting to keep a proper look-out; with improperly neglecting to keep out of the way of the Merlin; with going too fast, considering the state of the weather, and not duly complying with the provisions of article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea; and that the said collision, and the consequent loss of the Merlin and her cargo, and everything on board her, were occasioned by the negligent and improper navigation of the Earl Spencer.

On the 11th Feb. 1875 the witnesses were examined orally in court before the learned judge of the court below, assisted by Trinity Masters. The respondents called only two witnesses, one of whom was the master of the Merlin, who admitted in cross-examination that if he had seen the Earl Spencer sooner than he did he would have shown a light over the stern of his vessel, but that, although he was steering, he had not looked round to see if any vessel was approaching astern of him till the Earl Spencer was only a cable's length off. The evidence of the appellants supported their case, as set up in their answer. The appellants also proved that the night was so dark that a vessel not showing lights could not be seen at a greater distance than from one to two cable lengths off, and that the Merlin was actually seen as soon as it was possible for anyone to make her out. It was contended by the appellants that, under the circumstances of the case, the speed of the Earl Spencer was justifiable and proper, and that it was the duty of those on board the Merlin to exhibit a light over the stern of that vessel in sufficient time to enable the Earl Spencer to keep out of the way of the Merlin, and that, even if the speed of the Earl Spencer had been less she could not, by reason of the neglect of duty on the part of the Merlin, have avoided the collision. The learned judge of the court below pronounced the Earl Spencer to blame, on the ground only that she entered the harbour at an improper speed, and, having reserved the question of the duty on the part of the Merlin to show a light, on the 18th Feb. 1875 delivered his judgment, finding that there was no duty on the part of the Merlin to exhibit a light, and that the Earl Spencer was alone to blame for the collision. The judgment of the learned judge will be found ante, vol. 2, p. 525; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 370.

From this decree the appellants appealed, for the following reasons:

1. Because the evidence showed that the Merlin neglected to keep a good look-out astern, as she was bound to do, under the circumstances of the case.

2. Because it was the duty of the Merlin, under the circumstances of the case, to exhibit a light over her stern, or make some signal in due time, to warn those on board the Earl Spencer of her proximity and position.

3. Because the neglect to exhibit a light or to make a signal was the neglect of a precaution required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or by the special circumstances of the case, within the meaning of article 20 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

4. Because it was admitted by the master of the Merlin that if he had seen the Earl Spencer sooner he would have shown a light.

5. Because the finding of the learned judge, founded upon the opinion of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, that there was not time or opportunity for exhibiting a light over the stern, is not in accordance with the evidence given by the master of the Merlin.

6. Because the evidence showed that the Earl Spencer kept a good look-out, and that it was impossible to discover the Merlin sooner than she actually did.

7. Because the speed of the Earl Spencer was not excessive under the circumstances of the case.

8. Because the evidence established that it was necessary for the Earl Spencer to enter the harbour at full speed.

9. Because a reduced speed on the part of the Earl Spencer would not have enabled her to avoid the collision.

James P. Aspinall (Butt, Q.C. with him), for the appellants.—It is clearly established by the evidence of the master of the Merlin that he could have seen the Earl Spencer earlier if he had looked round; that he did not look round soon enough to enable him to give us any warning of his position; that if he had looked round he would and could have given us some signal, as it was his practice to do so. There was a good look-out kept on board the Earl Spencer, and the Merlin was seen as soon as it was possible to see her; it was impossible to see vessels on that night at a greater distance than the length of a cable or two; the master of the Earl Spencer acted reasonably, under the circumstances—it would have been dangerous to port, and to have stopped and reversed, as soon as he made out that there was a ship, was not a course he was bound to carry out, as he reasonably believed the schooner was at anchor. The speed of the Earl Spencer was not excessive. Every vessel is entitled to go at full speed when there is no fog, so long as that speed does not necessarily endanger other vessels, and there was nothing here to endanger the Merlin if she had used the due precautions which we say she was bound to do. To rule otherwise would be to say that all steamships are bound to go at such a speed that they cannot overtake and endanger a slow sailing vessel on a dark night; and this would apply equally to ships on the high seas in the usual track of vessels. If the Merlin had given a signal, the Earl Spencer would have recognised her position in sufficient time to have avoided her, and, whatever the speed of the Earl Spencer, there would have been no collision. It would have been dangerous for her to go at less speed at the mouth of the harbour on such a dangerous coast. But even if the speed of the Earl Spencer was too great under the circumstances, with such less speed as she could have kept up with safety to herself, she would not have avoided a collision. She was just at the entrance to the harbour, when the Merlin was sighted. The lowest speed at which she could have gone with safety would have been half speed, which would have been about 7 or 8 knots. She could not have stopped herself after sighting the schooner in time to have

Priv. Co.]

THE EARL SPENCER.

[Priv. Co.]

avoided the collision any more than if she had been going at full speed. The distance was too short. If the Merlin had displayed a light or signal the Earl Spencer would have been enabled to avoid collision altogether, whatever her speed, either by stopping or by some other means. There was special reason for showing a light in that place, because the land is high, and the Merlin was between the Earl Spencer and the land, and consequently obscured by it, and not so visible as in the open sea. The Merlin was bound under the circumstances to show a light. It is the duty of every vessel, navigating a fairway on a dark night such as this, to show a light to any other vessel approaching astern of the former in such a direction that the leading vessel's regulation lights are not visible to the following vessel, more especially if the following vessel is a steamship and the followed a sailing ship, because the steamship must overtake the other. This duty arises from the regulations and from the maritime law: First. The regulations for preventing collisions contain no provision which prohibits the exhibition of a stern light or signal, but, on the contrary, they expressly provide such a light or signal must be exhibited, if required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or, in other words, by the maritime law or common law of the sea. Secondly. By the practice of seamen, and by maritime law, the exhibition of a light or signal over the stern of a ship, in such circumstances as the present, is obligatory, and in default thereof a ship is precluded from recovering for damage received. First. By article 2 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions, the lights mentioned, &c., "shall be carried in all weathers," and "no others." These lights are to be carried on board large vessels, and must be fixed and stationary, as distinguished from other temporary lights: (see Arts. 3, 4, 5.) Wherever lights cannot be fixed they are to be "exhibited" over the side in time to prevent collision (Arts. 6 and 9), thus showing that the rules contemplate a distinction between carrying and exhibiting. Where the rules say that "no other" lights are to be carried, it can only mean that, for the purposes intended by the rules, no other lights are to be carried—that is to say, there is to be no variation in the colour of the respective side lights or masthead light, as the red is intended to indicate port and green starboard; that there is to be no variation in the mode of fixing the lights, as the mode prescribed by the rules is the most effective for the purpose intended, viz., to prevent each light being seen across the bow. It is submitted that the rules indicate only the lights which are to be carried for the purpose of giving warning to vessels ahead, and the way of carrying such lights; they do not interfere with the occasional exhibition of other lights for particular purposes. Under article 9, a fishing boat would be bound to exhibit her red light to a vessel approaching abaft the beam. This contention is strongly corroborated by article 20, providing "nothing in these rules shall exonerate any ship, or the owner or master or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper look-out, or of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or by the special circumstances of the case." If nothing in the rules exonerates a ship from the neglect of a precaution required by the practice of seamen, or by the circumstances of the case, the observance of articles 2 and 5 will not exonerate the Merlin from neglect to show a light or signal astern if such signal was required by the ordinary practice of seamen in the special circumstances. In The Anglo-Indian (ante, p. 1; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 233), this question was considered, and the duty to show a light or signal was laid down, and in that case the facts requiring a signal were not so strong as here. Secondly. By the ordinary practice of seamen and special circumstances the Merlin ought to have shown a light and given a signal. The master's own admission shows that it was his practice. The groundwork of all rules as to the exhibition of lights and giving of warnings at night, whether at sea or on land, is that the thing or vehicle carrying the lights is an obstruction in a highway, blocking up the free right of passage and endangering the safety of other vehicles, whether the vehicle exhibiting the lights or giving the warning be in motion or stationary. The duty to exhibit a signal or give a warning does not depend upon the direction in which the vehicle is proceeding. I submit that every vessel, seeing another approaching her which she has reason to believe, from the direction in which she is approaching, does not see her and is likely to come into collision with her, is bound to give some warning to the approaching vessel. The duty to exhibit a light when in motion to vessels ahead is prescribed by the rules. So also with respect to vessels at anchor. But I submit that there is no practical distinction between vessels at anchor and a slow sailing vessel, when approached by a steamer from astern. It is equally an obstruction to the highway, and on a dark night it is next to impossible for a steamer to make it out until too near to avoid a collision. The difference of pace between a sailing vessel beating and a steamer is usually so great that the beating ship is, comparatively speaking, stationary, and this is a thing of course well known to seamen, and one against which they ordinarily provide. The duty of showing a light was laid down first in the case of vessels at anchor, and the duty of vessels in motion did not arise till within recent times, for the obvious reason that it was not until more modern times that commerce increased so enormously and steam made such a difference in speed. But the principle is the same in both cases, namely, that they are bound to give warning of an obstruction, and the obligation arose long before any statutory rules, and out of the maritime custom.

Baldessorni delle Assicurazioni Marittime, tom. 2, part 2, tit. 6, §§ 32, 33, 34;
Bynkershoek Quest. Jur. Priv. lib. 4, c. 22;
The Rose, 2 W. Rob. 1, 4;
The Columbine, 2 W. Rob. 33;
The Iron Duke, 2 W. Rob. 377; 4 Notes of Cases, 9 Jur. 476;
The Delaware v. Osprey, 2 Wallace Jr. 268;
The Louisiana v. Fisher, 21 Howard 1;
The Sazonia, Lush. 410;
The Olivia, Lush. 497.

These cases establish that it is the duty of a ship to exhibit to another approaching, a light. This duty exists wholly irrespective of the direction from which one vessel is approaching the other. The obligation would have existed even if the approach had been from the stern. In The Sazonia (ubi sup.), it is said: "No blame can attach to a vessel for running foul of another vessel

PRIV. Co.]

THE EARL SPENCER.

[PRIV. Co.]

if it has been impossible until the collision was inevitable." Hence, before the rules there was an obligation by maritime law to show a light or signal to vessels approaching from the stern when the night was so dark that vessels could only be seen at short distances; that this obligation is not taken away but rather enforced by the regulations; that the present case was most clearly one where a light or signal was necessary, the night being very dark, and the master admitting he would have shown it if he had seen the Earl Spencer; that he ought to have kept a look-out astern, so as to have seen the Earl Spencer sooner, and show a light in time; that the neglect to show the light or signal prevents the plaintiffs from recovering, as there would have been no collision if it had been shown.

Milward, Q.C. and E. O. Clarkson, for the respondents.—It is the duty of a following ship to keep out of the way of a ship ahead, and it is so prescribed by the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, article 15; but there is no duty imposed upon the leading ship save that of keeping her course. [Sir R. P. COLLIER.—Is there no duty on the part of the leading ship to keep a look-out astern.] There is a duty to look out ahead, but not astern. [Sir MONTAGUE SMITH.—It must be the duty of some one on board a leading ship in a fairway and crowded place to look round now and then, although she may not be bound to have the same vigilant look-out astern as ahead.] If the steamer had been going at a moderate pace there would have been time to have signalled when she was seen, so as to have prevented a collision. In The Anglo-Indian (ante, p. 1), the duty to show a light astern under some circumstances is laid down, and that is binding, but in the present case, if the steamer had come up at a proper pace, the schooner would have had time to give, and might have given, some signal, but it was impossible to do so in consequence of her excessive speed and the shortness of the time. There is, however, no law requiring a leading ship to have on board a signal to be shown astern. [Sir MONTAGUE SMITH.—But you must take all prudent measures, and would it not be a prudent thing to have some such light or signal?] We were clearly not bound to carry a riding light ready for exhibition. We had no opportunity of getting a light ready. We were entitled to assume that they would see us in due time, and that they would come at a pace which would enable them to take proper measures to avoid us. It was not our province to be supplied with extraordinary means of making our position known. If it had been required that sailing vessels should carry such signals or lights, the sailing rules would have so provided. [Sir MONTAGUE SMITH.—It is said that lights or signals are to be used in special circumstances in article 20.] That does not contemplate that sailing ships are to carry another light ready to supplement the ordinary fixed lights. It is expressly provided by the sailing rules, article 2, that no lights other than those prescribed in the specific articles named therein shall be carried. [Sir MONTAGUE SMITH.—Would you contend that if a vessel approaching you at a moderate rate of speed were unable to see you, and you knew it, and you were necessarily in a place of danger, you were not bound to take some precaution to make her aware of your position? There must be some duty to look astern.] We were bound to do that which any ordinary seamen taking ordinary care would do, but I submit that it was impossible to do anything under the circumstances; they came upon us too rapidly. [Sir R. P. COLLIER.—You could do nothing when you actually saw the steamer, but the master says if he had looked round he could have seen the steamer a long distance, and would have shown a light. Why did he not do so?] The real cause of the collision was, not the failure to give a signal on the part of the Merlin, but the excessive speed of the Earl Spencer; but for that they would have had ample time to have avoided us; if they had been going slower when they sighted us, they could have ascertained which way we were going, and then would have had time to shift their helm so as to clear us. If extra signals or lights are encouraged, there will be great confusion and danger ensuing therefrom. The only duty as to look out astern is, that a leading ship must keep such a reasonable look-out as will enable her to give warning to ships approaching at a proper speed.

Aspinall, in reply.—Even supposing the speed of the Earl Spencer was excessive, that would only make her half to blame; if a signal of her position had been given by the Merlin at an earlier period, the Earl Spencer, in spite of her speed, could and would have avoided the collision. When entering a channel where they are likely to be followed, ships are bound to keep some look-out so as to prevent ships coming into them astern by giving a signal, and some one on board ought to look astern sufficiently often to enable him to take precaution in reasonable time.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

Sir ROBERT P. COLLIER.—The material circumstances of this case are as follows:

The Merlin, a small coasting schooner of 65 tons, with four hands on board, was bound on a voyage from Carmarthen to Liverpool with a cargo of tin plate, but owing to a strong gale setting in from the S.S.W. she beat up for and entered Holyhead Harbour, and at the time of the collision, which was in the night or towards the morning of the 17th Oct., there being a strong wind and also a drizzling rain, she was going about two and a half knots an hour. The Earl Spencer is a steamer, carrying passengers and cargo, plying between Greenore and Holyhead, and was coming into Holyhead at the same time, taking very much the same course as the Merlin. According to her own showing the steamer entered the harbour of Holyhead at a speed of eleven knots an hour, and at about a cable's length or somewhat more she saw the Merlin in front of her. It appears that the captain came to the conclusion that the Merlin was anchored, although the Merlin showed no light; acting upon that view he put the helm of the Earl Spencer to the starboard, and the result was that in a short time he ran into the port quarter of the Merlin, and the Merlin was subsequently sunk. The court below has held that the Earl Spencer was alone to blame for this collision, owing to the excessive speed at which she entered the harbour. Their Lordships have no doubt that the finding of the court is right so far as the Earl Spencer is held to be to blame. Their Lordships entirely agree that she entered the harbour with a reprehensible and they may add a reckless speed, considering the time of the night, the state of the weather, and that a number of vessels were in the habit of anchoring very near to the path which she took.

PRIV. CO.]

LOCKHART v. FALK.

[Ex.]

It appears to their Lordships also that she is to blame for executing a wrong manœuvre. Seeing no light on board the Merlin, and seeing the Merlin in the usual route of the steamers, which would not be the usual anchoring ground, though not far from it, it appears to their Lordships that the captain was not justified in assuming that the Merlin was at anchor, and that he took a wrong manœuvre in starboarding his helm, whereas if he had attended to the advice of the mate in time, which was to port the helm, the collision would have been avoided.

The question remains whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the Merlin. The captain of the Merlin certainly says that he was at the helm, and that if he had looked round he probably could have seen the steamer some considerable distance off, and if so that he should have waived a light or adopted some mode of attracting her attention.

On the whole, however, their Lordships see no reason to dissent from the finding of the court below, that the Merlin was not guilty of contributory negligence such as would fix her with a portion of the blame of this collision. Their Lordships do not at all depart from the rule which they laid down in a recent case, The Anglo-Indian (ubi sup.). They are far from saying that it is never the duty of a vessel ahead to look behind. There may, undoubtedly, be circumstances of an exceptional character which may throw upon the vessel ahead the duty of looking behind, and, further, of giving some signal, by the way of a light or otherwise, to a vessel behind approaching her under circumstances under which there is reason to suppose that the after vessel does not see the vessel in front, and when there is danger of a collision. But in this case, although no doubt the night was a dark, and to a certain extent a stormy one, it appears to their Lordships that the Merlin could have been seen at a sufficient distance by the steamer for the collision to have been avoided if the steamer had gone at a proper speed (which, according to their Lordships' view, would be somewhere about one half or possibly less than half of the speed at which she was going). That being so, the captain of the Merlin might reasonably have supposed that steamers coming in his wake would (as their prima facie duty at all events was) keep out of his way, and their Lordships are not able to say that he was guilty of negligence contributing to the accident, simply because a look-out behind was not kept, and no signal was given to the approaching vessel.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the court below is right, and they would humbly advise her Majesty that it be affirmed, and that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, R. F. Roberts.

Solicitors for the respondents, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by H. LUSH and CYRIL DODD, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Jan. 20 and Feb. 12, 1875.

LOCKHART v. FALK.

Ship and shipping—Charter-party—Demurrage—Lien and exemption clause—Detention at port of loading—Action for by shipowner—Construction of charter-party.

By a charter-party between the plaintiff and the defendant, a vessel of the plaintiff was to proceed to W. and there load a cargo "in the customary manner," and forthwith proceed to R. and deliver the same. . . . "The cargo to be discharged in ten working days (weather permitting), commencing from the day after the ship has got into her proper discharging berth. Demurrage at 2l. per 100 tons register per day. . . . The ship to have an absolute lien on cargo for freight and demurrage, the charterer's liability to any clauses in this charter ceasing when he has delivered the cargo alongside the ship." It was proved that at W. the customary rate of loading was twenty tons a day.

In an action by the shipowner against the charterer for damages for undue detention of the vessel at the port of loading, the judge of the County Court held that the claim was not for demurrage, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for 44l. 2s. 8d., being damages for detention for sixteen days at the rate of 2l. 15s. 2d. per day. And on appeal therefrom, it was Held, by the Court of Exchequer (Cleasby, Pollock, and Amphlett, B.B.), dismissing the appeal, that the decision of the County Court judge was right, and that the demurrage and lien and exemption clauses in the charter party were applicable to the port of discharge only, and did not apply to the shipowner's claim for damages arising from delay on the part of the charterer at the port of loading.

Bannister v. Breslauer (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 418; 36 L. J. 195, C. P.; L. Rep. 2 C. P. 497), and Francesco v. Massey (L. Rep. 8 Ex. 101; ante, vol. 2, p. 594, n.), discussed and distinguished. (a)

(a) Since the above decision the Exchequer Chamber, in Kish v. Cory (ante, vol. 2, p. 593), have decided somewhat differently. In that case a charter-party between a shipowner and a charterer provided that the cargo was to be loaded in thirteen working days, and was to be discharged at not less than thirty-five tons per working day from the time of the ship being ready; that there should be ten days on demurrage for all like days above the said days, to be paid at the rate, &c.; and that the charterer's liability should cease when the ship was loaded, the captain or owner having a lien on cargo for freight and demurrage. An action was brought by the shipowner against the charterers for four days' demurrage at the port of loading beyond the thirteen clear working days allowed by the charter party, and it was held that the demurrage days related to the port of loading as well as the port of discharge, and that the charterer's liability for all such demurrage ceased when the ship was loaded. The distinction between that case and the present is that in the present there were no definitely named number of days for loading, consequently no days to which the term demurrage, as strictly applied, could refer at the port of loading; whereas in Kish v. Cory there was a definite number of loading days, and therefore, in accordance with the decisions, the demurrage clause was held to apply to both port of loading and discharge. It is to be regretted, however, that the meaning of the word "demurrage" should be so restricted. In the ordinary commercial sense it means

[Ex.]

LOCKHART v. FALK.

[Ex.]

The date given in the bill of lading is not conclusive evidence that the cargo was shipped before that date.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court of Yorkshire, and the following are the material facts of the special case stated by the judge for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer.

The plaintiff in the action entered a plaint for 50*l.*, and the following were the particulars annexed to the summons: "The plaintiff sues the defendant for that on the 16th March 1874, it was mutually agreed between Jno. Corran, the master of the plaintiff's vessel, the Zoe, of 138 tons, as agent for the plaintiff and the defendant, that the plaintiff's said vessel should go with all convenient speed to Western Point, and there load, from the defendant or his factors, a full and complete cargo of rock salt, in the customary manner (certain damages and accidents excepted), and demurrage was to be 2*l.* per 100 tons register per day. And the plaintiff's vessel proceeded to Western Point, and did all that was necessary to have the defendant's part of the charter fulfilled; but the defendant did not load the said vessel in the customary manner, but detained her twenty-nine days beyond the usual time, namely, from the 2nd to the 20th April last, both inclusive; and the claim for detention amounts to 52*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.*, and the plaintiff abandons the excess over 50*l.*, and sues for 50*l.* only."

The cause was heard on the 21st July 1874, when the following appeared to be the facts: The plaintiff is the owner of a vessel called the Zoe, and the defendant is a salt merchant. On the 16th March 1874, Jno. Corran, the master of the Zoe as agent for the plaintiff, and the defendant, entered into a charterparty, of which the following is a copy:

It is this day mutually agreed between Jno. Corran, master of the good ship or vessel called the Zoe . . . now in Runcoorn, and H. E. Falk, that the ship . . . shall, with all convenient speed, proceed to Western Point and load from the said H. E. Falk, or his factors, a full and complete cargo of rock salt, in the customary manner, say about 250 tons . . . and, being so loaded, shall therewith proceed to Biga Bridge and there deliver the same. Freight, at the rate of 10*s.* 3*d.* (say ten shillings and three pence) and five guineas gratuity, per delivered ton of 20*cwt.* being paid by the receivers of the cargo, on the delivery of the same, in cash, at the current rate of three months' London exchange. The cargo to be discharged in ten working days (weather permitting), commencing from the day after the ship has got into her proper discharging berth. Demurrage at 22 per 100 tons register per day. Penalty for non performance of this agreement, amount of freight. The ship to be addressed to the charterers' agents and brokers, at the ports of discharge, paying the usual addressed commission of the port ("the act of God," &c., excepted). The ship to have an absolute lien on cargo for freight and demurrage; the charterer's liability to any clauses in this charter any detention of a ship in port of loading or discharge, and whether any number of days have been named for loading or not; and a charter party is essentially a commercial document, drawn by commercial men, who may be presumed to intend the meaning which a word ordinarily conveys to their minds. It is to be hoped that the decision in Kish v. Cory will lead to a more liberal interpretation of the word, and that it will be held that whenever a lien is given for freight and demurrage, and the charter party exempts the charterer from liability when the cargo is loaded, the exemption extends to any detention at the port of loading. The charterer inserting these clauses is usually only an agent, and the master has ample security against the principal by means of his ceasing when he has delivered the cargo alongside the ship. Vessel to clear with charterer at Runcoorn. Liverpool, this 16th of March 1874.

(Signed) JOHN CORRAN, Per proo H. E. FALK,
THOS. LANCASTER.

The vessel proceeded to Weston Point on the 20th March, and on the 21st March notice was given to the defendant that the vessel was ready to load cargo. The captain called repeatedly afterwards at the defendant's office, and from time to time was promised that the cargo should be sent alongside, but none was, in fact, sent until the 11th April, and between that date and the 20th April, the defendant loaded on board the Zoe part of the cargoes of several lighters, and sent the rest of such cargoes to other vessels which he was loading in the same dock. On the 18th April the balance to complete the cargo was alongside the ship, but it had to be lifted on shore and weighed before it was loaded on board the Zoe, and the loading was not completed until the 20th April.

The ship sailed on the 20th at 10 a.m. There was no evidence of any demand for demurrage or detention before such sailing, or until after all the cargo was delivered alongside. Bills of lading were signed by Jno. Corran the master, dated the 18th April; but, at the hearing, he deposed that he did not sign them until the 20th April. The bill of lading (a copy of which was here set out in the case), was made "unto order or to order of assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods, and all other conditions as per charter party." It was proved by the plaintiff that the usual despatch of the port was twenty tons per working day for loading, and it was contended on his behalf that at that rate the loading should have been completed on the 4th April, and he claimed damages for sixteen days' detention of the ship from that day until the 20th April.

It was submitted on the part of the defendant that as no evidence had been given of a claim for demurrage or detention at the port of loading having been made until after all the cargo had been delivered alongside, and till after the vessel had sailed, the liability of the defendant under the charter-party had ceased, that the demurrage, for which the captain had an absolute lien on the cargo, included such detention or delay in loading as had occurred in the present case; that the plaintiff was bound by the date of the bill of lading; and that at all events the amount must be reduced to the sum of 5*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Judgment was given for the plaintiff for 44*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, the amount which the learned County Court judge thought the plaintiff was entitled to recover, viz., for sixteen days at 2*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* a day. The learned judge was of opinion that the word "demurrage" in the foregoing clause of the charter-party did not apply to detention prior to delivery of the cargo at the port of loading, and that the plaintiff's claim for such detention was not affected by the said clause.

The grounds of appeal were: first, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover against the defendant anything in respect of demurrage, or damages in the nature of demurrage, or on the particulars of his claim as filed in this action; secondly, that if the plaintiff was entitled to recover any sum, the damages awarded were excessive, the evidence proving that the whole cargo was delivered alongside the ship before or not later than the 18th April; thirdly, that the plaintiff did not, at any time before action make any demand for demurrage or for anything comprised within his particulars.

[Ex.]

LOCKHART v. FALK.

[Ex.]

Gully for the defendant (appellant).—Substantially the plaintiff's claim is for "demurrage" at the port of loading, and the word applies to any damage arising from undue detention or delay, and must be so construed on the present occasion. Demurrage and detention differ in this, that in the one case there is a fixed number of days, and in the other the days are not fixed: but that is not material here, because the days can be ascertained precisely by reference to the number of days in which the vessel could be loaded "in the customary" manner at the particular port. The plaintiff's claim is for the stipulated demurrage amount of 2*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* a day, and for that he had a lien on the cargo, and cannot maintain this action, all liability on the charterer's part having ceased upon the cargo being delivered alongside. In Francesco v. Massey (ante, vol. 2, p. 594, n.; L. Rep. 8 Ex. 101; 42 L. J. 75, Ex.) the last case in which the question of demurrage was discussed, it was decided that the protection to the charterer afforded by a clause similar to that in the present charter was coextensive with the lien given by the charter-party, and that it extended to demurrage at the port both of loading and discharge, and that the ship having been loaded, no action lay against the charterer for demurrage accruing during the loading. [CLEASBY, B. referred to Gray v. Carr (ante, vol. 1, p. 305; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 522; 40 L. J. 257, Q. B.) to the same effect as Francesco v. Massey, and the cases of Christoffersen v. Hansen (ante, vol. 1, p. 305; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 547; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 509; and Bannister v. Breslau (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 418; 36 L. J. 195, C. P.; L. Rep. 2, C. P. 497)]. The result of all the cases would appear to be that where a lien is given and a certain number of days for demurrage fixed by the charter-party, the lien is applicable only to those fixed days, and not to any detention beyond the fixed period. Here the delay in loading gives rise to the lien; and as the loading was to be "in the customary manner," the custom of the port showed that a certain time was allowed for loading. Whether, therefore, the charter-party itself specifically fixed the precise time, or the time could be made certain by construing the words of the instrument with reference to the facts of the case, the result was precisely the same. The parties intended to make provision for demurrage at both ends, the loading and the discharge, and the clause applies to both accordingly. The words "lien for demurrage" in this charter mean the demurrage therein mentioned at 2*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* a day, or they mean nothing. That is the plaintiff's claim, and for that the verdict was given. But if this claim is for "demurrage" it is barred by the last clause in the charter-party when the loading was completed. (He contended also that the bill of lading was an estoppel to the claim of damages for delay beyond the 18th April.)

R. G. Williams, Q. C. (with him was E. T. Wheeler) for the plaintiff (respondent).—If no time is fixed after which demurrage begins, then no claim for demurrage arises. It is not necessary, however, to make it strictly demurrage that the time should be fixed. The defendant here has contended that the clause providing for the loading being accomplished "in the customary way" is equivalent to a precise number of days being specifically fixed, but those words had no reference to time at all. They relate merely to the manner of loading, as, e.g., by lighters or from the wharf, &c. For that there is conclusive and express authority. Thus, in Lawson v. Burness, in this court (1 H. & C. 396), Pollock, C.B. said (at p. 400), "It appears to me that the words 'customary manner' mean the mode of loading, whether from a lighter or from a wharf." And in Tapscott and others v. Balfour and others, in the Common Pleas (ante, vol. 1, p. 501; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 710; 42 L. J. 16, C. P.; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 46), Bovill, C.J. approved of that construction of those words, and thought that the words directing the loading of a vessel in the "usual and customary manner" applied not to the time, but to the place or mode in which the loading was to be performed. The rate of "2*l.* per 100 tons per day," and the "ten days" limited by this charter, have relation to a demurrage claim, whereas the plaintiff's claim is for not loading within reasonable time, as to which the charter fixes no rate or number of days at all, and so the exemption from liability clause is not applicable. In Maude and Pollock on Shipping, 3rd edit. p. 305, "demurrage" is well defined as the "sum which is fixed by the contract of carriage as a remuneration to the shipowner for the detention of the ship beyond the number of days allowed for loading or unloading." Such a clause as the last clause in this charter-party relates, prima facie, to future and not to past liabilities: (See Pedersen v. Lotings, 28 L. T. Rep. 267; Christoffersen v. Hansen (ubi sup.) No doubt in Oglesby v. Yglesias (E. B. & E. 930; 27 L. J. 356, Q.B.), and Mildam v. Perry (3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 3 E. & E. 495; 30 L. J. 90, Q.B.), it was held to apply to past and already accrued liabilities; but that was because the express words of the instrument rendered such a construction necessary; but that will not be in the absence of express words, or such as raise a clear inference to that effect. The case of Francesco v. Massey (ubi sup.) is clearly distinguishable. There was there a time fixed for both loading and discharging, and demurrage was given at both ports. [CLEASBY, B.—In Bannister v. Breslau (ubi sup.) a provision for the ceasing of the charterer's liability on the shipment of the cargo was held no answer to an action for delay in loading.] No time was fixed in that case for loading or unloading, nor was there a demurrage clause, and if the clause did not apply to detention there was nothing to which "demurrage" could apply. And, moreover, that case had doubts thrown upon it in Gray v. Carr (ubi sup.) The present charter fixed the time for discharging, but is silent as to that for loading, and the lien and exemption clause must be limited to after claims at the port of discharge, and cannot be applied to the present claim for damages already incurred at the port of loading.

Gully, in reply, referred to and distinguished the cases cited on the other side.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 13.—The judgment of the court (Cleasby, Pollock and Amphlett, BB.) was now delivered, as follows, by CLEASBY, B.—The question in this case is, whether the charterer is liable for detention at the port of loading by not loading in the customary manner? There is also a question of amount

.]

THE NILE.

[ADM.]

ading upon the number of days during which vessel was detained.

think that the detention must be taken up at a time when the cargo was loaded, and that the time of the bill of lading is not conclusive.

ere is a clause in the charter-party giving shipowner a lien for freight and demurrage and providing that the charterer's liability shall cease upon the cargo being discharged alongside the ship. The question really arises whether what may be called the "and exemption" clause which, no doubt, applies to demurrage, properly so called, applies also to the language of this charter, to a clause for detention at the port of loading. A similar question has frequently arisen before, and we would not think of departing from what has been decided; but it must always be borne in mind that if the language be not the same, the question may not be applicable. There is no case law the same as the present case.

The word "demurrage," no doubt, properly signifies the agreed additional payment (generally per ton or an allowed detention beyond a period either fixed in, or to be collected from the instrument; it also has a popular and more general meaning of compensation for undue detention time; from the whole of each charter-party containing the clause in question, we must collect that is the proper meaning to be assigned to it. When the charter-party contains no clause allowing demurrage at a specified rate at all, it has been held that the word "demurrage," in the option clause, applies to detention, and that the charterer is discharged as soon as a cargo is aboard. This was the case of Bannister v. Eschauer (ubi sup.). That decision is certainly applicable to the present case, because we are in this charter-party a demurrage clause, which is not a precise one. In the present case the charter provides that the ship shall be discharged in ten working days, and afterwards has the words: "Demurrage at 2l. per 100 tons per day."

It has also been decided that where there is no time specified for loading, and also a time for unloading, fixed by its being at the rate of many tons a day, and afterwards a demurrage clause for a fixed number of days, at a fixed price per day, then in that case the option clause applies to demurrage whether at the port of loading or of discharge; but it was not clear that it did not apply to detention during the ten days and demurrage days at the port of loading. This was the case of Francesco v. Eschauer (ubi sup.). The effect of that decision is, where there is a clause for demurrage at a fixed rate for a certain number of days, and a number of days being allowed for loading, there is no demurrage in the proper sense at the port of loading, the exemption clause applies to demurrage there. And if we could read the provision in the present case, as fixing a particular time for doing so, the decision would apply to the period, although not specified, during which the demurrage clause might be considered to apply. But we do not think that we can read the words, that the vessel shall load "in the customary manner," as equivalent to a provision that she shall load in a certain number of days, or at a certain rate per day, for the purpose of applying the word "demurrage" to a detention beyond that period; those words do not admit, in our opinion, of an addition that she may remain, if she does not load "in the customary manner," for a number of days on demurrage.

The conclusion at which we arrive is, that, in the present case, the word "demurrage" in the lien and exemption clause must be confined to demurrage days after the ten working days allowed for discharge, and must not be extended to improper detention at the port of loading. The decision of the court below was therefore right, and this appeal must be dismissed.

Judgment for the plaintiff (respondent).

Attorneys for the plaintiff (respondent), Prior, Bigg, Church and Co., agents for J. B. Wilson, Liverpool.

Attorney for the defendant (appellant), H. G. Field, agent for Thos. Etty, Liverpool.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Reported by J. P. ASHALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

May 4 and 11, 1875.

THE NILE.

Salvage—Apportionment—Government transport—Owners—Senior naval officer—Transport officer—Right to reward.

A ship chartered to Government as a transport under a charter-party in the ordinary form used by the Government for chartering ships in time of war, is not demised to the Government in a way which deprives her owners of the right to salvage reward for services rendered by her under the directions of the Queen's naval officers commanding at the place where she is stationed.

The senior naval officer on a station sending out of harbour a transport with her own crew and a number of men from one of her Majesty's ships, for the purpose of rendering assistance to and towing into harbour a ship in distress, is entitled to share in the sum awarded for the service, and the naval officer (being also transport officer of the station) who commands the men from H.M.'s ship, is to be considered so far in charge of the whole expedition that he is entitled to reward in that capacity.

This was an application to the High Court of Admiralty to apportion between salvors a sum of 1000l. recovered in two consolidated causes instituted in that court by them for salvage services rendered to the steamship Nile. The two causes were instituted, the one on behalf of owners, master, and crew of the steamship Finisterre, and the other on behalf of the commander, officers, and crew of H.M.S. Simoom. The owners of the Nile appeared, and filed an answer to the plaintiffs' petition, by which they pleaded a tender of the sum of 1000l., and this amount having been duly tendered, was accepted by the plaintiffs.

The facts, as stated by the plaintiffs in their petition in the consolidated causes, were as follows:—

1. The Finisterre is a screw steamer of 551 tons register, with engines of 90-horse power nominal, working up to about 400-horse power, and is of the value of about 18,000l. H.M.S. Simoom is an iron steamship of 1980 tons register, and carries a complement of 173 officers and men. The Nile is a screw steamer of about 725 tons register, and was, at the time of the occurrences herein-after mentioned, bound for Demerara with a general cargo.

[ADM.]

THE NILE.

[ADM.]

2. On the 27th Feb. 1874 the Finisterre (which was then engaged under charter in her Majesty's Transport Service) was lying at anchor at Porto Grande, in the Island of St. Vincent (one of the Cape de Verd Islands), with some stores on board. (Copies of the charter-party and sailing instructions from the Admiralty to the master of the Finisterre are hereto annexed, and may be referred to as part of this petition.) The Simoom also lay at anchor at Porto Grande, under the command of Capt. Peile, R.N., the senior officer of Her Majesty's navy in that locality.

3. In the forenoon of that day, whilst the Finisterre was coaling for her return voyage to the Gold Coast, a boat's crew from the Nile landed at St. Vincent with the intelligence that the Nile was then lying outside in a helpless state, fast drifting on to the rocks on the north-east side of the island. The boat's crew applied for immediate assistance to the vice-consul, who acquainted Capt. Peile with their request.

4. The master of the Finisterre, on receipt of a communication from Capt. Peile, at once got up steam and made preparations for towing, and by about 1 p.m. the Finisterre was able to weigh anchor and put out to sea under steam, having previously taken on board from the Simoom Navigating-Lieutenant Adam, transport agent at St. Vincent, two petty officers, four seamen, and twenty-one Kroomen, together with a 9in. hawser, and other gear, sent by the order of Capt. Peile. The wind at this time was blowing a fresh gale from the north and east, with a heavy sea running, with a current setting in the same direction as the wind.

5. At about 2 p.m. Point Columna was rounded, and the Nile was sighted to the northward, and about five miles distant. She had all possible sail set, but she lay helpless and unmanageable in the trough of the sea, with the sails all aback, and was drifting directly on to a rocky lee shore, with no anchorage ground near. She had no steam, the main shaft of her screw having broken many days previously, since which time she had drifted helplessly.

6. The Finisterre, proceeding at full speed, came up with the Nile at about 3.30, and, heaving to, inquired by signal if the Nile wanted assistance, and received the answer, "Yes." The master of the Nile then asked what the Finisterre would charge for towing the Nile in? Those on board the Finisterre answered that they could make no agreement. The master of the Nile then told the Finisterre to take him in tow.

7. The Finisterre remained hove to while the Nile took in all sail, both vessels in the meantime rolling heavily. After all sail had been taken in, the Finisterre got into position off the Nile's starboard bow and lowered her port lifeboat, manned by the two petty officers and two of the seamen from the Simoom. A heavy line was taken by the boat to the Nile, and by this means a new 10in. hawser of the Finisterre, and the 9in. hawser of the Simoom, were passed on board the Nile and were with considerable difficulty made fast; the Finisterre's hawser was made fast to her chain cable, which had been ranged along her deck and carried over the stern, so as to give the full weight of the vessel in towing, and to prevent the hawser parting. The Simoom's hawser was made fast round the Finisterre's mainmast.

8. Whilst these operations were being carried on, in a heavy sea, the Finisterre maintained her position (though not without great difficulty) by alternately going ahead and backing her engines, and in so doing she ran great risk of fouling her propeller with the hawser, and of being completely disabled.

9. After the hawsers were made fast the Finisterre gradually got a strain upon them, and then went ahead in a south-westerly direction, endeavouring for about three-quarters of an hour to get the Nile before the wind and sea, and in a position for towing ahead. During this time both vessels rolled and pitched heavily, and it was a matter of great difficulty to prevent the hawsers from parting and keep the Finisterre in position. At length the Nile was got before the wind and was towed towards the harbour of St. Vincent, then about twelve miles distant.

10. Before the entrance of the harbour was reached it became dark. There were no harbour lights, and the Finisterre had no pilot on board; moreover, the Nile steered badly, and yawed about a good deal. Under these circumstances it was not prudent to attempt the usual entrance, but the Finisterre, taking a long sweep round, entered the harbour on the southward or leeward side of Bird Island, and brought the Nile safely to an anchor in 10 fathoms of water at about 9 p.m.

11. At the time the Finisterre made fast to the Nile the latter vessel was quite helpless, and was in such a position that nothing but steam power could have prevented her from drifting on to the rocks in the course of a very short time, and there becoming a total wreck; no steamer besides the Finisterre was at hand or could have been procured. It was the Harmattan season at the time when the services were rendered, during which season thick haze suddenly falls over the sea and island, and totally obscures the island. If such haze had set in, the danger to both vessels would have been greatly increased.

12. In rendering the above-mentioned services the Finisterre incurred considerable risk of damage by collision with the Nile, and also of being disabled by the fouling of her propeller. Had she been disabled her position would have been one of extreme peril.

13. The men from the Simoom took an active part in all the measures adopted for the preservation of the Nile, and materially contributed to her safety. The task of the boat's crew which took the heaving line to the Nile was one of considerable danger.

14. The damage done to the machinery of the said ship Nile was afterwards repaired at St. Vincent, in order to do which a considerable portion of her cargo was discharged and landed. A working party of six seamen and ten Kroomen was furnished from the Simoom to assist in such discharge, and were employed thereat, in conjunction with the crew of the Nile, on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th days of March following.

The charter-party mentioned in the second paragraph of the petition, so far as material, was as follows:—

This charter-party of affreightment, made the 12th Nov. 1873, by and between the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland (for and on behalf of her Majesty) of the one part, and Charles Ellis (of the firm of H. Ellis and Sons, of 17, Gracechurch-street, ship-brokers, the owners of the steamship undermentioned) of the other part: Whereas a copy of the Regulations for Her Majesty's Transport Service has been delivered to the second-named party, and to the master of the ship hereinafter mentioned, before the execution hereof. As the second-named party doth hereby admit, and the said regulations are to be taken to be incorporated and to form part of this charter, in so far as they are applicable hereto: Now it is hereby witnessed that the second-named party has let, upon and subject to the conditions and rules specified in the said regulations, so far as they are applicable hereto, and the said Commissioners have hired and taken to freight the good ship undermentioned, viz.:

Ship's name.	Gross tons by register, new measurement.	Master's name.
Finisterre .....	... .. 551 ... ..	George Hearsley

For service and employment as a transport on monthly hire for the space of five calendar months certain, and thenceforward until the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral aforesaid for the time being shall cause notice to be given to the said second-named party, his executors or administrators, or to the master or other person having charge of the said ship, that she is discharged from her Majesty's service, such notice to be given when the ship is in port in the United Kingdom. And the said second-named party does covenant and agree with the said Commissioners in manner following, that is to say, that the said ship shall, at all times during the continuance of this charter, be strong, firm, tight, staunch, and substantial, both above water and beneath, and in every respect seaworthy and properly manned, fitted, stored, furnished, equipped, and found, at the proper cost and charge of the said owners, and that the said ship shall proceed to such ports or places (with or without convoy, at the option of the said Commissioners) as the said Commissioners, or any officer authorised by them, shall from time to time order and direct, and so from time to time during the continuance of the said ship in her Majesty's service, and that in the performance of all services required to be performed under the regulations aforesaid, the said master and his crew, with his boats, shall be aiding and assisting to the utmost of their power; that the said master, or other person having charge of the said ship, shall not nor will take or permit to be taken on board thereof during her employment under this charter-party, any passengers, goods, letters, or effects, without the licence and consent of the said Commissioners, or the officer in chief whose command he may be under, in writing, for that purpose first had and obtained; and that the master of the said ship (for and on behalf of the owners) shall obey all orders and instructions which he may receive from the said Commissioners, or any officer authorised by them, and the master shall in all respects comply with the said Regulations for her Majesty's Transport Service, and with the Instructions for Masters of Transports, copies whereof have been delivered to him as aforesaid; and that the owners of the said ship shall be held responsible to her Majesty for any deficiency in quantity, or any loss or damage which shall arise to the public stores or provisions from the state of the ship's stowage, or from any incapacity, want of skill, insobriety, or negligence on the part of the master, officers, or crew of the said ship or any of them, according to such valuation as shall be set upon them by the proper officer of the department to which they shall belong. In consideration of which covenants, &c. [The charter-party here provided for the rate of freight to be paid to the owners, and the mode of payment, and proceeded:] And it is further agreed on the part of her Majesty, that if the said ship shall happen to be by the enemy burnt, sunk, or taken during the aforesaid service, and it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners that the same did not proceed through any fault, neglect, or otherwise in the master or the ship's company, and that they made the utmost defence they were able, the value of her shall be paid by her Majesty, according to the valuation made thereof on the declaration of officers of the said Commissioners (reasonable wear and tear first deducted); but that if the said ship shall be lost from the dangers of the seas or tempest, or be driven on shore by accident, stress of weather, or any other cause, and thereby lost, damaged, captured, or rendered incapable of service, either upon an enemy's or a friendly coast, such loss, damage, capture, or insufficiency, shall be considered as a sea risk, and her Majesty in such case shall not be liable to pay for or be in any manner prejudiced by any such loss, damage, capture, or insufficiency, &c.

ADM.]

THE NILE.

[ADM.]

The following paragraphs of the Regulations for her Majesty's Transport Service (referred to in the petition) were used in the course of the case :

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDA.

The terms used in the following Regulations are to be understood as follows, unless there be something in the context or subject-matter repugnant to or inconsistent with such construction, viz. —

3. "Transport:" A ship wholly engaged for the Government service, on monthly hire, or a ship wholly engaged by Government to execute a special troop or convict service, though not hired by the month.

Chapter 3.—Transports and troop freight ships; employment, pay, fittings, manning, and supplies.

35. A "transport" being a ship wholly engaged by the Government, either on monthly pay or for the execution of a special service, the rate of hire is to represent merely the charge for her use as a ship complete and ready for sea, as defined by Art. 36, and manned in accordance with Art. 42. The vessel will be employed in the conveyance of troops, horses or other animals, stores, or as a hospital ship, or in any other way that may be ordered, and the place of fitting will be decided on acceptance.

When necessary steam transports will be required to tow other vessels.

The "Instructions for Masters of Transports" referred to were as follows:—

Chapter 1.—General instructions.

Art. 1. The master is to obey all orders which he may receive from the Director of Transport Services, from any transport officer attached to the ship, or from officers in charge of divisions or resident at ports; also, from naval superintendents or senior naval officers. Should there be no naval officer, he is to obey the orders of the military or other Government authorities in the execution of the services which he may have been directed to perform.

When a transport officer is attached to the ship, the master will receive all orders through him; but should orders at any time be delivered direct to the master, he is immediately to communicate them to the transport officer, and he is at all times to afford him every facility in the execution of his duties.

Art. 2. The master is to make himself acquainted with the conditions of the charter-party, with the Regulations of her Majesty's Transport Service, with these Instructions, and the Printed Instructions to Transport Officers, and he is to comply with the directions, stipulations, and conditions contained therein.

Art. 4. The master is to take especial care that all the boats are constantly ready for immediate service, &c.

The crew and boats are to be at all times available for the police service, either in loading or discharging cargo, embarking or disembarking troops, obtaining supplies of provisions, water, &c., or for any other purpose connected with the vessel's employment as a transport; and a suitable boat, with a proper crew and fully equipped, as required by the Regulations, is at all times to be held at the disposal of the transport officer.

Art. 11. Should any improper conduct or incivility occur on the part of the master, the ship's officers, or the crew, towards the transport officer, the military officers, troops, or passengers on board, it will be reported to the divisional officer, or in his absence to the resident transport officer, naval superintendent, or senior naval officer at the port at which the vessel may be lying, or at which she may first touch, by whom the complaint will be investigated, even to the suspension of the master from his duties, if it be considered imperatively necessary. The master, however, will not be removed from the ship, excepting under the authority of the flag officer in command at the port, or on the station.

Three sets of salvors claimed to have the sum recovered apportioned between them; the owners, master, and crew of the Finisterre; the commander, officers, and crew of H.M.S. Simoom; and Lieut. Adlam, who was navigating lieutenant of the Simoom, and also chief transport officer at St. Vincent.

W. C. Gully, for the owners, master, and crew of the Finisterre.—The owners of the Finisterre are entitled to salvage as well as her master and crew. The service was mainly effected by means of steam power, and this is at the risk and expense of owners, who are thereby entitled to reward. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Is not the Finisterre to be considered as a Government ship, and, consequently, debarred from recovering salvage so far as the ship is concerned?] I submit not. By the charter-party the owners are to bear all risk, except that of capture by the enemy, and was only chartered to carry provisions from St. Vincent to Cape Coast. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Was she not under the orders of the Simoom?] Only in so far as she was under the orders of the Admiralty, and bound to fulfil her agreement under the direction of the naval officers. There was no legal obligation, under the charter-party or otherwise, upon the master of the Finisterre to go out of Porto Grande to render assistance to the Nile, even when ordered to do so by the commanding officer, Capt. Peile; it might have been necessary to obtain that officer's permission before going, but there was no obligation to go. The mere setting in motion of the Finisterre and directing her to proceed to the assistance of the Nile, is not such a service which will entitle Capt. Peile to participate in the reward; nor can the part of the crew remaining on board the Simoom claim, as they had no extra duties thrown upon them. This is not like a case of prize, where the commanding officer shares with those acting under him. It must be shown in a salvage cause that something has actually been done by the person claiming. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If the Finisterre had been a tender to the Simoom, Capt. Peile's order for her to go out would have entitled him to salvage reward.] The only thing which gives a right to salvage is the incurring of labour, trouble, or risk. If a tug owner sends out his tug, it is the risk, and not the order to go out, that entitles him to salvage. Capt. Peile gave an order, but ran no risk and took no trouble. If the Finisterre had perished the loss would have fallen entirely upon her owners, and not upon Capt. Peile. There was nothing in the charter-party entitling him to order her to run the risk. A ship under charter to the Government can only be employed in accordance with her charter-party, and although the Regulations for her Majesty's Transport Service (par. 35), provide that she will be employed in the conveyance of troops, &c., and "in any other way that may be ordered," those words must mean, "in some other ways in which a transport ship is usually employed," not in rendering service wholly unconnected with the transport service. And, again, the duty imposed by Instructions to Masters of Transports (art. 1), to obey all orders given by the transport officers and by senior naval officers, relates only to orders given in relation to transport service and not to the ordinary duties of the navigator and working of the ship, which is wholly in the control of the master. A transport officer on board would not take command; the master would direct the working of the ship. Hence, although the master may have received assistance from Lieut. Adlam and his men, the master was really at the head of the salvaging party.

[ADM.]

THE NILE.

[ADM.]

W. G. F. Phillimore, for Capt. Peile and the officers and crew of H.M.S. Simoom.—If Capt. Peile had power to order the Finisterre to go to render assistance, he is clearly entitled to salvage. That is settled in The Thetis (3 Hagg. 14, 57), which was a claim by the king's officers and the admiral on the station to share in salvage reward, and in that case Sir C. Robinson says: "On these facts several propositions have been advanced, with statements of the respective parties which have been withdrawn or qualified in argument so as to diminish very considerably the points now in dispute. The owners first denied the right of king's officers to claim salvage, and maintained that they were bound to proceed on any service which might call for their skill and labour, without reference to any private emolument; that Capt. Dickinson was bound to obey the order of Admiral Baker, and that it was not competent to him to aver that he acted independently of the admiral, so as to entitle him to remuneration. But these topics have not been urged by their counsel, and the argument has been confined to the proper estimate of their quantum of reward. Again, Admiral Baker represented himself as principal salvor, as agent appointed by the underwriters, and also as having engaged in their service as a speculator on his own private account; but I do not understand that either of these propositions has been maintained by his counsel, and it is manifest that almost everything which he did was done by authority and in virtue of his command. . . . It is alleged on his behalf (Capt. Dickinson), 'that there is no principle of constructive assistance in civil salvage, and that no admiral or commanding officer of a station, not being an actual salvor, but merely by virtue of such command, has any right to claim to share in the salvage earned by, and awarded to, a ship belonging to such station.' There is no difficulty in acceding to this proposition, as expressed in these terms. What is earned by or awarded to a ship will not be disturbed by secret constructive claims, but that will not exclude a claim from being propounded on behalf of an admiral on special grounds of extensive contribution of assistance; and in regard to the description of the admiral's service in this case, as mere constructive assistance, I think it went far beyond that, and what is proposed as the test of that principle, the performance of mere official duties. . . . The services which Admiral Baker represents himself to have performed beyond the disputed merit of originating and directing the service, are, that he furnished men and stores from the ships at his own responsibility, and procured some things at his own cost and credit. . . . If, then, admirals can be entitled at all for anything but mere personal presence and exertion, it must be for such services as these, which are infinitely more conducive to the success than the admiral's own presence could in this instance have been. The case of The Aquila (1 C. Rob. 37), which has been so much relied upon, seems to admit that some services might have entitled even a magistrate, though it is not said what they should have been. It would be saying nothing to require personal service; since, then, such persons would not be distinguished from any other. The exception supposed in that case is, in my judgment, very applicable to the present, as authority for what I am disposed, as the effect of general principle alone, to hold; and on these observations I shall pronounce that Admiral Baker is entitled to share as having contributed effective assistance; and deeming it expedient, in a case of novelty, to act as far as I am able on rules and principles established in analogous cases, and thinking that the proportion allowed in other civil cases will not be unfit to be applied to this, I shall adopt the rule of the prize proclamation." On appeal to the Privy Council (2 Knapp, 390), the amount awarded to the admiral was increased, on account of the "responsibility, which it is quite clear that in the first instance Admiral Baker took upon himself." That is a distinct authority that a naval officer not actually present, but putting in motion and directing a salvage service, is entitled to share. To entitle to salvage reward, personal work and labour is not necessary; it is enough that the claimant does some act which furthers the salvaging of the property:

The Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 181;
The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 37.

Capt. Peile was senior naval officer. He was applied to for assistance, and immediately ordered the Finisterre to go out and take off some men from the Simoom; he alone could have done this. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In The Aquila (ubi sup.), Lord Stowell says, speaking of a magistrate who claimed as a salvor, having protected derelict property from plunder: "This, however, is certain, that if a magistrate, acting in his public duty on such an occasion, should go beyond the limits of his official duty in giving extraordinary assistance, he would have an undeniable right to be considered as a salvor; it will therefore be necessary to inquire what has been the extent of this gentleman's services; if they amount to the ordinary discharge of his duty, I shall be disposed to leave him to the general reward of all good magistrates, the fair estimation of his countrymen and the consciousness of his own right conduct." But there is a considerable distinction between the position of a naval officer and a magistrate; the latter is bound to protect property that is in danger and to prevent robbery; there is no duty on a naval officer to send out a ship to perform a salvage service. Capt. Peile having the power of sending out his own crew and stores, and of ordering out the Finisterre, took upon himself the responsibility and direction of the whole service. He took upon himself the risk of the loss of the crew and the transports, by which the Government would have been seriously inconvenienced during the war then going on in Ashantee, even if they would not have had to pay for her loss, as she was sent out under Capt. Peile's orders. Where, in the case of a derelict ship, the master of the salving ship puts on board the derelict some of his hands, and so becomes short handed, he always receives a considerable sum for his responsibility; here no salvage could have been effected, but for Capt. Peile, and he was alone responsible, and should be rewarded accordingly. The definition of a "transport" in the regulations shows that the Finisterre was not intended to any particular service, but was in the general service of the Government, and hence under the orders of the senior naval officer of the station, and could be ordered where he chose. In The Scout (ante vol. 1, p. 258; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 371; L. Rep. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 512), the salving ship was wholly demised to charterers, and they were held entitled to recover salvage to the exclusion of the owners; here there is no absolute demise, but still the owners did not contribute to the service in any way; they may have sustained a risk, but nothing further. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If the Finisterre had been lost, could her owners have recovered from the Government?] That may be doubtful, and hence I cannot contend that they ran no risk; but I say there is no claim for the ship, because under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), sect. 484, "Where salvage services are rendered by any ship belonging to her Majesty, or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be made or allowed for any loss, damage, or risk, thereby caused to such ship, or to the stores, tackle, or furniture thereof," and the Finisterre was for the time being at least a "ship belonging to her Majesty." Under the charter-party, the Government paid for the coaling of the Finisterre, and saving the stipulations as to the payment of the master and crew, she was entirely in the service of the Government. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The owners were responsible for repairs and for all loss by sea or tempest. Do not those words take her out of the category of a Government ship, that risk falling upon the owners? It is difficult to contend that the private character of the ship is destroyed by this charter-party, and if she is still a private ship, her owners may recover for all services outside their contract, as if there had been no charter-party.] At any rate, the fact of her being so chartered reduces the amount to which the owners are entitled, as they were put to less expense and risk. In The Collier (L. Rep. 1 Adm. & Ecc. 87), where the owners of the salving ship were the charterers of the salved ship, it was intimated that the fact that they were so interested in the property salved would affect the quantum; so here, I contend, that the Finisterre, partaking of the character of a Government vessel, her owners are only entitled to a diminished reward. Moreover, as the whole control of the ship had passed out of the hands of the master into those of the transport officer on board, and the owners were put to no expense, and as the service was rendered under orders, it might fairly be supposed that the Government would have paid any loss sustained, and, therefore, the owners' risk is very small, and the reward they would have received under ordinary circumstances ought to be diminished by the special circumstances of the case. There is a duty upon transports to tow other vessels imposed by the Regulations (par. 35), and by the Instructions (art. 1), to obey the orders of the senior naval officer and of the transport officer. A transport officer was on board the Finisterre and in charge of her, and he was sent out by Capt. Peile. The services of the crew of the Simoom are set out in the petition.

[ADM.]

THE NILE.

[ADM.]

E. C. Clarkson, for Lieut. Adlam, submitted that, as transport officer in command of the Finisterre, he had the whole control of the salvage service, and was in effect the principal salvor; the men from the Simoom were under his orders, and they actually made fast to the Nile. Although the owners cannot be altogether excluded, there is really very little distinction between the present case and The Scout (ubi sup.). In effect, the master and crew were in the service of the Government, as this was a time charter-party, and their whole time was to be devoted to the Government; it mattered not to the owners how they were employed. The only distinction between the present case and The Scout is, that in that case the charterers paid the wages, in the present the owners paid them; the risk of loss of ship fell upon the owners in both cases.

Gully, in reply.—As it is admitted that there was no demise of the Finisterre to the Government, the ordinary rule as to the reward to be paid to a steamship should prevail. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Your ownership was very much curtailed. Can you say that you can support your full claim when the order for the service emanated from Capt. Peile?] This being a service outside the charter-party, the master was not bound to obey the order, and might have refused; in consenting to go he was risking the property of his owners. Capt. Peile was only entitled to give such orders as were within the ordinary course of the transport service. By the Instructions (art. 4), a ship's crew and boats are to be available for the public service, either in loading or discharging cargo, &c., "or for any other purpose connected with a vessel's employment as a transport," clearly showing that her duties are confined to the duties of a transport. The mere giving of an order to render service is not enough to entitle to salvage. In The Thetis (ubi sup.), the admiral did more than give orders, he assisted in making plans for and effected the service. In The Purissina Concepcion (ubi sup.), the express ground on which the shipping agent was allowed to recover was, that he personally superintended the service. As to Lieut. Adlam, it does not anywhere appear that he took command of the Finisterre, and it should, therefore, be presumed that the master remained in command of his own ship.

Our. adv. vult.

May 11.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In this case

ADM.]

THE ADRIATIC.

[ADM.]

a salvage service of considerable merit was rendered on the 27th Feb. 1874 to a large screw steamship called the Nile, lying on the north-east side of the Island of St. Vincent, in a state of the greatest danger. At the time when the service was rendered, the Finisterre, a screw steamship of 551 tons, with a master and twenty-one men, was lying at anchor at Porto Grande, in the Island of St. Vincent, and in the same port lay H.M.S. Simoom, under the command of Capt. Peile, the senior officer of her Majesty's navy in that place. A boat's crew from the Nile went to the vice-consul, asking for assistance. He referred them to Capt. Peile, who communicated with the Finisterre. The result was that a lieutenant, two petty officers, four sailors, and twenty-one Kroomen went to the Finisterre, and this vessel, with these officers, in addition to her own crew, proceeded to the Nile and brought her in safety into port. For this service 1000*l.* has been tendered and accepted. The court is now asked to apportion this sum among the salvors.

There is no doubt the principal salvor was the Finisterre; the steam power which she supplied was the agent in delivering the Nile from her perilous situation. But a question has arisen, who are entitled to receive her share of remuneration, and whether, in consequence of certain circumstances, that share is, notwithstanding her steam power, to be of a more limited character than, on general principles, it would otherwise be.

The peculiar circumstances are these. The Finisterre, at the time of the Ashantee War, had been chartered by the Government as a transport. By the terms of the charter-party she supplied her own crew and master, and if she was burnt, sunk, or taken by an enemy, her value was to be replaced by her Majesty to her owners; if she was lost from the dangers of the sea or tempest, or from being driven on shore by accident, such loss was to be considered as a sea risk, and not to be indemnified by her Majesty. The charter incorporated certain regulations for her Majesty's transport service, and instructions for masters of transports. According to the latter, "the vessel will be employed in the conveyance of troops, horses or other animals, or stores, or as a hospital ship, or in any other way that may be ordered." I must here observe that I am of opinion the words "in any other way" must be construed as applying to things ejusdem generis—things connected with transport service. It is also provided in the instructions that the master may receive orders from the senior naval officer.

Having reference to those documents, I am of opinion that the Finisterre was never demised—indeed, it was not so contended—to her Majesty; that there was no temporary transfer of ownership to her Majesty, and that her owners are entitled (a point faintly, if at all contested) to her share of the salvage remuneration.

I think, however, that she was so far under the control of the senior naval officer, Capt. Peile, that on the one hand she could not have acted as salvor without his permission; though, on the other hand, she could not have been ordered by him to perform this service, which was not in my judgment within the terms of her charter. And I think that in awarding her remuneration, I ought to bear in mind that she was set in motion, so to speak, by Capt. Peile.

The same observation leads me to the conclusion that these officers are undoubtedly to be considered, having regard to the principle and decided cases on the subject, as the meritorious salvors.

I am also of opinion that Lieut. Adlam, who must be mentioned as having had, in a great measure at least, charge of the expedition, has a distinct persona standi as a salvor.

I award 400*l.* to the owners of the Finisterre; 200*l.* to Lieut. Adlam; and 400*l.* to Capt. Peile and the crew of the Simoom and the Kroomen who were on board the Finisterre.

Proctors for the owners, master, and crew of the Finisterre, Pritchard and Sons.

Proctor for Capt. Peile and the officers and crew of the Simoom, Burchett.

Solicitor for the defendants, T. Cooper.

May 25 and 26, 1875.

THE ADRIATIC.

Collision—Failure to render assistance—Onus of proof—Merchant Shipping Act 1873, sect. 16.

The Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), sect. 16, having imposed upon the master of every ship, in case of collision with another ship, a duty, "if and so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew, and passengers (if any), to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel, her master, crew, and passengers (if any), such assistance as may be practicable and as may be necessary to save them from any danger caused by such collision;" this duty is not discharged by a steamship, where, it being practicable and safe to lower a boat to render assistance, although possibly dangerous to stay by the injured ship, she continues her voyage without lowering her boat, and merely hails and signals for other vessels to go to the assistance of the injured ship.

A ship failing to render assistance to another with which she has been in collision, and showing no reasonable cause for such failure, will be held to blame for the collision, unless proof be given to the contrary on her behalf.

THIS was a cause of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the three-masted schooner Columbus, against the steamship Adriatic, and her owners intervening.

On behalf of the Columbus it was alleged as follows:—

The Columbus was bound upon a voyage from Fowey to Runcorn, and had on board a crew of six hands, all told, and the master's wife and child.

On the 8th March 1875, at about 9 p.m., the Columbus was boarded by a licensed pilot, about two miles west of the North-west Lightship off the entrance to the Mersey; she was working up channel, and her lights were burning brightly and a good look-out was kept on board of her till after the collision. The wind was blowing a fresh breeze from the S.S.W., and at about 11.45, p.m., the Columbus was on the port tack heading west, and about mid-channel, and a mile S.E.E. of the Crosby Lightship, when the pilot, as the flood tide had made, gave orders to take in sail and to get the anchor ready for letting go. The crew of the Columbus obeyed the pilot's orders, and her helm was put down. The Columbus, however, did not come up into the wind more than a point or a point and a half, having but little or no way on her, and her crew were in the act of hauling down her jibs, when the Adriatic, whose mast head light had been previously seen three miles off, was observed coming up at great speed, with all three lights visible, about a quarter of a mile on the starboard beam of the Columbus. The crew of the Columbus loudly hailed the Adriatic to stop and reverse, but the Adriatic still kept on at great speed. Immediately before the Adriatic struck the Columbus, the Adriatic went off under a starboard helm, but immediately after struck the Columbus with great violence on the starboard quarter, just aft the mizen rigging, cutting right into the Columbus and taking her quarter clean off, carrying away the wheel, deck house, and bending the rudder. The blow caused the Columbus to fall alongside the Adriatic, starboard side to starboard side. The crew of the Columbus loudly hailed for assistance, saying that their stern was gone; but the Adriatic steamed ahead and left the Columbus, did not stay by her, and rendered her no assistance, and did not ascertain if assistance was required; no boat was lowered from the Adriatic, and except burning a blue light, she offered no help, but proceeded on towards Liverpool. The Columbus immediately began to sink, and her boat was put out, into which all got, but the Columbus sank so rapidly that the boat was capsized, and her crew were compelled to hang on to the topgallant yard, which remained above water. The master's wife was rescued by her husband, but his child was drowned. The survivors were picked up after an hour by the steamer Enterprise. The plaintiffs' petition further alleged:

ADM.]

THE ADRIATIC.

[ADM.]

17. A good look-out was not kept on board the Adriatic.
18. Those on board the Adriatic improperly neglected to starboard in due time.
19. Those on board the Adriatic were going at too great a speed.
20. Those on board the Adriatic improperly neglected to slacken her speed, or to stop and reverse in time.
21. Those on board the Adriatic improperly, and without reasonable cause, failed to stay by the Columbus, or to render her assistance, or to ascertain if the Columbus had need of assistance.

On behalf of the defendants it was alleged as follows:—The Adriatic was a steamship of about 3888 tons gross register, and at the time of the collision was on a voyage from New York to Liverpool, with about 400 passengers. At about 11.50, p.m., on the 8th March 1875, the Adriatic, in charge of a compulsory pilot, passed the Crosby Lightship, steaming dead slow, and so continued along the narrow channel between the lightship and the Rock Lighthouse. A good look-out was kept on board the Adriatic, and her lights were duly exhibited and burning brightly. The night was very dark, but clear, and a vessel, which proved to be the Columbus, having no light visible, was made out about a point and a half on the port bow of the Adriatic, apparently heading so as to cross the course of the Adriatic from port to starboard. The helm of the Adriatic was immediately put hard a-starboard, and her engines stopped, but the starboard bow of the Adriatic came into contact with the starboard quarter of the Columbus. The blow appeared to those on board the Adriatic to be a slight one, and they had no reason to suppose that the Columbus had sustained any serious damage. The Columbus then dropped alongside the Adriatic, and drifted astern. Whilst the vessels were alongside, those on board the Adriatic hailed the Columbus and asked if she needed assistance, and no reply was made. When the Columbus drifted astern, the Adriatic was nearly athwart the channel, and those in charge of the Adriatic could not attempt to stay by the Columbus without exposing the Adriatic and the crew and passengers on board her to danger. But whilst the pilot was manœuvring to get the Adriatic into position in the channel, rockets and blue lights were burned on board the Adriatic, and three steam vessels, the Voltaic, the Enterprise, and the Kittiwake, came within hail of the Adriatic, and were directed by the master of the Adriatic to proceed to the Columbus and render any assistance that she might be in need of. The defendants' answer alleged that the Columbus neglected to have her regulation lights duly exhibited, and was in fault for such neglect; that they neglected to keep their vessel under command, suffered her to drift, and neglected to let go the anchor in proper time; the defendants also pleaded inevitable accident and compulsory pilotage.

The cause came on for hearing on the 25th and 26th May, 1875, before Sir R. Phillimore, assisted by Trinity Masters. Witnesses were called by both plaintiffs and defendants. The main questions of fact in the cause were, whether the lights of the Columbus were burning and visible, and whether the Adriatic sufficiently complied with the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), sect. 16, in rendering assistance or causing assistance to be rendered to the Columbus, or whether there was any reasonable cause for the Adriatic not giving such assistance. It appeared that immediately after the collision the Adriatic went ahead, and on getting straight in the channel kept on her course to Liverpool, and did not lower a boat. No evidence was given to show that she communicated with other steamers, as alleged by her, beyond the burning of the blue lights and hailing, &c. The finding of the court upon these and the other facts of the case will be found in the judgment.

Milward, Q.C. (J. T. Goldney with him), for the plaintiffs, contended that under the Merchant Shipping Act 1873, sect. 16, it was the duty of the Adriatic to stand by and render assistance. Her crew knew that the Columbus was injured; they did not know the extent; they hailed and got no answer; and yet they lowered no boat, but went away. The mere hailing another vessel, under no obligation whatever to render assistance, is not enough, even if there were such hailing. This neglect to give assistance throws upon the defendants, within the words of the section, the onus of proving that they are not to blame. The master of the Adriatic failed to render assistance, and, unless "reasonable cause for such failure is shown, the collision must, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act, neglect, or default." No such reasonable cause exists, as he might have lowered a boat whilst straightening up the channel, and then have waited for his boat. He was in no such danger as would prevent this. The defendants, then, are to blame, in the absence of proof to the contrary, and of this proof they have given nothing. The lights of the Columbus were burning, and there was nothing to prevent the Adriatic from making her out in time to avoid a collision.

Butt, Q.C. (G. Bruce with him), for the defendants, contended that the lights of the Columbus were not alight, or they would have been seen from the Adriatic. The Merchant Shipping Act 1873 does not impose any positive obligation upon a ship damaging another to render assistance herself. It is sufficient if she procures assistance to be rendered. This the Adriatic did by signalling for other ships to give assistance. She could not render assistance herself without danger to herself and passengers in such narrow waters, and this was in itself a "reasonable cause for such failure," within the meaning of the Act. The defendants have given sufficient proof that the collision was not caused by their negligence in showing that all precautions were used and a good look-out kept, and yet the Columbus could not be discovered in sufficient time to avoid a collision.

Adm.]

THE ADRIATIC.

[Adm.]

Milward, Q.C., in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of an unfortunate collision which happened between 12 and 1 o'clock at night, on the 8th March last, in the Crosby Channel, about a mile S.E. of the Crosby Lightship. One of the vessels, the Columbus, was a three-masted schooner of 167 tons register, coming from Fowey to Runcorn, with a crew of six hands, all told, and the captain's wife, and, unfortunately, his child, who perished in consequence of the collision. The other vessel was a ship of great size, 3888 tons gross register, and she was prosecuting a voyage from New York to Liverpool, having with the passengers and crew altogether about 400 persons aboard. The Adriatic struck the starboard quarter of the Columbus, under the circumstances which I am about to mention, and cut off her stern; the Columbus sank, the boat which she put out was capsized and also sank; the topgallant yard remained above water, which the crew managed to reach, and the captain saved his wife in an almost miraculous way, as she was floating about almost insensible, but the child which she had in her arms was lost.

Now, both the vessels were coming up the Reach, which lies about a mile S. to S.S.E. of the Crosby Lightship. The wind at the time was S.S.W. The schooner was ahead of the screw steamer two or three miles, and when she had come to a distance a little below the Crosby Light, she, under the advice of her pilot, went across the river in order to anchor. The pilot ordered the helm to be put down, and her canvas to be taken in. The canvas under which she was is thus described by the captain. He says, when he had got about midchannel, the mainsail and mizen were set full, and all square sails were out; he had the jib set, and the staysails were down.

This misfortune having happened in the way which I have described, the court is compelled to consider the bearing of the Act of Parliament, to which so much reference has been made, because there is no doubt as to this fact, that after the collision the captain of the Adriatic thought it his duty to proceed on his voyage. It is quite true that he starboarded to get out of the way of the schooner, and afterwards ported and stopped a time. What the exact time was is a matter of great dispute in this case. But he ported; and having got himself straightened down the river, went on to Liverpool without stopping, or in any way rendering assistance, by means of his vessel or his boats, to the vessel with which he had come in contact. What he did was—and he says it was best under the circumstances—that when he fell in with two or three steamers he told them that he had come into collision with another vessel, and desired them to go to assist her, but he himself rendered no assistance at all.

The 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 16, enacts that: "In every case of collision between two vessels, it shall be the duty of the master or person in charge of each vessel, if and so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew, and passengers (if any), to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel, master, crew, and passengers (if any), such assistance as may be practicable and as may be necessary in order to save them from any danger caused by the collision." There is a further portion of the enactment, which it is not necessary to state, but it goes on: "If he fails so to do, and no reasonable cause for such failure is shown, the collision shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act, neglect, or default."

Now that he knew in this case that he came into collision with another vessel, and had done her some injury, is not contested. He himself says he hailed the other vessel and asked if she was much injured, and that he had received no answer to that inquiry, and having received no such answer, he conceived she was not much hurt, and took steps to get the other vessels to go and see what assistance they could render the vessel, and ascertain whether she had been much damaged or not. Now the evidence on the other side says, not only is it untrue that there was no answer to the hailing, but that there were screams and shouts for assistance, which were neglected by the Adriatic. The vessel that did come up and render assistance was the Enterprise; and it is possible, as has been suggested by Mr. Butt, that the captain of the Adriatic imagined that he had communication with the vessel, whereas it was with other steamers. But the evidence given by the master of the Enterprise is, that his attention was attracted, that he saw the Adriatic coming up, and she did not speak to him, but that he heard cries which caused him to stop his ship, and lower his boat and go to the assistance of those people clinging to the yard, and who were thus saved.

Now, the captain of the Adriatic says he was in command of a vessel of unusual length, 450ft.; that he was in great danger himself of going on the Crosby shore; that he could render no assistance to the other vessel as effective as that which could be given by the other steamers; and that it is untrue to say he went away immediately, and did not stop for a certain time. But there was one point not disputed, and which seems to me and the Elder Brethren to be decisive against the defence set up by the captain of the Adriatic, namely, that there was no reason why he should not have lowered his boat and sent it to the assistance of those who were struggling in the water; so that the defence he has made in the pleadings, and the explanations he makes through his counsel of what occurred after the collision, do not prevent me from saying he is to blame. If he stopped for a considerable period, as he says he did, what was there to prevent him from lowering a boat, and endeavouring to find out to what extent this vessel was damaged? I think it not improbable to suppose, in spite of what has been said, that if

ADM.]

THE EASTERN BELLE.

[ADM.]

that course had been pursued, the life of the unfortunate child would have been saved.

But whatever may have been the result, I am of opinion, and I am supported in it by a conference with the Elder Brethren, that it was the clear duty of the captain of the Adriatic not to have proceeded on, but to have stayed by the vessel and lowered his boat, and not left her until he had ascertained what her condition was. While I say this, I acquit the captain or the Adriatic of any deliberate intention of inhumanity altogether; it would be very wrong to charge him with that. It is very likely that his great anxiety with regard to his ship, her unusual size, the number of passengers he had, and other circumstances, interfered with that presence of mind which he ought to have exercised on this occasion. I think, therefore, to use the words of the statute, he has shown "no reasonable cause for failing to stay by the vessel," or rendering such aid as was in his power.

The next question is, whether the collision should not "be deemed to have been caused by his neglect or fault," or whether there is "proof to the contrary."

Now this part of the case lies in the very narrowest compass, because it is admitted by the counsel for the defendants that if there was evidence to satisfy the court that the schooner carried her side lights, and especially her green light, they ought to have been visible and must have been visible to the Adriatic at a sufficient distance to enable her to get out of the way of the other vessel; therefore it comes to a question as to the credibility of one set of witnesses and the other, where there is a conflict between them, negative on the one side and positive on the other, as to the fact of the schooner having carried proper lights. Now, in this case I do not feel that amount of difficulty which sometimes presses in a case where the evidence on both sides is so closely balanced, because it is not denied that, up to the time that the schooner went about, she was carrying proper lights. I do not think that the contrary could have been contended for with much success, and I wish to say that I never heard better evidence than that given by the wife of the captain of the Columbus. She pointed out, as the reason why she saw the lights, that she took her child to see them, as she was in the habit of doing, and she saw that they were in their proper places. But the same witness speaks with equal positiveness to having seen the red light up to the time of the collision.

I have no hesitation in saying that the positive evidence greatly exceeds, in point of value and weight, the negative testimony on the part of the defendants. I have no doubt, and no hesitation in pronouncing as a matter of fact, that the Columbus did carry her side lights at the time of the collision; and, if so, it is admitted that the Adriatic was alone to blame for the collision. That being admitted, and that being the finding of the court, I so pronounce.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, H. Forshaw and Hawkins.

Solicitors for the defendants, Rae and Jenkins.

June 1 and 2, 1875.

THE EASTERN BELLE.

Co-owners—Sale—Mortgage—Arrest of ship in co-ownership suit—Right of mortgage to release.

Where a part owner of a ship institutes a suit against the ship claiming as against his co-owner an account and a sale of the ship, a mortgagee holding a mortgage, which would not be satisfied by a sale of the ship, is entitled, on intervening in the suit, to a release of the ship and to his costs from the time of his claiming the release.

A shipowner sold certain shares in a ship and, the purchaser having neglected to register the sale, subsequently mortgaged the whole ship to a third person, who had no knowledge of the previous sale, to secure a balance exceeding the value of the ship. The purchaser subsequently registered his shares, and then finding the mortgage registered, instituted a suit against the ship claiming as against his co-owner an account and the sale of the ship. The mortgagee intervened and claimed the release of the ship and damages and costs for its detention: Held that the mortgagee was entitled to the release of the ship and to costs from the time the plaintiff became aware of the mortgagee's claim.

THIS was a cause of co-ownership instituted in rem on behalf of George James Atkins, part owner of the Eastern Belle, against that ship. The cause was instituted on the 10th March 1875, and no appearance was entered on behalf of any other part owner, but on the 15th March an appearance was entered on behalf of John Grant Morris, a mortgagee of 64-64th shares of the ship.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the pleadings. The plaintiff's petition was so far as is material as follows:

1. The Eastern Belle is a ship of 1,130 tons gross register, belonging to the port of Liverpool. The plaintiff is the owner of 8-64th shares therein. The remaining 56-64th shares are nominally vested in James Baines, of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, but the plaintiff is unable to say whether or no he is beneficially entitled to the same except as appears from the facts hereinafter stated.

2. The Eastern Belle was purchased in or about the month of May 1872, through one Henry Jonas Smith on behalf of himself and certain other persons who are unknown to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was requested by the said Henry Jonas Smith to purchase 8-64th shares, and consented to do so and paid for the same on the 15th June 1872, and the said shares were duly transferred to him by bill of sale, dated the 18th July 1872.

3. After the date of the said purchase the plaintiff was informed by the said Henry Jonas Smith that the Eastern Belle was engaged in making voyages from Liverpool to Valparaiso under charter, and to other places. The plaintiff from time to time made applications to the said Henry Jonas Smith and James Baines, for information respecting the freight earned by the said ship, and the amount of profits due to him as part-owner thereof, but the plaintiff was for a long time wholly unable to obtain any information respecting the same.

4. On or about the 19th Feb. 1874, after repeated applications the plaintiff received from the said James Baines a promissory note for 175*l*. This was represented to the plaintiff to be his share of the profits of the first voyage of the Eastern Belle, in respect of his 8-64 shares therein, but no accounts or vouchers of any kind were furnished to the plaintiff. The said promissory note was dishonoured at maturity, but renewed by the plaintiff at the request of the said James Baines for a further period of three months, when it was again dishonoured, but ultimately paid on proceedings being taken in respect thereof.

5. The plaintiff continued to apply for accounts respecting the earnings of the Eastern Belle, but was wholly unable to obtain the same until, in the month of Octo-

[ADM.]

THE EASTERN BELLE.

[ADM.]

1874, an account was rendered to him whereby it appeared that the profits due to the plaintiff in respect of his said shares arising out of the said first voyage of the Eastern Belle amounted to the sum of 314*l*.

6. The Eastern Belle has completed several other voyages, and has earned divers large quantities of freight, and there is due to the plaintiff, in respect of his shares thereof, a large sum of money; but the plaintiff, though he has repeatedly applied for the same to the said Henry Jonas Smith and James Baines, has been wholly unable to obtain any account in respect of the said freight.

7. The Eastern Belle is about to leave England in ballast, but the plaintiff has not been consulted with respect to the said voyage, and is unwilling that the said ship should be sent on the said voyage until the accounts between the co-owners is settled.

8. There are accounts outstanding and unsettled between the said co-owners of the said vessel in respect of the matters above-mentioned.

The petition concluded by praying the judge "to refer the said accounts to the registrar and merchants to ascertain the amounts due to the plaintiff and to direct the said vessel to be sold."

An answer was filed on behalf of the mortgagee which so far as material was as follows:

1. At the time of the request referred to in the second article of the petition filed in this cause, Henry Jonas Smith in the said article named, explained to the plaintiff that the sum of 500*l*. which it was proposed that the plaintiff should pay for eight sixty-fourth parts or shares in the said ship was to be the purchase-money not for eight unincumbered shares, but for eight shares subject to a mortgage on the ship, it being then proposed to raise about 4,500*l*. by mortgage on the said ship.

2. Accordingly, on the 11th July 1872, James Baines in the said petition named, who was then sole registered owner of the Eastern Belle by an instrument of mortgage of that date, mortgaged her to James Wilkie Adamson and Thomas Ronaldson to secure to them the repayment of the sums for the time being due on that security, whether by way of principal or interest, and such mortgage was thereupon duly registered at the Custom House at Liverpool which was and is the said ship's port of registry.

3. The said James Baines, by bill of sale, dated the 5th July 1872, transferred to William Roberts eight sixty-fourths in the said ship. Such bill of sale was not registered until the 7th Aug. 1872, on which day it was registered at the said custom house as being subject to the said mortgage.

4. The bill of sale to the plaintiff referred to in the said second article of the said petition was and is a bill of sale, bearing date and executed on the 18th July 1872, whereby the said William Roberts, in consideration of the sum of 500*l*. transferred eight sixty-fourth parts or shares to the plaintiff. The plaintiff neglected to register such bill of sale until the 28th Feb. 1873, on which day he caused it to be registered as hereinafter stated.

5. In the month of Jan. 1873, the defendant John Grant Morris, who was then under advances to the said James Baines, on an account current between them, the repayment of which advances was secured to the said defendant by mortgages to him by the said James Baines of two ships called the Cavour and Belle Isle, of which the said James Baines was then the registered owner, was requested by the said James Baines to advance and lend him the sum of 5,000*l*., for the purpose of paying off the said mortgage to James Wilkie Adamson and Thomas Ronaldson, and to make further advances which the said defendant agreed to do upon having a mortgage of the said ship Eastern Belle, of which the said James Baines represented himself as being sole owner, made to the said defendants to secure the repayment of the sums from time to time owing from the said James Baines to the said defendant on account current between them. The said James Baines is still the registered owner of the Cavour. The Belle Isle was totally lost in the month of May 1873.

6. The said defendant, however, caused search to be made by his solicitors, Messrs. Bateson and Company, of the register of the said ship on the first day of Feb. 1873, and they found that the said William Roberts appeared to be registered owner of eight sixty-fourth parts thereof, and the said defendant required the said James Baines to obtain from the said William Roberts a bill of sale of such shares. Accordingly, the said William Roberts, by bill of sale, dated the first day of Feb. 1873, transferred eight sixty-fourth parts or shares in the said ship James Baines, and such bill of sale was thereupon duly registered. The said James Baines thereby became, as the said defendant believed, sole owner of the said ship.

7. The said James Baines then by an instrument of mortgage in the form prescribed by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, dated the said first day of Feb. 1873, by him duly executed, mortgaged sixty-four sixty-fourth parts or shares in the said ship to the said defendant, for the purpose of securing the repayment by the said James Baines to the said defendant of the amounts which should from time to time be owing, whether by way of principal or interest from the said James Baines to the said defendant, and the said defendant on the same day caused the said mortgage to be duly registered at the said custom house. The said defendant thereby became, and has ever since been and still is duly registered mortgagee deed of sixty-four sixty-fourth parts of the said ship. By a deed of even date with the said statutory mortgage and made between the said James Baines of the one part and the said defendant of the part, and duly executed by the said James Baines, the terms of the said security intended to be granted by the said statutory mortgage were declared. The said defendant craves leave to refer to the said deed.

8. On the 4th Feb., the said defendant, at the request of the said James Baines, paid to the said James Wilkie Adamson and Thomas Ronaldson, the sum of 5000*l*., in discharge of the amount due to them or their said mortgage; and received from them their instrument of mortgage with a memorandum of discharge indorsed thereon, and such discharge was duly registered at the said custom house on the 7th day of the same month.

9. On the 28th Feb., the plaintiff's said bill of sale of the 18th July 1872, was registered at the said custom house, as subject to the defendant's said mortgage.

10. By reason of the negligence of the plaintiff in not registering his said bill of sale until the said 28th Feb., he enabled the said James Baines to represent himself and to appear to the said defendant as sole owner of the said ship, and the said defendant was induced to believe and did believe that the said James Baines was such sole owner, and the said defendant made the said advance of 5000*l*., and has from time to time made further advances to the said James Baines, on his, the said defendant's, mortgages of the Eastern Belle, of the Cavour, and Belle Isle, in the belief that the said James Baines was such sole owner; and the said defendant had not until after the institution of this suit any notice or knowledge that the plaintiff was entitled, or claimed to be entitled, to any share or interest in the Eastern Belle.

11. The plaintiff has always left the chartering and employment and management of the Eastern Belle to the said James Baines, who, on or about the 16th Sept. 1874, with the authority of the plaintiff, entered into a charter party of that date with Messrs. Dreyfus, Freres, and Cie., of Paris, whereby it was mutually agreed that the said ship then lying in Peru, loading or on passage to port of call for orders to discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent (and after discharging cargo of guano, having liberty of loading outwards from United Kingdom or Continent for a port or ports en route for owner's benefit), should, as soon as discharged, proceed to Callao, and be placed at the disposal of the said charterers' agents for orders to load a cargo of guano at any one of the guano deposits in Peru for carriage to the United Kingdom or the Continent, which cargo the charterers bound themselves to ship, the freight to be paid being seventy-two shillings and sixpence per ton if discharged in the United Kingdom, and two shillings and sixpence per ton extra if on the Continent. The said defendant craves leave to refer to the said charter-party, which is a beneficial one for the ship. The said defendant before the institution of this suit made considerable advances to the said James Baines on the security of the said mortgages for the purpose of meeting the outlay necessary to fit and enable the Eastern Belle to perform the said charter-party; and at the time of her arrest in this suit she was about to leave Falmouth in ballast, for the purpose of proceeding in the performance of the said charter-party.

12. At the time of the institution of this suit, there was owing to the said defendant, upon account current between himself and the said James Baines, upon the security of the said ships Cavour and Eastern Belle, the sum of 20,401l. 11s. 9d., or thereabouts, and such sum and a further amount for interest since accrued, still remain owing to the said defendant from the said James Baines on the said mortgage securities. The said ships are not together of sufficient value to pay to the said defendant the amount due to him on his said securities. The plaintiff before the institution of this suit had notice that the said James Baines, being the sole registered owner of the Eastern Belle, had as aforesaid mortgaged her to the said defendant, and that such mortgage was still on foot, notwithstanding which the plaintiff has without any notice to the said defendant and without making any offer to redeem the said vessel or his 8-64th parts thereof, arrested the said vessel in this suit, and the plaintiff is keeping the said vessel under arrest and preventing her from performing the said charter-party, and earning her freight thereunder and by reason of such arrest the said defendant, who is desirous of taking possession of the Eastern Belle as mortgagee thereof, and of enabling her to earn her freight, is prevented from so doing, and also from exercising the power of sale given to him by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, if and when he may think fit, and the powers conferred upon him by the recited deed of even date with the said statutory mortgage.

ADM.]

THE EASTERN BELLE.

[ADM.]

13. On the 24th March 1875, the said defendant caused notice in writing of his desire to have possession of the Eastern Belle for the purpose of enabling her to earn her said freight, to be given to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff still persists in keeping the said ship under arrest. The defendant craves leave to refer to the said notice.

The answer concluded by praying the judge "to declare that the defendant, John Grant Morris, as duly registered mortgagee of 64-64th parts or shares of the Eastern Belle, is entitled to the possession of the said vessel Eastern Belle, and to order the said vessel to be released from arrest, and to order that possession thereof be given to the said defendant, and to declare that the plaintiff was not, as against the said defendant, entitled to arrest the said vessel, and that he is not entitled to keep her under arrest, and to reject the prayer of the plaintiff; that the said vessel be sold, and to condemn the plaintiff in all damages sustained, or to be sustained by the said defendant by reason of the said arrest, or of the said vessel being kept under arrest, and to refer it to the Registrar to report the amount of such damages, and to condemn the plaintiff in costs of this suit incurred by the said defendant, and that further and otherwise right and justice may be administered to the said defendant in the premises."

The reply filed on behalf of the plaintiff was so far as is material as follows:

1. The plaintiff admits the allegations contained in the first article of the said answer.

2. As to the second article of the said answer, the plaintiff admits the same except, so far it refers to the terms of the mortgage therein mentioned, to which the plaintiff craves leave to refer.

3. The plaintiff admits the allegations contained in the third and fourth articles of the answer, and as to the third article he further says, that he was induced to delay the registration of the said bill of sale by and at the request of the said Henry Jonas Smith.

4. The plaintiff has no knowledge of the matters alleged in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth articles of the said answer, and does not admit the same.

5. The plaintiff denies the allegations contained in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth articles of the said answer, and further says, in reply to the twelfth article, that if the accounts between the defendant and the said James Baines, in respect of the said ships Cavour, Belle Isle, and Eastern Belle, are properly taken, the value of the said ships is sufficient to satisfy the claim of the defendant, and also the amount due to the plaintiff. The charter-party in the eleventh article mentioned is not a beneficial charter-party. It was made without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, and not on behalf of the defendant, and the plaintiff is unwilling that the said ship should sail on such voyage, unless the amount due to him is otherwise secured.

6. In reply to the thirteenth article of the said answer, the plaintiff says that that the notice therein referred to was not given until after the institution of this suit, as will appear by reference to the minutes of the proceedings of this Honourable Court.

7. Before the time when the defendant made the advances to the said James Baines in the twelfth article of the answer alleged, the defendant had notice that the plaintiff was the beneficial owner of 8-64 shares in the said vessel Eastern Belle.

8. The plaintiff has always been ready and willing and has offered to transfer his shares to the defendant or any other person, and to give up possession of the vessel on having the amount due to him secured, as he is entitled to have.

9. At the time of the arrest of the Eastern Belle in the suit, the plaintiff had no notice or knowledge whatever of any mortgage to secure an account current either to the defendant or to any other person.

10. The plaintiff has been and is willing to concur in any sale that may be decreed by this Honourable Court, and that the proceeds thereof may be received by this Honourable Court for the purpose of being dealt with when and as soon as the accounts have been properly taken between the said James Baines and the defendant, and between the plaintiff and his co-owners.

The reply concluded by praying the judge "to pronounce against the prayer of the defendant, and to direct that the accounts may be taken between the defendant and the said James Baines, and between the plaintiff and his co-owners, and to declare the plaintiff is entitled to have the ship kept under arrest, or bail given until such accounts have been duly taken, and to condemn the defendants in the costs of, and occasioned by his said appearance and answer, and to make such further and other order in the premises as right and justice may demand."

The rejoinder filed on behalf of the defendant was so far as material as follows:

1. They say that the several allegations contained in the reply filed in this cause are immaterial, and the said reply is bad in substance.

2. That the defendant, John Grant Morris, has not any knowledge as to the allegation contained in the third article of the said reply, and does not admit the truth thereof.

3. That they deny the truth of the allegations contained in the fifth article of the said reply save as to the unwillingness of the plaintiff that the ship should sail.

4. That they deny the truth of the allegations contained in the seventh article of the said reply.

5. As to the eighth article of the said reply, they say and submit that the plaintiff is not entitled as against the defendant John Grant Morris.

6. They deny the truth of the ninth article of the said reply, and say that the plaintiff had, at the time of the arrest of the Eastern Belle, notice of the said mortgage to the said defendant to secure an account current.

The conclusion filed on behalf of the plaintiff denied the several allegations contained in the rejoinder of the defendant, and averred that the reply filed on behalf of the plaintiff was good in substance, and that the plaintiff did not plead further, and prayed that the pleadings might be concluded.

May 31 and June 1.—The cause came on for hearing before the judge. The facts stated in the pleadings were substantially proved by the witnesses called in support thereof. It was shown by the defendant that at the time the mortgage advance was made he had no knowledge of the plaintiff's claim to be the beneficial owner of the 8-64th shares; and it was also shown by the plaintiff, that at the time of the arrest of the Eastern Belle he had no notice or knowledge of any mortgage to secure an account current to the defendant or any other person.

ADM.]

THE EASTERN BELLE.

[ADM.]

On a previous occasion before the pleadings had been filed the defendant (the mortgagee) had applied to the court upon motion for the release of the ship and had in support of his motion, filed affidavits setting out all the facts afterwards appearing by his answer. The motion was refused, the court declining to release the ship at that stage of the proceedings, as the plaintiff's affidavits alleged collusion between the mortgagor and the mortgagee.

Butt, Q.C. and R. E. Webster, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant here claims not only the release of the ship, but also damages for her detention and costs. Even if he is entitled to her release, he can only recover damages if he can show that the plaintiff has been guilty of mala fides or crassa negligentia in arresting the ship: (The Evangelismos, 12 Moore P. C. C. 352; Swab. 378.) But the defendant cannot show this, as even now there is an important question of law pending, viz., whether the defendant, as mortgagee, is entitled as against the plaintiff to possession. Can a mortgagee claim in a suit by a co-owner to take a ship out of the possession of the court without leaving something in the place of the res to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff against his co-owner? Suppose the plaintiff's shares had been sold to him after the mortgage to the defendant; there was nothing to prevent the mortgagor from making the plaintiff his co-owner. A mortgagee must know that shares may be transferred after mortgage, and that the position of co-ownership may be so created, and that questions relating thereto may arise. Consequently, we submit that, although a ship may be mortgaged as a whole, co-owners may arrest for the purpose of utilizing what may remain after the mortgage is paid off and may insist on a sale for their contingent benefit after the mortgagees' claim is settled. In such case it cannot be said that the mortgagee is in any way injured by the plaintiff's shares not having been registered sooner, because the plaintiff cannot be in a different position than if he had bought the shares after the mortgage. The mortgage in the present case was registered in 1873, and that would give a year and half in which to deal with the shares, and the mortgagee ought to presume that they would be dealt with. The Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), sects. 7 and 11, clearly contemplates a sale by co-owners, even though the ship be mortgaged, so that they may secure the benefit of the surplus. Till the hearing of the case the plaintiff had no opportunity of judging how far there was or was not a surplus and consequently was clearly entitled to arrest, and in arresting was acting bona fide. Even in case of the defendant being entitled to damages, the defendant has suffered nothing substantial as the charter-party the loss of which he fears need not be completed till the end of the present year. The plaintiff had good reason to believe that there was collusion between the mortgagor and mortgagee.

Cohen, Q.C. and E. O. Clarkson, for the defendant.—We admit that the original arrest was not unlawful and that if the plaintiff, after ascertaining the facts from our answer and affidavits, had good reason to believe that there would be a surplus upon the sale of the ship he might ask for a sale, that the mortgage might be paid off and accounts taken. But where a co-owner having no title as against a mortgagee asks for an account and sale merely in the hope that something may turn up he is not entitled to it either in this court or in the Court of Chancery. If the plaintiff and the mortgagor had both united in the mortgage they might have undoubtedly had a suit for an account so long as the mortgagee did not intervene; but if the mortgagee does intervene the co-owner proceeding against the ship must either redeem or release the ship, because the mortgagee has a right to possession, and has a statutory power of sale, which gives him an absolute right to the ship. The court cannot order a sale of the ship against the wish of the mortgagee, as such an order would have the effect of depriving the mortgagee of property to which he is not entitled, and to the use of the ship by which he may earn freight, and recoup himself for the money advanced. To order a sale where the amount produced thereby would be less than the money secured would be contrary to the doctrines of equity and the practice of the Court of Chancery. The plaintiff should redeem if he wants a sale. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE. It may be out of the power of a small co-owner to redeem, and yet it seems hard to deprive him of rights against his co-owner, which he would possess if there were no mortgagee.] The plaintiff can have his accounts taken before the registrar, but he cannot have the sale, as that would injure the mortgagee. The mortgagee took his mortgage without notice of the plaintiff's ownership and his right can no more be interfered with than if he had purchased the whole ship from Baimes without notice of the plaintiff's claim. By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), sect. 71, a mortgagee acquires an absolute power to dispose of the ship, and the court is now asked to take away that power. If then the plaintiff has no right against the mortgagee, the keeping the ship under arrest, after the plaintiff became acquainted with the facts of the case as stated in the defendant's affidavits, was a wrongful detention. The Evangelismos (ubi sup.) was no doubt a strong decision, but we submit that it has been modified by subsequent cases, and if a ship is kept under arrest without any semblance of a right the person keeping her must pay the damages. It is not enough that a plaintiff should think he has good ground in law; there must be good ground. The court was induced to continue the arrest by a now abandoned statement as to the existence of fraud. If the court is induced by false representations to keep a ship under arrest this is enough to give a title to damages. The charge of collusion was not withdrawn till the hearing, and without that collusion the plaintiffs had no case at all. They had before them all the knowledge they now have when our affidavits on the motion were filed, and yet they kept the ship under arrest.

Butt, Q.C. in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 2.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The circumstances of this case are peculiar, but I think I shall do justice by making the following order, viz.: that the suit be dismissed, and the vessel released from arrest; that the defendant recover no damages, but that he has his costs paid from the date of his filing the affidavit stating the circumstances under which he became mortgagee.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Rowland Miller.

Proctors for the defendant, Pritchard and Sons.

H. OF L.]

STANTON v. RICHARDSON.

[H. OF L.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, June 25, 1875.

STANTON v. RICHARDSON.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER
IN ENGLAND.Ship and shipping—Charter-party—Warranty of seaworthiness—Ship unfit for particular cargo—Obligation of owner.

A charter-party containing the words, "the ship to load the following cargo of lawful merchandise . . . ; a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales <sup>and</sup> measurement goods not exceeding what the vessel can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackles," gives the charterer the option in what form he will tender the cargo, provided he tenders some or all of the goods named and no others, and does not present a cargo of any kind or of all kinds together, which is unreasonable, as regards the nature of the goods he presents.

A shipowner, entering into a charter-party to carry such a cargo, is bound to provide a ship which is reasonably suited to carry that particular cargo, and is staunch and seaworthy for the purposes of that cargo, and should be kept so.

A charter-party provided that the ship should load "a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags hemp in bales, <sup>and</sup> measurement goods; specifying different rates of freight for "dry" and "wet" sugar. A cargo of "wet" sugar was provided by the charterer at the port of loading. A great deal of moisture drains from wet sugar, and, owing to the nature of the material, the ships pumps were unable to clear the ship of the drainage. The ship was perfectly seaworthy except for this particular cargo, and the pumps were sufficient for ordinary purposes, but she would not have been seaworthy for the voyage in her then condition.

The sugar had to be unloaded, and the charterer refused to reload it, or to provide another cargo.

Cross actions were brought by the owner against the charterer for not providing a cargo, and by the charterer against the owner to recover damages by reason of the ship not being fit to carry the cargo provided.

The jury found that the cargo offered was a reasonable cargo, and that the ship was not reasonably fit to carry a reasonable cargo of wet sugar.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below) that the shipowner undertook by the charter-party that the ship should be reasonably fit for the carriage of a reasonable cargo of any of the goods specified in the charter-party, including wet sugar, and that the charterer was entitled to a verdict.

THE appellant, Stanton, was the owner of a vessel called the Isle of Wight, and agreed to charter her for a voyage from Manilla to Yloilo to England. The ship was to load a "full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, <sup>and</sup> measurement goods, not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackles." The rate of freight was specified to be £. 2s. 6d. per ton for "dry" sugar, 4l. 5s. for "wet" sugar, and 4l. 15s. for hemp and measurement goods. The owner engaged that the ship "before and when receiving cargo shall be a good risk for insurance," and he engaged to take all proper means to keep her tight, staunch, and strong during the voyage. The ship proceeded to Yloilo, and on survey was reported to be a first class risk, fit to carry a dry and perishable cargo to any part of the world.

A cargo of "wet" sugar in bags was provided by the charterer, Richardson. Much moisture drains from this sort of sugar, and when the greater part of the cargo had been loaded it was found that there was such an accumulation of molasses in the hold, that the ship would not be seaworthy if she proceeded in her then condition. The pumps were quite sufficient for ordinary purposes, but, owing to the depth of the hold and the nature of the material, they were unable to get rid of the drainage from the sugar, and no pumps adapted for such a cargo could be procured at Yloilo. The cargo had to be unloaded and warehoused at Yloilo, and was afterwards sent to England in another vessel, the Milton; and the charterer refused to furnish another cargo for the Isle of Wight.

Stanton therefore brought an action against him for not supplying a cargo; and Richardson brought a cross action for the damages he had sustained from the Isle of Wight not being fit for the cargo provided.

The cases were tried before Brett, J. at the sittings in London after Hilary Term, 1872, and he directed the jury that there was an implied warranty that the ship was fit to carry a reasonable cargo of Yloilo wet sugar, and the verdict was taken in favour of the charterer in both actions.

A rule was obtained for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, but was discharged by the Court of Common Pleas (Bovill, C.J., Byles and Brett, JJ.), as reported (ante, vol. 1, p. 449; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 421; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513); and their decision was affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber (Cockburn, C.J., Mellor, J., Bramwell, Cleasby, Pollock, and Amphlett, BB.), as reported (ante, vol. 2, p. 288; L. Rep. 9 C. P. 390; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 643).

From this judgment the present appeal was brought.

Manisty, Q.C. and A. L. Smith, who appeared for the appellant, urged the same arguments, and relied on the authorities cited in the courts below.

Butt, Q.C. and J. C. Mathew were not called upon to argue for the respondent.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, there cannot, I think, be the slightest doubt that in this case it would not have been correct to have left to the jury at the trial any question upon the construction of the charter-party, and indeed I do not understand that the contrary of that proposition was argued by the learned counsel for the appellant. There are no terms in the charter-party which require explanation by evidence, and by the opinion of a jury. The question of construction, therefore, being for the Court, the counsel for the appellant naturally felt themselves constrained to contend that the misdirection to be complained of on the part of Brett, J. was that he did not place upon the charter-party the construction for which the appellant contends, and then leave to the jury the question whether a reasonable cargo had been tendered, having regard to that construction of the charter-party on which the appellant insists.

H. OF L.]

STANTON v. RICHARDSON.

[H. OF L.]

I will ask your Lordships to turn to the charter-party, for the purpose of ascertaining, in the first place, what is the true construction to be put upon it. It provides that the ship, after arriving at Hongkong and discharging there, shall "sail for Manilla for orders to load either there or at Yloilo or at Zebu, the following cargo of lawful merchandise to be put within reach of the vessel's tackles by the freighters, or their agents." The freighters are bound to provide that "following cargo," whatever it may be, and they are to be allowed fifty working days for loading the cargo, and customary dispatch at the port of discharge, and if they detain the vessel longer they are to be liable to pay demurrage in the usual way.

Now the cargo which, on the one hand, the charterers had the right to have carried, and which, on the other hand, they were bound to provide, is thus described: "A full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, <sup>or</sup> measurement goods." These words "and" and "or" are not without some significance, because they appear rather to show that this specification of different kinds of cargo was to be read either disjunctively or conjunctively, it might be all of one kind, or it might be a mixture of the two kinds mentioned, "not exceeding what the vessel can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackles." And then it provides for the passage which is to be performed; and then, in consideration of that, the freighters agree that freight on said cargo shall be paid "at the following rates if loaded at Manilla for the United Kingdom, 4l. 2s. 6d. sterling for dry sugar; 4l. 3s. for wet sugar; 4l. 15s. for hemp and measurement goods." Having regard to the specification of two prices for the two kinds of sugar mentioned, we are entitled in construing the contract to go back to the sentence where sugar was first mentioned, and to read the word there as if it were "wet or dry" sugar; then the contract becomes a contract to carry "a full and complete cargo of wet or dry sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, and measurement goods, not exceeding what the vessel can reasonably stow."

Now as regards the cargo which might be tendered, and which the shipowner was bound to carry; I feel no difficulty in advising your Lordships as a matter of ordinary construction, about which, unless there is something to be found in other parts of the document qualifying the ordinary meaning of the words, there can be no doubt, that the meaning of this stipulation is that it gives to the charterer the option in what form he will tender the cargo; he may tender it all of wet sugar, or of dry sugar, or of hemp, or of measurement goods, or he may admix the different items of cargo as he thinks fit, always provided that he does not present a cargo of any kind, or of all kinds together, which is unreasonable, as regards the nature of the goods which he presents. The only limit as regards quantity is that which is laid down, namely, what the vessel can reasonably stow. Provided he keeps within that limit, and presents goods which are of the ordinary kind at the place which is mentioned, he may take his choice in what form he will present the goods; that is to say, which of the various items mentioned he will choose as the cargo to be carried.

The consequence of any other construction would be, as regards the freighter or charterer, of the most serious kind. The ship is to come to Manilla in a limited number of days, the cargo must be put on board there; he must, according to the ordinary usage of merchants, if he is a prudent man, have his cargo prepared beforehand; he must have entered into his contracts, or have the goods in his store ready to be put on board. But, according to the view of the learned counsel for the appellant, his right to select the cargo to be put on board will have to be subject to considerations as to which he can form no proper opinion himself beforehand. He must consider what the pumps of the vessel, if they be the ordinary pumps, will be able to effect in the way of discharging the moisture arising from the wet sugar; he would have to consider whether the evaporation consequent upon the state of the weather will be greater or less at the actual time when the goods are put on board; and he will, therefore, not be in a position to provide a complete cargo of one of the specified articles, wet sugar, unless he will take the risk of the pumps being adequate to discharge the moisture, and of the state of the weather being such as not to throw any unusually severe strain upon those pumps. It appears to me that these are conditions which it never could have been intended that the freighter or charterer would undertake. And, on the other hand, when your Lordships turn to the position of the shipowner, any inconvenience which may arise is one from which he can guard and protect himself in the simplest way, possible. He it is who knows exactly what the pumps of his ship will do; he must be taken to know the nature of the cargo he engages to carry; he must be taken to know what wet sugar requires in the way of pumping power: and it is for him, if he wishes to guard against any inconvenience upon the subject, to stipulate that as regards one item, which is onerous and irksome, namely, wet sugar, he will not, under any circumstances, carry beyond a certain amount. Therefore, when you compare the inconvenience of the burden as against the charterer, and the ease with which it may be borne by the shipowner, every consideration would lead to the conclusion that it is the shipowner who must protect himself by an express stipulation. But I am content to rest upon the ordinary meaning of the words, which appear to me to give to the charterer the option of how he will load the ship.

Now if that be so, the charter-party must be read in the events which have happened, as if it were a charter for a full and complete cargo of wet sugar, not exceeding what the vessel can reasonably carry over and above the tackles. If that be so, what is the obligation, as regards the ship, upon the shipowner? Clearly to provide a ship which is reasonably suited to carry that particular cargo; a ship which is staunch and seaworthy.

It was, indeed, attempted to be contended that that general obligation which would be implied by law, was in some way qualified by two actual provisions of the charter-party, especially the express provision as to insurance. That provision appears to me to be entirely consistent with, and not in any way antagonistic to, the implied undertaking that the ship shall be staunch and seaworthy. It is a separate and a higher engagement that the "vessel before and when receiving cargo shall be good risk for insurance," that is to say, that she may be insured at the most favourable rate at which an insurance can be effected for the particular cargo. It was admitted, and could not be denied, that she might be staunch and seaworthy, and yet that it might not be possible to predicate of her that she was a good risk for insurance. Then the other express provision is that "in and during the voyage the master shall take all proper means to keep the vessel tight, staunch, and strong, well manned and found, and in every way fitted and provided for the voyage." That appears to me to take up the case at the commencement of the voyage, and in place of being inconsistent with an implied warranty that this ship should be staunch and seaworthy up to that time, to assume that the meaning of the contract was that up to that time she should be provided as a staunch and seaworthy ship, and that then there should commence this further obligation, that during the whole of the voyage the master should be bound to keep her in that state up to the time of her arrival.

H. OF L.]

STANTON v. RICHARDSON.

[H. OF L.]

Now if that is the construction, as I submit that it is, of the charter-party, was there any misdirection on the part of the learned judge? As I understand his charge he adopted this construction of the charter-party; he directed the jury, as he ought to have directed them, as a matter of law: This is the construction of the charter-party—those are the rights of the charterer—that is the obligation of the shipowner. And then he told the jury, taking that direction from him, to find whether the cargo of wet sugar presented to the shipowner at Yloilo was a reasonable cargo within the meaning of a charter-party having that construction. And the jury found with that direction, that the sugar offered to the captain was a reasonable cargo, that the ship was not reasonably fitted to carry a reasonable cargo of wet sugar, that the damage suffered by the sugar was not "the result of its own defective condition, without any defect in the ship, or any fault of the captain," and they found that the damage caused to the sugar was "caused by the unfitness of the ship to carry the cargo offered to her, or by the ship being unreasonably unfit to carry a reasonable cargo of Yloilo wet sugar, or by want of reasonable care or skill of the captain in treating the cargo delivered to him." I think the direction of the learned judge was perfectly correct, and with these findings following upon that direction, of course the case was entirely exhausted.

I submit that there is no ground for differing from the unanimous opinion of the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer Chamber, and I move that the judgment of those courts be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

LORD HATHERLEY.—My Lords, the unanimity of the judges before whom this case has been argued in its successive stages, is not at all surprising, regard being had to the circumstances of the case.

In the first place with regard to the construction of the contract, it appears to me that the learned judge at nisi prius was perfectly right in taking upon himself to construe that contract as a matter of law, and to state the result of such construction to the jury, provided, of course, that his construction be found to be correct.

It appears to me that there can be no doubt that this engagement was that the ship in question should call at the specified ports, amongst others Yloilo, that she should there take a complete cargo of sugar in bags, nothing being said in that part of the contract as to whether the sugar was to be wet or dry. She was to take "a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, and measurement goods." Therefore the cargo might either be a cargo of sugar in bags, or of hemp in compressed bales, or of measurement goods. Wet sugar might, we understand, be packed in bags; and to show that it was in contemplation, we have not only the fact stated in evidence that it is an article constantly shipped from Yloilo, but we have also an express provision in the charter-party as to what the price shall be, and the price is put at 4*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton for dry sugar and at 4*l.* 5*s.* a ton for the wet sugar. Therefore it appears to me as plain as anything can well be, that the shipper had the choice of the cargo, whether it was to be of sugar at all in bags, or whether he should prefer to have it composed partly of sugar, and partly of other articles; and he had the choice as to the sugar itself whether it was to be wet or dry. The only misdirection complained of is with reference to this point as to the construction of the contract. The rest of the case seems to have been placed before the jury very clearly and distinctly. The judge asks, "Was the ship reasonably fit to carry a reasonable cargo of Yloilo wet sugar?" Then again he says, "If you think the sugar was the ordinary Yloilo cargo, then the damage is suffered by some defect in the ship, or some treatment of the captain." As regards the question of the pumps, what he says is, "The pumps were certified it is true, but they were not brought up and examined, it was assumed that they were sufficient. You have it in evidence that in ordinary sugar ships ordinary pumps are used. The only way you have to consider the matter here is this, whether though in an ordinary sugar ship ordinary pumps will do, whether this was an ordinary sugar ship, whether she was not too large for what she had undertaken to do unless she had extra appliances." Nothing could be more clear than that way of putting the case before the jury. The learned judge tells the jury that the shipper was entitled if he pleased to put on board a cargo wholly of wet sugar, in which I think he is quite correct; but he says that that wet sugar must be a reasonable cargo to be carried, and he leaves it entirely to the jury to say whether a reasonable cargo of Yloilo wet sugar was supplied; they have found that it was. And with regard to the pumps, he puts the case in the exact way in which the difficulty has been encountered by the parties to the contract. The shipowner does not appear to have bethought himself what he was about to do when he stipulated that he would take this commodity, having this particular and special character, with the common pumps that he had used hitherto in his ship with ordinary cargoes of a different description. It is not because he has not thought fit to protect himself, or to furnish himself, as he would have done if he had thought of it in sufficient time, with sufficient pumps for the cargo that he has undertaken to carry, that he is entitled to be relieved from his contract.

I apprehend the learned judge was quite right in telling the jury, as a matter of law, that he had contracted to carry a reasonable cargo of Yloilo wet sugar. As regards all the other parts of the case there is hardly a dispute between the parties.

H. OF L.]

THE AUSTRALASIAN INSURANCE COMPANY v. WILLIAM TOWNLEY JACKSON.

[PRIV. CO.]

Therefore, my Lords, I come to the same conclusion as that at which the courts below have arrived.

Lord O'HAGAN.—My Lords, I am quite of the same opinion.

I think there is no misdirection in this case. In my opinion the Court of Common Pleas was perfectly right in saying that the charge of the learned judge was entirely correct in point of law, as it certainly was very clear and careful in its statement of facts. The learned judge did what appears to me to have been his plain duty. He first construed the contract, in the next place he applied his construction of it to the facts of the case, and then left those facts to the jury to be determined by the light of the law, as he had expounded it to them. His construction appears to me to have been perfectly correct. The words of the passage which has been read from the charter-party seem in themselves to require no comment, and no elucidation. Plainly it was within the option of the charterer here to have one of the three sorts of cargoes indicated in the charter-party, just as he chose. If he selected sugar it was for him to say whether the cargo of sugar to be put into the vessel should be wet or dry, and that is my opinion quite irrespective of the subsequent clause in the charter-party which distinguishes between the price to be paid for the wet and the dry sugar. The words of the provision in the charter-party seem to be perfectly clear. They give an option to the charterer, and he exercised that option. Now, considering not merely the words of the charter-party, but the reason of the thing, it seems to be quite a monstrous supposition that the construction contended for by the appellant could have been in the minds of these parties at the time when they entered into the charter-party. The nature of the arrangements of the vessel, the character of the pumps, and all the other matters which would have to be considered in order to determine whether the vessel was suited to carry a cargo of this description, all that knowledge was with the shipowner, and with the captain of the ship. The charterer had no such knowledge at all, and to cast upon him the necessity, or the duty of acquiring that knowledge would seem to me an extremely unreasonable thing, not to be done unless we were coerced by the words of the contract, which appear to coerce us the other way. That having been the construction of the learned judge, he seems to me in the most emphatic way to have put to the jury the question which it was their special duty to answer.

One passage towards the end of the charge seems to me to show that more clearly than the rest of it: "Your real point to consider will be this—was this misfortune the result of the sugar put on board being different from the ordinary Yloilo sugar put on board ships; or was it the result of a large ship undertaking to do this with pumps sufficient for herself, but not sufficient to lift the ordinary drainage of an ordinary Yloilo cargo? Was it the result of one thing or the other?" That was the jury's question. That question was put to them in the clearest and most lucid way by the learned judge, and he got a very emphatic answer from the jury, who determined that the cargo was reasonable, but that the arrangements of the ship were unreasonable, that the captain's conduct was unreasonable, and that the whole of the mischief arose from the conduct of the shipowner, and not from the conduct of the charterer.

My Lords, under all the circumstances of the case, I think the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas was right.

Lord SELBORNE.—My Lords, I agree.

Judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Attorneys for the appellant, Shum, Crossman, and Crossman.

Attorneys for the respondent, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, June 29, 1876.

(Present: The Right Hons. Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir MONTAGUE E. SMITH, Sir ROBERT P. COLLIER, and Sir HENRY S. KEATING.)

THE AUSTRALASIAN INSURANCE COMPANY (apps.) v. WILLIAM TOWNLEY JACKSON (resp.)

Marine insurance—Barratry—Wilful act—Knowledge that act is illegal—Kidnapping Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19).

The Kidnapping Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), having prohibited the carrying of Polynesian native labourers in ships without a licence, under penalty of forfeiture of the ship, a master who, without the authority of his owners, but with a knowledge of the prohibition, ships and carries native labourers, and so brings about the seizure and condemnation of his ship, commits an act of barratry in respect of which his owners may recover against their underwriters.

Where a master ships and carries Polynesian native labourers without a licence, against the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, proof that the master, although he may never have seen the Act itself or the proclamation thereof in the Australasian Colonies, was informed before shipping the labourers that such an Act existed, and that it was illegal to carry them, is sufficient evidence to justify a jury in finding that he shipped and carried the labourers wilfully and with knowledge of the prohibition, so as to make his act barratrous.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, discharging a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, obtained by the appellants in an action in the said court, in which the respondent was plaintiff and the appellants were defendants.

The action, which was commenced on the 9th Feb. 1874, was brought to recover as for a total loss, under four policies of insurance made by the respondent with the appellants' company, upon hull and furniture, cargo, outfit, and boats of the respondent's barque Crishna, which was engaged in the becke-de-mer trade. The perils insured against were, amongst others, those of "barratry of the masters and mariners, and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the" respective subject-matters of insurance above-mentioned.

The appellants paid into court, as to one of the ship's boats, a sum which was accepted by the respondent, but as to the residue, they pleaded that there was no loss by the perils insured against. On that plea issue was joined.

The cause was tried on the 6th May 1874, before Sir James Martin, C.J., and a jury. On the trial, the following, amongst other facts, appeared: The Crishna sailed from Sydney on the 5th April 1872, on a beche-de-mer voyage, under the command of Capt. Walton, who had no authority from the owners to get or engage in carrying native labourers, nor any general authority or discretion to use the vessel in any way he might consider necessary. After the Crishna sailed, and whilst she was on her voyage, on the 31st Aug. 1872, the Kidnapping Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), was proclaimed in the Australian Colonies. [The sections of the Act applicable will be found in the judgment.] After the said Act had been proclaimed and before Capt. Walton had taken any natives on board, he was warned by the captain of the Royal Duke, whom he fell in with in Shelburn Bay, Torres Straits, that there was a Kidnapping Act out which prohibited vessels from carrying Polynesian labourers, and rendered them liable to seizure for so doing unless they had first obtained a licence and given a bond for 500*l*. Afterwards he was again warned by a black named Peter, who told him all the fishing vessels had left the Straits for Sydney on account of the Act. Finally, in Jan. 1873, Capt. McCourt, or McCaint, of the Enchantress, warned him of the prohibition, and that all the vessels had left the Straits for licences. Upon the advice of McCaint, and Hoare the chief mate of the Crishna, Capt. Walton went to Cape York, where Mr. Jardine, the police magistrate there, had the Act, for the purpose of himself seeing it. After Capt. Walton's return from Cape York he took on board about thirty natives, and on the 11th Jan. 1873, he sailed with them on board for Sydney. On the passage the Crishna was seized by her Majesty's ship Basiliak, taken into Brisbane, and there condemned by the Vice-Admiralty Court in Queensland, and sold by the order of that court, which was the total loss in respect of which this action was brought. The evidence will be found more fully stated in the judgment.

At the trial the defendants called no witnesses and adduced no evidence.

The Chief Justice summed up in accordance with Earl v. Roucroft (8 East. 126), reading to the jury and commenting upon Lord Ellenborough's judgment in that case.

After the jury had retired, the counsel for the defendants asked the Chief Justice to reserve two points for the court:

First, as to the reception of a printed copy of the Queensland Gazette without proof of it.

Secondly, as to the captain not having any knowledge that the Act had passed making what he did an offence, contending that his act in order to be barratrous ought to be a wilful act.

These points were accordingly reserved.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff on all the issues.

On the 8th June 1874, the defendants obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the grounds:

First, that the verdict was against the evidence.

Secondly, that his Honour admitted in evidence a paper purporting to be the Queensland Gazette, without further proof thereof.

Thirdly, that his Honour should have directed the jury that the master was not guilty of barratry unless he wilfully violated the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, or at least with knowledge of the same and of the proclamation thereunder having been published.

On the 26th Sept. 1874, the rule came on for hearing. The two first mentioned points were abandoned without argument, the sole point argued being as to the alleged misdirection. The rule was discharged by a majority of the court (Hargrave and Faucett, JJ.), Sir James Martin, C.J., dissenting. The following judgments were delivered:—

Sir James Martin, C.J.—In this case the verdict was for the plaintiff, with 3720*l*. damages. The amount, therefore, involved in the question before us is large, and the loss which the insurance company will sustain if the verdict stands is heavy. The controversy has arisen from the passing of a very peculiar statute, under which the doing of an act innocent in itself involves liabilities to serious penalties; penalties which may be incurred, too, without the possibility of the persons incurring them even knowing of the existence of the law. It has been twice held in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this colony—in the case of The Melanie (12 Sup. Ct. R. 97), and in that of The Challenge (12 S. C. R. 127)—that in a suit of condemnation under this statute, knowledge by the master of the provisions of the Act is immaterial, and it appears that a like interpretation has been adopted in Queensland. In this case the condemnation seems to have been founded on much the same grounds as in the cases I have just mentioned. The captain was carrying Polynesian natives in an innocent (perhaps even in a meritorious) way, and because there was a literal violation of the Act, his vessel was seized by a ship of war, and condemned as forfeited by the Vice-Admiralty Court of Queensland. It certainly appears, on the whole, to be a case of extreme hardship. The law is clear that in a case of barratry, where the loss has been brought about by condemnation in a Vice-Admiralty Court, the mere proof of the decree of such court, unless it be impeached for fraud, is sufficient evidence of the violation of the law upon which the condemnation was founded, and it is not competent for the defendant, in the absence of fraud, to show that the condemnation was improper. I think, therefore, that I rightly held that the decision of the Vice-Admiralty Court was conclusive between the parties here. But then the question arises, what is to be proved in addition to make out the case of barratry? As to that it appears to me to be clear, that misconduct on the part of the master must be proved to establish barratry. The innocent violation, for instance, of a blockade or of any law, does not amount to such misconduct; there must be some wrong act done. Time after time has the difficulty arisen of properly defining barratry. After looking through a large number of cases in which the matter has been discussed, I have come to the conclusion that the best definition is that to be found at page 820 of Arnould on Marine Insurance (1st edit.), which I accordingly adopt as correct for the purpose of this case, "Barratry then in English law may be said to comprehend not only every species of fraud and knavery covin-ously committed by the master with the intention of benefiting himself at the expense of his owners, but every wilful act on his part of known illegality, gross malversation, or criminal negligence, by whatever motive induced, whereby the owners or charterers of the ship (in cases where the latter are considered as owners pro tempore) are in fact damnified." It seems to me that every word of that definition is material. In a note at page 821, there is a definition by Lord Hardwicke, which is said to be the tersest and the best. He defines it, "An act of wrong done by the master against the ship and goods." But this, I think, is not sufficiently extended to amount to a complete definition. There are various cases to show that an act to constitute barratry must be knowingly done. At page 839 of Arnould, it is said, I think correctly, that a foreign sentence stating the ship to have been seized for breach of blockade, is not conclusive evidence of barratry, for the breach of blockade might have been committed by the captain in ignorance and without intention, in which case it would be no barratry." Looking at these passages in Arnould, and at the cases generally by which they are borne out, I am of opinion that to establish barratry here, it was necessary to show not only that the master carried the Polynesians under such circumstances as amounted to a breach of the law, but also that he knew that he was acting contrary to law. If there was no evidence that before he took the islanders on board he became aware of the passing of the Kidnapping Act, no wrong was done by him. It is impossible to hold that a wrong is committed by a person who does an act innocent in itself without knowing that it is contrary to positive law. It is certainly true that the jury were not told by me that it was necessary in support of the plaintiff's case to find that the captain had knowledge of the passing of the Act. All that I did was to read to them the evidence as to the passing of the Act being communicated to the captain. There was evidence that he was told that an Act of the kind had been passed, and that he went to Cape York for the purpose of seeing Mr. Jardine, and inquiring about the matter. As to whether he ever actually met Mr. Jardine, or saw a copy of the Act, there was no evidence, but there was evidence that he was told something about the Act, and that evidence was mentioned by me to the jury. The question now is, whether there ought to be a new trial, because I did not pointedly tell the jury that it was their duty to decide whether they believed the evidence or not; and that if they thought that the captain had no knowledge of the passing of the Act, they ought to find for the defendants. It is true that I was not asked by the defendant's counsel to do this. If I had been so asked, and had refused, there is no doubt a new trial ought to be granted, and it is now to be determined whether the fact that my attention was not called to the omission, makes any difference. I am of opinion that there ought to be a new trial for this omission. I think that the jury were very likely, because I said nothing pointedly to them about the materiality of knowledge by the captain of the passing of the Act, to think that matter immaterial, it being in fact most material, as it was necessary for them to say in effect (if they found for the plaintiff) that there had been wrong conduct on the part of the master, inasmuch as he knew the thing which ultimately caused the condemnation to be prohibited. It is very probable that if the case goes down again to trial, the jury may think that the master did know this, but that is not a matter with which we have anything to do now. It is entirely a question for the jury. I may say in conclusion, that under the peculiar circumstances of this case, I think it would have been well for the parties to have saved the expense of this litigation, and to have done what was recommended by the court in the cases of The Melanie and The Challenge, namely, apply to the Home Government for a remission of the forfeiture, which application there can be no doubt would be complied with.

Hargrave, J.—As to the first two of the three grounds upon which this rule nisi was obtained for a new trial, viz.: First, that the verdict was against evidence; and, secondly, that the Queensland Gazette, containing the proclamation of the imperial statute against kidnapping was improperly admitted as evidence, nothing has been urged to this court in support of either of these two grounds; and I assume, therefore, that the evidence before the jury was quite sufficient to support the verdict, and that the Gazette and proclamation were properly before the jury in evidence. The third ground of the rule is, therefore, the only ground for me to consider, viz.: that "the Chief Justice ought to have expressly directed the jury that the master was not guilty of barratry unless he wilfully violated the provision of the Kidnapping Act, or, at least, with knowledge of the same and its provisions and of the proclamation thereunder." From the Chief Justice's own report to this court of his directions to the jury, and comments on the evidence, it is perfectly clear to my mind that his Honour placed the whole law bearing upon the issue of "barratry" quite properly before the jury, more especially by reading to the jury and commenting upon Lord Ellenborough's well-known judgment in Earl v. Rowcroft (8 East, 126); and the jury must, therefore, have been well aware that "known illegality" was the essence of "barratry," and was the only issue for them to try. His Honour also read to the jury the express evidence of the mate as to the proclamation having been communicated to the captain, and his having express knowledge of the passing of the Act and of its provisions; and especially read to the jury the evidence as to the captain's going to Cape York in order to inquire into the matter from Mr. Jardine, the then Government superintendent there. Moreover, even assuming the word "wilfully" to be essential to the definition of barratry (which I by no means admit), still it is clear that the omission of this word from his Honour's direction to the jury ought to have been distinctly pointed out at the time to the judge by the defendant's counsel, which was not done, but the reservation of the point only asked for. No "omission" ever forms any ground for the new trial, unless the omission has been distinctly refused to be rectified, as well as essential in law to the direction. But in this case, as I have said, I think the direction to the jury was in all respects perfectly sound in law, as put by the Chief Justice to the jury. The evidence also seems to me to be amply sufficient to prove in law the "wilful" breach of the Act as well as the "known illegality," if there be any distinction in the terms; and the evidence is quite as conclusive as to wilful breach of the law as is usual in any other breach of our criminal or quasi-criminal statutes. I am also inclined to think that the verdict is perfectly good under the general words contained in this insurance now sued on, viz.: "All other perils, losses, and misfortunes;" and the declaration seems to be so framed by the pleader. See the case of Butler v. Wildman (3 Barn. & Ald. 398); Jones v. Nicholson (10 Exch. 28); and Davidson v. Burnand (L. Rep. 4 C. P. 117; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 207.) But now the only point for consideration by this court is the third ground mentioned in the rule, which really amounts to this, that a new trial may be granted whenever another judge, or even the same judge, should think that upon a second trial he should direct the jury in different or stronger language, or use particular expressions in law not used at the first trial, or think that he would read and explain to the jury at Nisi Prius some other of the law authorities or text writers which may be cited to this court in banco, although admittedly, as in the present case, only confirmatory, and to the same effect as the case or text writer properly read and explained to the jury at the first trial. No new trial has ever yet been granted, and I hope never will be granted, upon any such ground. I desire also to add, as I have often said in this court, that this full court sitting in banco ought to discourage these speculative new trial motions, and compel both parties to put forth all their strength at the first trial of every action; and after a fair trial, every successful party should be left in possession of his verdict and judgment, unless upon clear legal grounds for a new trial, which assuredly do not exist in the present case. For these reasons I think the plaintiff's judgment against this insurance ought not to be disturbed, but this rule should be discharged with costs.

Faucett, J.—I should have had no difficulty in this case were it not that his Honour the Chief Justice, who tried the case, is of opinion that there ought to be a new trial, because I think the verdict was right upon the evidence. The only question to be now determined is, whether this was such a misdirection as would entitle the defendants to a new trial. I do not now consider the effect of the decisions in the case of The Melanie and in the case of The Challenge. But I assume, in the present instance, that to establish a case of barratry it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the captain had actual knowledge of the existence of the statute for the violation of which the vessel was condemned. At the trial the plaintiff's counsel opened his case by stating that he would not contest that point, but would admit that it was incumbent on him to prove that the captain at the time he violated the statute had actual knowledge of its existence, and he undertook to prove such knowledge as a necessary part of his case. Accordingly, evidence was given which went to show such knowledge. It was proved that the captain was told of the passing of the Act, and that he said he was all right, as he had his men on the articles. It was also proved that he went to Cape York to see Mr. Jardine in reference to the Act. On the other hand, it was contended for the defendants that such knowledge was not proved. It was said that it was not shown that the captain had ever seen Mr. Jardine or had ever seen a copy of the Act. Now, considering that the defendants gave no evidence, I do not think this latter argument of much weight. But, however this may be, the fact appears to be that the question whether or not the captain had actual knowledge was fully contested, and was, as I further collect, the substantial and only question contested at the trial. The want of proof of such knowledge was in fact the defence, and as now admitted the only defence relied on. This being so, his Honour, we are told, in summing up, read a definition of barratry, and read and commented on Lord Ellenborough's judgment in Earl v. Rowcroft (8 East, 126). He is also under the impression—although this is denied—that he read the definition of barratry in page 820 of Arnould on Marine Insurance, which contains the words "known illegality." He then read and drew the attention of the jury to the evidence of captain's knowledge. Under these circumstances, I cannot doubt that the law was correctly read to the jury, and that their attention was drawn not only by the counsel on both sides, but by his Honour to the real and, as it appears to me, the only question of fact that was contested between the parties. If, indeed, his Honour had been asked to tell the jury in express terms that barratry could not exist without knowledge of the existence of the statute, and had refused to do so, there might be some ground for the present motion. But he was merely asked—after the jury had retired—to reserve the question whether he ought not to have directed them in the terms set out in the third ground for this motion? If I could see that the direction had been wrong, I might think this course sufficient. But as I cannot see that the jury was misdirected or misled, and as I think the evidence quite justified the verdict, I cannot see sufficient reason for sending the case down for a new trial, for the mere purpose of enabling the judge to give a fuller and more pointed direction on a point that was before fully contested, and, moreover, without any probability of a different result.

On the 8th Oct. 1874, the appellants prayed leave to appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court above-mentioned to her Majesty in Council, and leave was granted to them by an order dated the 9th Oct. 1874, made by a judge in chambers, which was afterwards, on the 30th Nov. 1874, made a rule of court.

This appeal was brought in pursuance of the leave obtained, and the appellants submitted that the judgment of the Supreme Court of the 26th Sept. 1874, was erroneous, and ought to be set aside or varied, for the following among other reasons:

1. Because the verdict given in the action was against the evidence.
2. Because the learned judge misdirected the jury, in not telling them that in order to find a verdict for the plaintiff they must be satisfied that the master knew of the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, and that it was in force when he took the natives on board.
3. Because the learned judge misdirected the jury, in that he did not direct them, as he should have directed them, that under the circumstances the master was not guilty of barratry, unless he violated the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, with knowledge of the same, and of its provisions, and of the proclamation thereunder having been published.
4. Because the learned judge who tried the case was of opinion that he had not directed the jury correctly, and that a new trial ought to have been granted.

Manisty, Q.C. and F. W. Gibbs, for the appellants, contended there was a misdirection.

Cohen, Q.C. and Macleod Fullarton, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

Sir BARNES PEACOCK.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales discharging a rule nisi for a new trial. The action in which the rule was obtained was brought by the respondent, William Townley Jackson, as one of the co-owners of the ship Crishna, of which Walton was master, upon several policies of insurance upon that vessel for several amounts, the total being 3750*l*. The loss was occasioned by the condemnation and sale of the vessel under the provisions of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 19, entitled An Act for the Prevention and Punishment of Criminal Outrages upon Natives of the Islands in the Pacific Ocean. That Act received the royal assent on the 27th June 1872. By sect. 21 it was enacted that the Act should be proclaimed in the several Australian Colonies by the respective governors thereof within six weeks after a copy thereof should have been received by such governors respectively; and should take effect in the several colonies from the day of such proclamation.

The 9th section of the Act enacts: "If any British subject commits any of the following offences"—namely, decoys a native of any of the aforesaid islands, and so on, defining the offences—"he shall, for each offence, be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to be tried and punished for such felony in any Supreme Court of Justice in any of the Australian Colonies, and shall, upon conviction, be liable, at the discretion of the court, to the highest punishment other than capital punishment." The 16th section enacts that "Any British vessel which shall upon reasonable grounds be suspected (1) of being employed in the commission of any of the offences enumerated in the 9th section of this Act, or (2) of having been fitted out for such employment, or (3) of having, during the voyage on which such vessel is met, been employed in the commission of any such offence, may be detained, seized, and brought in for adjudication, upon the charge of being so employed or fitted out as aforesaid, before any Vice-Admiralty Court in any of her Majesty's dominions by any of the following officers;" and then it describes the officers who are entitled to bring her in for condemnation. Sect. 18 says: "The Vice-Admiralty Court before which any vessel is so brought for adjudication shall have full power and authority to take cognisance of and try the charge upon which such vessel is brought in, and may, on proof thereof, condemn the vessel and cargo, or either, as the case may be, as forfeited to her Majesty, or may order such vessel and cargo, or either of them, to be restored, with or without costs and damages, as to the court shall seem fit."

By sect. 6 it is enacted that "All the provisions with reference to the detention, seizure, bringing in for adjudication before any Vice-Admiralty Court, trial, condemnation, or restoration of vessels suspected of being employed in the commission of any of the offences enumerated in the 9th section of the Act shall mutatis mutandis apply to any British vessels which shall be found carrying such native labourers without a licence, or in contravention of the terms of any licence which may have been granted to the master thereof;" and by the seventh section a penalty is imposed on the master for carrying such natives.

One of the risks insured against by the policies of insurance was barratry by the master or crew of the vessel.

It appears that the master in the month of Jan. 1873, took on board thirty Polynesian labourers, and that the ship was seized by one of her Majesty's vessels, and carried into Brisbane, in Queensland, for the purpose of being condemned for a breach of the 6th section of the Act of Parliament, on account of the master's carrying Polynesian labourers on board. The ship was condemned, and was afterwards sold by order of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Brisbane for that offence.

It was contended that the case was not one of barratry unless the master knew that the Act of Parliament had been passed, and also that the Act had rendered it illegal to carry Polynesian labourers on board his ship.

It was proved that the vessel left Sydney on her voyage before the Act had received the royal assent, or had been proclaimed in Queensland; but evidence was given to show that the master was aware of the Act, and that he knew, from information which he had received, that the Act rendered it illegal for him to carry Polynesian labourers on board. William Hoare, who was the first mate of the Crishna, said that they left suddenly, on the 5th April 1872, that was before the Act was passed. Then he says, "there were thirty Polynesian natives taken on board this vessel. Capt. Walton I understood was to get 3*l*. a head for carrying them to Sydney. He told me so. There was a vessel called the Royal Duke, which I saw in Shelburn Bay, in Torres Straits; that was about two and a half months to three months before the seizure of the Crishna. We were lying in Shelburn Bay, about ninety miles to southward of Cape York. I remember the captain of the Royal Duke telling Walton and myself that there was a Kidnapping Act out which prohibited vessels carrying Polynesian labourers unless they were part of the ship's crew; that the vessels were liable to seizure; and Walton made the remark that he was all right, as he had all his men in the articles. That was before we had Delargy's natives on board." Then he goes on later: "I remember in Jan. 1873 meeting a cutter called the Enchantress at Cocoa Nut Island. She was twenty-five tons; John McCaint was the captain's name. I remember his telling Walton that the Act was out which prohibited vessels carrying these natives, and that all these vessels had left the Straits for licences. McCaint and I advised Walton to go to Cape York and see the Act himself. Walton went with McCaint to Cape York, where Mr. Jardine, the police magistrate, had the Act. We were then 58 miles from Cape York. The two captains in the cutter Enchantress, and a boat with some natives in it, followed to bring Walton back. I am sure Walton went on no other business than to see the Act." Then he says, "Walton returned in three or four days. A day or two after Walton returned, Delargy's natives"—those were the thirty Polynesian natives—"came on board. We started for Sydney on the 11th Jan. 1873." Then it appears that the ship

PRIV. CO.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

[EX. CH.]

was seized by one of her Majesty's vessels, and carried into Brisbane for condemnation; that she was there condemned and sold on account of the offence which this master had committed in carrying the natives on board.

Now, even assuming that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the master having left on his voyage before the Act was proclaimed, it was necessary to prove that he was aware of the existence of the Act, and that it was thereby rendered unlawful for him to carry Polynesian labourers, their Lordships are of opinion that there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, that the master was acquainted with the Act so far as to know that an Act had passed which rendered it unlawful for him to carry Polynesian labourers on board. The Chief Justice says (in his notes): "Stephen"—that is the counsel for the defendant—"addressed the jury. I sum up in accordance with Earl v. Rowcroft (8 East, 126). The jury retired, and after they had so retired Stephen asks me to reserve two points; first, as to the reception of the printed copy of the Queensland Gazette without proof of it;"—that is not a matter which is now raised—"and, secondly, as to the captain not having any knowledge that the Act had passed making what he did an offence." He could not have had liberty reserved to enter a nonsuit upon the ground of the captain's not having any knowledge that the Act had passed, making what he did an offence, except upon the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury as to that knowledge. Their Lordships have already pointed out that the evidence was sufficient, if the jury believed it, to prove that the captain had knowledge that the Act had passed, and that it rendered it unlawful for him to carry Polynesian labourers. The Chief Justice goes on, "He contends that the act ought to be a wilful act. I reserve these points. No evidence was called for the defence, but counsel for the defendants, in his address to the jury, contended that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the master had become aware of the passing of the Kidnapping Act, or at least of the nature of its provisions; and that his taking the Polynesians on board was not a breach of a law that he must be taken to have known, and was an innocent act, and therefore not barratry; and that defendants consequently were entitled to a verdict." Now the learned counsel for the defendants, when he addressed the jury and contended that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the master did in fact know of the Act, must have been fully alive to the fact that that question ought to be submitted to the jury.

The principal ground upon which the rule was moved for was that the Chief Justice ought, under the circumstances, to have directed the jury that the master was not guilty of barratry unless he wilfully violated the provisions of the Act, or at least acted with knowledge of the same and of its provisions.

The learned Chief Justice stated that he read the evidence to the jury as to the passing of the Act having been communicated to the captain. but it is said that he did not in a sufficiently pointed manner call their attention to the question whether the master did or did not know that the Act had rendered it unlawful for him to carry the Polynesian labourers on board. He says, in his judgment upon the rule: "I am of opinion that there ought to be a new trial for this omission. I think that the jury were very likely, because, I said nothing pointedly to them about the materiality of knowledge by the captain of the passing of the Act, to think that matter immaterial, it being, in fact, most material, as it was necessary for them to say in effect (if they found for the plaintiff) that there had been wrong conduct on the part of the master, inasmuch as he knew the thing which ultimately caused the condemnation to be prohibited. It is very probable that if the case goes down again for trial the jury may think the master did know this, but that is not a matter with which we have anything to do now."

Now, their Lordships are of opinion that the question whether the master did or did not know of the Act was sufficiently left to the jury, and that they must have understood that that was, in fact, the only question which they had to try. Mr. Justice Fauceit says: "It was contended for the defendants that such knowledge was not proved. It was said that it was not shown that the captain had ever seen Mr. Jardine, or had ever seen a copy of the Act. Now, considering that the defendants gave no evidence, I do not think this latter argument of much weight. But, however this may be, the fact appears to be that the question, whether or not the captain had actual knowledge, was fully contested, and was, as I further collect, the substantial and only question contended at the trial. The want of proof of such knowledge was, in fact, the defence, and, as now admitted, the only defence relied on."

It appears to their Lordships that that view of the case was correct; they think that there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and that the question was substantially left by the Chief Justice to the jury, and that they must have understood that that was the principal if not the only question which they had to try; and, under these circumstances, their Lordships are of opinion that the majority of the court did right in discharging the rule  nisi for a new trial. Under these circumstances they will humbly recommend her Majesty that the decree of the court below be affirmed, with the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Wilde, Berger, Moore, and Wilde.

Solicitor for the respondent, T. W. Derby.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Reported by ETHERINGTON SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 19, 21, 22, and 26, 1875.

(Before BRAMWELL, B, BLACKBURN, LUSH, and QUAIN, JJ., POLLOCK and AMPHLETT, JJ.)

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

Marine insurance—Seaworthiness—Peril of the seas—Insurable interest—Burden of proof.

A ship whose cargo was insured, and which had previously been to all appearance staunch and sound, and had recently been thoroughly repaired and had a few days before been examined without any defects being discoverable, sank suddenly at her moorings, when she had taken in five-sixths of her cargo. No direct evidence could be given why she foundered, nor could any certain cause be assigned for her doing so:

[Ex. Ch.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

[Ex. Ch.]

Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas), that the questions of seaworthiness and loss by a peril of the sea, were properly left to the jury, and that the evidence upon them was such as to entitle the jury to find as they did in favour of the plaintiff on those issues.

The plaintiff had made a contract with B. S. and Co. for the purchase of rice, in these terms: "Bought the cargo of new crop rice, per Sunbeam, at 9s. 1½d. per cwt., cost and freight. . . . Payment to be by seller's draft on purchaser, at six months' sight, with documents attached.

He chartered the Sunbeam to proceed to Rangoon to ship rice for any port in the United Kingdom or Continent, and effected an insurance with the defendant, "At and from Rangoon to any port or place of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent, by the Sunbeam, warranted to sail from Rangoon on or before the 1st April, on rice, as interest may appear, amount of invoice to be deemed the value: average payable on every 500 bags; the said merchandise, &c., are and shall be valued at 5500l., port of 6000l."

When the Sunbeam sank in the Rangoon river she had nearly finished loading; the rest of the rice necessary to complete the cargo was alongside in lighters. After she sank, bills of lading for the rice on board were signed by the captain, and the sellers drew bills of exchange, which were accepted and paid by the purchaser (the plaintiff) to whom the bills of lading had been indorsed.

The Court of Common Pleas held that the plaintiff had an insurable interest in the rice shipped on board the Sunbeam at the time of the loss, and was entitled to recover in an action on the policy.

The Court of Exchequer Chamber (Bramwell, B., Blackburn and Lush, JJ., Pollock and Amphlett, BB.) (Quain, J. dissentiente) held, reversing the judgment of the court below, that the plaintiff had no insurable interest, because,

First, no part of the rice was ever at the plaintiff's risk, the cargo being incomplete, and he could not have been called upon to pay for it, notwithstanding its loss;

Secondly, the plaintiff, not having sustained any loss, had no option by the exercise of which he could elect to bear the loss, and pay at the cost of the underwriters. Sparkes v. Marshall (2 Bing. N. C. 761), explained;

Thirdly, the policy was upon rice, and not upon an expectancy of profit, and therefore did not cover an interest in profits that might arise collaterally from a contract relating to the rice: following Lucena v. Crawford (2 B. & P., N. R., 315).

Per Quain, J., dissentientem: That it was the intention of the parties that the rice should be at the vendee's risk from the loading, and that, as he had notice to insure before the loading began, it was intended that he should insure by an ordinary policy, and that the goods should be at his risk from that time. He was, therefore, bound to pay for the rice lost, and had an insurable interest at the time of the loss, for which he was entitled to recover in the action.

ERROR from the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, in favour of the plaintiff.

The facts are sufficiently set out in the report of the case in the court below (ante, vol. 2, p. 424), and the argument on the appeal was based on the cases cited in the argument, and in the judgment there reported.

Bull, Q.C., Cohen, Q.C. and Hollams for the defendant below, the plaintiff in error.

W. Williams, Q.C. and J. C. Mathew for the plaintiff below, the defendant in error.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26.—The following judgments were delivered:

QUAIN, J.—As to the first point argued before us, namely, whether there was any evidence of a loss by perils of the seas, I agree with the other members of the court that there was evidence from which the jury were fairly at liberty to infer a loss by sea perils.

But I am unable to concur with the other members of the court, in holding that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the rice at the time of the loss, and that on that ground the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

It seems to me to have been the manifest intention of the parties to the contract of the 2nd Feb. 1871, that the rice should be at the risk of the plaintiff from the time it was loaded on board the ship, and that, therefore, he had an interest in it from that time. By the contract, the plaintiff "bought the cargo of rice, per Sunbeam, at 9s. 1½d. per cwt., cost and freight. Payment by seller's draft on purchasers, with documents attached." As the price included cost and freight only, and not insurance, it seems plain that the insurance, if any, was to be effected by the purchaser; and, in a letter dated the 7th March, from the seller's agents to the plaintiff, which was put in evidence, a telegram from the sellers at Calcutta dated 6th March, is set out these words: "Sunbeam. Rangoon: advise Anderson; insurance." Before the receipt of this telegram, namely, on the 3rd Feb. 1871, the day after the making of the contract, the plaintiff effected the present policy on rice by the Sunbeam, as interest may appear. The policy is in the usual form, beginning, "The adventure on the said goods, from the loading thereof on board the said ship;" but it is said that though the language of the policy is sufficient to cover a loss during the loading, the interest of the plaintiff in the goods did not attach till the loading was complete, and the shippers in a position to obtain bills of lading; and this on the ground that the plaintiff was only bound to pay by acceptance of a draft with documents attached. But I think it fairly to be inferred from the fact that the plaintiff was to insure the goods, and had notice from the sellers to insure on the 6th March, which was before the loading began, that the plaintiff was to insure the goods in the ordinary way, by an ordinary policy from the loading, and therefore that it was intended that the goods should be at his risk from that time. It could scarcely have been within the contemplation of the parties, especially in a case like the present, where the ship was being loaded, not in dock, but from lighters at the mouth of a river, that the cargo should remain uncovered by insurance during the loading, or that it would require two policies, one effected by the vendor to cover the goods during the loading, and another by the vendee to attach from the time that the loading was complete. The fact that the goods were to be paid for by an acceptance with documents attached, is not inconsistent with the goods being at the risk of the vendee before the time arrives for presenting the draft for acceptance, if it can be inferred from the facts of the case that such was the intention of the parties.

EX. CH.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

[EX. CH.]

In Fregano v. Long (4 B. & C. 219) the goods were to be paid for three months after their arrival at Naples. By the terms of the order the goods were to be dispatched on insurance being effected. Insurance on behalf of the vendee was effected accordingly, and the court held that it was to be inferred from the order to insure that the goods were to be at the risk of the vendee, and that he was bound to pay for them, though they were lost, and never arrived at Naples. "It was next contended," says Holroyd, J. in that case, "that Fregano was not liable to the vendor unless the goods arrived; but the order for insurance is decisive as to that." In Castle v. Playford (ante, vol. 1, p. 255; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 99) the goods were to be paid for in cash on delivery; but the purchaser, by the terms of the contract, took upon himself "all risks and dangers of the seas," and from this it was inferred that, though the goods were lost by perils of the seas before delivery, the purchaser was still bound to pay for them. So, in the present case, I infer from the fact that it was intended that the plaintiff should insure, that the goods were intended to be at his risk, in order to enable him to effect a valid insurance; and as nothing was said as to the time from which he was to effect the insurance, I infer that it was intended that he should insure by an ordinary policy, beginning the risk from the loading, and that the goods were considered by the parties to be at his risk from that time. The plaintiff, therefore, according to the authorities above cited, was bound to pay for the goods lost, and in this case has done so accordingly.

For these reasons, I think that the judgment of the court below ought to be affirmed.

The judgment of Bramwell, B., in which Pollock and Amplett, BB. concurred, was delivered by BRAMWELL, B.—Many questions were disposed of in the argument. As to what remained, we are of opinion that the defendant below is entitled to judgment, on the ground that the plaintiffs below have shown no interest in the subject-matter of the insurance at the time of the loss.

By the contract between the plaintiffs and the sellers of the rice, the plaintiffs were to have the cargo of the Sunbeam, and to pay for it by acceptances at six months, with the bills of lading attached. It is manifest, therefore, that until the cargo was completed and the bills of lading could be given, the plaintiffs by the mere bare words of the contract were not liable for its price, and had no property in any part of it that might be on board except contingently on the cargo being completed. The cargo never was completed; but it was suggested that as the completion of the cargo became impossible, through no default of the sellers, there arose by implication a right on their part, not expressed in the mere bare words of the contract, to be paid by the buyers for so much as had been loaded. For this contention we see no ground in reason or principle. The plaintiffs also were in no default, and there is no reason why the loss of goods, in which, certainly, they had no property but for the loss, should fall on them. It would be to make them liable for the loss because there was a loss.

Further, we consider this concluded by authority. Appleby v. Myers (L. Rep. 2 C. P. 651) is in point. It was, indeed, said that here there was a reason why the plaintiff should bear the loss, viz., the inconvenience which would follow if it should be held that the plaintiffs should insure after the cargo was complete, and that the sellers must insure for their protection during its completion. But this received its answer at the bar, viz., that the same inconvenience would result as to the insurance of the rice on its passage from Rangoon to the ship, damage or loss during which certainly would not fall on the plaintiffs; a line must be drawn somewhere, and may well be at the time when the cargo is complete.

Then, it is said that the contract of purchase shows that the plaintiffs are to insure, and that, consequently, the rice was at the plaintiffs' risk, which involved that they were to pay for it, and Castle v. Playford (ante, vol. 1, p. 225); was cited.

We entirely agree with that case, but the argument assumes that the rice was to be at the plaintiffs' risk before the cargo was completed, and begs the question. The rice was to be at the plaintiffs' risk when the cargo was completed—and perhaps, as we shall next mention, to some extent during its completion—but it was not to be their property nor at their risk till completion, save possibly as was suggested, viz., that if any of the rice during the loading, and after it was on board, had been damaged, the sellers might complete the cargo, and insist that they had fulfilled their contract by shipping merchantable rice, and that the plaintiffs must take the damaged rice, if damaged after it was put on board, and so that the plaintiffs had an interest in respect of which they might insure. But assuming that they would have been bound to take a cargo damaged as supposed, they would only be so bound when the cargo was completed. The interest supposed, therefore, and the possibility of loss, are contingent; contingent on the completion of the cargo, therefore they had no interest arising from this at the time of the loss.

As to the argument that the plaintiffs had an option to take this rice, which they might exercise after it was lost, we cannot, with great respect, agree to it. It seems strange that it should rest with the plaintiffs to make the underwriters liable or not at their pleasure. But the plaintiffs had no such option. No doubt it exists in some cases, and one party to a contract may have a right to insist on performance or to refuse to perform at his option. But that is where there has been some default in the other party. Here there has been none. If the sellers had loaded a short cargo, and the plaintiffs had not been bound to take it, no doubt they would; they might have claimed it, and the sellers could not have been heard to say that they (the sellers) had broken their contract by loading a less quantity than agreed, and so the buyers were not entitled to it. But that is not the case here. The sellers might have refused to give bills of lading to the plaintiffs, and to draw on them for the price of what was shipped, and, probably, would have done so had they been well insured. It is manifest that what occurred was a new bargain between the plaintiffs and the sellers. It might as well have been made between the sellers and a stranger.

Sparkes v. Marshall (2 Bing. N. C. 761) does not apply. There the property had vested in the buyer. The seller may have been in default for sending the oats to Southampton instead of Ports-

Ex. CH.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

[Ex. CH.]

mouth, but that did not take away the right of the buyer to insist as he did on having them.

Then it is said that the plaintiffs had an insurable interest in the profits they would have made. They had, but they have not insured profits, and, therefore, cannot recover on that ground. This was settled by the unanimous opinion of the judges and by the House of Lords in Lucena v. Crawford (5 B. & P. 269; 2 B. & P. N. R. 315), and has been well known and acted on ever since.

The plaintiffs had no interest in the subject-matter of insurance at the time of the loss, and so are not entitled to recover. The judgment must be reversed.

The judgment of Blackburn, J., in which Lush, J., concurred, was read by LUSH, J.—In this case the defendant is an underwriter for 100l., on a policy in the ordinary form of a Lombard-street policy, "At and from Rangoon to any port or place of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent" on the ship Sunbeam. The subject-matter of the insurance is described as "5500l. (part of 6000l.) on rice, as interest may appear. Amount of invoice and 15 per cent. to be deemed the value average, payable on every 500 bags." The policy contained the usual printed words: "Beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandises from the loading thereof on board the said ship." The Sunbeam at Rangoon foundered at anchor with 8878 bags of rice on board, and this rice was totally lost.

The question in the cause was, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover in respect of the loss of this rice from the underwriters, and, if so, for what per centage. The decision of the court below was that they were entitled to recover 100l. per cent. from each underwriter. There was a minor point made, that even if the underwriters were liable, it was not for so great a per centage; for, if in calculating the amount at risk the invoice value is taken to mean the invoice as between the shipper and the purchaser, that with the 15 per cent. added would not amount to 6000l., and the underwriters would be liable to make good something less than 100 per cent. If the phrase invoice value is to be taken as another expression for the ordinary shipping value, which includes not only the costs but the premiums of insurance, the value exceeded 6000l. It becomes unnecessary, in the view which we take of this case, to decide anything on this point. We only mention it lest it should be said we overlooked it.

The important issues were on the third plea, denying the plaintiff's interest; the fourth plea, alleging unseaworthiness; and the fifth plea, denying the loss by perils of the sea. On all these the plaintiff had a verdict, subject to leave to enter a verdict for the defendant on the ground that there was no evidence of loss by perils insured against, or that the evidence showed that the ship was not seaworthy, and on the ground that there was no insurable interest, or to reduce the damages on such principle as the court should lay down. A rule nisi was accordingly obtained on those grounds, and also for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. After a long argument, and much consideration, the Court of Common Pleas discharged the rule, giving their reasons in an elaborate judgment, reported in L. Rep. 10 C. P. 58; ante, vol. 2, p. 424. Against this judgment the appeal was brought, and argued on the 19th, 21st, and 22nd June, before my brothers Bramwell, Lush, Quain, Pollock, and Amphlett and myself.

During the argument we gave our judgment that the evidence was such as to make it a fair question for the jury whether the ship was or was not unseaworthy, and was or was not lost by perils of the seas, and therefore that the rule to enter the verdicts for the defendants on those issues was properly discharged. The question whether the verdict was against the weight of evidence was not before us. But, on the question whether there was an insurable interest, we took time to consider, and the majority have come to the conclusion that the judgment below was wrong on this point, and ought to be reversed, for the following reasons:

As the rice in question had been actually laden on board the Sunbeam at Rangoon, there can be no question that the adventure described in the policy had begun. But as the policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity, the plaintiffs cannot recover unless they suffered a loss from the perishing of that rice, and that loss was such as to be included in the subject-matter of the insurance, as described in the policy.

The first question, then, to be determined is, whether the plaintiffs were so situated with respect to the rice in question, at the time of its loss, that they would, if uninsured, have suffered any loss from the destruction of the rice; and, if any loss, whether that loss was of such a nature as to be included in this policy. The facts which are material as to this are not in dispute. The plaintiffs, Messrs. Anderson, had made a contract with Messrs. Borrodaile, contained in a bought note, set out in the sixth paragraph of the case. The material parts are these: "Bought.—The cargo of rice per Sunbeam, at 9s. 1½d. per cwt., cost and freight. Payment by seller's draft on purchasers at six months' sight, with documents attached." The Sunbeam, which had been taken up by Guben, Christian, and Co., the sellers of the cargo to Borrodaile and Co., arrived at Rangoon within the time mentioned in the contract, and Guben, Christian, and Co. proceeded to put the rice on board; they had by the 31st March, when the ship was lost, put 8878 bags on board, but this was only a portion of what they intended to ship. The remainder—it does not distinctly appear whether 400 bags or 1600 bags, but, at all events, a substantial portion of what they intended to be the lading of the Sunbeam—was in lighters on the shore, intended for the Sunbeam, but not yet on board of her. The time for preparing the shipping documents had not yet arrived, and by the terms of the bought note, Anderson and Co. were to pay by accepting drafts with documents attached. The question, therefore, arises, what loss, if any, did Anderson and Co. sustain by the perishing of this rice at this time. It was admitted by Mr. Williams in the argument, and, as we think, could not be disputed, that if the rice intended for the Sunbeam, and put on board the lighters, had perished before it was put on board, Anderson and Co. would have sustained no loss, his vendors being still bound as before to supply him with rice, though that which they had intended to give him had perished, to their loss and not his, because it was then at their risk, not his. It was not admitted by Mr. Butt, but was very faintly denied, that as soon as the intended lading was completed, and the shipping documents were either prepared or things in such a position that they could be prepared, Anderson and Co. would have been bound to pay for the cargo, though, from subsequent disaster, it perished either at Rangoon or on its way home. We all think it is the plain intention of the parties to this contract that, from the time the lading was complete, at least, the rice was to be at the risk of Anderson and Co., and that it is not material to consider whether they would have had the full property before the drafts were accepted.

Ex. Ch.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE.

[Ex. Ch.]

But there remains the disputed question whether each separate bag was at the risk of Anderson and Co. from the time it was put on board the Sunbeam, or whether it remained at the risk of the sellers until the whole intended loading was complete, and the shipping documents were ready, or at least everything was done to enable them to make out the shipping documents. This, we think, depends entirely on the intention of the parties to the contract as appearing from it. There is nothing to prevent the parties from agreeing that, as the goods are shipped bag by bag, each bag shall be at the risk of Anderson and Co., although the payment is postponed till all is on board; and if they have sufficiently expressed such an intention, then Castle v. Playford (ante, vol. 1, p. 225; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 98), is an express authority in this court, that Anderson and Co. must bear the loss, though it occurred before the stipulated time for payment had arrived. In that case the words of the contract were express, and left no doubt that the intention was that the buyer was to bear the risk, but we think the same result follows if the intention sufficiently appears, though it is not in express terms. On the other hand, Appleby v. Myers (L. Rep. 2 C. P. 651) is an express authority that if from the contract it appears that the intention of the parties is that the payment is to be only on the completion, nothing can be recovered, though that completion is prevented by an accident for which neither party is to blame. Both decisions are binding on us, even if we disapproved of them, but we agree with both. In the present case, there is nothing in the terms of the contract to indicate that the parties had present to their minds the possibility of a loss happening at the same time when this did, and, consequently, there are no words used expressly providing for it. We must collect the intention from the words used, applying to them the general rules which the courts have from time to time adopted, as rules to enable them to ascertain the intention.

The cases bearing on this subject are collected in Mr. Benjamin's Book on Sales, B. 2, chaps. 2 to 6. In Gilmour v. Supple (11 Moore P. C. 566), Sir C. Cresswell, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, says, we think very truly: "It is impossible to examine the decisions on this subject without being struck by the ingenuity with which sellers have contended that the property in goods contracted for had, or had not, become vested in the buyers, according as it suited their interest; and buyers or their representatives have with equal ingenuity endeavoured to show that they had or had not acquired the property in that for which they had contracted; and judges have not unnaturally appeared anxious to find reasons for giving a judgment which seemed to them most consistent with natural justice. Under such circumstances, it cannot occasion much surprise if some of the numerous reported decisions have been made to depend upon very nice and subtle distinctions, and if some of them should not appear altogether reconcilable with each other. Nevertheless, we think, that in all of them certain rules and principles have been recognised, by the application of which to this case we may be enabled to arrive at a correct judgment upon it." One of these rules is thus stated by Blackburn on Sales, p. 151 (See Benjamin on Sales, p. 235): "The first is, that where by the agreement the vendor is to do anything to the goods for the purpose of putting them into that state in which the purchaser is bound to accept them, or, as it is sometimes worded, into a deliverable state, the performance of these things shall (in the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention) be taken to be a condition precedent to the vesting of the property." This is in effect repeated in the judgment in Gilmour v. Supple (ubi sup.), and is, we think, consistent with all the cases.

Now, completing the lading so that shipping documents could be made out, seems to us a thing to be done by the vendor for the purpose of putting the goods into a deliverable state, or, to substitute the language of Sir C. Cresswell, an act to be done by the seller for the benefit of the buyer, to place the goods sold in a state to be delivered, and, therefore, "until he has done it the property does not pass." But we agree that this is only a prima facie indication of the intention, and that it must yield to anything sufficiently indicating a contrary intention. We must, therefore, look to the contract to see if there are any indications of a contrary intention in this case. It may be observed, that risk and property generally go together, and, consequently, in many of the cases, though the important point was, at whose risk is the thing; it is treated as if the sole question was, whose property is it? In the present case, however, the real question is, at whose risk was it? and we do not, therefore, attach any weight to the stipulation that the seller was to attach the shipping documents to the drafts, thereby certainly preserving to the sellers a lien on the goods till the drafts were accepted, and the bill of lading handed over; and, perhaps, preserving in them till then the property, so as to enable them to confer a title on a purchaser for value without notice, as good in equity as, and preferable at law to, that of Anderson and Co. This would not prevent the risk from being on the purchaser from the time the loading was complete. Nor do we proceed on the ground that the word "cargo" has any technical sense requiring that the whole ship should be filled up. But we do proceed on the ground that the prima facie rule of construction is, that the parties intended that the risk should become that of the buyers, Anderson and Co., when and not till the whole lading was complete, so as to enable the shippers, by getting the shipping documents, to call on the buyers to accept and pay for the cargo; and that there is nothing in this contract to rebut the presumption that such was the intention.

We do not think that the fact that the vessel was designated, and that unless under exceptional circumstances the seller could not, without the consent of the shipowner, take any goods once on board out of her affects the question

Ex. Ch.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT; KREEFT v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.

as between the vendor and purchaser. The court below says, that putting any on board the Sunbeam "was such an appropriation of the rice on board as to prevent the sellers from withdrawing that rice without the consent of the buyer." If we could see anything in the contract to give the buyer a right to object, we should think it indicated an intention that the property so put on board should be at the buyer's risk; but we cannot find anything to that effect. If we could see anything to indicate an intention that as each bag was shipped, it should be at the buyer's risk, we should think it indicated an intention that it should not be taken out without his consent. But we cannot reason in a circle.

We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that no part of this rice ever was at the plaintiff's risk, and that he never could have been called upon to pay for it, notwithstanding its loss.

The court below, after coming by a somewhat different process of reasoning to the same result, say that the plaintiff would, if the rice had not perished, have had an option to pay for it, and, therefore had, after the loss, an option to pay for it, and charge the underwriters with the loss. No one can dispute that the plaintiff might pay the sellers for the rice that perished, though not bound to do so, just as he might have paid them for any bags of rice that had been lost on board the lighters or in their warehouses on land, after they had been brought there, in order to put them on board the ship. It might be a liberal thing to do so at his own expense. But the decision below seems to affirm that after the loss the insured, though he had not sustained any loss, may elect to bear it, and pay at the cost of the underwriters.

To this we cannot agree. The authority on which they acted (Sparkes v. Marshall, 2 Bing. N. C. 761) seems to us to be misapplied. In that case Bamford had written to Sparkes, the plaintiff, that John and Son, of Youghal, had engaged room in the Gibraltar Packet to take about 600 barrels of oats on his account. The plaintiff at once adopted this by directing insurance to be made on his account on oats per the Gibraltar Packet, from Youghal to Southampton and Portsmouth. The judgment proceeds on the ground that this was an appropriation by Bamford, assented to by Sparkes, vesting the oats in Sparkes. It appears from the correspondence in the case that Bamford knew that the Gibraltar Packet was bound for Southampton only, whilst Sparkes thought she was bound for Southampton and Portsmouth, and also that John and Son shipped only 486 barrels of oats on account of Sparkes instead of about 600. It may be, though it is not quite clear, and the court did not determine it, that these facts gave Sparkes a right to undo the appropriation to him, and so divest the interest already vested in him, but he never did so. The decision, we think, involves the position, that the underwriters had no right to call upon Sparkes to exercise for their benefit, after the loss, his right, if he had it, to undo and divest an interest vested in him before the loss. But this is a very different proposition from saying that the assured had a right after the loss to vest in himself a right not vested in him before the loss, and so incur a liability to pay at the underwriters' expense. We do not think they could do so.

There is only one further point, briefly stated in the judgment below thus: "We are further of opinion that even if the property in the rice did not legally pass to the plaintiff, yet he had an insurable interest in it, because he had an existing contract with regard to it from the time of its being loaded on board, by virtue of which he had an expectancy of benefit and advantage arising out of or depending on the safe arrival of the rice." This was more fully discussed on the argument before us. If the market was a rising market, the plaintiff would have derived benefit from the completion of the contract, if a falling one he would have sustained loss, and the loss of the Sunbeam put an end to this chance. We need not discuss whether under a properly framed policy the plaintiff could have insured this expectancy of profit. For the subject-matter of this insurance is on "rice," and though that is to be construed liberally as covering any interest in the rice, it cannot be construed as covering an interest in profits that might arise collaterally from a contract relating to the rice. For this it is enough to refer to Lucena v. Crawford (2 Bos. & P. N. R. 315). The action was on a policy on ships and goods; eight questions were asked of the judges. The eighth, set out at p. 278 of the report, was as to whether the commissioners had profits in respect of which they had an insurable interest, and then asks, "Can the policy of assurance in the first count of the declaration mentioned (i.e., a policy on ships and goods), be considered as a policy effected on such interest of the commissioners, if such they had, and the same is an insurable interest?" The answer of the judges is stated at p. 315: "The learned judges were unanimously of opinion that the policy in question could not be considered as a policy on profits, having been expressly declared upon as a policy upon the plaintiffs' interest in the ships and goods themselves, and that if it had been intended as a policy on profits, it should have been so stated." This, we think, decisive of the question; but we may refer to Royal Exchange Assurance Co. v. McSwinney (14 Q. B. 647), as showing how important it is not only to have an insurable interest, but to have the subject-matter of insurance so described in the policy as to embrace that interest.

For these reasons we think that this rule should have been absolute to enter the verdict for the defendants on the third plea, denying the insurable interest, and that the judgment should so far be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

Attorneys for the plaintiff, Parker, Watney, and Co.

Attorneys for the defendant, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by H. LEIGH and CYRIL DODD, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, July 7, 1875.

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT; KREEFT v. THOMPSON.

Unascertained goods—Property passing—Sale of goods—Charter-party providing that bills of lading should be signed, as presented. Kreeft bought from M. all the ore of certain mines, to be shipped by M. on ships chartered either by

[Ex.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT; KREEFT v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

K. or by M. The ore was to be paid for by bills drawn against bills of lading, or by longer bills on execution of charter-parties, and on a certificate that there was enough ore in stock to load the chartered ships. On being so paid for the ore was to be considered the property of K. When the Macedonia arrived at the port of loading K. had already accepted drafts which more than covered the value of its future cargo, and when the Trowbridge arrived the payments made exceeded anything that could be due for its cargo.

The charter-party of the Macedonia did not authorise the signing of bills of lading as presented, that of the Trowbridge did.

No certificate was sent that there was enough ore in stock to load the Trowbridge.

The Macedonia was loaded with ore, which ought to have been applied to fulfil the contract with K. by M., without any statement by M. that it was not being shipped under the contract; but when the shipment was complete M. procured the bills of lading to be made out to his own order, and by indorsement for value they passed to G., to whom the ore so shipped was delivered by T., the owner of the Macedonia.

When the Trowbridge arrived, though there was ore which ought to have been shipped under the contract, M. telegraphed to K. that he would not load the ship on his account, and then loaded it, taking bills of lading made out to S. (S. being a fictitious person), which bills of lading passed by indorsement for value to G.

Held by the Court (Kelly, C.B., Bramwell and Cleasby, BB.), that G. was entitled to the ore shipped on board the Trowbridge. By Kelly, C.B.—On the ground solely that the charter-party justified the signing of the bills of lading as presented, and that the bills of lading, as signed, gave a title to G. By Bramwell and Cleasby, BB.—On the ground that the ore was not specifically appropriated to the contract, and that, upon the facts, no property in the ore passed to K.

Held, by the majority of the court (Bramwell and Cleasby, BB.), that T., the owner of the Macedonia, was not liable to K. for having delivered the ore shipped thereon to G., on the ground that the property in the ore had not passed to K., and that T. had performed his duty under the charter-party.

Held by Kelly, C.B. (dissenting), that T., the owner of the Macedonia, was liable to K. for the value of the ore, because the property in the ore had passed to K.

GABARRON v. KREEFT was a feigned issue to try the title to 400 tons of ore, shipped at Cartagena, in Spain, by one Munoz on board the ship Trowbridge.

Kreeft v. Thompson was an action by the charterers of the ship Macedonia against the shipowner, for refusing to deliver to them ore shipped to the Tyne Dock on board that ship.

Both cases were tried together, before Bramwell, B., at the London Sittings after Trinity Term 1874.

In Gabarron v. Kreeft a verdict was entered for the defendant, leave being given to the plaintiffs to move to enter a verdict for them for an agreed sum.

In Kreeft v. Thompson a verdict was entered for the plaintiff for 92l., with leave to the defendant to move.

The ore in question, in both actions, was part of the produce of mines in Spain in the hands of Munoz. Munoz had, before the shipment of either parcel of ore, entered into a contract with Kreeft, which was set out in the following letter:

124, Fenchurch-street, London, 25th Oct. 1871.

Senor Don Francisco Munoz, of Cartagena.

We hereby confirm the verbal arrangement made with you this morning respecting the produce of such of the Porman iron mines as may be in your hands, viz.:

We agree to buy from you the whole of the iron ores which you may obtain from these mines within twelve months from this date, at the price of 7s. 6d. per English ton, delivered f. o. b. on ships at Porman, upon the conditions that you can obtain freight for all the ore so purchased by us. . . . You binding yourself to load the said vessels chartered by you when they arrive on your side, and also such vessels as we may charter. Payment for the ores to be made by your drafts upon us at fourteen days' date, if drawn against bills of lading, at three months' date if drawn against charter; if the latter mode of payment is adopted, you are bound to send us with advice of each draft an attested certificate that the quantity of ore drawn for is actually in stock, and that this ore is to be considered our property. . . .

KREEFT AND Co.

The bills of lading for the ore shipped on board the Trowbridge were made out to one Sabadie, and were after indorsement pledged for value to Gabarron. Sabadie was a fictitious person.

By the charter-party of the Trowbridge, the captain was to sign bills of lading, "as presented."

The charter-party of the Macedonia did not authorise the signing of bills of lading, as presented; by it the owner agreed to proceed to Cartagena, and load from the factor to the freighter (Kreeft) the quantity of ore in question, and therewith to proceed to the Tyne to discharge at Tyne Dock, and to deliver the same afloat to the said freighter Kreeft, or assigns, on being paid the agreed freight. The bills of lading of the Macedonia were, through the fraud of Munoz, made out to order, and were by indorsement for value passed to Gabarron.

Various vessels were loaded, and various payments were from time to time made, so that when the Macedonia arrived at Cartagena, Kreeft had already accepted drafts drawn by Munoz, which more than covered the value of the cargo which was afterwards put on board that ship; and when the Trowbridge arrived in March 1872, that ship's arrival being later than that of the Macedonia, the payments made exceeded the value of the ore shipped to such an extent that no payment could be due for the ore to be shipped on board that ship. When the Macedonia arrived at Cartagena Munoz began to ship ore, and kept on shipping it on board that vessel for several days, without giving any intimation that he was shipping it otherwise than for Kreeft, in accordance with the contract. But when the ore was all shipped on board the Macedonia, Munoz fraudulently induced the master to sign bills of lading to his order, which, as before stated, passed by indorsement for value to Gabarron.

After the arrival of the Trowbridge, and before any ore was put on board, Munoz telegraphed to Kreeft that he would not ship on their account, and after loading her took bills of lading to Sabadie's order, which, as before stated, also passed by indorsement for value to Gabarron. No certificate was given, as required by the contract, with regard to this ore.

The facts and inferences of fact are set out in the judgment, so that it is unnecessary to enter more fully into detail here.

[Ex.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT; KREEFT v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

The court granted rules in both cases, in accordance with the leave reserved at the trial.

Benjamin, Q.C. and R. E. Webster appeared to show cause on behalf of Kreeft. They referred to

Pickering v. Busk, 15 East, 38;

Turner v. Trustees of Liverpool Docks, 6 Ex. 543; 20 L. J. 393, Ex.;

Thompson v. Dominy, 14 M. & W. 403;

Brown v. Hare, 4 H. & N. 822; 29 L. J. 6, Ex.;

Gurney v. Behrend, 3 E. & B. 622; 23 L. J. 265, Q. B.;

Benjamin on Sales, 2nd edit., p. 248.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Arbuthnot (A. L. Smith with them), in support of the rules in both actions, cited

Ogle v. Atkinson, 5 Taunt. 759;

Ellershaw v. Magniac, 6 Ex. 570;

Falke v. Fletcher, 18 C. B., N. S., 403; 34 L. J. 146, C. P.;

The Chartered Bank of India v. Henderson, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 578; L. Rep. 5 P. C. 501;

Gilbert v. Guignon, ante vol. 1, p. 498; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733; L. Rep. 8 Ch. 16;

Moakes v. Nicholson, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573; 19 C. B., N. S., 290; 34 L. J. 273, C. P.

The arguments of counsel are indicated and dealt with fully in the following judgments:

Cur. adv. vult.

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT.

BRAMWELL, B.—It will be convenient in this case briefly to state the facts as I appreciate them. The defendants bought from one Munoz all the ore of a certain mine in Spain, to be shipped by Munoz free on board at Cartagena, on ships to be chartered by the defendants, or by him. The ore was to be paid for by bills against bills of lading; or on the execution of a charter and on a certificate that there was enough ore in stock to load the vessel chartered. On being so paid for, the ore was to be the property of the defendants. Various vessels had been loaded and others chartered, and various payments made up to March 1872, when the Trowbridge, one of the chartered ships, arrived at Cartagena. The payments that had been made at that time exceeded in amount the price of all the ore shipped and to be shipped in all the vessels chartered and not loaded; so that had Munoz shipped ore on the Trowbridge, he would have been entitled to no payment from the defendants in respect of it. He had ore which he could and ought to have so shipped, taking bills of lading to the order of the defendants. Instead of doing this, he on the 8th April, and before any ore was put on board the Trowbridge, picked a quarrel with the defendants, telegraphed to them that he would not load the Trowbridge on their account, and though they telegraphed to him threatening him if he did not, he loaded the Trowbridge, took bills of lading making the shipment to be by one Sabadie, and the cargo deliverable to Sabadie's order. It is agreed he had at the time of shipment no intention to ship for the defendants. In giving these bills of lading the captain was clearly justified, as the charter said he was to sign bills of lading as presented. Sabadie was a sham; the ore was the ore of Munoz. Munoz indorsed Sabadie's name on the bills of lading, and then his own, and then pledged it to the plaintiffs.

The question is, whether the plaintiffs or defendants are entitled to the cargo. If the cargo ever belonged to the defendants, it is certain that Munoz could confer no title unless by estoppel or otherwise, as hereafter mentioned. This is clear on principle, as shewn by Ogle v. Atkinson (5 Taunt. 759).

Did, then, the ore ever belong to the defendants? Certainly not, till it was paid for. For the agreement was not a sale of specific property, but an agreement to sell all the ore to be produced. Did it become the property of the defendants on being paid for? The contract says it shall, but it seems to me impossible that it can be so. There is nothing to distinguish the ore paid for from that not paid for; certainly there is no evidence that the ore put in the Trowbridge was specially earmarked, as the subject of the cargo for it or any other ship. No certificate in relation to it was given, as provided by the contract. It is impossible to suppose that if this ore had been stolen while in the possession of Munoz, though after it was paid for, the loss would have been the defendants', or that the defendants would not have had a right to reject this ore and object to its being loaded, or that Munoz might not have loaded other ore.

These considerations seem to show that no property passed in this ore before it was put on board the ship. Did that cause the property to pass? Now it is clear that Munoz had no right to put any part of that ore on the ship, except for the purpose of its being delivered to the defendants. On the other hand, it is equally clear to me that, had he said to the captain when loading, "I load this on my own account, and not on the defendants'," and the captain had taken it on board, the loading, together with the other facts, could not have passed the property. But it does not appear that he said anything till he presented the bill of lading, and then he showed that he had not loaded for the defendants, but for his own purposes. If the property had passed on taking the bill of lading made out as it is, the loading was in my opinion nugatory. The captain knew no better, and was justified in giving the bill of lading as he did, but his doing so did not take the property out of the defendants, if in them, any more than it would if the ore had been bought and paid for by the defendants, stored in their yards, and shipped by Munoz as a mere agent: (Ogle v. Atkinson, 5 Taunt. 759.)

The question, then, is reduced to this, did the property pass on actual shipment, the shipper having no right to ship except to pass the property, and having no right to retain possession for any lien for the price or otherwise, but taking when he does take it, a bill of lading deliverable otherwise than to the defendants, to whom it ought to have been made deliverable? If this matter were res integra, there would be strong grounds for contending it did. It would be impossible to suppose that Munoz could be heard to say, "I was doing what was right if shipping as your property, wrong if shipping as mine, but it is the latter I did." If Munoz could not say this, neither it is argued could anyone claiming title under him. It is true that Munoz had told the defendants that he would not ship on their account, but they had equally told him he should, and should ship on no other, and he shipped. Suppose goods not specific were sold to be delivered by the seller into the buyer's cart when sent for, and the seller, said I shall not put those goods in your cart unless you pay more than the agreed price, and the buyer said, you shall, and I shall send my cart, and did, and the goods were put in it by the seller, it is clear that the seller could get no more than the agreed price.

[Ex.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREFT; KREFT v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

I know that different considerations may arise as to a cargo, but the question between Munoz and the defendants is the same (8 Ex., 570).

But the matter is not res integra, though there is no case precisely in point; Ellershaw v. Magniac certainly is not. There the shipper had shipped a different cargo to what he had agreed to ship; the captain taking it on board knew that. He was bound to tell the shipper to take it out or to give him bills of lading deliverable to him. I am aware that a cargo of linseed was to be shipped, and that some linseed was shipped. But the plaintiff had a right to reject a part cargo. The case may be tested thus: If a bill of lading of the linseed had been given deliverable to the plaintiff, he might have refused to receive it; still that case shows that a shipper rightfully shipping for a buyer, can, nevertheless, get a bill of lading deliverable to himself. Neither is Turner v. The Trustees of the Liverpool Docks (6 Ex. 543; 20 L. J. 393, Ex.) in point. For there the shippers had a right of lien on the goods till they were paid for in the agreed manner. But that case also shows that goods may be put by the seller on the buyer's ship with nothing said at the time, and that, nevertheless, the seller may get a bill of lading deliverable to himself. It does not appear in that case that the shippers at the time of shipment said anything about the form of the bill of lading to be given, or reserved to themselves any right as to it. Then there is the case of Fulke v. Fletcher (18 C. B., N. S., 400), in which Willes, J. (p. 409), uses expressions which go to show that a shipper may ship, saying nothing, and then demand a bill of lading in exchange for the mate's receipt, in such form as he pleases. Wait v. Baker (2 Ex. 1) is also not in point, because there the vendor had a right of lien. But Parke, B., said: "The delivery of the goods on board the ship was not a delivery of them to the defendant but a delivery to the captain, to be carried under a bill of lading, and that bill of lading indicated the person for whom they were to be carried." He said the same thing in Van Casteel v. Booker (2 Ex. 691). In Moakes v. Nicholson (19 C. B., N. S., 290), it was held that retaining the bill of lading, though made out in the buyer's name, prevented the passing of the property. There, however, the vendors had a lien. Mr. Benjamin on Sales, p. 306, thus sums up the result: "Where goods are delivered on board of a vessel to be carried, and a bill of lading is taken, the delivery by the vendor is not a delivery to the buyer but to the captain as bailee for delivery to the person indicated by the bill of lading, as the one for whom they are to be carried." The cases seem to me to show that the act of shipment is not completed till the bill of lading is given, that if what is shipped is the shipper's property till shipped on account of the shipowner or charterer, it remains uncertain on whose account it is shipped, and is not shipped on the latter's account till the bill of lading is given deliverable to him.

It seems to me, therefore, that in this case the property never passed to the defendants, and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. I feel bound by the authorities, which, perhaps, establish a more convenient state of law than would exist if bills of lading might be got deliverable to one person, while the property was in another.

As to the question of estoppel, viz., that the defendants having authorised the signing of bills of lading as presented, have authorised an act by which Munoz has been able to deceive the plaintiffs, I am of opinion that would not avail the plaintiffs if the property in the ore had passed to the defendants. The defendants no more enabled the commission of a fraud than they would have done if the ore had been their property, never that of Munoz, in their stores, and Munoz only an agent for shipment, and the charter in the present form. What the defendants have done is, supposing the property is theirs, to put it in the possession of Munoz, and so make him appear the owner. But if I hand my watch to a man to keep for me, though I in a sense enable him to appear to be the owner, yet if he sells or pledges it, I do not lose my property.

I think judgment should be for the plaintiffs.

CLEASBY, B.—The question upon this interpleader is, whether the plaintiffs or the defendants are entitled to a cargo of ore put on board a vessel called the Trowbridge, at Cartagena.

The defendants had agreed to purchase of one Munoz all iron ore the produce of a certain mine; and it was to be paid for either by bills at fourteen days, if drawn against bills of lading, or by bills at three months from date of charter-party. In this latter case it was provided by the contract of sale that certificates of the quantity being in store should accompany the bills, and that the ore so drawn for was to be considered as the property of the defendants. It is obvious that the bills of exchange in this latter case would not refer to the exact burden of the vessel designated, but to an estimate only of the quantity to be taken on board. Munoz loaded the Trowbridge with ore in the name of one Sabadie, and procured bills of lading making the ore deliverable to the order of Sabadie, which Sabadie indorsed to Munoz, and Munoz then indorsed them for a valuable consideration to the plaintiffs. It must be taken that Munoz was not justified in doing this, and that he made the refusal of the defendants to accept two more bills an occasion for breaking his contract; and the question is, whether, under the circumstances of the case the cargo of the Trowbridge had ceased to be the property of Munoz when he obtained the bills of lading afterwards indorsed to the plaintiffs. I say, had ceased to be the property of Munoz, because it is, I think, clear that although the defendants agreed to buy the whole produce of the mine, the ore did not become the property of the defendants when it was taken for the time to the store, but was at that time the property of Munoz. It must be taken, I think, that by virtue of the payment the defendants had become entitled to a quantity of the ore in store corresponding with the amount of the bills drawn against the charterer of the Trowbridge, but it cannot be doubted that this alone would not transfer the property in any particular part, and upon this no authorities need be referred to. And the question becomes whether by any subsequent act of appropriation the property in a particular part has passed.

The question, what is a sufficient appropriation, has formed the subject of many decisions. In my opinion, as soon as there was an appropriation, by which I mean an unconditional appropriation of a part of the stock, that part would become the property of the defendants. Now it is said in the present case that by the finding of the jury up to a certain time, Munoz was loading under the contract, and afterwards was not doing so. The effect of this would be as to so much as was loaded up to that time the property would pass; and a question would then arise as to how far Munoz would affect the title of the defendants to what had been appropriated, by delivering on board the vessel a quantity of other ore which could not be distinguished. But in reality, upon all the facts found in this case, and dealing with them subject to the powers conferred upon us to draw inferences, there is nothing to show that any quantity was delivered on board before the 8th April, when it is clear that Munoz was not appropriating any as the property of the defendants, but only selecting what he should send by the vessel. There is no proof that part was loaded. The utmost evidence is that of the letter of the 11th April, the contents of which, having been argued upon on both sides, may be taken as some evidence of the statements contained in it, and thus showing that the Trowbridge and several other vessels were loading on that day. But coupling this with the date of the bill of lading, the 26th April, I cannot regard this as proof that any quantity was loaded on the 8th April. And if none was on board before that time, then it appears to me that the mere act of selection from the bulk of a particular part to be placed on board the vessel is not such an appropriation as to make the contract of purchase operate on it—because the selection was in the mind of the person selecting not a selection of a portion of what had been paid for, but of what he alleged was not paid for.

[Ex.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEST; KREEST v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

It was further argued that, independent of the intention of Munoz to appropriate the ore loaded to the contract and particular drafts, the fact of loading the ore on board the vessel chartered by the defendants was of itself such an act as vested the property in them. But upon the effect of delivering a cargo contracted for on board the vessel of the vendee, the authorities are too numerous to refer to. I may mention Turner v. The Trustees of the Liverpool Docks (6 Ex. 543), as an early one, with Ellershaw v. Magniac, in the note in that case (6 Ex. 570), and Shepherd v. Harrison, in L. Rep. 5 H. of L. 116, as the last. The effect of these is, that the delivering of goods contracted for on board a ship when a bill of lading is taken, is not a delivery to the buyer but to the captain as bailee to deliver to the person indicated by the bill of lading, and that this may equally apply when the ship is the ship of the vendee. Such would, I think, be the proper conclusion, independent of the clause of the charter-party, that the captain is to sign bills of lading "as presented." This does not mean merely as regards price or any particulars of that sort, because it is plain that when the charter was effected it was uncertain whether Munoz would not choose to draw at fourteen days against bills of lading, in which case he might, no doubt, have made the cargo by the terms of the bills of lading deliverable to himself. The captain knows nothing about the arrangements between Munoz and the defendants, he only knows that Munoz is the person who is to fulfil the charter-party on behalf of the defendants. Thus the defendants make it obligatory upon the captain to give to Sabadie or Munoz this document of title to property transferable by indorsement, and this, if not an estoppel against the defendants, as between them and the bona fide holder of this document of title, very much strengthens the conclusion that Munoz having this power expressly reserved to him, acted throughout with reference to it as he did in fact exercise it to the last.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed upon this issue.

KELLY, C.B.—This case differs from Kreest v. Thomson in one point only, but that one is all-important. Here, the facts in all other respects being substantially the same, the charter-party of the ship (in this case called the Trowbridge) contained these words: "The captain to sign bills of lading, as presented." Now these words appear to me, not only to convey an authority to the master, but to impose an obligation upon him to grant and sign bills of lading, in whatever form and to whatever effect he might be required by Munoz to sign them. I think, therefore, that the bills of lading, though a fraud upon Kreest, were granted and signed under and in strict pursuance of his authority, and having been indorsed for value to the plaintiffs, entitled them to the ore in question, and therefore to the judgment of the court.

KREEST v. THOMPSON.

BRAMWELL, B.—This case differs from Gabarron v. Kreest in the following particulars. It is an action on a charter-party by the charterers against the shipowner for not delivering a cargo to the plaintiffs according to the charter-party. The charter-party did not authorise the captain to sign bills of lading as presented. By it the shipowner agreed to deliver the cargo to the plaintiffs. The loading had partly taken place while Munoz was intending to fulfil his contract, but was finished after. The cargo had been specifically drawn against.

If I am right in my opinion in Gabarron v. Kreest, the property in this cargo never passed to the plaintiffs, for I think it makes no difference that at the beginning of the loading Munoz intended to ship for the plaintiffs. As I have said, the act is not complete till the bill of lading is given.

Was the shipowner, nevertheless, bound by the charter to deliver the cargo to the plaintiffs? I think not; I think the charter only means that the cargo shall be delivered to the charterer if he has a right to receive it, and that he had no right to receive this. Then it will be said that the shipowner had no right to take it on board. I think he not only had such right but was bound to do so. I think that if Munoz had said to him, I will not ship for the plaintiffs, but will ship for myself, and the captain had said, I will not take the cargo but sail away in ballast, he would have done wrong. A captain, when he cannot get the agreed cargo, is bound to take some other cargo if he can get it, so as to lessen the loss. Suppose Munoz had wholly refused all shipment, and some other owner of ore had offered a shipment, the captain would have been bound to take it, and had he done so would not have been bound to deliver it to the plaintiffs. I think, on the authorities referred to in Gabarron v. Kreest, that the captain could not refuse to sign the bill of lading which Munoz required, unless he let Munoz take out the cargo, and that he would have done wrong had he required him to do so. There is no suggestion in any of the cases cited in Gabarron v. Kreest that any action would be maintainable against a captain or owner for giving bills of lading

[Ex.]

GABARRON AND ANOTHER v. KREEFT; KREEFT v. THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

to the order of the shipper. Besides, Munoz was the agent of the plaintiffs, and the captain was justified in signing bills of lading as he required. I think our judgment should be for the defendants.

CLEASBY, B.—This is not like Gabarron v. Kreeft, in which the question of property only was involved. It is an action on a charter-party by the freighters against the shipowners. By the charter-party the defendant was to receive from the factor of the freighters at Cartagena, a cargo of ore, and deliver it in the Tyne Docks to the freighters or assignees. No question arises in the present case upon the pleadings, and the case is to be dealt with entirely on the facts, but as it is a question of contract, it is essential to see what the exact contract is, and it is to deliver to the freighters or assignees. The word "assignees" cannot mean, I think, assignees of the charter-party, but it may mean either assignees of the cargo or assignees of the bill of lading, which is the title to property in the cargo.

I must say I have very great difficulty in dealing with this case from the scantiness of the materials for any decision. The question relates to the cargo of a vessel called the Macedonia, which it appears was chartered as early as the 9th Nov. 1871, and drawn against on the 29th Nov. It has been noticed that by the arrangement between Munoz and the plaintiffs, the cargo might be drawn against either by bills at three months from the date of the charter-party, or at fourteen days from the bills of lading. It might appear from this that bills of lading were not to be taken except when they were drawn against. But that is not the case; the correspondence shows throughout that in cases where the bills had been drawn against the charter-party, bills of lading were still to be taken by Munoz and forwarded to the plaintiffs. See, for example, the letter of the 29th Nov. 1871, in which Munoz says, "We have drawn on you this day a bill for 123l. at ninety days, which we place to your credit on account of cargoes per Macedonia, Nautilus, and Messenger, invoices of which will follow with their respective bills of lading." And as regards the cargo by the Macedonia, which we are now considering, and which had been drawn against so early as the 29th of Nov., we have the following in the letter of the plaintiffs themselves, dated the 24th of Jan., "We are expecting bills of lading of Macedonia, and Retriever," &c. It is true there is nothing to show that these bills of lading did not make the cargo deliverable to the plaintiffs. But this is not material, because the shipowner or captain knew nothing of the arrangement between Munoz and the plaintiffs, and if there were to be bills of lading Munoz must be the person to determine in what form they should be, because it is admitted that he might draw in each case against bills of lading, in which case, no doubt, the bills of lading would be deliverable to himself, or he would have no security, and the captain would not ask him why he took the bills of lading deliverable to himself.

The effect of this seems to me to be that the captain must look to Munoz to determine how the bills of lading are to make the cargo deliverable, and that he performs his contract by delivering the cargo according to the bills of lading, though by the charter-party the cargo is deliverable to freighters or assignees. If he is addressed to Munoz as the factor of the shipper, and Munoz is to determine whether he will take bills of lading deliverable to himself, the shipper is bound by his act in having the goods made deliverable to himself, and it cannot make any real difference in substance whether, by the bills of lading, the cargo is made deliverable to Sabadie or to Munoz. This seems to me a more satisfactory mode of deciding the case than by deciding it on the ground that the plaintiffs did not perform their part of the contract, because their factor did not send a cargo deliverable to the freighters or their assigns, although it really comes to the same thing.

KELLY, C.B.—The question in this case is, whether a quantity of iron ore, shipped on board the Macedonia by one Munoz, is the property of the plaintiffs Kreeft and others, and whether the master was bound to deliver it to them upon its arrival in England, or whether it had passed under the bills of lading to order, signed by the master, at the instance of Munoz in favour of one Sabadie, and from whom it passed by indorsement to Gabarron, the plaintiff in the other action.

I am of opinion that the ore had become the property of the plaintiffs, if not before, at the time when it was shipped on board the Macedonia; that the master was bound by the terms of the charter-party to deliver it to the plaintiffs upon the arrival of the ship in the Tyne; and that not having done so, his owner, whom the defendant represents, is liable to this action.

The ore was shipped by Munoz at Cartagena, under a contract between him and Kreeft, by which Kreeft had contracted to buy from him the whole of the iron ores which he might obtain from the mines within twelve months from the 25th of Oct. 1871. And it was expressly agreed that Munoz should load such vessels as should be chartered by Kreeft; payment to be made at fourteen days' date, if drawn for against bills of lading, and at three months' date, if drawn against charter; and Munoz to send with advice of each draft, an attested certificate that the quantity of ore drawn for was actually in stock, and that that ore was to be considered the property of Kreeft. The Macedonia was chartered by Kreeft, and by the charter-party the owner expressly agreed "to proceed to Cartagena, and load from the factor to the freighter (Kreeft) the quantity of iron ore in question, and therewith to proceed to the Tyne, to discharge at Tyne Dock, and to deliver the same afloat to the said freighter Kreeft, or assigns, on being paid the agreed freight." The Macedonia proceeded to Cartagena, and Munoz having already drawn, and Kreeft having accepted drafts exceeding in amount the price of the ore in question, and having taken it out of stock, and so separated it from the bulk of the stock, shipped the quantity of ore in question on board the Macedonia, the shipment continuing for several days, and no intimation having been given by Munoz to the master that the ore was otherwise than destined to and shipped for the account of Kreeft, the charterer of the ship. But when the shipment was complete, Munoz fraudulently prevailed on the master to sign bills of lading for the ore to order, which afterwards passed by indorsement for value to Gabarron.

Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the whole case depends upon the contracts between the parties, that is to say, between Kreeft and Munoz, and Kreeft and the owner of the Macondia respectively; and that Munoz having contracted that the ore, when drawn for and the drafts accepted, should become the property of Kreeft, it became his property as soon as he had accepted beyond the amount of its price, and it had been separated from the bulk of the stock.

Ex.]

THE JENNIE S. BARKER; THE SPINDRIFT.

[ADM.]

But if this were doubtful, I am clearly of opinion that it became his property the moment it was put on board the Macondia. The case was contended in argument to be the same as if the plaintiff had purchased and paid for a quantity of merchandise which the seller contracted to deliver into the purchaser's waggon when he should send for it, and that he had hired the waggon of the defendant, who had contracted to carry it to the plaintiff's warehouse and there deliver it to the plaintiff, but whose servant, the waggoner, having received it into the waggon, had signed a contract to deliver it, and had afterwards in fact delivered it, to another person. It has been argued that the shipment was made with a view to the bill of lading, and with the intent to take a bill of lading to order, and that the shipment was not complete till the bill of lading was signed. No doubt the shipment and the bill of lading in general constitute but one transaction. But in this case it is to disregard altogether the contracts between the parties to apply to it this general rule or practice. Here Munoz had received a copy of the charter, and knew that the vessel had been chartered by the plaintiff and that the owner had contracted to receive the ore from him, and to deliver it to the plaintiff upon the ship's arrival in the Tyne. And I hold that it was not competent to Munoz, or to the master, or to both together, to change the property by the wrongful act of Munoz, or the unauthorised acquiescence of the master, the one in demanding, the other in granting, the bills of lading.

Upon the simple and plain ground, therefore, that under the contract between Kreeft and the shipowner, the master, as the agent of the owner, was bound to deliver the ore on its arrival in the Tyne to Kreeft, and that he could not exonerate himself from that obligation by the unauthorised signature of the bills of lading; it appears to me that Kreeft was entitled, upon the arrival of the ship in the Tyne, to the delivery of the ore, and consequently that the defendant is liable to this action for the non-delivery.

Many cases were cited on the one side and on the other, but it appears to me that none of them has any application to the case before the court, except indeed the case of Ellershaw v. Magniac, in a note in 6 Ex. 570, where the facts were very similar to the present, but with this marked distinction, that there there was no such express contract as here, that the property of the goods should vest in the purchaser upon their having been drawn for, and the drafts accepted; and further, that a part of the goods only was shipped, and the vessel filled up with other goods, for which the purchaser had not contracted, and so that as he was not bound to accept the one and had never contracted for the other, the property in neither had vested in him by the shipment. On these grounds, I am of opinion that the plaintiff Kreeft is entitled to the judgment of the court.

Rules absolute.

Attorneys for the plaintiff Cabarron, Williamson, Hill, and Co., for Ingledew and Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Attorneys for the defendant Kreeft, Fry and Hudson.

Attorneys for the plaintiff Kreeft, Fry and Hudson.

Attorneys for the defendant Thompson, Williamson, Hill, and Co., for Ingledew and Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Reported by J. F. ASHFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, July 14, 1875.

THE JENNIE S. BARKER; THE SPINDRIFT.

Collision—Steam tug lying to—Duty to avoid sailing ship.

A steam tug have to during fine weather in a fairway and waiting for employment, is bound to keep out of the way of sailing ships using the fairway.

THESE were cross causes of collision instituted, the one on behalf of the Liverpool Steam Tug Company (Limited), the owners of the tug Spindrift, against the barque Jennie S. Barker, and her owners intervening; the others by the owners of the Jennie S. Barker, against the Spindrift, and her owners intervening.

The causes were by agreement heard upon the petitions filed in each cause, without answers being put in. The petition filed by the owners of the Spindrift, was, so far as is material, as follows:—

1. Between noon and 0.30 p.m., on the 14th June 1875 the steam tug Spindrift, of 175 tons gross register, manned by a crew of nine hands, all told, was about one mile from the land, between Point Lynas and Middle Mouse.
2. The wind at such time was about south-west, blowing a moderate gale, with squalls, and the tide was about half ebb, and of the force of about one and a half knots per hour. The Spindrift was lying to, with her engines stopped and her helm lashed to port, and was heading about south-east.
3. At such time a barque, which proved to be the above-named barque Jennie S. Barker, was seen at the distance of about one mile and a half from the Spindrift, coming up astern of her, a little on her port quarter.
4. The Jennie S. Barker approached and caused danger of collision with the Spindrift. The engines of the Spindrift were ordered ahead, but before she could go ahead the Jennie S. Barker ran against, and with her stem and port bow struck the Spindrift on her starboard paddle-box, and did her a great deal of damage, in consequence of which she took the assistance of a steam tug, by which she was towed to Liverpool.
5. Those on board the Jennie S. Barker improperly neglected to keep a good look-out.
6. The Jennie S. Barker improperly neglected to keep out of the way of the Spindrift.
7. The helm of the Jennie S. Barker was improperly starboarded before the said collision.
8. The said collision was occasioned by all or some or one of the matters stated in the three last preceding articles of this petition, or otherwise, by the negligent and improper navigation of the Jennie S. Barker.
9. The said collision was not in any way occasioned by any negligence on the part of those on board the Spindrift.

The petition filed on behalf of the owners of the Jennie S. Barker was as follows:—

1. The Jennie S. Barker is a barque of 1050 tons register, and at the time of the occurrences hereinafter mentioned was on a voyage from St. John, New Brunswick, to Liverpool, with a cargo of deals. The Spindrift is a steam tug of the Port of Liverpool.
2. Shortly before noon, on the 14th June 1875, the Jennie S. Barker was off the Coast of Anglesea, near to Point Lynas, heading about S.E. by E., to N.E. and intending to pick up a pilot at the Point Lynas Station to take her into Liverpool. The wind was unsteady, blowing hard from S. S. W. to S. W., with occasional heavy squalls which were accompanied by thick, heavy rain. The Jennie S. Barker was under lower fore and maintop-sails, foremast, fore and maintopmast staysails, and mizen staysail, and was going about five knots an hour.

ADM.]

THE JENNIE S. BARKER; THE SPINDRIFT.

[ADM.]

3. At this time and under these circumstances the lookout of the Jennie S. Barker saw and reported a pilot boat and a steam tug, which latter vessel afterwards proved to be the Spindrift. She was right ahead, heading somewhat in the same direction as the barque, but more to the south. She appeared to be about a mile distant. At this time the weather became thick with rain, and the pilot boat was lost to view.

4. The Jennie S. Barker kept her course until she was about three ship's lengths from the Spindrift, when it was found that, although steam and smoke were coming from the steam pipe and funnel of the latter, she had apparently stopped, and was not moving ahead. The helm of the Jennie S. Barker was thereupon, in order to avoid a collision, at once put hard up, but she did not answer her helm.

5. Immediately before the collision the helm of the Jennie S. Barker was put hard down, with the view of easing the blow, but before the port helm had taken effect the martingale of the barque and the starboard paddle-box of the Spindrift came into contact, the jib boom of the barque at the same time catching the mast of the tug and bringing it down, and considerable other damage was done.

6. At the time when the helm of the Jennie S. Barker was put up, no one was visible on the deck of the Spindrift. Her crew were seen running up from below just at the time of the collision.

7. The Spindrift improperly neglected to keep out of the way of the Jennie S. Barker.

8. A proper look-out was not kept on board the Spindrift.

9. Those on board the Spindrift improperly neglected to hail or otherwise warn the Jennie S. Barker that the Spindrift was stopped.

10. The said collision was caused by the negligence and improper navigation of the Spindrift, and was not caused by any negligence of those on board the Jennie S. Barker.

The causes came on for hearing before Sir R. Phillimore, assisted by Trinity Masters, and witnesses were called by both parties.

By the witnesses called on behalf of the Spindrift, it was proved that she was lying-to waiting to be engaged to tow vessels into Liverpool; that the place where she was hove to was the fairway channel for ships entering the port of Liverpool, that she lay in the same position till the barque was close to, expecting the barque to go clear, but then seeing that the barque was not going clear, an order was given to her engines to go ahead, but that nobody being at the starting gear when the order was given, the order was not instantly executed, and before the tug could move ahead she was struck by the barque.

The witnesses called on behalf of the barque proved that they observed the tug some distance away, and the barque was kept on her course in the expectation that the tug, as a steam vessel, would keep out of the barque's way; that they had engaged no steam tug, and expected that the Spindrift would, as other tugs had done previously, get under way and come alongside the barque, with a view of getting engaged by the barque to tow her into Liverpool. Another tug was following and had spoken the barque, but was not engaged. The master of the barque held on till close to the tug, and then seeing that the tug was not moving, and that he was nearing her so as to strike her on the starboard side, put his helm a starboard, so as to pass astern of her and along her port side. The barque, however, would not answer her helm quickly enough, being very deeply laden, and her helm was thereupon put hard aport to lessen the effect of the blow.

The remaining facts of the case are set out in the petitions.

The main question was, whether the Spindrift, being hove to, was to be considered as a tug within the meaning of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the Spindrift.—A tug boat lying to is not to be treated as a steamship, so as to come within article 15 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, to be under any obligation to get out of the way of a sailing ship under way. The sailing ship ought to have seen that the tug was lying to, and should have given way. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The ship says that she had good reason to believe you were lying to waiting for her, and the question is, why were you not sufficiently under command to enable you to have kept out of her way?] To make it the duty of the tug to keep out of the way of the ship she must have been "proceeding in such a direction as to involve risk of collision;" but the tug was not "proceeding" at all, and is, consequently, not within the rule. This was distinctly held in The Helvetia, which was affirmed on appeal to the Privy Council (a). [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—That was the

(a) JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Nov. 23, 1868.

THE HELVETIA.

THIS was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Admiralty of England in a cause of damage instituted by the owners of the late steam tug Prince Arthur and her master and crew against the steamship Helvetia and the National Steamship Company (Limited), her owners intervening. The case on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Court of Admiralty was that the steam tug was, on the morning of the 16th Aug. 1867, hove to off the South Stack Lighthouse on the starboard tack, under her fore-sail and jib, and with her engines stopped, waiting for employment in the usual way. The weather was fine and clear, the wind a moderate breeze from the N.W. In the circumstances the Helvetia was at about 10 a.m. observed on the starboard side of the tug a long way off inward bound. The Prince Arthur continued hove to, and the Helvetia under canvas and steam continued to approach her. When the Helvetia got very near the steam whistle of the Prince Arthur was sounded, and her engines were turned astern full speed; but the Helvetia, without slackening speed, came on and ran into the Prince Arthur on her starboard side and sank her. It was alleged that if a proper look out had been kept on board the Helvetia those on board of her must have seen that the Prince Arthur was lying to, and that the Helvetia ought to have kept out of the way of the Prince Arthur. On behalf of the defendants it was alleged that the Helvetia was bound upon a voyage from New York to Liverpool, and when off Holyhead, on 16th Aug. about 10 a.m., her look out reported a steam tug on the port bow. This steam tug, which was the Prince Arthur, was about six miles from the Helvetia, bearing two points on her port bow, and pursuing a south-easterly course. The Helvetia continued her course until just before the collision, when, in order to ease the blow, her helm was ported, her engines were stopped, and her topsail halyards let go. It was submitted that as the Helvetia and the Prince Arthur were crossing so as to involve risk of collision, and the Prince Arthur had the Helvetia on her starboard side, it was the duty of the steam tug to keep out of the way, and that the negligence of the steam tug caused the collision, or, at any rate, contributed to it.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of the learned judge of the High Court of Admiralty, which was as follows:

Jan. 30.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE: If the court entertained any doubt whatever as to the judgment which it ought

[ADM.]

THE JENNIE S. BARKER; THE SPINDRIFT.

[ADM.]

case of two steamers, and distinguishable from the present, on the ground that the steamer could not possibly suppose the tug to be waiting for her, and must have known that she was lying to with-to give in this case, it would have adopted the usual course of retiring with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, and having a deliberate consultation with them before it pronounced its decision. I have, during the course of the arguments, and during the course of the discussion, put before the Trinity Masters such questions as I thought necessary to elucidate any difficulties incident to nautical experience and nautical science arising out of this case, and I have obtained from them answers which to me are perfectly satisfactory. I, therefore, proceed to give my judgment immediately. This was a collision which took place about twenty-two miles, I think, off Holyhead, somewhere between Holyhead and Bardsey Island, about half-past ten on the morning of the 16th of Aug. 1867; the weather was perfectly fair, and the day was, as I think one of the witnesses said, a beautiful fine day. The vessels which came into collision were a paddle steam tug of the ordinary size, called the Prince Arthur, belonging to the port of Liverpool, and which carried a crew of twelve hands, all told, and the screw steamer, the Helvetia, manned by a crew of ninety-eight men, and bound for Liverpool from New York; she is, according to the evidence, 371ft. in length, and no less than 2769 tons register. The case set up on behalf of the Prince Arthur is that she was lying to, waiting for a job, and that while she was so lying to, she was run into by the steamer Helvetia, and sunk. Now, the first fact of importance to ascertain, and for the ascertaining of which the court is responsible, is the condition in which this steam tug actually was at the time when she was run into, and at the time when she was seen. The evidence on this point is that she was lying to with her jib and foresail set, and with her engines in this condition: the fires had been pulled forward so as to keep the steam down, and there was just enough steam—and only enough steam—kept on her to enable her to work her engines a little astern; she was lying, I think, within eight or nine points of the wind, and according to the opinion of the gentlemen by whom I am assisted, there is nothing in that circumstance which would prevent her being what is called "lying to." Such being the facts, as they appear to me, irresistibly proved by the evidence in this case, the first question I put to the Trinity Masters was, whether a vessel in such a state as that I have described (I should have added to that that she had her helm lashed hard-a-port) whether a vessel in that condition was, or was not, according to the proper nautical understanding of the term "lying to," and they have no doubt whatever that with her helm lashed hard-a-port, and the fires as I have described, lying as near to the wind as possible, that she was lying to. I may say that this evidence with regard to her condition so given on behalf of the plaintiffs is entirely uncontradicted by the evidence produced by the defendants; indeed, in my opinion, it is confirmed, because, with regard to the speed of the steamship, it was admitted by the witness Bentley, the mate of the Helvetia (and who, as has been truly said, is responsible for this collision, and who had every motive therefore to exempt himself from that responsibility), that the steam tug did not move more than a vessel would do with her helm lashed and lying to; and although it is true that he maintained that she was in motion at the time of the collision, he admitted that that was an inference which could not be drawn from the speed at which he alleged that she was approaching. Now, the next question of importance is at what distance these two vessels were seen. The witness Evans, who is the mate of the Prince Arthur, says he saw the Helvetia, when she was reported to him the second time, about three-quarters of a mile to a mile distant. The witness Bentley, produced by the defendants, said, I think, it was from six to seven miles off that he saw this vessel, and the last witness who was produced, James McEvoy, and to whom the court is certainly not inclined to give much credence, says that he saw the tug three-quarters of an hour, and that she was twelve to thirteen miles off when he first saw her. It is admitted by the defendants that the steamer Helvetia never altered her course till the moment of collision; that she did port her helm just before the collision is true, but it had no effect whatever out the intention of moving.] But if, as there held, a tug lying to is not to be considered a steamship under way, the decision applies equally to the present case.

on the course of the vessel. Therefore, that must be taken, whatever the inference may be from it, as a fact proved in this case. On the part of the steam tug it is maintained also, that, with the exception of keeping her occasionally a little to the westward, and occasionally a little to the eastward, as she was lying to, her helm was unaltered during the time. The evidence of a witness of the name of Higman is of importance at this part of the case. That witness is a shipwright, and he was a passenger on board the Helvetia, and he gave evidence to this effect: That he saw the tug four or five miles off, two or three points on the port bow, as they approached; that he made an observation to a Mr. Watson; that he saw the officer in charge of the Helvetia walking up and down and talking to a pilot; that the Helvetia continued her course; that when he saw them approaching the tug, he took notice of the officer to see if he was looking towards the tug, he then called to the officer when they were two or three lengths off, and asked him if he saw the tug under his bows; that the officer then looked over the rails and saw the tug, and called out, "Hard-a-port, stop the engines." That was very serious evidence, considering the character of the person who gave it, and the opportunity he had of forming his opinion. On the other side, Bentley, who was the officer who had the watch, is produced, and he admits that he was walking up and down with the pilot in the way that is described. He denies that he did not see this vessel at an earlier period, because he says that she was reported to him by the look-out; that he saw the tug two points on his port bow when she was six or seven miles off. He is asked as to this conversation, and he denies it, but at the same time he admits that he did look over the rail just before the collision, and that he did at that time give the order to port. The question arises immediately to anybody conversant with the rules of evidence and the mode by which the truth is ascertained in cases of conflicting testimony—where is the pilot, who could have given the court the means of ascertaining whether Higman or Bentley was speaking the truth? The pilot is not produced, and no reason at all is given to account for his absence; therefore I come to the conclusion, and I think rightly, that the court ought to rely upon the evidence of Higman, and if it does do so, there is no doubt that there was very gross negligence and carelessness on the part of those on board the Helvetia; and, though that is an opinion for which the court is alone responsible, it is satisfactory to say that in that opinion the Trinity Masters entirely agree. The question then comes to be considered—whether the Helvetia being (according to the opinion of the court, corroborated by that of the Trinity Masters) to blame for this collision, to use the words of the 20th rule "from the consequences of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen"—whether the steam tug can be said in any way to have contributed to this collision, so as to render her equally to blame, or at all to blame for it. It has been contended that the evidence shows that the steam tug falls under the 14th article of the Regulations, which is in these words:—"If two ships under steam are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the ship which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other." And it is said that this is a point which has not yet been decided, with reference to such circumstances as exist in the present case, namely, that of a steam tug lying to, and having some steam power on her, sufficient to enable her to lay to. That is the evidence as to the condition of the steam tug in this case; and it is said that a steam tug in that condition, and in this case shown to be a little on the port side, heading S.W. by S., and the other vessel being shown to be heading N.E. half E., it is said that, given these circumstances, there is a case to which the rule applies, for the two ships are both under steam, and are "crossing so as to involve risk of collision." The court laments that the duty should be cast upon it of construing for the first time this article; but I must say that I do not feel at present any difficulty whatever in putting what appears to me the true construction upon

ADM.]

THE JENNIE S. BARKER; THE SPINDRIFT.

[ADM.]

The ship had no right to keep on her course till the collision was inevitable; she ought to have taken steps sooner. The real cause of collision was the starboarding of the ship.

it. I do not think that this rule ever was intended to apply to a steam tug lying to, though not motionless, in such a condition as the steam tug was in this case. I think it applies to two ships under steam, and crossing in the usual sense of the term—namely, both approaching one another, both pursuing their own course, and crossing each other in so doing; and again, it is a consolation to know, though the court must be responsible for the construction of this rule, that the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, by whom I am assisted, are not able to conceive, consistently with usage and the ordinary practice of vessels of this description, that any other construction could be reasonably put upon that article. I should also mention, and I particularly draw the attention of the Trinity Masters to it, the sail carried by the tug at the time she was lying to, and their opinion is that so far from that sail preventing her from being what is technically and properly called "lying to," it would rather assist her than otherwise; that the sail that she carried was necessary for her, that she might be lying to. I am not aware that any advantage would be derived from a further discussion of the evidence in this case. I am of opinion, upon the evidence, that this steam tug was lying to, and that the collision was caused by the carelessness and bad navigation of those on board the Helvetia, and in both those opinions the Elder Brethren by whom I am assisted entirely concur. They are of opinion that the steamer saw the tug, or ought to have seen the tug, in full time to have got out of her way, and that there was nothing in the action of the tug that was wrong, that there was nothing that could indicate to the tug the probability of this enormous vessel running over her, with twenty miles of sea on either side of her, where the steamer could easily pass; and upon the other hand, if there had been a good look-out on board the Helvetia, they must have known, or at least ought to have known from the position in which the steam tug was, and the manner in which she was lying, that she was lying to, and that it was the duty of the Helvetia therefore to get out of her way. These are the circumstances which induce the court to come to the conclusion which it has stated, and I pronounce the Helvetia to be alone to blame.

From this judgment the owners of the Helvetia appealed to Her Majesty in Council upon the grounds—First, because the evidence showed that the Prince Arthur was under steam within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea; secondly, because the evidence showed that the Prince Arthur was crossing the Helvetia, having the latter on her own starboard side, within the meaning of the said Art.; thirdly, because it was, therefore, the duty of the Prince Arthur to keep out of the way of the Helvetia; fourthly, because it was the duty of the Helvetia to keep her course; fifthly, because the Helvetia was justified in assuming, until the collision became inevitable, that the Prince Arthur would keep out of the way of the Helvetia; sixthly, because there was nothing in the state of the tug or her engines to prevent her from keeping out of the way; and, seventhly, because the tug at any rate contributed to the collision, because it might have been avoided by reasonable care on the part of those on board the tug, by going astern or otherwise moving away from the Helvetia.

Dr. Deane, Q.C. and Arthur Cohen for the appellants. The Solicitor-General (Sir W. B. Brett) and Vernon Lushington for the respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS, without calling upon the respondents, dismissed the appeal with costs, characterising it as frivolous.

Proctor for the appellants, Jennings.

Proctors for the respondents, Toller and Son.

[The facts and the judgment of the learned judge of the Admiralty Court are taken from the printed appendix used on the appeal, and the decree of the Judicial Committee is given as it appears in the Shipping Gazette of the date, after comparison with the printed copy of the Order in Council dismissing the appeal, dated 9th Dec. 1868, and preserved in the library of the Privy Council office.—ED.]

Butt, Q.C. (W. C. Gully with him).—There is a great distinction between this case and The Helvetia (ubi sup.); in the latter case the tug was lying to under sail. Here the ship knew that the tug was lying to waiting for employment, and that it was customary for tugs so lying-to to get out of the way of vessels coming up; they get under way and come alongside to speak the vessel. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Had the ship any right to go on 'ahead' until the collision was inevitable?] She expected the tug to get out of the way; but, of course, could not tell whether the tug would go ahead or astern, so that either starboarding or porting would be equally dangerous; she could only go on.

Milward, Q.C., in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I will begin the few observations I have to make by saying that, in my judgment, the case of The Helvetia (ubi sup.) has not any clear application to this case, as the circumstances are so different, and it was agreed that there was very little brought forward in this court and in the Privy Council to enable it to be understood.

Now, in this case, the steam tug Spindrift was hove to in a fairway channel, and it is no doubt a question of considerable importance, what is the duty of a steam tug when it is in this position? I have consulted with the Elder Brethren of Trinity House on this point, and have looked at the case, and especially at the consequences which would ensue from laying down the law, that a steam tug in such a position is to be considered in the same category as a sailing vessel, or a vessel at anchor, and having no obligation cast upon her of getting out of the way of another, a sailing vessel. I think I am bound to come to the conclusion that a steam tug that places herself, as I have said, in the fairway of a channel, hove to, waiting for employment, is bound to keep herself in readiness to move out of the way of sailing vessels, especially in such weather as is proved to have existed at the time.

The evidence, however, shows that there was not due vigilance displayed by the steam tug on this occasion. There was no man at the starting gear when the order was given to go ahead, and I think it was one of the witnesses produced on behalf of the Spindrift, the mate, who very fairly and properly stated that when the vessel was hove to in this way, there was no one to execute the order to go ahead at the time. The Elder Brethren think that the master of the barque was well founded in the observation that one stroke or two would carry the steam tug ahead if the order had been complied with, and the steam tug had started forwards with that object.

It has been said that the barque was to blame, at all events for starboarding her helm, as the evidence established that she did so when nearly abeam of the tug. In the first place, there is the greatest improbability that this should have been the case, and I am bound to say that the evidence has not removed the inference of that improbability from my mind. I do not believe that she did starboard when she was abeam of the tug. On the other hand, it has been urged that it is very improbable she could not have answered her helm more readily than she did, because the case made on behalf of the Jennie S. Barker is, that the helm had no action under the circumstances. Well, it is to be remembered—and upon this point I have had the advantage of conferring with the Elder Brethren—the evidence establishes that she was deep in the water, that her torgage was great, that there was a strong wind on her beam, and that she had but very little canvas. Taking all these circumstances together, the Elder Brethren think—and I agree with them—that the statement of the Jennie S. Barker is one that they have no reason to disbelieve. The statement of her captain is, that she did not answer her star-board helm before the collision.

ADM.]

THE JAMES ARMSTRONG.

[ADM.]

Therefore, looking to all the circumstances of the case, I can come to no other conclusion than that the Spindrift must be held alone to blame for the collision.

Solicitors for the Spindrift, Hull, Stone, and Fletcher.

Solicitors for the Jennie S. Barker, Bateson and Co.

Tuesday, Jan. 19, 1875.

THE JAMES ARMSTRONG.

Salvage—Apportionment—Agreement—Values—Varying decree.

Where salvors have entered into an agreement as to the apportionment of salvage, which in the opinion of the Court of Admiralty is equitable, and not obtained by coercion, the court will uphold the agreement, and apportion the salvage awarded in accordance therewith.

Where the High Court of Admiralty has made a decree awarding salvage upon values furnished by the respective owners of the ship, freight, and cargo, and accepted by the salvors, and afterwards it is discovered by the owner of cargo that he has been ordered to pay upon the value of the cargo without deducting the freight due upon delivery, the court has power to and will, if it sees fit, reduce the amount of salvage, and vary the proportions payable by the respective owners.

THESE were causes of salvage instituted on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the steamship Queen of the Bay, and of the owners, masters, and crews of thirteen pilot cutters and luggers belonging to the Scilly Islands, and of the owners and crews of nine gigs belonging to the same place, and of William Williams, gentleman, of St. Mary's, Scilly, against the barque James Armstrong and the cargo lately laden therein, and the freight due for the transportation thereof. The James Armstrong was a barque of 382 tons register, and was on a voyage from Truxillo to Waterford for orders, with a cargo of mahogany, dyewood, and broken stowage; she put into Waterford, and getting orders there left for London on Jan. 23rd, 1874. On March 3rd, 1874, about 1.30 p.m., the James Armstrong was discovered by some of the salvors derelict, bottom upwards, and with a large hole in her stern, about three miles E.N.E. of St. Mary's Head, Scilly; she was then driving seaward. The whole of the pilot cutters made fast, and tried to tow her towards the land; they towed her till midnight, when her tackle fouled the bottom and held fast; she was then to the N.E. of the Island of Menewethan, about three miles off.

The other facts are sufficiently stated in the petition filed on behalf of the Queen of the Bay, the gigs, and William Williams, which so far as material alleged:

1. That on Tuesday, 3rd March 1874, at about 11.30 a.m., William Williams, of Borough St. Mary's, in the Scilly Isles, observed something floating very low in the water in a south easterly direction, and two miles outside the eastern island of Menewethan, got a spy-glass and then discerned the said object to be a vessel, floating apparently bottom upwards, and which afterwards proved to be the James Armstrong, the vessel proceeded against in this cause, and that he thereupon hurried off to Hugh Town two miles distant and gave information of the said wreck, and that, in consequence of such information, a telegram was dispatched by Lloyd's agent at Scilly to the manager of the West Cornwall Steamship Company, Limited, at Penzance, which was received by him at 2.40 p.m. of the same day at Penzance, and that he thereupon dispatched from Penzance the Queen of the Bay, of 80-horse power nominal, owned by the said company, and which plies regularly between Scilly and Penzance, carrying the mails with a crew of eight hands on board, including Captain Gibson, her master, to a spot three miles N.E. of Menewethan in the Isles of Scilly, and that the said steamer arrived at the spot designated at about 6.30 p.m. on the same day, and there found the pilot cutter Rapid with a rope fast on a derelict vessel, which proved to be the barque James Armstrong, the vessel proceeded against in this cause, laden with a cargo of mahogany, rosewood, and coconuts of great value. That there were five or six gigs and seven other pilot cutters standing near the said derelict. That the master of the steamer immediately tendered the services of the steamer to the cutter Rapid, and afterwards to the men in the cutters and boats, but some dispute having arisen between the boatmen as to the terms upon which her services should be accepted her offer was refused. That he still kept the steamer on the spot in the anticipation that the boatmen would be unable to save the derelict.

2. That at about midnight all the boats except the Rapid had left the derelict, and that the Rapid then hailed the steamer to make fast to the derelict, which was done immediately, and then towed her for three-quarters of an hour without effect. That the steamer still attached thereto, and that at 4 a.m. of the 4th March she recommenced towing, and towed the derelict for three hours without effect. That at 7 a.m. of the same day the said pilot cutters returned and tried to clear the wreck by sweeping the chain, but failed. That the said steamer remained attached to the derelict, and at 4 p.m., it being high water again, attempted to tow the said derelict off but failed, and that at 6.30 p.m. the said steamer and the said boats left the said derelict.

3. That on Thursday the 5th March 1874, the said steamer, at 5 a.m., again proceeded to the said wreck and found her still fast. That the said steamer then recommenced and kept on towing her until 7 p.m., but failing to move her off left her for the night.

4. That at 5.30 a.m. on Friday the 6th March 1874, the said steamer again proceeded to the said derelict and tried to sweep the chain cables, but failed to do so, that the said steamer continued towing at the said derelict in various directions, but failing to free her a diver was sent down but could do nothing. That the said steamer remained attached to the said derelict from 5.30 a.m. until 2.30 p.m. of that day, and then proceeded to St. Mary's Pier in the Isles of Scilly, when the captain of the steamer requested the agent of the steamer to telegraph to Penzance for the assistance of a practical diver. That the said steamer then returned to the said derelict, and remained by her until 6.30 p.m. of that day.

5. That at 6 p.m. on Saturday the 7th March 1874, the said steamer again proceeded to the said derelict, when an attempt was again made by a diver to clear the said derelict, but without effect, and that the said steamer remained there until 4.40 p.m., when the master, having received information that a practical diver had been obtained, and was on board the pilot cutter Presto, which had left Penzance that morning with mails and passengers, and the weather being calm, and it being urgently necessary that no delay should take place in the arrival of the diver, the steamer left the said derelict at 4.40 p.m. and proceeded to meet the said pilot cutter, and fell in with her about 7.30 p.m. off the Logan Rock, and there took off the diver, mails, and other passengers, and arrived at Scilly with them at 11.50 p.m., but that the said pilot cutter did not reach Scilly until 6.30 p.m. on the next day.

[ADM.]

THE JAMES ARMSTRONG.

[ADM.]

6. That at 8 a.m. on Sunday the 8th March, the said steamer proceeded to the said wreck with the said diver, and with the Frier Tuck fitted as a diving boat, and with the cutters, Uss and Atlantic in tow, and that at 9.30 a.m. the said diver went down and worked until 3.40 p.m., when the tide made, and he could work no longer. That at 4.30 p.m. the said steamer returned to St. Mary's Pier.

7. That on Monday morning the 9th March, the said steamer having coaled, took extra ropes on board, and proceeded to the said derelict. That at 9 a.m. the said diver went to work, unshackled one chain and cut sandy wire ropes from under the derelict. That at 2 p.m. he left work as the wind was blowing strong. That the said steamer returned at 3 p.m. to St. Mary's Pier.

8. That at 8 a.m. on Tuesday the 10th March, the said steamer having coaled, proceeded to the said derelict with the diver's boat in tow, but that as the wind was still blowing strong, the diver could not work. That the said steamer returned to St. Mary's Pier, and there remained at anchor in case the derelict should get adrift.

9. That on Wednesday the 11th March, the said steamer kept up steam at St. Mary's Pier, but no work could be done, as it was still blowing strong.

10. That at 8 a.m. on Thursday the 12th March, the said steamer again proceeded to the said derelict with the diver's boat in tow, and that the said diver worked for three hours, but had to give up as it was still blowing strong, and that the said steamer returned at 5 p.m. to St. Mary's Pier.

11. That at 8 a.m. on Friday the 13th March, the said steamer again proceeded to the said wreck with the said diver's boat in tow, that the said diver worked from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m., and succeeded in cutting chain and other gear, and reported that the wreck was clear. The said steamer then towed the derelict between Inisidgen Point and Bar Point, when she grounded, it being low water. That the anchor of the said steamer held the said wreck to wait high water, and that at midnight weighed anchor, and towed the said wreck nearer to Crow Bar, when she grounded, the said steamer holding fast until 7 a.m. on Saturday. That the said diver then went down and cleared the wreck's anchors and 15 fathoms of chain, which was placed on board the Atlantic pilot cutter. That the said diver cut the wreck's fore rigging and put a rope fast to the mast, which said rope broke when the said steamer attempted to pull it out. That at 1 p.m. the said steamer weighed anchor, the said diver having stated that all was clear. That the said steamer finding it impossible to tow the derelict over Crow Bar for want of sufficient water, decided upon taking the said wreck to sea and towing it round and through St. Mary's Head. That in doing so the said derelict again caught fast in Crow Sound on a ledge of rocks. That the said steamer then left the said wreck, it being then 3 p.m., to coal and get carpenter's tools to cut away the mast if possible. That at 5 p.m. the said steamer proceeded to the said wreck, and found she had partially righted; the crew of the said steamer then commenced to cut away the mast, assisted by some of the men of the pilot cutters, and that having succeeded in doing so, the steamer held to the wreck all night.

12. That at 7 a.m. on Sunday the 15th of March, 1874, the said steamer went to the said wreck with 15 fathoms of the said steamer's chain to make fast to the bows of the said derelict, to which another tow rope was attached, there then being two ropes fast. That the said diver went down at 9 a.m. and found her starboard rigging fast to the bottom, which he cut, and finished his work at 12.15 p.m., two hours before high water. That the said steamer kept fast to the wreck until 3.40 p.m. with her anchor down. She then weighed and proceeded to sea for St. Mary's Sound, and arrived at St. Mary's Heads at 7.15 p.m. with the wreck safely in tow. That the said steamer anchored with the wreck fast until Monday afternoon at 2 p.m., when she weighed anchor and towed the said derelict to St. Mary's Pier Head, the said tow rope being then attached to the capstan on the pier, when she was taken possession of by the receiver of wrecks.

13. That the said steamer is of the value of 7000*l.*, and was then the only steamer plying for passengers and goods between Penzance and the Isles of Scilly, and also carries the mails between the mainland and the said islands, and that the master and crew are acquainted with the intricacies of the navigation of the Scilly Isles. That in the said month of March she was advertised to make two voyages in each week each way, and that by her salvage services performed to the said derelict between the said 3rd March and the said 15th March, the cost of coaling the said steamer during the said days averaged 10 tons per diem, making in all 130 tons at 3*l.*, and that the gross earnings lost by the said steamer by her aforesaid services were considerable.

14. That the said derelict could not have been brought into a place of safety without the assistance of a steamer commanded and manned by persons acquainted with the intricate navigation of the Isles of Scilly, and that by rendering the services aforesaid the said steamer not only incurred the aforesaid pecuniary loss, but also incurred considerable risk of damage to her machinery and hull by reason of the dangers and risks attending navigation in and about the Isles of Scilly.

15. That on the 3rd March 1874, six row gigs, namely, the Franklin, John Baston, master, the White Gey, Joseph Legg, master, the Lively, Joshua Woodcock, master, the Chance, John Williams, master, the Hound, Richard Nicholas, master, Lloyd's Gig, Alfred Hinks, master, with their crews, proceeded to the said vessel early in the afternoon of the same day, and having got fast to her, towed at her for five or six hours until the steamer came up at about 7 p.m., when they left her to the steamer. That by so towing the wreck the said row gigs and other boats rendered important and material salvage services to the wreck by preventing her from being drifted away from Scilly by the northern current, and by materially aiding in keeping her in a good position against the tide, and that but for such services, the said wreck might have drifted away and not been found by the steamer.

16. That amongst the sailing boats engaged in rendering, or endeavouring to render, salvage services to the said derelict, were the following gigs, namely, the Franklyn, with nine men, which came up with and made fast to the derelict at 1.30 p.m.; the Dart, with eight men, which came up with and made fast to the derelict at 2 p.m., and the Lark, with men, which came up with and made fast to the derelict at 2.30 p.m., but all the said gigs towed at the said derelict from the time of their arrival until 7 p.m. of that day, and that at 7 p.m. the Dart joined the steamer, and that subsequently during the following day her crew assisted the steamer in her aforesaid services.

A similar petition was filed on behalf of the pilot cutters and luggers. The luggers named were chiefly engaged in carrying chains and ropes between the cutters and derelict. Considerable loss was suffered by the salvors in the way of damage to tackle, &c. The defendants admitted the service, and submitted to the judgment of the court.

At the hearing on July 8th, 1874, it appeared upon an affidavit of the shipowner, that the value of the ship at the time of the salvage service was 5000*l.*, and that the value of the freight was not more than 512*l.*, and it was taken that ship and freight together were of the value of 1000*l.*; and from an affidavit of the owner of cargo it appeared that the value of the cargo as salvaged was 3000*l.*. At that time the cargo had not arrived in London, and no freight was really earned, and the values were estimates.

The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Donno, Q.C.), and Dr. Tristram for the steamship Queen of the Bay, and gigs.

R. E. Webster, and W. G. F. Phillimore, for the pilot cutters and luggers.

E. C. Clarkson for the defendant the owner of the ship.

Hollams for the defendants the owners of cargo.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I consider the salvage as one of great merit, and as derelict to be dealt with most liberally. Unfortunately the property is very small, and it is agreed that 4000*l.* will represent it. The first thing I shall do is to take the sum of 400*l.* out of it for damages that have been done to the steamer and sailing vessels, and something for the gigs. That leaves 3600*l.*, out of which I have to award salvage, and considering all the circumstances of this case I shall give 2000*l.* salvage.

[ADM.]

THE JAMES ARMSTRONG.

[ADM.]

R. E. Webster.—Before the court apportions the salvage I wish to call attention to an agreement which was entered into between the master of the steamer and the pilot cutters as to the way in which they were to share. It was as follows:

At Sea, 3rd March, 1874.

It is this day mutually agreed between Capt. Stephen Gibson, of the one part, and Walter Hicks, licensed pilot, of the other part, that the Queen of the Bay steamer shall tow a certain derelict vessel now off St. Martin's Head into the port of Scilly, and if required within the pier at St. Mary's, on the following terms, that is to say, that whatsoever amounts may hereafter be awarded to the eight pilot cutters and their crews for services already rendered in towing said derelict, or for any subsequent work in getting said derelict into Scilly, and then safely mooring her, and also whatever sums may be awarded to the Queen of the Bay for towing said derelict into Scilly shall be thrown into one common fund, and that the same shall be divided into ten and a half equal shares, and that each of the eight pilot cutters shall have one share, and the Queen of the Bay two and a half.

Approved—Robert Ashford, STEPHEN GIBSON, Abraham Hicks, WALTER HICKS,
William G. Mortimer.

That agreement was signed on behalf of all parties and approved by them, and I submit that it ought to be considered binding. We pay the loggers—the four signatures after that of the master of the steamer (Gibson) are signatures of the pilot cutter masters.

The Admiralty Advocate.—That agreement no doubt was entered into when the steamer first came up, but not by the whole of the pilot cutters, and those who did not sign it repudiated the agreement and refused to have anything to do with the steamer, and the steamer was never employed on the basis of that agreement at all. If she had then taken hold of the derelict she would have been able to keep her in deep water, and tow her straight into safety in about six hours. The cutters were unable to manage her, and let her get into shallow water, and so kept the steamer at work for sixteen days. The agreement was made upon the supposition that the steamer could get hold at once.

R. E. Webster in reply.—There was no repudiation, only delay in employing the steamer, the master of which kept the agreement in his own possession.

Sir R. PILLIMORE.—The court finds itself placed in a position which it would not have solicited for itself, but as both parties in this case have agreed that I should decide what appears to me to be the true result of the statements made by each of them I must not shrink from the task. I have this great fact before me, that here is a very deliberate agreement, duly signed and made, and which, as far as I am able to understand it, does not appear to me at all inequitable in its terms. Such an agreement made, as this was, not under any coercion or under the operation of any disturbing force of any sort or kind, ought to be upheld by the court unless the cancelling of it be shown to be necessary. Some reasons have been mentioned by the Admiralty Advocate why this agreement should not be acted upon. Forming the best judgment I can on these very scanty details, I cannot conscientiously arrive at any other conclusion than the following: I have no evidence that this agreement which was produced out of the custody of the owners of the steamer has been cancelled, and I must therefore pronounce for it and order the money to be apportioned in accordance with it.

Notice of appeal was given against the decree on behalf of the shipowner, but the appeal was afterwards abandoned, and the shipowner paid his proportion of the salvage on the basis of the above award. The cargo, which had been salvaged, was subsequently sold in London with the consent of the salvors, who expected there to find a better market. The cargo then realised the sum of 2797*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.*, out of which sum the freight due for the carriage of cargo under the charter-party had to be paid. The owner of cargo alleged the sum due for freight to be the whole amount payable under the charter-party, viz., 1513*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*; while the shipowner alleged the freight due at London in the amount delivered to be about 1000*l.*, and no more, and that from this sum he was entitled to deduct the expenses of carrying the cargo from Scilly to London before the freight paying salvage could be ascertained. The owner of cargo, on the sale being effected, discovered that he had made a mistake in his estimate of the value of the cargo, in so far as he had not deducted from that value the freight payable on delivery, and that consequently by the decree he had become liable to pay salvage on the freight as well as his cargo, although the salvage on the freight was payable by the shipowner; deducting the whole freight due from the price of the cargo, there remained 1283*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

The following notice of motion was accordingly filed on behalf of the owners of cargo:

We Parker, Watney, and Clarke, solicitors for the defendant, owner of cargo, give notice that we shall by counsel on the first day of December, move the judge in court to allow the defendant, C. W. Disseldorff (the owner of the cargo which was on board the said ship when the salvage services were rendered), to reduce the value of the said cargo from 3000*l.* to 1283*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, the net proceeds of the sale of the said cargo, and to reduce the salvage accordingly.

This motion came on for hearing on 1st Dec. 1874, and was opposed both on behalf of the salvors and of the shipowner, and it then appeared that there was the above mentioned dispute as to the amount of freight which was due in London, and which the owner of cargo claimed to deduct from the value of his cargo before paying salvage; the shipowner also alleging that he was only bound to pay for the amount of freight actually due after deducting the expenses of carriage from Scilly to London, and that this amount was only 512*l.*, to which the salvors objected, alleging the amount due to be considerably greater. Under these circumstances the judge referred the case to the registrar to report the amount of freight payable to the shipowner, and in respect of which the shipowner was liable to contribute to the salvage awarded. On 8th Jan. 1875, the registrar's report was filed, and thence it appeared that the freight payable to the shipowner was due as follows:

ADM.]

THE JAMES ARMSTRONG.

[ADM.]

Whole freight payable under the charter-party .....	£1768 17 3
Advanced at Honduras .....	255 9 10
Freight payable on delivery of cargo in London .....	1513 7 5
Expenses attending transshipment of cargo and conveyance from Scilly to London ...	700 7 0
Leaving net freight earned by shipowner in London .....	813 0 5

The report concluded as follows: "But inasmuch as the salvage services were concluded in March 1874, and great delay then ensued in arranging for the transshipment and conveyance of the cargo to London, I am of opinion that the amount of freight in respect of which the owner of the vessel is liable to contribute to the salvage awarded in this case may be fairly estimated at 1000*l*."

Jan. 19, 1875.—The motion again came on for hearing.

Butt, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce, for the owners of cargo.—The cargo owners have become liable to pay upon too large a sum whilst the shipowner is liable to pay upon too small a sum for freight. The contributory value of the cargo is the amount at which the cargo sold less the freight payable in London; the freight payable in London was 1513*l*. 7*s*. 5*d*., and consequently the cargo should contribute upon a value of 1283*l*. 15*s*. 10*d*., and not upon 3000*l*. as taken at the hearing. At the same time the value of ship and freight must be taken at a larger sum, the freight alone being greater than the value at which ship and cargo were taken at the hearing. In all such cases in this court the whole freight is deducted from the value of the cargo. The only point they can raise is as to the power of the court to alter the contributory value after the hearing and award. [Sir R. Phillimore.—I think I have the power if I chose to exercise it, so on that point you need not argue.] Then the cargo having been properly sold, the price realised, less the freight, must be taken as the true contributory value. [Sir R. Phillimore.—The value of the cargo as given by you at the hearing, including freight, was 3000*l*. I can on principle allow that figure to be altered. The freight you are entitled to deduct, as that should have been allowed for at the hearing. The only practicable way out of the difficulty in this peculiar case will be to ascertain exactly where the mistake lies, and then remodel the whole award and make a decree pronouncing the exact sum payable by each party.]

W. G. F. Phillimore, for the salvors. If the court determines to take that course, I ask that the amount upon which the shipowner must contribute should be increased. The values which he gave at the hearing were too small. [Sir R. Phillimore.—If I have power to remodel the case at all I must have power to make the shipowner pay upon a larger sum.] It is not fair to the salvors that the values given by the defendants should be altered now. The defendants should be bound by them.

E. O. Clarkson for the shipowner. I submit that the court has no power to remodel the decree as against the shipowner. At the time of the hearing the cargo was not in London, and had not been sold, consequently no freight had been earned, and the value of the freight was estimated and that estimate was accepted by all parties.

The shipowner appealed against the decree, and then abandoned his appeal; if the decree is altered now he cannot have his right of appeal restored as it was before, and cannot be placed in the same position as he was at the time of the pronouncing of the decree. If any alteration is made in the contributory value at all, the full freight should be deducted from the cargo and the full expenses from the freight, and the sum of the two remainders and the value of the ship will give the contributory value of the whole.

Butt, Q.C. in reply.

Sir R. Phillimore.—The question raised on this motion is embarrassing and peculiar. Several suits of salvage against ship freight and cargo proceeded to hearing, and an award was made upon values agreed, and that award was appealed against, but the appeal was abandoned. Since the hearing new evidence of value has been produced, from which it appears that the owner of cargo has been decreed to pay a greater proportion of salvage than he would have done if the real value of the cargo had been brought to the notice of the court at the hearing; in fact the award was made against the cargo inclusive of the value of the freight instead of less the freight.

When this motion first came before the court the affidavits were vague and inconsistent, and I referred the matter to the registrar to report as to the amount of freight due on delivery of the cargo, and he has given an estimate of what is the fair contributory value of the freight, and with this estimate I agree, as I have no doubt extra expense was occasioned by the delay.

It has been contended that the whole of the freight received on the delivery of the cargo in London should be deducted from the proceeds of the cargo in order to ascertain the value of the cargo for the purpose of the salvage suit. But I am not satisfied that that is so; and I think the registrar has arrived at a proper conclusion. The salvage service was completed at Scilly, and for the purpose of this case it is necessary to consider what was the value of the freight and cargo at Scilly. In estimating the value of the freight the registrar no doubt had in his mind the principle laid down by Dr. Lushington in The Norma: (Lush. 124.) I am also of opinion that the cargo must have deteriorated by the delay, and that consequently the salvors are entitled to have the value of the cargo as given at the hearing, and that it would be unfair to take its value at the sale six months later. I shall hold that the respective parties are bound by their values; 500*l*. for the ship, and 3000*l*. including cargo and freight.

On consideration of all the circumstances of the case, I think I shall do justice by holding that the total value of the property liable to pay salvage is less by 500*l*. than the values on which the court based its award. I arrive at this result by adopting the registrar's report and taking the value of the freight on which I have to award as 1000*l*. Taking this as the value of the freight it becomes necessary to reduce the value of the cargo, as given at the hearing, by this sum of 1000*l*., for I think it has been clearly proved that the freight was erroneously included in this value; the value of the cargo will therefore be 2000*l*. The value of the ship, according to the amended value taken at the hearing, was 500*l*., and the freight

[ADM.]

CARGO OF WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

wreck at eleven, p.m. on the evening of the next day, the 6th March.

7. The Kwangtung found the Woosung lying in a most exposed position, about 200 miles from Aden, and about thirty miles out of the track of vessels, so that no vessel passing up or down the Red Sea would sight the wreck. There was no place nearer than Aden from which any assistance, except that of the Arabs already mentioned, could be obtained, and at Aden there was no assistance available at the time, except the Kwangtung.

8. The approaches to the wreck were very dangerous; there were numerous coral reefs which were not to be found marked on any chart, and there were some spots close to the wreck with only twelve feet of water on them. The bottom was composed mostly of immense boulders of coral rock, and there was a wash at low water between the island and the wreck, a distance of about two miles. There was, therefore, the greatest difficulty and danger in bringing a ship near the wreck, so much so that when the Cornwall came to the rescue of the passengers and crew, she was obliged to anchor some miles off, her commander being afraid to bring her closer; and on a subsequent occasion, when Her Majesty's ship Salomonia, from Aden, homeward bound, called at Kotoma to land Captain Wilson, the representative of the Salvage Association, she suddenly ran into three fathoms of water, and narrowly escaped striking; and those on board her finding the ground too dangerous to approach closer, anchored that vessel also several miles off.

9. At the time when the Kwangtung arrived, it was evident that the Woosung had been very badly strained. . . . She could not hold long together, and gave every indication that she would break up on the first breeze, as she shortly afterwards did, having gone all to pieces in a gale which blew for several days during the second week of the following month of April.

10. The greater part of the cargo of the Woosung having been, by the time the Kwangtung had arrived, fifteen days under water, the raw hides which formed part of it were in an advanced state of putrefaction. The vessel was full of noxious gases, and when on the evening of the arrival of the Kwangtung the commander, first officer, and a sailor's crew from the latter vessel, with lanterns, boarded the wreck, and went below to examine it, the lights they carried in many places were extinguished by the foul air.

11. The position of the most valuable portion of the cargo was found to be such as to give very little hope that any efforts to save it would be successful. . . . The Arabs had refused, in consequence of the noxious gases, to go down into the lower hold where part of the silk was.

12. By the time that the Kwangtung had arrived at the wreck, the Greek and his Arabs had begun to discharge a part of the cargo, with the exception, however, of about eight or ten chests of indigo they had saved, and were occupied in saving only a portion of the hides, cotton, shellac, jute, tea, and light goods that had been stowed at the top. At that time, there was no prospect of their being able to move a single bale of silk, or at most more than 30 or 100 chests of indigo. They possessed no tackle of their own, and that belonging to the ship some of them had stolen and carried away, and even if they had had any tackle or appliances, they were without the skill to make use of them. They were without any system or concerted plan, and but a small number of them were really at work, and then only a few hours each day, beginning about eleven a.m., and leaving off before four p.m.; such work as they were doing therefore proceeded very slowly.

13. Captain Carlin, the captain of the Woosung, having informed the commander of the Kwangtung of the position of the indigo and silk, as already described, and that the Arabs were not able to save them, requested the commander of the Kwangtung to undertake the salvage of these portions of the cargo, upon the same terms as those he had entered into with the Greek. The captain of the Kwangtung consulted with his officers, and after taking into consideration the labour, fatigue, and great risk to life and health, which the salvage must inevitably involve, and the doubtful value of the goods when saved, it was considered that less than one half of the net proceeds of what the plaintiffs could recover would not sufficiently remunerate them, and the plaintiffs consequently refused to undertake the salvage of the same rate as the Greek. After a discussion of about three hours between Captain Carlin and the commander of the Kwangtung, it was ultimately arranged that the plaintiffs were to receive one half; and the terms set out in the following agreement having been agreed upon, the agreement itself was drawn up and signed by the parties—

"Kotoma. March 9th, 1874.

"It is this day mutually agreed between Capt. Carlin, of the Woosung, and Capt. Elton, of the Kwangtung, &c. The latter agrees to save as much as possible of the cargo, gear, tackle and fittings belonging to the above named vessel, including everything on deck or below that he possibly can, and consign the same to Messrs. Lairs, Thomas and Co., at Aden, to be retained in their custody until further advice. After the sale of which, and after all expenses have been paid thereon, Captain Carlin on his part agrees to pay to Captain Elton or his agents one half of the proceeds of the same. In this agreement, Captain Elton finds all necessary men, gear and apparatus for the discharging, unrigging, shipping and unshipping. Also for landing at Aden; and Captain Carlin holds himself irresponsible for any accident or damage that may accrue to the Kwangtung, either alongside the Woosung or otherwise.

"H. ELCOCK.

"D. CARLIN,

"O. L. EDWARDS."

"Master.

14. The plaintiffs began by stripping the wreck; and after they had succeeded in saving a large portion of the fittings and gear, the captain of the Woosung, seeing the imminent danger there was of the vessel breaking up, decided that the salvage of the indigo and silk should proceed with all speed. The plaintiffs were obliged to make openings to the interior of the wreck, where, from the foul air, putrid water, and intense heat, it was then impossible to work. To let in air and fresh water, the plaintiffs had to get up wind sails, and to open (and, in many instances, to break open) all the between deck ports and scuttles, which was accomplished with very great danger and difficulty, the ports and scuttles on the starboard side being some depth under putrid water. In order to get at the indigo (and all the indigo saved by the plaintiffs was, with the exception of fifteen or twenty chests, under the between deck hatches and under water), the plaintiffs had to throw overboard a large quantity of the lighter cargo, which was rotten and useless; and then, so as to reach the main hold where the indigo lay, they had to break open a great portion of the decks. . . .

15. The lower hold of the Woosung, under which about nineteen bales of the silk had been stowed, was approached from the main deck inside the saloon by an opening of about three feet square, and it was full of putrid water, which lay to a depth of about four feet on the between decks. . . .

16. None of these nineteen bales of silk could be reached without the utmost endurance and suffering on the part of the plaintiffs. . . . It was impossible for a man to remain down in the place for more than a very short time. The men came up fainting, and their eyes running with water, and the medical officer had to be in constant attendance to see that their eyes were bathed as soon as they came up, in order to alleviate the inflammation from which some of them were suffering. The first officer still continues to suffer from an acute inflammation of the eye occasioned by the salvage operations; and he has been obliged, after having been some time in hospital, to return to this country on sick leave, for the purpose of obtaining medical treatment. Two of the plaintiffs were nearly drowned in the course of the service. Many others of the plaintiffs fainted when they came on deck.

17. The plaintiffs, by reason of the dangerous condition of the vessel, and the consequent peril in which the cargo was placed, laboured, at the urgent desire of the captain of the Woosung, at the salvage each day as long as they could endure the strain, and during all the time were constantly at work from five o'clock in the morning until half-past six o'clock in the evening, with only short intervals between for meals. The men had, at the private expense of the commander, to be plentifully supplied with stimulants to keep them up to the exhausting work.

18. The indigo and silk, as soon as they were saved by the plaintiffs, were put on board the Kwangtung, which had been brought close up to the wreck, and between it and the land.

[ADM.]

CARGO OF WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

20. The plaintiffs having, after nine days of severe and exhausting labour, by the means and in the manner described, saved, in addition to the gear and fittings of the Woosung, 547 chests of indigo, and nineteen bales of raw silk (which was found to be as much as the Kwangtung could carry), they then conveyed the saved property to Aden, where they arrived on the 18th March 1874. The plaintiffs were engaged in the voyage from Kotama to Aden, and in the discharge of the saved property at Aden about six days, and as soon as the unloading was finished, the property was delivered to Messrs. Lake, Thomas and Co., who subsequently handed it over to Captain Wilson, the representative of the Salvage Association. It was afterwards transhipped to England, where it was sold, and realised, after payment of all expenses of sale, transhipment and warehousing, the sum of £1 net.

21. The Arabs continued at the salvage during all the time that the plaintiffs were engaged upon it, and learnt, from the plaintiffs' example, to work with greater effect and more skill and system than before. The plaintiffs left with them, when the Kwangtung departed for Aden, each of their hauling gear and appliances as they could spare, and thereby enabled them to continue the salvage of the indigo and silk, which the plaintiffs had commenced.

22. On the 31st March, the Kwangtung again left Aden to return to the wreck, taking with her, by the desire of the Lloyd's Salvage Association, a quantity of diving gear and four Englishmen engaged by the association, who were to be employed in diving for the cargo still remaining in the wreck. She arrived at Kotama on the 2nd April, after a voyage of three days, and the plaintiffs then found that Capt. Wilson, the representative of the Salvage Association, and who had been landed at Kotama from Her Majesty's ship Salamis, on the 27th March, was in charge of the wreck, and had assumed the control of affairs there. Capt. Wilson, however, refused to permit the plaintiffs to continue the salvage upon the terms of the agreement of the 9th March, and offered to engage them by the day and at the rate of 100*l.* a day. The plaintiffs, however, refused to depart from the terms of their agreement, and thereupon, having in the meantime saved about twenty-seven cases of indigo, they, at the orders of Capt. Wilson, discontinued the salvage. Having stayed near the wreck for about seven or eight days, the Kwangtung again departed for Aden, taking on board the twenty-seven cases of indigo and a cargo of the goods which the Arabs had seized and landed on the island. These, on the ship's arrival at Aden, after nine days occupied in the voyage, and in the unloading of the vessel, were duly delivered in accordance with Capt. Wilson's directions.

23. About the same time that the plaintiffs had been discharged by Capt. Wilson, or within two or three days afterwards, the services of the Arabs were also discontinued, and after the plaintiffs' discharge, the only further portion of the cargo saved consisted of about 100 cases of indigo. On the 12th April, when the Kwangtung departed for Aden, it had begun to blow a fresh gale, which lasted for several days. The butts of the Woosung's decks were then opening two or three inches, and two or three days afterwards she went to pieces, and (excepting a small portion of the cargo which had been recovered by Capt. Wilson after the wreck broke up) all that then remained of the vessel and cargo were sold on the spot, for comparatively a very small sum, by Capt. Wilson.

24. A period of about nine or ten days elapsed from the time when the plaintiffs were obliged to discontinue their services until the breaking up of the Woosung, and during that time the plaintiffs, if they had been permitted to do so, would have been able to save, if not the whole, the greater and most valuable part of the cargo still remaining in the wreck, and which, as already described, was afterwards lost.

25. On the day of the ship's fittings and furniture of the Woosung, so saved by the plaintiffs as aforesaid, were sold at Aden, and realised the sum of about 400*l.* net, one-half of which was, in accordance with the said agreement of the 9th March, 1874, paid to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs do not further present to their case as against the said fittings and furniture, or as against the owners thereof.

26. The indigo and silk so saved by the plaintiffs could not have been recovered without their assistance, and but for their services, already described, would have been lost.

The answer on behalf of the defendants was as follows:

1. The tonnage, horse power and crew of the Kwangtung, are correctly set forth in the 1st Article of the Petition filed herein. She is one of Her Majesty's ships, belonging to the Bombay Marine, and was, at the time of the happening of the matters next hereinafter stated or admitted, stationed off Aden, and subject to the orders of Her Majesty's political resident there. The consent of the Admiralty to an adjunction upon the plaintiffs' claim has been granted, but the Admiralty have not signified any approval or in fact approval thereof.

2. The Woosung and her cargo are correctly described in the 3rd Article of the Petition. She was, through the gross carelessness of her master, wrecked at the time and place described in the 4th Article of the Petition. The passengers and crew conveyed to the Island of Kotama the morning after the collision, with a plentiful supply of stores from the ship.

3. The master of the Woosung took the steps and made the agreement stated in the 5th Article of the Petition. He also communicated with the Turkish town of Hodeida; and the governor of this town sent a force of police to protect the property, and a gun boat to assist in the salvage, but as the assistance of the Greek trader, mentioned in the said article, having under him from two hundred to four hundred Arabs, most of them skilled pearl divers, and thirty to forty boats of large tonnage had been already procured, the services of the Turkish gunboat were thought unnecessary, and she shortly afterwards returned to Hodeida. The agreement with the Greek trader was, as the defendants submit, made at a very high rate, and solely on account of the absence of any other available assistance at that time. It is true, as stated in the said article, that the passengers and most of the crew were sent off. In addition to those of the crew mentioned in the said article as remaining, the stewardess remained behind and acted as an interpreter.

4. It is not true, as stated in the 6th Article of the petition, that the Arabs, engaged to save the cargo, began to plunder the ship or destroy her furniture. Some petty articles only of insignificant value were, as the defendants believe, pilfered by Arabs unconnected with the Arab salvors.

5. The circumstances in which the Kwangtung was despatched to the Woosung are as follows:—On the 2nd of March a telegram reached London, which was in the words and figures following:

"Aden, 3rd March.

"The Smala (s.) reports that the Woosung (s.) or (f) of Newcastle, is wrecked on the Kelamalee (or Kelamalee) reef, twenty-five miles from Jibbali Tawr, master, chief engineer, and three men on board, remainder gone to Suet. No further particulars. The Woosung (s.), Carlin from Calcutta to London, left Aden 19th Feb."

On receipt of this telegram the defendants empowered the "Association for the Protection of Commercial Interests in Wrecked and Damaged Property," hereinafter called the "Salvage Association," to act as their agents in this matter. Thereupon Captain J. A. Heathcote, on behalf of the Salvage Association, had an interview with the Under Secretary of State for India, representing for this purpose the Secretary of State in Council, and represented to him that the Salvage Association, who had at that time no other information than that contained in the said telegram, were afraid that the natives might plunder the cargo of the Woosung, and requested that he would send one of Her Majesty's ships to the Woosung to protect, and also to take such steps as might be found possible for saving the cargo. The said Capt. Heathcote further offered, on behalf of the Salvage Association, to reimburse the expenditure for coal consumed on board the ship to be so sent, and further to make such present to her officers and crew, should their assistance result in the salvage of property, as the Secretary of State should think fit. These terms were the same on which similar assistance had been several times recently afforded by the Secretary of State in Council. The said Captain Heathcote further wrote a letter to the said Under Secretary of State containing the substance of his representation. The said Under Secretary of State,

[ADM.]

CARGO ON WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

on behalf of the Secretary of State in Council, agreed to send upon these terms one of Her Majesty's ships as requested, and despatched a telegram to the political resident at Aden, in the words and figures following:—

"Steamer Woosung, Calcutta to England, stranded near Jubel Teer, and crew obliged to leave vessel. Cargo, valued 200,000l., is being plundered by Arabs, send gunboat to protect property immediately, if you think necessary."

6. In obedience to these instructions the political resident ordered the Kwangtung to proceed to the Woosung, which she did on the 5th of March.

7. With the exception of the actual reef on which the Woosung was lying, there was no spot near the wreck with so small a depth of water as twelve feet only. There was no difficulty or danger whatever in bringing a ship, coming from Aden, near the wreck.

8. At the time of the arrival of the Kwangtung, the Woosung was a total wreck, but it is not true that she could not hold long together, or that she gave an indication that she would break up in the first breeze, or that she shortly afterwards did so. She in fact remained unbroken for a long period, including many days of heavy weather, and only broke up when she did through a hurricane of unusual violence.

9. It is true that, by the time of the arrival of the Kwangtung at the wreck, the hides which were stowed on the top of the rest of the cargo were beginning to get rotten, and that in the closed spaces of the wreck, at night time, or when undisturbed for some hours, some foul air accumulated, but this all disappeared when the work began by day, although the smell continued very offensive.

10. At the time of the arrival of the Kwangtung much valuable work had been and was being done by the Greek trader and the Arabs employed under him. The Greek trader, however, and those engaged under him, had fitted up tackle from the ship's materials, and were working very well. They had, at the time when the Kwangtung arrived, made a way down to the indigo, by removing most of the cargo of small value, and they had already saved from eighty to one hundred chests of indigo, and would have saved the whole of the indigo in that hold, as well as the greater part of the other indigo in the vessel, and they did, in fact, afterwards save a very considerable quantity, notwithstanding the interruption and obstructions caused by Captain Elton, as hereinafter mentioned. The Arabs being divers by profession, were able to work in water with more effect than the plaintiffs, and could save, and did, in fact, save, cargo which the plaintiffs were entirely unable to save. The first engineer of the Woosung, who was working with the Greek trader, was well able to break open the docks as required.

11. Soon after the Kwangtung arrived on the 6th of March, an agreement was entered into between the master of the Woosung and Captain Edward Elton, the commander of the Kwangtung, for the saving of the ship's fittings and furniture which were of small value, and realised the sum stated in the 25th Article of the Petition, on the terms that the plaintiffs should receive one-half of the net value of the articles saved.

12. On the 9th March, the agreement stated in the 15th Article of the Petition was entered into. This agreement was entered into upon the importunity of Captain Elton and by collusion between the master of the Woosung and him. The defendants submit that it is an agreement which the master of the Woosung had not power to make, and as inequitable agreement, and one not binding upon them. They further submit that Captain Elton and the Kwangtung had been sent to the Woosung in pursuance of the agreement entered into between the Salvage Association and the Secretary of State in Council, whose servant Captain Elton was; and that this last mentioned agreement over-ruled any agreement between Captain Elton and the master of the Woosung. And the defendants lastly submit that Captain Elton is an officer in Her Majesty's service, in command of one of Her Majesty's ships, and sent on a special service, had no right to undertake, except upon his own terms, any work of salvage to a British ship, on which he and his men never could be properly employed, or to disturb an agreement fixing his remuneration before he proceeded to work.

13. The greater part of the saving of the fittings and gear had been accomplished before the agreement of the 9th March was entered into. After the 9th March Captain Elton set his men at work in saving the cargo from the hold, into which the Arabs had cleared a way, and by the 17th March the plaintiffs had saved the cargo stated in the 30th Article of the Petition. This cargo was then conveyed to Aden, and discharged and delivered as stated in the said 30th Article. The net value of the cargo so saved and carried to Aden by the Kwangtung was 25,920l.

14. The work of saving this portion of the cargo was difficult work and hard labour, with some disagreeable or unpleasant adjuncts, and performed in hot weather. With the exception, however, of that portion of the cargo to which the 15th and 16th Articles of the Petition relate, there was no great difficulty and no danger in the salvage of it. As to that portion of the cargo which is referred to in the 15th and 16th Articles of the Petition, which was of comparatively small value, only being worth 700l., and no more, it was difficult of access, and more hardship was incurred by those who worked inside the hannette. It is true also that accidents happened to two of the men employed as stated in the 16th Article. The other statements in the 15th and 16th Articles are greatly exaggerated.

15. The statements in the 10th Article are greatly exaggerated. Any inconvenience which was suffered by those on board the Kwangtung might have been avoided by heaving the Kwangtung at night a short distance from the wreck.

16. When Captain Elton first set his men to work at the salvage, he drove away from the wreck the salvors who were then working under the agreement with the Greek trader, and kept them away for some days, whilst his men worked at the indigo in the hold, which had been opened by those salvors, and used the tackle erected by them; he afterwards offered to allow those salvors to resume operations at some parts of the wreck which had not been cleared, and where the indigo was not accessible, and where there was not much opportunity for any lucrative salvage. Most of those salvors refused to return to work on such terms, and their services were lost to the defendants during the whole time that the plaintiffs remained at the wreck.

17. When the Kwangtung left for Aden, the whole of those salvors returned to work under the command of the Greek trader and of the first engineer of the Woosung. They found, however, that the Kwangtung had taken away with her the whole of the derrick and gear belonging to the Woosung, which had been before used for the salvage operations by the Arab salvors, and afterwards by the plaintiffs, and also all materials from on board the Woosung out of which fresh gear could have been erected.

18. The Kwangtung returned to the wreck in the circumstances stated in the 22nd Article of the Petition. At that time, as stated in the same article, Captain Wilson, as agent for the Salvage Association, was in charge of the wreck. It is true that Captain Elton was ready to resume his salvage operations on the terms of the agreement of the 9th March, and that Captain Wilson refused to permit him to continue them upon those terms. He, in fact, considered them exorbitant, and had before this, when at Aden, upon being first informed by Captain Elton of the said agreement, repudiated it and refused to allow Captain Elton to work under it. When the Kwangtung had returned to the wreck, Captain Wilson offered to engage the services of Captain Elton and his men at the rate of 100l. per day, or for such remuneration as the Secretary for State should fix. Captain Elton accepted the proposal of working for such remuneration as the Secretary for State should fix. The crew of the Kwangtung were thereupon set to work on the 4th April. At the part of the ship they were then set to work there were a quantity of hides at the top, which had to be removed before the indigo below could be got up, and the crew of the Kwangtung began to remove them, while the salvors engaged by the Greek continued the diving operations in the main hold. The crew of the Kwangtung were, however, after about two hours' work, stopped by Captain Elton, who thereupon informed Captain Wilson that if the crew were employed in this way, he would take the alternative proposal of 100l. a day. Captain Wilson thereupon asked if Captain Elton wished to have the arrangement for arbitration cancelled. Captain Elton replied that he would have arbitration when his crew worked at indigo, and 100*l.* a day when they worked at hides. Captain Wilson refused these terms. But no exostulation could induce Captain Elton to modify these terms, and he informed Captain Wilson that, as they were objected to, he should start for Aden that night.

ADM.]

CARGO ex WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

19. Twenty-seven cases of indigo were saved on the 3rd April by the divers sent out by the Salvage Association. The only work done by the plaintiffs towards saving them was some assistance in hauling in ropes.

20. It is true that, after staying near the wreck for seven or eight days, the Kwangtung again departed for Aden, taking on board the twenty-seven cases of indigo, and a cargo of the goods which the Arabs had raised and landed on the Island. . . .

21. When the Kwangtung departed for Aden the second time, Capt. Elton claimed, and took away with him as being made out of the ship's fittings, which he had an agreement with the master of the Woosung to save, the remaining tackle which had been rigged up as before mentioned, and was being used in getting the cargo out of the wreck, and Capt. Wilson had to buy of Capt. Elton the necessary materials for constructing fresh tackle.

22. Further work was done at the wreck, and further cargo was saved after the Kwangtung had started for Aden; but the weather was very bad and prevented continuous operations, and on or about the 11th April, a gale sprung up which prevented further work, and developed into a hurricane of very unusual violence, through which the wreck broke up and the rest of the cargo was lost.

23. Save as hereinbefore appears the several allegations contained in the petition are untrue.

24. The defendants have offered to pay to the plaintiffs, such a remuneration as the Secretary of State in council should fix, and the plaintiffs have refused to accept this offer.

25. The defendants submit that Capt. Elton, the officers, and the crew of the Kwangtung are entitled to reasonable salvage only for the services rendered by them to the cargo of the Woosung, and they further submit that that part of the remuneration which would have been otherwise awarded to Capt. Elton, should be largely reduced on account of his conduct and the obstacles which he threw in the way of a salvage of the cargo, as hereinbefore stated.

The pleadings were thereupon concluded in this cause.

The petition filed on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the Corinna was, so far as material, as follows:—

1. On the 28th Feb. 1874, the steamship Corinna, of 696 tons register and 190 horse-power, manned by a crew of twenty-six hands including her master, whilst on a voyage from Bombay to Havre, with cargo, was in the Red Sea in latitude 15.41 north, and longitude 41.40 east, with the Island of Jibbel Teer bearing south-east distant twelve miles. There was at such time a strong southerly wind and a heavy sea.

2. At such time the Corinna fell in with a lifeboat belonging to the British steamship Woosung, and having on board her the second officer and eight of the crew of that vessel.

3. The Woosung, whilst proceeding from Calcutta to London with a valuable cargo and a number of passengers, had, on the night of the 20th of the said month of Feb., struck upon a reef off the south-west end of Kotama Island, and had there remained fast. Her passengers and crew had succeeded in saving themselves by getting on to Kotama Island, where they had encamped under tents and awnings. They were, however, short of water and exposed to other hardships and deprivations, and in danger therefrom, and also in danger of being molested, plundered and ill-treated by the inhabitants of the adjacent coasts. The passengers were eight in number, four of them being ladies, two of them children. The lifeboat had been sent out by the master of the Woosung for the purpose of procuring assistance, and had been two days at sea without meeting with any vessel.

4. The second officer of the Woosung delivered to the master of the Corinna a letter from the master of the Woosung, informing him of the condition of affairs, and requesting assistance. The plaintiffs crave leave to refer to such letter.

5. The Corinna at once steamed towards Kotama Island, and at about 2.30 p.m. arrived within about three miles of it, in twenty-four fathoms of water. A boat was immediately sent from the Corinna to the shore for the purpose of bringing the Woosung's people off. At dusk the master of the Corinna, finding that there was a strong current setting to the E.N.E., anchored the Corinna and burned lights and rockets at intervals, and at about 11.30 p.m. three boats from the Woosung came alongside, but not that containing the Woosung's passengers, it having got among the reefs and lost its way. The master of the Corinna sent a boat in search, and at 0.30 a.m. the boat with the passengers arrived alongside.

6. Forty-four of the crew of the Woosung and her eight passengers and their clothes were taken on board the Corinna, which at 2.30 a.m. proceeded with them for Suez, leaving, at their own request, the master, first officer, and five more of the crew of the Woosung with the wreck, as they were then practically safe from the natives, communication having been had with the Corinna.

7. At 2 p.m. on the 1st March, the Corinna, whilst proceeding to Suez, fell in with the Spanish steamer Emeliano, bound for Aden, and in accordance with the request of the master of the Woosung, the master of the Corinna boarded the Emeliano, and asked her master to send assistance from Aden to save the Woosung and her cargo.

8. The Corinna arrived in safety at Suez at about 6 p.m. on the 8th March, and the crew and passengers of the Woosung were then landed.

9. The Emeliano arrived at Aden in about thirty-six hours after she was boarded by the Corinna as aforesaid, and caused a steamship called the Kwangtung to be at once despatched to the assistance of the Woosung. The Kwangtung worked for eight days at the Woosung, and succeeded in saving a large quantity of her cargo and some of her fittings. After such eight days of work, a heavy storm came on and put an end to the operation, and the Woosung broke up, and with the rest of her cargo was lost.

10. By the services of the plaintiffs, the passengers and crew of the Woosung were rescued from danger.

11. The plaintiffs also by speaking the Emeliano and obtaining the prompt assistance of the Kwangtung, contributed greatly to the saving of the cargo and fittings of the Woosung.

12. In deviating from her voyage and going to Kotama Island, the Corinna incurred some risk, and her master took upon himself considerable responsibility.

13. The Corinna, at the time in question, was of the value of 19,500*l.*, and her cargo and freight were together of the value of 74,166*l.*

The answer filed on behalf of the defendants this cause was as follows:—

1. It is not true, as stated in the 1st Article of the Petition filed herein, that there was at the time mentioned a strong southerly wind or a heavy sea.

2. It is not true, as stated in the 3rd Article, that the passengers and crew of the Woosung were short of water, or exposed to other hardships or privations, or in danger therefrom, or in danger of being molested, plundered, or ill-treated by the inhabitants of the adjacent coasts, or as suggested in the 6th Article, that the master, first officer, and five men of the crew were rendered safe from the natives by communication having been had with the Corinna.

3. Before the Corinna came up to the Woosung, communications had been made by the master of the Woosung with the mainland and with the village of Lobeia and the Turkish town of Hodeida, and with the Turkish governor of Hodeida, and the Turkish governor had offered the services of a gunboat and police, which afterwards arrived, and an agreement had been made with a certain Greek trader for the salvage of the cargo. Under this agreement from 300 to 400 Arabs were employed with the permission of the Arab chief of Lobeia, and it had become well known on the mainland that the wreck was under the protection of the Turkish and Arab authorities. On the first happening of the wreck there had been some deficiency of water for the passengers and crew, who placed themselves on a small allowance of water as a measure of precaution, but there was abundance of champagne and beer, and other liquors, and before the Corinna arrived arrangements for a constant and sufficient supply of water had been made.

ADM.]

CARGO, ~~ex~~ WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

4. Save as hereinbefore appears the several allegations contained in Articles 1 to 8 both inclusive, and in Article 13 of the Petition, are true.

5. An account of the provisions consumed by the passengers and crew of the Woosung when on board the Corinna was sent in to the owners of the Woosung, and has been paid by them.

6. The Emeliano arrived at Aden, as stated in the 9th Article of the Petition, and there gave information which caused a telegram to be sent to England. In consequence of which telegram, a second telegram was sent to Aden at the instance of the defendants, ordering one of Her Majesty's ships to go to the wreck, and the Kwangtung did go to the wreck. When this telegram was so sent, no other communication had reached England, and the defendants did not know of the communications made by the master of the Woosung with Lohia and Hodeida, or of the agreement with the Greek trader mentioned in the 2nd Article hereof. Those on board the Kwangtung worked for eight days at the Woosung, and saved some property; but the commander of the Kwangtung at first ousted and afterwards impeded the Greek trader and the Arabs working with him under the agreement hereinbefore pleaded, and induced the master of the Woosung to enter into a most onerous agreement for the remuneration of the services which his crew were to perform, and has put and is now putting the defendant to large costs and expenses in and about the resisting of his improper demands, and has in divers other ways so obstructed and diminished the operation of salving the defendants' cargo, that the arrival of the Kwangtung instead of contributing to the saving of the cargo of the Woosung, in fact, impeded it.

7. Save, as hereinbefore appears, the several allegations contained in Articles 9 to 12, both inclusive, of the Petition, are untrue.

The pleadings were thereupon concluded in this cause.

The value of the cargo salved by the officers and crew of the Kwangtung was 27,608*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, the total value salved being 69,391*l.*, most of which was carried to Aden by the Kwangtung.

The cause was heard June 25, July 16 and 20 before Sir R. Phillimore and Trinity Masters.

Butt, Q.C., Herschell, Q.C., and E. Jones, for the commander, officers, and crew of the Kwangtung.

Butt, Q.C., and E. C. Clarkson for the owners, masters, and crew of the Corinna.

Sir H. James, Q.C., Cohen, Q.C., and W. G. F. Phillimore, for the defendants.

Butt, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.—As to the claim of the Kwangtung, I submit that the agreement ought to be upheld. It was entered into between perfectly competent parties after due deliberation, and under no undue pressure; consequently, according to the practice of this court, it ought to be held binding. The amount agreed upon is not extraordinary considering the arduous nature of the services performed. There is nothing to prevent the officers and crew of a Queen's ship, which I must admit this was, from entering into an agreement as to the way in which their services are to be rewarded. As to the claim of the Corinna, I submit she is entitled to substantial reward; first for the carrying of the first intelligence to Aden (The Sebastian Cabot, Pritchard's Admiralty Digest, 865); secondly, because she rescued the passengers from a position of great danger to life.

Sir H. James, Q.C., and Cohen, for the defendants.—The agreement is bad. It was obtained by undue pressure, and by the threat to abandon the salvage if not accepted on those terms. The sum enforced was exorbitant. This court never gives one half out of such a considerable sum. Where a salvor is in such a position that he can say to the persons in distress "You must consent to my terms or I will leave you to certain destruction," this amounts to duress afloat, although it might not ashore. In the present case it was only the threat to leave that produced consent to the enormous demand. No doubt if persons agree to an amount for salvage with a full knowledge of all the circumstances and chances, it is binding, whether the work turns out more or less (The Waverley, ante, vol. 1, p. 47; 24 L. T. Rep. N.S. 231), but it is very different where parties enter into an agreement, one party refusing all terms except his own; in the latter case the master must accept or lose his salvor. If it be once admitted that these agreements are not, under all circumstances, binding, even in the case of a merchant ship, and if that such a demand, not on the ground of fairness, but on account of the danger of the damaged ship, a sum which is exorbitant, it is contrary to all equity that such an agreement should be upheld. It has been decided over and over again that an agreement obtained by compulsion is bad, and if a person takes advantage of the distress of a ship to force from her master a sum of money, which is greater than the circumstances warrant, under the threat of abandonment that amounts to compulsion:

The Emulous, 1 Sumner's C. C. Rep. 207, 210;

The Schutz v. The Nancy, Bee's Adm. Rep. 139;

The British Empire, 6 Jurist, 608;

The Helen and George, Swab., 368.

The system of imposing terms without reference to the fairness of remuneration is against public policy. The demand here was grossly exorbitant and wholly out of proportion to the services rendered. Again, this was a Queen's ship, and consequently her officers and crew are entitled to even less than those on board a merchant ship. It is the duty of officers and men in the public service to render assistance to vessels in distress, and although entitled to reward, their reward should be small in comparison to that given to merchant ships having no such duty (The Clifton, 3 Hagg. 117, 121). Moreover it is indicated by the Legislature in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, sect. 487, that in no case shall officers and crews of Her Majesty's ships be entitled, on any occasion, to more than one half of the property salved, because it there provides that the bond to be taken as security for the salvage shall never exceed half the value. This would show that the very highest claim allowable is one half. If the master of the Woosung had known that orders had been given to the Kwangtung from the India office as to salving the property, and giving assistance, he never would have entered into the agreement. He was entitled to know all the circumstances of the case before making his terms (The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 43). It was not fair that the master of the Woosung should not know what he was paying for; the plaintiffs knew they could claim for nothing but personal services, and yet they let the master suppose they could claim in respect of the ship. The Queen's ship was proceeding under orders, and not voluntarily. In a merchant ship the owners engage the crew to perform a particular service, and not to perform salvage. In a Queen's ship the captain is bound to take her wherever he is ordered, whether it be to fight, convoy, or salve. Hence their services are given by Government, and they can only be paid for the extra labour they perform. They have no claim for the tackle used in salving as that was Government property (Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 484), and nevertheless the agreement stipulates that the captain of the Queen's ship is to provide tackle. This clearly shows that part of the consideration for the sum agreed upon was the finding of tackle. In this respect alone the agreement is bad, inasmuch as it stipulates for a money payment for that to which the defendants were already entitled for nothing. I submit that the contract ought to be set aside, because the amount agreed upon was exorbitant, because those terms were obtained by force or compulsion, and because it was wrong in a Queen's officer to impose any terms at all after he had been ordered to render assistance.

ADM.]

CARGO ex WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

As to the claim on behalf of the Corinna we submit that there was no life salvage. The claim for life salvage arises under statute (Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sects. 458, 459), and before such a claim can be enforced there must have been an actual saving of life from the dangers of the sea; there must be a removing of the lives from a position of immediate danger, and that danger, must arise from the sea or a perilous position of the ship on which the lives are. Here, however, the passengers were ashore, in an island which was not deserted and was inhabitable. There may have been inconvenience but no danger. The owners of cargo can only be made liable upon grounds of public policy, and, therefore, only by showing that there was such danger of the sea as rendered it a duty to save life. There was no such danger, as the passengers might have stayed on the island some time longer without risk. Again there was no salvage service in carrying intelligence to Aden. There was no deviation from her ordinary course, and no risk or peril: (The Ocean, 2 W. Rob. 91.)

Butt, Q.C. in reply.—In the claim of the Corinna I submit that the deviation to pick up the passengers and the taking the letter were all one act tending towards the salvage of the Woosung's cargo, and should be rewarded. There was danger to the passengers on the island; there was great privation, and want of water.

In the claim of the Kwangtung, I submit that there was no duress; the parties met upon equal terms, and had every opportunity for discussion, and the terms were reduced into writing. The ignorance of the law of salvage by Queen's ships will not avail here, because not only ought the master to have known of this provision, but he himself admitted that had he known it he would have signed the agreement. There was not any obligation in the plaintiffs to render assistance in salving, their only duty was to protect the property from the Arabs. The claim is not exorbitant compared with the sums paid to other persons.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 30.—Sir R. PHILLMORE.—This is a case in which the circumstances are peculiar, and the salvage claim large.

The Woosung was an iron screw steamer of 1622 tons register, with a general Indian cargo of 3000 tons, consisting of silk, indigo, raw hides, coffee, tea, shellac, wheat, rice, linseed, and other goods, of value of half a million sterling. About midnight in the month of Feb. 1874, in the course of her voyage from Calcutta to London, she struck on a coral reef off the Island of Kotama, in the Red Sea, and the next morning her passengers and crew, consisting of between fifty and sixty persons were conveyed to an island which the evidence proved to be a desert island, uninhabited, and with no water in it. The master of the Woosung dispatched in a short time one of his officers in a lifeboat with a letter to the authorities of the Turkish town of Loheia, about twenty-six miles off. The governor came down to the wreck with some men and a Greek trader, who undertook to engage some Arabs, when the captain of the Woosung entered into an agreement by which the Greek undertook to provide men and boat, and he was to take one-third of the nett value realised on the sale, after all expenses were paid. It appears that the Greek and the Arabs whom he engaged reached the place soon afterwards, and here I must observe there has been a conflict of evidence with respect to the conduct of the Arabs, which is only relevant to the question I have to decide before me in an indirect way. I am satisfied upon the evidence, particularly upon a letter written by the agent for the Salvage Association, who gave evidence as far as it was in his power to give in favour of the owner in this case, that the Arabs did plunder, and that their work did proceed from time to time very carelessly. In a letter written upon the 12th April the agent thus expresses himself: "Some boxes have been so completely smashed, and the Arabs were stealing the indigo so fast, that I was obliged to sacrifice the linseed, much of which has been partially damaged. Up to the present time 220 bags have been started and filled with indigo." And with respect to this agreement to the Greek he says, "I have made this arrangement under the firm conviction that a large quantity of valuable property already salvaged, against which the Greek has a claim of one-third of its nett value will be benefited to a very considerable extent by the arrangement I have made with him for 16,000*l.*, and that the abandonment of his claim against the property still remaining to be salvaged will enable me to recover it at a very considerable less cost than one-third of its nett value. The Greek has been most reluctantly obliged to make this arrangement, and nothing but a want of money has prevented his following the property to England under the terms of his agreement with Capt. Carlin." In another letter he says, "I am fully alive to the serious nature of the step I have taken, and trust you will give me credit for acting for the best. At the same time I trust you will take into consideration the difficulties of my position, the extent to which the property is being pillaged, the complete stoppage of further salvage operations, and the difficulty of getting the cargo off the island." By a telegram upon the 5th March 1874, from the Secretary of State for India, the British Political Resident at Aden, was ordered to send a gunboat, which was the Kwangtung. And here I may observe that, in my opinion, the Kwangtung was sent to protect the property, but without any orders to act as salvor. The Kwangtung found the Woosung in the place mentioned, which was a most exposed position, 299 miles from Aden and 30 miles out of the track of vessels. When she arrived, the Woosung was examined, and I think it is not denied that she had been badly strained. She was on a slanting ledge of a rock, her shear had quite gone, she was very much hogged, and had a heavy list to starboard. There were about 31ft. of water on the starboard side, and only about 16ft. on the port side. The vessel having been holed in several places, and her stern had settled down until the starboard waterways abreast the mizenmast were under the water. She was not in a state, as the further history of the case shows, to stand any bad weather. The greater part of the cargo of the Woosung had been fifteen days under water when the Kwangtung arrived. Part of the cargo (the raw hides and linseed) were immersed in the water, and the hides were in an advanced state of putrefaction. There were noxious gases in the vessel, and considerable danger was experienced from the foul air that existed. The indigo was in the main hold, beneath the between decks, which were in some places under water about four feet, and was jammed so tight between the beams by the swelling of the grain in the bottom of the vessel that it could only be got at by breaking up the decks; and there was a considerable quantity of silk in the lower lazarette, stowed away at the bottom of the vessel, underneath a number of boxes of various goods, and from 10ft. to 20ft. in some places, and in others under putrid water. Under the circumstances they found it necessary to break up the decks to get at the indigo, and, as the Greek had no means or appliances for doing this, the commander of the Woosung and his men undertook to do it. The name of the captain of the Woosung was Carlin, and he had a conference with the commander of the Kwangtung with respect to the position of the indigo and silk, and a long discussion ensued between them, and ultimately they came to an agreement at Kotama on the 9th March. [His Lordship read the agreement above set out.]

ADM.]

CARGO ex WOOSUNG.

[ADM.]

Now the question debated for several days was, as to the validity of the agreement. It was contended that it was void by reason of its exorbitancy, and it had also been pleaded that it was void by reason of collusions between Captains Carlin and Elton, and the misconduct of Captain Elton and those under his control. The latter charge has been completely withdrawn, and the court has to regret that, under the circumstances, it was ever made.

Now with regard to agreements of this kind, what is the probable amount which the court would award in the absence of an agreement? for salvage does not furnish a satisfactory test of the validity or invalidity of an agreement. The rule of the court was laid down by Dr. Lushington in the case of the Theodore (Swab. 352), and in many other cases; but in the Theodore it is concisely stated as follows: "The court is very much indisposed to set aside an honest agreement, but it must be satisfied that the agreement is honest. Where there is any doubt, its rule is to adhere to the agreement, and the court will be just as ready in favour of the salvors to set aside an agreement if it is satisfied that it was wholly inequitable." In the very useful work published on the practice of this court by Mr. Bruce and Mr. Williams, the cases referring to this point of law are very carefully examined, and the result in my judgment is very accurately stated: "It is submitted that the true principle is that the agreement of the parties must bind unless the court is led to the conclusion that it was entered into in ignorance of material facts or induced by fraud. Whether the amount is inadequate or exorbitant, that fact can only be regarded by the court as pointing to the probability that there was some unfair dealing at the time of the making of the agreement. This applies with especial force to cases where persons in extremity, in order to obtain assistance have entered into an agreement to pay an exorbitant sum to the salvors."

Now the first thing the court has to consider is, who are the parties to this agreement? Are they ignorant persons, or is one ignorant and the other cunning, and trying to overreach the ignorant one? Or is it made between persons perfectly able to understand what they are about, and the conditions that they enter into? It cannot be doubted that they belong to the latter category. I think that Captain Carlin and Captain Elton were really as competent persons as can be conceived.

The next thing the court has to consider is whether the agreement was hastily or deliberately entered into. Now, the Captains have been examined, and I saw no reason whatever to doubt the credibility of the evidence given by Captain Carlin. He says, fairly enough, he did not know what the law was with regard to salvage, and did not know anything about the law as to Her Majesty's ships, or ships in the public service; but, he said, he bargained for a long time for him to take a third, and it was only when the bargaining failed that he agreed to give half. He says it was therefore entered into very deliberately, and it was entered into by competent persons. Now, the sum was very large, but I think it was stated, and not contradicted, that the salvage went to the Indian office, and that Captain Elton was to receive one-tenth. It is true that Captain Carlin says he was not aware of the law of salvage relating to ships in the public service—there is not much distinction to be drawn between a ship belonging to the Bombay Government and a ship belonging to Her Majesty—and he says that he was not aware, according to the law, that a ship belonging to the Crown could not claim salvage—that is to say, on the ground of service rendered by a ship. He said if he had been aware of it, it would have made no difference whatever in his arrangements with Captain Elton. I must observe in this case, without entering into the consideration of how far ignorance of the law could possibly affect this agreement, but it appears from the evidence that the ship relied upon the men on board of her, and the service was essentially rendered by the men on board the ship, and not, as in many cases, the agency of the steam power of the other vessel. Now, I am of opinion, as I have already expressed, that there was no disability fixed by the law upon Captain Elton to obtain salvage employment, and to obtain it at a reasonable and proper remuneration, whatever that may be, for the services. It is not necessary to go into these documents to which the court has referred. The result is that the court has, by the permission of the Lords of the Admiralty, to consider the case, as if it were the case of any ordinary merchantman.

Now, the agreement having been entered into deliberately by competent persons, and the charge of collusion and misconduct having been withdrawn, does the amount itself warrant the court in coming to the conclusion that this sum is so grossly inequitable and exorbitant, as to render it proper, that the court should set the agreement aside, having regard to the principles of law which I have stated already? Now,

ADM.]

H.M.S. BELLEROPHON.

[PRIV. CO.]

we must consider a little of the facts of the salvage in this case. It was rendered, it is true, in one sense without much personal danger to the salvors. But there is one thing the evidence shows—that of those who rendered this salvage service, many of them were sufferers from the worst of dangers, perhaps, and the chance of disease, by the mischief which was generated by this putrid stench, and by the noxious gases that were evolved. The evidence of Mr. Edwards is very remarkable on this point. He was a lieutenant on board the Kwangtung, and went to the Woosung in his capacity of first officer, and he gives us an account of the affair. He says, "I never worked so hard in my life, and I did not know when the ship might break up. We had to replace the men and wash our eyes." And then follows an account of the suffering of his eyes: "The most intense madness I ever suffered in my life; I would not suffer it again for 100,000l.; I was nearly a month in the hospital, under great suffering." Now, I take this opportunity of saying that I hope those in whose hands the distribution of the salvage reward is placed will not fail to recognise the eminent services of this officer, and it was stated by counsel that if I entertained that opinion I should express it. I do entertain it, and I hope that those who hear me to-day will carry that opinion to the proper quarter, where my opinion may be acted upon. The next circumstance that I have to observe upon is that the work of the Europeans was good, not to repeat more of the evidence than is necessary to establish the fact; and the manner in which the Arabs worked was not to be compared in its efficacy and usefulness to the manner in which the Europeans worked.

It is said—and this is the main argument addressed to us by Sir H. James and Mr. Cohen—that this compact is void by reason of duress and compulsion. In one sense, the services of every salvor are unwittingly under duress, they accept the lesser evil of losing a portion of the property rather than submit to the greater evil of losing all the property and all the benefit. In this sense all services are rendered under compulsion. But there is no compulsion and no duress unless direct evidence is given that all reasonable limits are transgressed, and there has been a use of false representation, or excitement from ungrounded fears, in order to procure acceptance by the salvors of their services. There does not appear any evidence of that kind in the present case, and if I compare it with the salvage reward paid to the Greek and others—take the stewardess, who received 1900l., and the first engineer, who received 3500l.—when I compare this with the admitted and uncomplicated of salvage service afterwards by these persons, I must say the charge of compulsion on this account utterly fails.

The services lasted, I think, six days, and were perfectly effectual. Now, I think it unnecessary to travel further into this question, because I have not to consider—and I wish this to be perfectly understood—whether half the proceeds would be the amount which I should have to award were it a question now of an ordinary salvage service; but the question is whether the amount, having regard to the circumstances which I have stated, and the principles of law to which I have adverted, of itself presents such features of exorbitancy as to be inequitable and to induce the court to do that which it sometimes does, viz., very reluctantly interfere with an agreement made between competent persons.

I must decline to do so upon the present occasion, and I must pronounce for the validity of the agreement. I must repeat that I hope what the court has said as to Mr. Edwards will not be forgotten, but that it will be mentioned in the proper quarter. I will add that if the charge of misconduct is not withdrawn, I have no hesitation in saying it was not founded upon the evidence before me.

I have considered the case of the Corinna, and I am of opinion that there was no life salvage. I shall award 200l. for the services she performed in forwarding the intelligence to Aden.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Capt. Elton and others, Kearsey, Son, and Haues.

Solicitors for the owners, &c., of the Corinna, Gellatly, Son, and Warton.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Bubb, and Waltons.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

ON APPEAL FROM THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 18 and 19, 1875.

(Present: The Right Hons. Sir JAMES W. COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir MONTAGUE SMITH, Sir R. P. COLLIER, and Sir H. S. KEATING.)

H.M.S. BELLEROPHON.

Collision—H.M.'s ship carrying ram—As to duty of officer in charge to give warning of danger.

Where a ship carries a latent instrument dangerous to others, those who have control of it are bound to take all reasonable precautions that it shall not cause damage to others.

Where one of H.M.'s ships carries under her bows below water a ram, not ordinarily dangerous to vessels navigating the seas, but dangerous to vessels coming in contact with it, and the officer in charge of H.M.'s ship has under the circumstances reasonable ground for supposing that the ram will occasion damage to another (friendly) ship, and has reasonable means and opportunity of warning the other ship of the danger so as to enable her to avoid it, although the other ship has in the first instance been guilty of negligence, whereby she has occasioned the necessity for giving notice, it is the duty of the officer in charge of H.M.'s ship to give notice to the other ship; but if there is no reasonable ground for apprehending danger, and no reasonable opportunity for giving the notice, there is no obligation to give the notice.

THESE were appeals from decrees of the learned Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, on behalf of the Liverpool, Brazil, and River Plate Steam Navigation Company (Limited), owners of the steamship Flamsteed, and on behalf of the owners of her cargo, the appellants, against the Hon. George Wellesley, C.B., Vice-Admiral in Her Majesty's Navy, commanding the fleet on the North American station, and Richard Wells, Esq., captain of H.M.S. Bellerophon, the respondents, in two causes of damage promoted in that court by the appellants against the respondents.

[Priv. Co.]

H.M.S. BELLEROPHON.

[Priv. Co.]

The cause was instituted on behalf of the present appellants, the owners of the late steamship Flamsteed, and of her cargo, in consequence of the loss of that vessel, which was sunk through being struck by the spur or ram of H.M.S. Bellerophon on the 24th Nov. 1873, in the North Atlantic Ocean, to the north-east of Cape de Verde Islands.

The Flamsteed was a screw steamship of 935 tons net register, and engines of 80 horse-power, and at the time in question was on a voyage from Liverpool to Lisbon, Rio de Janeiro, and other places, laden with a cargo of general merchandize of great value.

H.M.S. Bellerophon is an armour plated iron ship of 4270 tons register, and engines of 1000 nominal-horse-power. She was manned by a crew of 630 men, including several officers and some divers. At the time in question she was bound for Bermuda.

The Bellerophon is of peculiar construction, and carries some feet under water at her stern a large sharp pointed spur or ram projecting some distance from her bows, and expressly designed for striking vessels under water and sinking them in time of war.

The Flamsteed, on the day in question, being in latitude 25deg. 35sec. north, and longitude 20 deg. 51sec. west, sighted the Bellerophon on the port bow some miles distant. The Bellerophon was then under sail on the port tack with royals set. She had her funnel up with smoke issuing from it, but was not actually under steam. Her fires were alight in four boilers. In one they were condensing water, but in the other three the fires were banked low. She made signals to the Flamsteed for newspapers. The Flamsteed acceded to this request by signal, and the master of that vessel having starboarded his helm, came round the Bellerophon, at the distance of about half a mile on her port side, and passing round her stern brought up off the starboard quarter of the Bellerophon, at a distance of from a quarter to half a mile. The Bellerophon at this time was hove-to with her mainyard aback, and she sent off from her starboard quarter a boat to the port side of the Flamsteed. A newspaper was then handed to the officer of the boat, and the master of the Flamsteed made an offer to the officer to tow him towards the Bellerophon. This offer was accepted, and the boat was made fast to the Flamsteed on her port side, the master and crew of the Flamsteed being then in ignorance of the existence of the ram at the bow of the Bellerophon. The Flamsteed accordingly steered towards the starboard side of the Bellerophon. Owing, however, as contended by the appellants, to the Bellerophon having drifted to a great extent, and to her head having paid off to leeward, or, as contended by the respondents, to a miscalculation of his distance on the part of the master of the Flamsteed, that vessel approached so close to the starboard side of the Bellerophon that the spritsail-yard or starboard whisker of the Bellerophon caught the forerigging and afterwards the bridge of the Flamsteed. The Bellerophon's anchor on her port bow then caught the foremost davit of the Flamsteed, tore it off (it fell in to the engine room), and the anchor then caught the aftermost davit and held the Flamsteed for some short appreciable time until the anchor fell to the ring. While the two vessels were so held the master of the Flamsteed ordered his engines to be reversed with a view of going astern of the Bellerophon, and they were accordingly reversed, but the master shortly afterwards decided to go ahead and ordered the engines ahead accordingly, and the Flamsteed passed along the starboard side and ahead of the Bellerophon at a slight angle with the Bellerophon. Neither the Bellerophon's jibboom nor bowsprit were carried away, and it was admitted in the evidence on both sides that the hulls of the two vessels never came in contact. However, when the Flamsteed was passing ahead of the Bellerophon, and when the two vessels were apparently clear of each other the sharp spur point of the Bellerophon's ram struck the Flamsteed 14ft. below the water line under her port quarter, about abreast of the mainmast, making a hole which caused the Flamsteed and the cargo on board her to sink in a few hours afterwards. The remaining facts are stated in the judgment.

It was admitted that those on board the Flamsteed did not know, and had not any reasonable means of knowing, that the Bellerophon was armed with such a spur or ram, or with any spur or ram, and it was contended by the appellants that those on board the Bellerophon could and ought to have given notice or warning to those on board the Flamsteed that the Bellerophon was armed with a ram or spur. No such notice, however, was given.

Had such notice or warning been given, those in charge of the Flamsteed might have kept the engines going astern instead of giving the order that they should go ahead, in which case the damage done by the ram or spur would have been avoided.

The causes were respectively instituted in the Court of Admiralty in the sum of 40,000*l.* to recover for the loss of the Flamsteed, and in the sum of 120,000*l.* to recover for the loss of the cargo.

The causes were heard together before the learned judge of the court below, assisted by Trinity Masters, on 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st Nov. 1874, and on the latter date judgment was given as follows:

Sir R. PHILLIMORE (after stating the facts).—Now it is quite clear that the damage was caused in this case by one of two causes, either by the Flamsteed coming too near under a starboard helm, or by the Bellerophon drifting and paying off, and coming down upon the Flamsteed. I have already stated that the evidence establishes that the Bellerophon did not drift to any appreciable amount, or pay off, or come down in the way that has been described from the Flamsteed, and, in my judgment, as well as that of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, this collision was caused by the Flamsteed not porting in due time, but waiting to port until she had come too near to the starboard side of the Bellerophon. It has been urged upon the court that even if this were so with regard to the first contact, there was contributory negligence on the part of the Bellerophon, inasmuch as she ought then to have warned her not to go ahead because she carried a ram, whereas she omitted to do so, and backed her headyards, which was a sort of invitation to her to go forward, and was the cause of her suffering the injury of the thrust below her water line. Now, one answer appears to the court to be quite sufficient upon this point, and that is—the whole time between the first contact and the second contact was little, if at all, more than one minute, and I cannot at all assent to the proposition of law that it was the duty of the Bellerophon to intimate, either (if the fact were so) that she was a leewardly vessel, or that she carried a ram. It does not appear to me that the law imposes any such obligation upon a vessel in the condition in which she then was. I think it is an extremely unfortunate circumstance that the Flamsteed should, in consequence of an act of courtesy and kindness on her part, have suffered this tremendous loss, to the extent of, it is said, nearly 160,000*l.*; but the court must be on its guard against allowing any consideration of that kind to make it find that there has been contributory negligence on the part of the Bellerophon, unless that is made out by the evidence before it, and I have no such evidence before me. I am, therefore, constrained to say that the Flamsteed has failed in establishing the averments in her petition, and that the Bellerophon is not to blame for the collision in this case.

PRIV. Co.]

H.M.S. BELLEROPHON.

[PRIV. Co.]

From these decrees the appellants appealed for the following amongst other reasons:

1. Because the respondents were guilty of negligence and did not use due care to avoid the collision.

2. Because the fact that the Bellerophon was armed with such a dangerous engine of destruction as the spur or ram, which was covered by water and concealed from view, cast upon those in charge of the Bellerophon the duty of using every possible precaution and taking the utmost care by giving notice or otherwise, to prevent damage occurring from the ram or spur with which the Bellerophon was armed.

Sir Henry James, Q.C. and Arthur Cohen (W. B. Trevelyan with them) for the appellants.—We submit the captain of the Bellerophon was to blame for not putting the master of the Flamsteed in possession of the facts which would have enabled the latter to keep clear without injury. The loss was occasioned by the ram coming in contact with the Flamsteed; that did not occur at the first moment of collision, and at the first contact, but was occasioned by the negligence of the Bellerophon in not giving warning so as to send the steamer astern. Even granting that the first collision was occasioned by the plaintiffs' negligence it was still the duty of the defendants to take all reasonable precautions to avoid accident, and in this case the reasonable precaution would have been to give due notice of the danger ahead. If the owner of property leaves it in such a condition that it is dangerous to other persons, he is bound to give reasonable notice to every person whom it is likely to injure. The obligation to give this notice arises the moment the possibility of danger occurs, and in the present instance as soon as it was seen that the Flamsteed was approaching the hidden danger: (Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald. 304.) [Sir J. W. COLVILLE.—Can it be said that the captain of the Bellerophon was bound to suppose that the Flamsteed would come into collision before the collision occurred, or that she would go anywhere near the ram?] There was the same duty as there is in the case of a sunken vessel or an obstruction in a highway; the person causing the obstruction is bound to give notice.

Broom v. Mallet, 5 C.B. 599;

White v. Crisp, 10 Ex. 312.

Any person giving a carrier dangerous goods to carry without giving notice of their character is liable for any injury done; and so anyone who for his own purposes brings upon his land, and collects and keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape.

Farrant v. Barnes, 31 L.J. 37, C.P.;

Fletcher v. Rylands, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 121; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 523; L. Rep. 1 Ex. 265.

No one has a right to expose a person using a highway to danger. Notice must be given, or liability attaches upon injury received. In the present case there was a dangerous instrument of a novel and unusual construction used upon a highway in such a manner as to be dangerous to other persons, and it could not be seen; it was the duty of those using it to warn other people upon the highway of its existence and dangerous character. We contend that the first contact was occasioned by the negligence of the Bellerophon in paying off too soon, but even supposing that it was caused by the plaintiffs' negligence, that is not an answer to this claim, the only result of such a finding would be that both ships are to blame. There was ample time after the first contact to have given warning of the danger. The obligation not to do injury is absolute.

Bonomi v. Backhouse 9 H. of L. 503; E. B. & E. 622; Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, 29 L. J. 247, Ex.

Bagnall v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 7 H. & N. 423; 31 L. J. 121, 480, Ex.;

Jones v. The Festiniog Railway Company, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 902; L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 733.

Again, there was no such negligence on the part of the Flamsteed as would have occasioned her loss by itself, and the captain of the Bellerophon must have seen that she was running into danger, hence he is alone liable for his negligence in not giving warning: (Radley v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 44 L. J. 73, Ex.) But if there was a breach of any obligation on the part of the Bellerophon, the fact of negligence on the part of the Flamsteed having led to the committing of that breach, though it prevents the Flamsteed from saying that she did not contribute to the result, does not allow the Bellerophon to escape entirely from liability. The Bellerophon was exposing persons using a public highway to unforeseen danger, and she cannot excuse her own negligence by saying that those other persons were also negligent.

The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.), Staveley Hill, Q.C. and H. Stokes, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

Sir HENRY S. KEATING.—In this appeal the appellants were the owners of a steamship called the Flamsteed, and brought their suit in the Admiralty Court in consequence of the loss of that vessel from injuries received by a collision with H.M.S. Bellerophon. The Flamsteed was a screw steamship of 935 tons register, with engines of 30 horse-power, and on the 24th Nov. 1873, the time when this collision took place, was on a voyage from Liverpool to Lisbon and other places. When at sea, about 500 miles from the Cape de Verde Islands, at six or seven a.m., she sighted H.M.S. Bellerophon. The Bellerophon is an armour-plated iron ship of 4220 tons register, with engines of 1000 horse-power. She had the usual crew of such a ship—

[Priv. Co.]

H.M.S. BELLEROPHON.

[Priv. Co.]

indeed, one rather in excess of the usual number, for she had as many as 630 hands on board. She was commanded by Captain Wells, one of the respondents in this case, and was flying the flag of Vice-Admiral Wellesley, who is another respondent, her destination being Bermuda. It appears that the Bellerophon, whose course was lying to the north-west, that of the Flamsteed being south-west-by-south, signalled to the Flamsteed to ask if she could lend a newspaper. The Flamsteed gave an affirmative answer, and accordingly the Bellerophon lowered a boat manned by twelve able seamen, to send for the newspapers. Before the boat pulled off to the Flamsteed, that steamship held on her course; then starboarding her helm as she passed the stern of the Bellerophon, and, still under a starboard helm, came off the starboard quarter of the ship of war, at a distance of about three quarters of a mile. Being in that position the boat pulled up to her, the officer who was with the boat received the newspapers, and then the captain of the Flamsteed appears to have offered to take the boat in tow, and to bring her nearer to the Bellerophon. There was no request upon the part of the officer that this should be done, nor any necessity for doing so. The weather was fine; there was at the time a moderate breeze, with no sea on, but only the usual swell of the Atlantic—indeed, it is said less than the usual swell. There was nothing whatever to prevent the boat from getting back from the Flamsteed to the Bellerophon in the same way that it had reached the Flamsteed. The officer, however, accepted the offer of the captain of the Flamsteed, and the Flamsteed accordingly, with the boat in tow upon her port side, starboarded her helm and proceeded towards the Bellerophon. The evidence here certainly discloses a most remarkable and ill-judged course adopted by the Flamsteed in approaching a ship of war such as the Bellerophon. The Bellerophon, a ship of great size, was hove to under sail; and, it appears from the evidence, that although iron vessels of that class have masting and rigging, this is not for the purpose of rendering them sailing vessels properly so called, because they are made primarily for the purpose of being moved by steam; and that thus the masting of the Bellerophon, as in similar cases, is of a lighter description than that put in sailing vessels which do not move by steam; indeed, Capt. Wells in a portion of his evidence describes the masting as being rather in the nature of jury-masting than ordinary masting. At the time in question the fires of the Bellerophon were banked up; she had no assistance from steam-power, as her screw was disconnected; she was under sail, but close to the wind, hove to; and yet the Flamsteed, having full sea room before her, instead of taking the course which their Lordships are advised would have been proper and natural to have been adopted under such circumstances, namely, to have gone under the stern of the Bellerophon, to have dropped the boat, and proceeded on her course, seems to have steered directly for the Bellerophon amidships, and to have continued on to within 100 yards of that enormous vessel, floating in what was described by the captain to be “a helpless state” upon the water, and unable to make any active exertion whatever, to escape a collision. The Flamsteed, steering in that way, when thus close to the Bellerophon ported her helm, apparently with the idea of performing what at that distance would have been the very nice and perilous manœuvre of passing along her starboard side, and running ahead of her. That manœuvre, it would appear by the evidence, might perhaps have been successfully performed, assuming the Flamsteed to have answered her helm quickly, for having full steam-power upon her she could of course, if she could have kept clear of the Bellerophon, easily run ahead of her. But having adopted the perilous course of coming so close to the ironclad, although she ported her helm, and it is said put it hard-a-port, which it is probable, yet she was unable to keep herself at a sufficient distance, and her rigging became entangled with the whisker, as it is termed, of the ship-of-war—that is, one end of the spritsail yard running out from the bowsprit. Having become thus entangled, she was caught by the anchor of the Bellerophon, and her first motion appears to have been to have backed astern, whilst the captain of the Bellerophon threw his sails aback, which he says was the proper course to pursue, not that it produced a great effect upon his ship, for that it could not have done, but that it was the proper and ordinary course. A suggestion was made that his doing so acted as an invitation to the Flamsteed to go ahead and so approach the danger; but that having been suggested originally was disposed of in the course of the argument, because it was admitted by counsel, and was quite clear upon the evidence, that all the operations on the part of the Flamsteed were wholly independent of anything done by the Bellerophon which would appear, as stated by the captain, to have lain like “a log upon the water.” In the entanglement occasioned by the fouling of the rigging, the painter which upheld the anchor of the Bellerophon gave way, and, the anchor having fallen, the Flamsteed then appears to have forged ahead, and endeavoured to pass in some way in front of the Bellerophon, and in a manner not very intelligible got under her bowsprit, and so close to her stem that, probably from the effect of the swell of the sea, she came in contact with the ram of the Bellerophon, and received the injury in question, which took place 14ft. below the water-line, just abaft the mainmast. It was not made any question in the court below, nor could it have been here, that the injury inflicted upon the Flamsteed proceeded from contact with the ram of the Bellerophon.

Their Lordships do not entertain any doubt, nor, indeed, has it been seriously questioned by the counsel for the appellants, that the collision in the first instance arose from the rash and unseamanlike mode of proceeding on the part of the Flamsteed in approaching the ship of war. So much too close did she bring herself to the Bellerophon, that the men were obliged to jump out of the boat towed at her port side, under the apprehension that she would be swamped. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the collision was caused in the first instance wholly by the fault of the Flamsteed.

But whilst that is not seriously denied upon the part of the Flamsteed, it is yet sought to establish a case of contributory negligence on the part of the Bellerophon, and it is said that this contributory negligence consisted in the omission of an alleged duty on the part of the Bellerophon to give at some period or another of this transaction distinct notice to the Flamsteed that her stem was constructed in a peculiar manner, forming a ram which protruded under the water. It was contended in the court below that there were other points of contributory negligence on the part of the Bellerophon, that the Bellerophon was a ship that drifted to leeward in some unusual way, and that notice of this tendency ought to have been given to the Flamsteed. It was also suggested that she had hoisted her jib and that her head paid off, and that the paying off to leeward partly induced the collision that took place, and brought the Flamsteed more immediately under the bows of the Bellerophon. However, those two points were ultimately abandoned upon the argument before their Lordships, and the only point for their consideration is whether the Bellerophon was guilty of contributory negligence, in omitting to give notice to the Flamsteed that her stem was so constructed that a vessel going close under her bowsprit might sustain damage by reason of this ram. On the part of the appellants, it was said the law requires that wherever persons control and are in possession of a dangerous instrument, which is latent, and which may produce damage to others, they are bound to give notice of the existence of that latent instrument of danger, and therefore that the circumstances in the present case imposed upon the Bellerophon the obligation to give notice of the existence of the ram in her bow. It appears to their Lordships important to consider exactly what the nature of this latent instrument of danger in the bow of the Bellerophon was. It was insisted by the learned counsel, and truly said, that it was intended for the purpose of causing damage to others, and no doubt the ram upon the Bellerophon was for the purpose of being used as an instrument of offence in naval warfare, and would be or might be efficacious for that purpose. But it was not an instrument in itself necessarily dangerous to persons navigating the high seas; on the contrary, except under certain extraordinary and exceptional circumstances, it could produce no danger whatever to any of Her Majesty's subjects or others so navigating. Still, if, being such as it was, and under the circumstances which took place, the captain of the Bellerophon (speaking of him for convenience sake as the person responsible), had under the circumstances reasonable ground for supposing that this ram would occasion danger to the Flamsteed, and had reasonable means and opportunity of warning the Flamsteed of that danger so as to enable her to avoid it, then, although the Flamsteed had in the first instance been guilty of negligence, and even although by her negligence she had occasioned the necessity for giving notice, still their Lordships are of opinion it would have been the duty of the captain of the Bellerophon, or of those in charge of her, to have given that notice to the captain of the Flamsteed. Their Lordships entirely concur in the view that if there be a latent instrument of danger, those who have the control and the possession of it are bound to take all reasonable precautions that it shall not cause damage to others. But they are of opinion that there was no obligation upon the captain of the Bellerophon to give notice of this ram unless there was a reasonable probability of danger to the Flamsteed from the want of notice; and further unless he had a reasonable opportunity of giving such a notice as might have enabled the Flamsteed to avoid the ram.

Many cases have been referred to in support of the proposition as stated by the appellants from which their Lordships do not in any way dissent; but they are unaware of any case which establishes a rule of law which would conflict with that to which reference has been made, namely, that the obligation to give a notice or a warning of danger must arise from the existence of some reasonable probability of danger to the party to whom that notice is to be given, and an opportunity of giving it so as to enable such party to avoid the danger; and applying that rule in the present case, their Lordships, upon the facts, think that there is no ground whatever for saying that at any period of this collision, the captain of the Bellerophon, or those in charge of the Bellerophon, had any reasonable ground to suppose that anyone navigating the Flamsteed would have placed that vessel in a position which would have rendered notice of the existence of the ram necessary to preserve them from danger. When the captain of the Flamsteed was asked in the court below what ought to have been done by the Bellerophon, and when ought the notice to have been given, it was said by the captain at first that it ought to have been given when he was approaching the ironclad, the Flamsteed being then directed amidships; but is it reasonable that their Lordships should suppose upon these facts that the captain of the Bellerophon was to assume that the Flamsteed had any such wild intention as that of almost scraping the starboard side of his ship, so as to become entangled, and thrown across his bows, under his bowsprit and close to his stem? The captain of the Flamsteed himself seems to have thought that at that time there was no danger of his getting so close. After he had said that the notice might have been given to him when he was off the quarter, because "he (the captain of Bellerophon) saw we were going to try to pass to leeward of him," it was observed to him, "He did not think you were coming close to him?" his answer was "No, nor I did not think so either." Therefore it appears perfectly clear that at that period there could have been no obligation arising from any reasonable anticipation of any contact between the Flamsteed and the ram for any notice to be given to the Flamsteed of the existence of that ram.

But it is suggested that at some subsequent time that notice ought to have been given. With reference to that suggestion, it is to be observed that the whole of the transaction described occupied but a very short time. The learned counsel for the appellants observed that Capt. Wells, in putting the time at something over a minute, had understated it. That is possible. The captain of the Flamsteed himself states it at two or three minutes. People do not look at their watches on these occasions so as to estimate accurately the time, but their Lordships think it safe to assume upon the evidence that the whole of this took place in a very short space of time, that it was a continuous act occupying it may be a minute, it may be a minute and a half, or two, or even three minutes, and yet it is suggested that it was to be expected from the captain of the Bellerophon, and that he ought, in the midst of the confusion occasioned by the mismanagement of the Flamsteed, to have anticipated that the Flamsteed would go close across his bows, and that he could and ought then to have given notice.

[CH.]

THE AUSTRALIAN AGRICULTURAL COMPANY v. SAUNDERS.

[EX. CH.]

seems to their Lordships to be a proposition cannot possibly be maintained. Admitting the obligation to give the notice, if there reasonable ground for apprehending danger, if a notice could be given so as to be prove of the effect of averting that danger, yet facts of this case their Lordships come to conclusion that there was no reasonable aid for anticipating any danger to the Flamsteed from the ram, and they are further advised in a nautical point of view there was no aid after the first collision when any notice to Flamsteed would or could have averted the collision accident, and therefore that there was no omission upon the part of the captain of the Bellerophon which would constitute the contributory negligence sought to be established in this one of the cases cited of Vaughan v. The Vale Railway Company (29 L. J. 247, Ex.), Mr. Justice Willes seems, to have laid it very clearly, "Negligence is the absence of more or less according to the circumstances." the circumstances that must regulate the action to give notice, or to do any other act would have the effect of averting danger from those who might otherwise be exposed to it. Lordships, therefore, come to the conclusion this collision in the first place was produced by and entirely by the fault of the Flamsteed, that there was no negligence on the part of the captain in charge of the Bellerophon, at any period of the collision.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment of the High Court of Admiralty, and also this appeal be dismissed with costs to be paid by the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

Counsel for the appellants, Pritchard and Counsel for the respondent, H. G. Stokes, Ady Proctor.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.
Argued by ETHELINGTON SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, June 19, 1875.

JOHN BRAMWELL, B., BLACKBURN, LUSH, and JAMES JAIN, JJ., POLLOCK, and AMPHLETT, BB.)

THE AUSTRALIAN AGRICULTURAL COMPANY
v. SAUNDERS.

The insurance—Fire insurance—Double insurance—"Insured elsewhere"—Construction of policy.
Plaintiffs insured wool against fire with the defendants, "in any shed, or store, or station, or transit to S. by land only, or in any wharf, or store, or on any wharf in S., until landed on board ship." They afterwards entered another policy with another insurance company in these terms: "Lost or not lost at and on the river H. to S. per ship or steamers, thence per ship or steamers to L., including risk of draft, from the time that the wools are waterborne, and of transshipment and landing and reshipment at S." It was a common in the defendants' policy that if the wool was "insured elsewhere," notice of such insurance was to be given to them, otherwise the policy was to be void. No notice of this second policy was given to the defendants by the plaintiffs. The wool was burned while in warehouse at S. where it had been placed for the purpose of storage, and was waiting for reshipment.

The plaintiffs sued on the first policy for the loss of the wool.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas), that they were entitled to recover. That the second policy did not apply to keeping goods on land, but only to marine risks, that these goods were not within the meaning of the words, "transshipment, landing, and reshipment at S." while stored in warehouses there, and that there was therefore no double insurance, and consequently the goods were not "insured elsewhere" so as to make notice of the second policy necessary.

Held also, that by "insured elsewhere" was meant a specific insurance of the same risks, and that the words were not satisfied in the case of different policies upon different policies upon different risks, by the mere possibility of one overlapping the other under some possible circumstances.

This was an appeal from the judgment of Willes and Keating, JJ., sitting as a division of the Court of Common Pleas in favour of the plaintiffs, in an action brought by them on a policy of insurance against the loss by fire of some wool, which was burned while in store at Sydney, in Feb. 1870.

The plaintiffs are large shippers of wool from Australia to London, and most of it is grown up the country and brought down to Sydney for shipment. The wool comes sometimes by land to Sydney, and is thence shipped to England. It sometimes comes down the river Hunter in steamers to Sydney, and is reshipped without being landed; or it is landed from the steamers and placed in warehouses for the purpose of being pressed, and it is frequently stored whilst waiting for shipment. Wool which is to be pressed is taken to the stores of the stevedores of the ship in which it is to be loaded, and is by them pressed and warehoused. Wool received by the stevedores is considered as between the ship and shippers as being in the custody of the ship, and the stevedores charge the pressing and warehousing against the ship. The stevedores give receipts for wool received by them, which are treated by ship and shippers as equal to mates' receipts, and in exchange for them bills of lading are given on demand whether the wool is in store or on board the ship. Wool brought by steamers to Sydney by the river Hunter for shipment to England is usually removed by drays from the wharves, where it is landed from the steamers, to the store of the stevedore appointed to store and press for the ship for which the cargo is intended. At these stores all descriptions of goods are kept for shipment and other purposes, but they are principally used for storing and pressing wool for shipment.

The wool in question came in several steamers by the river Hunter to Sydney, and on being landed was taken possession of by one Moore, as agent for the plaintiffs, and conveyed to his stores to be weighed. Moore engaged a ship to carry the wool to England, and afterwards sent the wool to the stores of the stevedores of the ship, who had received authority from the master to receive wool for shipment by that ship; they received the wool, and gave the usual stevedore's receipts on behalf of the ship. Whilst the wool was in the stevedores' stores waiting for shipment the plaintiffs effected a policy of fire insurance with the defendants in these terms: "On wool in fleeces or bales in any shed or store or station, or in transit to Sydney by land only, or in any shed or store, or on any wharf in Sydney, until placed on board ship." And there was also a provision in clause 5 of the policy that "No claim shall be recoverable if the property insured be previously or subsequently insured elsewhere, unless the particulars of such insurance be notified to the company in writing, provided that upon such notice being given after the issue of the policy, it shall be optional with the company to cancel the same, returning the rateable premium for the unexpired term thereof." In Jan. 1870, the plaintiffs effected a policy of marine insurance in the Indemnity Mutual Insurance Company, as follows: "Lost or not lost at and from the river Hunter to Sydney, per ship or steamers, and thence per ship or steamers to London, including the risk of craft, from the time that the wools are first waterborne, and of transshipment and landing and reshipment at Newcastle and Sydney." No notice of this insurance was given to the defendants' company. After both these insurances had been effected, and while both the policies were in force, viz., on Feb. 9th 1870, a fire took place at the stevedores' stores, and 182 of the plaintiffs' bales were burned. Other bales of the plaintiffs which had been at other stores were afterwards shipped on board the said ship, and bills of lading were given in respect thereof in return for the stevedores' receipts. The carriage of the wool in question down the river Hunter to Sydney was under a distinct contract from the contract for carriage from Sidney to London. The plaintiffs sued the defendants on their fire policy for the loss and obtained judgment in their favour, against which judgment this appeal was brought.

The question raised was whether the first or the second policy applied, and, if the latter, whether the defendants were not relieved from all liability by the operation of clause 5. The court below held that the second policy did not insure the goods on land, but was a marine policy, simply covering, in addition to the perils of the seas, only such risks as arose upon the loading and discharge of the vessels and the necessary transshipment incidental to the voyage.

Manisty, Q.C. (Edwards, Q.C. with him) for the defendants.—The question arises here from the plaintiffs having effected two policies, First, the fire policy with the defendants, and secondly, what may be called the marine policy with the Indemnity Mutual Assurance Company. There being a proviso against double assurance without notice, the first question is, whether the marine policy covered the same risk as the fire policy, because, if it did, then, notice not having been given to the defendants of the second insurance, they are not liable under the provisions of their own policy. It is therefore admitted that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants on the Liverpool policy, unless the marine policy covered the same risk. Looking at the words of the latter policy, it is an insurance which attached when the goods were loaded on craft in the river Hunter, and continued while they were at Sydney, and during transshipment, and during the voyage to London (Pelly v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 1 Burr. 341). [BLACKBURN, J.—The marine policy cannot attach until it is destined for a particular ship.] We contend that the policy attached when the goods were put on the ship in the river, and continued while they were being transshipped at Sydney; and that by the custom and practice, they were then to be considered just as if on board ship. The practice necessitated the temporary warehousing of the wool before loading it again on the ships for England, and the risk when so warehoused is covered by the words of the policy, "transshipment, and landing, and reshipment."

Watkin Williams, Q.C. (J. C. Mathew with him) for the plaintiffs.—The Liverpool policy, it is admitted covers the loss, unless it is taken out of it by the operation of clause 5, which is that if the assured "insured elsewhere," the policy was not to hold good unless notice was given. The plaintiffs' contentions are: First, they were not insured elsewhere; that is, the loss was not covered by the marine policy; secondly, if it were possibly covered, that does not constitute an insurance elsewhere within the meaning of the policy:

Harrison v. Ellis, 7 E. & B. 465;

Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company, ante, vol. 2., p. 100; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 279; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 548.

As to Pelly v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company (ubi sup.), if there had been an affreightment from the river to London, then, perhaps, transshipment being necessary, this warehousing might have been held to be incidental to the transshipment. But the case is different here. They were warehoused for the convenience of the owners, and if the goods were taken to a warehouse for any purpose, not being part of the actual transshipment, then it is contended the marine policy would not apply; secondly, the provision in clause 5 does not apply to cases where the goods are only possibly, but where they are specifically insured. Here even if possibly the policies might overlap, there is no specific insurance, and so the plaintiffs need not have given notice, and when could notice as a question of fact have been given? The clause manifestly points to a similar description of policy to the fire policy, and does not mean a marine policy.

Manisty, Q.C. in reply.—The plaintiffs were bound to give notice, whatever the effect might be; they were, in the words of the clause, "insured elsewhere," and they must give it after the fire if they could not give it before. The real question is, did the marine policy, in fact, cover the risk, and if it did, it matters not whether it did so accidentally or not. Crompton, J. in his judgment in Harrison v. Ellis (ubi sup.), shows that the ground of the judgment is that there would have been in fact a double insurance. So in Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company (ubi sup.), the deviation was held not within the scope of the policy, because the jury had expressly found that the ship was moored in the river for an unreasonable time, and for a particular purpose unconnected with the transit.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed. To begin with, I am very clearly of opinion that no action could be maintained against the underwriters for indemnity on the marine policy in respect of this loss. The words in it are very clear, "Lost or not lost, at and from the river Hunter to

[Ex. Ch.]

THE AUSTRALIAN AGRICULTURAL COMPANY v. SAUNDERS.

[Ex. Ch.]

Sydney, per ship or steamers, and thence per ship or steamers to London, including the risk of craft, from the time that the wools are first waterborne and of transshipment and landing and reshipment at Sydney," that is, including the case where the wools are taken from one ship to another, and where it is necessary to land them for that purpose, and afterwards the risk of reshipping. This, it is quite clear to me, does not include a loss by fire of the goods when warehoused on land, which is no part of landing or transshipment, and it is so clear that one need only read the words themselves to perceive it to be so. But it is said, nevertheless, that the wools were virtually on board the ship at the time of loss, and so within the policy. In point of fact, however, they were not on board ship, nor were they in course of the act of reshipment. I am therefore very clearly of opinion that this particular loss could not be recovered against the underwriters on the marine policy. But then, the assured was not to recover if any other insurance were effected and not notified to the Liverpool company. Now, as far as mere words go, there might here be said to be an insurance elsewhere, but was there in fact? Mr. Manisty says that the words "insure elsewhere" must be an insurance as to the whole or a portion of the risks in the policy sued on. If so, in my opinion, this is not a case of such double insurance, because no action could have been maintained on the Marine Insurance policy in respect of this loss, but the action could be maintained on the policy in question. Then it was said here that there was a possibility of the goods being within the risk covered by both policies. For my part, I doubt whether such a possibility would be sufficient; for to come within the provision, there must be such a double insurance as that the underwriters in the one case would have the benefit of the other. But in my opinion there is no evidence here that the risk in the two policies did overlap one another. It is suggested as the policy on wool to Sydney was in these terms, "on wool in fleeces or bales, in any shed, or store, or station, or in transit to Sydney by land only, or in any shed or store, or on any wharf in Sydney until placed on board ship," that landing and reshipment might involve putting the goods on a wharf, so that while there if a fire occurred, there would be a loss within the scope of the policy. The answer is first, that there is no evidence that there could be such a mode of landing and reshipment as one process, going on as a continuous process in the manner supposed, nor do I believe that it exists; and that being so, the possible case which has been put is therefore a possible case as to which we have no evidence of its possibility in point of fact. Another answer is, that if it were so, the marine policy would cover the loss, and the fire policy would not. It seems, therefore, that the loss by fire is not within the marine policy for the reasons given; and next, although it is possible a case might occur in which the loss might be in both policies, yet first there was no evidence that such could take place at Sydney; and secondly, if it were possible there, it would show that the case was not in the fire policy at all, but in the marine policy, and so in neither case would there be a double insurance.

BLACKBURN, J.—I also think that the judgment below should be affirmed. The fire policy is on "wool in fleeces or bales, in any shed, or store, or station, or in transit to Sydney by land only, or in any shed, or store, or on any wharf in Sydney until placed on board ship." The wool was, in fact, brought to Sydney and stored there, and before it was put on board ship was burnt, and so it is, I think, quite clearly a loss for which the insurers were liable unless they are saved by the 5th clause of the policy, which is to the effect that the policy was to be void if the wool were insured elsewhere without notice given to the insurance company. Now, I think, taking that and the average clause together, that it is clear what is meant, and if the marine policy did insure the goods on shore then the plaintiffs ought to have given notice of the insurance to the defendants, but such a construction of the clause would be too much strained if we were to say this notice was equally necessary if the second insurance was of a different character to the first. It must, I think, have been a second insurance against fire, and I do not think that if there were only an accidental and possible overlapping of the policies, this was contemplated in the words "insured elsewhere." Then arises the question does the marine policy, in fact, cover the goods in the warehouse at Sydney? The facts are that the goods came down the river Hunter to Sydney, and were put in Moore's warehouse there until it was convenient to secure a ship in which to forward them to England. Thence they were sent to the stevedore's warehouse, and there they were burned. They would not prima facie be covered by the marine policy when they were on land, but the words of the policy go on to say "including the risk of transshipment and landing and reshipment at Sydney." Now I do not think that it was a deviation, landing the goods at Sydney, so as to vitiate the insurance on that account, but it is very difficult to say that the underwriters in a marine policy are liable for a fire on shore. It would require evidence of a very strong custom to induce me to think that the goods were just in the same position as if on board ship, and there is none here to establish this contention. I think, therefore, that "insured elsewhere" means specifically insured, and against the same risks and under the same conditions, and at the same time, and not a mere possibility of a wholly different insurance overlapping. For this reason and upon the facts stated, I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed.

LUSH, J.—I also think that the judgment of the court below ought to be affirmed upon the ground that the goods were not insured elsewhere in any other office against fire "in any shed, or store, or station, or on any wharf in Sydney." I do not think any of those events were ever covered by the marine policy. It says: [The learned judge then read the principal clauses.] Now I think this means landing in the course of the voyage as incidental to it merely, and as a means of transshipment which would be necessary from the river craft to the ship. Here, as I understand the facts, the goods came down to Sydney in several instalments, and were stored in warehouses until it was convenient to send them on to London. If so, it was not a landing and reshipment within the meaning of the policy at all, and so this disposes of the contention that the goods were just in the same position as regards the policy as if on board ship. As to the second question it does not arise in my opinion, for the marine policy ceased to be in force from the moment of the goods being landed as described. But I will go further than this, and say that I do not think that a policy which in certain events may possibly overlap the former one is such a one as that the assured would have under the provision in the defendants' policy to give notice of it to the underwriters.

EX. CH.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

QUAIN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the first question is what the risk undertaken by the Indemnity Company was, and I find it to be in the words of the policy of transshipment, landing, and reshipment. Now first, I think that the goods lost were not being transhipped, landed, or re-shipped within the meaning of those words; nor secondly, do the facts found extend it in the present case by reason of any custom. There may perhaps be some customs so notorious as to qualify the plain meaning of words as simple and intelligible as these, but here there is no such notorious custom found to exist in the case. In Lord Mansfield's words, I should define the risk as being that which the insurers knew would arise from the ordinary and known course of trade, and the custom must be one so notorious and universal that it always made it necessary for the particular course to be adopted, which was in fact adopted. Now so far from this being so here, I find in paragraph 7 of the case it is stated that sometimes this is done and sometimes that, and they are not therefore invariable and necessary practices, and consequently do not come within the words of the policy. On the second point I agree with the rest of the court, because I think that what was intended by the 5th clause is a certain definite policy, and not a mere contingent risk. It was not clear that the goods would be landed and warehoused at Sydney, and so this was not in my opinion an insurance elsewhere within the meaning of the condition so as to require notice of it to be given.

POLLOCK, B.—I am of the same opinion. The first question is whether by the marine policy having been effected it can be said that the goods previously covered by the Liverpool policy were then insured elsewhere. I refer to the marine policy itself to see, and I quite agree with what was said by Willes, J., in the court below that it was meant to cover marine risks in a marine transit. It is reasonable to assume that when that was entered into the intention was that the goods should go to England. Then what did actually occur was not something incidental to the marine transit, but something which made a break in the course of the water transit, and put it into the power of the agent at Sydney to send the goods elsewhere. It is true that the goods when burned were in the hands of a stevedore, but then there had been a distinct break in the voyage when they came to be put into his warehouse. Having disposed of that, there is therefore one other point only. If the second policy did chance to overlap the former one, could it be said that the goods were thereby insured elsewhere so as to absolve the defendants altogether? On this point I agree with my brother Bramwell. These conditions had been of late inserted into fire policies with the object of enabling the insurers to know the character of the risk, and that the parties had the real value of the goods insured. But it would manifestly be quite immaterial to the underwriters of a fire policy whether they knew or not that the assured had a wide marine policy also, even if the two policies might possibly in some event overlap. On both grounds I think the judgment ought to be affirmed.

AMPHELETT, B.—I am of the same opinion. On the main point I quite agree with the rest of the court, and will not repeat what they have said. On the second question, if we think that the marine policy did not attach, the second point of the defendants is no longer open because paragraph 21 of the case admitting that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover unless they are deprived of this remedy by means of having effected the marine policy excludes it. That clause could have no operation if they had not insured the risk under the marine policy. But I agree that the plaintiffs had no double remedy, and say further that, in my opinion, in no event could there be one under these policies, or could the policies overlap, because the only event within the marine policy would be a fire happening while the goods were on shore for the express purpose of being re-shipped. But if so the words in the fire policy "on any wharf in Sydney" would not mean this, because the goods would be considered in law as on the ship while they were being so transhipped.

Judgment affirmed.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs: Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

Attorneys for the defendants: Chester, Urquhart, and Co.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Reported by J. F. ASHALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

May 11 and June 1, 1875.

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.(a)

Booty of war—Reference to Admiralty Court—Non-payment of part of booty—Distribution—Jurisdiction.

When the Crown grants to capture booty of war and

(a) This case cannot be called a "maritime law case," but it deals with a subject which is intimately connected with prize law, and turns to some extent upon jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty as a prize court, and it was hence thought desirable to insert it here.

The origin of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty as a prize court is very doubtful. From the reign of Charles II. it has derived its jurisdiction as a prize court entirely from a commission from the Crown issued at the commencement of each war to the Lords of the Admiralty. Whether prior to that reign the court exercised jurisdiction as a right incident to the office of Lord High Admiral and his deputy, there appear to be no documents in existence to show. It seems, however, probable that prize jurisdiction was originally inherent in the office of the Admiral, and that special commissions calling forth the jurisdiction are of comparatively modern institution. Prior to the reign of Elizabeth England was seldom at peace with her neighbours, and, although the wars may not have been of any importance, it appears by the State papers that there were perpetual captures of ships by British vessels; in fact, before there was a regularly established fleet belonging to the Crown, the captains of ships do not seem to have waited for a declaration of war; they seized any foreign vessel where there was a pretext for quarrel. In this state of things the services of the Admiralty Court, or some other tribunal, were constantly called into requisition to decide the question of prize or no prize. The Admiralty Court was not the only tribunal which formerly investigated questions of prize. In A.D. 1343 a British ship having seized and brought in another ship as prize, an order was issued by Edward III. to his Chancellor and council to call the parties before them, inform themselves of the facts, and render complete and speedy justice to the

ADM.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

by order in council made under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 2 refers the claims of all parties whomsoever to the property captured to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, who is to take into considera- tion any capture that may have been made of any property during the operations by any of the claimants and is to make such order as to him shall seem right both in regard to the persons who parties (see Rymer's Fœdera, vol. v., p. 376). Again, in the reign of Henry VI., in the year 1426, a proclamation was issued to all sheriffs of counties, by which it was declared that nothing taken upon the seas in whatever manner was to be distributed, separated, or sold on the sea, or in any port or harbour into which they were brought, but were to be kept entire until the Council of the King, the Chancellor of England, the Admiral of England, or his deputy-general for the time being, should be certified of the above prize, and duly informed if the goods there taken belonged to friends or enemies; and that they (the council, &c.) being certified, should give good and quick attention thereto; that it was a good test whether goods belong to friends or enemies if the persons from whom they are taken were brought to shore and put to ransom or not; and it was directed that persons capturing goods and bringing them ashore without the persons from whom they were captured should be imprisoned until it was known to whom the goods belonged: (Rymer's Fœdera, vol. x., p. 368). These two instances show clearly that at that date the Admiralty Court was not the sole court, and hence it is not probable that a distinct prize commission then existed. This view is again corroborated by the Instructions issued by Henry VIII. to the Admiral on the occasion of the invasion of France in 1512 (see Rymer's Fœdera, vol. xiii., p. 329; Robinson's Collectanea Maritima, p. 1). These instructions greatly consist of extracts from the Black Book of the Admiralty, and would seem to show that the Admiral himself dealt with prizes taken by the fleet, and dealt with them of his inherent right: (see paragraphs 19, 20, 21; the latter two being translations from the Black Book; see Twiss's Black Book of the Admiralty, vol. i., p. 28, sects. 8, 9.) The Black Book itself very clearly indicates the position and powers of the Admiral, and yet no mention there occurs of distinct prize powers. It is pretty clear that in the reign of Elizabeth the Admiralty jurisdiction, both instance and prize, had become pretty well defined, for we find that a commission was issued on Jan. 30, 1585, to two civilians (Dr. Valentine Dale and Dr. Julius Caesar) to execute the Admiralty jurisdiction during the vacancy of the office of Lord High Admiral (see State Papers, Domest. Eliz., vol. cccxxvii., fol. 66; vol. clxxvi.). This commission was not a special prize commission, and, in fact, makes no mention of prize as distinct from any other part of the Admiralty jurisdiction. The war with Spain commenced in 1586, and in 1587 and 1588 the Spanish Armada was prepared and sailed for England; Lord Howard of Effingham was then Lord High Admiral, but there is no trace to be found of any separate prize commission being issued to hear and adjudge prize causes. Between this period and the reign of Charles II., although there are many commissions existing giving power to the High Admiral to will and require the judge of the Admiralty Court to issue letters of marque and others appointing divers persons to hear appeals from the Admiralty Court in prize causes, there is no trace of a separate prize commission, and the ordinary commission of the Lord High Admiral and of the judge makes no mention of prize (see Rymer's Fœdera, vol. xx., pp. 115, 1628; vol. xviii., p. 1032; vol. xix., p. 300). The first trace of any special authority in prize matters is to be found during the Commonwealth, when an Act or ordinance was passed by the Parliament (April 17, 1649, cap. 21) directing that the Admiralty Court should proceed against all captures, taken from persons supporting the King and from foreigners his friends, as lawful prize; and in pursuance of this Act an order was issued in 1650 which is recorded in the Admiralty Registry as "an order of the pretended Parliament in 1650 for the judges of the Admiralty to proceed to the adjudication of the French ships and goods taken by the fleet." Then came the Restoration, and at the commencement of the first war in the reign of Charles II. (with the Dutch in 1664), the office of Lord High Admiral of England and Ireland was in commission, and so far as can now be ascertained no special prize commission was issued. Shortly afterwards James, Duke of York, was created Lord High Admiral of England, Ireland, and Scotland; this is the first instance on record of the appointment of one Lord High Admiral for all three Kingdoms; and in 1672, when the second war in that reign with the Dutch commenced, we find for the first time a special commission issued to the Lord High Admiral authorising him to require the Admiralty Court of England to proceed to the adjudication of prize causes, and this has continued until recent times. The cause of this change, if change there was, was probably to enable the Crown to keep the prize jurisdiction in the hands of the English Admiralty Court, and stop the exercise of that jurisdiction by the Irish and Scotch courts. As the judges of the Admiralty Courts were considered as lieutenants of the admirals, the directing of one only to exercise the prize jurisdiction would have the effect of excluding the others. The Irish and Scotch courts have nevertheless continued to claim to exercise prize jurisdiction, but with little success, as the practical result of these commissions has been to bring all prize causes before the English court. Since 1672 prize commissions have always been issued at the commencement of each war, and the Admiralty Court has not exercised prize jurisdiction until such a commission has been issued. Hence it has come to be generally supposed that the prize jurisdiction is not inherent, but is called forth by the prize commission, and this opinion is expressed by Lord Mansfield in Lindo v. Rodney (Doug. 572); but it must be remembered that that learned judge searched the records whilst they were all in confusion, without indexes, and before the calendars of State papers had come into existence. The opinion that prize jurisdiction was inherent was clearly entertained by the judges of the Vice-Admiralty Courts first created in our West Indian and American colonies, for they claimed to and did exercise this jurisdiction without any special prize commission, and by virtue of the general commission only, which makes no mention of prize. The commissions of these courts were (in A.D. 1801) revoked by order of the King, and new commissions issued withholding the prize jurisdiction, and all Vice-Admiralty Court commissions are now issued in this form. Prize jurisdiction was only given to certain courts, and then only by virtue of a special prize commission issued to the Lords of the Admiralty, and this continues to the present time.

The mode of giving prize jurisdiction has hitherto been as follows:—The Crown first declares war, and an order in council is issued commanding general reprisals, and the seizure of all ships, vessels, and goods belonging to the hostile state or its subjects, or others inhabiting its countries, territories, and the bringing of "the same to judgment in such Court of Admiralty within Her Majesty's dominions, possessions, or colonies, as shall be duly commissioned to take cognisance thereof." And the order continues: "And to that end Her Majesty's Advocate-General, with the Advocate of Her Majesty in her Office of Admiralty, are forthwith to prepare the draft of a commission, and present the same to Her Majesty at this board, authorising the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral to will and require the High Court of Admiralty of England, and the Lieutenant and Judge of the said court, his surrogate and surrogates, as also the several Courts of Admiralty within Her Majesty's dominions, which shall be duly commissioned, to take cognisance of, and judicially proceed upon, all and all manner of captures, seizures, prizes, and reprisals of all ships, vessels, and goods that are or shall be taken, and to hear and determine the same, and according to the course of Admiralty and the law of nations, to adjudge and condemn all such ships, vessels, and goods as shall belong to the" hostile state, &c.; "and they are likewise to prepare and lay before Her Majesty a draft of such instructions as may be proper to be sent to the said several Courts of Admiralty in Her Majesty's dominions, possessions, and colonies for their guidance herein." Such a commission is thereupon prepared thus:—

"V. R.

"VICTORIA, by the grace of God, &c.—
"To our right trusty, &c. (naming the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty) our Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of our United Kingdom

ADM.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

are, and the proportions in which such persons are, entitled to share them . . . reserving, however, to H. M. the right to direct the rates or scale of distribution according to which the property or of Great Britain and Ireland, and dominions thereunto belonging, and to the commissioners for executing that office for the time being, greeting—Whereas, we having taken into consideration the injurious and hostile proceedings of (name of sovereign or state) as set forth in the declaration of this date, issued by our command; and we, therefore, having determined to take such measures as are necessary for vindicating the honour of our crown and for procuring reparation and satisfaction, do by and with the advice of our Privy Council, order that general reprisals be granted against the ships, vessels, and goods of (name of sovereign or state) and of his subjects or others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories, or dominions, so that our fleets and ships shall and may lawfully seize all ships, vessels, and goods belonging to (name of sovereign or state), or to his subjects or others inhabiting within his countries, territories, or dominions, and bring the same to judgment in any of the Courts of Admiralty within our dominions, which shall be duly commissioned. These are therefore to authorise, and we do hereby authorise and enjoin you our said commissioners now and for the time being, and any three or more of you, to will and require our High Court of Admiralty of England and the Lieutenant and Judge of the said court, and his surrogates, and also the several Courts of Admiralty within our dominions which shall be duly commissioned; and they are hereby authorised and required to take cognisance of, and judicially to proceed upon, all and all manner of captures, seizures, prizes, and reprisals of all ships, vessels, and goods already seized and taken, and which hereafter shall be seized and taken, and hear and determine the same, according to the course of Admiralty and the law of nations, and to adjudge and condemn all such ships, vessels, and goods as shall belong to (name of sovereign or state), or to any of his subjects or others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories, or dominions. In witness whereof we have caused our Great Seal of our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to be put and affixed to these presents.

"Given at our Court at _____, the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord 187____, and in the year of our reign."

Thereupon the Lords Commissioners issue their warrant to the High Court of Admiralty in a form similar to the following:—

"By the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

"Her Majesty having been pleased, under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date the _____ day of _____, 187____, to authorise us to the effect following, as by the commission itself herewith sent you to remain of record in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty of England doth more at large appear:—These are in Her Majesty's name and ours to will and require the High Court of Admiralty of England and you, the Lieutenant and Judge of the said court, and your surrogate and surrogates, and you are hereby authorised and required to take cognisance of and to judicially proceed upon all and all manner of captures, seizures, prizes, and reprisals of all ships, vessels, and goods that are or shall be taken, and to hear and determine the same and according to the course of Admiralty and the law of nations to adjudge and condemn all such ships, vessels, and goods as shall belong to the (name of sovereign or state), or his subjects or to any others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories, or dominions which shall be brought before you for trial and condemnation. And for doing so this shall be your warrant.

"Given under our hands and the seal of the Office of Admiralty this _____ day of _____, A.D. 187____.

(Signed)

"A. B.

"C. D.

"To the Right Hon. S. L.,
Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

"By command of their Lordships,

(Signed)

"V. L."

To the Vice-Admiralty Courts selected for prize juris-

the proceeds thereof is to be repaid to the several ranks of the force or forces to which such property may be adjudged, and the court proceeds to adjudge certain claimants entitled to share, and in pursuance thereof sums of money on account of the booty are distributed among the successful claimants; the High Court has no jurisdiction, on the application of the successful claimants, complaining that the Government have refused to pay over and distribute the remainder of the booty, to order that such remainder be brought into the registry of the High Court, and abide the event of the suit; under such an order of reference the High Court has no power of distribution.

THIS was a motion, made to the Court of Admiralty on behalf Major-General Colin Mackenzie, C.B., president of "The Select Prize Committee of the Saugor and Nerbudda Field Force," duly appointed for the protection of the interests of parties entitled to the Banda and Kirwee Booty, and on behalf of others, captors or their representatives, upon the facts stated in the petition set out below, "for an order that the petitioners should have leave to enter appearances as interveners or plaintiffs in the cause or in either character, and further to order that a citation issue from the court calling upon the Most Honourable Robert Arthur Talbot, Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's then present Secretary of State for India in Council to appear and show cause why a monition should not issue against him as Her Majesty's Secretary of State in Council for India from the court monishing him to bring into the registry of this court, the said principal sums claimed by the petitioners (see petition below) and also to account for and to bring into the registry all interest due upon the said principal sums in order that the same might abide the event of this suit."

The petition above-mentioned was, so far as its material, as follows:

1. That in the year 1857 a rebellion broke out in several parts of the territories belonging to the East India Company in India, and amongst others in those parts of their territories known as Central India and Bandelkund for the suppression of which a military force was organised by the Madras Government, and placed by it under the command of the original plaintiff in this cause Lieutenant-General Sir George Cornish Whitlock then brigadier-general.

2. That the said force known as the Saugor and Nerbudda Field Force was composed partly of troops in Her Majesty's service, and partly of troops in the service of the Honourable the East India Company, and was during the year 1858 employed in operations against the Mahratta chiefs of Kirwee which resulted in the capture in that year of their persons at Kirwee and of the towns of Kirwee on the 5th and 6th June respectively with moveable property of very great value.

3. That the said Mahratta chiefs, Narrain Rao, and Madho Rao were representatives of the dynasty of the diction, a similar warrant is issued, the main difference being that a copy only of the commission accompanies it. Upon these warrants the prize jurisdiction has hitherto been, and in the case of Vice-Admiralty Courts still will be, based. In the case of the High Court of Admiralty of England the necessity for the special commission and warrants have been done away with by the Naval Prize Act 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 25), by the 4th section of which it is enacted that "The High Court of Admiralty of England shall have jurisdiction throughout Her Majesty's dominions as a prize court." The jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court is now vested in the High Court of Justice, and prize causes having been within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court, the Admiralty Division will have exclusive cognisance of all prize causes: (See The Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, ss. 16 & 34.)—Ed.

ADM.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

Peishwas being the adopted sons of Maharajah Benaik Rao of Poona, who for a time reigned as Peishwa of the Mahrattas, and who was subsequently settled at Kirwee by the East India Company with the title of Maharajah, and a grant of the surrounding territory. That the said Narrain Rao and Madho Rao after the death of their adoptive father continued to reside in the palace at Kirwee, with a retinue of 200 Sepoys, 25 cavalry, and 4 guns, and were residing there at the time of their capture as aforesaid. That shortly after the breaking out of the Indian rebellion the said Narrain Rao and Madho Rao joined in the said rebellion, and caused themselves to be proclaimed Peishwas of the Mahrattas in India, levied troops, issued proclamations for the collection of revenue and actually collected such revenue in Kirwee, and the surrounding districts, and established themselves, and acted in all respects as independent sovereigns for the space of more than six months previous to their capture.

4. That the said Narrain Rao and Madho Rao were shortly after their capture tried before Frank Otway Mayne, Esquire, C.B., under a Special Act No. 11 of 1857 of the Legislative Council of India, and were by him convicted and sentenced under the said Act as having waged war against the Queen and the Government of India.

5. That at the time of the capture of the said Narrain Rao and Madho Rao, and of Kirwee the said Narrain Rao and Madho Rao were possessed of very considerable moveable property, and that the greater portion of the property captured as hereinbefore mentioned belonged to them, and consisted in part of the following choses in action which form the principal subject of the present application namely:

(1.) A debt due from the East India Company to the said chiefs amounting to 2,560,000 rupees, which sum had been advanced by the said chiefs to the East India Company in 1854 and 1855 on the Public Works Loan, and for which the said East India Company had given the said chiefs by way of acknowledgment and security forty-two promissory notes promising to repay the same, with interest at the rate of 25 per centum per annum, and which notes were in the Calcutta Gazette of the 9th Jan. 1858 notified to have been stopped in the books of the Accountant-General's office on the 7th of that month, as the property of chiefs in open rebellion against the State, and were not dealt with up to the time of the capture of the said chiefs, and are believed to have been destroyed in Kirwee at the time of the capture thereof, there being no trace of their existence from the time of such capture up to the present time.

(2.) A debt due to the said chiefs from the said East India of 2,000,000 rupees being the amount of a further subscription of the said chiefs to the said Public Works Loan in May 1857 for which no notes had been furnished to the said chiefs.

(3.) Certain debts due to the said chiefs from private individuals which were collected after their surrender by the civil officers of the East India Company, and which realised Rs. 119,149 13s. 1p.

(4.) And also of certain jewels belonging to the said chiefs which were sold by the civil officers of the said company, and realised Rs. 12,782 5s.

6. That at the time of the capture of Kirwee and of the said chiefs all prize or booty of war captured in India in operations, in which the forces of Her Majesty took part was the property of the Sovereign, and not of the East India Company, and that the above public debts due to said chiefs are prize or booty of war, and were, in fact, specifically included in a return of all the Banda and Kirwee captured property transmitted by the Secretary to the North-Western Provinces to the Secretary to the India Government on the 11th Nov. 1859.

7. That previously to the said capture the Right Honourable Viscount Canning, as Governor-General of India, published in the Calcutta Gazette, two general orders in relation to booty of war, namely, (1) a general order dated 27th Nov. 1857 sanctioning the appointment of prize agents, and giving instructions as to the interest of the troops in booty captured, of which said general order the court of directors, in a military despatch dated the 31st March 1858, wrote in the following terms which were approved of by the President of the Board of Control. "We concur in the views announced in your general order of the 27th Nov. 1857 on the question of claim on the part of the troops to have granted them as prize the property belonging to the State, and that belonging to private individuals recovered from the mutineers. We also fully approve of your recommendation that property taken by the troops, which is neither claimed on behalf of the State nor claimed, and identified by individuals, who may establish their loyalty should be considered as prize. We shall accordingly as soon as we are informed by you of the necessary particulars, make application to the Crown in the usual form praying a Royal Grant of the same as prize." (2) A general order dated the 29th Jan. 1858, declaring "that all moveable property of the description ordinarily distributable belonging or which might reasonably be presumed to belong, to rebels, or mutineers, and which had been or should be captured by the troops engaged in suppressing the rebellion, might be fairly treated as prize, and that he had recommended the honourable court of the East India Company to adopt the necessary measures for obtaining Her Majesty's sanction to the distribution of the said property accordingly."

8. That after the termination of the said military operations Lieutenant-General Sir George Cornish Whitlock and the other officers and troops forming the Saugor and Nerbudda Force, and Lord Clyde, as Commander-in-Chief in India, with his personal staff in the field at the time of the said captures, applied to have the proceeds of the said booty distributed amongst them, but the officers and troops belonging to other divisions of the army or armies employed in suppressing the mutiny in that part of India, having preferred claims to shares in such prize or booty of war the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury after having given several decisions adverse to the original plaintiff, and those whom he represented on the 8th June 1864, made a minute wherein it is stated that they, the said Lords, had "caused a draft of an order in Council to be prepared, which was read at their Board signifying the pleasure of Her Majesty, that the booty of war captured during the operations for the suppression of the rebellion in Central India, and which had devolved to Her Majesty in virtue of Her prerogative, should be granted to the forces engaged in those operations, and referring the claims of all parties thereto to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty under the authority of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, with directions that he should make such order as to him should seem right."

9. That by an order in Council dated the 10th June 1864, which is the order referred to in the said minute Her Majesty was pleased by the advice of Her Privy Council to refer to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, all claims to the property captured during the aforesaid operations in the terms following—

"Whereas it has been represented to Her Majesty that in the year 1857, a rebellion took place within that part of Her Majesty's East India dominions known as Central India. That land forces consisting of Her Majesty's troops and of troops of the East India Company were for the suppression of the same organised in three columns termed respectively the Central India Field Force, the Saugor and Nerbudda Field Force, and the Rajpootana Field Force under the command respectively of Major-General now General Sir Hugh Rose, G.C.B., Major-General Whitlock, now Lieutenant-General Sir G. C. Whitlock, K.C.B., and Major-General Sir Henry Roberts, since deceased, and that in course of the operations which followed certain property was captured at the places undermentioned, namely, Ihansi, Kalpee, and Gwalior, by the force under the command of the said Sir Hugh Rose, of the estimated value of 490,000 rupees, at Kirwee and Banda, by the force under the command of the said Sir George Whitlock, of the estimated value of 7,000,000 rupees, and at Ahwah Kotah and Buneos, by the force under the command of the said Major-General Sir Henry Roberts of the estimated value of 1,82,000 rupees. And whereas the said property belongs to Her Majesty in right of Her royal prerogative. And whereas Her Majesty has signified her gracious pleasure that the said property, and the proceeds thereof shall be granted to and distributed amongst the forces concerned in the operations above referred to in such manner as may be hereafter determined. And whereas it has been proposed for the consideration of Her Majesty that the said proceeds of such property should be thrown into a common fund, and be distributed equally among the forces under the command of the said Sir Hugh Rose, Sir George Whitlock, and Sir Henry Roberts respectively. And whereas the prize agents of the force under the command of the said Sir George Whitlock have preferred a claim that the said property captured at Kirwee and Banda, should be granted exclusively to the force under the command of the said Sir George Whitlock. And whereas the late General Lord Clyde preferred a claim on behalf of himself and his personal staff, that he and they should participate in the same on the ground that he, as Commander-in-Chief in India, directed the operations which led to the capture thereof. And whereas the said Sir Hugh Rose had preferred a claim that he and the force under his command should also participate in the same on the ground that such force co-operated in the actions or movements of the troops, which led to the capture of the said property. And whereas Major-General Smith has preferred a claim for participation in the same on behalf of himself, and a brigade under his command in the event of the claim of the force under the command of the said Sir Hugh Rose being allowed, the said Major-General Smith stating that the brigade under his command was detached from the before mentioned force under the command of the said Major-General Sir Henry Roberts, and co-operated in the actions or movements of the force under the command of Major-General Sir Hugh Rose. And whereas a claim has also been preferred by Colonel William Middleton, on behalf of himself and a force under his command known as the Futteypore moveable column for a participation in the same property. And whereas other claims may be preferred by or on behalf of the same or other persons to the property or some part thereof captured during the aforesaid operations. And whereas by an Act passed in the 4th year of the reign of Her Majesty entitled 'An Act to improve the practice, and extend the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty of England,' it was enacted that the said High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide all matters and questions concerning booty of war or the distribution thereof, which it shall please Her Majesty by the advice of Her Privy Council to refer to the said court, and in all matters so referred the court shall proceed as in cases of war, and the judgment of the court therein shall be binding upon all parties concerned. And whereas it is Her Majesty's pleasure to refer under the authority of the said recited Act all claims to share in the property captured during the aforesaid operations, and in the proceeds thereof to the judgment of the High Court of Admiralty of England. Now, therefore, Her Majesty is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, that the claims of all parties whomsoever to the property captured during the aforesaid operations, and the proceeds thereof be referred to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, who shall take into consideration if it shall appear to him necessary for the purposes of justice any capture that may have been made of any property during the said operations by any of the claimants, and shall make such order as to him shall seem right both in regard to the persons who are and the proportions, in which such persons are entitled to share therein and to the costs and expenses incurred in relation thereto by the respective claimants, whether before or subsequently to this order, reserving, however, to Her Majesty the right to direct the rates and scale of distribution according to which the said property or the proceeds thereof shall be paid to the several ranks of the force or forces to which such shall be adjudged."

10. That in obedience to and for carrying out the purposes of the reference made by the said order in Council, this suit was instituted, and after a lengthened hearing of the claims therein preferred to share in the said booty, judgment was on the 30th June 1866, delivered by the then judge of this court, whereby he pronounced the personal representatives of the late General Lord Clyde and the officers of his staff personal as well as general, who were in the field at the time were entitled to share in the booty captured at Banda and Kirwee in April and June 1858, and subject to this right he awarded the whole of the said booty to Lieutenant-General Sir George Cornish Whitlock and the force under his command called the Sagar and Nerbudda Field Force, including among the latter the officers and troops under Lieutenant-Colonel Keating and any other troops left by General Whitlock on his march, who, at the time of the capture formed a portion of his division, and were still under his command, and he disallowed all other claims to the said booty.

11. That in conformity with orders issued by the East India Company, all the said prize or booty of war including the sums payable or received on the said public and private debts due to the said chiefs was handed over to or taken possession of or retained by the said East India Company until such time as the same should become distributable as prize amongst the captors, and remained under the custody of or were retained by the said East India Company, until the transfer under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 of the Government of India from the East India Company to Her Majesty the Queen.

12. That upon the said transfer of the Government of India to Her Majesty the Queen the said prize or booty of war, and all the liabilities in respect of the same including the obligation to pay the said public debts, came under the custody and control of or were transferred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, who is liable to account for the same to your petitioners, and those whom they represent as the sole grantees of Her Majesty the Queen of the same.

13. That since the said order of this court of the 30th June 1866, part only of the proceeds of the said prize or booty of war has been paid to the parties entitled thereto or reserved on account of unclaimed shares according to the said judgment of this court, namely, two principal sums with interest due thereon that is to say:—

First, a sum of 5,550,000 rupees specifically named in a Royal Warrant of Distribution (Rs. 4,854,664 15s. 1p. thereof being for principal and the residue for interest due on such principal) which said Warrant of Distribution is dated the 22nd Nov. 1866, reciting amongst other things the captures of the said towns of Banda and Kirwee, and that on the occupation thereof property was captured which had been since duly sold, and the sale proceeds have been realised by the prize agents employed for collecting, selling, and realising the said booty, or have been otherwise realised or are about to be realised amounting, or computed to amount with interest after deducting costs to the sum of 55 lacs 50,000 rupees or thereabouts and reciting the said Order in Council of the 10th June 1864, and the said judgment delivered in this cause on the 30th June 1866, Her Majesty was pleased to grant to Her Secretary of State for India in Council for the time being all the aforesaid booty mentioned to have been captured at or in the said towns of Banda and Kirwee, and the proceeds thereof as aforesaid in trust for the use of the personal representative or representatives of the late Lord Clyde, formerly, Sir Colin Campbell, the Commander-in-Chief, and his staff personal as well as general, who were in the field at the time, and the said Major-General Sir George Cornish Whitlock, and the officers, and men belonging to the forces engaged in the said captures as aforesaid including the troops under Lieutenant-Colonel Keating and any other troops left by General Whitlock on his march, and who, at the time of the captures, formed a portion of his division, and were still under his command such booty and proceeds to be distributed by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, for the time being or by any other person or persons he might appoint in the manner in the said warrant after directed.

Secondly, a sum of Rs. 743,829 1s. 2p., namely, Rs. 523,253 4s. 6p. for principal and Rs. 220,565 12s. 8p. for interest thereon which is not specifically named in the said warrant of distribution, and was not previous to the date thereof comprised in the amended returns made by the India Government of the prize or booty of war to the captors.

14. That in addition to the four several sums claimed and referred to in the 5th paragraph of this petition the following further sums for or in respect of prize or booty of war so granted to the captors as aforesaid by Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen are still due to your petitioners, and those whose interests they represent namely—

(1) Rs. 110,000 in respect of interest on a principal sum of Rs. 532,190 6s. 11p. part of certain moneys by the Indian authorities erroneously severed from and afterwards restored to the prize fund from the 29th July 1858 to the 28th Nov. 1862, which said principal sum was erroneously severed from the prize fund, and appropriated to the purposes of the Indian Government.

(2) A sum estimated at 600,000 rupees in respect of on interest Sonwat rupees 1,465,335 and other prize or

ADM.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

booty of war the conversion of which was delayed by the Government of India.

(3) 45,000 rupees erroneously deducted by the Government of India from the proceeds of the said prize or booty of war on account of auction commission together with interest for the same from the date of such deduction.

15. That since the payments of the said portions of the said booty mentioned in the 12th paragraph of this petition claims have been preferred on behalf of your petitioners, and those whose interests they represent, to Her Majesty's late and present Secretary of State for India in Council for payment of the said remaining sums due in respect of the said booty, and that the justice of such claims has been by the Secretary of State for India in Council at one time admitted in respect of claim No. 2 in the 13th paragraph of this petition mentioned, and partially in respect of the claim of No. 1 in the same paragraph mentioned, but that your petitioners and those whose interests they represent have been unable to obtain payment of either of the said sums from the late or from the present Secretary of State for India, although repeated applications have been made to them for the same.

16. That as to the other sum mentioned in the 13th paragraph, and the sums mentioned in the 5th paragraph of the petition, notwithstanding that the said public and private debts due to the said chiefs were prize or booty of war, and belonged to Her Majesty the Queen by Her Royal prerogative, and not to the East India Company, and notwithstanding that your petitioners, and those whose interests they represent are the sole grantees of the Crown of the said prize or booty of war including the said public and private debts and notwithstanding the said Order in Council of the 10th June 1864, and the said judgment of this Court, Her Majesty's late and present Secretary of State for India in Council have, without title or lawful authority, refused to pay the said sums to the parties entitled thereto and still retain the same.

The petition concluded with a prayer in the terms of the motion, and the facts thereof were substantiated by an affidavit. The section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65 governing the question was as follows:

Sect. 22.—And be it enacted that the said High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide all matters and questions concerning booty of war, or the distribution thereof, which it shall please Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, by the advice of her and their Privy Council, to refer to the judgment of the said court; and in all matters so referred the court shall proceed as in cases of prize of war and the judgment of the court therein shall be binding upon all parties concerned.

Dr. Tristram, Haughton, and Willis Bund, for the petitioners.—By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 22 all questions concerning booty of war referred to this court are to be proceeded with as in cases of prize of war, that is to say maritime prize; and it has always been the practice of this court sitting as a Court of Maritime prize to order the prize money in the possession of any person to be brought into the registry. By the order in council set out in the 9th article of the petition the court is empowered to proceed with the claims there set out, and has accordingly pronounced that certain persons, including the petitioners, are entitled to share in the booty. We now ask the court to enforce that judgment. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Did not the judge by giving that judgment discharge the authority given him by the order in council? Is not the court functus officio? I do not see how I can do anything to enforce the judgment. In maritime prize the money is paid into court no doubt, but in that case the jurisdiction is original and does not arise by statute.] That is true, but the Act giving the jurisdiction over land captures expressly says that the practice shall be that of prize. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In the original judgment (Banda and Kirwee Booty, L. Rep. 1 Adm. & Ecc. 109, 268) it is expressly said that the court has nothing to do with the distribution of the prize.] Nothing to do with the rates or scales in which the amount granted is to be distributed among the several ranks held entitled, but the court has something to do with enforcing the payment to the claimants, irrespective of distribution, of the amounts due to them under the royal grant. The order in council expressly reserves rights as to the scale of distribution, but this is all that is reserved, and consequently the court has jurisdiction in all other matters, and although it is nowhere expressly said that the money may be ordered into the registry, still as the court has full control over the case, it follows that it must have power over the proceeds of the booty, and can take the necessary steps to enforce the payment. In the Capture of Chinsurah (1 Acton's Rep. 179), where there was a capture of a town by sea and land forces, an order was made to bring the money into the registry, and it was brought in. The court might in the first instance have ordered all the money, the proceeds of this booty, to have been brought into court if in the hands of persons where it was not safe. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In the present case the order in council gives no power over the question of quantum, but you contend that my jurisdiction arises out of the statute. Do you say that any person has been refused his share, or only that enough has not been distributed?] We submit that the award has only been partially carried out; certain persons have not had enough; as soon as Her Majesty signified that the amount captured was to go to the troops, and directed that it should be distributed, the petitioners became entitled to their proportion of the whole, but the whole has not been distributed. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The order in council refers the question to this court to pronounce, not the amount but who were the rightful claimants. You do not come here to enforce your judgment on the latter point, but upon the ground that the admittedly rightful claimants have not received a certain sum of money. The court could enforce its judgment if anyone disputed your right to share, but has it any jurisdiction to compel payment of any specific sum?] The jurisdiction springs from the statutes, and is to be exercised as in cases of prize. If the court refuses the motion it is laying down that it has no power to enforce the judgment. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—No, I can enforce the judgment in respect to the matters referred to the court, but not outside them.] By 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 2, booty of war, which formerly, even after gift by the Sovereign, could be recalled (Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2 Russ. & M. 35), now becomes irrevocably the property of the grantees after grant by the Crown. The grantees acquire a legal right to the booty, and this is the tribunal in which their rights are enforced. If we have a right and have suffered a wrong in respect thereof, we have a remedy. This court has seisin of the cause, and therefore jurisdiction over the subject matter, and can give the remedy. The only reservation in the order in council is as to the distribution. The grant was of the booty of war captured and we say we have only had part of it; we do not ask the court to distribute it, but to take measures to enforce its payment to the parties entitled; the rate of distribution and the mode of it we do not ask the court to interfere with. It is well settled that once the prize court has decided prize or no prize it has power to enforce its judgment;

ADM.]

BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

[ADM.]

(Lord Camden v. Home, 4 T. Rep. 382) and that is all we ask. If there had been no payment at all after the original decree, the court could clearly have ordered payment; and refusal to pay would have been a contempt of this court which had held certain persons entitled to payment. If then the court could have ordered payment of the whole, it can order payment of part; that is to say of the balance in the hands of the Secretary of State. In maritime prize cases this court proceeds by virtue of a commission issued to the Lords of the Admiralty authorising them to will and require this court, and the judge thereof, to take cognisance of, and judicially proceed upon all manner of captures, &c., and to hear and determine the same, and according to the course of Admiralty, and the law of nations, to adjudge and condemn all such ships, &c. This court has been given jurisdiction over booty, and it is to proceed as in cases of maritime prize. By the course of Admiralty in maritime prize the court has power to order into the registry the proceeds of the captures, &c. Hence in a case of booty it must have a similar power.

Our. adv. vult.

June 1, 1875.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an application to the court on behalf of Major-General Mackenzie and other persons interested in the distribution of the Banda and Kirwee Booty, to be at liberty to enter an appearance as plaintiffs or interveners in this matter in this court, and further to order a citation to issue to the Marquis of Salisbury Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, requiring him to enter an appearance, and to show cause why a monition should not issue against him to bring into court certain sums of money, and also the interest due upon these sums.

This application is founded upon a petition supported by an affidavit of the Rev. Alfred Kinloch, late chaplain in the Madras Army, which captured the booty, who appears to have taken an active part in the assertion and maintenance of the claims of the captors of whom he has been the agent. Various documents are appended to this affidavit. The petition sets forth the breaking out of the rebellion in India in 1857. The capture of the Mahratta chiefs and of the Town of Kirwee in 1858, and that at the time these chiefs "were possessed of"—I cite the words of the petition—"very considerable moveable property, and that the greater portion of the property captured as hereinbefore mentioned belonged to them, and consisted in part of the following choses in actions which form the principal subject of the present application, namely:" [His Lordship here read the description of the property in question as set out in the 5th paragraph of the petition.] The petition further sets forth the following order in council. [His Lordship here read the order in council as set out in the 9th article of the petition.] The petition then states the institution of the suit, and the judgment of the court on the 30th June 1866, whereby the judge "pronounced the personal representatives of the late General Lord Clyde and the officers of his staff personal as well as general, who were in the field at the time, were entitled to share in the booty captured at Banda and Kirwee in April and June 1858, and subject to this right he awarded the whole of the said booty to Lieutenant-General Sir George Cornish Whitlock and the force under his command called the Saugor and Nerbudda field force, including among the latter the officers and troops under Lieutenant-Colonel Keating, and any other troops left by General Whitlock on his march, who at the time of the capture formed a portion of his division, and were still under command, and he disallowed all other claims to the said booty:" (See L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 109). The petition then proceeds to complain that since the order of the court a part only of the proceeds of the booty has been paid, and sets forth what that part is. The part alleged to be unpaid consists of the property of the Mahratta chiefs already referred to and in addition the following sums of rupees. [His Lordship then read the description of the further sums claimed as given in the 14th paragraph of the petition.] The petition further states that applications have been made to Her Majesty's late and present Secretary of State for India in Council, in whom, since the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 transferring the Government of India from the East India Company to Her Majesty, the property has become vested, and that such applications have been refused.

I have thought it necessary to state the petition at some length as the question of law which it raises is very important, and I believe quite novel. The petitioners contend that inasmuch as the Crown referred the question of booty under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65 to the High Court of Admiralty by the order in council, which I have stated, the court has, therefore, jurisdiction to enforce its decree of the 30th June 1866, and for this object to order the portion of the booty which it is alleged has not been paid in conformity with the decree, to be brought into court, and to direct its proper distribution according to that decree. It has been argued that this is the course which the court would pursue in the case of maritime prize, and that the court has the same jurisdiction by the statute in question of military booty. It has been further argued that the refusal of the Secretary of State to pay these sums of money to the claimants, amounts to an annulment pro tanto of the decree of the court, and that the court once legally seised of the case must have full power to enforce its decree. There is much that is plausible in this argument, and I have taken some time to consider it.

The first thing to bear in mind is that this court has no original jurisdiction in matters of booty of war, and that its jurisdiction is derived exclusively from the joint operation of the statute and the order in council. The words of the statute (3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 22) are, "And be it enacted that the said High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide all matters and questions concerning booty of war or the distribution thereof which it shall please her Majesty, her heirs, and successors by the advice of her, and their Privy Council to refer to the judgment of the said court. And in all matters so referred the court shall proceed as in cases of prize of war, and the judgment of the court therein shall be binding upon all parties concerned." I must, therefore, consider what is the matter and question which it pleased Her Majesty to refer to the court.

The order in council, already stated at length, empowers the judge to determine, first, who are the persons entitled to share in the booty; secondly, the proportions in which they are to share, and, thirdly, the questions of costs and expenses. These then are the only subjects over which the court had jurisdiction, and it is not complained that the decision of the court upon any of these points has been disregarded by those in whom the custody of the booty is vested. It might have pleased Her Majesty, or it may please Her Majesty, to refer to the court the further questions as to the amount of the booty, and what are the constituent parts of it, but until the court has this jurisdiction given it, it cannot, I think, by any legitimate construction of the existing order in council, exercise such jurisdiction.

[ADM.]

THE ZETA.

[ADM.]

I have not failed to notice the argument arising from the reservation to Her Majesty in the order to direct the rates or scales of distribution. But I think it would be stretching the doctrine of inferring admission of one thing from exclusion of another far beyond its proper limits, if I were to construe the order as having given the jurisdiction which is contended for.

Being, therefore, not satisfied by the argument on this ex parte application that I have jurisdiction, I think it would be wrong to call upon the Secretary of State to enter an appearance, and show cause against this motion and I decline to do so.

Solicitor for the petitioners, Woodfall.

Friday, July 30, 1875.

THE ZETA.

Salvage—Barge adrift in the Thames—Derelict—Surrender to receiver of wreck—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), sect. 450.

A laden barge accidentally breaking loose from her moorings in the river Thames, and drifting about with no one on board, is not derelict, and consequently not "wreck" within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), and persons finding her and mooring her in safety are not precluded from recovering salvage for so doing by reason of their neglecting to comply with the provisions of the 450th section of the above Act, and to deliver the barge to the receiver of wreck.

This was an appeal from the City of London Court (Admiralty Jurisdiction). The parties stated the following case on appeal:

1. This a cause of salvage instituted in the City of London Court, on the 3rd April 1875, on behalf of Alfred Waller and Joseph Chapman, of Blackwall, in the county of Middlesex, against Richard Cory, Henry James Cory, Francis Wright, and John Cory Havers, of Commercial-road, Lambeth, in the county of Surrey, owners of the barge Zeta, and the cargo laden on board her, in the sum of 50*l*.

2. The plaintiffs are both licensed watermen, and the defendants are the members of the firm of William Cory and Son, coal merchants and barge owners.

3. The plaintiffs' case, as stated by counsel on the hearing of the cause, was that between twelve and one o'clock on the 18th March 1875, the plaintiffs, who were in their boat, near the West India Dock, in the river Thames, observed a barge (which proved to be the Zeta) adrift near the north shore. The plaintiffs rowed towards her, and boarded her between West India Dock and Blackwall Stairs. On getting on board they found that the Zeta was laden with about fifty tons of coal, drifting with no person on board, the head fast rope appearing to have parted.

4. That the plaintiffs succeeded in bringing the Zeta up at a causeway about 6ft. wide, and subsequently moored at the Northumberland Coal Wharf, and subsequently the defendants' servants took charge of her there. For the above services the suit was instituted. The value of the said barge is estimated at 150*l*, and her cargo at about 48*l*.

11. The plaintiffs sent in a claim to the defendants for salvage, but the defendants denied any liability in respect of any claim in the nature of salvage.

12. On the 22nd April 1875 the case came on for hearing in the said court, before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, and on hearing counsel for the plaintiffs (who stated the facts as above set out, and without hearing any witnesses for either side, or counsel for the defendants), the learned commissioner was of opinion that, even assuming that the plaintiffs had earned or become entitled to any salvage reward (which was not admitted by the defendants), they had forfeited any claim thereto, by not taking and delivering the Zeta to the receiver of wreck (according to the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 450).

13. The plaintiffs contended that the section of the said Act did not apply.

14. The learned commissioner ruled that the section of the said Act applied, and that the plaintiffs had forfeited their claim to salvage by not complying with the provisions of the said section, and therefore dismissed the suit.

15. The question for the opinion of the High Court of Admiralty is whether (on the above facts) the learned commissioner was right in ruling that sect. 450 of the Merchant Shipping Act applied, and that the plaintiffs had forfeited their claim to salvage by not complying with the provisions of the said section.

If the court should be of opinion in the affirmative the appeal is to be dismissed with costs.

If the court should be of opinion in the negative, then this case is to be remitted to the City of London court for hearing, and the costs of this appeal are to abide the event.

W. G. F. Phillimore, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) enacts that "The following rules shall be observed by any person finding or taking possession of wreck within the United Kingdom (that is to say) . . . (2) If any person not being the owner finds or takes possession of any wreck, he shall as soon as possible deliver the same to such receiver as aforesaid; and any person making default in obeying the provisions of this section shall incur the following penalties (that is to say) . . . (4) If he is not the owner, and makes default in performing the several things, the performance of which is hereby imposed on any person not being an owner, he shall forfeit all claim to salvage; he shall pay to the owner of such wreck if the same is claimed, but if the same is unclaimed, then to the person entitled to such unclaimed wreck, double the value of such wreck, &c." Now, even supposing that this barge and her cargo are to be treated as wreck, I submit that the section does not apply to a case where the owner comes in and claims the property. A delivery up to the owner is enough, and the object of the statute is merely to secure the return of the property to the owner, and to provide against fraud on the part of the salvors. An owner ever is bound to give notice of the recovery of wreck; this is part of the public policy which protects the rights of the Crown and owners against all chance of fraud. The restoring of property to its lawful owners has frequently been commended in this court, and masters have not unfrequently suffered for their neglect to do so: (The Champion, Bro. and Lush, 69.) It is, no doubt, the duty of a salvor to keep a derelict whose owners do not appear, and deliver her up to the receiver of wreck, but delivery to her owners answers the same purpose. But, secondly, I contend that this is not "wreck" at all. The word "wreck" implies something damaged and abandoned, such as a derelict, but this vessel had never been abandoned, sine spe recuperandi. In fact, she had evidently broken loose from her moorings, and she was wholly uninjured. There was no intention of abandoning her at all.

ADM]

Re WHITWORTH AND CO.; Ex parte BLACKBURN; Ex parte GIBBES AND CO.

[BANK.]

The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 37;

The Clarisse, Swab. 129, 130.

There is here no element of wreck or derelict. [He was then stopped by the court.]

R. E. Webster, for the respondents (defendants).—By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 2, "Wreck shall include jetsam, flotsam, lagan, and derelict found in or on the shores of the sea or any tidal water." The object of this sect. 450 is to prevent goods which are floating about not in anyone's charge, from getting into wrong hands; it is intended to protect salved property. No case that has been cited touches the question, because this point has not been raised. The section must apply to such a case as this, or it has no meaning. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—How is this wreck; it is not jetsam, flotsam, or lagan; can you call it derelict?] "Derelict" under the Merchant Shipping Act must be taken to have a larger meaning than that usually applied to it in this court; it includes every vessel floating about in tidal waters not in charge of her crew or other persons.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I am of opinion that the 450th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 154) does not apply to a case of this kind. Here is a barge near the West India Dock, in the river Thames; she gets adrift near the shore, and I think it is clear that though she was at one time moored, the rope must have parted. She was laden with coal. It appears to me that it would be quite wrong and improper to put upon this clause such a construction as is contended for, and to hold that this barge was "wreck" within the sense of the interpretation clause and of the statute, namely, that it was either jetsam, flotsam, lagan, or derelict. The term derelict means that a vessel has been left sine spe recuperandi and sine animo revertendi, and I adhere to what I said in The Clarisse (Swab. 129, 130); and I entirely agree in that which was said by that great master of maritime law, Lord Stowell, in regard to derelicts, in the case of The Aquila (1 C. Rob. 37). But I think it would be right that I should express my opinion on the other point, which is the real point in the case, on the construction of the statute. I do not consider that the section was intended to apply to salvors who have found a derelict, and have restored it to its owners. I cannot conceive that such a construction can be put upon the Act as this; namely, that though they have restored the derelict vessel to her owners, which, according to the principles of maritime law, it was their duty to, they are liable to pay, nevertheless, double the value to the owners, and perhaps a penalty of 100l., for what is called an improper detention. This is a penal clause in the statute, and is intended to apply to a criminal and improper detention, whereby it is sought to practise a fraud upon the Crown or the owner, but not to apply to cases of this description. I think it unnecessary to make any further remarks upon that point, and I send this case back again to the learned judge of the court below for trial.

Solicitors for the appellant, Lowless and Co.

Solicitor for the respondent, J. A. Farnfield.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by A. A. DORIA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the CHIEF JUDGE.)

Monday, Nov. 8, 1875.

Re WHITWORTH AND CO.; Ex parte BLACKBURN;
Ex parte GIBBES AND CO.

Vendor and purchaser—Bill of lading—Bill of exchange—Handing over shipping documents—Ultimate destination—Bankruptcy of purchaser—Stoppage in transitu—Constructive delivery—Carriers' lien.

G. and Co., merchants in America, shipped a number of bales of cotton to Liverpool "consigned to order, for account and risk of W. and Co. of Luddenden Foot." At the same time G. and Co. sent to B. and Co., their agents at Liverpool, the shipping documents and a bill drawn by G. and Co. for W. and Co.'s acceptance. On W. and Co. accepting the bill, B. and Co. handed to them the shipping documents, and by their direction delivered the cotton to the L. Railway Company to be forwarded to Luddenden Foot, but, before the whole of the cotton was delivered there, W. and Co. filed a petition for liquidation. G. and Co. thereupon claimed the right of stoppage in transitu over the remainder of the cotton.

Held, that by the terms of the contract between the parties, Liverpool was the place of destination for the cotton, and that the transaction between them was completed when W. and Co. accepted the bill drawn against the consignment, and the shipping documents were handed over to him.

At Luddenden Foot there was a railway siding constructed on the property of the company, but kept in repair at the expense of W. and Co., for whose sole use and convenience it was made. When trucks containing bales of cotton reached Luddenden Foot, they were generally placed on the siding, and thence conveyed across the main line of the railway to the mill of W. and Co. on the other side. Such of the above mentioned bales of cotton as reached Luddenden Foot prior to the filing of the liquidation petition were, with the exception of one truck load, which remained on the general siding of the company, placed on the railway siding. Others were immediately taken across to the mill and manufactured, the rest remaining upon the siding. Other portions of the cotton reached Luddenden Foot after the date of the liquidation petition.

Held, assuming that Liverpool was not the destination of the cotton, that the cotton which was placed upon the railway siding at Luddenden Foot, had reached its ultimate destination; and further, that, under the circumstances, the delivery

BANK.]

Re WHITWORTH AND CO.; Ex parte BLACKBURN; Ex parte GIBBES AND CO.

[BANK.]

of part of the cotton was a constructive delivery of the whole.

THESE were two appeals from an order made on the 8th June 1875, by the judge of the County Court at Halifax.

For many years prior to the 17th of April 1875, Gibbes and Co., of Charleston, U.S.A., cotton growers, were in the habit of consigning to Whitworth and Co., cotton spinners, of Boy Mill, at Luddenden Foot, near Halifax, large quantities of cotton to be used by them for the purposes of their trade. The course of dealing between the parties was that Gibbes and Co., from time to time forwarded the cotton purchased of them to Liverpool, consigned to the order of Whitworth and Co. Simultaneously with the shipment of the cotton Gibbes and Co. drew upon Whitworth and Co. for the amount of the consignment, bills payable sixty days after sight, and forwarded the same for acceptance, together with the bill of lading, to Brown, Shipley, and Co., the agents at Liverpool of Gibbes and Co. Brown, Shipley, and Co., transmitted the draft to Whitworth and Co. for their acceptance, which being done and returned, Brown, Shipley, and Co. forwarded the bill of lading to Whitworth and Co., and they, having indorsed it, sent it to a Mr. Wintle, the manager of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company at the North Docks Station, Liverpool, where the cotton lay, with cash sufficient to defray the charges for the sea freight. The railway company thereupon paid the charges, took possession of the cotton, and forwarded it by their own line from the North Docks station to Luddenden Foot, for which service the railway company became entitled to a further payment from Whitworth and Co. Sometimes, however, the railway company advanced the charges for the sea freight without waiting for a remittance from Whitworth and Co., and forwarded the cotton so obtained to Luddenden Foot, and delivered it to Whitworth and Co., debiting them with the charges and further costs of carriage. Whitworth and Co. were large customers of the railway company, and in the case of cotton consigned to the firm the trucks containing the same were, on arrival at Luddenden Foot, placed by the servants of the railway company sometimes on one or other of the general sidings of the company in the station yard, and sometimes on a siding called the "Whitworth Siding," of which the following is a description: "Boy Mill is situated at the south end of the railway station at Luddenden Foot, and adjoining to the main line of railway, and on the other side of the railway opposite to Boy Mill, and, connected with the main line by points in the ordinary way, is the Whitworth Siding which is connected by a turn-table and cross lines of rails with the interior of Boy Mill. This latter siding contains standing room for about twenty goods' trucks of ordinary construction. The soil upon which it stands is the property of the railway company, but was originally formed and afterwards kept in repair by the railway company, at the expense and for the sole and exclusive use of Whitworth and Co. Upon this siding a notice board was placed by the railway company, and bearing in large letters the words "Whitworth Siding." The siding is protected at each end by blocks in the ordinary way, and except when trucks are being shunted on to, or taken off the siding, from, or on to the main line, the blocks are invariably kept closed and secured by padlocks." But, wherever the trucks of cotton were placed, no advice notes were ever issued to Whitworth and Co., but down to the 18th April 1875, the firm was allowed to take and remove the goods, subject only to the necessary precautions for crossing the main line at their absolute discretion, without freight being required, on, or before delivery, as they kept a ledger account of freight with the railway company."

In March 1874, Gibbes and Co. under their general contract dispatched by the Republic steamer from New York seventy-two bales of cotton, "to be shipped to Liverpool, consigned to order, for account and risk of Whitworth and Co., Luddenden Foot." In due course the invoice, together with a bill of exchange, drawn by Gibbes and Co., for 1047l. 19s., was on the 6th April received by Whitworth and Co. for acceptance. This being done, the bill was returned to Brown, Shipley, and Co., who thereupon forwarded the bill of lading to Gibbes and Co. Gibbes and Co. then endorsed the bill of lading to Mr. Wintle, with instructions to send the cotton to Luddenden Foot.

On the 11th and 15th April, the bales, ex Republic, reached Luddenden Foot, and upon their arrival thirty-three of them were immediately taken into the mill and manufactured. Of the remaining thirty-nine, twenty, which were in one of the company's trucks, No. 3166, were placed on the Whitworth Siding, and the other nineteen, in truck No. 1260, remained on the railway company's general siding.

On the 13th April Whitworth and Co. in like manner received a similar invoice and a bill for 1079l. 16s. 9d., in respect of seventy-two bales of cotton shipped per Celtic, which were in due course forwarded to Luddenden Foot. This cotton was similarly disposed of, thirty-three bales being on the 19th April taken into the mill and manufactured, twenty being left in truck No. 11,695, on the company's sidings, and the remaining nineteen, in truck No. 7524, reached Luddenden Foot Station on the 21st.

On the 17th April 1874, Whitworth and Co. filed a petition for liquidation. At the general meeting held on the 8th May the creditors resolved upon a liquidation by arrangement, and appointed H. Blackburn trustee.

On the 18th April the railway company, having notice of the petition, removed the truck No. 3166 on to their lines, and claimed a general carriers' lien for unpaid freight on the four trucks of cotton in their possession.

On the 21st April Ernest Schott, the Manchester agent of Gibbes and Co., gave notice to the railway company that he claimed on behalf of his principals the thirty-nine bales ex Celtic and the thirty-nine ex Republic, which were in the four trucks at Luddenden Foot station.

On the 27th April 1874, Gibbes and Co. applied for an order that, by their notice of the 21st, they had well and effectually exercised their right as unpaid vendors to stop in transitu the bales of cotton which remained in the possession of the railway company. By an arrangement between the parties the bales in dispute were sold, and the proceeds, amounting to 1220l., paid into the bank to abide the result of the application.

On the 8th June 1875, the County Court Judge being of opinion that the ultimate destination of the cotton was Luddenden Foot station, and that the right to stoppage in transitu had been rightly exercised as to the thirty-nine bales as Celtic, ordered and declared that Gibbs and Co. were entitled to so much of the sum paid into the Bradford Bank as represented the bales as Celtic, and that the trustee under the liquidation was entitled to the residue of the said sum, being the amount which represented the thirty-nine bales as Republic.

[BANK.] Re WHITWORTH AND CO.; Ex parte BLACKBURN; Ex parte GIBBS AND CO. [BANK.]

Against so much of this order as related to the bales shipped as Republic Gibbs and Co. appealed, and the trustee appealed against so much thereof as related to those shipped as Celtic. The two appeals now came on for hearing together.

Benjamin, Q.C. and Jordan, for the trustees, contended: (1) That the cotton upon its arrival at Liverpool had reached the destination contemplated by the vendors, where it would await the further orders of the purchaser, and consequently that the transitus then ceased, the rule being that when goods arrived at the place where they are to remain, to the order and disposition of the purchaser, then, although they have not reached their ultimate destination, the transitus is ended: (Wentworth v. Outhwaite, 10 M. & W. 449.) (2) That, assuming the right of stoppage in transitu to continue until the cotton reached Luddenden Foot, then such of the bales as had been placed on the "Whitworth Siding" had reached their ultimate destination, and that thereby there had been such a delivery of part as was equivalent to a constructive delivery of the whole. They cited

Cowenry v. Gladstone, L. Rep. 6 Eq. 40;

Crawshaw v. Kader, 1 B. & C. 185;

Bellon v. Lancashire Railway Company, L. Rep.

1 C. P. 481; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769.

(3) That the lien for freight claimed by the railway company had nothing whatever to do with the question. That the company could not put an end to the contract existing between them and Whitworth at their own volition without notice to Whitworth or his trustee, and that, even if they could, it would not affect the pre-existing rights of their persons.

Allen v. Grippes, 2 C. & J. 218.

De Gex, Q.C. and Finlay Knight, for Gibbs and Co., argued contra, that the real transitus never commenced until the goods reached Liverpool, because the real consignees of the cotton were Brown, Shipley, and Co., who received it as the agents there of Gibbs and Co., and did not part with it until the bills of exchange had been duly accepted; consequently, the cotton was in the possession of the vendors, or their agents until delivered to the railway company to be conveyed to Luddenden Foot, and that, therefore, the right to stop it arose and continued until the cotton reached its ultimate destination, which was not "Whitworth's Siding," but Boy Mill, on the other side of the line; and that the railway company were carriers, not warehousemen, and that their course of dealing with Whitworth precluded them from setting up the lien which they claimed. They cited

Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 518;

Fisher v. Humphrey, 4 Bing. 516;

Burdett v. Shang, L. Rep. 4 Eq. 402; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 383.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—In my opinion, the case is reasonably clear, although the several arguments before me appear to have had considerable weight with the learned County Court Judge.

The question is one of most ordinary occurrence. Merchants, the owners of the cotton, at Charleston, agree to send shipments to Liverpool, and nowhere else. They send them from Charlestown by two vessels for transshipment, and they are to be paid for by an acceptance of Whitworth and Co. The vendors send their bills of exchange to Brown, Shipley, and Co., in order that they may present the bills for acceptance, and at the same time they accompany the bills with shipping documents, and upon the acceptance of the bills the shipping documents are given up. The title to the delivery and possession of the goods is transferred by means of the bills of lading. The destination of the goods was Liverpool. If anything had happened upon the voyage there would have been a right to stop them in transitu. At the place which the vendors prescribe as the destination of the goods the goods arrive, and the transitus is at an end. The vendees, the persons at whose risk and upon whose account the goods were to be so shipped, had no right to claim them unless they were, as they became by the act of the agent of the vendors, fully authorised to act for them on his own part, the absolute owners of the goods, which were thus sold and delivered. They were paid for by means of bills, which I am quite aware are not good bills by reason of the subsequent failure, but which was the very manner stipulated for between the vendors and the purchaser, and when the goods arrived at Liverpool the purchaser acquired a right, by the fact of his having accepted the bills and performed the condition, to demand from the ship's master the delivery to him of those goods, and he exercised that right.

To what use, then, is the whole of the argument that there remained a transitus after that? How is it possible to say that the transitus then commenced? If the place of destination had not been reached, then all that Mr. De Gex has said to me about a special or general carrier might have applied, but that is not the present case at all. When Mr. Wintle, the agent for Whitworth and Co., paid the sea charges, which he did on Whitworth and Co.'s account, he became holder of the bills of lading for Whitworth, and the goods were delivered to him in that character, and there was an end of the transitus. The transitus that takes place after that is only prescribed by the purchaser, the vendors had nothing to do with it. The vendors' transitus was at an end, and it is in vain to read cases, in which a ship, being chartered for London, the goods are not delivered from the ship until the vendor exercises his right, or, being chartered for London the ship is stopped at Copenhagen. All these are familiar instances of stoppage in transitu. What can that have to do with the case when it is a case of bargain and sale of goods to be delivered on the wharf at Liverpool upon certain conditions being complied with? The conditions are complied with, the delivery takes place, and the transitus is at an end, and the right at law to stop the goods after that never existed. If the facts were otherwise there would apparently be a great deal to be said; but I will not go into that.

Upon the history, however, which has been given to me of the way in which "Whitworth's Siding" was a part of the railway, and the use which was from time to time made by Whitworth of that siding, I think the goods had come home when they were upon the siding. I think, moreover, that there was a constructive delivery of the whole by delivery of part of the goods, if it were necessary, as in my judgment it is not necessary, to resort to any such doctrine. I think, also, the taking out at his own will from several of the trucks, containing different parcels not distinguishable, and working up in his own manufactory the goods so brought from Liverpool, was as clear a constructive possession of the entirety as the law requires.

BANK.]

OGG AND ANOTHER v. SHUTER.

[CT. OF APP.]

The only other thing to be noticed is the act of the railway company, who, having gone on in an amicable manner, not demanding payment on the instant of delivery but keeping an account of the transactions between themselves and Whitworth, bethink themselves all of a sudden that they will keep such of the goods as had not been carried across the railway. I do not use the word "delivered," but "carried across"—until they were paid their charges. But what has their claim of lien to do with the question which I have to consider? They may be right or wrong. Upon that I will not express any sort of opinion, but of this I am clear, that it could not have altered any rights which existed before. Lien upon what? Upon Whitworth's goods, and it is because they are his goods that they claim the lien. It is not necessary, however, to dwell upon that part of the case at all.

I am of opinion that the order made, and which has given to the trustee only half of the goods which he contends belonged to Whitworth at the time of his failure, cannot be sustained. The proper order is to declare that the trustee is entitled to the whole of the goods, which were in the possession of the railway as the agents, carriers, or anything else you like to call them, of Whitworth, at the time of the failure.

The cases, which have been referred to, really help the matter and do not affect the principle upon which I have endeavoured to decide it. In Wentworth v. Outhwaite (10 M. & W. 449), which is very plainly in point, although there were certain goods, which were to be delivered to a man at a place thirty miles from Leeds, yet, as they were delivered at Leeds to a workman, the delivery was complete. Lord Abinger there says: "It seems to me that a great part of the very learned argument which we have heard, turns upon a question of fact, whether Leeds was the place of destination to which the goods were to be sent. It may be the place of destination at which the goods are to be at the consignee's risk, and I think that in this case it was the place where they were to be at his risk until he sent for them." In the very terms of the invoice that applies to this case. Mr. Baron Parke's judgment is to the same effect: "The goods had arrived at their place of destination, for that, as I understand, means the place, to which they were to be conveyed by the carriers, and where they would remain unless fresh orders should be given for their subsequent disposition." Then he quotes the decision in Dizon v. Balduen, where Lord Ellenborough, after referring to the several cases upon this subject, says, "In those cases the goods had so far gotten to the end of their journey that they waited for new orders from the purchaser to put them again in motion, to communicate to them another substantive destination, and without such order they would continue stationary." Then, in Whitehead v. Anderson, p. 534

(ubi sup.), it is stated, "The law is clearly settled that the unpaid vendor has a right to retake the goods before they have arrived at the destination originally contemplated by the purchaser, unless in the meantime they have come into the actual or constructive possession of the vendee. If the vendee takes them out of the possession of the carrier into his own before their arrival, with or without the consent of the carrier, there seems to be no doubt that the transitus would be at an end, though, in the case of the absence of the carrier's consent, it may be a wrong to him, for which he would have a right of action."

But, without going further into the authorities, which, although numerous, are not by any means obscure or doubtful, it appears to me that the right to stoppage in transitu ended when the goods were delivered by virtue of the bills of lading to the purchaser's agent, and that after that there could be no right, for there was no transitus to which the right of stoppage could apply. I shall make no order as to the costs.

Solicitors for the trustees, Johnson and Weatheralls, agents for Rawson, George, and Wade, Bradford.
Solicitors for Gibbes and Co., Speechly and Co., agents for G. E. Mumford, Bradford.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by GILBERT G. KENNEDY, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

Nov. 20, 22, and 23, 1875.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (GIRNS), KELLY, C.B., BRAMWELL, B., and BLACKBURN, J.)

OGG AND ANOTHER v. SHUTER.

Sale of goods—Cash against bill of lading—Refusal by purchaser to pay—Vendor's right to retain possession—Jus disponendi.

Where by the terms of a contract the bill of lading is deliverable upon the vendee's fulfilling certain conditions, the shipper is entitled not only to retain possession of the goods under such bill of lading until those conditions are fulfilled, but also in case of the vendee's default to dispose of the goods. L., a potato merchant in France, contracted to sell to plaintiffs, potato merchants in England, twenty tons of potatoes, to be delivered "free on board," and "cash against bill of lading." The plaintiffs paid 30l. on account. The potatoes were put by L. into sacks of the plaintiffs', sent by them for that purpose, and L. drew on the plaintiffs "at sight" for the balance of the agreed price, and despatched the potatoes to England. The shipment on arrival was supposed by the plaintiffs, erroneously, to be sixteen sacks short, and the plaintiffs, therefore, refused to accept the full draft drawn on them by L., but offered to accept a draft for the amount less a deduction proportioned to the supposed short shipment. L.'s agent in England thereupon endorsed the bill of lading to the defendant with instructions to sell, which the defendant did.

Held (reversing the decision of the Common Pleas), that the plaintiffs were in default, and that the defendant was entitled to the verdict. For that the terms of the contract entitled the vendor to

[Ct. of App.]

OGG AND ANOTHER v. SHUTER.

[Ct. of App.]

retain possession of the goods until the plaintiffs complied with the conditions of payment, and that as the plaintiffs, made default in complying with those conditions, the vendor or his agent had power to dispose of the goods.

This was an appeal by the defendant under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, against the decision of the Court of Common Pleas in discharging a rule of that court, obtained by the defendant to enter a verdict for the defendant instead of the verdict nominally entered for the plaintiff.

The declaration was in trover for 251 sacks of potatoes and 251 sacks. The pleas were not guilty, and not possessed. Issue thereon.

1. The following is a statement of the case.

2. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant, for the conversion by the defendant of certain potatoes alleged to be the property of the plaintiffs, and the cause came on for trial before Keating, J., on the 1st May 1874, at Westminster Hall, when the following facts and correspondence were given in evidence; and the learned judge directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiffs, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit or a verdict for the defendant, the court to be at liberty to draw inferences of fact.

3. The plaintiffs are potato salesmen.

4. The defendant is a partner in the firm of Comfort and Shuter, who are potato salesmen.

5. In the month of Jan. 1874, a contract was entered into by the plaintiffs with Monsieur Paresys Loutre of Merville in France for the purchase of a quantity of potatoes on the terms contained in the following letters and telegrams.

Merville, 5 Jan. 1874.

Messrs. Ogg and Co., London.

In answer to your letter of the 3rd inst. I can let you have 200 tons of potatoes (lesquins) of this country, good sound goods, at the price of 82 francs for 1000 kilogrammes, put on board at Dunkirk, to be delivered in the course of the present month, payable in cash, that is to say, against bill of lading signed by the captain, and the statement of weight of the sworn weighers of the city of Dunkirk. If you accept my offer please reply by return of post, and do not fail to send at the same time a cheque for 254. as an earnest of the bargain.

PARSEYS LOUTRE.

Telegram from Plaintiffs to Paresys Loutre.

14th Jan. 1874.

Can you supply us lesquins at 80 francs per 1000 kilograms free on board at Dunkirk?

Telegram from Paresys Loutre to Plaintiffs.

Lesquins are higher. Cannot supply you at less than 84 francs free on board.

Telegram from Plaintiffs to Paresys Loutre.

15th Jan.

Ship on board of steamer, Dunkirk to London, 20 tons of lesquins at 84; as sample. We send cheque for 304. by letter to-night.

Letter from Plaintiffs to Paresys Loutre.

Jan. 16.

We have duly received your telegram of 14th inst., and confirm ours of the 15th inst., enclosed please find the cheque for 304. on account, also delivery order for 300 sacks shipped to Messrs. Berthelot Deroche, to whom you will be good enough to apply. We recommend you to ship as promptly as possible, as this small order is simply to judge of the quality of goods you can supply us with, and if we are satisfied it will lead to more important business.

Letter from Paresys Loutre to Plaintiffs.

18th Jan.

I have received your telegram dated the 14th Jan. at three in the afternoon, and I have replied immediately by telling you that I could not give you lesquins at less than 84 francs free on board, and asked you to reply immediately by telegram. I have likewise received your telegram dated 15th Jan., 5.47 p.m., received the 16th at 10 a.m.; and I have besides received your letter dated the 16th Jan., received on morning of 17th, inclosing a cheque for 304.; also a delivery order for fifteen bundles of sacks, sent by steamer, and asking me to send you 20,000 kilogrammes as a sample. To please you I will send the quantity of lesquins you ask me for, notwithstanding your telegram reached me too late, but I hope that in future we shall have more important sales.

6. In pursuance of this arrangement, Paresys Loutre, by his agent, F. Camys Van Rycke, of Dunkirk, put potatoes of the weight of 18,878 kilogrammes into 251 of the plaintiffs' sacks, sent by them to Paresys Loutre, and shipped the same on board the steamship Blonde at Dunkirk under the following bill of lading:—

I, Fowler, master, after God, of the ship named Blonde now at Dunkirk, intending at a proper time to pursue my voyage under the protection of God until I arrive at the city of London, there to unload, acknowledge to have received into my said ship, to be carried on deck, from here, of you Mr. F. Camys Van Rycke, 251 sacks of potatoes (lesquins), weighing in the whole 18,878 kilogrammes, all the sacks in good condition, marked as in the margin [in the margin of the bill of lading was put "Mark of said sacks, Ogg and Co."], which I promise to deliver in the same form, except perils and accidents of the sea, at London, to order, on payment to me for freight of the sum of 8s. per 1000 kilogrammes, besides advances according to the usual custom of the sea; and for performance of the above I have bound and do bind by this my person my goods and my said ship with the tackle. In faith of which I have signed four bills of lading of the same tenor, the one of which being accomplished the others to be void. Done at Dunkirk, the 24th Jan. 1874. On deck at shipper's risk.

For the Master,

£7 11s. 1d., indorsed F. Camys Van Rycke, Comfort and Shuter.

7. On the 25th Jan. 1874, the said Camys Van Rycke advised the plaintiffs in the following letter:—

I have the pleasure of advising that according to the order of Mr. Paresys-Loutre of Merville, I have sent you by steamer Blonde, Captain Fowler, Ogg and Co., 251 sacks of potatoes (lesquins), weighing net 18,878 kilogrammes. Inclosed is the invoice that Mr. Paresys has given me directions to address to you, and the balance of 344., which I have drawn on you at sight. Will you give it your good attention? The bill of lading will be sent you with my draft. There remain 49 empty sacks at your disposal.

The invoice was inclosed.

8. Paresys Loutre to plaintiff:—

30th Jan.

In answer to your letter of 24th inst. you must by this time have had the advice from my representative at Dunkirk, Mr. Camys, of the departure of the 20,000 kilogrammes; he must have drawn on you for the payment of the balance for the goods. Lesquins have risen the last ten days 15 francs the 1000 kilogrammes. This kind of potato is becoming very rare here. If the demand for them continues there will remain none in a month.

9. On the 26th Jan. 1874, the potatoes arrived on board the steamship Blonde in the Thames, and were landed at Cotton's wharf on that or the next day.

10. Mons. Camys Van Rycke drew a bill of exchange on the plaintiffs pursuant to the terms of the letter of the 25th Jan., and annexed thereto the said bill of lading endorsed by him, of which bill of exchange the following is a copy:

Dunkirk, 25th Jan.

B. P. 344.

At sight, please pay to my order, and against bill of lading hereto annexed, the sum of 344. sterling, value in goods, and according to advice of yours devoted,

F. CAMYS VAN RYCKE.

Good for 344. sterling.

To Messrs. Ogg & Co.

[Here followed several indorsements.]

[CT. OF APP.]

OGG AND ANOTHER v. SHUTER.

[CT. OF APP.]

11. The said draft for 34*l.*, dated 25th Jan. 1874, was enclosed with the said bill of lading annexed thereto, on 26th Jan. 1874, to Messrs. A. Petyt and Co. (Mr. Camys Van Rycke's bankers), and was presented by Messrs. Devaux & Co. with the bill of lading annexed, to the plaintiffs for payment on the 27th Jan. 1874, who refused to pay the said bill or to honour the same, on the ground stated in the following letter written by them to Mr. Paresys Loutre:—

We have just seen the goods shipped on board the steamer Blonde, and we find that there are 16 sacks short shipped, and that there are only 235 sacks of lesquins loaded, which is stated on the bill of lading, of which the captain is the bearer.

We have asked Mr. Devaux, the holder of your draft, to keep it until the discharge of the vessel, to see what there is on board. To this he has refused his consent, and we have necessarily refused to pay the amount, viz., 34*l.* We request you then to write to your agent here, to present to us the invoice receipted, and the bill of lading of what there is on board, and we will pay what is due. On your sending us the invoice and bill of lading we will send you a cheque by return. Pray then to direct your agent at Dunkirk to ascertain if any have been left on the quay, and to take care of our empty sacks.

The statement of the short shipment in the above letter proved to be erroneous, the quantities specified in the invoice, bill of lading, and correspondence being, in fact, on board.

12. On 27th Jan. 1874, Messrs. Scorer and Harris, notaries of the Royal Exchange, London, presented the same bill, with bill of lading attached for payment, and payment was again refused by the plaintiffs, and they noted it, and it was returned to Messrs. C. Devaux and Co.

13. On the 30th Jan., the defendant, to whom the said bill of lading and bill of exchange had then been respectively given, and endorsed by Camys Van Rycke, presented to the plaintiffs the said draft, and the bill of lading endorsed by the firm of Comfort and Shuter annexed thereto, and requested the plaintiffs to honour and pay the said draft, which they for the reasons aforesaid again declined to do.

14. On the 30th Jan. the plaintiffs wrote the following letter to the defendant:

We hereby give you notice that the 251 sacks potatoes arrived per steamer Blonde, were consigned to us and are our property, and if you part with them to anybody else, you will be held responsible for sale, &c.

And on the 2nd Feb. 1874, the plaintiffs wrote the following letter to Paresys Loutre:—

Our Mr. Ogg having left London for Antwerp on Saturday last, at that time we were not able to ascertain the correct quantity of potatoes shipped to us per steamer Blonde. We wish you to understand that we only want what is right, and we regret that we do not know each other better, and as we have been treated unfairly in business transactions of this nature before, we think it well to see quantity of goods before we pay on bill of lading, especially as the officials inform us of short shipment. Since Mr. Ogg's departure, the potatoes have been discharged from vessel to wharf, and find on examination the goods are correct in quantity. I have telegraphed the particulars to Mr. Ogg in Antwerp, and on his return on Thursday, he will then take delivery of the goods. We have not to thank the broker at Dunkirk for all this unnecessary trouble.

15. On the 2nd Feb. the defendant in consequence of instructions he had received from Mr. Camys Van Rycke, sold the goods.

16. At the trial before Mr. Justice Keating, after the foregoing facts and correspondence had been proved, it was found as a fact by the jury that the goods were not of such a perishable nature as to render the sale of the potatoes necessary, and thereupon the learned judge directed that a verdict should be entered for the plaintiffs, with leave to the defendant to move to enter the verdict for him. The court to draw inferences of fact.

17. It was admitted by the counsel for the plaintiffs that the vendor, Paresys Loutre, had, on the 30th Jan., at the time of the plaintiffs' refusal to honour the draft, a lien upon the potatoes for the unpaid purchase-money of 34*l.*

The Court of Common Pleas discharged the rule obtained by the defendant, after taking time to consider(a).

(a) The judgments in the court below were as follows: Jan. 22.—Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—The facts in this case are shortly these. There is a contract for the sale of potatoes by the person whom the defendant represents to the plaintiffs, to be delivered free on board within a month, and payment is to be by cash against bill of lading. The goods are shipped in the plaintiff's sacks, under a bill of lading, which is indorsed to the defendant. A part payment of 30*l.* is made. The action being for a conversion of the potatoes by the defendant, it was objected by his counsel that the property in the potatoes had never passed to the plaintiffs. It was contended on the other side that the property had passed, and that the vendor had merely reserved a lien on the goods for the price. My brother Keating directed a verdict for the plaintiffs, reserving leave to the defendant to move. I am of opinion that his ruling was correct. The result of the decisions which were cited is, that the question whether the property in goods has passed under a contract of sale is a question of intention to be gathered from all the circumstances, the expressions made use of in the contract, and also the surrounding circumstances. In the case of a specific chattel, the rule is that the sale passes the property. So also the general rule, as laid down in several cases, is that, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, the specific appropriation of goods to the contract, viz., their being placed in vessels or receptacles provided by the purchasers, would pass the property. Here the potatoes were separated from a larger bulk, and placed in the plaintiffs' sacks, which had been sent over for the purpose. In addition to this very strong fact there is also the expression "free on board" in the contract, which has in previous cases been relied on, not as absolutely conclusive to show that the property passed, but as a strong element to be considered in favour of that conclusion. There is also the further fact that there was a part payment of 30*l.* All these are very strong circumstances to show that the property passed; but it is contended, on the other hand, that the expression, "cash against bill of lading," in the contract, is of itself conclusive to ascertain the intention of the vendor; that, the bill of lading being the *indiciu*m of property, the fact that the purchaser was not to receive it until he paid the price, unmistakably indicated the intention that till then the property should not pass. In support of this view a great many cases and dicta of judges were cited. These authorities appear to me to go no further than the conclusion that, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, the stipulation for cash against bill of lading would have been conclusive. In like manner many of the circumstances existing in this case have been held, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, to be conclusive evidence of an intention to pass the property. There is also another strong fact against the plaintiffs' contention, viz., that the bill of lading was indorsed to the order of the defendant; but that again is only evidence of the intention, and may be rebutted by contrary evidence. The rule as deducible from all the cases, and as it is laid down in the learned works of Blackburn, J., and Mr. Benjamin on Sale, is, that the question whether the property has passed being one of intention to be collected from all the circumstances, no single circumstance is necessarily conclusive in all cases, but the conclusion to be drawn must depend on a balance of the various circumstances on one side and the other. The question is, therefore, one of fact for a jury; and we have here, being placed in the position of a jury, to determine it as a question of fact. I am of opinion that, taken altogether, the evidence in this case shows that it was intended by the parties that the property should pass at Dunkirk. There was another point raised as to the form of the action to which it is necessary to advert. It was contended that the plaintiffs could not maintain trover because there was at least a lien on the part of the vendor. This question appears to me to depend on the question whether there was an absolute refusal by the plaintiffs to accept the bill of exchange in compliance with the terms of the contract. If there was, our decision on this point must be for the defendant. The facts, however, do not appear to me to show that there was such a refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to accept the bill. When the potatoes arrived it was supposed by both parties that there were sixteen sacks short. The plaintiffs said that they could not accept the bill for the price of the full number when there were sixteen short; that they were quite ready immediately to pay the amount less the deficiency, or if the defendant liked to wait till the vessel was unloaded, they would accept for what was actually on board. The defendant would be satisfied with nothing else than the immediate absolute acceptance of the bill for the full amount. The plaintiffs never refused to comply with the contract, and when it turned out that the parties were mistaken, and the full quantity was on board, they were perfectly willing to have taken the whole. Under these circumstances it appears to me that the right of lien did not exist, and the right of possession as well as of property had passed to the plaintiffs. This rule must therefore be discharged.

Milward, Q.C. and Willis for the defendants.—First, the property in these goods did not pass to the plaintiffs. By the first letter, namely that of 5th Jan., the goods are to be put on board at Dun-

GROVE, J.—I am of the same opinion. Mr. Willis appeared at first disposed to contend that the term, "cash against bill of lading," was absolutely conclusive evidence of the intention not to pass the property; but finding that he could not sustain this view he argued that it was prima facie conclusive, and that there was no circumstance in the present case sufficient to rebut it. Standing by itself it might be conclusive, but there are additional facts in this case. There is first the fact that the bill of lading was indorsed to the consignor's agent, which is strongly in the defendant's favour. But then there are the other circumstances, which appear to me of still greater weight in the plaintiff's favour, viz., that the delivery was to be free on board, that there was a part payment, and that the sacks in which the potatoes were shipped were the plaintiffs'. All these are extremely strong facts pointing to the conclusion that the property passed, and one of these was considered so very strong in the case of Brown v. Hare (ubi inf.) as to make that almost a decision in point to the present case. It is true that the cases run very fine, but none of them, I think, depart from the proposition that the question is one of intention for the jury, where there are circumstances pointing both ways. The case of Brown v. Hare (ubi inf.) is very plainly to that effect. In that case the oil, which was the subject of contract, was to be shipped "free on board," and was to be paid for by bill of exchange on delivery to the defendants of the bill of lading. It was so shipped free on board, and the bill of lading taken deliverable to shipper's order. So far the case was very similar to the present, but the bill of lading was there indorsed to the purchasers, whereas here it was indorsed to the vendor's agent. It was held that the property passed to the purchasers when the goods were placed "free on board," in performance of the contract, and that it was a question for the jury whether the plaintiffs so shipped the oil in performance of their contract to place it free on board, or for the purpose of retaining a control over it and continuing to be owners contrary to the contract. The expression "free on board" appears to have been the main point relied upon in that case. Here, not only were the potatoes to be delivered "free on board," but there was part payment and delivery into plaintiffs' sacks, which alone would be the strongest evidence, according to one class of decisions, that the property passed. The terms "cash against bill of lading" may very well be satisfied by construing them as meant to preserve the vendor's lien, and so as kirk, "cash against bill of lading signed by captain," which shows that the property was not to pass until the purchaser should have paid the cash and received the bill of lading. "Free on board" was held by the Court of Common Pleas to mean that when put on board they would become the property of the purchaser, but this expression alludes to the payment, to indicate the party who is to pay for the bill of lading. [BRAMWELL, B.—Suppose the ship had gone to the bottom, who would have to bear the loss?] The vendor. Brown v. Hare, 4 H. & N. 822; 29 L. J. 6, Ex. is the case relied on in the court below to show the property had passed, but there was this difference in that case that the bill of lading was forwarded, and the object of forwarding the bill of lading was to make the goods deliverable to the consignee [BRAMWELL, B.—Where a bill of lading is to order, and cash against bill of lading, I have always understood that if payment is not made the vendor may resume possession of the goods.] The bill of lading being deliverable on payment is conclusive to show the property did not pass. There is not an intention on the part of the vendor to pass the property: (Sheppard v. Harrison, L. Rep. 5 E. & L. App. 116; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 857.) Where goods are to be delivered against goods or money, or anything, the events must be contemporaneous, and until the conditions are fulfilled, although put into vendee's ships, the property does not pass:

Bussey v. Barnett, 9 M. & W. 312;
Bishop v. Shillett, 2 B. & Ald. 329;
Brandt v. Bowlby, 2 B. & Ad. 932.

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a contract in mercantile language, but if we paraphrase it thus:

not at all inconsistent with the other facts pointing to an intention that the property should pass.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It was desirable that we should be referred to the cases on the subject; but in the result I have no doubt the true principle is, that the question whether the property has passed is one of fact for the jury on consideration of the facts on both sides of the question. The rule on the subject is put very clearly in the case of Van Casteel v. Booker (2 Ex. 691). We have here to act as jurymen; and it appears to me that the facts very strongly preponderate in favour of the conclusion that the intention was that the property should pass, and that the terms which were relied on as pointing to a contrary conclusion should be construed as merely intended to preserve the vendor's lien. With regard to the question whether trover will lie, I agree entirely with the view taken by my Lord.

KEATINGE, J.—I also agree in the conclusion that the intention was that the property should pass, the lien for the balance of the purchase-money, after payment of 30*l.* being reserved to the vendor. With regard to the question whether the action of trover was maintainable, it is the law, that if one party absolutely refuses to perform the contract, the other party may rescind. If the defendant was entitled to rescind he was entitled to sell the potatoes, and his so doing was no conversion; but if he was not so entitled there was a conversion. The question, therefore, is whether there was an absolute refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to perform the contract. It appears to me that that there was no such refusal. It being supposed that some of the sacks were missing, they said, "If they are found we will at once accept the bill for the full amount; if they cannot be found we are not bound to accept in respect of cargo that is not delivered." The defendant, the market having in the mean time risen considerably, proceeded immediately to sell the potatoes. I think that a reasonable time had not elapsed, and that there was no evidence of such a refusal to perform the contract as would justify the defendant in rescinding the contract and selling the potatoes. There was, consequently, a conversion of the potatoes, and the action is maintainable.

Rule Discharged.

CT. OF APP.]

MACKENZIE v. WHITWORTH.

[CT. OF APP.]

"the goods are put on your ships, they are your property, but unless you comply with the condition of payment against the bill of lading, we reserve a jus disponendi to sell them." That would be unarguable, but we contend now that putting them on board was not with the intention of vesting the property in the vendee, but to deliver them subject to the condition: (Moakes v. Nicholson, 19 C. B.; N. S., 290; 34 L. J. 273, C. P.; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573). Secondly: If the property did pass, we contend that the possession might be retained until the fulfilment of conditions, and consequently the vendee cannot bring trover. [KELLY, C. B.—Is not the principle in all these cases that trover will not lie without possession?] Certainly, a vendor who has a right to maintain possession is in the position of a person who has a right to retain goods in pawn. (Hulliday v. Holgate, L. Rep. 3 Ex. (Ex. Ch.), 299; 37 L. J. 174, Ex.; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 656, which is confirmed in Donald v. Suckling, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 585; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 772). It is here admitted that the vendor had a lien, the conversion is on 2nd Feb., the letter offering to take delivery is on 2nd Feb., showing that the vendee was in default by his refusals, and that there was no manifestation or disposition to pay until that date, and, therefore, the case of Milgate v. Keble (3 M. & G. 100), is in point, that case was followed by

Wilmhurst v. Bouker, 7 M. & G. 882; and Blossam v. Saunders, 4 B. & C. 941.

Prentice, Q.C. and Holl for the plaintiffs.—First: The property passed immediately the goods were put into the sacks, or rather the moment they were put free on board: (Aldridge v. Johnson 7 E. & B. 885; 26 L. J. 296, Q. B.). [THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Do you say the property passed absolutely and indefeasibly?] It passed subject to a lien. The potatoes had risen in price, and, therefore, the plaintiffs did not refuse these potatoes in any factious manner, but because they bonâ fide believed there was a short delivery, there was a clear intimation they were ready to pay for the goods, and there was nothing to justify the selling.

Valpy v. Oakley, 16 Q. B. 941.

Secondly: Trover will lie. Lord Campbell, in Aldridge v. Johnson, at p. 299, says, "as soon as each of the plaintiff's (vendee's) sacks were filled with barley, en instanti the property in the barley in the sacks became vested in the plaintiff (vendee). The vendor had only a lien on these goods for the purchase money, he had no property in them, only a mere personal right to retain them, and not a right of sale.

Chinery v. Viall, 5 H. & N. 288;

Martindale v. Smith, 1 Q. B. 389;

Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857, per Bailey, J., p. 862.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is not the payment the essence of the contract?] All we submit is that the refusal of the vendee to pay, does not entitle the vendor to rescind the contract and sell the goods.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 23.—THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns) delivered the judgment of the court.—In this case it appears from the judgments below, that the Court of Common Pleas drew the inference of fact that the plaintiff was not in default in refusing to accept the draft for 34*l.*, which was tendered to him for acceptance along with the bill of lading. We have been unable to reconcile this finding with the statements in the case, more particularly with the statement in paragraph 13, which seems to us to show that the plaintiff was in default. Taking this fact as we understand it, we think that the judgment in favour of the plaintiff is erroneous, and should be reversed.

The transactions in which merchants, shipping goods on the orders of others, protect themselves by taking a bill of lading, making the goods deliverable to the shipper's order, involve property of immense value, and we are unwilling to decide more than is required by the particular case; but we think this much is clear that, where the shipper takes and keeps in his own or his agent's hands, a bill of lading in this form to protect himself, this is effectual, so far as to preserve to him a hold over the goods, until the bill of lading is handed over on the conditions being fulfilled, or, at least, until the consignee is ready and willing, and offers to fulfil these conditions, and demands the bill of lading, and we think that such a hold retained under the bill of lading is not merely a right to retain possession till those conditions are fulfilled, but involves in it a power to dispose of the goods on the vendee's default, so long, at least, as the vendee continues in default.

It is not necessary in this case to consider what would be the effect of an offer by the plaintiff to accept the draft and pay the money before the sale, for no such offer in this case was ever made.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Dalton and Jessett.

Solicitors for defendant, Heather and Son.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by GILBERT G. KENNEDY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 15 and Dec. 10, 1875.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), BLACKBURN and BRETT, JJ.)

MACKENZIE v. WHITWORTH.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Marine insurance—Re-insurance—Insurable interest—Concealment—19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 4—27 & 28 Vict. c. 56, s. 1—30 & 31 Vict. c. 59.

A policy of insurance "on goods" will cover a re-insurance.

The plaintiff, an underwriter, effected with another underwriter an ordinary policy "on cotton" on board a named vessel, for a specific voyage. The policy did not state, as the fact was, that it was a re-insurance of a risk already insured against by the plaintiff; and the jury, in an action by him on the policy, having found that the fact of its being a re-insurance was immaterial, and that there had been no concealment, the verdict was entered for the plaintiff, with leave to the defendant to move to enter the verdict for him, on the ground that the plaintiff, being only interested as a re-insurer, was not entitled to recover on the policy sued on; and it was Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of the Court of Exchequer), that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, for that the nature of the interest insured did not alter the risk, and the description in the policy was sufficient to cover such interest.

Glover v. Black (3 Burr. 1395), and Lucena v. Crawford (2 Bos. & P., H. of L. 350), discussed.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Exchequer, discharging a rule obtained by the defendant to enter the verdict for him: (see the case reported in the court below, ante, vol. II., p. 490; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 163; L. Rep. 10 Ex. 142; 44 L. J. 81, Ex.)

The rule came on to be argued on the 9th and 10th Feb., before Bramwell, Pollock, and Amphlett, BB., in the Exchequer, when the rule was discharged, the court holding that an insurance of goods would cover a re-insurance.

Herschell, Q.C. and Baylis, Q.C.—The question is, whether an insurance on cotton for 5000*l.* will cover a re-insurance. The evidence at the trial was, that in all cases of re-insurance it was customary among merchants to disclose the fact. It was held in Glover v. Black (3 Bur. 1394) that an insurance on goods, as goods, does not cover respondentia. [BRETT, J.—The general rule is, that you need not describe the nature of the interest; is not respondentia and bottomry an exception to the general rule?] Lord Mansfield, in Glover v. Black, grounds his decision on mercantile custom, as in the case here, and if custom is not given effect to, the court will be inverting the course of business. It is true the underwriter can protect himself by demanding, on every contract of insurance, whether it is a re-insurance; but this would be tantamount to requiring a warranty, and it is better to adapt the law to the practice of business than to give a decision which would cause the whole course of business to be altered. [BLACKBURN, J., referred to McSweeney v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company (14 Q. B. 634).] In Lucena v. Crawford (2 B. & P., H. of L. 350), it was held that "profits and commission" are not covered by insurance on "ship and goods." [THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—There the person insuring has no interest in the goods themselves; all that he is interested in is something dependent upon the arrival of the goods, and that cannot be covered by an insurance of goods.] The case relied on in the court below was Crawley v. Cohen (3 B. & Ad. 478), where Lord Tenterden says that a carrier may insure, and as he is an insurer himself such insurance is a re-insurance. But the carrier has a special property in the goods, an insurance by a carrier has never been treated as a re-insurance, or he would have come within the statute 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 4, prohibiting all re-assurance, with a certain exception, namely, "unless the insurer shall be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die, in either of which cases his executors, administrators, or assigns, may make re-insurance to the amount of the sum before by him assured, provided it shall be expressed in the policy to be a re-insurance," which is now repealed. [BLACKBURN, J.—The carrier has an interest similar to a mortgagee.] In Massachusetts a re-insurance must be so stated, in New York it need not. (See 1 Phillips on Insurance, s. 498, c. 5, s. 8.) [THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Up to what time was the statute, ordering re-insurance to be stated on the policy, in force?] Up to 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, sched. B., when it was repealed. [THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then I don't think the custom is of any avail here, as there is no time for a custom to have sprung up.] There would be time since 27 & 28 Vict. c. 65, s. 1, when the prohibition was removed; the very time for a custom to spring up would be at the termination of a regulation which had been in force for 160 years.

Supposing there to be a real practical difference between an insurance of goods and a re-insurance, a man is brought a slip in the present form, he would then be bound by a contract he did not intend to enter into. There is a practical difference between insurance and re-insurance which disposes underwriters not to take a re-insurance.

Benjamin, Q.C. (A. T. Lawrence with him).—There is an authority directly in point to contradict the contention that it requires an interest in order to insure: (Reed v. Cole, 3 Bur. 1512.) Though this case was decided only one year after Glover v. Black, yet Glover v. Black was not referred to, showing Glover v. Black to be an exceptional case. It has always been held that the nature of the interest may be left at large, though the subject of the interest must be described, and it is only in the one case of Glover v. Black that it has been held that the nature of the interest must be described, owing to some custom. There is no distinction between goods themselves and their value for the purpose of insurance, there is nothing insured beyond their value, but profits on goods are distinct things, because profits are beyond the value of the goods, and so is freight. For 160 years Parliament enacted that no one should re-insure without putting in the policy that it was a re-insurance, and seven years ago Parliament repealed this, which showed that Parliament formerly thought it necessary and now thinks it unnecessary; therefore, is it surprising that people come forward to say that there is the practice among underwriters to disclose the fact of re-insurance?

Herschell, Q.C., in reply.—Reed v. Cole was not an action on a policy, it was an action on articles of agreement, and the question turned on those articles. Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 10.—BLACKBURN, J., delivered the judgment of the Court.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, discharging a rule obtained to enter a verdict for the defendant.

The action is on a policy of marine insurance, which is set out in full in the declaration. It is the ordinary form of a Lombard-street policy, and the blank in the printed form where it is usual to insert the description of the subject-matter of the insurance, is thus filled up "5000*l.* on cotton." The plaintiff made the policy as agent for, and to protect the interest of American underwriters who had insured cotton for Fatman and Company of New Orleans, to the amount of 80,000*l.*, and was in fact a re-insurance to the amount of 5000*l.* At the trial a question was raised as to whether there was an undue concealment. On that issue the verdict passed for the plaintiff, without any point being reserved, and consequently the Court of Appeal has nothing to do with that issue. The only question before this court is that stated in the rule which has been discharged, viz., whether the verdict should be entered for the defendant, "on the ground that the plaintiff (or rather the parties for whom the plaintiff made the insurance, and on whose behalf he sues) being only interested as a reinsurer, was not entitled to recover on the policy sued on."

It is stated in the case that the defendant gave in evidence, by the testimony of witnesses whose evidence was not contradicted, that in all cases of re-insurance policies the

Ct. of App.]

MACKENZIE v. WHITWORTH.

[Ct. of App.]

invariable practice has been to disclose the fact of the insurance being a re-insurance. Mr. Herschell argued on this as if it was a statement that it was the usage and custom of trade always to describe the interest in the policy as being a re-insurance, but we think the statement does not bear that meaning. Re-insurance was in this country prohibited by stat. 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 4, unless the assurer should be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die, "in either of which cases the assurer, his executors, administrators, or assigns might make re-assurance to the amount before by him assured, provided it was expressed in the policy to be a re-assurance," and this prohibition continued in force till as late as 1864, so that there has not been sufficient time for a custom to spring up in this country; and there is no such custom in America, where re-insurance was always lawful: (see Phillips on Insurance, c. 5, s. 8, s. 498, p. 270, 3rd edit.) However, the evidence seems to have been directed to the issue found by the jury for the plaintiff, and has reference, not to the description in the policy, but the practice of making a disclosure to the assurer. The question, therefore, seems to us to be confined to this, whether, applying the ordinary principles of interpretation of written documents, and the established rules of insurance law to this kind of insurance, the description in this policy is sufficient to cover it. The court below decided that it was; and we are of opinion that their decision was right, and must be affirmed.

A description of the subject-matter of the insurance is required, both from the nature of the contract and from the universal practice of insurers. It is generally described very concisely, as being so much "on ship," "on goods," "on freight," "on profits on goods," "on advances on coolies," "on emigrant money," and many other examples might be given. And if no property which answers the description in the policy be at risk, the policy will not attach, though the assured may have other property at risk of equal or greater value; the reason being that the assurers have not entered into a contract to indemnify the assured for any loss on that other property. Thus, a policy on "piece goods" will not make the insurer liable for a loss on hats: (Hunter v. Princeps, Marshall on Insurance, 4th edit., 255.) In Phillips on Insurance (vol. 1, chap. 5, s. 415, 3rd edit., p. 231) it is said: "It is necessary that the thing insured, and in some cases also the kind of interest intended to be protected, should be sufficiently set forth in the policy, or that the policy should at least prescribe the way of ascertaining to what the contract is to be applied." And this seems a fair statement of what is required, and is in strict accordance with what is stated by Lord Tenterden in Crowley v. Cohen (3 B. & A. 478): "Although the subject-matter of the insurance must be properly described, the nature of the interest may in general be left at large. In some cases the nature of the interest in the thing insured is such as to vary the nature of the risk, and then it should be stated." In Mc Sweeney v. Royal Exchange (14 Q. B. 634), the policy was "profit on rice." The Court of Queen's Bench held the plaintiffs entitled to recover—but that judgment was reversed. The Court of Exchequer Chamber, in delivering judgment say (14 Q. B. 650), "The first question discussed was, whether the plaintiff had an insurable interest in profits on the rice. Under the circumstances stated in the special verdict we feel no doubt that he had. He had entered into a binding contract with Drouhet and Company, by virtue of which he would have had a right to 6000 bags of rice, delivered to him in England on the safe termination of the voyage of the Edward Bilton to England, with the whole of that quantity of rice on board, before the end of May; and he had made another contract to sell the rice in these events, by which contract he had secured a profit of 1s. 6d. per cwt. We have no doubt that the plaintiff might have recovered, in the events which have happened, a total loss, if he had been insured by a policy properly adapted to the case, and so drawn as to cover his special interest, from the time that the rice was appropriated by the vendors and ready to be shipped at Madras, and also to assure him against losses of the expected profits—not merely by loss of all the rice by the perils of the seas, but by the loss of any part of it, or the loss of the ship, or delay of the voyage beyond the month of May; in any of which contingencies this special interest in profits would have been entirely defeated. If such an insurance had been made on this peculiar interest, against all these events, it is obvious that the underwriters would have required a much larger premium for insuring so complicated a risk than for an ordinary insurance by an owner on goods, or profit on goods, which would be liable to loss only by perils of the seas or other accidents happening to the goods themselves."

In all cases where the peculiar nature of the interest alters the risk, it may be properly said that such interest is the subject-matter of the insurance, and at all events there is great force in the argument, that the nature of that interest should be stated. But, in the case now before us, the nature of the interest of the parties assured in the cotton does not in the slightest degree vary the nature of the risk. Had the policy in this case been made by the plaintiff in the very same terms, but on behalf of and to cover the interest of Fatman and Co., the owners of the cotton, the underwriters, would have had to pay to the plaintiffs the sum which would indemnify Fatman and Co. for any damage to the cotton from the perils insured against, and the plaintiffs would have received that sum for the benefit of Fatman and Co. As the facts are, the person on whose behalf the insurance is made, have bound themselves to pay this sum to Fatman and Co., and the defendants are required to pay the same amount, and under precisely the same circumstances, to the plaintiff, but for the benefit, not of Fatman and Co., but of the parties on behalf of whom the plaintiff made the assurance. The subject-matter of the assurance, viz., the cotton, is fully described, and there is no apparent reason which would make it just to require the nature of the interest to be described.

Still, if there were a series of decisions determining that in such a case, or in cases analogous to it, a description was required beyond what would seem to us reasonable, we should be unwilling to disturb the established practice. But we do not find any such decisions. In Glover v. Black (3 Burr. 1395), the plaintiff had lent a sum of money on a bottomry bond, which is set out in the case at p. 1395. By the condition, if the ship arrived at the Thames, he was to be paid his loan with maritime interest, or, if the ship should be utterly lost on the voyage, he was to be paid a just and propor-

CT. OF APP.]

ATWOOD (app.) v. CASE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

tionate average on all goods belonging to the obligor shipped at any time on the vessel and not unavoidably lost. The plaintiff meant to insure his interest in the bond, and told the underwriters so; but by a blunder drew up the policy in the ordinary form of a policy on goods and merchandise. The underwriters were unconscientious enough to contest the policy, and Lord Mansfield very reluctantly decided in their favour. But it seems enough to state the nature of the plaintiffs' interest to show that the real risk intended to be, but not described, was a very different one from that on goods, which is all that that case decided. Lucena v. Crawford (2 Bos. & P. N. R. 269) has always been treated as deciding that though profits may be insured, they must be described as such, and we took time in this case, principally with a view to see what were the reasons for this decision and whether they were applicable to such a case as the present. We cannot find the reasons stated in the report of Lucena v. Crawford, but in the case of Routh v. Thomson (11 East, 428), in which similar points arose soon after, Lord Ellenborough states them thus at p. 433: "Independently, however, of the difficulty of fixing the value, and supposing such a chance insurable, must it not be insured specifically as such chance? Must not the interest be so described in the policy? Can a man who has no right, legal or equitable, either in ship or freight, effect an insurance on either merely because he has a chance that some collateral benefit may arise to him if the ship and cargo should arrive in safety? The declaration must aver an interest in the subject insured, and that interest must be proved; and how can it be said that these captors have any interest either in the ship or the freight, when the ship is altogether the king's, and the captors have no interest in either? nor other concern in respect to the same beyond a mere chance that the king may be induced to give them something out of the produce of such ship and freight." This reasoning, whether binding as an authority or not, is clear and intelligible, but it seems to us to have no application to such a case as the present. The assured here had a direct interest in the safe arrival of the cotton; not in any way a collateral interest in something else after the cotton arrived. It was, though not a property in the cotton, an interest in the cotton created and evidenced by a binding legal contract between them and the owners of that cotton; and if the mode in which they acquired that interest had been stated in the policy, it would have in no way altered the effect of the defendant's contract, which would still have remained to be, to indemnify against all damage sustained by the cotton in consequence of any of the perils insured against.

We think, therefore, that the judgment below should be affirmed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Norris, Allens, and Carter, agents for Simpson and North, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, Gregory, Rowcliffe, Rowcliffe, and Rawle, agents for Sale and Co., Manchester.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR and J. M. LELY, Esqrs.
Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, Nov. 17, 1875.

ATWOOD (app.) v. CASE (resp.).

Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 237, construction of—Going on board newly arriving ship, "before actual arrival."

By sect. 237 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, every person (except as therein accepted) who "goes on board any ship about to arrive at the place of her destination before her actual arrival in dock, or at the place of her discharge, without the permission of the master," incurs a penalty as therein mentioned.

C., without leave of the master, went on board a ship bound from a foreign port to Bristol, as she lay in the Cumberland Basin of Bristol Harbour. The ship (which the crew soon afterwards left) remained in the basin all night, but did not, nor was it intended that she should, discharge her cargo there. The next morning she was moored further into the harbour, and discharged her cargo at another quay in the port of Bristol.

An information having been preferred before justices against C. for contravening sect. 237 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the justices dismissed the same. The informant having appealed, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43,

Held, that the ship had actually arrived in dock, and that judgment ought to be for the respondent. This was a case stated for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, by two justices of the peace for the town and county of Bristol.

1. Upon the hearing of a certain information preferred by the appellant, a police officer and a person employed in the service of Her Majesty's Board of Trade, against the respondent, a sailor's boarding-house keeper, for that he, not being in Her Majesty's service, and not being duly authorised by law for the purpose, unlawfully did go on board a certain British ship, to wit, the Lord Duncan, about to arrive at her place of destination before her actual arrival in dock or at the place of her discharge, without the permission of the master of the said ship, contrary to the 237th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, we dismissed the case.

2. The section referred to is as follows:

Every person who, not being in Her Majesty's service, and not being duly authorised by law for the purpose, goes on board any ship about to arrive at the place of her destination, before her actual arrival in dock or at the place of her discharge, without the permission of the master, shall for every such offence incur a penalty not exceeding £20; and the master or person in charge of such ship may take any such person so going on board as aforesaid into custody, and deliver him up forthwith to any constable or peace officer, to be by him taken before a justice or justices, and to be dealt with according to the provisions of this Act.

3. The said ship arrived from a foreign port on Sunday, the 4th July 1875, and passed through the gate of the Cumberland Basin in the port of Bristol, in the city and county of Bristol, about seven o'clock in the evening.

4. Immediately after the ship had entered the basin the appellant, who is specially employed by the Board of Trade for the purpose, went on board, introduced himself to the master, and remained on board with his permission. Very shortly afterwards, and while the ship was being moored, the respondent went on board her, his alleged object being to see one of the crew. He spoke to the master, but did not obtain permission to remain on board, the master telling him that he was not wanted. The respondent went away from the ship and returned on board again shortly afterwards, and he then refused to leave when requested by the appellant so to do.

Q.B. Div.]

HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER.

[Q.B. Div.]

5. The crew left the ship on arriving in the basin, which is usual, and the ship remained there all night.

6. The next morning she was moored further into the floating harbour, and afterwards discharged her cargo at another quay in the port of Bristol.

7. Cumberland Basin is divided from the river Avon by dock gates, and is a complete dock forming part of, but divided by other dock gates from the rest of the docks formed under and governed by the Bristol Dock Act 1868, and other local Acts. There are quays on each side of the basin at which ships frequently discharge cargoes, but the Lord Duncan did not discharge, and it was not intended that she should discharge any of her cargo there.

8. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the section, being penal, must be read strictly, and that the words were alternative, so that it was enough to take his actions out of the provisions of the statute if the vessel could be said to have arrived: (1) "At her place of destination," or (2) "In Dock," or (3) "At the place of her discharge."

But in this case, as to all three phrases, it was agreed, as a fact, that she had arrived at her place of destination, that she was in dock, and that she had also arrived at the place of her discharge.

9. On behalf of the appellant, it was contended that it was not sufficient that the vessel had arrived in port to exempt a person acting as the respondent had acted, from being amenable to the statute, that so long as she had not arrived "at the place of her discharge," he could not board without permission from the master, and that it was not until Monday the 5th July last that the Lord Duncan arrived at the place of her discharge.

The justices decided as follows:—(1) That the ship was not "about to arrive at the place of her destination" (which, having regard to the section, they considered a condition precedent to bringing the respondent within its words) as she had actually arrived there, that is to say, she had arrived at Bristol; (2) That she was in dock, that is to say, in the Cumberland Basin; and (3) That she had arrived at the place of her discharge, which was Bristol, although she was not then actually at the quay at which she was afterwards unloaded, inasmuch as that precise locality as to all ships depends more or less upon the Bristol Quay wardens' arrangements, and upon various circumstances over which owners and masters of ships have no control or foreknowledge.

A plan accompanied the case.

Boven for the appellant argued that great stress was to be laid upon the word "actual" in the section. The arrival in the present case was only a constructive arrival. [QUAIN, J.—This is a penal statute and must, as such, be construed strictly.]

Cole, Q.C., for the respondent, was not called upon.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the respondent, and that upon the second of the grounds mentioned by the justices. Neither the first or third grounds are supportable. It is idle to say that the port of Bristol was the place of destination of this ship. She was in dock when she was in Cumberland Basin, and that is enough. There was an actual arrival of the ship within the meaning of the section.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion and for the same reason.

QUAIN, J.—A strict construction should be put upon the statute. The ship had arrived in dock. The words "other place of her discharge" were, I think, put in to embrace the cases which might arise of a ship discharging elsewhere than in dock. On the other two grounds the justices were wrong.

Judgment for the respondent.

Solicitors for the appellant, Whites, Renard and Co., for Henry Britten, Press, and Inskip, Bristol.

Solicitors for the respondents, Darby and Cumberland, for J. H. Clifton, Bristol.

Tuesday, Dec. 14, 1875.

HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER.

Discovery—Compromise of cross cases of collision between defendant and third party—Plaintiff's right to inspect terms of compromise.

In an action by owner of cargo against shipowner the plaintiff alleged damage in consequence of a collision with another ship caused by defendant's negligent navigation. A compromise of cross suits in the Admiralty Court in respect of the collision had been entered into by the respective owners of the two ships.

Held that the plaintiff had a right to inspect the terms of this compromise.

THIS was a motion on the defendants' behalf to discharge an order made by Quain, J. at chambers, so far as it related to an allowance of inspection by the plaintiffs of certain documents in the defendants' possession.

It appeared from the statement of claim that the plaintiffs were consignees in London of certain bales of hemp, shipped at Königsberg on board the defendants' steamship Burlington for carriage to London upon the terms of a bill of lading containing the usual exceptions from liability.

On the 30th Nov. 1873, while the Burlington was coming up the River Thames in the course of her voyage from Königsberg to London, with the bales on board, and before they were delivered, she came into collision with another vessel called the Hakon Adelsteen. In this collision the Burlington was struck with violence on her port side and sank under water, and thereby the bales were damaged. The collision and subsequent damage were occasioned, the plaintiffs alleged, by the negligence and unskillful navigation of the master and crew of the Burlington or of other servants of the defendants on board that ship. In consequence the plaintiffs suffered a loss upon the bales of 770*l.*—749*l.* by reason of damage to the goods and 2*l.* which they were compelled to pay on account of the said goods by way of general average contribution.

The defendants, in their statement, denied this

Q.B. Div.]

HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER.

[Q.B. Div.]

allegation of negligence, stated that the Hakon Adelsteen was not at the time of the said collision being navigated by them or their servants, and alleged that if and so far the said collision and subsequent damage were occasioned by the negligent or unskilful navigation of either of the said ships, they were occasioned by the negligence and unskilful navigation of those on board, and navigating the Hakon Adelsteen.

The managing owner of the steamship Burlington, one of the defendants, enumerated in his affidavit of discovery the documents relating to this action which were in his possession or power, and objected to produce all those which related wholly to a suit and cross suit in the High Court of Admiralty to which the owners of the said steamship Hakon Adelsteen and the owners of the said steamship Burlington, the defendants in the present action, were parties suing at the request and for the benefit of their respective underwriters; such suits were instituted in the said court by the said parties to recover each from the other damages in respect of the same collision as is alleged in the statement of claim. The question, which of the said two steamships was to blame for the said collision was the main issue in the said suits, and he contended that all such documents, papers, letters, and other writings were immaterial and irrelevant in this action as being res inter alios actæ, that none of them could be admissible as evidence in the present action, and that they could only be used by way of prejudice against the defendants herein.

Amongst these documents was one described as "The agreement for carrying out a private arrangement to put an end to litigation in the said suits entered into between David Brown on behalf of the said owners of the Hakon Adelsteen and William Lamplough on behalf of the said owners of the Burlington, the defendants in this action, and an average statement made upon the basis of this agreement."

At chambers Quain, J., notwithstanding the defendants' objection, made an order that the plaintiff should be at liberty to inspect this agreement as well as the other documents enumerated.

Witt now moved on the defendants' behalf by way of appeal from this order. A party to a suit cannot be required to produce documents relating to the compromise of a dispute between himself and a person not a party to the suit. This was so held in Warrick v. Queen's College Oxford (L. Rep. 4 Eq. 254) where Lord Romilly, M.R. thus described the question before him "A plaintiff files a bill against the lord of a manor, claiming certain rights over certain commons within the manor. Previously to the bill being filed the lord of the manor entered into an agreement with certain other persons who claimed a right upon the land for the compromise of that claim; and the documents relating to that compromise are sought to be seen in this suit without the other persons who were parties to the compromise being parties to the suit. I am of opinion that that cannot be obtained. I express no opinion as to what might be the case if the War Office were parties to this suit; but I do not think the doctrines relating to privilege affect the question on this summons in the slightest degree. The question is, whether a person who claims property in the hands of the defendant is entitled to require the terms of, and the documents relating to, a compromise made between the defendant and a third person relating to the same property at an anterior period, to be produced without that other party to the compromise being before the court. I am of opinion that this court will not compel such production." [BLACKBURN, J.—That seems to go upon the technical ground that the party to the compromise should be made a party to the suit.] A compromise between two parties cannot be said to be in the exclusive possession of one of them and Lord Cottenham decided in Reid v. Langlois (1 M. & G. 627, at p. 636) that the authorities "show that where a document is not in the exclusive possession of a party, but is shared by somebody else jointly with him, the production cannot be ordered. This is a well established rule, and cannot be considered as now open to dispute." [BLACKBURN, J.—It does not appear that the other party to this compromise objects to its production; his right to do so under any circumstances may also be disputed.] My next point is that this compromise and the documents relating to it are not relevant to the issues in this action. If the admiralty suits had proceeded to judgment, the judgment, even if against the defendants here, could not have been received as evidence against them in this action. [FIELD, J.—The compromise may contain, what the judgment would not, an admission of liability.]

Cohen, Q.C. appeared for the plaintiff to support the judge's order.

BLACKBURN, J.—I do not think it is necessary to call upon Mr. Cohen. If we were to decide this on the question of the exclusive possession of this document, it would devolve upon the applicant to show that the other party to the compromise objected to its production; so it is not necessary to consider that matter here. The next objection to the inspection of this document was that it is not relevant to the action now to be tried; but if it should turn out to contain, as is probably the case, an admission by the defendants that they were negligent in the navigation of their ship, then it would be evidence to be used by anybody against them. In a case in this court, Richards v. Morgan (4 B. & S. 641) I expressed an opinion, which was overruled by the majority of the judges, that a statement made under the old Chancery system would not be taken as an admission against the person who made it. This is a far stronger case than that, and upon the decision of the court in that case there can be no doubt, to my mind, that the terms of this compromise may be adduced as evidence of any admission by the defendants relative to the issue in this action, which it may contain. We do not require to hear the plaintiffs, but as they have been brought here to answer this application, the motion must be refused with costs.

QUAIN and FIELD, JJ. concurred.

Motion refused.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Druce, Sons, and Jackson.

Solicitors for defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

C.P. Div.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[C.P. Div.]

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by J. M. LELY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

May 1, 12, and Nov. 2, 1875.

NUGENT v. SMITH.

Carrier by water—Whether liable as insurer for loss out of realm—Damage to horse by plunging from fright caused by storm—Whether storm "act of God"—How far all shipowners liable as common carriers.

The common law liability of a carrier attaches to a contract for carriage to a place without the realm. A loss occasioned by the act of God is a loss caused exclusively by a violent act of nature such as a carrier could not possibly foresee or resist the effect of.

It lies upon a carrier to show that a loss for which he would otherwise be liable was occasioned by the act of God.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant in London a mare to be carried by the defendant by steamer from London to Aberdeen, between which places the defendant advertised and habitually ran steamers. A storm arising during the voyage, the mare was so injured that she died. The jury found that the injury was caused partly by excessive bad weather, and partly by the fright and struggling of the mare, and they negatived all negligence on the part of the defendant.

Held that the defendant was liable, and a verdict having been entered for the defendant at the trial, a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff made absolute.

Semle, that all shipowners carrying goods for hire are liable as common carriers in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the written judgment of the court. The following is an outline of the arguments:

Holl and Douglass Walker, for the defendant, showed cause.

1. The defendant on his passage from a place within to a place without the realm is not a common carrier, so as to render him liable as an insurer for loss to goods which happens without the realm.

Coggs v. Barnard, 1 Sm. L. C. 6th edit. 177;
Morse v. Blue, 1 Mod. 85; Vent. 238; 2 Lev. 69;
Lane v. Cotton, 1 Lord Raym 654; 12 Mod. 472;
Barclay v. Y'gana, 3 Doug. 389;
Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27;
Crouch v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 14 C. B. 255; 23 L. J. 78, C. P.;
Bennett v. The Peninsular Steam Boat Company, 6 C. B. 775;
Jones on Bailments, p. 103;
Story on Bailments, ss. 489, 490;
Abbott on Shipping, 6th edit. 345;
Angell on Carriers, ss. 149—51.

2. Even if the defendant be liable as an insurer, the loss was caused by the act of God.

Forward v. Pittard (ubi sup.), per Lord Mansfield, C. J.;
Amies v. Stephens, 1 Str. 127;
Trent Navigation Company v. Wood, 3 Esp. 127;
Laurie v. Douglas, 15 M. & W. 746;
Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Company, L. Rep. 1 C. P. 612; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 711; affirmed on appeal L. Rep. 3 C. P. 476; 37 L. J. 205, C. P.; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 485; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 362;
Notara v. Henderson, L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 346; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 577; affirmed on appeal ante, vol. 1, p. 278; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 225; 41 L. J. 158, Q. B.; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 442;

3. The loss was so far due to the inherent qualities of the horse as to exempt the defendants from liability.

Kendall v. London and South-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 7 Ex. 373; 41 L. J. Rep. 184, Ex.; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735;
Blower v. Great Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 7 C. P. 755;

Cohen, Q.C. and Lanyon, for the plaintiff, supported the rule.—They referred to the above cases and also cited on the first point:

Lloyd v. Guibert, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 115;
Dale v. Hall, Wils. 281;
Laveroni v. Drury, 8 Ex. 166;
Kent's Commentaries, vol. 2, Lect. 11, p. 597;
Bacon Abr. tit Carriers (B.);
Parsons on Shipping vol. 1, 248 n.;
Lloyd v. General Iron Screw Collier Company, 3 H. & C. 284;
Bosson v. Sanfold, 2 Salk. 440;
Goff v. Clinkard, 1 Wils. 282 n.;
Elliot v. Russell, 10 John's Rep. 1;
Schiefelin v. Harvey, 6 John's Rep. 170;
Code Napoleon Art. 1784.

On the second point:

Oakley v. Portsmouth Company, 11 Ex. 618; 25 L. J. 99, Ex. per Martin, B. at p. 101;
McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wendall, 190;
Ferguson v. Brent, 12 Maryland 9;
Hill v. Sturgeon, 35 Missouri 212;
Redfield on Carriers p. 18.

And on the third point.

Kearney v. London, Brighton, &c., Railway Company, L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 411; 39 L. J. 200, Q. B.; 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 886; affirmed on appeal L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 411; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 913.

The substance of the various authorities cited sufficiently appears from the judgment.

Cour. adv. vult.

Nov. 2.—The following written judgment of the court (Brett and Denman, JJ.) was read by BRETT, J.—In this case, which was tried in London before Brett, J., the plaintiff delivered to the defendant's company in London a mare to be carried by steamer to Aberdeen. The defendant company advertised and habitually ran a line of steamers from London to Aberdeen. The mare was shipped without any bill of lading. At a part of the voyage, which was not determined by the evidence, the mare, during rough weather, was injured, and to such an extent that she died. There was a conflict of evidence as to the amount of care and skill exercised by the defendant's servants, and as to the conduct of the mare. The jury were asked: First, was the injury to the mare caused by negligence of the defendant's servants either in preparing for bad weather, or in attempting to save the mare from the consequences of bad weather? Answer, "No." Secondly, or was the injury caused solely by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling without any negligence of the defendant's servants? Answer, "No." Thirdly, or was the injury caused solely by perils of the sea, that is to say, by more than ordinary rough weather, without any negligence of the defendant's servants, or any fright and consequent struggling of the mare? Answer, "No." Fourthly, or was it caused partly by more than ordinary bad weather, and partly by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling, without any negligence of the defendant's servants? Answer, "Yes." Fifthly, were there any known means, though not ordinarily used in the carriage of horses by people of ordinary care and skill, by

The first question which arises is whether the contract is one of contract or of tort. If it is a contract, the law of contract applies; if it is a tort, the law of tort applies. The distinction is important because the law of contract is more liberal than the law of tort. In contract, the parties are free to make their own arrangements, subject to the general principles of law. In tort, the law is more restrictive, and the plaintiff must show that the defendant has done something which is wrongful in itself, or which is wrongful as to the plaintiff.

In the case of Cogge v. Bernard, the plaintiff claimed that the defendant was liable for the loss of his horse. The defendant argued that the loss was caused by the rough weather, and that he was not liable. The court held that the defendant was liable, because the loss was caused by the rough weather, and the defendant was not liable. The court said that the rough weather was an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more. The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more.

The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more. The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more.

The second question which arises is whether the contract is one of contract or of tort. If it is a contract, the law of contract applies; if it is a tort, the law of tort applies. The distinction is important because the law of contract is more liberal than the law of tort. In contract, the parties are free to make their own arrangements, subject to the general principles of law. In tort, the law is more restrictive, and the plaintiff must show that the defendant has done something which is wrongful in itself, or which is wrongful as to the plaintiff.

In the case of Riley v. Horne, the plaintiff claimed that the defendant was liable for the loss of his horse. The defendant argued that the loss was caused by the rough weather, and that he was not liable. The court held that the defendant was liable, because the loss was caused by the rough weather, and the defendant was not liable. The court said that the rough weather was an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more. The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more.

The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more. The court said that the rough weather was not an extraordinary natural occurrence, which human foresight could not foresee, nor human power could prevent. The court said that the rough weather was a peril of the sea, but nothing more.

Div.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[C.P. Div.]

r the whole be within the realm or part be and part without. Mors v. Slus (1 Vent. c. 2 Keb. 863) has always been treated as on that the same promise is implied when p is to go beyond sea as when she is always the realm. And so has Goff v. Clinkard in Dale v. Hall (1 Wils. 281); Crouch v. ondon and North-Western Railway (14 3. Rep. 255; s. c. 23 L. J. 73, U. P.) is ly to the same effect. And Kent, C.J. in r. Rossell (6 Johns. 170) lays it down in the st terms: "Masters and owners of vessels le as common carriers on the high seas as in port, and the argument of the ingenious for the defendant is not well supported in ition that the doctrine of common carriers e common law of England to be confined of transportation by water within the juris- d the realm, and that it does not apply arising out of the state. All the books and ases which touch this subject lay down the aurally and apply it as well to shipments to a foreign port as to internal commerce. If ter be chargeable as a common carrier for eceived to be transported beyond sea, it eem to be very extraordinary and idle for to regard him in that character only from e that the goods were received on board e had put to sea, and to regard him when from abroad as common carrier only from e that he entered within the jurisdiction of t. There is no colour of such a limitation u." It seems to us there is no answer to oning. In all these cases the undertaking ise is treated as one and indivisible. And of opinion that whether the promise is to be only in ships which are held out as com- rriers, or in all ships which carry goods for e promise or undertaking to be implied is, e principle and authority, one and indivi- nd applies precisely to the same extent to ourring in the part of the voyage beyond lm as to one occurring in the part within lm. If, therefore, it is right to say that the r of insurance attaches to a shipowner, e he holds himself out to be a common e the defendant's company, who did so hold ves out, were subject to the ordinary liability non carriers, and could not, in the absence other defence, absolve themselves on the at they may assume that the mare was beyond the realm. That some shipowners ; their business as to be within the defini- "common carriers," and to be properly so in every respect, is clear. This was stated v Slus (1 Vent. 190; s. c. 2 Keb. 866), in r. Bernard (2 Lord Raym. 909; s. c. Smith's g Cases, 177, 6th edit.), and has been in a ide of other cases. A general ship is, by re fact of being so put up, made in all s a common carrier, though she is going reign port: (Barclay v. Gona, 3 Dougl. d Lavaroni v. Drury, 8 Ex. Rep. 166; 2 L. J. 2, Ex.). It would be sufficient, re, in the present case to say that the nts were common carriers, and there- ; all events, subject to the liabilities of n carriers according to the common law. it was strongly argued that this is not al ground of their liability in the case of ners: that some shipowners who carry for hire are not common carriers, and yet are, in the absence of express contract, liable to the same extent as common carriers; that, in fact, all shipowners who carry goods for hire, whether they be common carriers or not, are, in the absence of express contract, made liable by implication by the common law to ensure the safe carriage and delivery of the goods entrusted to them, except against the act of God and the Queen's enemies; that the true ground of such liability in the case of the shipowner is not that they are common carriers, but that they are shipowners carrying goods for hire. It is not absolutely necessary, as we have pointed out, to determine this question in this case. But it is obviously one of great importance, and, as it was made a main point of argument, and was most ably argued, we think it right to give our judgment on it.

In order to determine whether there may not be some shipowners who carry goods for hire, and who, nevertheless, are not common carriers, we should determine exactly what it is that makes a man a common carrier.—"It is not every person who undertakes to carry goods for hire that is deemed a common carrier. A private person may contract with another for the carriage of his goods, and incur no responsibility beyond that of an ordinary bailee for hire, that is to say, the responsibility of ordinary diligence. To bring a person within the description of a common carrier he must exercise it as a public employ- ment: he must undertake to carry goods for persons generally; and he must hold himself out as ready to engage in the transportation of goods for hire, as a business, not as a casual occupa- tion pro hac vice. A common carrier has, there- fore, been defined to be one who undertakes for hire or reward to transport the goods of those as choose to employ him from place to place." Story on Bailments (sect. 495). In Fish v. Chap- man (2 Kelly's (Georgia) Rep. 353) it was held in what we venture to call a powerful and busi- ness-like judgment, that is, well applying the principles of the law to the business of the country, that "to constitute a man a common car- rier, the business of carrying must be habitual and not casual. The undertaking must be general, and for all people indifferently. He must thus assume to be the servant of the public; he must undertake for all people." When it is said that the owners and masters of ships are deemed common carriers it is to be understood of such ships as are employed as general ships or for the transportation of merchandise for persons in general, such as vessels employed in the coasting trade, or in general freighting business for all persons offering goods on freight or for the port of destination (See Story on Bailments, sect. 501). The real test of whether a man is a common carrier, whether by land or water, therefore, really is, whether he has held out that he will, so as long as he has room, carry for hire the goods of every person who will bring goods to him to be carried. The test is not whether he is carrying on a public employment, or whether he carries to a fixed place; but whether he holds out, either expressly or by a course of conduct, that he will carry for hire so long as he has room the goods of all persons indifferently who send him goods to be carried. If he does this, his first responsibility naturally is that he is bound by a promise implied by law to receive and carry for a reasonable price the goods sent to him upon such an invitation. This responsibility is not one adopted from the Roman law on grounds of policy: it arises according to the general principles which govern all implied promises. And his second responsibility, which arises upon reasons of policy, is that he carries the goods upon a contract of insurance. This policy has fixed this latter liability upon common carriers by land or water, not because they hold themselves out to carry for all persons indifferently; if that were all, there would be no ground for the policy, it would be without reason; many other persons hold themselves out to act in their trade and business for all persons indifferently who will employ them, and the policy in question is not applied to such trades; the policy is applied to the trade of common carriers, because, when the common law adopted that policy the business of common carriers in England was exercised in a particular manner and subject to particular conditions which called for the adoption of that policy. The question is, whether the policy has not been applied, not only to shipowners who are by their own act common carriers, but also to shipowners who are not common carriers. Whether a shipowner is or is not a common carrier must surely, upon principle, as from the cases and writings just quoted it appears to be on authority, depend on whether the shipowner holds himself out to carry for hire for all persons who may offer. But certainly many shipowners do not, in fact, do so. A shipowner who puts his ships into brokers' hands to procure a charter does not hold himself out to carry for the first person who offers; neither does a master who, in a foreign port, advertises that he is ready to enter into charters. The shipowner or master has a right to consider the credit and responsibility of the proposed charterer, and to reject his proposal if it be thought expedient. One who puts up his ship as a general ship does, by so doing, by the ordinary understanding of shipowners and merchants, hold himself out as ready to carry all reasonable goods brought to him, and so does a shipowner who runs a line of ships from ports to ports, habitually carrying all goods brought to him. It is admitted, therefore, that such are common carriers and liable to all the implied undertakings of common carriers. The question is whether other shipowners carrying goods for hire without express stipulation, though they are not liable to all the implied undertakings of common carriers, are not by the common law, for reasons of policy, made also liable to one of those implied undertakings.

The solution of this question will, we think, depend upon a consideration of the time at which and the reason for which the liability in question was introduced into the common law. No one who has read the treatise of Mr. Justice Story on Bailments, the essay of Sir William Jones, and the judgment of Lord Holt on Cogge v. Bernard (2 Lord Raym, 909; s. c. 1 Smith's Leading Cases 177, 6th edition) can doubt that the common law of England as to bailments is founded upon, though it has not exactly adopted, the Roman law. It is true that Lord Holt rests, as for authority, solely on Bracton, but the treatise of Bracton adopts all the divisions of the Roman law in the very words of the Roman text, and further adopts the exception of the Roman law and the Roman reasons for it. The divisions may be the logical divisions of the subject, and so be naturally adopted by all in every country who treat the subject logically; but the exception both in the Roman empire and in England was no natural exception, but one depending entirely on public policy arising from the manner in which some particular kinds of business were carried on in both places. It is obvious, therefore, that Bracton, or English judges before him, adopted into the English the Roman law. By the primary divisions of the law of bailment in the Roman law and as enumerated by Lord Holt, those who carry goods for hire are, unless they are within the exception alluded to, liable only as other bailees for hire, that is to say, they are bound to ordinary diligence and to a reasonable exercise of skill, and of course are not responsible for any losses not occasioned by the ordinary negligence of themselves or their servants (Story on Bailments sect. 437), but those that are within the exception are liable to insurers, &c. The question, therefore, is, what shipowners are brought within the exception? That exception was in the Roman law contained in the well-known edict of the Prætor, and the reason for its promulgation was contained in the commentary of Ulpian: "Ait Prætor, nautæ, caupones, stabularii(a), &c.," that is to say, shipmasters and the class of persons who carried on the business of innkeepers. If the proposition contained in the exceptional edict is to be considered as adopted straight and in terms into the common law, it is not some shipmasters, but all shipmasters, who are by the terms of it made liable to the greater liability. Carriers, it will be observed, are not mentioned, and certainly not a limited class of carriers called afterwards common carriers. The "Roman edict," says Story, "it will be at once perceived, does not extend in terms to carriers by land. But, in most, if not in all, modern countries the rule which it prescribes has been practically expounded so as to include them." (sect. 458). It required, of course, authority customary, and thence judicial or parliamentary, to introduce into the common law the original rules and the exception as applicable to any case. But, if the exception was to be introduced at all, to what would it naturally be first applied? It would seem that naturally it would first be applied to the trades or businesses which were carried on in England under the same names and conditions as formerly in the Roman Empire. Modern innkeepers probably carry on the same business as both the stabularii and caupones did in the olden time. The two trades, therefore, carried on in England under the same conditions as the three enumerated in the edict were the shipmasters and innkeepers. The conditions which had induced the Prætor as matter of policy to hold them to strict liability in Rome, were the same conditions as existed in the mode of carrying on the same business in England. The conditions on which the Prætor had acted with regard to shipmasters were not conditions confined to a certain limited portion of shipmasters, those conditions existed in the case of all. When then the

(a) The word "stabularii" here is evidently used in the second sense given for it in Facciolati and Forcellini's Lexicon (sub verbo), "Qui mercede homines eorumque, jumenta hospitio hospitio excipit." Passages from Ulpian, Seneca, and Apuleius clearly showing that the word was used to describe a person almost identical in character with a modern innkeeper, are cited by the authors, who add to the above definition the remark, "Nam stabulum tum ad jumenta pertinet, tum ad homines." (See Bailey's edition, 1828.—Note by Deane, J

C.P. Div.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[C.P. Div.]

English judges, acting at first no doubt on the general understanding of all merchants and shipowners, adopted into the common law the exception of the Roman law, there is no reason which can be suggested why they should not and did not adopt it in its terms as applicable, not to a limited portion of, but to all shipmasters carrying goods for hire. Afterwards, according to the ordinary course of English law, the judges would have to consider whether some other trade or business was not to be in England introduced into the exception. They found a trade established in England, namely, "the trade of common carriers," which was so carried on, by reason of the state of the country, as to be within the principle or conditions of the exception, and therefore they added that trade to those already within the exception. Common carriers would not be introduced because they carried the goods of all persons indifferently, but, because those who so carried goods at that time were within the mischief dealt with by the Prætor. If this be a true view, shipmasters and shipowners were not introduced because they were common carriers, but because they were shipmasters and shipowners, and therefore all shipmasters and shipowners were comprised in the exception when it was recognised and introduced by judicial decisions. Common carriers by land were added afterwards, because their business was subject to the same conditions as was the business of all carrying shipmasters and shipowners. Many attempts have been made to introduce into the exception other trades, as wharfingers, forwarding agents, carters, &c.; but all such attempts have failed, because those trades, although in respect of their being public or common trades they are similar to the trade of common carriers, are not similar to it in those respects in which it was similar to the trades of shipmasters and innkeepers. Unless there is something in the authority which binds us to determine that only such shipowners as made themselves common carriers were brought within the exception, reason, and consideration seem to us to show that all shipmasters and owners carrying goods for hire were from the beginning brought within it. Innkeepers were probably judicially declared to be within it first in Calys's Case (1 Smith's Leading Cases 105, 6th edit.) Shipowners were first judicially declared to be within it in Morse v. Slue (1 Vent. 190; s. c. 2 Keb. 866). The facts of that case, as stated in the special verdict in Ventris p. 190, lead, one would think, strongly to the conclusion that she was a general ship; but, as has been observed by Blackburn, J. in the Liver Alkali Company v. Johnson (43 L. J. 216, Ex.; s. c. L. Rep. 9 Ex. 338), the count is general, and states that "according to the law and custom of England masters and governors of ships which go from London beyond sea and take upon them to carry goods beyond sea, are bound to keep safely," &c. This statement is certainly in terms applicable to all ships, and not only to ships acting as common carriers, and therefore the case has generally been considered as a decision upon the liability of all ships. So in Dale v. Hall (1 Wils. 281) the declaration was not against the defendant as a common carrier, but upon a promise to be implied from the fact of his being a shipmaster receiving goods to be carried for hire. So in Goff v. Olinkard quoted in Dale v. Hall (1 Wils. 281) there is no statement whatever that the ship was a general ship. We think it worthy of notice that Lord Holt in the careful judgment in Coggs v. Bernard (2 Lord Raym. 909; s. c. 1 Smith's Leading Cases 177, 6th edit.) in which his words would be well weighed, speaks thus: "And this is the case of the common carrier"—common hoyman, master of a ship, &c. He does not include the shipmaster in the class of common carriers; he treats him as a separate and independent class. And speaking of him he uses a phrase which includes all shipmasters and does not confine the class to those shipmasters only who trade as common carriers. Blackburn, J. treats the case of Lyon v. Mells (4 East, 428) as a strong authority in favour of the enlarged liability of a bargeowner without determining whether such bargeowner was a common carrier or not. And the judgment of the majority of the judges in the Liver Alkali Company v. Johnson (23 L. J. 216, Ex.; L. Rep. 9 Ex. 338) seems to be a strong authority in favour of the liability being attached to all shipmasters or owners carrying goods for hire, by reason of their decision that the defendant in that case was liable without determining whether he was a common carrier or not. In Barclay v. Y'gana (1 Doug. 389) it is true that the ship was a general ship, but Lord Mansfield does not decide the case on the ground that the defendant was a common carrier. He says: "It is impossible to distinguish this from the case of a common carrier. In Bell's Commentaries, c. 4, par. 14, p. 157, it is said: 'As to particular ships freighted specially, unless there be a specific agreement the edict applies.'" In Schiefflein v. Harvey (6 Johns. 170) it seems impossible to say whether the ship was a general ship. There was a bill of lading, but that does not determine the point. The judgment is, however, general. The masters and owners are responsible for every injury that might have been prevented by human foresight or energy. The judgment of Kent, C.J. in Elliott v. Rossel (10 Johns. 1) is also as strong and general as can be. "In short," he says, "it must be regarded as a settled point in the English law that masters and owners of vessels are liable in port and at sea and abroad to the whole extent of inland carriers, except so far as they are exempted by the exceptions in the contract of charter-party or bill of lading or by statute." Certainly these are terms which seem to show that in the mind of the Chief Justice all masters of all sea-going ships were so liable, and not only those who had made themselves common carriers, and thereby liable to carry the goods of all persons. And it seems impossible to account for the almost universal use of bills of lading by all sea-going ships, if a great number of them, namely, all who were not common carriers, would only be answerable for negligence, for which they are answerable notwithstanding the bill of lading. The exceptions in a bill of lading are exceptions out of a generally recognised absolute liability which it is generally considered would exist if those exceptions were not inserted.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the true rule is that every shipowner or master who carries goods on board his vessel for hire is, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, liable by implication by the common law of England, adopting the law of Rome, by reason of his acceptance of the goods to be carried, to the liability of an insurer, except as against the act of God or the Queen's enemies. It is not only such shipowners as have made themselves in all senses common carriers who are so liable; but all shipowners who carry goods for hire, whether inland, coastways, or abroad, outward or inward. They are all within the exception to the general law of bailments which was adopted into the common law from the Roman law. The liability of the defendant's company, therefore, was that of insurers except against the act of God and the Queen's enemies, not because they were common carriers, but because they carried the plaintiff's mare in their ship for hire. We should take notice that our view differs from some few passages in Story, as in sect. 501 and in sect. 504. But the note to sect. 501 seems to intimate a doubt after all whether the section is correct, and the cases quoted in support of sect. 504 do not affect the case before us.

C.P. Div.] GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY. [EX. DIV.]

We have next to determine whether the loss in this case can be said to have occurred "by the act of God." Many definitions of this phrase have been attempted. Many cases have decided the occurrences which cannot in law be considered to come within it. The matter is fully treated in Story on Bailments, sect. 511, and the notes to it in Angell on Carriers, sect. 154, and subsequent sections. The definition to be extracted from all the cases is said to be best given in a note to Coggs v. Bernard (2 Lord Raym. 909 s. c. 1 Smith's Leading Cases 177, 6th edition in the American edition by Mr. Wallace of Smith's Leading Cases. The best form of the definition seems to us to be that the damage or loss in question must have been caused directly and exclusively by such a direct and violent and sudden and irresistible act of nature as the defendant could not, by any amount of ability foresee would happen, or if he could foresee that it would happen, could not by any amount of care and skill resist so as to prevent its effect. It lies upon the defendant to show that a damage or loss for which he would otherwise be liable is brought within this exception. We cannot say, notwithstanding the inability of the jury to agree to an answer to the fifth question left to them, that the defendant has in this case satisfied the evidence of proof cast upon him, so as to bring himself clearly within the definition. It seems to us impossible to say that no human ability could foresee the reasonable probability of the happening of rough weather on the voyage, and that a horse at sea might be frightened by it, or that no human ability could prevent injury to a frightened horse in such weather as occurred. We think also that the fright of the mare was a natural and probable result of the rough sea, a fright likely to happen in the case of an ordinary horse, and cannot be considered such a vice in the inherent nature of this particular mare as to absolve the defendant. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed and that the rule must be made absolute to enter the verdict for the plaintiff.

Rule absolute.(a)

Solicitors: Lyne and Holman for plaintiff; Lawrance, Plews, Boyer, and Co. for defendant.

(a) An appeal against this decision has been recently heard, and the Court of Appeal has taken time to consider its judgment.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Reported by H. LEIGH and A. PAWSON, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Nov. 17 and 26, 1875.

GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY.

Marine insurance—"At and from P. to N., and for fifteen days there after arrival"—Loss in port during the fifteen days and after discharge of cargo—Ship having begun to take in cargo for another voyage—Deviation.

Under a policy of insurance on ship "at and from P. to N. and for fifteen days there after arrival," the ship sailed from P. and arrived on the 4th Dec. at N., where she completed the discharge of her inward cargo at a certain part of the port on the 13th Dec. Being under charter to load a cargo of coals she took on board two keels of that cargo as a stiffening, and moved to another part of the port to complete her loading. Before the expiration of the fifteen days she was damaged by a hurricane.

Held by the majority of the Court (Kelly, C.B., and Amphlett, B.), on the authority of Shree v. Williams (3 Campb. 469), and Hammond v. Reid (4 B. & Ald. 72), that the insurance was for a voyage from P. to N., which was completed when the cargo was discharged; and though the ship might, under the policy, have remained for the fifteen days within the port of N., yet the proceeding to another part of the port and taking on board, during the fifteen days, a portion of a cargo for a new voyage, was in effect the beginning of a new voyage and a deviation, being foreign to the purposes for which the port of N. might be used for the voyage insured, and that, therefore, the assured could not recover.

Held contra (by Cleasby, B.), that this was a voyage policy from P. to N., with a time policy super-added for the fifteen days after arrival whilst in the port; that the loss in question was clearly within the words of the policy; and, there being nothing to prevent these words from having their natural and ordinary meaning, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

This action was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants upon a policy of insurance effected by the plaintiffs with the defendants for the insurance of the sum of 600*l.* on a certain ship of the plaintiffs' called the Mosquito, valued at 1500*l.*; and by consent of parties, and order of Pigott, B. dated the 1st Aug. 1874, according to the Common Law Procedure Act 1852, there was stated for the opinion of the court, without any pleadings, the following

SPECIAL CASE.

1. The said ship, of which the plaintiffs were and are the owners, was by the said policy of insurance, bearing date the 22nd Nov. 1873, insured to the amount of 600*l.* This policy is hereunto annexed, and is to be taken as part of this case.

The policy was in the usual form, for 600*l.* as ship as above mentioned, and the only part of it that is material to be here stated is, that it was expressed to be an insurance on the said ship, "at and from the port of Pomaron to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and for fifteen days whilst there, after arrival." The policy bore a 3*s.* stamp.

2. The said ship, under a charter-party dated the 30th July 1873, left the port of Pomaron in the said policy mentioned, on her said voyage

DIV.] GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY. [EX. DIV.]

n mentioned, and arrived on the 4th Dec. n safety at Newcastle. On the 13th Dec., at , she completed the discharge of her inward at a certain place in the port of Newcastle. he said vessel having been on the 8th Dec. chartered to load in the River Tyne a cargo ls for delivery at Gibraltar, and having re- on board two keels of the same as a stiffen- as, on the 15th of the said month of Dec., l to the Killingnorth Colliery loading place River Tyne, there to complete her loading, as there wold and properly moored head and ern in a tier, to wait her turn to go under ading spout.

said loading place is at Wallsend, which is four miles from the town of Newcastle, in arish of St. Nicholas, Newcastle, and is the said port of Newcastle, and within the t popularly known by and amongst mercan- en as Newcastle.

On the evening of the last-mentioned day it heavily from the westward; and for better ty, at about 11 p.m., a bower anchor was let der foot, and the chain ranged upon deck or running; and on the morning of the 16th said month of December 1873, the wind ind- to hurricane force, and at about 4 a.m., to its irresistible violence the mooring post quay, to which the vessel's head moorings eured, broke, causing her to become adrift d and likely to capsize. Thereupon the mooring was instantly cut to facilitate the essel swinging to her anchor; but notwith- ing this she quickly capsized, filled and sunk same day and alongside the said quay.

he said ship was subsequently raised, but und to be very seriously damaged. In raising eedful craft, including steam tugs, slings, ing chains, and all necessary materials and nces, including powerful pumping apparatus, provided, together with a large number of le hands; and, under the circumstances, of the stores and materials of the said vessel, ing a bower anchor, were washed off the nd lost, and the cabin and fore-castle gutted, rniture and fittings destroyed and washed as also provisions and stores, and various id damage sustained in relation to the ap- and other effects of the crew; and, during vice of raising and righting the said vessel, y of her materials, including canvas, spars, and rigging, were unavoidably seriously destroyed, and lost; also two holes were dis- d in her port bow, and the vessel was much bered with mud and other material, and it e necessary to place her in a dry dock for mposes of survey and repair.

question for the opinion of the court is, er the plaintiffs are, under the above stated instances, entitled to recover against the lants upon the said policy of insurance in t of the said loss. If the court shall be of n in the affirmative, then judgment shall be d up for the plaintiffs for 42*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* and of suit. If the court shall be of opinion in agative, then judgment of nol. pros., with of defence, shall be entered up for the de- its.

nts for argument on the part of the iffs:—

hat in the case of a policy of insurance upon at and from one port to another, and for a certain specified period of time there after arrival, the risk continues during the whole period of time so specified.

2. That a policy of insurance is not vacated by the ship changing her moorings within the same harbour during such period.

3. That the policy being stamped as a "time policy" covers the risk during the fifteen days after the ship's arrival in Newcastle, irrespective of how she may be employed during those fifteen days.

4. That as the fifteen days had not expired when the vessel was lost, the loss was covered by the policy.

The defendants' points for argument:—

1. That the clause in the policy, "and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival," only covers the vessel whilst lying at Newcastle-on-Tyne for the purposes of the voyage insured and for discharging her inward cargo, and does not cover her if, after having discharged her inward cargo, she is engaged in a fresh adventure entirely unconnected with the voyage insured.

2. That the loading on board the said vessel, after she had discharged her inward cargo at Newcastle-on-Tyne, of two keels of coals, and moving her from her berth (at which she had discharged her inward cargo) to the Killingnorth Colliery, for the purpose of completing the loading of her outward cargo, was in fact the beginning of a fresh adventure, entirely unconnected with the voyage insured, and that therefore the risk under the policy was at an end before the happening of the loss.

Nov. 17.—Gully, for the plaintiffs: The point here is a very short and simple one, turning simply on the meaning of the words in the policy, "at and from the port of Pomaron to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival." The defendants contend that the words "fifteen days" do not mean "fifteen days" if the cargo happened to be discharged, as it was in this case, before the expiration of that period. The vessel arrived in port on the 4th Dec., and on the 13th had completed the discharge of her cargo, and then had six days remaining of the time, namely, until the 19th Dec., during which she was covered by the express words of the policy, the loss occurring on the 16th, three days before the expiration of the limited period. He was stopped, and

Cohen, Q.C. (with him was Crawford) was called upon contra for the defendants.—No doubt, if the words of the policy are literally interpreted, the plaintiffs might in one point of view be entitled to recover. But the old cargo having been discharged on the 13th Dec. and a new voyage and risk having been commenced on the 15th Dec., the question is, whether or not there was an alteration of risk, and what in insurance law is called a "deviation." The voyage contemplated by the parties to this policy was completed, and the cargo discharged. The policy, so to speak, was then exhausted, and a new risk, which it was never intended that the policy should cover, was undertaken. The policy should be construed fairly and liberally in accordance with the intention of the parties: (The Teutonia, L. Rep. 4 P.C. 171; ante, vol. 1, p. 214.) [Kelly, C.B.—The words are "for fifteen days whilst there."] That means the spot in the port where she is discharging her cargo. What the policy means is "fifteen days" after the ship is moored and anchored, and if so, that is moored and anchored for the purpose of discharging her cargo. This is not a time policy, but a voyage policy. If, during the fifteen days the ship goes out of her way, and does that which was not contemplated by the parties, then there is a deviation. Suppose, for instance, that after discharging her original cargo she had gone to another part of the port and loaded a cargo for Africa, and had started to sail on her voyage, and been lost in her course down the river, but still in the port within the fifteen days, could it for a moment be said that she would then have been covered by this policy? But that is no more than has been done here. She was proceeding on a new adventure and taking a new risk. [KELLY, C.B.—What more risk is incurred in one part of the port than in another? CLEASBY, B.—The increase of risk is not material in a case of deviation. AMPHLETT, B.—It has been held that where a policy is on a voyage from A. to B., with liberty to deviate to C., the deviation to C. must be for a purpose connected with the original adventure.] That is so, and here the proceeding to another part of the port was not connected in any way with the original voyage or adventure. It was an entirely new adventure and risk, not covered by the terms of the policy.

EX. DIV.] GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY. [EX. DIV.]

Gully, in reply.—The court is asked by the defendants, as a matter of law, to insert in this policy, after the words in question, the words "or until she has discharged her cargo, whichever shall first happen." The meaning of the words is a matter of mercantile custom, and as Cleasby, B. observed it was for a jury. There is nothing said about a voyage, but that the insurance shall continue for fifteen days after arrival in port, whilst there. All that can be said is that the parties have so agreed. The policy was stamped as a time policy (30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, s. 11), thereby clearly showing what was intended. [KELLY, C.B.—Have you considered the question of deviation, and its effect on the risk? (Williams v. Shes, 3 Campb. 469)] This was not a deviation. If the parties have agreed that the risk shall attach for fifteen days after arrival in port, then it is no matter what the ship may be doing, and deviation is not in that case a material consideration. No ship-owner on reading this policy would think it necessary to take out a fresh policy until after the 19th Dec., the expiration of the fifteen days. If it is put as a matter of law, there are the express words of the policy. If not, then it was for the defendants to raise the question as a matter of fact for the jury what those words mean.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 28.—The following judgments were now pronounced:

KELLY, C.B.—The policy of insurance in this case was upon a voyage from a foreign port to Newcastle, with liberty to stay there fifteen days after arrival in that port.

The loss in question is certainly within the literal terms of the condition in the policy, having occurred within fifteen days after the arrival of the ship at Newcastle. But the insurance, even if the policy be deemed a time policy, is "at and from the port of Pomaron to Newcastle, and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival." It is, therefore, an insurance for that voyage; and it appears to me that, when the cargo was discharged, the voyage was completed and at an end; and although the ship might, within the policy, have remained for the whole of the fifteen days within the port of Newcastle, the proceeding to another part of the port and there taking on board a portion of a cargo for a new voyage, was in effect the beginning of a new voyage and a deviation, being foreign to the purposes for which the port of Newcastle might be used for the voyage insured.

The cases of Williams v. Shes (3 Campb. 469) and Hammond v. Reid (4 B. & Ald. 72), appear to me to establish the principle that it is a deviation to resort to, or to use the ship within a port covered by the policy for purposes unconnected with the voyage insured: (see also 1 Arnould on Insurance, 4th edit., p. 443.) (a) I think therefore, that the taking the coals on board at the part of the port in question was as much a deviation as if the ship, after the taking goods on board for a new voyage, had sailed upon such voyage several miles down the river, and been lost within a few yards of its mouth, but within the limits of the port of Newcastle.

It was contended at the bar in argument that this was a time policy, and it may in one sense be taken to be so—and it appeared, indeed, that it bore the stamp required for a time policy. But that were so it was still a time policy, not for any voyage or voyages which the ship might undertake, but, upon a voyage from Pomaron to Newcastle, and then for fifteen days in the port of Newcastle.

I see no reason why the principle of the case to which I have adverted should be departed from. Those cases show that, where the insurance is upon a voyage or voyages, with liberty to go to or touch at other ports or places, yet if the ship should touch at those ports for purposes foreign to the voyage or voyages enumerated and specified in the policy, it would be held to be a deviation, and consequently that the assured could not recover. I think these principles applicable to the case before the court, and that the taking of a cargo or part of a cargo on board for another and a different voyage was as much a deviation as if, upon a time policy for a year, upon a voyage between Dover and Newcastle, the ship had gone to Calais and taken a cargo on board there.

I think, therefore, that our judgment must be for the defendants. My brother Amphlett concurs in this opinion, and in the reasons assigned for it.

CLEASBY, B.—I cannot agree with the conclusion arrived at by my Lord and my brother Amphlett in this case, because I think the language of the policy is quite clear, and I do not see any reason why the court should depart from it.

The insurance, as expressed in the policy, was of the ship "at and from the port of Pomaron to Newcastle-upon-Tyne." So far that would be an ordinary

(a) The passage in Arnould, referred to by the learned Chief Baron, is as follows: Speaking of time policies the learned writer says:—"The purpose for which a job is visited must be within the scope of the adventure contemplated by the policy, otherwise the visit will be a deviation, notwithstanding the port visited is within the terms of the policy. However extensive may be the language of the clause, 'the permission to stay 'for any purpose whatever' must be for some purpose within the scope of the adventure." (per Gibbs, C.J., in London v. Alnutt, 4 Taunt. 510, 519.) "The liberty in the policy must always be construed with reference to the scope of the voyage insured." (per Lord Mansfield in Williams v. Shes, 3 Campb. 469.)

Ex. Div.]

THE M. MOXHAM.

[ADM.]

voyage policy; but then it goes on, "and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival." In my opinion the policy covered the fifteen days within the port of Newcastle after arrival there, although the vessel had completed the discharge of her original cargo, and had begun to prepare to take in another cargo, and indeed had, as appears, taken in part of another cargo for the purpose of stiffening in crossing the port. The policy was a voyage policy, with its usual incidents as to deviation and other matters, so far as regards the voyage from Pomaron to Newcastle; but, after that voyage was ended, the parties added a time policy, for "fifteen days whilst in the port of Newcastle after arrival." That, I think, is plainly nothing more or less than a time policy for fifteen days, and those words are not, in my opinion, affected by the fact that there is, in the same document, an insurance on a voyage. I cannot agree that this policy was intended to cover only the time occupied in discharging the cargo; if that had been intended, it should, and no doubt would, have been plainly provided for; on the contrary, I think that it was intended to give the assured the benefit of the policy, so far as any lawful engagement was concerned, for the period of fifteen days in the port of Newcastle, however the ship might be employed; whether in doing, nothing or preparing for another cargo, or in removing to another part of the port, or in taking in another cargo for another voyage.

It appears that what took place was that the captain when he had cleared his previous cargo had to get another cargo as quickly as possible; and in order to do that he had to cross the port to a place where the vessels remain in tiers, and take their turn at the staiths or loading spouts. He had discharged his previous cargo; it was necessary, before he could cross the port, that his vessel should be stiffened, and so, instead of ballast, he took on board two keels' load of coals for that purpose, which would, of course, form part of his future cargo. It appears to me to be immaterial whether he went in ballast or had a stiffening of coals; the act remains the same; the ship was thus lawfully engaged in the ordinary work in which a ship would be engaged in the port under the circumstances. Whilst waiting for her turn at the coaling staith, and during the limited fifteen days, the storm occurred which caused the loss which gave rise to the present action.

Our attention was called during the argument to the fact that the policy bore on the face of it a double stamp, and that it was properly stamped; therefore, both as a voyage policy and as a time policy. I cannot myself understand why this case should be regarded differently from time policies generally; and if I am right in reading this as a time policy, then the objection raised by the defendants, that this was a "deviation," does not apply. In treating of time policies, in his work on Marine Insurances, Mr. Arnould says (vol. 1, 4th edit., p. 349): "In such policies the risk insured is entirely independent of the voyage of the ship (iter navis); and the policy covers any voyage whatever which the ship may make, and any loss or damage which she may sustain by the perils insured against within the space of time limited in the policy."

My Lord and my brother Amphlett think this is not a time policy, in which case the argument as to the fifteen days is simple and complete, but I cannot agree with them. I think it is clearly a time policy, and therefore the nature of the risk is immaterial, and that being so, it appears to me that this loss is clearly within the words of the policy, and occurred during the time covered by it, and by reason of the perils insured against, and that there is nothing to prevent the words from having their natural and ordinary meaning, and that, consequently, the assured (the plaintiffs) are entitled to recover. I say nothing as to the question which might have arisen if the vessel had not regularly prosecuted the voyage from Pomaron to Newcastle.

Judgment for the defendants. (a)

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, W. W. Wynne, agent for Forshaw and Hawkins, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Freshfields and Williams.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by JAMES F. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

July 27 and 29, and Nov. 2, 1875.

(Before Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.)

THE M. MOXHAM.

Damage done by a ship to realty abroad—Pleading—Governing law—Jurisdiction.

The question of liability of a shipowner proceeded against in the English Admiralty Court for an injury done by his ship to a pier projecting into the sea, but attached to the soil of a foreign country is governed by English law and not by the lex loci; hence a plea that by the lex loci a shipowner is not liable for the negligent acts of the master and mariners in charge of his ship is no defence to an action in rem for the recovery of damages in respect of injuries done by the ship to a pier in a foreign country.

Semble, that the English Admiralty Court has jurisdiction over an action for damage or trespass to realty situate upon the soil of a foreign country, such damage being done by a British ship upon the sea within the ebb and flow of the tide.

THIS was a cause of damage instituted on behalf of the Marbella Iron Company (Limited) against the steamship M. Moxham and her owners intervening. The case now came before the court on motion made on behalf of the plaintiffs to strike out certain portions of the defendants' answer to the petition. The plaintiffs' petition as it originally stood was so far as material as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the Marbella Iron Ore Company (Limited), an English Joint Stock Company established under the Companies' Act 1862, and the Acts incorporated therewith for the purpose among other things of exporting ore from Marbella, in the country of Spain, to England and other places. The offices of the company are at No. 1, Crown Buildings, Queen Victoria-street, in the City of London. The plaintiffs were, at the time of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, possessed of a pier situate at Marbella aforesaid for the purpose of shipping iron ore on board ships.

2. About 8.30 a.m. on the 5th Oct. 1874, the steamship M. Moxham came to Marbella for the purpose of loading iron ore from the said pier of the plaintiffs. There was scarcely any wind at the time, and the sea was perfectly smooth and there was no current.

3. Those on board the M. Moxham instead of keeping clear of the pier as they could and might easily have done so negligently navigated the said steamship that she approached and came into violent collision with the said

(a) The plaintiffs have given notice of appeal from this decision.

[ADM.]

THE M. MOZHAM.

[ADM.]

pier, and carried away the whole head of the pier, causing enormous damage to it, and throwing several trucks laden with iron ore into the sea.

4. The aforesaid collision and the damages consequent thereon were occasioned by the negligence and improper navigation of those on board the M. Mozham.

5. The plaintiffs, in addition to the expense of repairing the pier, have sustained and will sustain considerable damages by reason of being called upon to pay demurrage to divers ships at the time of the said collision under charter to load iron ore at the said pier, and by reason of extra expense incurred in the shipment of iron during the repair of the said pier, and extra freight in consequence of the delay in loading vessels.

The answer filed on behalf of the defendants, the owners of the M. Mozham, was so far as material as follows:

Parker and Clarke, solicitors, for Ebenezer Carry, &c., the owners of the steamship or vessel M. Mozham, the defendants in this cause say as follows:

1. They deny so much of the first article of the petition as alleges that the plaintiffs were possessed of the Marvella pier in the said petition mentioned, [and they say that the said pier was at the time of the said collision annexed to, and that it formed part of the land of Spain, and that this Honourable Court has not jurisdiction to entertain this suit].

2. They say that the said alleged collision was not a violent one, and that it took place owing to the current, and the shallowness of the water near the said pier preventing the M. Mozham from answering her helm, as but for such matters she would have done, and that the said alleged collision was not occasioned by any negligent navigation of the M. Mozham, but was the result of inevitable accident.

3. They further say that the said pier was so weakly and insufficient and improperly constructed and fastened as not to be capable of sustaining contacts from such ships as the M. Mozham necessarily incidental to their going alongside the said pier for the purposes in the said petition stated, and that the said alleged collision was a usual and ordinary contact necessarily incidental to the M. Mozham going alongside the said pier for the said purposes, and one which the said pier ought, if properly and sufficiently constructed and fastened, to have sustained without being damaged, and no more, and that the said alleged damage was wholly occasioned by the said pier having been so weakly, and insufficiently, and improperly constructed and fastened, and not otherwise.

4. They further say that the said alleged collision happened within the territory and jurisdiction of Spain, [and that the said pier at the time of the collision was annexed to and formed part of the land of Spain] and that if the said collision was occasioned by any negligence or improper navigation of those on board the M. Mozham, it was solely occasioned by the negligence of the master or mariners of the M. Mozham, and not by the defendants or any of them, and that by the law of Spain in force at the time and place of the said collision, the master and mariners of the ship, and not the ship or her owners are liable in damages in respect of a collision occasioned as in the petition alleged, and by such law neither the M. Mozham nor the defendants nor any of them are or is liable in respect of the damages proceeded for in this cause.

5. They deny the truth of the fifth article of the said petition, and further say that the said article is irrelevant as being matter only for the registrar in the event of a reference.

6. The defendants further say that by the law of Spain in force at the time and place of the said collision, wherever the owner of a ship has become liable in damages by reason of the act or default of the master of such ship, such owner is not liable in damages beyond the value of such ship, and her freight being earned at the time of the commission of such act or default, and can fully discharge such liability by abandoning such ship and freight to the person claiming such damages, or by paying to such person the full value of such ship and freight, and the defendants say that if they are liable to the plaintiffs in respect of the collision in the said petition mentioned, they have so become liable by the act or default of the master of the M. Mozham and not otherwise, and that by the said law of Spain in force as aforesaid, they are not liable to the plaintiff in respect of the said collision beyond the value of the M. Mozham and her freight being carried at the time of the said collision, and are entitled to fully discharge such liability by abandoning the M. Mozham and her said freight to the plaintiffs or by paying to the plaintiffs the full value of the M. Mozham and her freight being carried as aforesaid.

And the said Parker and Clarke pray the Right Honourable the Judge to pronounce against the damage proceeded for, and to dismiss the defendants and their bail from all further observance of justice in this suit, and to condemn the plaintiffs in costs, or to pronounce that the defendants are not liable to the plaintiffs in respect of such damage beyond the value of the M. Mozham and her freight being carried at the time of the said collision, and that they are entitled to discharge such liability by abandoning the M. Mozham and her freight, or by paying the full value thereof to the plaintiffs, and that further and otherwise right and justice may be administered to the defendants in the premises.

July 27, 1875.—The plaintiffs now moved the court (as stated in their notice of motion) "to strike out so much of Article 1 of the answer filed herein as alleges that this honourable court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and also article 4 of the said answer on the ground that the same are improper and irrelevant, and bad in substance and also on the ground stated in the affidavit of Charles Cydwelyn Ellis to be read on the hearing of this motion." The affidavit referred to in the notice of motion stated that the collision having occurred on the 5th Oct. 1874, the M. Mozham was arrested a few days after by process issuing out of the proper tribunal in Spain; that at the time of the collision the M. Mozham was under charter, and upon the vessel being arrested the defendants communicated with the plaintiffs, with a view of procuring the release of the ship, and thereupon in order to obtain the said release an agreement was made between the plaintiffs and defendants, and also between the plaintiff and the captain of the M. Mozham at his request, and with the authority of the defendants, that the said vessel should be released, and that the liability of the defendants for the alleged negligence of the ship should be determined by proceedings in the English Courts; that upon the faith of this agreement the M. Mozham was released, and was allowed to be loaded and sailed for England for the benefit of the owners and charterers; that it was contrary to good faith and the true intent and meaning of the said agreement that the defendants should attempt to set up as a defence that the court had no jurisdiction. The words of the answer between brackets thus [ ] were added or struck out by agreement between the parties at the hearing as shown in the course of the argument.

Butt, Q.C. and Benjamin, Q.C. (Johnstone with them) for the plaintiff in support of the motion.—An action will not lie in this country for a trespass to realty committed abroad (Doulson v. Mathews, 4 R. 503), and consequently if this were a common law action it might be said that there is no jurisdiction; but the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (34 Vict. c. 10, s. 7) gives "jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship," and this wholly apart from any question of the action being local or transitory. In The Uhla (L. Rep. 2 Adm. & Ecc. p. 29, n.; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 89; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 148) a ship was condemned for the damage done to Falmouth Pier; if the action had been at common law and the venue had been laid in Middlesex, and it had appeared that the loss was in Cornwall, the plaintiff would have been out

[ADM.]

THE M. MOXHAM.

[ADM.]

suited; but in admiralty no such course could be taken: the court held that it had jurisdiction under the Act, and no question was raised as to the local venue. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Foreign courts do not try local actions arising in countries outside their own jurisdiction.] But this court does not follow Foreign courts, but English courts which do try such actions.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. for the defendants.—We do not wish to contest the question of jurisdiction, having agreed to submit to it as stated in the affidavit of Ellis. I propose to strike out the last words of the first article of the answer.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I am inclined to consider that there is jurisdiction, subject to any argument I may hear to the contrary, and therefore I shall not raise any objection to taking jurisdiction; but of course my not objecting will not give the court jurisdiction.

Butt, Q.C.—I claim that all the words in art. 1 of the answer relating to jurisdiction should be struck out, that is to say all words after the word "mentioned."

Williams, Q.C.—Then I ask that the words alleging the pier was annexed to the land of Spain be inserted in the 4th article of the answer.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Then let the answer stand amended in these respects.

Butt, Q.C.—Then the only question is as to the local law, although as this is a cause over which the court has prima facie jurisdiction, that jurisdiction, in the absence of the plea struck out, exists by law and not by consent. Then upon the 4th article of the answer, the question is whether a tort committed by a British subject against a British subject in a foreign country is triable in an English Court. There can be no doubt that a wrong committed by one Englishman upon another in foreign territory is triable by the courts of this country, and that a defendant may be made responsible for such a wrong (Scott v. Lord Seymour, 31 L. J. 457, Ex.; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 607; in error, 1 H. & C. 219; 32 L. J. 61, Exch.; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 511); that case turned no doubt very much upon a question of procedure, and was, therefore, within the lex fori, but the opinion of Wightman, J. (in error) is that a British subject has a remedy for a tort committed abroad by another British subject even though the foreign law gives him no remedy. And this doctrine is concluded by the Halley (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 193; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 879; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 131), which is exactly in point, deciding that in a case of tort in foreign territory English Courts do not apply the foreign law in order to determine the legal consequences of the act done, but the English law. A British subject is triable in England for the murder of a British subject abroad: (R. v. Helsham, 4 C. & P. 394). By the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 6, this court has jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by a ship. This tribunal in dealing with a case within its competence will apply the law of England. The law of Spain cannot apply to a case between British subjects concerning an act done by a British ship; such a question must be governed by British law, that is by the law administered in this court.

Messina v. Petrocchino, L. Rep. 4 P. C. 144; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 289; The Halley, L. Rep. 2 P. C. 193; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 879; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 131.

[Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In the United States it has Vol. III., N. S.

been distinctly ruled that although pilotage may be made compulsory by statute, yet shipowners are not thereby exempt from liability for the negligence of the pilot: (The China, 7 Wallace Sup. Court Rep. 54.) This decision in its effect very much resembles The Halley.] Even supposing Spanish law would govern if the present case had arisen upon land, it cannot be applied here because the cause of action arose upon navigable waters with ebb and flow of tide. The ship was afloat, and the negligence of her master occasioned the injury; the thing and the persons occasioning the injury were subject to British law; the master on board his ship was practically upon British territory and within British jurisdiction in respect of all torts or wrongful acts committed by him. By foreign law at least, the conduct of a foreign master on board his own ship is governed entirely by the law of his own country; he is liable to no other jurisdiction in criminal matters. In Lloyd v. Guibert (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 115), it is distinctly laid down by the Exchequer Chamber that the responsibility of owners for the acts of their master is governed by the law of the flag, and that whoever deals with a master in a foreign port acts upon that supposition unless the contrary appears. In R. v. Anderson (L. Rep. 1 C. C. R. 161) it is held that the admiralty jurisdiction of England extends over British vessels not only when they are sailing over the high seas, but also when they are in the rivers of a foreign territory at a place below bridges, where the tide ebbs and flows, and where great ships go, and that all seamen, whatever their nationality, serving on British ships are amenable to the provisions of British law. If, therefore, in both civil contract and criminal acts the law of the flag governs and the tribunals of the flag have jurisdiction, why does not the same rule apply in cases of tort not criminal where the injury has been done by the master of a British ship on board a British ship to a British subject resident abroad?

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and J. O. Matthew (E. O. Clarkson with them) for the defendants, in support of the answer.—The cause of action is the negligent destruction of a pier forming part of the soil of Spain by servants of the shipowners; by the law of Spain no liability attaches to the shipowners in respect of such negligence. Starting with the assumption that the court has jurisdiction there has been no tort committed, cognizable in this country. Before a tort committed abroad can be tried in an English court it must be a tort within the law of the country where it was committed. By The Halley (ubi sup.) it was decided that according to the law of England if a person sues on an alleged cause of action committed in a foreign country, it is not enough to make out that there was a liability by foreign law, but there must also be liability by the law of England. To give a right of action for a tort committed abroad there must be such a right both by the foreign and by English law. This is not a mere matter of procedure.

Phillips v. Eyre, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 1, 28; Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. 1. 7th edit. pp. 700, 701; Le Roux v. Brown, 12 C. B. 801.

We are bound, of course, to use the English procedure, but we cannot be precluded from giving evidence of the foreign law, nor does The Halley (ubi sup.) show that the defendant is to be deprived of this right; on the contrary a defendant may

ADM.]

THE M. MOXHAM.

[ADM.]

avail himself of that law so far as it is in his favour; that case only establishes that a defendant cannot avail himself of foreign law to escape the result of an obligation imposed by that law; it cannot be used to establish the converse of that proposition. The rule as to marriages made abroad is in point; they are valid only here when valid by both English and foreign law. The court should adopt the law of Spain, and if by that law no wrong has been done between the parties, the law of England cannot give a remedy where no wrong exists; the civil liability for an act done derives its existence from the law of the place where the act was done, and when the law of that place does away with that liability, the act cannot be called in question elsewhere: (Phillips v. Eyre, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 225; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 1.) It cannot be that a man is to be held liable in this country for doing an act abroad which is perfectly lawful in the place in which it was done. In Dobree v. Napier (2 Bing. N. C. 781) it was held that the defendant, who was a British subject, was not liable for seizing a ship under the authority of a foreign power, his act being lawful by the law of the authority for which he acted although contrary to English statute law. In Reg. v. Lesley (Bell's C. C. 220; 29 L. J. 97, M. C.) it was held that an imprisonment on board a British ship in a foreign port under the authority of the foreign government was justifiable on the part of the master of the ship, but not upon the high seas. In Westlake's International Law it is said (p. 240) that "the legal character and consequences of an act must depend upon the jurisprudence of the country where it is done, and not on that of any spot to which its consequences may extend. The damage is not an injury unless it results from an act prohibited by the law which governs the agent." In The General Steam Navigation Company v. Guillou, (11 M. & W. 877) it was held in an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant as owner of a steamer for damage by collision, that a plea alleging that the ship was French and that she was owned by a French company of which the defendant was a member, and that by the law of France the company, being in the nature of a corporation, and not the defendant, was liable for the negligence of the master and crew, was a good plea.

Benjamin, Q.C. in reply.—The negligence complained of was not upon land, but it was in navigating a British steamship on tidal waters, and consequently the act must be taken in the eye of the law to have been done upon British territory. The act was a tort by the law of Spain, and the only question is one of responsibility for the acts of the person who did it and that question must be governed by the maritime law as administered in this court, as the person doing the act, the master of the ship, was a British subject then upon a British vessel navigating tidal waters.

Reg. v. Anderson, L. Rep. 1 C. C. R. 161;
The Industrie, L. Rep. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 303; 24 L. Rep. N. S. 446; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 16.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 29.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I have consulted all the authorities mentioned to the court, and have arrived at the conclusion that the fourth article must be struck out, and I decide that the law of England and not the law of Spain must govern this question. I give this decision now as I understand there is a desire for a commission to examine witnesses in Spain before the trial comes on, and I will give a reasoned judgment at a future time.

Nov. 2.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE now delivered his reasoned judgment.—In this case a suit has been instituted on behalf of an English Joint Stock Company, who are possessed of a pier at Marbella in Spain, against the steamship M. Moxham.

The petition alleges that the negligent navigation of the steamship brought her into collision with the pier, and caused great damage to it. The answer denies the negligent navigation and says the damage was the result of inevitable accident or of the insufficient state of the pier, and further pleads in the 4th article according to the amendment proposed and accepted at the hearing as follows: "They further say that the said alleged collision happened within the territory and jurisdiction of Spain, and that the said pier at the said time was annexed to and formed part of the land of Spain, and that if the said collision was occasioned by any negligence or improper navigation of those on board the M. Moxham it was solely occasioned by the negligence of the master and mariners of the M. Moxham, and not by the defendants or any of them, and that by the law of Spain in force at the time and place of the said collision, the master and owners of the ship, and not the ship or her mariners are liable in damages in respect of a collision as in the petition alleged, and by such law neither the M. Moxham nor the defendants nor any of them are or is liable in respect of the damages proceeded for in this cause." This article has been objected to on the ground that the law of Spain does not govern the question, which is to be decided according to the law of England, and the objection to the jurisdiction pleaded in a former article of the answer having been withdrawn, the only question which I have now to determine is whether the law of Spain or the law of England is to be applied to the circumstances of the case.

The damage of which complaint is made must be taken to have been inflicted by a British merchant vessel while in waters subject to the admiralty jurisdiction within the ebb and flow of the tide, upon a pier in the territory of Spain. The act of injury, therefore, was done from the merchant vessel at sea, though the object injured was situate on the land. The defendants contend that in these circumstances this court must apply the local law, which, as they allege, exempts the ship from liability, and neither the lex fori nor law of the flag, under which the ship, if improperly navigated, would be liable for the damage.

Various cases were cited in support of this proposition, among them Dobree v. Napier (2 Bing. N. C. 781) and Phillips v. Eyre, as decided in the Queen's Bench and in the Exchequer Chamber (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 225; 6 Q. B. 1). But the latter of these cases was in great measure dependent upon peculiar circumstances, and upon the powers of a colonial legislature as recognised by the law of the Empire. And in the former case the alleged tort arose out of an act of an officer of a foreign state, acting, as the court held, lawfully in the seizure on the high seas of a vessel breaking the blockade, and therefore committing no trespass. Both cases, moreover, turning upon acts of state, afford no safe analogy upon which the court could rely. Upon behalf of the plaintiffs these cases were more especially relied upon: Reg. v. Anderson (L. Rep. 1 C. C. R. 161); Lloyd v. Guibet

ADM.]

THE GENERAL BIRCH—THE TWO BROTHERS.

[ADM.]

(L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 115; 6 Best & Sm. 100); and The Halley (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 193). In the first case, which related to a charge of manslaughter committed on board an English vessel within a French river where the tide ebbed and flowed, Bovill, C.J. said: "There is no doubt that the place where the offence was committed was within the territory of France, and that the prisoner was, therefore, subject to the law of France, which that nation might enforce if they thought fit; but at the same time he was also within a British merchant vessel, on board that vessel as a part of the crew, and as such he must be taken to have been under the protection of the British law, and also amenable to its provisions." And in this view the other judges seem to have concurred. It seems hardly necessary to refer to other cases, but I would observe that the case of Lloyd v. Guibert establishes that in a case of contract the responsibility of the owner of a vessel for the acts of his servants is governed by the law of the flag. With regard to The Halley, I think it unnecessary to enter into an examination of that case, the decision in which is of more indirect application; but I agree with the counsel for the plaintiffs that it points in the same direction.

Upon the whole I am satisfied, both upon principle and upon the authority of precedents, that the Spanish law is not applicable to the present case, and that the 4th article must be reformed by striking out all that part which pleads the Spanish law, that is all the words after the words "the land of Spain."

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, C. Ellis and Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Parker and Clarke.

Wednesday, Nov. 2, 1875.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE GENERAL BIRCH.

Action commenced in district registry—Defendants out of jurisdiction of registry—Appearance in London Registry—Practice.

Where an action in rem is instituted against a ship in a district registry and the shipowners, residing out of the jurisdiction of that registry, enter an appearance in the London Registry, the appearance must show where the action was commenced, the title of the cause in the district registry, and that the defendants are resident out of the jurisdiction of that registry.

THIS was a cause of collision instituted in rem on the 30th Oct. 1875 against the Swedish vessel General Birch in the Liverpool District Registry. The owners were resident out of the jurisdiction of that registry, being the Shipowners' Association of Christiania, and wished to avail themselves of the right given by the Supreme Court Rules 1875, Order XII., rule 3, to enter an appearance in the London Registry.

W. G. F. Phillimore, on behalf of the owners, now applied ex parte to the court under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 22, for directions as to the mode of procedure. He pointed out that under the Liverpool Admiralty District Registrar's Act 1870, s. 13, the court has power to transfer the cause to the London Registry, but in that case it would then be necessary to appear in the Liverpool Registry and then give notice to the other side of the motion, and the shipowners preferred to have the proceedings continued in London at once. Order XII., rule 3 of the Supreme Court rules would apply if the cause was directed to proceed under the new procedure, but not otherwise. Without directions the shipowners did not know how an appearance ought to be entered in such a case in the London Registry.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE ordered that the cause proceed under the new procedure, that the appearance should be entered in the London Registry, and that, as the cause had been commenced in the Liverpool Registry, the appearance should recite that the cause had been commenced in the Liverpool Registry, should show what the title of the cause was in the Liverpool Registry, and should state that the defendants resided out of the jurisdiction of that registry.

Solicitors for the shipowners, the defendants, Waddilove and Nutt.

Wednesday, Nov. 9, 1875.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE TWO BROTHERS.

County Court appeal—Appellate court—Divisional court—Admiralty Division—Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, ss. 34, 42, 45.

Although the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, s. 45, provides that County Court appeals may be heard before a divisional court consisting of two or three judges (sect. 40), the Admiralty Division, having all the exclusive jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty before the passing of the Act, still retains the jurisdiction to hear and determine County Court Admiralty appeals.

THIS was a motion for directions as to an appeal from a County Court.

The cause was instituted in the Hull County Court under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, and on the 28th Oct. 1875 judgment was delivered in that court against the defendant for 53l. 1s. 5d. Against this judgment the defendant was desirous of appealing, and had given the usual notice of appeal, and had filed the usual præcipe instituting a cause on appeal in the registry of the Admiralty Court. The defendant had tendered to the registrar, in accordance with the provisions of sect. 26 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, security for the costs of the appeal, but the registrar had refused to accept the security on the ground that the appeal to the Admiralty Court or Division had been taken away by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 45. The time within which the security had to be given had in consequence of this action on the part of the registrar of the County Court expired, and the defendant was consequently unable to appeal without special leave. The case now came before the court upon motion on behalf of the defendant to the judge "to allow and direct in what manner an appeal from a judgment of the County Court of Yorkshire, holden at Hull, Admiralty Jurisdiction, shall be proceeded with."

W. G. F. Phillimore, for the defendant.—I ask the court for leave to appeal, upon depositing the required security in the County Court, and to give directions to the County Court Registrar to take the security when offered. Secondly, I ask for directions as to the manner in which the appeal is to be proceeded with. Formerly County

[ADM.]

THE TWO BROTHERS.

[ADM.]

Court Admiralty appeals lay to the High Court of Admiralty. Now, by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 34 there are assigned to this division "all causes and matters which would have been within the exclusive cognisance of the Court of Probate or the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or of the High Court of Admiralty if this Act had not passed." This appeal would have been within the exclusive cognisance of the High Court of Admiralty if the Act had not passed, by reason of the provisions of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, s. 26, and by sect. 42, "all causes and matters which would have been within the exclusive cognisance of the High Court of Admiralty shall be assigned to the present judge of this said Admiralty Court during his continuance in office as a judge of the High Court." These two sections would seem to keep the jurisdiction to hear County Court Admiralty Appeals in this division, but by sect. 45 it is provided that "all appeals from . . . a County Court . . . which might, before the passing of this Act, have been brought to any court or judge whose jurisdiction is by this Act transferred to the High Court of Justice, may be heard and determined by divisional courts of the said High Court of Justice, consisting respectively of such judges thereof as may from time to time be assigned for that purpose, pursuant to rules of court, or (subject to rules of court) as may be so assigned according to arrangements made for the purpose by the judges of the said High Court." This would seem to show that an appeal such as this should be heard by a divisional court, but no such court as yet exists, and consequently, unless we can appeal to the Admiralty Division there is no appeal at all. The only way out of the difficulty is to hold that the 45th section is permissive, and that the appeal may be to a divisional court, but also lies to the Admiralty Division. This is not a divisional court, which, by sect. 40, consists of two or three Judges of the High Court of Justice. And yet the Legislature seemed to have contemplated the continuance of these appeals to the judges of the Admiralty Division, because, by the County Courts Act 1875, which came into operation the day after the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, there is an express provision (sect. 10) as to the necessity for obtaining leave to appeal in County Court Appeals from decisions of the Admiralty Court in County Court Appeals. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I see that sect. 34 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, in assigning business to the Chancery Division gives that division jurisdiction over all matters within the exclusive cognisance of the Court of Chancery "except appeals from County Courts." This is not the case with any other division. May it not, therefore, be inferred in all other cases, County Court Appeals may be heard in the same manner as heretofore?]

E. O. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, contra.—I submit that the only court which has jurisdiction is a divisional court appointed under sect. 45 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, and that this court has no power to interfere with the appeal.

W. G. F. Phillimore in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 16—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an application for leave to appeal from a decision of the County Court of Yorkshire, the time prescribed by the statute having elapsed. Two questions are raised—one as to whether the application be such as the court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, under the County Court Act, to grant; the other as to whether the application be rightly made to this court having regard to the provisions of the Judicature Acts.

First, I am of opinion that if I have the power I ought, in accordance with the spirit of former decisions on the subject, to grant the application.

The second question is more difficult to determine. The 34th section of the first Judicature Act (1873) relates to the assignment of certain business to the decisions of the High Court. Paragraph (2.) (dealing with Chancery business) provides, that there shall be assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court, "all causes and matters to be commenced after the commencement of this Act, under any Act of Parliament by which exclusive jurisdiction, in respect to such causes or matters, has been given to the Court of Chancery, or to any judges or judge thereof respectively, except appeals from County Courts." These words of exception as to appeals seem to intimate that where they are not used, appeals from County Courts are included in the category of causes and matters to be assigned. The second paragraph as to assignments to the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division provides that there shall be assigned to that division "all causes and matters which would have been within the exclusive cognisance of the Court of Probate or the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or of the High Court of Admiralty, if this Act had not passed." At the end of sect. 42 it is provided that subject to certain exceptions "all causes and matters which, if this Act had not passed, would have been within the exclusive cognisance of the High Court of Admiralty, shall be assigned to the present judge of the said Admiralty Court during his continuance in office as a judge of the High Court." I am of opinion that the present application relates to a cause or matter which has hitherto been within the exclusive cognisance of the present judge of the High Court of Admiralty. The Acts which gave, within certain limits, jurisdiction in admiralty matters to the County Courts confined the appeal from their decisions to this court. There can be no reasonable doubt, I think, that, if there was no other enactment in this statute as to County Courts, the present application would have been rightly made. But reliance is placed by the counsel who oppose the application on the 45th section, which is as follows: "all appeals from petty or quarter sessions, from a County Court, or from any Inferior Court, which might, before the passing of this Act have been brought to any court or judge, whose jurisdiction is by this Act, transferred to the High Court of Justice, may be heard and determined by divisional courts of the said High Court of Justice, consisting respectively of such of the judges thereof as may from time to time be assigned for that purpose, pursuant to rules of court, or (subject to rules of court) as may be so assigned, according to arrangements made for the purpose by the judges of the said High Court. The determination of such appeals respectively by such divisional courts shall be final, unless special leave to appeal from the same to the Court of Appeal shall be given by the divisional

EX. CH.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[EX. CH.]

court by which any such appeal from an inferior court shall have been heard."

After much consideration I have arrived at the conclusion that it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to limit the powers already granted by the previous section to the present judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and that the 45th section must be construed so as to be in harmony with the 42nd section. I should mention also that the last County Court Act (38 & 39 Vict. c. 50), which was passed in the same session, though, a little earlier than the last Judicature Act, but which comes into operation a day later, viz., on the 2nd Nov., contemplates the High Court of Admiralty as the only Court of Appeal from the Admiralty Jurisdiction of the County Courts.

Having arrived at this conclusion I thought it nevertheless my duty to confer with Sir James Hannen upon the construction of the Act. He has given careful attention to the subject, and while he thinks the question is not free from doubt expresses his opinion to me in language that I am allowed to cite:—

"My impression is that the effect of the 34th and 42nd sections of the Judicature Act 1873 is that you bring with you into the High Court all the jurisdiction and powers, including, that of hearing appeals from the County Courts, which you formerly possessed as judge of the Court of Admiralty, and that the effect of the 45th section is not to take away or limit any of those powers, but that it is merely permissive and prospective, and that until rules of court or arrangements be made by the judges of the High Court of Justice for the purpose of holding divisional courts for the hearing of appeals from County Courts, &c., your jurisdiction remains unaffected."

Fortified by this agreement with my opinion I decide that this application is rightly made, and I grant it and I direct the registrar of the County Court to receive the security for costs offered by the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Waddilove and Nutt.
Solicitor for the defendants, Pritchard and Sons

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 16, 17, and 18, and Dec. 21, 1875.

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

Marine insurance—Time policy—Seaworthiness—Perils insured against.

Upon a time policy, the risk attaching while the ship is in the hands of the assured, if the ship be lost (although by perils insured against) in consequence of her unseaworthiness starting upon her first voyage, the assured cannot recover.

Plaintiffs insured their steamer, which being just repaired was then in their dock, on a time policy for a year, underwritten by the defendant. She crossed the North Sea in fine weather, but made water; and on her return, being waterlogged in bad weather, she stranded and became a total loss.

At the trial the jury could not agree whether she was seaworthy at the beginning of the first voyage, nor whether unseaworthiness was the cause of her loss. They found, however, that the plaintiffs did not know she was unseaworthy, and it was admitted that the loss was due immediately to perils of the sea. The verdict was entered for the plaintiffs.

Held, by the majority of the Exchequer Chamber (reversing the Queen's Bench), that if the unseaworthiness at the beginning of the voyage be assumed to have caused the loss, the consequences, under the circumstances, were imputable to the plaintiffs, and should be borne by them rather than by the defendant; and that there must be a new trial.

Per Lord Coleridge, C.J. (besides agreeing with the majority) that upon the assumption mentioned, the ship was not lost by perils insured against; and that a time policy implies a condition of seaworthiness.

Per Brett, J. and Amphlett, B., dissentientibus, that the verdict was rightly entered for the plaintiffs.

THIS was an appeal by the defendant against a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, in discharging a rule to set aside a verdict found for the plaintiffs, and to enter a verdict for the defendant or for a new trial.

The following is a statement of the case:

The action was brought to recover a total loss upon a time policy of insurance for twelve months, effected by the plaintiffs on the steamship Frances, in the sum of 5800*l.*, on ship valued at 8000*l.*, and machinery at 4000*l.*

The declaration contained a count on the policy for a total loss, and also the common money count. To the first count the defendant pleaded: first, denial of the insurance; secondly, denial of the plaintiff's interest; thirdly, denial of the loss by perils insured against; fourthly, misrepresentation; fifthly, concealment; sixthly, that after the making of the policy, the plaintiffs, well knowing that the ship was unseaworthy, without any justifiable cause, sent her to sea in such unseaworthy condition, and that the loss was occasioned thereby; seventhly, that the voyage was illegal, by reason of the ship having sailed with passengers without a passenger certificate, and that the policy declared on was effected by the plaintiffs for the express purpose of covering the ship on the said illegal voyage. And to the money count, never indebted.

Upon all these pleas issue was joined, and the plaintiffs demurred to the sixth and seventh pleas.

The cause was tried at the London Sittings after Trinity Term 1873, before Mr. Justice Blackburn and a special jury, and the following facts were given in evidence or admitted on both sides.

The plaintiffs are iron shipbuilders and marine engineers, carrying on business under the firm of J. and W. Dudgeon, at Milwall, on the banks of the Thames, and at No. 10, London-street, in the City of London, and are proprietors of a line of steamers trading between London and Gothenburg, and the defendant is an underwriter at Lloyds.

The Frances was an iron screw steamer of 705 tons register, built at Amsterdam in the year 1858, and launched in 1859 for Spanish owners under the name of the Paris. Evidence was given at the trial on behalf of the plaintiffs that she had originally been constructed of good iron.

The defendant gave evidence that, in or about the year 1868, the said vessel was lying at anchor in the harbour in Cadiz, and continued there unemployed for about 18 months. She was then the property of Messrs. A. Lopes and Co., shipowners, of Cadiz and Barcelona.

Ex. Ch.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. Ch.]

In the month of Sept. 1871 the Paris was at Birkenhead, and was offered for sale there. Two persons who inspected the Paris while at Birkenhead in Sept. 1871 were called by the defendant at the trial. Neither made a regular survey of the vessel, but both came to the conclusion that she was very dirty, and had been much neglected, and that her iron was probably corroded, and they did not purchase her.

In the said month of Sept. 1871 the plaintiffs contracted with the Spanish owners of the Paris to build them a new ship, and to take the Paris, which was then at Birkenhead, in part payment, at about 4000*l*. She was then brought round to Millwall from Birkenhead with the original boilers on board, which were not fit for use, and she was consequently towed round. During the passage she made water, and her pumps were constantly attended to.

After the arrival of the Paris at Millwall, the plaintiffs caused the boilers to be taken out of the ship, and she was offered for sale to the agent of a firm at Hull, who after examining her afloat, but not making a regular survey, advised his principals not to buy her, because in his judgment, as he stated at the trial, the sides and frames in the bunker and boiler space were in a bad condition from corrosion, and the screw tunnel was in a defective state.

At the time the plaintiffs became owners of the Paris, they were the owners of two steamers named respectively the Mary and the Louisa Ann Fanny, running for the conveyance of cargo and passengers between London and Gothenburg; one of them, viz., the Louisa Ann Fanny, met with a collision, and the plaintiffs resolved to repair the Paris and run her on the line, and change her name to Frances. It was stated by the plaintiffs that the vessel's name was so changed in compliment to the daughter of one of their partners, their ships on that line being always called after female names connected with the firm's family.

For this purpose the vessel was placed in a dry dock at Millwall and scraped perfectly clean; and the plaintiffs deposed that they believed the ship to be quite capable of being made fit for the service, and that orders were given to Mr. Harrington, the marine surveyor and engineer, to superintend the repairing of the vessel, and to see that she was properly repaired, and that the plaintiffs' workmen at Millwall were told to execute whatever repairs were required, and that there was no stint whatever as to the amount of the repairs, and that they fully believed that the ship was made seaworthy. Mr. Harrington, who was called on their behalf, confirmed this, and gave positive testimony that everything was done that was required, and in his opinion she was made a thoroughly good strong ship; the old boilers were taken out, the boiler space was all open to view, but the ceiling was only partly removed, and the cement was not removed at all; so that the whole of the inside was not visible. There was contradictory evidence among the skilled witnesses as to whether the removal of the ceiling and the cement was necessary or not. Mr. Harrington deposed that it was not at all required. Strong evidence was given on the part of the plaintiffs' shipwrights and dock people that everything was done that was requisite.

On the defendant's behalf witnesses were called to prove that in their opinion sufficient repairs had not been done, and that in their opinion the ship was not seaworthy by means of corroded iron having been left in the ship, and sufficient new plates not having been put in. A witness called by the plaintiffs on cross-examination stated that the screw tunnel was in a defective condition. Similar evidence as to this was given on behalf of defendant, and it was proved that no repairs were done to the screw tunnel.

After the repairs had been executed, and before the Frances left London, a surveyor to the Board of Trade surveyed the outside of the ship, but by reason of want of time the inside was not surveyed, and, consequently, the ship did not obtain a passengers' certificate, and ultimately sailed for Gothenburg on the 3rd Feb. 1872, without one.

On or about the 31st Jan. 1872, the plaintiffs caused the policy now sued on to be effected for a period of twelve calendar months, commencing on the 24th Jan. 1872, and ending on the 23rd Jan. 1873, and the policy was subscribed by the defendant for 100*l*.

At the time of the effecting of the said policy of insurance, it was stated to the representatives of the defendant (who then knew nothing of or about the vessel), by the clerk to the brokers on behalf of the assured, that the Frances was a vessel the plaintiffs had taken in exchange, that she had been thoroughly repaired or practically rebuilt, and that they were going to put her into their Gothenburg trade, similar to that of the Louisa Ann Fanny and Mary.

On the morning of Saturday, the 3rd Feb. 1872, the Frances sailed from London for Gothenburg with some machinery on deck, but no other cargo, so that she was somewhat crank. Towards noon on Sunday, the day after the vessel left London, some water was observed in the stokehole and engine room, and the quantity of water she made, whatever such was, was more than could be accounted for by any weather the ship met with. The ship arrived safely at Gothenburg on the 7th Feb.

On her arrival in smooth water at Gothenburg, the Frances ceased to leak. She was examined there by two carpenters, but the cause of her making water was not discovered.

On the 11th Feb., at 7 a.m., the Frances having taken on board a cargo, consisting of oats and about 180 tons of iron, together with a deck cargo of deals, left Gothenburg for London.

On the morning of the 12th Feb., when the Frances reached the open sea, the wind began to blow, and a heavy rolling sea was running, and it became necessary to put a sail over the stokehole to prevent the sea from getting in. It was stated by the plaintiffs' witnesses that it blew a gale, but the weather was not such as to make a good ship behave as the Frances did.

The Frances laboured heavily, and began to make water to such an extent that in sixteen hours the fires were extinguished. A portion of the deals which formed the deck cargo was used for relighting the fires, and the rest was thrown or washed overboard. After about twelve hours pumping, the pumps got choked with the oats, and all hands had to be employed in baling the ship. There was evidence given by the defendant

Ex. Ch.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. Ch.]

that had the screw tunnel been in proper order the pumps would not have got choked as they did.

On the night of the 14th Feb., those on board the Frances having sighted the Spurn Lights, endeavoured to get her into Hull, the ship at the time being waterlogged did not readily answer her helm. Partly from this and partly from the thickness of the weather, which at the time was very dense, on the following morning, at about 5 a.m., the ship, having been in a state of distress since the morning of the 12th Feb., went ashore under Didlington Heights, upon the coast of Yorkshire. One of the boats was swamped, but the crew were all saved by a smack. Part of the cargo was afterwards saved, but the vessel could not be got off, and subsequently broke in two, and finally after some months went completely to pieces.

At the time of the effecting of the aforesaid insurance the vessel was unclassed.

At the conclusion of the evidence the learned judge, having reduced into writing the questions he proposed asking the jury, read them to the counsel on each side. Neither side suggested any further question should be put to the jury.

Counsel on each side having addressed the jury, the learned judge thereupon summed up, and left the seven following questions to them, which, together with the answers of the jury, were as follows:

1. Was the representation made by the broker at the time of making the insurance, as to the condition of the vessel, and as to the extent of the examination, substantially correct? Answer.—Yes.

2. Did that representation involve in it a statement that the vessel was to carry passengers, and, consequently, had been surveyed by the Board of Trade? Answer.—No.

3. Was there a concealment from the underwriters of anything materially affecting the insurance which the plaintiffs knew and the underwriters did not? Answer.—No.

4. Was the fact that the ship had not been surveyed and certified for passengers under the circumstances one which was material? Answer.—No.

5. Was the vessel seaworthy when she started? Answer.—The jury cannot agree.

6. If not, was that known to the plaintiffs? Answer.—No.

7. Was that unseaworthiness the cause of the loss? Answer.—The jury cannot agree.

Upon these findings the learned judge directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiffs; and in Michaelmas Term 1873 the defendant obtained a rule calling upon them to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, as regards the verdict entered for the plaintiffs on the sixth plea, on the ground that the findings of the jury did not warrant the entry of the verdict; and as regards the verdict entered upon the third plea, on the ground that there was no finding to warrant the entry of such verdict; and why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant instead of the verdict for the plaintiffs; or why a new trial should not be had between the parties, on the ground that the findings of the jury on the questions submitted to them were against the weight of evidence, and that their findings were inconsistent and incomplete, and insufficient to warrant the entry of the verdict or otherwise. And it was further ordered in the rule that the demurrers herein should come on for argument with this rule, when evidence as to the finding as to passengers was to be considered, and why the damages should not be reduced by proportion of salvage to be ascertained as might be arranged.

The rule and demurrers on the record also raised questions affecting the seventh plea, but that plea is found for the plaintiffs, and no questions now arise in regard thereto.

The said rule came on for argument in Trinity Term 1874, when the court took time to consider their judgment.

On the 6th July 1874 the court gave judgment, discharging the said rule.

The case is reported ante vol. 2, p. 323; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 31; and L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 581.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the said rule ought to have been discharged or made absolute.

June 16, 17, and 18, 1875.—The appeal was on these days argued at length before Lord Coleridge, C.J., Brett, J., Cleasby, B., Grove, J., Pollock and Amphlett, B.B.

Bull, Q.C. (with him Cohen, Q.C.) for defendant, the appellant.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. (with him A. L. Smith) for plaintiffs, the respondents.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the judgments of the court. Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21.—CLEASBY, B., delivered the judgment of himself and Pollock, B.—It does not appear to be necessary in this case to consider the general question of there being an implied warranty of seaworthiness in such a case as the present, because such a warranty is in general a condition precedent, and the breach of it avoids the policy altogether; but in the present case the policy attached on the 23rd Jan., or when the vessel was in dock, having just undergone some repairs, or still undergoing them, and there was no breach of any warranty or condition then; and what took place afterwards would not entirely avoid the policy. We have to deal in the present case with matter subsequent to the commencement of the risk, and to consider not so much the validity of the policy as the right to recover upon it under the circumstances stated in the case. It is of little consequence whether the matter subsequent is regarded as avoiding the policy from the time of its occurrence or as disentitling the plaintiffs to recover under the policy; but it seems more correct to consider it as affecting the right to recover, and not the policy itself, because, notwithstanding the matter subsequent, the assured might no doubt recover upon the policy in respect of a partial loss or damage which had occurred before, as by fire or otherwise. The real question in the present case is whether upon a time policy, where the risk attaches while the ship is in the hands of the assured, and the vessel afterwards starts upon a voyage in an unseaworthy condition, and is lost in consequence of such unseaworthiness, the assured can recover.

In considering the propriety of entering a verdict for the plaintiffs upon the imperfect finding of the issues, the case was properly argued on both sides as if the jury had found the sixth issue, except the averment of plaintiffs' knowledge of the unseaworthiness, in favour of the defendants. And it does not appear to me necessary, so far as regards the sixth plea, to enter into the question of the causa proxima of the loss, and whether it was eventually caused by fog or sea perils, because the meaning of the sixth plea is clearly not that the vessel did not go down from sea perils, but that this was the consequence of the unseaworthiness of the ship which caused her to get into difficulty and become unmanageable, which would not otherwise have occurred. Upon the question so raised, there is no authority in this country which can be considered as clear and decisive. If in the present case the vessel had gone down in a storm along with the other vessels in the North Sea, it may be that after the case of Gibson v. Small (4 H. L. Cas. 353) and Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 172, 937) and Michael v. Tredwin (17 C. B. 551), it would have been difficult to maintain that by reason of the vessel being unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage the defendants would be entitled to succeed. I by no means say that this is the clear effect of those decisions. The decision in Thompson v. Hopper in the Exchequer Chamber proceeded only upon the proper meaning of the language of the plea, and it only shows that if a plea alleges unseaworthiness, and then that by reason thereof the vessel was lost, the meaning is that the unseaworthiness was the immediate and proximate cause of the loss, and that such a plea would not be proved by showing that the proximate cause of the loss was the sea peril and dangers of navigation, though the vessel was exposed to them by the shipowner in an unseaworthy state. The decision in the Queen's Bench had been the other way.

Ex. Ch.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. Ch.]

The particular question which I have considered as raised in the present case was brought before the Court of Queen's Bench, and adverted to in the case of Hollingsworth v. Brodrick (4 A. & E. 646). The question was not properly raised and could not be decided, but most of the judges advert to the absence of the loss being the consequence of the unseaworthiness as preventing the unseaworthiness from being an answer. And as the matter is thus left undecided, it is useless to refer to the cases more particularly. It cannot be questioned, I think it was not questioned on the argument, that the sixth plea is an answer to the action; but the sixth plea avers, in addition to the other facts raising the defence, that when the vessel was sent to sea the plaintiffs knew that she was in an unseaworthy state, and this averment is negatived by the jury. The judgments in Thompson v. Hopper, both in the Queen's Bench and in the Exchequer Chamber, show that with this averment the defence would be complete (see particularly the judgment of Cockburn, C.J. in Exchequer Chamber, and of Lord Campbell, C.J. in Queen's Bench). Now if the answer would have been sufficient without the averment, the averment need not be proved, and therefore we have to consider the effect in such a policy as this of the assured sending the vessel to sea in a condition which makes her unseaworthy for the voyage on which she is sent, though not so to the knowledge of the assured, and particularly when such unseaworthiness causes her loss. In the absence of any decision upon the matter in our courts, the case must be considered upon principle.

Now we are considering a contract of a peculiar nature. The contract of insurance is (in the language of Mr. Arnould, p. 1 of his work) "in its essential nature and in all its incidents a contract of demuity." That is a contract of indemnity from certain losses. And it follows that in such a contract a man cannot recover for losses which are the consequence of his own default. And it can make no difference that the proximate cause of loss was a particular event, if that particular event was in the ordinary course of things brought about by that default. There is no question that knowingly sending a vessel to sea in an unseaworthy state is such a default; but would it not be equally a default, if a vessel had been many voyages, and then lying in dock for sometime, to send her to sea without having been surveyed and examined, the consequence being that she is lost, when, if she had been surveyed and repaired, she would not have been lost? And are not in such a case the means and opportunities of knowledge equivalent to actual knowledge?

The question in the present case, as the pleadings stand, no doubt is whether the fact of unseaworthiness at the beginning of the voyage which causes the loss is itself an answer. The importance of the rule that the assured shall have his vessel in good repair at the commencement of the voyage (which though technically the commencement of the risk in voyage policies only, is substantially and mainly the commencement of the risk in all cases where it is the first voyage undertaken) is laid down in the strongest terms by the most eminent judges: (See Lord Eldon, in Douglas v. Scougall, 4 Dow's App. Cas. 276.) His language is, "I have often had occasion to observe here that there is nothing in matters of insurance of more importance than the implied warranty that a ship is seaworthy when she sails on the voyage insured, and I have endeavoured both with a view to the benefit of commerce and the preservation of human life to enforce that doctrine as far as, in the exercise of a sound discretion, I have been enabled to do so." He is speaking in that particular case of a voyage policy, but the ground is equally applicable to a voyage undertaken under the protection of a time policy. Lord Redesdale, in Wilkie v. Geddes (3 Dow's App. Cas. 60), uses the following language, the reasoning of which is equally applicable to voyages undertaken under time policies and under voyage policies: "Unless the assured were bound to take care that the vessel was in every respect seaworthy, the consequence would be most mischievous; for the effect of insurance would be to render those chiefly interested much more careless about the condition of the ship and the lives of those engaged in navigating her." And Lord St. Leonards, in the case of Gibson v. Small (4 H. of L. C. p. 417), expressed an opinion that under such circumstances as those of the present case it was a condition that the ship was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage. Having regard to these opinions it appears to me most undesirable to relax the obligations which such considerations have attached to the owner of a vessel to have a vessel which he sends on a voyage seaworthy for that voyage. If he knows that he is under that obligation, and that by not complying with it he may lose the benefit of his insurance, he will take care to make the matter sure. But if it is to depend upon the uncertain conclusion of his knowledge, or of his doing his best, he may do as little as he can do to satisfy an apparent compliance, and take his chance in a matter involving vital consequences. The authorities and reasons are sufficient to satisfy me that in this contract of indemnity the unseaworthiness of the vessel at the commencement of the voyage, which unseaworthily causes the loss, is a fact the consequences of which are imputable to the assured, to be borne by him, and not by the underwriters; and it follows that in the present case it was proved to entitle the defendant to a verdict on the sixth plea, supposing the facts upon which the jury could not agree to have been found in favour of the defendants. It is made an objection to this as a correct legal conclusion, however it may appear to be, that it really introduces a written contract a term not found in it, that the parties might at any time have introduced it, to the effect that there is an obligation on the assured to have the vessel ready for the voyage for which she is destined. Newer is that the contract is an exceptional one and the courts have already departed from the ordinary rule by introducing into ordinary voyage policies a condition not found in them, that the vessel was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, and have made it a condition avoiding the policy as much as if words to that effect had been inserted at the end. It may be considered that such a contract of indemnity the real substance of insurance on a voyage policy is a vessel fit for the voyage, and that without this the foundation which is treated as a condition. As a general rule, upon time policies this condition is not to be inapplicable, because the vessel at the commencement of the risk may be in the middle of the voyage, upon which it may have started in an unseaworthy condition, but may have suffered so as to be as at the time to be quite unseaworthy. The defendant is acting in the spirit of the decisions that if the vessel be in the possession of the owner destined for a voyage, there is some obligation on the assured to make the vessel fit for the voyage. And the breach of this obligation, is not a condition avoiding the policy altogether, as in the case of a voyage policy, is available as a defence where the loss arises from the unseaworthy condition of the vessel. If something is introduced into the policy, included in its terms, how could a defence be founded on the fact of the assured sending the vessel knowing it to be unseaworthy, or having the vessel so of knowledge, or sending it to sea without examination when it is obvious such examination ought to be had, and in consequence the vessel was lost? In those cases it does not seem to be a part of the case that there had been any fraud on the part of the assured, but the defence must be founded on some obligation independent of the subject of insurance, and not included in the policy. And the result would be that the assured could not recover in respect of a loss attributable to his neglect to have a ship seaworthy on starting for the voyage. It is not intended here to decide that in the case of a time policy there is an obligation to have the vessel ready for the commencement of every voyage, whether it may commence, undertaken during the currency of the policy. In the case of voyage policies there is no warranty of seaworthiness on the part of the owner from intermediate ports or upon the commencement of the voyage, but only at the commencement of the voyage. What is decided here is that when a vessel is in the hands of the owner is intended for a voyage and a time policy is made, the assured is under an obligation to have the vessel seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage on which she starts, which is the commencement of the sea risks insured against. And it is considered better to deal with the circumstances of the particular case, such circumstances being of real importance in such a contract, rather than disregard those circumstances, and act upon an inflexible rule of recent invention on account of its simplicity, as has been suggested.

CH.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. Ch.]

The case of Fawcus v. Sarsfield (6 El. & Bl. 192) was much relied on in favour of this view. In that case, the defence which is set up in this case was complicated with other matters which makes it not a satisfactory guide, but if it cannot be treated as a decision in favour of the defendant, it affords an argument in his favour; for it certainly appears from that case that if the vessel is in want of repairs and so unseaworthy, and a partial loss occurs, the underwriters are not liable to make good the damage resulting from the bad condition of the ship, and if not liable for a partial loss caused by unseaworthiness, why liable for a total loss resulting from the same cause? In either case the assured, and not the underwriter, should be responsible for the improper condition of the vessel when exposed to the perils. In America the decisions seem to agree with this conclusion. (See Phillips on Insurance, ss. 727 to 731.)

As regards the issue upon the third plea, we were much pressed to hold that as that issue was whether the ship was lost by the perils insured against, and the perils by which the vessel was lost resulted from the unseaworthiness of the ship, and those perils were not insured against, therefore that issue ought to be found for the defendants. In order to determine correctly how the issue ought to be entered, we must consider what is the meaning of the plea. Does it mean that the vessel was not lost by perils mentioned in the policy as perils insured against; or does it mean, as contended by the defendant, that the ship was not lost by perils for which the defendant as a legal consequence insured against, and for which he was responsible? Now the plea is a traverse of an allegation in the declaration; and when the plaintiffs allege that the vessel was lost by the perils insured against, I should say they really make an allegation of fact and not of legal liability, and as the sea perils were the immediate cause of loss, I think that issue was correctly entered for the plaintiffs. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs when the case was before us, was very decided in his opinion, and made it part of his argument that if the plaintiffs had knowingly sent the vessel to sea in an unseaworthy state, the issue would properly be found for the defendants. Notwithstanding this admission, upon a correct view of the language of the issue, I think it is properly entered for the plaintiffs.

The statute 34 & 35 Vict. c. 110, has no direct bearing upon the present question, but so great is the obligation of a shipowner who sends a vessel to sea to send it in a seaworthy condition, that it is, under ordinary circumstances by sect. 11 made a misdemeanor to send it in an unseaworthy condition so as to endanger life, and the owner has to show, to escape from a criminal charge, that he used all reasonable means to make the vessel seaworthy, and was ignorant of the real condition of the vessel.

EX. CH.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[EX. CH.]

For the above reasons it appears to me that sufficient would have been proved and found, to make the sixth plea an answer, if the questions on which the jury could not agree had been found for the defendant, and therefore that the issue upon that plea was improperly entered for the plaintiffs, and the judgment entered accordingly should be set aside and a new trial had. This is the judgment of my brother Pollock and myself.

BRETT, J. delivered the judgment of himself and Amphlett, B.—The arguments in this case were almost exclusively confined to questions arising on the third and sixth issues. Objection was taken, but not much if at all pressed, to the judgment on the fourth issue. It seems sufficient to say that we never entertained any doubt that it was correct, and so stated during the argument.

With respect to the third and sixth issues, the material facts to be considered seem to me to be that the plaintiffs, being owners of the Frances, insured her whilst she was in the port of London, and under their control, by a policy dated 31st Jan. 1872 for a year from the 24th Jan. 1872 to the 23rd Jan. 1873. The ship sailed from London for Gottenburg on the 3rd Feb. 1872, and arrived on the 7th Feb. 1872. She sailed again for London on the 11th Feb., met with bad weather, leaked, became water-logged, and, on the 14th Feb. became unmanageable, was stranded on the coast of Yorkshire, and was a total loss. Considering, as a whole, the written questions, and the explanation of them to the jury, and the ruling of the learned judge at the trial, as reported by him in his judgment in the Queen's Bench, I think it must be gathered that he directed the jury as to the third issue that the evidence, being uncontradicted, was conclusive that the ship was lost by perils of the sea. And having regard to what the jury did and did not answer we must treat the case as if the jury had found that the ship was, in fact, unseaworthy when she left London, that such unseaworthiness continued until she was lost, that such unseaworthiness was unknown to the assured, that it was a cause of the loss in the sense that she became water-logged and unmanageable by reason of it and the weather, and went ashore in consequence; so that the loss would not have happened, notwithstanding the weather, but for the unseaworthiness. The question is whether upon such facts and assumed findings, the verdict was properly entered for the plaintiffs on the third and sixth issues. If it ought not to have been so entered on both, there should be a new trial, if otherwise, the judgment below is right.

The case was elaborately argued. It was contended for the defendant that the moving and efficient cause of the loss of the ship was her unseaworthiness which existed when she first left port after the effecting of the policy, and continued till she was lost; that consequently it could not properly be said that the ship was lost by a peril insured against. A loss occasioned by unseaworthiness not arising after the attaching of the policy must be treated, it was said, as a loss resulting from the inherent vice of the ship, and in either case the verdict ought to have been entered for the defendants on the third issue. If the loss could be treated prima facie as a loss by a peril insured against, yet a loss, caused by such unseaworthiness as alleged must be treated as arising from a wrongful act of the assured, and a loss so arising cannot be covered by a contract of indemnity, and therefore the verdict ought to have been entered for the defendants on the third and sixth issues, the averment of knowledge in the sixth plea being immaterial. For the plaintiffs it was argued that in a time policy there is a warranty of seaworthiness such as exists in a voyage policy, viz., with the effect that if the ship is unseaworthy at the commencement of the risk the contract of indemnity does not attach, and the premium must be returned; that as you cannot imply any such warranty or condition as to seaworthiness at the commencement of the risk so as to destroy the contract, you cannot introduce any such condition at all; there is no contract about seaworthiness at all, none expressed, none to be implied; that the subject matter of a voyage policy is a ship seaworthy for the voyage at the commencement, but the subject matter of a time policy is only a ship.

If a loss is caused solely by unseaworthiness existing before or at the time the policy attaches, it is no doubt a loss from the inherent vice of the ship, and is not covered under either form of policy; but if it is a loss caused by a peril of the sea, although so caused by the unseaworthiness of the ship existing at the commencement and continuing, it is a loss proximately caused by a peril of the sea. In such a state of things the assured under a voyage policy cannot recover, because the policy, by reason of the warranty and the existence, at the commencement, of unseaworthiness, never attaches; but as there is no warranty in a time policy, there is no reason why the causa proxima should not solely be regarded. If the ship be intentionally cast away by direction of the assured, her loss is caused by a wrongful act of the assured, and so, if the ship be sent to sea to his knowledge unseaworthy, and is lost in consequence. And it is an admitted principle, that for a loss efficiently caused by a wrongful act of the assured he cannot recover compensation under a contract of indemnity. But the mere fact of the ship being unseaworthy when she goes to sea, if her condition be unknown to the assured, is not a wrongful act, and therefore the principle above enunciated does not apply. And, as there is no bargain that the ship shall be seaworthy at any period of the risk, a loss caused proximately by a peril of the sea is covered by a time policy, although the ship was unseaworthy at the attaching of the risk, and so continued till the time of loss, and would have surmounted the peril if she had not been unseaworthy. It makes no difference whether the policy is effected whilst the ship is in port or at sea, at home or abroad. There cannot be a warranty implied from the same words depending upon the locality of the ship at the time those words are agreed upon.

The questions raised seem to be: First, Is there any such warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy as there is in every voyage policy in ordinary form, i. e., a warranty that the ship was or shall be seaworthy at the commencement of the risk?

Secondly, Is there any warranty that the ship shall be seaworthy at any other time than at the commencement of the risk, as for instance at the commencement of any or every voyage and during the period insured?

Ex. Ch.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. Ch.]

Thirdly, Is there any condition or stipulation, by way of contract, that the underwriter shall not be liable for any loss which would not have happened if the ship had not been unseaworthy at the commencement of the risk, and so continued until the loss?

Fourthly, Was the uncontradicted evidence in this case conclusive that the ship was lost proximately by perils of the sea?

And, fifthly, Did the facts which are to be assumed, that she was unseaworthy when she left London, and so continued until she was lost, and that she would not have been lost if she had not been and continued so unseaworthy, absolve the defendant so as to entitle him to a verdict either on the third or the sixth plea?

As to the first, in Gibson v. Small (4 H. of L. 353), the House of Lords decided that there is no such warranty in a time policy, at all events if the policy be made whilst the ship is at sea. In Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 172), it was decided by the Court of Queen's Bench that there is no such warranty, though the policy be made whilst the ship is in the port of the place of the owner's residence. The only question is, whether this ruling in Thompson v. Hopper can be and is to be overruled. If it is not, the two cases exhaust the point, and determine that there is no such warranty in any time policy in ordinary form as there is in every voyage policy in ordinary form. It seems impossible to add anything to the arguments which have been used on both sides as to this point. All that can be said seems to be contained on one side in the judgments of Erle, J., and on the other side in those of Lord Campbell and others. The reasoning of those who hold that there is no such warranty in any time policy is, as I understand it, substantially as follows:—The warranty and its effect are admitted to exist in voyage policies, that is to say, in policies in which an insured voyage is, or insured voyages, are named. It is introduced by implication, either on the ground that it was originally proved to be by custom understood in such policies, and has thereupon been adopted by the courts as law; or on the ground that it has been introduced and adopted by the courts alone as a necessary implication from reason. It cannot be implied in time policies, that is to say, in policies in which no voyage is specified as a voyage insured by the first process, because no such custom has ever been proved. It cannot be implied by the second process, because the reasoning which may have been used to introduce it into voyage policies cannot be applied to time policies. It is true that the warranty in different voyage policies, though enunciated by the same term, seaworthy, can be fulfilled by a different condition of the ship according to the different voyages named in the different policies; and so far a different degree of condition of the ship might be applied in time policies; still, in voyage policies the condition into which the ship must be or must have been put at the commencement of the voyage insured can be measured or estimated at the time of making the contract of insurance by reference to that named voyage; the ship must be or have been in such a condition at the commencement of the voyage insured as to be reasonably able to encounter the ordinary vicissitudes of an ordinary voyage of that kind. But in a time policy there is no voyage insured, there is no voyage named in the policy. The ship will have to sail a voyage or voyages which are, therefore, the voyage or voyages sailed, not the voyage or voyages insured. But there is nothing in the contract of insurance to fix that voyage or those voyages. The assured may not have determined on any voyage, or if he has, may consistently with the contract of insurance, change the destination of the ship. The ship may, during the time of insurance, sail a summer voyage along the coast or a winter voyage round Cape Horn, or one or many voyages beginning at any time. It would be impossible at the time of making the contract to anticipate what the condition of the ship must be when the risk is to attach or did attach. Neither the assured nor the underwriter can make any calculation about it. It cannot be therefore properly laid down by the courts that all men of ordinary reason must have contracted upon the assumption of there being a warranty of seaworthiness, the burden of fulfilling which neither of them could estimate. In my judgment this reasoning cannot be successfully answered. I am of opinion that there is no such warranty in any time policy in ordinary form.

As to the second proposition with regard to every voyage, it was pointed out by Lord Campbell in Faucus v. Sarsfield (6 E. & B. 201), that Mr. Wilde, with all his great experience and knowledge did not contend for it, but asked for a warranty only as to the first voyage sailed under the policy. Lord Campbell gives his reasons for holding that there is no such warranty as to any of the voyages sailed under an ordinary time policy. I agree with those reasons. And certainly it would be strange to imply so futile a warranty as one confined to the first voyage, which might be to Cardiff in ballast, whilst the next should be to Calcutta or Hong Kong with coal, or railway iron, or machinery. I cannot think there is any such warranty as is suggested in the second proposition with regard to any of the voyages.

And if there be no warranty as is suggested in either the first or second propositions, it follows, as it seems to me, that no undertaking of any kind by the assured can be implied with regard to the seaworthiness of the ship at any period of the time of insurance. There is nothing on which to found such an implication. In plain language the underwriter, in a time policy, in his contract, insures against a loss by any of the perils described in the policy whether the ship was or was not seaworthy, when the risk attached or when the loss occurred. If therefore the underwriter can be absolved from a loss caused in any sense by unseaworthiness, it is not by virtue of anything within the contract. If the loss be solely and immediately caused by unseaworthiness, which existed at the commencement of the risk and continued till the loss, without the happening of any peril described in the policy, then the underwriter is not liable because the ship has perished by her own inherent vice. There is, in such case, but the one cause. There is, therefore, no opportunity for the application of the doctrine of causa proxima which implies the existence of two causes. But if the ship is proximately lost by a peril described in the policy, though the unseaworthiness existing from the beginning is also a cause, then arises the question whether the underwriter is liable. He is not absolved, if at all, by reason of a breach of contract. There is no contract about seaworthiness. And if there were, in considering an alleged breach of contract it is recognised law that the causa proxima can alone be regarded. Even a particular and novel stipulation in a contract of insurance, it has been held, is to be construed or applied with reference to this maxim. There is a case, as the law at present stands, in which the underwriter is absolved from the consequences of a loss caused by unseaworthiness, though the loss may also be said to have been immediately caused by a peril described in the policy. That is where the ship is immediately lost by a peril described, but where the original and continuing unseaworthiness was also a cause, and the efficient cause of loss, in the sense that it substantially caused the described peril to destroy the ship. That is a state of things consistent with what is set forth in the sixth plea in this case, and in the third plea in Thompson v. Hopper. If such unseaworthiness was known to the assured before the ship went to sea, it was held in Thompson v. Hopper that the underwriter is absolved. If it was not so known, it was held in Thompson v. Hopper, and in Fawcus v. Sarsfield, that he is not absolved. If it was known, it is said that the assured was guilty of a wrongful act, and that no man can recover an indemnity for a loss occasioned by his own wrongful act, and it was held in Thompson v. Hopper, that "this is a fundamental principle of insurance law which is applicable if the wrongful act causes a peril described in the policy to be the immediate and proximate cause of the loss of the ship." The headnote to Thompson v. Hopper, in error, in E.B. & E. 1038, states that the latter part of the judgment of the Queen's Bench was overruled, and that even where there is a wrongful act of the assured, the causa proxima alone of the loss is to be regarded, and if the wrongful act of the assured be not the immediate and proximate cause of the loss, the underwriter is liable, if the immediate and proximate cause be a peril described in the policy. Without determining whether this is the real effect of the judgment in error, which I more than doubt, I think it is clear, from the judgment in the Queen's Bench, that all depends on whether the act of the assured which is relied on is more than a breach of contract—whether it amounts to an act wrong of itself in the minds of all right thinking people. It is suggested by Willes, J., whose opinion is to me always of the greatest consequence, that the mere fact of knowingly sending a ship to sea unseaworthy is not a wrongful act. I cannot agree; I will not argue about it. It seems to me self-apparent. It is a wrongful thing to do in the judgment of all right thinking people. But if the unseaworthiness is not known to the assured, I cannot see how it can in reason be said he has been guilty of a wrongful act. He may have taken all the pains, and have gone to all the expense possible, and yet a secret defect may in the end be proved to have existed. How can he be said in reason to have been guilty of anything wrongful, it being assumed he is not guilty of a breach of contract. Here the jury have negatived knowledge. There was, therefore, in my opinion, nothing wrongful in the conduct of the assured, and the underwriters have no defence.

The loss was not the immediate consequence solely of the unseaworthiness. The ship was not lost through her own inherent vice. She crossed the North Sea twice after the policy attached. She was lost by stranding. That was the causa proxima.

There was nothing to prevent the application of that maxim. The evidence of the loss by stranding as a causa proxima was conclusive. Therefore the verdict was rightly entered on the third issue.

That which must be taken to be a material allegation in the sixth plea, unless Thompson v. Hopper and Fawcus v. Sarsfield are to be overruled, was not proved. I think the demurrers in Thompson v. Hopper and Fawcus v. Sarsfield were rightly decided. Therefore the verdict was rightly entered on the sixth issue.

The judgment in the Queen's Bench was right and should be affirmed.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—This is my own judgment, (a) as to some part of which my brother Grove agrees, and my brothers Cleasby and Pollock agree.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench discharging a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant and for a new trial. The case is reported L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 521. The judgment of the court discharging the rule delivered by my brother Blackburn enters so fully and clearly into the facts of the case that the special case before us is little more than a repetition of his statement, and it seems unnecessary for the purpose of this judgment again to repeat them. Portions of the pleadings and the questions put to and answered by the jury on the trial it is, however, essential carefully to consider. The declaration was on a policy which no doubt is properly described as a time policy. But it is a policy in very different terms from the policies sued on, and which were the subjects of decision, in Giles v. Small (16 Q. B. 128 and 141; 4 H. L. Cas. 353) and Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 172). The risk is thus described, "lost or not lost at and from her and during the space of twelve calendar months commencing on the 24th Jan. 1872 and ending on the 23rd Jan. 1873 . . . in port and at sea . . . and in the good ship Frances whereof is master under God for this present voyage . . . beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandises from the loading thereof aboard the said ship as above, . . . and further until the said ship shall be arrived at as above; upon the said ship until she hath been moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety." The perils are described as far as is necessary to set out the description, thus:—"Touching the adventures and perils which the assurers are contented to bear, and do take upon us in this voyage, they are of the seas . . . and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said goods and merchandises on ship, &c. or any part thereof." The pleas which are material are the third and sixth, which are in substance as follows: the third "that the ship was not by the perils insured against or any of them, lost as alleged;" the sixth "that after the making of the policy, the plaintiffs, well knowing that the ship was unseaworthy, without any justifiable cause sent her to sea in such unseaworthy condition, that the ship, &c. was lost as alleged by reason of such unseaworthiness of the said ship and not otherwise."

At the end of the trial before my brother Blackburn, he summed up the case to the jury and left seven questions to them, which with the answers, were as stated in the case. In the

(a) According to the indorsement on the judgment, Grove, J., dissented as to implied warranty, but as to new trial.

CH.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[Ex. CH.]

at question my brother Blackburn explained a jury that he did not mean to ask them whether the unseaworthiness was the sole or the immediate cause of the loss, but whether the loss was occasioned by unseaworthiness and the loss arose from her being water-lifted in consequence of that unseaworthiness, but, but for that, it could not have happened. On these findings of the jury my brother Blackburn directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiffs. A rule to set aside this verdict and to allow it for defendants or for a new trial was refused, and was, after argument, discharged; and the question for us is whether it should have been refused or made absolute. It was contended that the Court of Queen's Bench, and for the sake of the argument the contention was rejected, and the judgment proceeded on the ground, that the two unanswered questions should be taken as answered in favour of the plaintiffs and that the jury must be taken to have found the ship unseaworthy; and further that unseaworthiness contributed to the loss within the meaning of my brother Blackburn's direction. His being assumed, the judgment of the Queen's Bench proceeded on the ground that the plea of unseaworthiness being negatived, the sixth plea was not proved; that there being no implied condition of seaworthiness in a time policy, the unseaworthiness was no defence when the loss was proxima causa of the loss was a peril of the sea. It is manifest that two questions at once arise.

Is there in such a policy as this no implied warranty of seaworthiness? and secondly, if there is, still have the answers to the questions, suggested by the direction of the learned judge, disposed of the third and the sixth pleas? As to the first point, it appears that though there are dicta, and dicta of great weight, which suggest that in such a policy as this there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness, yet it has never been necessary to decide the point, and the point has not in fact been decided.

The decision of Gibson v. Small, it had been assumed by text writers, and had been followed by some English judges, e.g. Paterson in Hollingsworth v. Brodrick (4 A. & E. 351); Tindal, C. J. in Dixon v. Sadler (8 W. 898), that in a time policy, as in a voyage policy, there was this implied warranty. Now was that by the mere fact of effecting insurance, the assured warranted that there was no defect in the ship fit to be insured, and it was laid down distinctly that if the time policy was effected for a ship about to sail from a home port, there was no implied warranty: (Park on Insurance, § 1842, p. 489.) Then came the well known case of Gibson v. Small (16 Q.B. 128), in which the Queen's Bench held that there was no implied warranty. The Exchequer Chamber reversed the decision, confining themselves however only to the question of a time policy on a ship at sea. The case went to the House of Lords, and the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber was affirmed by the House of Lords, by the assent of the majority of the judges. In reversing the judgment, the judges who attended the House of Lords, and the peers expressed opinions on the question of the implied warranty in time policy in general, but they did not agree. Lord Campbell, Pollock, C.B. and Parke, B. laid it down distinctly that there was no implied warranty in any time policy whatever. Lord St. Leonards agreed that in the case before the House, a time policy upon a ship then at sea, there was no implied warranty. But he said, "If a ship was about to sail upon a particular voyage, and a time policy instead of a voyage policy was effected on her, as then advised, he should think that a condition could be implied that the ship was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage." Martin, B. was of the same opinion, and Maule, J. confidently agreed with him. Three other judges, Alderson and Platt, B.B. and Talfourd, J. confined themselves to the case before the House, Erle and V. Williams, J.J. agreed with the original decision in the Queen's Bench. It is clear, therefore, that Gibson v. Small did not decide the point which the case before us raises. Neither, if it be carefully examined, did the later case of Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 172), at least as decided on demurrer. The policy there described the risk "at and from the meridian of the 21st Oct. 1855, to and with the meridian of the 1st of March 1855, upon the ship," &c. and made no mention of a voyage. There were three pleas which all averred that the ship at the time of the insurance being effected was "an outward bound ship lying in British port, to wit, the port of Sunderland." But the third plea contained an averment which the court construed as charging personal misconduct on the plaintiffs, which misconduct produced the loss. And on this the court unanimously held that plea to be a bar to the action. On the question of the implied warranty the court was divided, and as there was agreement as to the third plea upon the reasons given, it was hardly necessary to decide upon the others. The majority of the court no doubt held that there was no implied warranty in any time policy, although the policy before them was the only one on which they were deciding. But even if it were necessary to decide the point, the decision is one which does not bind this court. The authority indeed of Lord Campbell and of the judges who agreed with him is entitled to the highest respect, and so is that of the judges comprising the Judicial Committee in Jenkins v. Heycock (8 Moore P. C. 351), who intimated that they were inclined to concur with Lord Campbell and those who thought that in no time policies is there any implied warranty, though they were not called upon to determine and did not determine the point. The later arguments and decisions in the case of Thompson v. Hopper, reported in the Queen's Bench (6 E. & B. 937), and in the Exchequer Chamber (E. B. & E. 1038), took place after the case had been tried at Nisi Prius, and turn rather on the effect of my brother Bramwell's direction and the finding of the jury upon the facts than on the specific point, though there is no doubt that several of the judges imply, if they do not say so, that they agree upon the point with the majority in the court below, and treat it as a settled one. The point, therefore, seems upon examination to be, in this court, open; and if it be, there is considerable authority for holding that in such a policy as this there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness. Without exception, so far as I am aware, the American text writers, and the American authorities as cited in those text writers, as well since as before the cases of Gibson v. Small and Thompson v. Hopper, hold that there is no difference on this point between a time policy on a ship then in port and to be employed on a voyage, and a voyage policy: but that the difference is between a time policy as last described and a time policy on a ship then at sea. The English authorities to the same effect have already been mentioned, and it is plain that the policy in the case before us is altogether different from that in Gibson v. Small, and is very distinguishable from that in Thompson v. Hopper. In the present case the policy is in fact a voyage policy limited to a particular time. The reasons given for implying a warranty of seaworthiness in voyage policies apply with equal strength to the policy before us; the main reason given for not implying a warranty, viz., that the shipowner could not know the state of the ship at the time of the insurance certainly does not apply; the reason given by Lord Campbell in Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 188-9) for not implying it is not a reason of principle but one of inconvenience, and would be equally cogent to establish any rule which excluded all dispute of fact. If the matter be, as I think it is, open, I confess to a strong feeling in favour of the older view of the law, except so far as it has been varied by authority. It seems to me wiser and better, to tend more towards honesty of dealing as against gambling and every fraud in insurance transactions, to extend as far as may be, rather than to contract within the narrowest point or limits, the doctrine of implied warranty of seaworthiness. I am, therefore, prepared to hold that in this policy there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness, and on this ground.

As the fifth question put by my brother Blackburn is to be taken as answered for the defendants, I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below was wrong, and that the rule should have been made absolute to enter a verdict for the defendant on the third and sixth pleas. Inasmuch, however, as this case may go further, and inasmuch as the opinion I have expressed is at variance with dicta of great weight, as it is distinctly dissented from by some, and is not distinctly assented to by any of my learned brothers in this court, it is proper to examine the second question, and arrive at a decision with respect to it. The question is, Do the findings of the jury, as explained by my brother Blackburn (including the two which are to be taken as found in favour of the defendants) dispose of the questions arising on the third and sixth pleas? And in discussing this question it is to be assumed that in a time policy, where the loss is found to be by one of the perils insured against, even though the ship was unseaworthy when she started, the underwriters are liable. Now it will be observed that the jury found that the unseaworthiness was one of the concurrent enacting perils at the time of the loss. It will be further observed that they were not asked to find, and did not find, what was the efficient predominating peril at that same point of time. Yet it seems that in a case such as this the verdict would depend upon what the jury found as to this matter. If they had found that the unseaworthiness of the ship was the efficient predominating peril, then the verdict must have been entered for the defendant on the third plea as well as on the sixth plea; if on the other hand they had found that the efficient predominating peril was the bad weather, then the verdict, as now entered for the plaintiff, must have stood. This follows from the fair construction of the language of these pleas. They must mean (the third) the ship was lost through unseaworthiness; (the sixth) the ship was lost through unseaworthiness alone. The same question is involved in both, because the proper question upon the third, as upon the sixth, would be: What was the efficient predominating cause of the disaster—was it the perils of the sea, or was it the inherent vice of the ship herself? A little consideration will make this reasonably clear. Seaworthiness and powers to encounter ordinary perils are convertible terms. But the underwriter does not insure against ordinary perils; he indemnifies only against the extraordinary and unforeseen perils of the sea. "To make the underwriters liable," in the words of Lord Chief Justice Jervis (Magnus v. Buttemer, 11 C. B. 881), "the injury must be the result of something fortuitous or accidental occurring in the course of the voyage." He does not insure against inherent vice, or, what is the same thing in other words, against ordinary perils. In a voyage policy, it is true, the assured warrant power to encounter ordinary perils. Such perils, therefore, are not perils which, if they cause loss, give a right of recovery under such a policy, not merely because they are not within the words of the policy, but because a condition has not been complied with, viz., that the ship shall be fit to meet them. In this case there was no power to encounter ordinary perils, and by this want of power the loss was caused. It is none the less a cause of loss—the loss was no more caused by perils insured against—because in such a policy as this the assured have not to warrant the non-existence of the cause of loss at the beginning of the risk. It may be said with truth that in this case there was evidence of two concurrent perils to which the ship was subject in her voyage, one a peril insured against, the extraordinary and unforeseen action of the sea; the other a peril not insured against, the inherent vice of the ship herself. The evidence of both these perils seems to have been stated to the jury, and they should have been asked which was the efficient predominating peril when the loss happened. According to their answer to that question, the verdict should be entered for the plaintiffs or defendant on the third plea and on the sixth, the issues involved in both these pleas being substantially the same. The averment of knowledge in the sixth plea may be disregarded as being immaterial, and when that is done the issues involved in the sixth plea are the same as the issues involved in the third; and the answers given by the jury to the questions of the learned judge do not dispose of them.

On this second ground, therefore, and for these reasons, I am of opinion that the rule should be absolute for a new trial, and as four of the judges concur in that result, the rule will be absolute for a new trial.

Judgment for defendant, the appellant.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, the respondents, Cattara, Jehu, and Cattara.

Solicitors for defendants, the appellants, Hellams, Son, and Coward.

Q. B.]

COMMERCIAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY v. BOULTON AND ANOTHER.

[Q. B.]

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH,

Reported by J. SMOYTH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, June 16, 1875.

COMMERCIAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY v. BOULTON AND ANOTHER.*Charter-party—Demurrage—Lying days—Working days.

A charter-party contained the following clause: "The loading and discharging the said ship to be as fast as the said steamer can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed the charterers, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lying days at 25l. per day."

Eight days, including one Sunday, were consumed at the port of loading. The ship arrived at the port of discharge on a Tuesday, but could not get to her berth till 8 a.m. on Wednesday. She then began discharging, and continued till 8 p.m., began again at 4 a.m. on Thursday and finished at 8 a.m.

Held, that "lying days" meant working days, and Sunday was excluded.

Held, also, that the charterers were liable to pay two days' demurrage for the Wednesday and Thursday.

A ship arrived at the port of loading on Sunday, and was cleared about noon on Monday. The charterers then floated part of the cargo (timber) down the river, and some was put on board that afternoon.

The jury found that Monday was a working day.

Held, that they were justified in so finding.

THIS case was tried before Pollock, B., at the Spring Assizes at Newcastle, in 1875. The action was brought to recover freight and demurrage in respect of two ships belonging to the plaintiffs, the Brighton and the Boston, which had been chartered by the defendants to carry timber from Muhlgraben or Bolderaa (the port of Riga) to England. The charter-party of the Brighton contained the following stipulations:—

The said ship shall, with all convenient speed, having liberty to take an outward cargo direct or on the way for the owners' benefit, sail and proceed to Bolderaa and Muhlgraben, or so near thereunto as she can safely get, and there load from the charterers a full and complete cargo . . . . . the cargo to be brought to and taken alongside at the charterer's risk and expense, and also, if it should be necessary, off into the roads . . . . . and being reloaded, shall proceed to London, or as near thereunto as she can safely get, and deliver the same afloat . . . . . the loading and discharging the said ship to be as fast as the steamer can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed the charterers, and ten days on demurrage, over and above the said lying days, at 25l. per day.

The Brighton arrived at Muhlgraben on Sunday, 26th April 1874, and her master at once gave notice that he was ready to load, and she began to load on Monday, 27th April, at 2.30 p.m. as soon as cargo was sent to her. She finished loading on Monday, 4th May, and commenced the homeward voyage. From the time when she was ready to load on Monday, 27th April, until she was loaded and ready to sail on Monday evening, 4th May, eight days, including one Sunday, were consumed. On her arrival in the Thames she was directed to proceed to the Victoria Docks. She got into the docks on Tuesday, 12th May, at 5 p.m., but some timber belonging to the defendants was in the way, which prevented her getting to her berth until 8 a.m. on the following morning, Wednesday, 13th May, when she commenced discharging her cargo, and continued to discharge until 8 p.m., when the labourers left off work. She began to discharge again at 4 a.m. on Thursday, 14th May, and had discharged the whole of her cargo by 8 a.m. She was consequently engaged one day and part of another in discharging. The plaintiffs claimed demurrage for all days beyond the minimum of seven days named in the charter-party; their claim included the Sunday, 3rd May, on the ground that they were entitled to treat every "running day" as a "lying day" within the charter-party, and also included two days at the Victoria Docks, on the ground that, as the discharging had gone into a second day, they must be paid as for a whole day. The defendants disputed the claim on the grounds that Monday, 27th April, was not a full working day, and that "lying days" in the charter-party meant "working days" and Sunday is not a working day; and that the plaintiffs ought to set off the four hours' work on 14th May against the time lost on 12th May, or at any rate were only entitled to be paid in proportion to the time actually occupied in discharging on 14th May.

By the charter-party of the Boston it was stipulated that "eight running days are to be allowed to the said merchants, if the ship is not sooner discharged, for loading and discharging the said ship, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lying days at 25l. per day."

The Boston arrived at Muhlgraben on Sunday, 19th April, but was not cleared until about noon on Monday, 20th April, and was not ready to load till about 4 p.m. The cargo, which was timber, was floated down from Riga in rafts, and some of it came alongside on Monday, 20th April, and was taken on board, part on that day after 4 p.m. and the rest the next morning before any more came down. The loading was finished on Tuesday, 28th April, and the ship at once commenced the homeward voyage, and arrived in dock on 7th May; she immediately commenced discharging her cargo and finished at 7 a.m. on 12th May. The Boston was thus at Riga for the purpose of loading seven whole days, including one Sunday, and part of two other days, and was at Southampton for the purpose of discharging four whole days and part of two other days. The plaintiff claimed demurrage for seven days over and above the eight running days.

The defendants paid into court enough to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim for demurrage for all the days for which they claimed in respect of the Boston except 28th April; they refused to pay demurrage for that day, and their liability depended on whether Monday, 20th April, was to be included in the loading days or not.

It was left to the jury to say whether Monday, 20th April, was a working day, and they found that it was.

A verdict was found for the plaintiffs for 25l. in respect of the Boston, being the demurrage payable for 28th April, and for 50l. in respect of the Brighton, being the demurrage payable in respect of the two days consumed in discharging in London, the lying days having been consumed at Riga; leave was reserved to move to enter the verdict for the defendants, or reduce the damages if the court should be of opinion that it ought to be done, having regard to the findings of the jury, the court to draw inferences of fact. A rule was obtained accordingly.

Herschell, Q.C. and Crompton showed cause.—

The lying days mentioned in the charter-party relating to the Brighton must be taken as running days: (Brown v. Johnson, 10 M. & W. 331.) [LUSH, J.—The whole clause must be read together and the words "loading and discharging as fast as the steamer can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed to the merchants," clearly point to working days being intended to be the meaning.] Then demurrage begins to run from the time the ship gets into dock, not to a berth, and as the lay days had then expired, the demurrage days commence from the day on which she got into dock and include all the days she was occupied in discharging. Each part of a day so occupied must be considered as a whole day.

Brown v. Johnson, 10 M. & W. 331;
Topscoff v. Balfour, 27 L. T. Rep. N.S. 710; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 46; 43 L. J., 16 C. P.

Aspinall, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce supported the rule.

MELLON, J.—I am of opinion that the rule fails on both grounds.

As to the Brighton, the stipulation is, "the loading and discharging the said ship to be as fast as the steamer can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed the charterers, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lying days, at 25*l.* per day." The contention on behalf of the defendants must amount to this, that, though a minimum of seven days is specified, yet if they go beyond the seven days, and take a portion of an eighth, they are not to pay for that as for an eighth day. This interpretation of the charter-party would be so inconvenient that I am of opinion that we must consider that they must load in time or else pay for a day, if any part of a day is occupied beyond the time specified. There is no authority on the question, but any other construction would be attended with the greatest inconvenience.

As to the Boston, it is not a question of construction, but whether on the circumstances of the case the jury were warranted in finding that 20th April was a working day. The circumstances are these: The vessel is ready to receive cargo; a portion of the cargo arrives, and in the presence of persons interested in the matter the loading is commenced; the loading of that portion is finished before any other timber arrives. The question then is, was there any reasonable ground for the jury finding that the day on which the first part of the timber arrived was by the assent of the parties treated as a loading day? I will not say that if they had found otherwise I should have thought their finding ought to be disturbed, but I think there was evidence to entitle them to find as they have found.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

The question with regard to the Brighton turns on the construction of this clause—"the loading and discharging the said ship to be as fast as the steamer can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed the charterers," and is, first, whether the seven days allowed as the minimum are exclusive or inclusive of Sundays, or are running or working days? I think, considering the words of the clause, they are working days, and Sunday is excluded and no demurrage was incurred at the port of loading; all the lay days were however, expended there.

Then as to the unloading. The ship got into dock on Tuesday, 12th May, and got to her berth and began discharging on Wednesday morning at 8; the work went on till 8 p.m., and began again on Thursday at 4 a.m., and was finished at 8 a.m., and demurrage is claimed for Tuesday. I am of opinion that that day must be counted in favour of the shipowners. The words are "ten days on demurrage over and above the said lying days at 25*l.* per day." There is no word used to show that there is to be any division of a day, or any apportionment of the 25*l.* Such construction would be exceedingly inconvenient, and I cannot think that it was in the contemplation of the parties. It may be that in consequence of detention for part of a day the ship may lose tide, or may not get to the next loading place in time. I, therefore, think it is consistent with the language used, and with convenience to hold that for every day or fraction of a day that the ship is detained over the specified time demurrage must be paid.

With regard to the Boston the case does not turn on the construction of the charter party, but whether the first day of loading was to be included in the loading days under the circumstances. We find here that the charterers sent down a portion of the cargo an hour after receiving notice, to a place where it would be dangerous to allow it to remain. They must have meant that it was to be put on board as soon as possible, and accordingly the jury have found that Monday, 20th April, was a working day. If the charterers had the benefit of the timber being put on board or agreed that it should be, they would be liable. I cannot suppose that they intended it to remain in the river.

QUAIN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

The question as to the Brighton seems perfectly clear. She got into dock on the 12th, and was ready to discharge when she could get to her berth. She discharged from eight a.m. on Wednesday, 13th, till eight p.m., and there is no evidence to show that that is not a fair good working day. If the charterers get into the second day, they are liable to pay demurrage. I think on this charter-party that they cannot divide a day. The contention is that they are not liable at all for the day, or at any rate only for a proportionate part, but there is no authority for that view. The defendants want to set-off the four hours occupied in discharging on the Thursday, against four hours said to have been lost on the Wednesday; but there is no evidence to show that they are entitled to this. The shipowners were not in fault if there was a loss of four hours.

As to the Boston, a more difficult question arises, whether a working day can be counted where only part of a day has been used. I agree that the charterers are entitled to a whole working day, but if for the convenience of all parties a portion of a day is used, it may be counted. It was a question for the jury, and if there was any evidence the jury were entitled to find as they did. The evidence is that notice was given at eleven a.m., and a portion of the timber was then sent down, and was loaded on the same day, the charterers or their agent being present and consenting. I think on this evidence the jury were justified in finding that this was to be counted as a working day.

Rule discharged.

Attorneys: Maples, Teedale, and Co., for Plaintiffs; Dodd, and Bramwell; Wild, Barber, and Brown, for Defendants.

PRIV. CO.]

THE STRATHNAVER.

[PRIV. CO.]

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.ON APPEAL FROM THE VICE ADMIRALTY COURT OF NEW ZEALAND.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPIWALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Dec 7 and 8, 1875.

(Present: The Right Hon. Sir R. J. PHILLIMORE, Sir MONTAGUE E. SMITH, and Sir ROBERT P.
COLLIER.)THE STRATHNAVER.*Salvage—Towage—Danger—No tender—Award—Detention—Demurrage—Damages.*Towage services (as distinguished from salvage services) are work done by one vessel in towing another to expedite her voyage, where nothing more is required than the accelerating her progress.Where a vessel is in neither actual nor imminent probable danger, a vessel engaged to tow her renders towage and not salvage services.*In a salvage suit, in which there has been no tender made by the defendants, a Court of Admiralty cannot, on finding that no salvage service has been performed by the plaintiffs, and their service was mere towage, make a decree for the amount of towage due to the plaintiffs.*Defendants in a salvage suit have no right to recover damages for demurrage against plaintiffs, who, having bond fide and through mere error of judgment arrested the defendants' vessel, and carried on the suit to recover reward for their alleged salvage services, are held to have performed no salvage, but mere towage, services.*This was an appeal from a decree of Alexander James Johnson, Esq., the deputy judge of Her Majesty's Vice Admiralty Court of New Zealand, in a cause of salvage lately pending in that court, instituted and promoted by the appellants as the owner, master and crew of the steam ship Storm Bird, against the ship or vessel Strathnaver, her cargo and freight, for the recovery of salvage in respect of certain services rendered to the Strathnaver, her cargo and freight.*In their libel the plaintiffs (the appellants) among other things averred:—

1. That at a quarter past eight p.m. on Monday, the 31st Aug. 1874, the steamship Storm Bird, of sixty-eight tons register, and manned by a crew of twelve hands, while proceeding out of the harbour of Port Nicholson, New Zealand, in the execution of a voyage from Wellington to Wanganui, with cargo and seventy passengers, observed the Strathnaver, a wooden ship of 1071 tons, with cargo and 391 emigrants in a position of danger close to and running towards a reef of rocks, known as the West Ledge, at the entrance of Port Nicholson harbour.

2. That blue lights were burnt by those on board the Storm Bird to indicate to the Strathnaver the proper channel for her to enter the harbour, and that the Storm Bird, putting on all steam, passed round under the stern of the Strathnaver and hailed those on board to port their helm, as they were running on to a reef.

3. That the Strathnaver's course, a continuance of which, for a few minutes longer, would have caused her destruction, was altered in accordance with the directions of those on board the Storm Bird, but the wind then dropping, and the Strathnaver drifting with the set of the sea on to Barrett's Reef, was taken in tow by the Storm Bird and towed safely to the Port of Wellington.

VOL. III, N.S.

4. That by the services of the plaintiffs the Strathnaver was rescued from total loss, and her cargo and the lives of those on board were saved.

Separate responsive allegations were filed by the owners of the Strathnaver and her cargo similar in substance, and averring among other things:—

1. That the Strathnaver when seen from the Storm Bird was three quarters of a mile to the southward of the outer rock of Nicholson's harbour, and steering by the harbour light on Somes Island.

2. That the Strathnaver was never in danger, or in any unsafe or improper proximity to the West Ledge, and before she had been hailed by those on board the Storm Bird a pilot had taken her in charge, by whose directions her helm had been ported, additional canvass set, and her course shaped towards the eastern side of the harbour.

3. That there was no sea which would have set the Strathnaver in the direction stated in the libel against an ebb tide.

4. That the service rendered by the Storm Bird was ordinary towage service, and was not necessary by reason of any danger to the Strathnaver.

No tender was made by the respondents.

Three witnesses were examined by the appellants before the Judge in Chambers, and other evidence on both sides was taken orally in open court before the learned Judge.

The learned Judge of the court below, by an interlocutory decree on Dec. 3 1874, dismissed the suit and condemned the plaintiffs in costs.

The learned Judge, in his judgment, went minutely into the facts, and ultimately came to the conclusion that, although the plaintiffs had acted bond fide in making their claim, there had been no salvage, but a mere towage service. The judgment concluded as follows: "In concluding my observations on the evidence, I desire to express my sincere hope that the result of this case, in which the claim of salvage has been based on what may originally have been a mere mistake (though, unfortunately, a mistake entailing most serious consequences) will not discourage the owners and masters of steam vessels engaged in the ordinary trade of the colony from being ever ready to lend assistance to vessels really or apparently in danger, but will only induce them to restrain their claims for remuneration beyond the value of towage service to cases where they can establish the existence of actual danger to the vessels assisted, and in which, therefore, they have a right to expect a liberal salvage remuneration. In the absence of any precedent showing that the court may make a decree for ordinary towage in what is substantially a suit for salvage, and in which no tender has been made, and considering that, as far as authorities have been brought before me, the cases in which decrees have been made for sums in addition to sums tendered on the footing of ordinary towage, have proceeded on the ground that the services were of salvage character, and not mere towage services, I do not see my way to make a decree for the amount of towage earned by the steamer, and, therefore, feel it my duty to dismiss the suit; and, as there is no foundation laid for making the case an exception to the general rule, the costs must follow the judgment."

Upon this decree being given, the respondents claimed demurrage for the detention of the Strathnaver whilst under arrest in the suit, from

PRIV. CO.]

THE STRATHNAVER.

[PRIV. CO.]

12th Sept. to 3rd Dec. 1874; and on 11th Dec., moved the court below to make a decree for demurrage as claimed. In support of their claim witnesses were called to show the amount of demurrage payable in respect of ships of that class, and the master of the Strathnaver said that he had never attempted to get bail because he had not been accredited to any one for that purpose. For the appellants evidence was given that the master might, if he had made application, have obtained bail at comparatively small cost. The appellants contended that they were not liable under these circumstances for any demurrage, but the court below nevertheless made a decree dismissing the suit with taxed costs, and pronouncing a sum of 600*l.* to be due to the defendants as demurrage or damages in respect of the detention of the Strathnaver under arrest.

From this decree the appellants (plaintiffs below) appealed for the following amongst other reasons:

First, because the evidence proved that the Strathnaver and her cargo were in a position of considerable danger, from which they were rescued by the services of the appellants; secondly, because the Storm Bird went out of her course to render assistance to a vessel in a position of danger, and her services being accepted must be regarded in the nature of salvage services; seventhly, because under the admitted facts of the case, the services of the Storm Bird were in the nature of salvage services, and entitled to be remunerated as such; eighthly, because the court below had no jurisdiction to decree demurrage to be due from the appellants; ninthly, because the learned judge of the court below was wrong in awarding demurrage to be due for the detention of the ship under warrant of court; tenthly, because it appears upon the evidence that bail could have been obtained for the Strathnaver and her release effected.

Dec. 7 and 8, 1875.—The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and R. E. Webster for the appellants.—First we submit that, upon the facts, there was a salvage service; secondly, even if the court should be of opinion that the service amounted only to towage, the appellants are entitled to a decree. There is no reported case where a salvage suit has been instituted and no tender made, and an award of towage only has been made; but there are several cases where a tender having been made in a salvage suit and the proved facts having shown the service to be mere towage, there has still been a decree for the plaintiffs. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE referred to The Harbinger (16 Jur. 279). There have been unreported cases in which the Court of Admiralty has found that plaintiffs, although not entitled to salvage reward, were entitled to payment for towage, and that the cases were so little distinct that an award has been given for towage in a salvage suit. Thirdly, there was no foundation for the respondent's claim for demurrage. It is expressly found in the judgment below that the suit was commenced in the bonâ fide belief that salvage services had been rendered, and this in itself negatives anything like mala fides or crassa negligentia, which are necessities before damages can be recovered:

The Evangelismos, Swab. 378; 12 Moore P.C.C. 352; Mitchell v. Jenkins, 5 B. & A. 594; Davies v. Jenkins, 11 M. & W. 755.

Cohen, Q.C. and Clarkson (Butt, Q.C. with them) for the respondents.—There was no salvage service, there being no actual damage to the Strathnaver. In a salvage suit such as this there can be no award for mere towage, because it is a suit against ship and cargo, and the owner of cargo is not liable for towage, and because towage is recoverable only by the owners of the towing vessel, not by her master and crew; the suit is instituted expressly for salvage services by owner, master, and crew. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There have, no doubt, been cases where salvage suits have been instituted and a mere towage reward has been tendered; but although it has been the practice to pronounce for the plaintiffs for the amount of towage rendered in such cases, it has never been the practice to decree towage in a salvage suit where no tender has been made, and the court would have no power to make such a decree. Hence their Lordships will not trouble you on that point.] Then the defendants are entitled to demurrage. The Evangelismos (Swab. 378) proceeded upon the ground that the plaintiffs there bonâ fide believed that the defendant's vessel was the wrongdoer; but here the plaintiffs could have had no bonâ fide belief that they had a claim for salvage; hence the decree for demurrage is right.

The Admiralty Advocate in reply.

The judgment of the court was delivered by Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the deputy judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of New Zealand, in a case of salvage promoted by the appellants, the owner, master, and crew of the steamship Storm Bird, against the ship Strathnaver, her cargo and freight, for recovery of salvage in respect of certain services rendered to the ship, her cargo and freight.

It is hardly necessary that their Lordships should repeat what they have often had occasion to say with regard to cases of this description, namely, that where facts have been established by oral testimony before the court below, and the court has maturely deliberated, and formed its opinion as to the credence due to the witnesses on the one side and the other, this court rarely interferes with such a finding on the part of the judge, and never unless there has been a manifest miscarriage of justice.

It appears that at about a quarter past eight p.m. on Monday, the 31st Aug. last year, the steamship Storm Bird, of sixty-eight tons register, manned by a crew of twelve hands, was coming out of the harbour of Port Nicholson, New Zealand, on a voyage from Wellington to a place called Wangamui, with a cargo and seventy passengers. The Strathnaver was a wooden ship of 1017 tons, a sailing vessel, with a cargo and 391 emigrants. She was entering the harbour at the time the other vessel was going out. The captain of the Storm Bird says: "When abreast of the Steeple Rock"—the exact position has been much considered in the course of this debate, and is some way up the entrance of the harbour—"my attention was drawn by the chief officer to signals, blue lights, and rockets, bearing from us S.S.W., coming as from the direction of Chaffer's Passage, and to the S. and W. of Barrett's Reef. I took my glasses and went on the bridge and saw the loom of a large vessel; I likewise saw a green light. Nearing the heads opposite Barrett's Reef, I made it out to be a ship. I was then about 100 yards N. of the Outer Rock. We were on a straight course. The green light of the ship was almost south, about two and a half points before our starboard beam to the S.W. of the Outer Rock. I considered the vessel was running into danger by going into Chaffer's Passage. I burned a blue light; my object was to indicate the position of the safe channel. At the same time I steamed with all haste towards the ship, about eight miles an hour. It was just as we were abreast the Outer Rock, about 150 feet off, that I put on steam and altered course to S. and W. I could not see the green light except when she rolled. I steamed towards her bows." Then he says: "She was inside a line drawn from Pencarron Head to end of the West Ledge Reef, heading towards the old pilot station, about two cables' length from the part of the West Ledge nearest to the Outer Rock of Barrett's Reef." He goes on to say, what is admitted, that the wind was very light from the south-east. He then says, when he came up to the bows of the vessel, he thought it unsafe to go round her bows; that he steamed under her stern, and came up again a second time, and then, when he got astern of the ship, he stopped his engine and called out, "port your helm;" that he was barely fifty yards from her stern, and he repeated the words three or four times, "port your helm; steer for the light; you are running on a reef." There is no doubt that when the Storm Bird came up the pilot was on board. Now it will be proper to refer to the evidence of the pilot of the Strathnaver, and to show what his account of the position of the vessel at this time is. The pilot first gives an account of where he was. He says:—"When I first got alongside, she was from half to three-quarters of a mile from the Outer Rock of Barrett's Reef, nearly due south. The red light of Somes Island was open all the time." A little lower down he says:—"I said from the boat, 'port your helm,' after that I had been a minute or two alongside. I did not see any reason at that time for being extremely expeditious. The proper course was to get the vessel into the white light. The steamer gained on us, but not much. We pulled our boat four and a half to five knots. We arrived at the ship before the steamer." That is an undoubted fact in the case. "After I got on deck, I braced the yards up, and set the upper mizen topsail, and loosed the main top-gallant sail. It was sheeted home, but am not positive whether it was hoisted up. When the steamer came the first time she came from the direction of the lighthouse at right angles to us, and as she passed I heard Captain Doile singing out 'port.' I recognised his voice. I said 'all right.'"

[Priv. Co.]

THE STRATHNAVER.

[Priv. Co.]

Now their Lordships are of opinion, upon an examination of the evidence with regard to the situation of the Strathnaver, that at this time it is clear that she was not heading up channel as she ought to have been, but, owing to the ignorance of the captain as to the chart, she was crossing the mouths of both the channels, so to speak, and she was to the south of the Outer Rock about three-quarters of a mile to the southward. There is no dispute as to the fact that the pilot gave these orders, or that he was on board the vessel before the steamer came up. It appears to their Lordships that the evidence upon which the learned judge of the court below relied was perfectly credible, that these orders were those which enabled the ship to be rescued from a situation of danger,—or perhaps, to speak more accurately, of running into great danger,—because had she continued her course with the wind as it then was blowing lightly from the south-east, there is no doubt that she would have run upon the West Ledge; and the first question which is really to be determined in this case, when we are considering whether salvage remuneration is due, or whether the service was simply one of towage, is, whose advice or whose order it was that prevented this large ship from running upon the West Ledge Rock? There is no reason to doubt that the captain of the Storm Bird did what he says he did, namely, that he shouted out "port," and that he burned a light by way of a signal. At the same time there is equally no doubt that the pilot, when he came up—the exact time is difficult to ascertain, the learned judge thinks it was a short time, but it was an appreciable time before the arrival of the Storm Bird—he gave the order from his boat, being anxious no doubt that no time should be lost in order to port the helm, and to brace the yards on the starboard tack. It was the execution of that order which in the opinion of the court below,—and their Lordships on the whole see no reason to differ from it, and it is also the opinion of the nautical assessors by whom their Lordships are assisted to-day—it was the execution of that order which rescued the ship from running into the danger which she otherwise would have incurred. Their Lordships, therefore, cannot ascribe the character of a salvor to the steamer, on the ground that he also gave the advice which has been mentioned.

Now there is no doubt of this fact, that when the steamer did come up again, having crossed the stern of the other ship, and come up again on her port bows, she was engaged to take the vessel in tow, and the question then arises, which has been so much contested in the court below, and before their Lordships to-day, whether he may be considered, in a construction of law, to have been engaged as salvor, or to have been engaged merely to tow. Upon this point it may be well to refer to a very clear and precise statement of the law by Dr. Lushington, in the case of The Princess Alice (3 W. Rob. 138), in which he says, "without attempting any definition which may be universally applied, towage services may be described as the employment of one vessel to expedite the voyage of another when nothing more is required than the accelerating her progress." It is contended on behalf of the appellants that something more was required than the acceleration of her progress, and that she was still in danger after the pilot had given the order to port the helm, and to brace the yards on the starboard tack, and to put the head of the vessel exactly in the opposite direction from what it had been, and to direct the course of the vessel eastward instead of north-westward upon the rock.

Now this is a question upon which the learned Judge had a variety of conflicting testimony before him, and after most maturely and carefully deliberating upon it—and, it may be observed, in passing, it would be difficult to conceive a more accurate and careful note than the learned Judge seems to have been at the pains of taking—after mature deliberation on the subject, he came to the conclusion that the Storm Bird was not engaged as a salvor, but merely to tow the vessel. The facts stand in this way; they are thus described in the evidence of the pilot. He says: "After t' steamer passed she stopped. I thought she was going on her course. I had no thought of taking a steamer then. I then had a conversation with the captain—that is, his own captain—"on the propriety of getting a steamer to tow us, not on account of danger, but on account of expedition." It may be observed, in passing, that this large vessel had a number of emigrants on board, who were naturally extremely anxious to arrive at the port. "I think the master of the steamer might have been deceived as to the position of our ship, because he came out on the bright light and saw the vessel under the red." In the lighthouse at Somes Island there are three lights, a green light, a white light, and a red light. The white light is the one which should be followed; it is the safe light leading to the central passage up the main entrance, and which ought to be followed. He goes on to say: "It might have appeared to him she was more to the west than she was. I know the position exactly from pulling from the Outer Rock to the ship. The captain hesitated about taking the steamer. I told the captain she belonged to a respectable firm. He asked the name and I told him. He said they corresponded with his owners or consignees. Something to that effect. I then hailed the steamboat." Now it is important to observe what he says passed. "I said 'Storm Bird ahoy!' He said, 'What is it?' I said, 'Will you give us a tow?' He said, 'Yes.' I said, 'What will you give us a tow for?' He said 'Leave that to the agent,' or to that effect. That did not satisfy the captain till I told him about Mr. Turnbull. I then said, 'All right, I will give you a tow line.' I said, 'If you will only tow me inside the Steeple Rock that will do.' I do not know whether he heard or not." Now the evidence establishes both these facts, first, that the pilot proposed to engage him merely to tow the vessel; and secondly, that the captain of the Storm Bird never accepted the proposal as a mere service of towage. Therefore the question must be determined with reference to the necessity of the ship at this time, because the captain not having accepted the offer to tow, if the vessel was in a state of danger at that time, and he had towed her, he would be entitled to be considered as salvor; but it has been already stated that the court below was satisfied that at this time there was no danger to the vessel.

Their Lordships think they ought not to disturb this decision, but, inasmuch as the learned Judge has used the words "actual danger" very often, although probably it received a restriction in his own mind which was not stated, it may be useful to state what is really the law with respect to services rendered to a vessel in danger, or apparent danger. The law is laid down in the case of The Charlotte (3 W. Rob. 71) by Dr. Lushington. He says, "It is not necessary, I conceive, that the distress should be actual or immediate, or that the danger should be imminent and absolute." Their Lordships are of opinion there was neither actual nor imminent probable danger at the time these services were rendered. The finding of the Judge to this effect, no doubt, depended upon his giving preference to the witnesses who were produced on behalf of the respondents over those who were produced on behalf of the appellants. If indeed the judge had been satisfied that what the appellants' witnesses asserted was true, namely, that the pilot said to them, "Will you tow her off this reef?" the case would have assumed a very different aspect, and it might have been fairly urged in that case that what the Storm Bird did was an act of salvage and not an act of towage. But in the circumstances which have been stated, the learned judge came to a different conclusion upon the facts before him, and their Lordships, on the whole, decline to set aside that decision. Therefore, upon that part of the case, their Lordships will humbly recommend Her Majesty to affirm the judgment.

There is another portion of the judgment, by no means immaterial, to which I must now advert. It appears that the learned Judge of the court below was of opinion that he could entertain in this case a claim for demurrage. The property was valuable, and worth in all about 40,000*l.* The action I think had been entered for 12,000*l.* The learned judge upon the whole thought he was justified in decreeing to the respondents damage to the amount of 600*l.* in the shape of demurrage.

Now it is to be observed that the learned judge himself more than once in the course of his judgment expressed his opinion that those on board the Storm Bird, and especially the captain of the Storm Bird conducted themselves bona fide throughout, and he ascribes no misconduct to him of any sort or kind, but simply an error in judgment in bringing the suit. Their Lordships think that the learned judge was well founded in that opinion. In this state of things their Lordships are at a loss to understand why any damages at all should have been granted against the appellants.

The law upon this was very carefully considered in the decision in the case of The Evangelismos (12 Moore P. C. C. 352; Swab 378), by the very eminent judge who delivered their Lordships' opinion, Mr. Pemberton Leigh. In that case (as appears from the head note of the report) "the collision took place at sea. The vessel causing the damage got away. From the appearance of a vessel in port the owner of the damaged vessel caused her to be arrested to answer an action for damages. The vessel seized was a foreign vessel, and in consequence of the owner having no funds in this country, she was detained for some months before she was released on bail. The plaintiffs failed to indentify the vessel seized as being the one causing the damage, and the Admiralty Court dismissed the action with costs, refusing to award damages." Then there was an appeal to their Lordships, and Mr. Pemberton Leigh in delivering the judgment of their Lordships said—"It is also said that it is the established rule of the Admiralty Court where a party brings an action and succeeds in upholding it, that he is entitled, unless there are circumstances to take it out of the ordinary rule, to have compensation for the loss he has suffered, which in some cases is very inadequate, but it is the only compensation the court can award. Their Lordships think there is no reason for distinguishing this case or giving damages. Undoubtedly there may be the cases in which there is either malice fides or that crassa negligentia which implies malice, which would justify a court of admiralty giving damages, as in an action brought at common law damages may be obtained. In the Court of Admiralty the proceedings are however more convenient, because in the action in which the question is disposed of, damages may be awarded." Their Lordships came to the conclusion, though the case was certainly a very strong one, inasmuch as the wrong vessel had been seized, that in the absence of proof of mala fides or malicious negligence, they ought not to give damages against the parties arresting the ship.

CT. OF APP.]

EASTMAN v. HARRY.

[CT. OF APP.]

It appears to their Lordships that the general principles at law are correctly laid down in that judgment, and it is their intention to adhere to them. They will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that that part of the learned judge's sentence be reversed.

Their Lordships think that inasmuch as the appellants have succeeded in part of their case, and as they have appealed from the whole judgment, they will follow the rule which they have usually adopted on these occasions, and leave both parties to pay their own costs of the appeal. But their Lordships think the appellants are entitled to have their costs in the court below, strictly confined to the costs incident to the decree as to demurrage, and that they must pay the costs of the salvage suit in the court below.

Solicitors for the appellants, J. and R. Gole.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Wednesday, Jan. 19. 1876.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., MELLISH, L.J., BAGGALLAY, J.A., and CLEASBY, B.)

EASTMAN v. HARRY.

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Stevedore—Liability of shipowner to charter-party—Agent—Disclosed principal—Election.

The owner of a ship had chartered her to A. for the purpose of being loaded; the charter-party provided that the stevedore was to be nominated by the charterer, and be under the control of the captain, and was to be paid by the owner. A. sub-chartered the ship to B., entering into a charter-party with a similar clause. B. employed the plaintiff, who was a stevedore, to load the ship, and introduced him to the defendant as the person who was to load the ship. The defendant frequently came on board while the ship was being loaded, and superintended and gave certain instructions relative to the stowage of the cargo. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for non-payment of his charges,

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench), that there was evidence of a contract between the plaintiff and defendant.

On completion of the loading the plaintiff sent in his account to B., headed "To captain and owners," and pressed B. for payment. B. had sent in his account to A., and A. had sent in his account to the defendant, with the item "Stevedore's account" charged. The defendant had paid A.'s account, and A. had paid B.'s account. B. became bankrupt, and did not pay the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decision of the Queen's Bench) that the defendant was liable to pay the plaintiff's account.

THIS was an action brought by the plaintiff, a stevedore, to recover from the defendant, a shipowner, a sum of 57*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, for the "stowage" of a ship called the Caroline, belonging to the defendant.

The facts, which were taken as they appeared from the Judge's notes at the trial, were as follows:

The defendant, who was owner of the ship Caroline, chartered the ship to one Adams, for the purpose of providing a cargo, and entered with him into a charter-party, which contained the following clause:

The stevedore to be nominated by the charterers, but to be under the control of the captain and paid by the owners (charterers not being responsible for bad stowage); dunnage and ballast, if required, to be provided by the owners; 5*l.* 5*s.* gratuity to master.

Adams sub-chartered the ship to one Beckley. The charter-party entered into by Adams and Beckley contained a clause relating to the nomination and payment of the stevedore, similar to the former charter-party. Beckley, who was a ship and insurance broker, and who was in the habit of chartering ships, for which he usually employed the plaintiff as stevedore, thereupon engaged the plaintiff as stevedore to load the Caroline. Beckley had no communication with the defendant or Adams as to employing a stevedore, but employed his own stevedore in the usual way, by handing him a card with the barque Caroline on it, and afterwards introduced the plaintiff to defendant as the man to stow his ship. The plaintiff thereupon proceeded with the loading, and while so employed used to see the defendant three or four times a day, on occasions when the defendant used to come on board. This the defendant did every day, and on those occasions he superintended the loading of the ship, and gave directions regarding the stowing of the cargo. The vessel was loaded, and the plaintiff sent in this account to Beckley, headed, "To captain and owners," and made several applications to him for payment. In the meantime Beckley sent in his account to Adams, and Adams forwarded his account to the defendant, stowage being charged 53*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* The defendant, who did not know of the sub-charter to Beckley, paid Adams's account, and Adams paid Beckley's account shortly afterwards, and before paying the plaintiff Beckley became insolvent, whereupon the plaintiff sought to recover his charges from the defendant.

The action came on to be tried before Quain, J., at Westminster, on 17th April 1875; at the conclusion of the evidence the learned judge directed a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that there was no liability on the part of the defendant to discharge the plaintiff's claim, and leave was reserved for the plaintiff to enter the verdict for him in case the court was of opinion that there was such liability. The plaintiff moved accordingly, and obtained a rule, which came on to be argued before Blackburn, Quain, and Field, JJ., when the ruling of Quain, J. was upheld, and the rule was discharged.

Gates, Q.C. (Ingham with him), for the plaintiff, the appellant.—The stevedore is by the charter-party to be nominated by the charterer, but he is to be under the control of the captain, and to be paid by the owners; the charterer is only the agent of the owner: (Sandeman v. Scurr, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 608; L. Rep. 2 Q.B. 86.) The point as to privity, which is the only point at issue between the parties, has been decided by the court below in favour of the plaintiff, but the court gave judgment against him on the ground that he had elected to give credit to Beckley, and had never applied to the defendant until Beckley failed.

The counsel for the plaintiff were here stopped by the court, and R. E. Webster and Johnstone for the defendant were called on.—The plaintiff was employed by Beckley, and there is no evidence that the defendant ever employed Beckley. The plaintiff gave credit to Beckley, and never sought to charge the defendant until after Beckley had failed. There is no privity between the plaintiff and defendant, nor is there any implied liability on the part of the owner to pay the stevedore. True, the charter-party says that the stevedore is to be paid by the owners, but he has no knowledge of the charter-party, and he cannot rely upon a clause of which he has no knowledge: (See Blakie v. Stembridge, 6 C. B., N. S., 894; 28 L. J. 329, C. P.). Then again, Beckley, though sometimes acting as broker, in this case acted as charterer, and the disputed liability on the part of the owner is rebutted. Assuming that the defendant appointed Beckley, who in turn appointed the plaintiff, then the defendant would be, as regards the plaintiff, in the position of an undisclosed principal. The plaintiff, having elected to give credit to the agent after the principal was disclosed, must be bound by his election: (Thompson v. Davenport, 2 Sm. Lead Cases, 327).

Lord COLEBIDGE, C. J.—The action in this case is brought by the plaintiff, a stevedore, who has been employed to load a ship, which ship was the ship of the defendant, and had been chartered by one Adams. In the charter-party which was entered into between the defendant and Adams was a clause by which the stevedore was to be nominated by the charterer, but was to be under the control of the captain and was to be paid by the owners, and the charterers were not to be responsible for bad stowage. Then a subsequent charter was entered into between Adams, the original charterer, and a person named Beckley, and in that charter-party the same clause relative to the nomination and employment of the stevedore occurs. This being the state of affairs, Harry, the defendant, having chartered the ship to Adams, and Adams having sub-chartered the ship to Beckley, Beckley then employed the plaintiff to load the ship; and while the plaintiff was loading the ship, Harry, the defendant, comes on board, and is on board several times a day, superintending the loading, and giving instructions respecting the stowage of the cargo. The cargo is loaded, and a bill for 57l., the amount of the stevedore's charges, is sent early in November, headed "To captains and owners," to Thomas Eastman, &c. That bill is given to Beckley, who is the sub-charterer, and the person who had been originally instrumental in putting the plaintiff on the ship. That being the case, and the money not being paid, application is made by the plaintiff, and made several times, to Beckley to pay the amount, Beckley put him off repeatedly, and on the 7th Nov., not many days after, the plaintiff came to Beckley and applied for the money; a conversation ensued, in which Beckley said he had settled with the owner, that he had no money, and could not pay Beckley next became a bankrupt, but before he was so, the account headed, "To captain and owners," had been sent in to the defendant; defendant does not pay, and the question is, is he liable?

Two questions arise. The first is, was there a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant? Upon that point the Court of Queen's Bench have decided that there was, though Quain, J., appears to have hesitated. We are of opinion that that decision was correct, upon principles which have several times been explained in the course of the argument. If Beckley stood in such relation to the defendant that Beckley was agent for the employment of the plaintiff, then the work was done by the plaintiff for the defendant, and the defendant must pay. Is there evidence of that? The Court of Queen's Bench have held that there was. It has been contended there was not, but I should think it difficult to contend that upon that point the conclusion of the Queen's Bench should be impeached. This was the plaintiff's evidence on that point: "I saw the defendant three or four times a day on board the Caroline; he was there seeing to the loading of the ship and superintending the loading, and he gave me instructions to put particular cargo here or there in the ship as we went on." There is no evidence in contradiction of this; and there is further the evidence of Beckley, who says, "I introduced plaintiff to Harry as the man to stow his ship." The evidence of the plaintiff that he looked to the owner is confirmed by two documents, namely, two accounts which he made out headed, "To captain and owner;" and this again is strengthened by the course of dealing which plaintiff always pursued, which was that the loading was paid for by the owners, and the stevedore is the person employed by the owners; therefore I should have thought, if the matter had stood upon the evidence in the case, that there was abundant evidence to warrant the Queen's Bench in coming to the conclusion they have come to on this point—a conclusion in which we concur.

But then arises the question on the two important documents in the case, namely, the two charter-parties, and the operation of the clause in those charter-parties relating to the employment of the stevedore. Now the importance of the passages in those two charter-parties is not so much in favour of the plaintiff as it is against the defendant, inasmuch as the plaintiff knew nothing about this proviso. The question whether Beckley was the agent of the defendant here becomes most important, because the provision is that the stevedore is to be nominated by the charterer. It is so in the first charter from the defendant to Adams, as also in the second charter party from Adams to Beckley; the stevedore is to be nominated by the charterer, and therefore he is to be nominated by the agent of the defendant; he is to be under the control of the captain, who is the owner's representative, and he is to be paid by the owner. The effect of this shortly is that the charterer was to have the nomination of the stevedore; he was but the agent of the ship owner to nominate the stevedore, who was to be the servant of the owner, for he was to be under the control of the captain, and the owner was to pay. Therefore, whether this matter is considered by oral evidence or by the two charter-parties, still by both the liability

[CT. OF APP.]

EASTMAN v. HARRY.

[CT. OF APP.]

to pay the stevedore is thrown on the owner of the ship. The owner in the second charter-party is the same as the owner in the first charter-party, and what to my mind is more important is that Beckley was the agent of the owner to appoint the stevedore; and, therefore, I am of opinion that, both from the two charter-parties and the evidence in the case, there is a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant.

On the second question, if I understand rightly from the judge's notes, the action was decided in favour of the defendant, because, this is a case of principal and agent, and within the case of Thompson v. Davenport (ubi sup.); that, I understand, to have been the ground on which the Court of Queen's Bench decided in favour of the defendant. But, with unfeigned respect for their decision, I am unable to see any facts here which bring the case within that principle.

As I understand the facts, the disclosure of the principal was at a very early period; the relation of the defendant as owner of the ship was disclosed to the plaintiff while the loading was going on; and directly the loading was over, the intention of the plaintiff to sue him was manifested by sending in an account to him through Beckley, the agent. If that was at once done, and the principal then disclosed was charged, I am at a loss to see how the principle of Thompson v. Davenport can apply. The plaintiff made his charge against the defendant as early as he could through the broker; applications were made through the agent—not directly to the owner, but to the well-known agent—with the object of first getting the money from the agent if he could; and failing that, then the plaintiff does what his intention all along was to do, that is, holds defendant liable and sends in his account; and also does, what all along he had indirectly done, namely, sent his account to the defendant through the agent. The facts then do not raise the principle laid down in Thompson v. Davenport, and that case has no application. The plaintiff did all he could be expected to do; he knew that defendant was the principal, and he charged him as principal. Assume that the defendant has paid Adams, it is his own fault; if when he receives Adams's account he pays this item inter alia, it is his own fault; therefore, whether on the facts or on the principle, or on the substantial justice of the case, though agreeing on the first point with the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, I cannot come to the same conclusion as they have done on the second point, and the judgment must therefore be reversed.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

In substance three questions arise: First, was Beckley the agent of the defendant to engage the stevedore? secondly, did the stevedore give credit to the defendant? and thirdly, if he did give credit to the defendant, is he discharged?

The first question turns upon the charter-party. No doubt the stevedore was ordinarily appointed by the shipowner; still there may be a contract between the shipowner and the charterer, by which the stevedore is to be appointed by the charterer. Now has the present charter-party that effect? "The stevedore is to be nominated by the charterers, but is to be under the control of the captain and paid by the owners." In the first place, he is to be "nominated" by the charterer, the charterer does not bind himself to employ. He might have fulfilled the clause by sending a letter to the defendant nominating the plaintiff. Then the plaintiff is to be under the control of the captain; how can he be under the control of the captain unless he is appointed by the owner? The real contract is, that the stevedore is engaged by the owner, and only nominated by the charterer. What the construction of the second charter would amount to might be doubtful if "the owner" meant Adams; but Adams is only the charterer, and clearly the owner is the shipowner. By the second charter Adams substituted Beckley for himself, who was to nominate the stevedore, and therefore I come to the conclusion that Beckley was agent to employ the stevedore.

Then on the second question, did the plaintiff give credit to the defendant (because he might have given credit to Beckley), and then Beckley would be liable; but he did nothing of the kind, he says, the ordinary practice is to trust the shipowner, and in order to do that I head all my bills "To captain and owners." In the course of the employment he finds out who the owner was. Having found who he was, he sends his bill to Beckley, heading it "To captain and owners:" that was an election to sue the owners. It amounts to this: I will endeavour to get payment of the account from Beckley, but if I cannot I will apply to the owner, and he thereby elects to sue the defendant.

Then comes the third question: Is the defendant discharged by any conduct on the plaintiff's part? The account is sent in November, and payment is requested, and on the 7th Nov. the account between Adams and Harry is settled. The defendant had done nothing which could discharge the plaintiff; how can the defendant discharge himself because he has paid Adams without seeing that Adams has paid the stevedore? Adams sends in an account to the defendant, without seeing if the stevedore is paid or not, and the defendant settles it. The plaintiff then goes on pressing Beckley; he gives no credit to Beckley, but he is willing to get payment if he can. The effect of the evidence is, not that the defendant allows Beckley to settle—and I do not think the Court of Queen's Bench thought that—but that on general grounds he was entitled to settle.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—Prima facie the owner is liable to the stevedore, but this prima facie liability can be modified by surrounding circumstances. In this case there were two charter-parties. Beckley acted as the broker, and "did the ship's business." The stevedore was employed by Beckley, and was introduced by Beckley to the owner as owner. The owner was often on board, superintending; he was there not only as actual owner, but as ostensible owner. There is nothing in the charter-parties themselves inconsistent with the defendant being the owner; on the contrary, the charter-parties are quite consistent with that fact. It has been suggested that, as the charterer was to provide the stevedore, therefore the charterer was to pay; that is to say, that the stevedore was to be nominated by the charterer and paid by the captain. But there is nothing in this to take away the prima facie liability of the owner. Then it is said that the plaintiff is charged by the payment by the defendant to Adams; but if A. owes money to B. and pays C., relying on the fact that C. has paid B., he must take the consequences. I think that the short statement on the judge's notes shows the nature of the transaction. No settlement has ever taken place which amounts to a payment of the plaintiff's claim, and there cannot be said to be any payment.

CT. OF APP.] HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER—GAMBLES v. OCEAN MARINE INS. CO. OF BOMBAY. [CT. OF APP.]

CLEASBY, B.—Two questions have been stated. The first is the relation between the plaintiff and the defendant, and on this the evidence shows that the stevedore always looks to the owner and sends in the account to him, and independently of the charter-parties this would be proof of the plaintiff's case. It appears to me that the language of the charter-parties is immaterial, for the plaintiff might take no notice of them, and it would be a strong thing to hold that the effect of that clause was to alter the position of the parties; and the only remaining question then is, has the plaintiff elected to give credit to Beckley? If he has, the debtor under such circumstances is discharged, but there was no election to give credit to Beckley, and there was nothing to discharge the owner.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Scard and Son.

Solicitors for defendant, Lowless and Co.

Wednesday, Jan. 19, 1876,

HUTCHINSON v. GLOVER.

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Discovery—Compromise of suit between defendant and third party—Plaintiff's right to inspect terms of compromise.

In an action by owner of cargo against shipowner, the plaintiff alleged damage in consequence of a collision with another ship, caused by defendant's negligent navigation. A compromise of cross-suits in the Admiralty Court in respect of the collision had been entered into by the respective owners of the two ships.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench) that the plaintiff had a right to inspect the terms of this compromise.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, affirming an order made by Quain, J., at judges' chambers, reported ante p. 85.

The plaintiffs were owners of certain bales of hemp, laden on board the ship Burlington, belonging to the defendants. The cargo had been damaged on the voyage, and the plaintiffs now sued in respect of such damage. The cause of damage was that the Burlington had come into collision with another vessel called the Hakon Adelsteen, and had sunk. After the collision cross suits between the owners of the two vessels were commenced in the Admiralty Court, which were finally settled by a compromise. The terms of compromise had been drawn up and settled by the parties, and the plaintiff now sought to obtain inspection of the document embodying this compromise. It appeared, however, that in the present case the former suit in the Admiralty Court was by the owner of the same ship for the damage to the goods as well as the ship. This was not mentioned in the court below before their decision, the decision did not proceed upon it, and the fact was now brought before the court upon an affidavit.

Butt Q.C., Clarkson, and Witt, for the defendants.

—The question is whether it is desirable to enforce production of this document. The original suit was brought for damage to ship and cargo.

[MELLISH, L.J.—The production of this document will not prevent you from objecting at nisi prius to its being evidence against you.] True, but it is undesirable to allow A. to produce to C. a compromise between A. and B. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I do not see how you are to get over the fact that the original suit was brought for damage to the ship as well as to the goods, which is the substance of this action.] Butt Q.C.—I do not see how I am to argue against that fact.

Cohen Q.C. and Phillimore for the plaintiff.

Per CURIAM.—The judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench must be affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Druce, Sons and Jackson.

Solicitors for defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

Tuesday, Feb. 1, 1876.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lord COLERIDGE, L.J., and MELLISH, L.J.)

GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY.

Shipping—Policy of insurance—Insurance of ship and cargo to port, "and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival"—Construction of—Deviation. G. and others effected with the O. company a policy of insurance for 600l. on a ship. By this policy the ship was insured from the port of "Pomona to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival." The stamp was sufficient to cover a voyage and a time policy.

Having arrived safely at Newcastle-on-Tyne the ship discharged her cargo, and being chartered to carry a cargo of coals to Gibraltar, she received a small quantity as stiffening, and was moved to another place within the port of Newcastle in order to complete her loading; whilst there and within the fifteen days after her arrival at Newcastle she was seriously damaged in a storm.

Held (reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Division), that the defendants were liable, as the policy was a time as well as a voyage policy, and that the loss sustained was within the risks covered by the policy.

APPEAL from Exchequer Division.

The action was upon a policy of insurance, effected by the plaintiffs with the defendants, for a sum of 600l., upon a ship of the plaintiffs', from "Pomona to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival."

A case was stated, without pleadings, for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and was argued in Nov. 1875.

The question for the opinion of the court below was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the policy for damage sustained by the ship within the fifteen days after arrival at Newcastle, but after discharge of her cargo, and whilst loading another cargo in another part of the port.

The court below (Kelly, C. B. and Amphlett, B.) gave judgment for the defendants (Cleasby, B. dissenting), and from this judgment the plaintiffs now appealed.

The case below, with the arguments and judgments, will be found fully reported ante, p. 92.

Herschell, Q.C. (with him Rolland), for the appellants, the plaintiffs below.—There is nothing in the case to cut down the plain meaning of the words the parties used. The very object of it

OF APP.] GAMBLES AND OTHERS v. OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF BOMBAY. [CT. OF APP.]

; the words "and for fifteen days whilst after arrival" was to cover what really happened.

There is nothing to show that the ship l cargo at all. She might have been in l. He cited mercantile Marine Insurance Company v. Tithering- m, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 340; 34 L. J. 11, Q. B.; 6 l. & Sm. 755;

ughton v. Empire Marine Insurance Company, Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 406; 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 80; l. Rep. 1 Ex. 206;

Phillips on Insurance, p. 950.

ases on deviation referred to by the Lord Baron below do not apply to the present

m, Q.C. (with him Crawford) for respon- defendants below.—The policy contains which show clearly that cargo was to be on Words referring to general average arily imply cargo. The usual policy covers yage, and twenty-four hours after, and this nal period of fifteen days, which has been in this case, was intended to apply "whilst" which means, whilst at the place where s discharging her cargo. She must remain until she has discharged her cargo, or she ove from place to place in that port, and rge her cargo in parcels: but she must not ke any new adventure, or do anything, as d here, unconnected with the voyage for she is insured: (Arnould on Insurance, 3rd 172: The Company of African Merchants sd) v. The British and Foreign, &c., Com- ante, vol. 1, p. 558; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. l. Rep. 3 Ex. 154; 42 L. J. 6, Ex.). Sup- n ordinary Lloyd's policy, making it "law- the ship to stay at any port." It is settled e must stay for a purpose connected with yage to be within the policy, add fifteen nd the maxim that the accessory follows the al applies.

schell, Q.C., replied.

LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—In this case s a policy of insurance upon a ship "from on to Newcastle, and for fifteen days, whilst after arrival." The ship arrived at Newcastle, ed her cargo, and, having moved afterwards ther part of the harbour, took in stiffening fresh voyage, and was lost in the harbour. uestion for our consideration is, are the riters liable? The ship was unquestion- st whilst at the port of Newcastle within the days, and under circumstances within the of the policy. But it is contended for the ants, and the grounds of the decision of the l judges below are, that this was a voyage and therefore everything in the policy must ructed so that the risk may be considered to ll that is done with reference to the voyage othing more, and that the fifteen days e construed with reference to the voyage nd if during those fifteen days the ship was anything with reference to the voyage, the riters are liable, otherwise not. Now think is assuming the whole case. Is purely a voyage policy? Undoubtedly, as the voyage from Pomaron to New- is concerned, it is a voyage policy; but the words immediately following, "and for days, whilst there, after arrival," have d some peculiar mercantile meaning, the n of these words carries the persons ted in the policy over a further period of fifteen days, and then as to that period it is not a voyage policy, but a time policy. It appears to me that there is no authority for the view of the judges below, and that their judgment was founded upon no hypothesis except that of this being a voyage policy only. Unless that hypothesis is conceded, the authorities to which the Chief Baron referred do not apply, and I think the hypothesis cannot be conceded. The case of the Mercantile Marine Insurance Company v. Etherington (ubi sup.), where the ship was insured "at and from Liverpool to any port or ports in the North and South Pacific Oceans, and during thirty days' stay in her last port of discharge," with a clause that the insurance should continue until "she hath moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety"—is much more applicable to the present case than the other authorities, because there the voyage was treated as one separate thing to this extent, that the twenty-four hours, the usual time, was added after the arrival of the ship at the termination of her voyage, and then upon that was engrafted the stipulation for her safety for thirty days. Surely in that case the two things must be treated as being separate, and I think so here. I am of opinion that the appellants are entitled to recover.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—I am of the same opinion. The argument of Mr. Cohen impressed me at first that the case of The Company of African Merchants v. The Bristol and Foreign, &c., Co. (ubi sup.), where the words "stay and trade" were in a policy, and it was held to be a deviation to undertake any adventure unconnected with the trade of the African coast, applied here, and that, on that principle, in the present case any risk unconnected with the object of the voyage is a deviation from the risks covered by the policy; but that view assumes this to be a voyage policy, and a voyage policy only. Another point is that the usage, as to policies covering the risks incurred twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival in port, should be extended to the fifteen days in this case. I do not take this view. We must give the ordinary meaning to words unless it is shown that there is some usage which has deprived those words of their ordinary sense. Here the words are that the insurance is to last "for fifteen days whilst there after arrival," and there is no usage to restrict their meaning. The loss happened within the fifteen days in the port, and hence was within the policy. I am of opinion that the risk was covered by the policy.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think there is no sufficient reason to depart from the plain meaning of the words used in the policy. If the words had been simply "for fifteen days after arrival" it might be necessary to limit the construction to be put upon them, because the underwriters could hardly have intended to be liable for a ship going out to sea within that time; but the express words, "whilst there," show that the stipulation is that the underwriter is to run the risk of what may happen to the ship whilst in the port. If we held otherwise, we should defeat the object of the shipowner in insuring in these terms, because what he wants is that his ship may be always covered. In the usual way a shipowner insures until a ship arrives and twenty-four hours afterwards, and then insures, "at and from for the next voyage," and so keeps his ship always in-

CT. OF APP.]

THE SISTERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

sured. But to do this he must know what his next voyage will be. If he does not know it may be convenient to him to insure so that his ship may be covered for a time certain, so that he may know when the risk will terminate. If we should make that time uncertain by deciding that it meant that it terminated on the completion of the delivery of the cargo, the shipowner's object would be defeated. I think the words used here were intended to meet this particular case.

Judgment for appellants. Judgment below reversed.

Solicitor for plaintiffs, W. W. Wynne, for H. Forshaw and Hawkins, Liverpool.

Solicitors for defendants, Freshfield and Williams.

Monday, Feb. 7, 1876.

(Before JAMES and MELLISH, L.J.J.; BAGGALLAY, J.A.; and MELLOR, J.)

THE SISTERS.

Collision—Appeal—Nautical assessors—Credibility of witnesses—Contributory negligence—Act causing collision—Must be negligent.

On an appeal from the Admiralty Division, the Court of Appeal, when unassisted by nautical assessors, will not reverse a finding of the court below upon a question of fact depending upon the credibility of witnesses regarded from a nautical point of view, provided that there is evidence in support of that finding.

Before a plaintiff in a collision cause can be deprived of his right of recovery against a negligent defendant by reason of an act done by the plaintiff, without which the collision would not have occurred, it must be shown that such an act of the plaintiff was negligent.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Right Hon. Sir R. Phillimore, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, in a cause instituted on behalf of the respondents, the owners of the sailing barge Alfreda, against the sailing barge Sisters, belonging to the appellants, for the recovery of damages arising from a collision which occurred between a screw steamship called the Thames and the barge Alfreda.

The collision occurred at about noon on the 15th Oct. 1874, off Jenning-tree Point, in the river Thames.

The respondents in their petition stated that the Alfreda, a sailing barge of 40 tons register, was proceeding from Elmley, in Kent, to Millwall, with a cargo of cement, and was at the entrance of Halfway Reach, that the wind was about S.W., blowing a fresh breeze; that the weather was fine and the tide nearly half flood, and of the force of about three to four knots per hour; that the Alfreda was under sail, and was making about six knots an hour, heading about north; that another sailing barge, called the Volunteer, was also sailing up, and was on the starboard side of the Alfreda, and a short distance from her; and that the Sisters was also sailing up ahead of and distant three or four lengths from the Alfreda; that at such time the Sisters improperly starboarded her helm, and threw herself across the bows of the Thames, which was coming down the river near the south shore, and compelled the Thames to starboard her helm, in order to avoid running over the Sisters; that thereby immediate danger of collision between the Thames and the Alfreda was occasioned, and although the helm of the Alfreda was put hard a port, the Thames with her stern struck the Alfreda on her port quarter, causing her to sink.

The appellants in their answer alleged the same facts as to the time, speed, wind, and as to the relative position of the barges, and that the Sisters, the Alfreda, and the Volunteer, were all keeping as close to the south side of the river as they could get, and the Sisters had her head looking in towards the south shore, to counteract the effect of the flood tide, which sets strong from off Jenning-tree Point over towards the north side of the river; that there were some barges at anchor on the south side of the river near Jenning-tree point; that the Thames was seen by those on board the Sisters on the starboard bow of the Sisters, rounding the point on the south side of the river; that the Thames approached the Sisters rapidly, and in a direction to run into the Sisters on her starboard side, and rendered a collision inevitable, when the master of the Sisters, as the only means of saving his vessel from being sunk by the Thames, put his helm hard to starboard; that this caused the Sisters to strike the sand barge Emma, one of the barges at anchor before mentioned, and drove the Emma a short distance in shore; that the head of the Sisters being held by the Emma, the Sisters swung round with her stem towards the north, and as she was swinging round the steamship Thames passed astern of her, slightly touching her rudder and carrying away her boat, which was towing astern. The answer then denied the allegations of the petition, and alleged that even if there was negligent navigation on the part of the Sisters, it was not such as to cause the collision between the Thames and the Alfreda; that the collision was caused by the improper navigation of the Thames, which neglected to keep out of the way of the Sisters; that the Thames, by the exercise of reasonable skill and care, might have avoided the collision with the Alfreda; that the Alfreda improperly ported her helm; that the Alfreda, by the exercise of reasonable skill and care, might have avoided the collision with the Thames.

The main questions of fact at the hearing were, whether the Thames was coming down on the port or the starboard bow of the Sisters; whether there was room for the Thames to go between the Sisters and the south shore; and whether the Alfreda in any way contributed to the collision. These questions had been before the court in another action brought by the owners of the barge Volunteer against the Thames, in which the latter vessel had been held not to blame for the collision (See ante, Vol. 2, p. 512; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343.)

The findings of the court below on the questions of fact will be found in the following judgment of Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of collision which happened on the afternoon of the 15th Oct. 1874, in the entrance to Half-way Reach, in the river Thames, and off that point that is called Jenning-tree Point. The tide at the time was running about half flood, and from three to four knots an hour. The vessel who brings the action on the present occasion is a sailing barge called the Alfreda, of 40 tons register. She had three persons on board: two of them unfortunately were drowned at the time of this collision. The wind, I should observe, was about S., or S. by E. Now there is a peculiarity in this case which I will mention. The suit is not brought up

[CT. OF APP.]

THE SISTERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

the actual wrong-doer, but it is brought against the vessel which caused the actual wrong-doer to do the wrong, and that vessel is the Sisters, a sailing barge of about 42 tons. Now I must observe that this is not the first time that this case has been before the court, because on the 29th Jan. a vessel called the Volunteer—which was side by side with the Alfreda, and practically considered by the court then and now as being almost one vessel—brought her action against the Thames, and the Thames was dismissed, on the ground that the wrong that she did she was forced to do—namely, that she was compelled to starboard, and that starboarding caused her to run into the Volunteer after cutting through the Alfreda. It has been very truly remarked by Dr. Spinks, who appears on behalf of the Sisters to-day, that the Sisters is not concluded by that judgment. She was not heard then; she had no witnesses produced; she was neither plaintiff nor defendant, and she has a right to be heard to-day. The first question which the court has to decide is, whether the steamer was compelled by the Sisters to starboard. Now in this case there were a great many barges, a small fleet of barges, going up the river, round Jenning-tree Point when the steamer was coming down, and I am satisfied upon the evidence that the steamer did not pass Jenning-tree point rashly; but I think, as I thought on a former occasion, with the advice of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, that she was in her right in what she did. She was on the south side of the river—she was going down—she had a clear eye, as sailors say, before her at the time, and there was a considerable distance, having regard especially to the steamer herself, which was not a very large one; there was sufficient space for her between the barge and the land to go without danger of collision. The point of the greatest importance to decide in this case, as I must say it was on the former occasion, is, whether on the present state of the evidence, and taking duly into my consideration the further testimony produced on behalf of the Sisters, whether the conclusion be that the steamer was on her starboard or on her port side. Now I am satisfied myself that the witness who was the mate of the steamer, namely, Smith, has given a truthful account to the court. I thought so on the last occasion, and I think so now. He was forward at the time of the collision. He says he expected the vessels to pass port to port, and there was in his judgment no danger if they had so done, and he says that the Sisters starboarded when two points on the port bow. That is the evidence which, after examining the testimony given by the other witnesses, I rely upon; and not the less so, because I think it is confirmed by some of the witnesses produced on behalf of the Sisters, more especially by the witness Bailey, who was master of the large Christiana which was sailing up—and this is a fact which never came to the knowledge of the court before—which was sailing up ahead of the Sisters, as several other barges were. He said that if both vessels had kept their course the Thames would not have touched the Sisters; and he said that he passed her himself on the outside—that is, on her port hand; and that there were other barges between him and the Sisters, all of whom passed on the port side and outside the steamer. Now, the defence of the Sisters is as follows:—It comes, I think, under three categories.

The first appears to me this category—that there is evidence which negatives her having caused the collision. She says, "I was not on the port bow, I was on the starboard bow; and if I had not starboarded and run into this other vessel, I should have been run into and cut to pieces." I do not believe that evidence, and that disbelief is the necessary consequence of my belief in what I have already stated, namely, the evidence of the mate and the other witnesses who support him, that she was on the port bow and not on the starboard bow at the time she starboarded. I believe that in the hurry and alarm she starboarded her helm and threw herself across the bows of the steamer. Well, the next defence is that the Thames herself, the steamer, was improperly navigated. I have already expressed my opinion upon that point. I do not think she was, nor do the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House think she was, improperly navigated. The third category of the defence is that the Alfreda herself, by improper conduct, either caused entirely or contributed to this collision. When it is remembered that from the time the Thames had put her helm a-starboard, as compelled to do by the action of the Sisters, to the time of her running into the Alfreda, not more than two or three minutes elapsed at the very most, the Elder Brethren agree with me in thinking that whether the Alfreda's manoeuvre was proper or improper in porting instead of starboarding (we by no means say it was the latter), but whether it was proper or improper, it cannot be holden in any fair sense to have contributed to this collision. I therefore am of opinion that the collision was caused by the starboarding of the steamer; that the starboarding of the steamer was caused by the improper manoeuvre of the Sisters in crossing the bows of the steamer; and, therefore, that the real wrong-doer in this case is not the steamer, which dealt the blow, but the barge, the Sisters, which caused that blow to be dealt; and therefore I must pronounce that the Alfreda has made out her case, and that this collision was owing to the improper navigation of the Sisters.

From this judgment the owners of the Sisters appealed.

Dr. Spinks, Q.C., Butt, Q.C. (G. Bruce with them) for the appellants.—The evidence shows that the Sisters was obliged to starboard to avoid collision with the Thames. But even if there was negligence on the part of the Sisters, there is not liability because the Alfreda act brought about the collision. If but for the act of the Alfreda in porting no collision would have occurred, then there can be no liability on the part of the Sisters; and this would be the case although the Alfreda was doing nothing wrong or negligent because as her porting brought about the collision, the negligent act of the Sisters was not the proximate cause of the damage. If the Alfreda could have avoided the collision by starboarding she ought to have done so or at least to have kept her course; it must have been wrong to port; there was no danger until she did port, and she therefore brought about the collision, and, as matter of law, we submit that the Sisters cannot be made responsible for the ensuing damage. Further we submit that the Thames is not absolved from liability, because in order to avoid sinking one vessel she takes a step by which she avoids that one and sinks another.

ADM.]

THE POLYMEDE.

[ADM.]

Dr. Deane, Q.C., and E. C. Clarkson, for the respondents, were not called upon.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that no sufficient ground has been shown for supporting this appeal. The question is whether the Sisters was the actual cause of the mischief done? There is abundant evidence in support of the contention that she did cause that mischief. There is, no doubt, counter evidence; and although I cannot say what I might have decided if I had tried the action in the first instance, I can see no sufficient ground for disturbing the finding of the court below. The case was heard by the learned judge of the Admiralty Court assisted by nautical assessors, and they, proceeding very much upon the ground of the credibility of witnesses regarded from a nautical point of view, arrived at the conclusion that the cause of this collision was the improper starboarding of the Sisters, and there is nothing to show that the finding was against the evidence.

The other question raised before us is whether, it having been found that the Sisters was the cause of the collision, there was any contributory negligence on the part of the Alfreda. To disentitle the Alfreda to her right of recovery there must have been contributory negligence, that is to say, an act of negligence on her part contributing to the collision. Therefore the question is whether there was any act on the part of the Alfreda which would come within the meaning of the word "negligence?" It is not enough to show that the Alfreda did some act or did not do some act by reason of the commission or omission of which the collision actually occurred. It is impossible to hold that the Alfreda is guilty of negligence, because she might have avoided the collision if she had done something other than she actually did unless that omission was negligent, and I am of opinion that she has been shown to be guilty of no negligence. I am therefore of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MELLISH, L.J. and BAGGALLAY, J.A. concurred.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I feel the greatest difficulty sitting here in the Court of Appeal in dealing with a mere question of evidence. We are not assisted by nautical assessors, and cannot therefore judge whether the evidence as it stands ought from a nautical point of view to have led to a different conclusion. I do not see how the court can in such a case upset a judgment where the matter has been fully dealt with with reference to the credibility of witnesses in the court below. Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Deacon, Son, and Rogers.

Solicitors for the respondents, Keene and Marsland.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 11 and 12, 1876.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE POLYMEDE.

Proceeding in rem by default—Rules in force—Supreme Court Rules, Order XIII., r. 10—Supreme Court Rules, Dec. 1875—Admiralty Court additional rules, 1871.

Order XIII., rule 10 of the rules of the Supreme Court as to proceedings in rem by default being annulled by the rules of the Supreme Court, Dec. 1875, the effect of such annulment is to bring into force, under and by virtue of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, sect. 18, the Admiralty Court additional rules, 1871, as to proceedings in rem by default.

THIS was an action commenced on 3rd Nov. 1875, on behalf of the mortgagees of eight sixty-fourth shares of the Polymede against the owner of those shares. The action was in rem, and a writ was issued under Order II., rule 7, of the rules of the Supreme Court, and was duly served upon the vessel, and the vessel was arrested. No appearance was entered by any person. After the time limited for appearance had expired, the plaintiff's solicitors, on 17th Nov. 1875, filed in the registry an affidavit of service of the writ, a statement of the particulars of the plaintiffs' claim, and on 28th Dec., 1875, entered final judgment for the amount of the plaintiffs' claim, and taxed costs in accordance with the provisions of Order XIII., rule 5 of the rules of the Supreme Court. The cause now came before the court upon motion on behalf of the plaintiffs for a decree for the appraisal and sale of the eight sixty-fourth shares.

By the rules of the Supreme Court (in the schedule to the Judicature Act 1875), Order XIII., rule 10, it was in effect provided that the practice in existence under the Admiralty Court Rules 1859, in respect of proceedings by default, should be in force under the Judicature Act (see Admiralty Court Rules 1859, rr. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, Williams and Bruce, Admiralty Practice, pp. xxix., xxx.) By the rules of the Supreme Court, December 1875, made on 1st Dec. 1875, Order XIII., r. 10 of the rules of the Supreme Court, was annulled, without any rule being expressly substituted for it. By the 18th section of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, it is provided that "all rules and orders in force at the time of the commencement of this Act in . . . the Admiralty Court . . . except so far as they are expressly varied by the first schedule hereto or by rules of court made by Order in Council before the commencement of this Act, shall remain and be in force in the High Court of Justice and in the Court of Appeal respectively, until they shall respectively be altered or annulled by any rules of court made after the commencement of this Act." The rules as to proceedings by default in the Admiralty Court rules 1859, were repealed by the Admiralty Court additional rules 1871 (see L. Rep. Adm. & Ecc. 612), and the following rules were thereby substituted:

4. If within twelve days after service of a writ or citation no appearance shall have been entered in the cause, the proctor for the plaintiff may file his petition; and if within twelve days from the filing of the petition no appearance shall have been entered, the plaintiff's proctor may, on bringing in his proofs, set the case down for hearing.

5. If, when the cause comes before the judge, he is satisfied that the plaintiff's claim is well founded, he may pronounce for the claim with or without a reference to the Registrar, or to the Registrar assisted by merchants, and may at the same time order the property to be appraised and sold, with or without previous sale, and the proceeds to be paid into court, or may make such order in the premises as to him shall seem just.

E. C. Clarkson in support of the motion—Order XIII., rule 10 having been annulled, the

[ADM.]

THE BIOLA.

[ADM.]

is no special mode of procedure provided by the Judicature Acts for proceedings in rem by default. Hence the general rules of Order XIII. are applicable, and as the writ in the case is not specially indorsed, and the demand is liquidated, the plaintiff has complied with the provisions of Order XIII., rule 5, and was in consequence entitled to sign judgment. Having judgment, the plaintiff asks the court to enforce it according to the ordinary process of the court in proceedings in rem, namely, by appraisal and sale. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Is not the effect of the annulment of Order XIII., rule 10, to revive the practice of the Admiralty Court under the rules of 1871?] I submit not, as the mode of proceeding is sufficiently provided for in the other parts of the order.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 12. — Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—This is the first case in which the question has had to be considered by the court whether the rules of court, which form part of the Judicature Act 1875, apply to an action in rem when the proceedings are by default. What the court really has to decide is this: Are the rules of Order XIII., in the schedule annexed to the Judicature Act 1875, applicable to a cause in rem in default; or ought the practice prevailing in the Court of Admiralty immediately before the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts, still to be enforced in such cases?

Now Order XIII. in the schedule of the Judicature Act 1875, is headed "default of appearance," and consists of ten divisions or paragraphs, of which the tenth, or last, is subdivided into a great many sections relating exclusively to the proceedings in Admiralty actions in rem in which an appearance has not been entered. It is to be presumed, therefore, that the framers of the rules were of opinion that the first nine paragraphs of this order were not to be applied to Admiralty proceedings in rem. Now, at a meeting of the judges of the Supreme Court, held on the 1st December last, in pursuance of the Judicature Act 1875, the tenth paragraph of Order XIII. was annulled, and no other rule was substituted for it. In these circumstances it has been suggested to me that the fifth paragraph of the order, being sufficient on its face to apply to a judgment by default in an Admiralty action similar to that before me, has been rightly followed in this case, but I am of opinion that that is a position which cannot be successfully maintained.

In the first place, as I have already said, the insertion of the paragraph which has now been annulled shows that the framers of the rules did not consider that the previous paragraphs of the order were sufficient for the purpose of laying down any rules with regard to proceedings in rem, and, in fact, it was admitted by Mr. Clarke that neither the fifth paragraph, nor any other of the paragraphs which remain unannulled, could be said to apply to all cases of proceedings in rem by default; and, in the second place, the 18th section of the Judicature Act 1875, provides that "All rules and orders of Court in force at the time of the commencement of this Act in the Court of Probate, the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and the Admiralty Court, or in relation to appeals from the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, or from the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy matters, except so far as they are expressly varied by the first schedule hereto, or by rules of court made by Order in Council before the commencement of this Act, shall remain and be in force in the High Court of Justice and in the Court of Appeal respectively, until they shall be respectively altered or annulled by any rules of court made after the commencement of this Act." In my judgment, the effect of the annulment of the tenth paragraph of the order as to default of appearance, Order XIII. is to revive the practice previously existing in the High Court of Admiralty with regard to proceedings by default in rem, and I must, therefore, pronounce that such practice must be followed in the present case.

I shall make no order on the motion, but I shall direct the costs of the motion to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

Tuesday, Feb. 1, 1876.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE BIOLA.

Discovery — Interrogatories — Collision — Preliminary acts.

In an action of damage by collision in the Admiralty Division, interrogatories which seek to obtain information given in the preliminary act of the party interrogated are inadmissible, and will be struck out on the application of the party sought to be interrogated.

This was an action of collision, instituted on behalf of the owner of the brigantine Carthagenian against the Swedish barque Biola, and her owners intervening, and preliminary acts had been filed as usual. The plaintiff had delivered his statement of claim, and the defendant had delivered his statement of defence and counter claim, and before the close of the pleadings the plaintiff delivered to the defendants, under the provisions of the rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXXI., rule 1, the following interrogatories:—

1. Were you, in the month of November, 1874, acting as master of the Swedish vessel Biola?
2. Did you, on the morning of the 30th November, come into collision with any ship or vessel; if yes, what was the state of the weather and tide at such time?
3. Did you, at that or any other time, send away any boats, or do any and what other acts to ascertain the damage sustained by the other vessel?
4. What was done on board your vessel when the other vessel was first seen? On what tack was your vessel when the other vessel was first seen, and state whether your vessel held her course or whether her course was altered? If it was so altered, say how it was altered, and to what extent, and how soon after the other vessel was first seen?
5. Did you see the other vessel before the collision, and if you did for how long a time, and at what distance from you was she when you first saw her, and did you see any lights on board the other vessel, and if you did, say what lights you first saw, and whether any other lights on board the said vessel were afterwards seen by you and when?
6. What lights had you (if any) burning on board the Biola at the time of the collision, or at any time shortly previously to the collision, or shortly subsequent thereto; state accurately two positions and colours of the set lights, and the dimensions of the lanterns (if any) in which they were contained. Had you any white or bright lights exhibited on board the Biola shortly before the collision?
7. If any damage was done to the Biola by the collision, state to what extent, and say what part of the Biola was damaged by the collision.

ADM.]

HINGSTON v. WENDT.

[Q

8. Were you, at the time of the said collision, on a voyage to Fleetwood and off the coast of Wales, and if so, state how far off the coast you were at the time, and what course you had been steering immediately before the collision, and before you saw the vessel with which you came into collision.

9. Did you, at the time of the collision, or shortly before, or after that time, take any and what steps to ascertain the exact position of the Biola. If so, state by means of crossbearings or otherwise what such position was, and did you take any and what steps between the time of the collision and the time of sunrise to ascertain what had become of the other vessel. Did you see her after the collision, and if so, say in what direction you saw her, both as to bearing by compass and relating to your own vessel?

The said John Bergland, one of the defendants, is required to answer all the above interrogatories.

The defendants thereupon took out a summons calling upon the plaintiffs to show cause before the Registrar why the interrogatories should not be struck out. On the summons coming on, the Registrar referred it to the court. (a)

Clarkson, for the defendants, now moved to strike out the interrogatories, contending that before the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts they would not have been allowed in this court, and that there was nothing to alter the practice in those Acts or the rules thereto; every question asked was answered by the defendant's preliminary act or his statement of defence. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Before I can allow these interrogatories the plaintiff must show me some good reason; I shall, therefore, not trouble you further until I have heard your opponent.]

Gainsford Bruce for the plaintiffs. — By the rules of the Supreme Court a party acquires a right to deliver interrogatories; formerly the parties had to obtain leave, now it may be done without leave. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There is not an absolute right to deliver any interrogatories a party chooses.] Subject to rule 5 of the same order, by which any party may apply to strike out any interrogatory "on the ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant, or is not put bond fide for the purpose of the action, or that the matter inquired after is not sufficiently material at that stage of the action, or on any other ground." These are the only grounds upon which interrogatories can be struck out. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If I can strike them out upon "any other ground," that surely gives me the widest discretion.] "Any other ground" must be some similar ground to those mentioned before, and no such ground can be suggested. If we do not get these interrogatories answered, we may be compelled to call evidence on points which would be admitted in the answers. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—All the facts you interrogate about will appear stated upon the defendant's preliminary act, and this will be the strongest admission against the defendants.] But the preliminary act would not in itself be evidence on which we could go to trial. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—It certainly would as against the defendants, and you can get no more information out of these interrogatories.] These are interrogatories which would be allowed in any other vision. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Has there been instance since parties were bound to file preliminary acts in all the divisions?] I know of no instance but in the other divisions interrogatories porting the plaintiff's case are always allowed.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Exercising the discretion I have under Order XXXI. rule 5, I shall strike out these interrogatories. The plaintiff has the information sought in the defendant's preliminary act.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Stocken and Jones.
Solicitors for the defendants, Ingledeu, Ingledeu and Greening.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, J. M. LELY, and R. ANFLETT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Jan. 18 and Feb. 8. 1876.

HINGSTON v. WENDT.

Shipping—Average—Services to cargo only for charges—Agent's promise to pay.
Plaintiff, a shipping agent, was put into possession of a stranded vessel by the master, and by him rendered services to, and paid money for the placing it in a warehouse under lock and key. The vessel broke up and was sold as a wreck. Defendant obtained the bill of lading, and his agent claimed the cargo. Plaintiff, a promise of the agent that defendant would pay all his costs and charges, delivered up possession but defendant afterwards refused to pay more than his general average of discharging cargo, and plaintiff brought this action in the Court for the balance.

Held, upon appeal, that, under the circumstances just as in general average and salvage, the plaintiff had a lien on the cargo for his charges, and that therefore the defendant was liable upon agent's promise to pay the whole of plaintiff's claim.

APPEAL from Devon County Court, holden at Kingsbridge.

This was an action wherein the plaintiff sought to recover 48l. 1s., being the balance of the following particulars of work done and pay made in respect of the cargo of the brigantine Theodor, which went ashore at Cove, between Dartmouth and Plymouth, on 14th Feb. 1874.

1874.
Feb. To paid labourers discharging cargo and allowance .....
Cartage .....
Labour about cotton seed, one week per your special order .....
Your proportion of account paid cottager for attendance, use of cottage and refreshments during wreck .....
Cartage of cargo .....
Do. do. ....
Proportion of posting charges, say .....
Do. of telegrams and porters therefor, and messengers .....
Labour about cargo to 28th Feb., by your order .....
Your proportion of personal expenses till we were able to deliver the cargo to you .....

Commission on above advances .....
Our agency and superintending discharge of cargo and trouble on this business .....

June. By cash of E. E. Wendt, Esq., his solicitor.

(a) It is questionable whether the Registrar of the Admiralty Division can hear summonses relating to interrogatories except by consent; nevertheless it constantly happens that such matters are brought before him. His powers are mainly derived from the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order LIV., rule 2; but it is also contended that he can exercise all the powers of a judge of this division because he was a surrogate of the judge of the High Court of Admiralty.—ED.

Q.B. Div.]

HINGSTON v. WENDT.

[Q.B. Div.]

It was proved, on behalf of the plaintiff, a ship agent, living at Dartmouth, Devon :

1. That the plaintiff was put into possession of the vessel and cargo by the master of the said vessel, Theodor, almost immediately after she was stranded.

2. That whilst in such possession the plaintiff rendered the services to the cargo and paid, by order of the master, such moneys in respect thereof as is stated in the said particulars, and the plaintiff placed the cargo in a warehouse in safety under lock and key.

3. That the defendant afterwards, as the holder of the bill of lading of the said cargo, claimed to be entitled thereto, and presented such bill of lading to the said plaintiff, and demanded possession thereof by his agent, Julian Slight, R.N.

4. That the said Julian Slight, by a verbal promise, expressly promised the said plaintiff that he should be paid his costs and charges for the services so rendered to the cargo, whereupon the said plaintiff delivered up the possession of the said cargo to the said Julian Slight.

5. That the charges of the plaintiff were fair and reasonable.

6. That the plaintiff, having subsequently forwarded the particulars of his charges as above stated to the said Julian Slight, received from him a letter, dated 26th May, 1874, of which the following is an extract :—

I forwarded your letter to London the same day I received it. Mr. Wendt came to Plymouth the next day, when I particularly asked him to settle your account, and he promised me he would give it his best attention immediately he arrived in town ; so I was in hopes you had received your money.

7. Subsequently the defendant wrote to the plaintiff on the 16th June 1874, as follows :—

I have now before me your note of charges, and in the first place must at once say that I have no funds out of which to pay you agency or commission. I need not, therefore, discuss the question as to whether you could, under the circumstance, have been entitled to charge such. From your account of :

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
I therefore deduct the personal expense .....	4	4	0	50	5	9
And the discharging .....	35	12	0
				89	16	0

Paying the remainder without comment.....	10	9	9
Of the discharging I credit you .....	11	8	0

And I enclose cheque for.....	21	17	9
-------------------------------	----	----	---

The receipt of which please acknowledge. The latter figure, 11l. 8s., I arrive at by treating the discharging expenses as general average, which they undoubtedly are, and as you hold net proceeds of ship, 64l., while I hold net proceeds of cargo, 30l., it follows that my contribution to the 35l. 12s., is the sum herewith paid to you.

8. To which the plaintiff, on the 17th June 1874, replied,

We have your favour of 16th instant, enclosing cheque, 21l. 17s. 6d., for which we thank you. We much regret the view you take of our disbursements re Theodor, with which, of course, we do not agree. We trust that you and Captain Slight will reconsider your determination, as we did everything in our power to meet his and your wishes, which we think he is bound to confirm. As the matter stands at present, without speaking of agency and interest, we are actually 23l. 8s. out of pocket in preserving the cargo of Theodor.

And in a subsequent letter, dated 26th June 1874, the plaintiff further wrote to the defendant,

We hope and believe that, after your getting full particulars from Captain Slight, the matter will be amicably settled. The stores were landed before the cargo, and the vessel, after discharge, was sold for 95l. or 100l., and she broke up where she lay.

And the correspondence terminated by the two further letters from defendant to plaintiff, dated 30th June 1874, and 4th July, 1874 respectively, as follows :—

Theodor. Your letter of the 26th inst. is to hand, and in reply I may mention that the buyer of the hull would evidently in the first instance have been obliged to discharge the cargo. Still, your information as to the fate of the vessel makes the case appear in a somewhat different light, and although I cannot meet you in the way you desire, I will, to cut the matter short, make you the following offer. The proceeds in hand are 19l. 1s. 9d., and I am prepared to pay you one half thereof, viz., 9l. 10s., in full, taking for my trouble in the case no remuneration whatever. Beyond this I cannot go, and I shall be glad if you will accept this proposal.

Your letter of yesterday is to hand, and I hasten to say in reply that if you do not choose in course of post to accept the ultimatum transmitted to you in my previous one, I shall remit the balance to my clients, and leave you to take any further course you please.

9. It was proved on behalf of defendant that the said Julian Slight had no general authority from him to undertake for the payment of expenses, and that he had no special authority to do so in this case.

10. It was contended by the plaintiff's attorney that the plaintiff had a lien upon the cargo for the said costs and payments, and that the defendant was bound by the verbal promise of the said Julian Slight for the payment thereof, and also that the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs on the letters above set out.

11. It was contended by the defendant's attorney that the plaintiff had no lien upon the cargo for the expenses of discharging the same, and that the work was done and money paid by the plaintiff without any request or authority from the defendant, and that the plaintiff's charges were payable by the master or owner of the vessel, and that the defendant had not rendered himself liable to pay the same by his letters above set out, because such letters were not a promise to pay the plaintiff's charges, but admitted only the defendant's liability to contribute to the same as a general average charge.

12. The learned judge gave a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, 41l. 18s.

Plaintiff's attorney asked his Honour whether he gave his judgment on a question of fact or on the point of law.

His Honour.—My judgment is that there was a contract not merely implied, but expressed, to pay the charges on the delivery of the cargo; and that, whatever private rights the parties may have had, it was their duty to have given notice of them.

The question for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench is whether the learned judge of the County Court was right in point of law in deciding for the plaintiff.

Phillimore argued for defendant, the appellant.

Bullen, contra.

The arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the Court, Our. adv. vult.

Feb. 8.—BLACKBURN, J., delivered the judgment of himself and Lush, J.—The case is not stated so explicitly as we could wish, but the material facts as we understand them are as follows: The German brigantine Theodor had gone ashore near Dartmouth, with cargo on board of her. The plaintiff, a ship agent at Dartmouth, w

Q.B. Div.]

HINGSTON v. WENDT.

[Q.B. Div.]

put in possession of the wrecked vessel and cargo, by the captain, with, as we understand the case, authority from the captain as his agent, to do what was for the benefit of all concerned. The plaintiff did the work and expended the money sued for in discharging the cargo, and he brought it to a place of safety where he kept possession of it. The hull remained on shore and ultimately broke up, and was sold as a wreck.

We think we must take it on the statement to be fact that this expenditure was not incurred on behalf of the master as agent of the shipowner performing his contract to carry on the cargo to its destination and earn freight, but was an extraordinary expenditure for the purpose of saving the property at risk, and had the expenditure been for the purpose of saving the whole venture, ship as well as cargo, it would have constituted a general average to which the owners of each part of the property saved must have contributed rateably, and the captain, and the plaintiff, as his agent, would have had a lien or right to retain each part of the property saved till the amount of the contribution due in respect of it was paid or secured. But this right would have been only in respect of the contribution due in respect of that part. He would have had no lien on the cargo for the contribution due, if any, in respect of the hull.

But as we understand the facts, there was in this case no contribution due in respect of the hull, for the expenditure was not for the purpose of saving, nor did it save, the vessel. It was an extraordinary expenditure for the purpose of saving the cargo alone, and which did save the whole cargo. And the question—the answer to which will decide this appeal—is, whether the captain and the plaintiff, as his agent, had a right to detain the whole cargo if it belonged to one owner, till the whole was paid or secured, or if the cargo belonged to several owners, to detain each part of the goods so saved till the contribution in respect of that part was paid or secured?

This is the point on which the case turns, for the defendant was not the owner of any part of the cargo at the time when the expenditure was made, and cannot therefore be made liable as having his credit pledged by the captain as his agent of necessity. He appears to have been a mercantile agent to whom the owner of the cargo had transmitted the bill of lading to enable him to obtain the cargo on his behalf, and he did so obtain the whole of it. The defendant did not become liable to pay any contribution merely by the receipt of the goods, unless there was a promise express or implied to pay it in consideration of the person who had a right to detain the goods till it was paid or secured, parting with the possession: (Scaife v. Tobin, 3 B. & Ad. 523.) In the present case there was an express promise by Capt. Slight, the agent of the defendant, who obtained possession of the goods for the defendant from the plaintiff, that the plaintiff's charges should be paid, and though it was proved that Capt. Slight had no special authority to make this promise, we think the County Court Judge was right in holding that his employment to obtain possession of the goods gave him authority to give security for any charges for which there was a lien on the goods. But we do not think his authority would extend to bind the defendant further than there was a lien.

As to the question whether there was a lien on the cargo for the expenses successfully incurred for the purpose of saving it alone, there is, considering how often the case must have occurred, a remarkable dearth of authority. In insurance law the phrase "general average" is commonly used to express what is chargeable on all, ship, cargo, and freight, and "particular average" to express a charge against some one thing. In Phillips on Insurance, § 1273, it is said, "General averages are usually cases of sacrifice for the entire interest at risk in ship, freight, and cargo, and hence called general. But a contribution may be by a part of those interests, where only a part is in peril, and benefited by the expenses and sacrifices;" and again in § 1470, "Where expense is incurred on divers articles in common, the adjustment is made by an average on the respective articles according to their value." In Moran v. Jones (7 E. & B. 525), this court held that the cargo, ship, and freight, were in that case all saved by one continuous operation, but they expressed a decided opinion that if the expense had been incurred after the cargo was safe for the benefit of ship and freight alone, they would, as between the two, have been general average to which the ship and freight were to contribute rateably. This, we think, confirms the opinion expressed in Phillips. It may be said that these are only authorities that expenses of this kind are so far in the nature of general average that they can be charged against the articles saved, and must be paid for by the underwriters, and that it does not follow that the lien which is given for general average, strictly so called, also exists for the particular average chargeable against several articles in common, and so in the nature of general average. That may be true, but every reason for giving a lien for the contribution, when all are to contribute, exists for giving it where several articles are to contribute, and if where the cargo belongs to several owners there would be a lien on each part of the cargo for contribution from the owners of that part, it follows that there must be a lien on the whole cargo where it belongs to one only. The captain is entitled in case of need to incur extraordinary expenses for the protection of a particular article, and in some cases he is compellable to do so; see Notara v. Henderson (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. p. 278; L. Rep. 5 Q.B. 346; 14 7 Q.B. 225). In practice such expenses are always in this country charged on the adjustment against the articles in respect of which they are incurred, and in the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in the case just mentioned, delivered by Willes, J., at p. 233, there are authorities cited to show that such is the law in many foreign states. It is not expressly said that there is a lien on the goods for such a particular average, but the hardship would be very great, if a master was bound to make a disbursement for the benefit of the goods and had no remedy if the goods owner transferred the property and then became insolvent. And as Willes, J., cites those authorities with a view to show that there was no hardship in holding the master bound to make such disbursements, we think it not too much to infer that this very learned judge thought there was such a lien, though it certainly was not decided that there was one. The case is very analogous to general average and to salvage, in both of which there is a lien. It is just and convenient that there should be such a lien, and what

Q.B. Div.]

MEIKLEREID (app.) v. WEST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

scanty authority we can find all points in the direction of there being a lien, and we think we must hold that there is one. We could have wished that the necessity for the first time, as far as we can find, of expressly deciding this point had arisen in a case of more importance in order that our opinion might be reviewed on appeal.

Two cases were referred to in the argument which have no bearing on the point, and we mention them only to show that we have not overlooked them. They are Nicholson v. Chapman (2 H. Bl. 254), and Castellian v. Thompson (13 C. B., N. S., 105). In the former case the plaintiff was a mere volunteer in saving the goods, in the latter the defendant was employed by a third person who had no authority to incur expense for the owner.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors: F. J. and G. J. Braikenridge, for W. Smith, Dartmouth; Druce Sons and Jackson, for John Shelly, Plymouth.

Jan. 15 and Feb. 21, 1876.

MEIKLEREID (app.) v. WEST (resp.).

Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 169 — Allotment note — Registered owner — Demise of ship.

The respondent was wife of a sailor serving abroad on board a ship of which appellant was sole registered owner. The appellant had demised the ship to a charterer for his sole use by a charter which required the charterer to find stores, pay crew's wages, and do repairs, the appellant paying his insurance on the vessel only, but having a lien upon cargo and freight for arrears of hire. The charterer appointed the master of the ship, who engaged respondent's husband as one of the crew. Respondent received an allotment note signed by the master and her husband, requiring the charterer to pay her 6l. a month during the voyage, and three monthly instalments were duly paid. Upon liquidation of the charterer's affairs, however, the respondent obtained a summary order for payment, under sects. 169 and 188 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, against the appellant.

Held, upon a case stated, that appellant was not, under the circumstances, the owner or any agent who had authorised the drawing of the note; and that he could not be liable upon the allotment note.

This was a case stated by Sir Robert Walter Carden, Knight, one of the aldermen of the City of London, being one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said City.

Upon the hearing of a certain complaint preferred by the respondent, the wife of Henry James West, a seaman lawfully engaged and serving on the British ship Sydney Hall, and the holder of the allotment note (hereinafter referred to) against the appellant, the owner of the said ship, under sect. 169 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (The Merchant Shipping Act 1854), for nonpayment of arrears due under such allotment note, the said justice (having, by virtue of the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 34, the authority of two or more justices, as required by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854), ordered the appellant to pay to the said respondent the sum of 18l., being the amount due to her at the time of his adjudication under such allotment, and including the sum of 6l. for which the summons originally issued, and 12l. which had accrued due since the issuing of the summons, and which the said appellant consented to being included in such order.

The 169th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, is as follows:

The wife, or the father or mother, or the grandfather or grandmother, or any child or grandchild, or any brother or sister of any seaman in whose favour an allotment note of part of the wages of such seaman is made may, unless the seaman is shown in manner hereinafter mentioned, to have forfeited or ceased to be entitled to the wages out of which the allotment is to be paid, and subject, as to the wife, to the provision hereinafter contained, sue for and recover the sums allotted by the note when and as the same are made payable, with costs, from the owner or any agent who has authorised the drawing of the note, either in the County Court or in the summary manner in which seamen are by this Act enabled to sue for and recover wages not exceeding 50l.; and in any such proceeding it shall be sufficient for the claimant to prove that he or she is the person mentioned in the note, and that the note was given by the owner or by the master or some other authorised agent; and the seaman shall be presumed to be duly earning his wages, unless the contrary is shown to the satisfaction of the court, either by the official statement of the change in the crew caused by his absence, made and signed by the master, as by this Act is required, or by a duly certified copy of some entry in the official log book to the effect that he has left the ship, or by a credible letter from the master of the ship to the same effect, or by such other evidence, of whatever description, as the court in its absolute discretion considers sufficient to show satisfactorily that the seaman has ceased to be entitled to the wages out of which the allotment is to be paid. Provided that the wife of any seaman who deserts her children, or so misconducts herself as to be undeserving of support from her husband, shall thereupon forfeit all right to further payments of any allotment of his wages which has been made in her favour.

It was proved or admitted that the appellant was, at the date of the signing of the said allotment note, and at the time of the said justice's adjudication, the sole registered owner of the British ship Sydney Hall; that the said Sarah West was the wife of the said Henry James West, a seaman, who had lawfully entered into articles of agreement to serve on board the said ship, and who was then, as last aforesaid, serving on board such ship; and that in the said agreement was inserted and allotted to the said respondent Sarah West, as the wife of the said seaman, the sum of 6l. monthly of the wages of the said seaman; that an allotment note, in the form sanctioned by law, was given to her the said Sarah West, upon which there became due the said sum of 18l., so by the said justices ordered to be paid.

The said allotment note is in the words and figures following:—

Notice to owners or agents. Seamen's allotments of wages may be remitted from port to port, free of expense, by means of seamen's money orders, to be obtained at the Mercantile Marine Offices.

SEAMAN'S ALLOTMENT NOTE.

Name of Ship.	Official Number. Now bound on a voyage to
Sydney Hall . No.	Monte Video. Dated at London, this 15th day of Feb. 1876.

Sanctioned by the Board of Trade, Feb. 1868, in pursuance of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.

Q.B. Div.]

MAILLERID (app.) v. WEST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

One month after date, pay the sum of £1., part of the wages of Henry West, engaged to serve as assistant engineer in the above-named ship to Sarah his wife (1), and continue to make such payment until duly stopped according to law (2).

At.

WM. FAWCEN, Master (3).

HY. WEST, Seaman.

WM. POWELL, Witness.

To

W. T. Henley,

Payable at 110, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

Supt. Mer. Marine Office.

(1.) Here insert the word wife, sister, or other description of relation, if any. In case of a wife the marriage certificate must be produced, if required, when payment is demanded. (2.) Security for repayment, in case of desertion, if required, is to be given by the seaman when this allotment note is granted. (3.) If the owner or agent give the note, this must be altered accordingly. Caution.—The Act provides a summary remedy under certain conditions for the recovery of sums allotted when the notes are made in favour of the wife, father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, child or grandchild, brother or sister of the seaman, but provides no remedy whatever in the case of notes given in favour of other persons.

Endorsed on the back of the said note was Received on the within written note,

Date.	Sum received.	Signature of payee.
March 13, 1875.	.. .. £5	SARAH WEST.
April 13, .. ..	£5	SARAH WEST.
May 13, .. ..	£5	SARAH WEST.

It was further proved or admitted that the said W. T. Henley had chartered the said ship from the said appellant, the owner, on a time charter-party, a copy of which said charter-party was annexed, and that the said W. T. Henley as such charterer had appointed the captain of the said ship, who subsequently engaged the crew thereof and issued the said allotment note, and that he the said W. T. Henley had paid several of the amounts due on the said allotment notes.

It was further proved or admitted that all payments due on the said allotment note to the said Sarah West had been paid by the said W. T. Henley up to the 13th May 1875, and that the affairs of the said W. T. Henley are in liquidation.

It was stated on the part of the appellant that the said ship was then in the possession of his mortgagees, and that he then had no pecuniary or beneficial interest in the said ship, and had not had any interest in her since the month of February 1875, beyond his interest under the said charter-party.

The appellant tendered his evidence and proved that he never authorised Mr. Henley or anyone else to issue this allotment note on his behalf.

It was contended by the attorney for the appellant, that although the appellant was the sole registered owner, yet as he had (as was alleged) no beneficial interest in the ship, and had not authorised the issuing of the said note, therefore he was not liable as owner to pay such allotment note under sect. 169; but that the respondent's remedy was against Mr. Henley, the charterer, whose captain had issued the said allotment note, and who it was alleged was now under the said charter-party the "owner," within the meaning of the statute.

The said justice over-ruled these objections, and held, that under sect. 169 the respondent was entitled to two remedies, "one enabling her to sue for and recover the sum allotted by the note from the owner," or at her option "from any agent who had authorised the drawing of the note."

It being proved that the appellant was the sole registered owner, and the respondent having elected (the agent who authorised the "drawing of the note" being insolvent) to sue the appellant as such owner, the said justice held that the appellant was the only person who could be sued as owner, and that he could not avoid his statutory liability by chartering or mortgaging his vessel to a third party, and he made an order against him accordingly.

The question of law for the opinion of this honourable court is, was the appellant the owner within the meaning of sect. 169 of the Merchant Shipping Act, and had the respondent a right to recover from him as such owner?

The following, with the exception of an immaterial clause in the margin, was the charter-party appended to the case:

London, 29th October, 1874

Steam Charter-party.

It is this day mutually agreed between G. B. Maillerid and Co., owners of the good steamship or vessel called the Sydney Hall, of the measurement of 514 tons gross and 376 tons net, and carrying 700 tons dead weight, or thereabouts, inclusive of fuel and stores, now at Lisbon, and W. T. Henley, Esq., of 110, Fenchurch-street, charterer.

Witnesseth, that the said vessel or steamer, being tight, staunch, and strong, and in every way fitted for the voyage or service, shall be placed under the direction of the said charterer or merchant, or his assigns, not later than the 10th Nov., at his works at North Woolwich, to be by him or them employed for the conveyance of lawful merchandise or on cable service between good and safe ports in the United Kingdom and Continent of South America (no salt or injurious cargoes to be shipped), as ordered by the charterer, the cargo to be laden in any dock or discharged in any dock the charterer may order, provided the vessel is always afloat.

The said steamer is let for the sole use of the said charterer, and for his benefit, for the space of three or more calendar months, at charterer's option, commencing from the date the vessel is placed at the disposal of the charterer, at London, as above, he having the whole reach and burden of the vessel; and she is not to be required to load more than she can reasonably stow and carry, over and above her tackle, provisions, and stores, &c.

The freight for the hire of the said steamer shall be as follows:—

At and after the rate of 350*l.* per calendar month, payable bi-monthly as due, until the vessel is again returned by the charterer, of which seven days' notice in writing is to be given to the owners.

The coals for the steam engine shall be supplied by and at the cost of the charterer, who shall also pay all port and dock charges, pilotages, delivery as well as labourage and other duties, &c., also finding all ship's stores, paying crew's wages, repairs of engines and boilers, if required, and necessary stores for the engine room: that is oil, tallow, and waste, owners paying insurance on the vessel only.

Should any difference arise between the parties to this contract, either in principle or detail, the same shall be referred for arbitration at London to two persons, one to be chosen by each contracting party, with power for them to call in a third, and the decision of a majority shall be final and binding. The acts of God, Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the sea, rivers, navigation, of whatever nature and kind, always excepted.

The owners to have a lien upon the cargo and freight for arrears of hire, and the charterers to have a lien on the ship for the monthly freight paid in advance.

The vessel to be delivered up to the owners on the termination of this charter-party, at London, in the most good order and condition as when delivered, fair wear and tear excepted.

All demurrage, towage, and salvage, for owner's and charterer's equal benefit.

Falling the payment of the monthly hire as stipulated, the owners to be at liberty to withdraw the vessel from the service of the charterer, and claim the penalty, &c., any hire that may be due.

Q.B. Div.]

MEIKLEHED (app.) v. WEST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, estimated freight.

(Signed) G. B. MEIKLEHED, and Co.
29/10/74.
" p. pro. W. T. HENLEY.
G. F. ROOPE.
29/10/74.

Witness to the signature of both parties,
W. D. HANDLEY.

A. L. Smith argued for the appellant.—The appellant does not come within either of the descriptions of persons from whom these notes may be sued or recovered; the words are "from the owner or any agent who has authorised the drawing of the note." The case finds that he did not authorise the note; unless, by effect of the statute, the law is clear that a registered owner, merely as such, is not liable for charges incurred about a ship. Beves v. Davies (1 A. & E. 312), decided that no action lay in respect of repairs against registered owners, where under a time charter-party, the charterers bound themselves to do repairs. So in Hibbs v. Rose (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 534; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 397), although the majority of the court held the register to be prima facie evidence of the persons who employed the shipkeeper, it does not seem to have been suggested that they could have been on any other ground liable for damage incurred by the plaintiff who was lawfully on board. In the same way, where the owner absolutely demises the ship, and thus parts with the possession of her and her cargo, he can have no lien for her earnings: Macle and Pollock's Law of Merchant Shipping, 3rd edit., p. 298. [FIELD, J.—Sandemann v. Scurr, 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 446; L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 86, discussed all those authorities.] The result is that the charterer, upon such a charter as this, is the owner for all purposes.

Poland, contra.—The word "owner" in sect. 169 has no limitation, the words "who has authorised the drawing of the note," applying only to the agent who is made responsible. Throughout the provisions of the Act concerning registry, the register is made prima facie the proof of ownership. By sect. 70 it is expressly provided that a mortgagor of a ship shall not cease to be owner by reason of his mortgage. And as by the charter the owners are to have a lien upon the cargo and freight for arrears of hire, it is reasonable that they should be liable for wages which produce the freight. This is a liability imposed by statute upon the owner, and he has a remedy over against the charterer, and it can be no greater hardship upon the owner than upon the agent who authorised the note. Both can protect themselves [FIELD, J.—Could West, the sailor, sue the appellant for his wages?] No, but the statute alters the common law with respect to his wife's remedy whilst the ship is abroad. The sailor has a lien upon the ship for his wages (sect. 182), and the law has created this security of a similar nature for the recovery upon allotment notes.

A. L. Smith in reply.

Feb. 21.—FIELD, J., delivered the judgment of Mellor, J., and himself.—This was an appeal from an order of Sir Robert Carden made under the 169th section of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, whereby he ordered the appellant to pay to the respondent the sum of 18l., being the amount of three monthly instalments due under an allotment note of the 13th Feb. 1874, by which the master of the Sydney Hall, and the respondent's husband Henry West (who was a seaman serving on board), directed Mr. W. T. Henley, to pay to the respondent a monthly sum of 6l., as part of wages agreed to be paid to her husband for his services.

Upon the facts of the case it appeared that the appellant was the registered owner of the ship Sydney Hall, and that in Oct. 1874 (she then being at Lisbon), he entered into a charter-party with Mr. Henley, to whom the allotment note was directed, for her hire at a lump payment of 350l. per month. By the terms of the charter the ship was to be placed under the direction of the charterer to be employed by him for the conveyance of merchandise or cable service. By another clause of the charter, the steamer was let for the sole use of the charterer for three or more calendar months at his option, and he was to pay the stipulated freight until the ship was returned by him; the charterer was further to find all ship's stores, to pay crew's wages, repairs of engines and boilers, &c., the appellant paying his insurance on the vessel only. The vessel was to be delivered up by the charterer to the appellant on the termination of the charter, fair wear and tear excepted. The charterer, having taken possession of the ship under the charter, appointed one Fawcus as master, and the latter engaged the respondent's husband as one of the crew. In the articles of agreement entered into between them the sum of 6l. monthly of his wages was allotted to the respondent, and the allotment note in question was thereupon given to her, by which the master and the seaman required the charterer to pay to her the allotted sum. The note having been presented to Mr. Henley, he acted upon it, and paid the respondent several of the instalments due under it, but in or after May 1874, his affairs went into liquidation, and some of the subsequent instalments having fallen into arrear, the respondent commenced summary proceedings under the 169th section against the appellant, as registered owner, to recover the arrears. Upon the hearing of the summons the magistrate held in accordance with the contention before him, that the appellant, being the de facto registered owner of the Sydney Hall, was liable to the respondent for these instalments; and it is the appeal from that order which we have now to decide.

We are of opinion that the order cannot be supported. Nothing can be clearer than that for the whole amount of wages, of which these allotted sums formed part, the respondent's husband had no remedy against the appellant. It was not and could not be reasonably contended that he by himself or by any authorised agent had entered into any contract with the respondent's husband, or given any authority, expressed or implied, for the drawing of the note in question. The only serious contention upon which his liability was sought to be rested before us was that, inasmuch as he was the de facto registered owner of the Sydney Hall, he was the owner within the meaning of the 169th section; and it was urged that by that section a special and peculiar right and remedy are given to the wife to sue and recover against the appellant under her husband's contract with the master, although the husband could not himself have recovered as against the appellant.

Now, in order to dispose of this question, we must consider what were the respective positions of the appellant and of Mr. Henley, the charterer and the master, in order to see whether the appellant can be truly said to have been such "owner" within the meaning of the section in question. The object of the section is to enable a seaman when about to leave home on a voyage to make provision for his wife during his temporary absence. The mode by which this is done is by enabling him to set apart in the hands of his employer a portion of the wages which he is earning on board, and to give his wife the power of receiving them.

Q. B. Div.]

SAUNDERS AND ANOTHER v. BARING AND ANOTHER.

[Q. B. Div.]

Now, in the present case, although the appellant was in every sense before the execution of the charter-party the "owner" of the ship, he had by the execution of that instrument entirely divested himself not only of the possession of but also of all control over her. The charter-party, as is already stated, contains not only words of demise, which by themselves passed the possession of the ship for the stipulated time to the charterer, but also contained the other stipulations above set out carrying out the same object. The charterer, in fact, appointed the master, and the master so appointed paid the wages as the charterer's agent. The appellant had no control over either the ship, or the master, or the voyage, or the crew. Indeed, his rights in respect of the ship were limited to the bare right to receive the stipulated hire, and to take her back into his possession when the charter should come to an end. The appellant not only made no contract with the respondent's husband either himself or by any authorised agent, but the articles of agreement are made by the master, and the allotment is, by the express direction of the respondent's husband and the master, directed to the charterer, who acted upon it until his failure.

Under these circumstances, we cannot think that it was the intention of the Legislature to impose a liability upon a shipowner through the contract of third parties, and without any act or contract of his own, merely because he is registered as owner. The authorities are numerous which point to the distinction between those cases in which the effect of the charter is to retain the ownership in the owner, and those in which he parts with all possession and control, and they are vested in the charterer as temporary owner. The present case falls clearly within the latter branch, and we think that the meaning of the word "owner" in the 169th section at least must be restrained to such actual owner for the time being of the ship as either himself or by his master or other authorised agent manages and controls her, and enters into the agreement for the wages of which the allotment note is part. Mr. Poland was unable to point out any satisfactory reason for the alleged distinction between the rights of the seaman in respect of the wages themselves, and that of his wife in respect of the part advanced by means of the allotment note. It was urged before us that, as the appellant had the benefit under the charter of his time freight, which could not have been earned without the services of the seaman, it was not unjust to make him liable. It might as well have been said that because a person contracts with and pays a responsible builder for building a house, and the builder omits to pay his joiner or bricklayer, the person contracting has the benefit of their work, and ought to pay them for it.

Upon these grounds we come to the conclusion that the appellant is not liable for the arrears of the advance note, and that the order of Sir Robert Carden attempting to make him so must be quashed.

Judgment for appellant.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ellis and Crossfield
Solicitor for the respondent, T. J. Nelson.

Thursday, Feb. 17, 1876.

SAUNDERS AND ANOTHER v. BARING AND ANOTHER.

Marine insurance—Total loss—Sale of cargo—Notice of abandonment—Election by assured—Pro rata freight.

In an action against underwriters on a policy of insurance upon a cargo of coals to Yokohama, it was proved that the ship received such damage as to render it necessary to put into Hong Kong; and that when there competent persons decided that the cargo should be sold, as there would be great danger of spontaneous combustion if it were conveyed to its original destination. No notice of the abandonment of the cargo was given to the underwriters, until the claim was made for the total loss, but the coals had been publicly sold at Hong Kong. The proceeds of the sale had been handed over to the shipowners, and they had offered them to the charterers, less a considerable sum which they withheld in payment of pro rata freight, on condition that they should receive a receipt in full of all demands. This the charterers declined to give. The underwriters now refused to pay, upon the ground that the charterers had not abandoned the cargo.

Held, that the public sale, per se, vested the proceeds of the sale in the underwriters, and that the charterers had done nothing subsequently which showed an election on their part to take the proceeds.

THIS was an action on a policy of insurance tried before Lord Coleridge and a special jury, at Guildhall, on the 16th Dec. 1875, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, but leave was reserved for the defendants to move to have the verdict entered for themselves.

Defendants now moved in accordance with the leave reserved.

The facts as they appeared at the trial were as follows: The plaintiffs were merchants, carrying on business in Liverpool and London, and the defendants were directors of a marine insurance company. On the 19th Dec. 1872, the plaintiffs entered into a charter-party with the owners of a German ship, the Mary Anna, for the conveyance of a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Yokohama. On the 6th Feb. 1873, the plaintiff effected with the defendants the policy which is the subject of this action, for the sum of 1650*l.* on the said cargo of coals.

The Mary Anna sailed from Cardiff on the 20th Feb. 1873. In the June, and again in the September following, the ship experienced very severe weather, lost her masts, and it became necessary to jettison a portion of the cargo. As she was in great danger the captain made for Hong Kong, which was the nearest port of refuge, and arrived there on the 5th Oct. He then made the usual protest, and the ship was surveyed and condemned

Q.B. Div.]

SAUNDERS AND ANOTHER v. BARING AND ANOTHER.

[Q.B. Div.]

When the cargo was unshipped it was found to be so much damaged that there would be very great danger of spontaneous combustion if it were taken on to Yokohama, and the surveyor recommended that they should be sold by public auction. This was done, and the sum realised was considerably over the insured value, but the average adjusters at Hong Kong deducted a sum for pro rata freight, on the ground that the vessel was a German one, which reduced the net proceeds of the cargo to 583*l*. This was sent to the ship-owners, and they offered it to the plaintiffs on condition that they should give a receipt stating that it was on settlement of all questions with the owners of the ship. This would have precluded any future question as to the pro rata freight, and was in consequence declined by the plaintiffs though without consulting the underwriters, and the plaintiffs then sent in a claim to the defendants for a total loss. This the defendants declined to pay.

Butt, Q.C. and C. J. Mathew for the defendants.—The first substantial question is, Who is to bear the loss caused by the deduction of the pro rata freight? [BLACKBURN, J.—If it is proved to be a total loss, you must decide that question with the shipowners.] In reality this question will turn upon the effect of the sale of the cargo at Hong Kong; and as to this the decision in the Common Pleas in the case of Farnworth v. Hyde (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 187, 429; 18 C. B., N. S., 835; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 231) is against us, for there it is stated that the sale having been properly made was an actual total loss. But in the present case we must go a step further than that, and consider whether the sale itself without anything more whatever vests the proceeds immediately in the underwriter, or must there be some election on the part of the assured to do so? It is admitted that notice of abandonment could not be given before the sale, but does the sale per se vest at once the proceeds in the underwriter? [BLACKBURN, J.—The party insured is never obliged to claim indemnity; but the act of claiming the indemnity at once vests the proceeds in the insurers.] Suppose the property sold for a considerable sum more than the insured value, it is evident that in that case the sale will not per se vest the proceeds in the insurers. [LUSH, J.—Supposing that some election is necessary, surely the presentation of the claim is sufficient.] It appears from the correspondence that the plaintiffs were offered a sum of 583*l*. for the loss they had sustained, but they declined to receive it because the form of receipt was not satisfactory to themselves; they gave us no opportunity of accepting or rejecting this lump sum, and that clearly indicates that they never did any act which amounted to an election to consider the proceeds not their own; and it is sufficient that they did not elect to say that the proceeds were ours. There are authorities to show that some act was necessary on the part of the assured to divest themselves of the proceeds. The judgment of Lord Chancellor Cottenham in Fleming v. Smith (1 H. of L. Cas. 513), commented on by Blackburn, J., in Bankin v. Potter (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 65; L. Rep. 4 Eng. & Ir. App. 123), says, "They were sufficiently informed of what had taken place to enable them, if they thought proper, to take upon themselves the chance of the benefit of retaining the ownership of the property, instead of taking the sum which was secured to them by the policy effected with the underwriters on the vessel; and if they acted upon that opportunity of election they surely cannot afterwards turn round and go against the underwriters as for a total loss." No doubt the point at issue in that case was as to whether formal notice of abandonment was necessary, but the passage cited shows that there must be some election on the part of the assured. That being so the question arises on whom does the burden of proof lie to show that the proceeds are treated by the assured as their own and not as belonging to the underwriters. [LUSH, J.—That is, are they to be considered as belonging to the assured until they repudiate them, or do they belong to the underwriters until the assured elect to take them? Farnworth v. Hyde (ubi sup.) seems to settle the point that the sale immediately vests the proceeds in the underwriters. BLACKBURN, J.—The question of election was discussed in Stringer v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Company (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 440; L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 676), but the question as to the time of election or which side must prove it did not there arise; the decision was that the assured having elected was bound by such election.] It is clear from the cases cited that notice of abandonment is not necessary, still the mere sale does not divest the proceeds from the owner. In Roux v. Salvador (3 Bingham N. C. 266) Lord Abinger, in giving judgment, says, "The assured may preclude himself from recovering a total loss if, by any view to his own interest, he voluntarily does, or permits to be done, any act whereby the underwriter may be prejudiced in the recovery of that money. Suppose, for example, that the money received upon the sale should be greater than, or equal to, the sum insured; if the insured allows it to remain in the hands of his agent, or of the party making the sale, and treats it as his own, he must take upon himself the consequence of any subsequent loss that may arise of that money, and cannot throw upon the underwriter a peril of that nature" (p. 288). This case implies clearly that it rests with the assured to make an election after the sale. In the present case it is contended that the plaintiff has voluntarily left the proceeds in the hands of another party. Then as to the question of pro rata freight, that it is entirely a matter for the assured—with that the underwriters have nothing to do. Baillie v. Mondigliani (Park on Insur., vol. 1 p. 116; 6 T. R. 421). [BLACKBURN, J.: If the goods have increased in value by being carried to Hong Kong and the shipowner has a lien upon them, surely the underwriters cannot avail themselves of the increased value and not pay pro rata freight.]

Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B., 649;

Lloyd v. Guibert, 2 Mar. Law Cas., O. S., 26, 283;

L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 115; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 602;

Arnould Mar. Insur. vol. 2, pp. 878, 884.

Cohen, Q.C., and F. W. Hollams, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

BLACKBURN, J.—The mere fact that this cargo of coals had been so damaged by the perils of the seas as to render an immediate sale necessary, and that they were so sold, is sufficient to constitute a total loss. See Roux v. Salvador (ubi sup.). It is not necessary to say more on the point than is there said by Lord Abinger, "When the subject matter insured, has by a peril of the sea lost its form and species, where a ship, for example, has become a wreck,

[Q.B. Div.]

STREIBLY V. IMPERIAL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

or a mere congeries of planks, and has been bond fide sold in that state for a sum of money, the assured may recover a total loss without any abandonment. In fact, when such a sale takes place, and in the opinion of the jury is justified by necessity, and a due regard to the interests of all parties, it is made for the benefit of the party who is to sustain the loss; and if there be an insurance the net amount of the sale after deducting the charges, becomes money had and received to the use of the underwriter, upon the payment by him of the total loss." The goods in this case having of necessity been turned into money, there is a total loss; and for this the underwriters are liable, with, however, the right to receive the money from the hands of those who received it. If the assured had possession of it, it would be deducted from the total loss, but where the money is in the hands of a third party, the assured is entitled to be paid the total loss, and they may treat the amount as a debt due to them, but subject, of course, to a liability in case they have done any act which would lessen the chance of its recovery by the underwriters. This becomes extremely important where the holder of the money becomes bankrupt, and Lord Abinger rightly explains the law in commenting on Mitchell v. Exdrie (3 Bing. N.C. 290) that "even when a total loss has occurred by a sale of the goods, the assured may, by his own conduct in electing to take the proceeds instead of making his claim on the underwriter, if he thereby alters the facts so as to affect the interest of the underwriter, forfeit his claim to recover a total loss." That clearly shows that if anything in this case justified us in inferring that the insured had said, "We prefer to keep the proceeds" (and it has been shown that they amounted to 1900*l.*, whereas the insured value was 1650*l.*), they would be bound by their election. And the fact of this balance arising would have inclined us to think that the plaintiffs might have wished to claim the proceeds, but we find no trace of anything of the kind. They heard of the value realised by the sale, and of the claim for pro rata freight at the same time; then they were offered a sum of 583*l.* in full satisfaction, but this they declined. At that time they were evidently fully aware that if they took the proceeds they would be most probably involved in a law suit, and so they would be less inclined to elect to take the proceeds. However that may be, we find no trace whatever of such an election on their part. If in declining the 583*l.* they were acting as agents of the underwriters, their refusal may have raised the question of negligence, but I feel absolutely certain the insurance company would have told them to do what they did. The underwriters must pay the total loss, and they will then be entitled to take all such steps to get all the proceeds from the hands of third parties, as the plaintiffs themselves could have taken.

LUSH, J., concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Solicitors for defendants, Walton, Bubb, and Walton.

Saturday, Feb. 12, 1876.

STREIBLY V. IMPERIAL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Marine insurance—Concealment of material facts—Average loss—Non-communication by captain—Fraud—Principal and agent.

On the 11th Feb. 1874, two policies were effected upon a ship and freight "at and from Mazagan to a port or ports in the United Kingdom." The ship arrived at Mazagan on the 27th Dec. 1873. On the last night of the year a gale sprang up and the ship lost an anchor. On the 1st Jan. the captain went before a notary and made a protest as to the loss of the anchor by reason of boisterous weather. On the 9th Jan. he wrote to his owners, but did not mention the loss of the anchor. In an action to recover for the subsequent total loss of the ship,

Held, that as the captain did not wilfully or fraudulently conceal the fact of the loss of the anchor for the purpose of enabling him to insure, the policies were not avoided.

This was an action on two policies of insurance brought to recover for the loss of the ship Jessie, and was tried before Grove, J., at Guildhall, on the 4th Dec. 1875, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff with damages 850*l.*

It was now moved to enter judgment for the defendant.

The facts of the case, which appeared from the evidence at the trial, were as follows:—

On the 11th Feb. 1874, the plaintiffs effected an insurance with the defendants upon the ship Jessie, at and from Mazagan, a port in Africa, to a port or ports in the United Kingdom. The Jessie arrived at Mazagan on the 27th Dec. 1873, and anchored in the roadstead. On the night of the 31st a gale sprang up, and the Jessie lost her star-board anchor, but was otherwise not materially damaged. On the 1st Jan. 1874, the captain made a protest of the fact, and on the 3rd the loading of the vessel commenced. On the 9th Jan. the captain wrote to his owners a letter that was received on the 21st Jan., and this was the only communication they received from the captain. This letter was lost. Plaintiff swore that no mention had been made in it of the loss of the anchor, although the captain did say that the weather had been boisterous. This letter was not communicated to the underwriters. The loss of the anchor and cable, it was admitted, would be a material fact, but the question was whether the plaintiff could be said to have concealed a thing not within his knowledge. The ship was subsequently lost, and this action brought to recover for such loss. The defendants disputed their liability on the ground that the plaintiff had concealed from them the loss of the anchor, which was a material fact.

Russell, Q.C. and French, for the defendants.—It is clear from the case of Fitzherbert v. Mather (1 L. Rep. 12), that if the captain does not disclose a material fact, the owner must be held not to have disclosed it. In his judgment Lord Mansfield says: "Now whether this happened by fraud or negligence (of the agent) it makes no difference, for in either case the policy is void." But the present case is much stronger than that, for there "the agent acted honestly when, he wrote the letter" (see 1 Term Rep. 15), but here the

Q.B. Div.]

STRIBLEY v. IMPERIAL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

captain, writing on the 9th, deliberately suppresses any mention of the cable and anchor. [BLACKBURN, J.—You are not entitled to say deliberately.] At all events he considered it of so much importance that he made a protest on the subject on the 1st Jan. Again, the case of Proudfoot v. Montefiore (L. Rep. 2 Q.B. 511; 16 L.T. Rep. N.S. 585; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 572) recognises the same principle. There Cockburn, C.J., quoting Buller, J., says: "It is the common question every day at Guildhall, when one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraud or negligence of a third, which of the two gave credit. Here it appears that the plaintiff trusted Thomas (the agent), and he must, therefore, take the consequences." And, further on, he says: "If an agent, whose duty it is, in the ordinary course of business, to communicate information to his principal as to the state of a ship and cargo, omits to discharge such duty, and the owner, in the absence of any information as to any fact material to be communicated to the underwriter, effects an insurance, such insurance will be void, on the ground of concealment or misrepresentation." The case of Gladstone v. King (1 M. & S. 35), is also in point. There the master of a ship had omitted to communicate to his owners the fact of the ship having been driven on a rock, and they, in ignorance of the accident, had effected an insurance. It was held that the captain was bound to communicate the fact, and, for want of such communication, the antecedent damage was an implied exception from the insurance. [BLACKBURN, J.—That only amounts to this, that plaintiffs cannot recover the value of the anchor. In both Proudfoot v. Montefiore, and Gladstone v. King, the information was intentionally kept back.] The cases were not decided on that ground, and in Fitzherbert v. Mather (ubi sup.), Lord Mansfield expressly says, "it makes no difference whether this happened by fraud or negligence." [LUSH, J.—In Proudfoot v. Montefiore there was fraud as a fact.] No doubt, but the judgment does not proceed on that ground. Duer, in commenting on these cases (Duer on Insurance, vol. II., p. 420), says, "it certainly appears that the weight of authority is greatly in favour of the doctrine that the omission of an agent, whether proceeding from fraud or neglect, to give intelligence of a loss which he is bound to communicate, may operate as a fatal concealment." Again, "the concealment by an agent of material facts which he is bound to communicate, is alone sufficient to avoid the insurance, which it alone enabled his principal to procure. It is the wrongful act, or omission of the person, whom he trusted and employed." In the present case, then, as a material fact known to his agent has been concealed by the owner, the verdict should be entered for the defendants.

Aspland (with him Day, Q.C. and Benjamin, Q.C.), was proceeding to argue this point when he was stopped by the court.

BLACKBURN, J.—On the first point it certainly would be very difficult for us to say that the verdict should be entered for the defendants. Mr. Russell says that the captain of the vessel was aware that she had lost an anchor and cable, and did not communicate that fact to the plaintiff, and upon this bare statement he argues that the judgment should be entered for the defendant—that as policy was "at and from" Masagan, the loss of the anchor and the boisterous weather were material facts, and they must be held to be known to the plaintiff under the rule laid down in Proudfoot v. Montefiore, and Fitzherbert v. Mather. These two cases, however, only go so far as to say that where the agent with a view to enable his principal to insure, conceals a material fact, then the policy is avoided; but whether gross negligence on the agents' part would do it they don't say. In Gladstone v. King (ubi sup.), where the intention was not to enable the owner to insure, it was held that the policy was not avoided, but only that there was an exception out of the policy. I cannot think that every concealment by a captain, of however slight a matter, would prevent an owner effecting a good insurance. I should much prefer the doctrine laid down in Phillips on Insurance (vol. 1, p. 299, s. 564, 5th edit.), that where the concealment is fraudulent then the policy is avoided. We cannot, therefore, enter a verdict for the defendant.

LUSH, J.—The first question we have to dispose of is a most important one, and one on which we have had no case in this country to guide us. It is evident that the ship did not suffer from the loss of her anchor so as to affect the risk, as she must have had another before sailing homeward. She subsequently sailed, and was lost; are we to say that the underwriters are not responsible for the total loss because of the omission to make known the fact of the loss of the anchor? That decision would be so startling that I shrink from it. It would be obviously unjust to make the underwriter liable for the anchor, but it would be equally unjust that he should not be liable for the total loss. Where a master of a ship, or other responsible agent, wilfully withholds any information, or by culpable negligence withholds any material fact, it is quite right to hold the owner to be so far identified with his agent as to forfeit the policy. In Fitzherbert v. Mather and in Proudfoot v. Montefiore there was a total loss in each case, and the agent had wilfully withheld information from the owner to enable him to insure. But in Gladstone v. King the decision was only as to a partial loss. The owner sought to make the underwriter liable for damage which had been done to the ship before the policy was effected, and the court held that quoad that damage the policy was void; but not so with regard to the whole risk. In this case the underwriter is not responsible for the cable and anchor, but the loss of the cable had nothing to do with the loss of the ship, and that loss is the one both parties contemplated when the insurance was entered into. Following the decision in Gladstone v. King the policy here remains good, as there has been no fraudulent or wilful concealment of a material fact.

QUAIN, J. concurred. Motion refused.

A rule nisi had also been obtained to show cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and also that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, which was made absolute on both grounds.

Solicitor for plaintiff, J. McDiarmid.

Solicitors for defendants, Argles and Rawlins.

C.P. Div.]

LEWIS v. GRAY.

[C.P. Div.]

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS and CYRIL DODD, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, Jan. 25 1876.

LEWIS v. GRAY.

Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, secs. 12, 13, 14)—Detention of ship by Board of Trade—Board of Trade—Ship and shipping.

It is not necessary that the complaint made to the Board of Trade, as to the condition of a ship under sect. 12 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), should state that the ship "cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life," but it is sufficient if by reasonable inference it can be ascertained from the wording of the complaint that this in fact is the case. Neither is it necessary that the report made upon a survey ordered by the Board should so state, but it is sufficient if it can be ascertained by reasonable inference therefrom that this is in fact the case.

Semble.—If the first survey held by the Board under this Act is unsatisfactory or insufficient a second survey may be held.

Semble, also, that the Board cannot, upon an order for the detention of a ship for the purpose of holding a survey, justify a detention beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose.

This was an action brought to recover damages from the Board of Trade by reason of the detention by the officials of the Board of the plaintiff's vessel. It had been agreed (before the passing of the Merchant Shipping Act 1875, which has a provision to that effect) that the principal secretary (Mr. Gray) of the Board should represent the Board, and be sued in the action as a nominal defendant.

In November 1873, the plaintiff's vessel the Mary Ann arrived at Hull with barley from St. Malo.

On the 7th Nov. 1873, the Board of Trade received the following letter relative to the plaintiff's vessel from their surveyor at Hull:

Board of Trade Surveyor's Office, Customs House,
Hull, 6/11/73.

Sir,—Mr. McKensie having called my attention to the brigantine Mary Ann, of Maldon, official No. 2817, we have examined her lights, &c., and from the defective state of her decks, and the general appearance of the vessel, I am of opinion that she should be examined with the cargo out before being allowed to proceed to sea. She is at present loaded with grain which she is about to discharge.

From the Mercantile Navy List it appears that this vessel was built at Walker's, Northumberland, in 1831.

The Board in reply ordered the vessel to be detained for the purposes of survey, and on the same day wrote to the plaintiff as follows:

7th Nov. 1873.

Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Trade to inform you that they have reason to believe that the British ship named at the foot hereof now or recently lying at the place named is, for the reasons stated, unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life. The Board of Trade have, therefore, ordered her detention by the proper authority until she can be surveyed. . . . A copy of the surveyor's report will be sent you on the completion of the survey.

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) THOMAS GRAY.

The owner or master of the Mary Ann, of Maldon.

SHIP REFERRED TO IN THE ABOVE LETTER.

Name and Port of Registry.	Where Lying.	Here insert whether by reason (1) of the defective condition of her hull, equipment, or machinery, or (2) of overloading, or (3) of improper loading.
Mary Ann , of Maldon.		Hull, &c.

On the 12th Nov. 1873, the surveyors appointed by the Board of Trade inspected the vessel and reported as follows to the Board:

Sir,—I have the honour to report that we have examined the vessel to-day, and find that thorough repair will be required to render her seaworthy. The decks are quite worn out, the deck beams and knees are defective, and the timbers, where we had the ceiling removed, are found to be rotten.

As the vessel belongs to Sunderland the owner wishes to take her there for repairs, and we see no objection to her being towed there for that purpose.

The plaintiff, on the same day, the 12th Nov. 1873, telegraphed to the defendant asking him to allow the Mary Ann to proceed to Sunderland in ballast and be repaired there, according to the report. On the 15th Nov. the defendant wrote to the plaintiff the following letter, enclosing a copy of the above-mentioned report:

Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Trade to inclose for your information the accompanying copy of a report of the survey of the Mary Ann, of Maldon, and to state that they are prepared to allow her to be towed round to Sunderland for the necessary repairs provided she starts early on a fine morning, and that the crew knowing the case are willing to go in her. Upon hearing from you that the repairs indicated in the accompanying report have been efficiently and completely carried out they will direct a re-survey of the vessel to be made, and will inform you of the result. All expenses will have to be defrayed prior to the vessel leaving Hull.

(Signed) THOMAS GRAY.

On the 14th Nov. 1873, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant the following letter:

Sir,—I take the liberty in writing you respecting my vessel the Mary Ann. The captain sent you a telegram to be allowed to proceed to Sunderland in ballast to have the necessary repairs done as ordered by your surveyor. Being a stranger here I cannot get the credit I require here, as I can at my place of residence, Sunderland. The ship loaded a cargo of barley at St. Malo, and we have discharged it here, and had not a single bushel damaged, as such I trust you will grant permission for her to proceed.

On the 9th Dec. 1873, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant the following letter:

Sir,—Since my return from Hull, in which port the above-named ship now lies, I regret that my circumstances compel me to request of your Board of Trade to allow me to sail the ship in ballast about sixteen or eighteen hours sailing from there to here to have the repairs done in accordance with your survey. The Mary Ann recently had heavy repairs to her hull, a new keel, and in ballast makes no water, or if any, only a few inches when in dock, and has delivered 900 quarters of wheat without a bushel of it being damaged by water, bringing it 600 miles, during the voyage, by the log book, encountering severe gales until she reached Hull. I believe if you can or will take this into consideration when I inform you I cannot afford to have her towed down under your restrictions as stated in yours of the 15th Nov., viz., "that you are prepared to allow her to be towed round to Sunderland for the necessary repairs provided she starts early on a fine morning, and that the crew are willing to go in her"—had her deck proved faulty in discharging her cargo. I think at present she would not wet half a ton of her ballast. She was built at Sunderland, &c. I now leave it to your consideration to decide this my application.

On the 17th, the defendant replied as follows:

C.P. Div.]

LEWIS v. GRAY.

[C.P. Div.]

SIR,—I am to inform you that the Board are unable to depart from the conditions laid down in their letter of the 15th ulto.

On the 29th Dec. 1873, the solicitors to the plaintiff (Messrs. Oliver and Botterell, of Hull) wrote to the Board of Trade on behalf of their client, the plaintiff.

On the 1st Jan. 1874, the defendant or the Board of Trade telegraphed to Messrs. Oliver and Botterell, the plaintiff's solicitors, as follows:

The Board of Trade will allow the Mary Ann to sail to Sunderland on certain conditions, which will be sent to you by post.

On the same day, the 1st Jan., the following letter was sent by the Board to the plaintiff containing, as will be seen, the conditions referred to in the telegram.

Unseaworthiness.

Gentlemen,—In reply to your letter of the 20th, in which you request that the Mary Ann, of Maldon, may be permitted to sail from Hull to Sunderland instead of being towed to the latter port, I am requested to state that this Board will accede to your request on the condition that both master and owner sail in her; that she carries a boat fitted after the manner of a life-boat to the satisfaction of this Board's surveyor; that she proceeds direct to Sunderland, and that a bond with two sureties in the sum of 300*l.*, conditioned as above, be handed to the collector of customs at Sunderland before the vessel starts.

To this Messrs. Oliver and Botterell replied, repudiating the right of the Board to impose conditions, and stating that the plaintiff claimed damages for the detention of his vessel.

On the 7th Jan. 1874, the defendant wrote to Messrs. Oliver and Botterell setting out his view of the facts, and then continuing as follows:

The Board of Trade could only accept and act on the report which stated that the decks were quite worn out, and that where the culling was removed the surveyor found timbers to be rotten, as a report showing that the ship was unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life. . . . The fact remains that the ship is detained, that a partial survey only has been held to her, and the negotiations with the owner for removing her to Sunderland have fallen through. The Board of Trade now withdraw the modification of their order by which she could have been allowed to proceed to Sunderland, and under the powers given by the Act they vary their orders as follows, viz. that as in their opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life she shall be detained at Hull for further survey and repairs.

(Signed) THOMAS GRAY.

The plaintiff's solicitors then write and protest. The surveyors of the Board of Trade in spite of the protests of the plaintiff then survey the vessel, and on the 14th Jan. report to the Board as follows:

It is very evident from what we saw during our survey that for a long time this vessel has been in a very unsatisfactory condition. There was scarcely a crevice in the culling, pump, well, or chain locker, but that was gummed or covered with pieces of old sail cloth to prevent the coars from getting between the timbers and into the timbers. . . . We find that many of the rough trees are rotten. . . . the deck is much worn in some places, it is not much more than one inch thick, in fact it is quite done for, the oakum is generally through the seams, the port knight head is rotten. . . . there are indications of considerable leakage. . . . We were unable to ascertain the extent of the decay on board this vessel, but from what we have seen and tested we are of opinion that at the time of survey this ship was, having regard to the nature of the service for which she was intended, unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life.

This report was sent to the plaintiff by the Board of Trade accompanied with the following:

The order made by this Board thereon is that the vessel be detained at Hull until repaired to the satisfaction of this Board's surveyors.

The plaintiff, after several further letters had passed, instituted the present proceedings:

As nothing turned upon the form of the declaration or of the pleas it is unnecessary to set them out here.

The action was tried before Brett, J., in Mid-*d*lsex, at the sittings after Hilary term 1875, who directed a verdict to be taken for the plaintiff for the damages claimed in the declaration, giving to the defendant leave to move to enter the verdict for him, or to reduce the damages to whatever amount the court should direct.

The case depended mainly on the construction of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873.

Sect. 12 of that Act is as follows:

Where the Board of Trade have received a complaint, or have reason to believe, that any British ship is by reason of the defective condition of her hull equipments or machinery, or by reason of overloading, or improper loading unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, they may if they think fit appoint some competent person or persons to survey such ship and the equipments machinery and cargo thereof, and to report thereon to the Board. . . . The Board of Trade may if they think fit order that any ship be detained for the purpose of being surveyed under the section, and thereupon any officer of customs may detain such ship until her release be ordered either by the Board of Trade or by any court to which an appeal is given under this Act.

Upon the receipt of the report of the person making any such survey, the Board may, if in their opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, make such further order as they may think requisite as to the detention of the ship or as to her release, either absolutely or upon the performance of such conditions with respect to the execution of repairs and alterations, or the unloading or reloading of cargo, as the Board may impose. They may also from time to time vary, or add to, such order.

A copy of any such order and of the report upon which it was founded, and also of any variation of or addition to such order shall be delivered as soon as possible to the owner or master of the ship to which to which it relates. . . .

Sect. 13, inter alia, provides that

If upon such survey the ship is not reported to have been unfit to proceed to sea, having regard to the nature of the service for which she was intended, the Board of Trade shall be liable to pay compensation to any person for any loss or damage which he may have sustained by reason of the detention of the ship for the purpose of survey, or otherwise in respect of such survey.

Sect. 14 provides that

If the owner of any ship surveyed under this Act is dissatisfied with any order of the Board of Trade made upon such survey, he may apply to any of the following courts having jurisdiction in the place where such ship was surveyed, that is to say: In England to any court having Admiralty jurisdiction. In Ireland, &c. In Scotland, &c. The court may upon such application, if they think fit appoint one or more competent persons to survey the ship anew. . . . The court to which such application is made may make such order as to the detention or release of the ship, as to the payment of any costs and damages which may have been occasioned by her detention, &c. as to the court may seem best. . . .

The Solicitor-General (Sir J. Holker, Q.C.), having moved for and obtained a rule nisi in the terms of the leave reserved,

C. Lanyon now showed cause.—The object of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 is the protection of human life, not the preservation of cargo. As to the first survey, the board had no jurisdiction to make it, because they had received no complaint stating that the vessel was unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to

C.P. Div.]

LEWIS v. GRAY.

[C.P. Div.]

human life, neither could they have any ground for believing that there was such danger, as, when they ordered the survey they had received nothing but the letter from the surveyor of the 6th Nov. 1873. Next, even if they had jurisdiction to order a survey, the survey resulted in a report of the 12th Nov., which does not state or show that the ship could not proceed to sea without serious danger to human life; it stated nothing more than that she was "unseaworthy," which means unfit to carry cargo. Therefore, the report, if it was a report made upon a proper survey, justified no further detention of the ship. If the survey was, either because not founded on a sufficient complaint, or for any other reason a bad survey, then it follows that the report consequent on it would be a bad report. If the report affords no justification for the detention the plaintiff is entitled to damages. It cannot be that the board can justify under sect. 12, sub-sect. 4, and say that there was no survey then made, for that sub-section must give a right only to detain for a reasonable time, and really for the purpose of having a survey made. As to the last report, that was correct in point of form, but made, it is submitted, when the board was functus officio, either because they had already exhausted their powers, or because the reasonable time had elapsed. The board have no power to make two surveys, and have two reports, therefore they cannot justify the earlier detention under the earlier report, and the later detention under the later report. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—Why should not the plaintiff have appealed under sect. 14? If he could have appealed, may it not be that he was bound to do so?] Because, as to the first order, it was not made "upon such survey;" it was made on an improper survey. The plaintiff's case is that no order was ever made, so that from that point of view there is nothing to appeal from. The words of the section giving the appeal are "he may apply," not "he must apply." In the case of a void act the party is not bound to appeal; although an appeal is given him he may treat the act as a nullity:

Churchwardens of Birmingham v. Shaw, 10 Q. B. 880; 18 L. J. 89, Mag. Cas.;
Pedley v. Davis, 10 C. B., N. S., 492; 30 L. J. 379, C. P.

It is admitted by the board that on the first occasion only a partial survey was made, and it does not appear from the report that they had arrived at the conclusion that there was serious peril to life. The order made on the first survey and report was bad, there was no power to send the ship to Sunderland under certain conditions, there was no power to impose any condition, and the board have exceeded their powers, powers given in derogation of common law rights, and the plaintiff is by the words of the statute entitled to compensation. Summing up my points, they are these:—The complaint contained no information to justify the board in taking action; supposing the complaint did justify the board in taking action upon it, the survey then held was not in accordance with the provisions of the Act; even if the survey was properly held, it did not entitle the board to make an order for the detention of the ship; even if everything was correctly done up to the order, the order made upon the first survey was itself bad; and, lastly, they had no right to make any second survey.

The Attorney-General (with him Aspinall, Q.C., Herschel, Q.C., and Beasley).—The Board of Trade have by statute a duty imposed upon them to interfere for the protection of human life, when they have received a complaint, or have reason to believe that any British vessel is, by reason of the defective condition of the hull, &c., unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—You need not argue the question of the sufficiency of their surveyor's letter to set them in motion; we are satisfied that the letter gave them reason to believe that there was danger to life.] That being so, it was the duty of the board to appoint competent persons to survey the ship. Then we come to the 3rd paragraph of the section, which provides that the board may order the detention of the ship for the purpose of being surveyed, and thereupon any officer may detain such ship until her release is ordered. Here they did order the ship to be detained, and her release never has been ordered, either by the board, or by the court to which, by the provisions of the Act, the plaintiff might have gone if he objected to the action of the board. The order for the detention is still standing, and affords a justification. If it is necessary to go further I can do so; the section goes on: "Upon the receipt of the report of the person making any such survey the board may, if in their opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, make such further order as they may think fit as to the detention of the ship, as to her release either absolutely or upon the performance of such conditions with respect to the execution of repairs or alterations as the unloading or reloading of cargo as the board may impose. They may from time to time vary or add to such order." [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—Is it not that they can detain only for a particular purpose? No limit is put by the Act on the detention; the order stands until the ship is released. If the board acts unreasonably, there is an appeal given, but if a man does not appeal, but leaves the order to stand, the fault lies in him.] [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—Surely, when the purpose of the detention for a survey has been satisfied by the holding of a survey, the order for detention is gone.] The officer who detained would have no authority to give up the ship. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—Perhaps that might justify the officer, but afford no justification to the board, assuming that an action can lie against the board.] If the Board of Trade have acted wrongly in detaining the ship upon the order first made for detention, the plaintiff could have gone to the Court of Appeal created by the Act. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I doubt that the only appeal is from an order founded on a survey, and this would be a detention preliminary to the survey.] I have thought the point worthy of your Lordship's consideration, but as it is unnecessary in the present case to insist upon it, I will pass to the other branch of the section; first premising that it is competent for the board to add to and vary their orders, so that the ordering of two or more surveys seems perfectly legitimate; there is nothing that says that a survey once made is made once for all and for ever. The section goes on: "Upon the receipt of the report of the person making any such survey, the board may, if in their opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life," make such further order as they may think requisite as to the &

P. Div.]

LEWIS v. GRAY.

[O.P. Div.]

on of the ship, &c., so that the board are to n their own opinion after they have received ork. Now, upon the facts, all the correspond- e after the letter of the 7th Nov. formed a iation between the board and the owner of ip, which came to an end about the 7th Jan., hen the board said, we will detain your ship, upon that an order was made. There is ier point of view in which the case may be d at, and that is that the letter of Nov. 15 was der. Then it is said that the board had no r to have the ship surveyed twice; but if a ia legally detained, and there is a survey i, on the face of it, is only partial, and the ier is never taken off, and in consequence of equest or representations of the owner a d and fuller survey is made, what is there to r this second survey illegal, or to allow the r to find fault with the board for having done hich he invited them to do? [The Attorney- ral was then stopped.]

nd COLEBRIDGE, C.J.—This is an action brought r. Lewis against Mr. Gray, who by agreement s in the position of the Board of Trade, for ges said to have occurred to him in conse- e of the board having detained his ship when rarranted in so doing. This case raises, I e for the first time, the important question he true construction of the Merchant Ship- Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. 85.)

v several points have been taken in this case are not necessary to be decided, and for my as at present advised (and I say no more than present advised) I am inclined to think that rong remedy has been pursued. I admit there is a great deal to be said on both and it is quite possible that on further onition I might alter my mind upon it. I only en that as my present impression stands the remedy has been pursued.

plaintiff was the owner of a merchant ship traded between the French coast and the east of England, and, on the last voyage before proceedings, had arrived in Hull from St. with a cargo of grain. The Board of Trade sceived from their own surveyor at Hull a which, we are all of opinion, coming as it did heir surveyor, was sufficient to set them in under the Act of Parliament. It was suffi- to induce the board reasonably to be- hat the ship was unfit to proceed to sea t serious danger to human life. The board on ordered in the first instance the de- i of the vessel for the purpose of being d, and that they had power to do. The as so detained; so far the board acted clearly heir authority. The fact of the detention ship is notified to the owner by the letter of v., and in it the Board of Trade inform him ey have reason to believe that his ship is for the reasons stated, to proceed to sea t serious danger to human life. The board re, order her detention until she shall be ed. On the 12th of Nov. the surveyors ap- l survey the ship, and report as follows: ordship read the report.] That report is nicated by the board to the owner. Now, the ximent is a telegram which is followed by substantially the same as the telegram. It legram from the owner of the ship to the asking that the ship may be allowed to go derland for repairs. Upon that the letter of the 15th Nov., upon which so much stress has been laid, was written to the owner. It is as follows: [His Lordship read the letter.] Now in continuing the summary of the facts it is not necessary to read the whole of the somewhat voluminous correspondence. I think, and indeed we all think, that the view presented by the Attorney General of that correspondence, as a whole, is correct. That is, that negotiations took place between the parties as to when, and where, and under what circumstances, the repairs required by the board to be executed should be executed. I think it correct to state that from the 15th Nov. there was a negotiation going on. In the result the Board of Trade sum up in a letter the whole case. They say, I think, in substance, "There is a duty cast upon us by Act of Parliament to prevent ships going to sea in such a state as to imperil human life; upon the 12th Nov. we had a report which justified us in our view, and you in fact agreed that certain necessary repairs should be done; we then got into correspondence and could not agree upon some minor points, and that matter fell through, you persisting that your ship was an extremely good one, and that the survey was a partial survey. Be it so, we said; whether we gave an order on the 15th or not we will not now seek to inquire; our duty is to prevent a ship going to sea which cannot go without imperilling human life; and as we cannot agree as to the terms on which she is to go to Sunderland, we will, as a final conclusion of the correspondence, order that, as in our opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious peril to human life, she shall be detained at Hull for further survey and repairs." Now that is the letter of the 7th Jan. On the 14th there is a survey, and an order made afterwards upon that survey, against which, in point of form, Mr. Lanyon has nothing to urge.

These being the facts, we have to consider whether the board have acted in a manner justified by the Act of Parliament. It is an Act which creates a duty in the Board of Trade. The first duty of the board under this Act is, if they are satisfied that human life is in danger, to endeavour to protect it, so far as the statute gives them power to interfere. I am of opinion that in taking into account that which is ground for believing that a British ship cannot go to sea without serious danger to human life, it is by no means necessary that the complaint, or report, or letter, upon which the Board of Trade proceed should contain these words; it is sufficient if to ordinary men it conveys the idea that the ship is unfit to go to sea without serious peril to human life.

It has been suggested that there can but be one survey, that there must be one survey, and one only, and that the Board of Trade cannot supplement any imperfect or incorrect details. I think it would be utterly unreasonable to construe this Act of Parliament in any such way.

Then it is said that the report must in actual terms find that the ship is unfit to go to sea without danger to human life. Now I find nothing in the Act requiring this. The fair meaning of the Act of Parliament is this, that if by a fair and reasonable inference it can be derived from the report, that the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, the Board of Trade may, if they act bona fide, draw the inference and stop the ship.

C. P. Div.]

LEWIS v. GRAY.

[C. P. Div.]

I therefore come to the conclusion that the Board had upon the 12th Nov. received a report, which would quite warrant them in thinking that the ship could not proceed to sea without serious danger to human life.

The question then is, what in point of fact was the course adopted by the board? I am inclined to think that the letter of the 15th of Nov. was an order, but I do not think it is necessary to decide that question, because whether the letter of the 15th Nov. was an order or not, the letter of the 7th Jan. undoubtedly was an order, as it seems to me, and was an order which, for the reasons I have given, the board were perfectly competent to make. I think, therefore, that the board have acted well within their powers.

It is perhaps not necessary to say more, but I will add that, as at present advised, as the matter has been raised (though I quite feel that there are certain difficulties in the way of the opinion that I have formed by reason of the wording of the 4th sub-section) I do not assent to the interpretation suggested by the Attorney General of the 4th sub-section. I think the 4th sub-section must be confined to the object of the act, and that the board, having detained a ship for the purpose of being surveyed, cannot detain ad infinitum a ship originally detained merely for a survey. They cannot detain her after the purpose has been satisfied by a proper survey. This point, however, was not fully argued, as the learned Attorney-General, having a strong case on other grounds, did not think it necessary to press this upon us.

This is no doubt a very important matter to private persons. It is also a very important matter to the public, and I think we should not discharge our duty if we allowed it to be supposed that objection of a technical kind, or of a formal nature, can prevail when the power entrusted to the Board of Trade has been substantially well and properly used.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

I think that on the 7th Nov. a valid order was made by the Board of Trade, and that that order was in fact the order under which the vessel was detained. The statute enables the board when they have reason to believe that any British ship is by reason of the defective condition of her hull, or for other reasons, unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, to appoint a surveyor to survey such ship, and to order, if they think fit, that such ship shall be detained for the purpose of being surveyed, and, thereupon any officer of customs may detain such ship until her release be ordered, either by the board, or by any court to which an appeal is given by the Act. The Act goes on to enact that upon receipt of the surveyor's report, the board may, if in their opinion the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, make such further order as they may think requisite as to the detention of the ship or as to her release. The letter from Mr. Spear was ample justification for the holding by the Board of Trade of the opinion that this vessel could not proceed to sea without serious danger to human life. On the 7th Nov., acting upon their opinion, the Board write to the owner and inform him that they have reason to believe that the ship cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life, and that they have ordered her detention for the purpose of holding a survey. On the 12th a survey is made, and a report is made by the surveyor.

It is contended that this report was insufficient. Now what is the report? [His Lordship reads.] Looking to the very purpose for which the survey and the report were made, I think the report sufficiently shows that the ship was unfit to proceed to sea, and could not do so without serious danger to human life. Reports of this kind are not to be construed like special demurrers of former days, but sensibly and by the light of practical understanding. On the 15th Nov. the Board gave notice in a letter to the plaintiff, which has been treated as an order, and to a certain extent it was so regarded by the plaintiff himself; but for myself I do not regard it as an order; it was, I think, rather a letter written in anticipation of an order which might at any moment be made. The letter is thoroughly informal, and contains terms which are of the character of a negotiation rather than of an order. I put upon it this construction, that it comes to this, "If you choose to come to our terms, we will make an order to such and such an effect." Then a negotiation takes place, and on the 7th Jan. a final order is made that the ship should be detained and a full survey made. I can find nothing to render that further and fuller survey illegal or improper. It is made, and it proves that the ship is in fact unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

I agree with Mr. Lanyon that the duty of the Board under this statute is to protect human life and not to see after cargoes. I do not think any one denies that a ship may be unseaworthy as to a particular cargo, or for a particular voyage, and yet fit to go to sea without danger to life. But with the rest of his argument I cannot agree. I think his criticism upon the form of complaint, and of the first survey, without warrant. I apprehend that it is sufficient if a report show upon the face of it by reasonable inference that the ship is unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life. That being so, I am unable to see that the board have in any respect exceeded their powers. Now with reference to the question of whether the letter of the 15th Nov. is to be considered as an order or not, I am inclined to think it was not. I think it was part of the correspondence. Let us test it in this way. Supposing an appeal under the Act had been brought against that letter, it seems very doubtful whether such an appeal could be sustained. The answer would be, it is not an order against which an appeal lies. From the correspondence it is plain there was no unreasonable delay, the plaintiff has no one but himself to blame for the delay that took place.

With reference to the question raised by the Attorney-General as to the 4th clause of sect. 12, namely, that the short answer to their question would be to rely upon the words, "And thereupon any officer of the customs may detain such ship until her release be ordered either by the Board of Trade, or by any court to which the Act gives an appeal," I am of opinion that the construction he suggested is erroneous. I think the true construction is tolerably plain, if the whole of the words are looked at, and the whole of the language of the clauses. The power conferred by that clause is this, that the Board of Trade may order that any ship shall be detained for the purpose of a

c.]

THE CAROLINA.

[ADM.]

red; then the language is changed, and, as reheard, not without reason. It is not the may detain such ship, but that any officer customs may detain, until, &c. It appears sonable to say that because the Board has to detain for the purpose of holding a r, they may detain as long as they please. on the question whether this is a case in an action will lie in this court for wrongful ion, it follows at once that if the board is not without jurisdiction no action can lie; but sing all they did was in excess of jurisd, the common law remedy by action is not away, and though the plaintiff might have d to the Appeal Court, he was not bound to

That point, however, does not arise in this or is there any question for us as to whether ion of right, or action against the board, is oper form of proceeding.

MAN, J.—I expressed no opinion on any s which I thought were not in question in so, but it must not be supposed that I red because of any dissent from the opinions rest of the court.

citors for plaintiff, Messrs. Oliver and Bot-Hull.

sitor for defendant, The Solicitor to the wy.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

cted by JAMES P. ASHFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Dec. 14, 1875.

THE CAROLINA.

n's wages—Wages earned after suit commenced—Right to and mode of recovery.

man who commences a suit in rem for the very of his wages cannot have a decree for is or subsistence money after the date of the nonement of his suit, although he is roed in the service of the ship by the master; he will be entitled to an allowance in the of costs for detention and subsistence money . the date of the institution of the suit to the of decree.

ras a motion in objection to the registrar's made in a cause of wages instituted on be-the first and second mates and a seaman American ship Carolina.

plaintiffs had been engaged to serve on the Carolina, on a voyage from Grimsby to , and thence to Buenos Ayres; but whilst p was at Cardiff she was arrested in a cause cessaries, and no appearance being entered alf of her owners or any other persons, the dismissed the remainder of the crew, but re-the plaintiffs on board until he could have an unity of hearing from his owners, and they ed on board until 2nd Sept. 1875, when the , without dismissing them, told them to themselves ashore, as he had no credit, and not provide them with food. They did so, ing, however, on board the ship at other and in her service until she was sold after free (2nd Nov. 1875). On 5th Sept. 1875 the lfs instituted a cause of wages against the ud no appearance having been entered their n was filed on 12th Oct., and a decree was ob-on 2nd Nov., 1875, pronouncing for the claims.

The petition claimed wages and subsistence money up to the date of the decree, and the whole question of the amount due was referred to the registrar, who reported that the plaintiffs were entitled to their wages and subsistence money up to the date of the commencement of the suit, but disallowed all wages, &c., subsequent to that date. To this report the plaintiffs now objected.

W. G. F. Phillimore, in support of the objection.—The question is whether wages and subsistence money should be given up to Nov. 2 or only to Sept. 5. [The REGISTRAR.—The claim from Sept 5 to Nov. 2 was disallowed, because it has always been the practice in the registry to give subsistence money and compensation for detention from the date of the institution of the suit in the way of costs; and because plaintiffs in wages suits cannot get wages for a period after they have left the service of the ship, which they practically do before instituting their suit.] There is no reason why a servant should not continue in a person's service, and yet sue that person for his wages; the commencement of the action does not terminate the contract of service. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Practically, however, the commencement of an action would operate as the termination of the contract.] Here, however, the plaintiffs actually remained on board and in the service of the ship after the institution of the suit, and did not terminate their contract. They remained in the service of the ship until she was sold. It is constantly the practice to allow wages to foreign seamen after the institution of their suit when they are sent home from this country: Williams and Bruce, Admiralty Practice, p. 165. On taxation of costs the plaintiffs would not get the same amount as as they would for wages.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I should be loth to alter the established practice of the court, which unquestionably does exist, without some very strong authority being shown to me. The practice of the registry in this respect is founded upon the principle that when a seaman institutes a suit for wages he ceases to have any claim for subsequent wages upon the ship, and that principle has been acted upon in a great variety of cases. It is said that there is a great hardship in the mariner being left without any claim for support after he has left the ship, in the interval between the institution of the suit and the hearing of the cause. But, substantially, he would receive a sum of money for his maintenance and detention when the question of costs came to be decided. It is said that these men stayed on board after the institution of the suit, and at the request of the master. Those are circumstances to be brought before the taxing officer, and I should surmise that the registrar would pay considerable attention to an affidavit with regard to the employment of seamen on board the vessel after the institution of the suit. There would be a ground of appeal if it were not given due weight to, and a proper allowance not made to the seamen. I decline to vary the registrar's report, as such a variation as that asked for would be a subversion of the practice of the court, which has existed for a very long period.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Fidler and Sumner.

[Ct. of App.]

HICKOX AND ANOTHER v. ADAMS AND ANOTHER.

[Ct. of App.]

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by W. AFFLETON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, Feb. 2, 1876.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., and MELLISH, L.J.)

HICKOX AND ANOTHER v. ADAMS AND ANOTHER.

Contract for sale of goods—Cost, freight, and insurance—Construction of—Policy of insurance—Delivery of to vendee—“Memorandum articles.”

The plaintiffs, at New York, contracted to sell and deliver 1000 quarters of wheat to the defendants at Bristol, upon the terms, “cost, freight, and insurance.” Through a mistake the plaintiffs shipped, by a sailing vessel, a cargo of 2000 quarters of wheat to K. at Bristol. They also forwarded to K. by steamer a bill of lading and a policy of insurance of the whole cargo of wheat shipped. This policy was “free from particular average.”

K., at the request of the plaintiffs, accepted a bill of exchange drawn upon him by them for the price of the 2000 quarters. The defendants afterwards refused to accept the 1000 quarters from K.

Held (reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Division), that in an action against the defendants for breach of a contract to accept the 1000 quarters, the plaintiffs were not “ready and willing” to deliver the 1000 quarters to the defendants within the terms of their contract.

APPEAL from Exchequer Division.

The action was brought to recover damages for breach of a contract by the defendants to accept goods which the plaintiffs alleged they had sold and were ready and willing to deliver to the defendants.

The first count of the plaintiffs’ declaration was, “for that it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendants that the plaintiffs should sell and deliver to the defendants, and the defendants should buy and accept from the plaintiffs, 1000 quarters Millwaukie wheat, at the price of 2l. 13s. 6d. per quarter; the said price for the said goods to be paid by the defendants’ acceptance of the plaintiffs’ bill of exchange for the price thereof, payable to the plaintiffs or order at sixty days.”

Averment of fulfilment of conditions precedent.

Breach, that the defendants “did not nor would accept the said goods or any of them, and did not nor would pay the plaintiffs for the same goods by accepting the said bill of exchange as aforesaid, whereby, &c.

The second count set out an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants that “the plaintiffs should sell to the defendants, and the defendants should buy from the plaintiffs, 1000 quarters Millwaukie wheat, at the price of 2l. 13s. 6d. per quarter, upon the terms that the plaintiffs should deliver the said goods to the defendants, and the defendants should accept and pay for the same.”

Averment of fulfilment of conditions precedent.

Breach: That the defendants would not accept the said goods from the plaintiffs, nor pay them for the same, whereby, &c.

There were also the usual money counts.

Pleas: 1. To the first and second counts of the declaration, denial of agreements as alleged. 2. As to the said first two counts, that the plaintiffs were not ready and willing to deliver the said goods as alleged. 3. A denial of the breach alleged. 4. Rescission of the contracts set out by the declaration. 5. To the money counts now indebted.

Issue was taken by the plaintiffs on the pleas.

The action was tried at the Bristol Spring Assizes in 1875, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for the damages, 3000l., claimed by his declaration, leave being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for them, or costs, to reduce the damages. The court to have power to draw inferences of fact.

The following were the material facts given in evidence at the trial:

On the 22nd May 1874, the plaintiffs, Messrs. Hughes, Hickox, and Co., who are large commission merchants at New York, sent a cable message to the defendants, Messrs. Henry Adams, and Co., who carry on their business at Gloucester, offering them a load (about 1000 quarters) of Milwaukee wheat, at 53s. 6d. per quarter. The plaintiffs also sent, at the same time, a cable message to Messrs. Kruger and Co., of Bristol, with whom they had been accustomed to do business largely, offering them two loads or 2000 quarters of the same wheat at “53s. 3d. per quarter, in bags direct to Bristol C. F. I.” (i.e., cost, freight, and insurance). The defendants, in reply to the message they had received from the plaintiffs, sent back a reply, which was simply, “To Hickox, New York, accept,” the sender’s name being omitted in order to save expense.

The plaintiffs assumed that this reply came from Kruger and Co., and they accordingly shipped the wheat by sailing vessel for Bristol; and on the 5th June 1874, they wrote to Messrs. Kruger and Co., informing them of the fact, and that the plaintiffs had drawn upon Kruger and Co. 4597l. 18s. 9d. (the price of the two loads of wheat at three days’ sight. The plaintiffs with this letter, forwarded by steamer an invoice of the wheat sold, and a certificate of insurance of the Oriental Mutual Insurance Company, which certified that the company had insured, under a policy made for the plaintiffs, “23,900 bushels in gold on 15,786 bushels of wheat, in 500 bags, free of particular average (unless the vessel be stranded, sunk, burned, or in collision), valued at sum insured, shipped on board of the ship Thomas Baynes at and from New York to Bristol; and it is hereby understood and agreed, that in case of loss, such loss is payable to the order of Hughes, Hickox, and Co., on surrender of the certificate. This certificate represents and takes the place of the policy,” &c.

The plaintiffs also forwarded the bill of lading for the wheat to Kruger and Co., and a bill of exchange signed by the plaintiffs, and drawn on Kruger and Co. for 4597l. 18s. 9d., payable 60 days after sight to the plaintiffs’ order.

[APP.]

HICKOX AND ANOTHER v. ADAMS AND ANOTHER.

[CT. OF APP.]

On 23rd May 1874, the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs:

"We acknowledge the receipt of your cable message yesterday's date, as follows, 'offer load Mill-fifty three six seal Bristol,' to which we replied 'and which we now beg to confirm. We suppose sixty days on bankers; however, no doubt you are fully on this point.'

The plaintiffs received this letter at some time on 5th, and before the 8th June.

On 8th June the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants explaining the mistake which had been made, saying:

"We therefore written Messrs. Kruger and Co., our draft on you at sixty days, for the amount enclosed invoice (for one load), say 2340l. 15s. 10d., asking them to attach bills of lading for property therein, and present for your acceptance. We ask the above explanation, you will duly honour, &c.

The plaintiffs forwarded to the defendants, with their invoice for one load of wheat, containing 7994 bushels, at 53s. 6d. per bushel.

On the same day the plaintiffs wrote to Kruger and Co. explaining what had occurred, and going on to say:

"The documents having gone forward to you by the 6th, we shall request you by cable to honour our account. We now inclose our draft at sixty days on Adams for 2340l. 15s. 10d., which we request each to bill of lading for 7994 bushels wheat, and our acceptance, which, if duly honoured, as we will be, will reimburse you for one load. The draft you will please to dispose of to best advantage account sales to us, &c.

A draft drawn upon the defendants by the plaintiffs for 2340l. 15s. 10d., payable sixty days to the order of the plaintiffs, was forwarded to Kruger and Co. with this letter, and read "Pay Messrs. Kruger and Co. or Hughes, Hickox, and Co."

On 10th June 1874, the plaintiffs sent the defendants a telegram to Kruger and Co.: "Honour 1 June for our account, letter 8th answer."

On 20th June the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs a letter beginning, "We have none of ours to reply to," and, after stating that their letters were dull, &c., the letter concluded, "an effort to do business in the Bristol way through."

On 24th June the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs and Co., "Without prejudice we will have the boatload of wheat shipped per Thomas if they, Messrs. Hughes, Hickox, and Co. consign to our care the other boatload on their account. If you are not in a position to make this arrangement we leave it in your hands to cable out this offer for their reply or not."

On the same day the defendants refused to accept a bill of exchange which the plaintiffs presented upon them, and which was presented for acceptance by Kruger and Co., and they protested. Messrs. Kruger and Co. accepted the bill of exchange drawn on the plaintiffs.

On 27th June the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs expressing surprise that the plaintiffs had not sent wheat to them, and saying that, having nothing from the plaintiffs for a month, they had bought elsewhere; but that, in order to complete the transaction, the defendants had offered Kruger and Co. to take one load of wheat on condition of having the other load consigned to them, but that the defendants had heard nothing more from Kruger and Co.

On 9th July 1874, immediately after the receipt of the last-mentioned letter, the plaintiffs telegraphed to the defendants, "Accept your proposition; have ordered Kruger to deliver your wheat."

On the 11th July 1874 the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs refusing to take the wheat. The price of wheat had fallen considerably between the date of the plaintiffs' first offer of the 22nd May and the refusal of the defendants to accept the goods.

On the 19th April 1875, a rule was obtained by the defendants ordering the plaintiffs to show cause why the verdict for them should not be set aside, and a verdict for the defendants or a nonsuit entered, on the grounds that there was no memorandum of the contract within the Statute of Frauds, that the plaintiffs had not performed the contract on their side; that the tender was not one which the defendants were bound to accept, no policy of insurance having been tendered, or why the damages should not be reduced pursuant to leave reserved.

On the 16th November 1875, the Exchequer Division made an order that the damages found for the plaintiff on the trial be reduced to 150l., and as to the residue of the rule that it be discharged.

It was against this order that the defendants now appealed.

Benjamin, Q.C. (with him Cole, Q.C. and Petheram) for the appellants.—The plaintiffs were never in a position to carry out their contract with the defendants. The letter of the 8th June from Hickox to Adams, announcing the mistake, reached Adams on the 23rd or 24th. The terms of the contract then were, "cost, freight, and insurance." The defendants were entitled to have a transfer of the policy of insurance at the same time that the bills were presented for their acceptance. The actual policy would have been no use to the defendants. It was of use to Kruger and Co., who had a lien upon it. It is true that it might have been indorsed with a notice that Kruger held it for the defendants; but that would have been of no service to the defendants, who could not have delivered it to a purchaser of the goods. Besides, the policy covered the whole quantity of wheat shipped in the Thomas Bayne, and was warranted "free of particular average," so that the defendants could not have recovered upon the policy if there had been a total loss of their load of wheat. The plaintiffs were never ready and willing to deliver the policy to the defendants.

Lopes, Q.C. (with him A. Collins), for the respondents, the plaintiffs below.—It is admitted that there was no actual delay in forwarding the goods, and there is no dispute as to the quality of them. We were ready and willing to deliver the policy within the terms of the contract. Those terms were "cost, freight, and insurance." The plaintiffs did insure—not the one load separately, but the two loads, one of which Kruger was to hand over to the defendants, and the other to sell and account for to the plaintiffs. Assume that Kruger and Co., when they offered the draft to

CT. OF APP.]

HICKOX AND ANOTHER v. ADAMS AND ANOTHER.

[CT. OF APP.]

the defendants for acceptance, had offered also the policy covering both the loads; the defendants could have then gone into the market with their policy, and no objection could be made by a purchaser that the policy covered more than the quantity offered. Kruger and Co. were the plaintiffs' sole agents in England, and it must be assumed that they would have done everything possible to help their principals. Kruger and Co. would not have been damaged if they had passed the policy on. If the excepted risk of particular average had been inserted, the defendants would have been entitled to complain that the goods had not been insured according to the contract. [The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A purchaser might be willing to take the goods upon having the policy covering the whole quantity handed over to him, and it may be that he then might have recovered upon a loss, but would Kruger and Co. have handed over the policy under these circumstances?] We were in a position to do it, and I ask your Lordships to infer that we would have done it.

Benjamin, Q.C. in reply.—It is now admitted that we had a right to have the policy of insurance delivered with the shipping documents, but the defendants could have recovered nothing upon the policy covering the two loads, if any part of them remained upon the ship's arrival in port. If all our load had been lost, we could not have recovered a penny. It is a peculiarity under policies to insure what are termed "memorandum articles" that no partial loss can be recovered, for wheat is one of those articles. It is asking the court to infer a violent improbability, that Kruger and Co. would have given up the policy—their only security whilst the goods were at sea—for the advance of 4597l. to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs assumed that Kruger and Co. would have given it up, but there is nothing to show that they would have done so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There are some of the questions in this case which I shall put aside. As to the question of whether there was a contract in writing in order to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, that has been given up. Both parties seem to be agreed that the case is to be taken as if there was a valid contract for sale "cost, freight, and insurance," and that the ordinary shipping documents were to be delivered to the purchaser. I also put aside the mistake as to the telegrams. It is immaterial to follow the history of it, because the mistake was found out in time to have had the 1000 quarters of wheat delivered to the defendants, if the plaintiffs could have carried out their contract in other respects.

Now, when the mistake was found out, Hickox and Co. had sent forward to Kruger and Co. a cargo consisting of two loads of wheat, the bill of lading and a policy of insurance upon the whole of the parcels. The ship, in which the wheat was, being still upon her voyage, Hickox and Co., the plaintiffs, wrote to Adams and Co., telling them of the mistake, and that Kruger and Co. would deliver to them (the defendants) 1000 quarters of wheat, and present a draft for the price of these 1000 quarters upon the defendants payable in sixty days. At that time the draft which the plaintiffs had drawn upon Kruger and Co. for the price of the whole shipment was just coming due. The defendants refused acceptance of the draft upon them when it was presented to them, and refused, in fact, to accept the goods.

The question for us is, upon the whole facts of the case, are we to hold that Hickox and Co. were then ready and willing to fulfil their contract with Adams and Co.? In my opinion they were not. It is an essential element in their being ready and willing to fulfil their contract that they should be able to put Adams and Co. in a similar position, as to insurance of their own load, as Kruger and Co. were in respect of the whole quantity.

Now, the insurance of the goods, being what I have described it to be, assuming that the policy was a proper one, and would have been a good and sufficient one to satisfy a purchaser from the defendants of the one load, if that policy had been handed over to him, I cannot see anything from which to infer that Kruger and Co. would have been ready to hand over that which was their only security for the bill which they had accepted. Then, supposing that they had been willing to do so, would that have been a sufficient protection for Adams and Co.? I think not, for under the particular terms of the policy, unless there was a total loss of the goods, no loss could have been recovered upon it. It is, therefore, impossible to say that Adams and Co. would have been in the same position as if they had had a separate policy covering the 1000 quarters which they had purchased.

I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the defendants.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J. concurred.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In this case there was a contract to sell and deliver goods between a firm carrying on business at New York and a firm at Gloucester. Is the English firm bound to accept the bill of lading of the goods without the policy of insurance? I think they are certainly not so bound. It is clear that the goods could not be sold under the bill of lading without a security in case of their total loss at sea. Now there was, in fact, no policy on the wheat alone, but there was one on the whole quantity consigned to Kruger and Co. I am of opinion that we must find that Kruger and Co. were not ready and willing to deliver the policy to the defendants; and if Kruger and Co. had been, the plaintiffs would not have been carrying out their contract with Adams and Co., the defendants, in delivering to them a policy covering the whole quantity of wheat.

Judgment for appellants.

Solicitors for the appellants, Whites, Bond, and Co., for Henry Brittan, Press, and Lamb, Bristol.

Solicitors for the respondents, Clark, Westcock, and Ryland, for Fussell and Co., Bristol.

Q.B. Div.]

LISTER v. VAN HAANSBERGEN.

[Q.B. Div.]

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, J. M. LELY, and R. H. AMFLETT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Feb. 11, 1876.

LISTER v. VAN HAANSBERGEN.

Charter-party—Undue detention in loading—Exemption of charterer—Lien of owner.

In an action by shipowner against charterer, there was a claim for undue detention in loading the ship. The charter-party contained a stipulation that as the defendant was acting on behalf of another party, his liability should cease as soon as the cargo was shipped, loading excepted, the owner and master of the vessel agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo for freight, demurrage and all other claims; which lien it was thereby agreed they should have.

Held upon demurrer that, whether the owner's lien covered the claims in the action or not, the defendant was liable for all damage incurred before the cargo was completely shipped; and that the action was maintainable.

THIS was an action by shipowner against charterer upon a charter-party, in the following words:—

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 14th June, 1875.

It is this day mutually agreed between Mr. John Lister, owner of the British or privileged good ship or vessel called the Antias of Hartlepool, of the burden of 13½ keels or thereabouts, now in the river Tyne, and Messrs. Van Haansbergen and Usher of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, as agents to the freighters of the said ship, Messrs. A. Vander Leems, Son, and Co., for one voyage from the river Tyne to Rotterdam. That the said vessel, being tight, staunch, and strong, and every way fitted for the voyage, shall with all convenient speed sail and proceed as directed by the said freighters and there load from the factor of the said freighter a full and complete cargo, consisting of four to five keels firebricks, and load up with Ramsay's Garesfield coke not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, apparel, provisions, and furniture, and being so loaded shall therewith proceed with the first opportunity and all possible dispatch to Rotterdam, and there deliver the same alongside any vessel, wharf, or warehouse as ordered, where she can safely deliver on being paid freight at and after the rate of 6l. 5s. sterling per keel of 16 tons for the coke, at 7l. 10s. sterling per keel of 21 tons for the bricks for the quantity taken on board as aforesaid, and 2l. 2s. gratuity; the freighter paying all dues and duties on the cargo, and the ship all other charges. As soon as the cargo is shipped, the master to sign the bills of lading as presented without prejudice to this charter. This charter being concluded by the said Messrs. Haansbergen and Usher for and on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all liability of the former shall cease as soon as the cargo is shipped, loading excepted, the owners and master of the vessel agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo for freight, demurrage, and all other claims, and which lien it is hereby agreed they shall have, and that the vessel is to be reported and cleared at the custom house at Newcastle by the said Messrs. Haansbergen and Usher, and all money for charges or otherwise due by the owners or master shall be paid on the captain receiving despatches (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever during the said voyage always excepted). The freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo in cash for ship's use, and the remainder by an approved bill on London at two months' date or all in cash equal thereto at master's option. Seven working days are to be allowed the said merchants for unloading (if the ship is not sooner despatched) and demurrage to be paid over and above the said lying days at 2l. per day penalty for non-performance of this agreement, amount of freight.

The vessel to be addressed to the charterer's agent at port of discharge paying the usual brokerage only.

By authority of owner.

ppro JAMES THOMPSON.

J KNOTT,

As agents VAN HAANSBERGEN and USHER.

Witness, J. A. HAVELOCK.

The declaration set out the material parts of the charter-party, and averred that the plaintiff carried the said cargo in the said ship to Rotterdam aforesaid, and there delivered the same in accordance with the said agreement, and all conditions were fulfilled and all things happened and all times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the said charter-party performed by the defendants on their part, and the defendants in loading the said ship unduly detained the same beyond the proper time provided for the loading thereof, whereby the plaintiff was deprived of the use of the same, and incurred expense in keeping the same and maintaining the crew thereof. And for a second breach the defendant kept the said ship on demurrage fourteen days over and above the said periods so agreed upon for loading as aforesaid, and thereby became liable to pay to the plaintiff 28l. for demurrage as aforesaid, and has not paid the same.

In the 4th plea the defendant set out the charter-party verbatim, and said that at the time of the making of the said charter-party he, the defendant, (therein described as Messrs. Van Haansbergen and Usher), was agent for the said Messrs. A. Vander Leems and Co., therein mentioned, and that he (the defendant) loaded the said agreed cargo on board the said ship.

The second breach of the charter-party alleged in the declaration was demurred to on the ground, amongst others, that no demurrage was chargeable for delay beyond the time for loading.

And the fourth plea was demurred to on the grounds, amongst others, that the exemption of liability clause in the charter-party did not apply to loading and liabilities incurred in respect thereto; and the plea, whilst affirming that the defendant loaded the said ship, did not allege that he loaded it within the proper time and without delay; and the fact that the defendant was acting as agent did not, under the wording of the charter-party set forth, release him from the above-mentioned liabilities.

Walkin Williams, Q.C. (with him Wright), argued for the plaintiff.—The exemption of the charterer's liability is expressly barred with respect to loading; he must, therefore, be liable for all matters connected with the loading. It is not sufficient that he has completed the loading; he must have done it without delay and in reasonable time. Clauses of this kind have been discussed and interpreted in

Bannister v. Breslauer, L. Rep. 2 C. P. 497

Gray v. Carr, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 522; ante, vol. 1, p. 115; Francesco v. Massey, L. Rep. 8 Ex. 101; ante, vol. 2, p. 594;

Kish v. Cory, 1. Rep. 10 Q. B. 553; ante, vol 2, p. 593.

Herschell, Q.C. contra.—The charterer upon this agreement is responsible only for the loading of the cargo, so that the shipowner may have an effectual lien to cover all his claims. The owner may satisfy the claim based upon the alleged breach of the charter-party by recouping himself upon his lien, and the charterer is not liable for delay or demurrage in loading.

BLACKBURN, J.—I do not think we require a reply from the plaintiff. The words upon which

Q.B. Div.]

OPPENHEIM v. FRASER.

[Q.B. Div.]

this question is raised seem to me to have but one meaning. The defendant has engaged that the vessel shall be loaded with a full cargo within a reasonable time; or if a particular time be actually specified, then within that time. There is a two-fold obligation—first, to load a full cargo; secondly, to do so within the time agreed. It is contended on the defendant's behalf that the charter-party gives a lien to the shipowner for every kind of claim, both liquidated and unliquidated; the words are "the owners and master of the vessel agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo for freight, demurrage, and all other claims, and which lien it is hereby agreed they shall have." I have some doubt whether "all other claims" can be held to cover the unliquidated claim for unreasonable delay; but whether they do or not, the previous words do not exempt the freighter from liability for such delay; they are, "This charter being concluded by the said Messrs. Haansbergen and Usher, for and on account of another party, it is agreed that all liability of the former shall cease as soon as the cargo is shipped, loading excepted." This means that, with respect to the loading, the freighter's liability remains as if there were no exemption, and it includes the delay which takes place before the cargo is completely shipped. It is not necessary to say whether this meant to exempt the freighter from liability for every claim which the owner can enforce upon his lien, for the simple and natural interpretation of the words clearly gives the owner a remedy against the freighter for loss incurred during the shipping of the cargo. The declaration, therefore, is good, and the plea is not a sufficient answer to it. Our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

LUSH and QUAIN, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Gold and Son.

Solicitors for defendant, Williamson, Hill, and Co., for Ingledeu and Daggett, Newcastle.

Monday, Feb. 14, 1876.

OPPENHEIM v. FRASER.

Ship and shipping—Sold note—Warranty—Condition precedent—"Ship now at Rangoon."

In an action brought by the vendors against their vendees for refusal to accept, evidence was given to show the circumstances under which the contract was made, and that it was of vital importance that the vessel should be in the port named at the time of making the contract. The jury found, that the condition "ship now at Rangoon," had not been fulfilled, and that it was a condition absolutely vital.

Held, that it was rightly left to the jury to say under what circumstances the contract was made, and that the words "ship now at Rangoon" amounted to a warranty justifying the defendant in saying that there had been a failure of performance of a condition precedent and in refusing to carry out the contract.

Held further, that the finding of the jury was rightly taken as an element in enabling the court to say that the words amounted to a condition precedent.

This was an action tried before Blackburn, J. and a special jury, at the Guildhall sittings after Trinity Term on the 26th Nov. 1875, for non-acceptance by the defendant of a cargo of rice according to contract, and brought by the plaintiffs as vendors. The contract was made on the 12th Dec. 1873 for the purchase of 1500 tons of rice. At this time intense anxiety prevailed in India, and in consequence of the famine in Bengal, and the expected prohibition of exports from Rangoon to Europe, merchants would only buy such cargoes as were then being loaded in Rangoon, or were prepared with ships then at that port for the purpose of loading. So much of the contract as is material to this case was as follows:

London, 12 Dec., 1873.

Sold for account of Messrs. Oppenheim and Schrader to our principals, the cargo of rice consisting of about 1500 tons in bags, or such portion thereof as may arrive by the vessel, new crop, Rangoon per Coldingham about—tons register—Captain, now at Rangoon, to be shipped during Dec. 1873, or Jan. 1874, on the following conditions, &c.

The Coldingham was not at Rangoon at the time of the contract being entered into, but was then upon a voyage going to Rangoon. The defendants pleaded that it was a condition precedent that the ship should be at Rangoon on the date of the contract, and evidence was given on their behalf as to the then state of trade at Rangoon, as stated above.

The jury returned a verdict for the defendants, intimating that the condition as to the ship being at Rangoon at the date of the contract not having been fulfilled, and that being absolutely vital, the verdict must be for the defendants.

Blackburn, J. however gave the plaintiffs leave to move to enter judgment for them, taking the finding of the jury as one of the elements on which the motion was to be made.

*J. C. Matthew (with him Sir H. James, Q.C., Watkin Williams, Q.C., and Myburgh), moved accordingly.—You are not entitled to incorporate the finding of the jury with the contract for the purpose of construing it. There is no authority for saying that what is found by the jury as to the importance of the vessel being at Rangoon can be so incorporated. The evidence tends to leave the construction of the contract with the jury, and however important it might be that the vessel should be at Rangoon, it is not that which indicates whether that is a condition precedent or not. The question is, what did the parties really agree upon according to the words of the contract apart from the evidence? [BLACKBURN, J. cited Graves v. Legg (23 L. J. 228, Ex.; 9 Ex. 709.) The evidence does not bring the case within Graves v. Legg (supra), in which case the name of the ship was the condition precedent; and an averment of the fact of the materiality of the name of the ship appeared on the pleadings. Evidence to show that "ship now at Rangoon" was of special and specific significance at this particular juncture is inadmissible—it is purely a question of construction for the court, and there is no evidence of the purpose for which the contract was made. [LUSH, J.—Here there was express evidence of particular and exceptional circumstances; surely they could be brought forward to show the nature of the contract. [BLACKBURN, J. cited Behn v. Burn (3 B. & S. 751; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 387; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 178, 329; 32 L. J. 384 Q. B.)] There was no agreement between the parties that the words should be a condition precedent: (Jackson v. The Union Marine Insurance Company, ante, vol. 2, p. 435; L. Rep. 572; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 789; 44 L. J. 27, C*

Q.B. Div.]

THIS AND OTHERS v. BYERS.

[Q.B. Div.]

evidence was admitted to show the intention of the parties the document itself would be of no use, the same printed form of words between A. and B. would bear a different meaning than the same form between C. and D. The words themselves are not ambiguous, but the effect of them is. [BLACKBURN, J.—It is never a fact to go the jury what the words of a contract mean, but it is a fact to go to them under what circumstances are they made, and to what do they relate.] You cannot, by evidence make words a condition precedent, and there being no ambiguity what evidence was admissible? If it were mere matter of description you could not admit such evidence; for instance if a ship were described as having a figure head painted red. [LUSH, J.—That would be a condition precedent if it were shown that she was going among pirates who had a superstition never to attack ships with a red figure head.] The contract must be read in the writing in which it is expressed, and you cannot have the writing plus parolevidence. The question, too, is independent of whether the words may or may not be a condition precedent; the parties would have gained advantage by the resale of the rice whether this particular ship was in a port or not, and if the price had not gone down these words would not have been material: (Corkling v. Massey, ante, vol. 2, p. 18; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 395; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 636; 42 L. J. 153, C. P.)

Benjamin, Q.C. (with him Cohen, Q.C. and Patchett) were not called upon for the plaintiffs.

BLACKBURN, J.—The judgment must stand.

In all cases we must consider the intention expressed by the words, and this must depend on circumstances. In construing a will you inquire into all the circumstances, and not what the testator means to say, but what does he mean under the circumstances. The same rule applies to contracts, with this difference: everything, all the circumstances of the testator's life, are relevant in the case of a will, but in a contract only those circumstances are relevant which both parties are speaking of at the time. The question is, what the facts are, of and concerning which they are speaking in using those words, and the question must be put what are the facts?

In this case the stipulation was made that the ship was "now at Rangoon." Now is this a mere stipulation or a condition precedent which would put an end to the contract? We must construe the contract according to the state of things known; we might differ as to whether there was reference to an ordinary state of things or not. I am not sure that I should have said under other circumstances that this was not a condition precedent; but, with the evidence and considering the state of the market, the prohibition expected against the import of rice, and other things, it is important to consider these. The ship being in the port at that time is all important; they wanted rice, they did not want a right of action.

In Graves v. Legg (ubi sup.) the question was raised by pleading the material circumstances, and the object with which the contract was entered into was in the knowledge of both parties. Baron Parke there said it was material and essential to the case. In Behn v. Burness (ubi sup.) Williams, J. says the "question appears to be properly raised by the averment in the plea that the time and situation of the vessel were essential and material parts of the contract. On the trial of the issue joined thereon, it was no part of the judge's duty to leave to the jury any question as to the construction of the contract, or the materiality of any of its statements. It was his function to construe the contract with the aid of the surrounding circumstances found by the jury, and to decide for himself whether the statement that the ship was in the port, supposing it to be untrue, was an essential part of the contract, or a mere representation, and to direct the jury to find for the defendant or plaintiff accordingly. The question it would seem might also be raised by pleading the material circumstances (as was done in Graves v. Legg, 9 Ex. 709), on which the defendant relies as leading to the construction which the plea seeks to put in the instrument. Unless one or other of these modes were adopted, the court, in case there should be a demurrer to the plea, or on an application for judgment non obstante veredicto, would be precluded from taking the surrounding circumstances into consideration in aid of the construction. It is plain that the court must be influenced in the construction not only by the language of the instrument, but also by the circumstances under which and the purposes for which the charter-party was entered into." The course taken in Graves v. Legg (ubi sup.) was not adopted here, the circumstances not having been pleaded; but it was left to the jury to find those circumstances, and they did find that it was absolutely vital that the ship should be Rangoon on the 12th Dec. and that the defendants' evidence upon this point was true. Hence the verdict was entered for the defendants.

The case is governed by Behn v. Burness (ubi sup.); this is in point, and we can not overrule it.

MELLOB, J.—I am of the same opinion.

In this case Behn v. Burness (ubi sup.) is in point. Evidence is not admissible to show that the parties meant something not expressed, but the circumstances under which the contract was made must be known. We do not admit the evidence to show what the parties intended, but to show what the words mean in reference to the circumstances. I think the judgment must stand.

LUSH, J.—The words "now at Rangoon" are capable of being construed in two ways, but they must refer to the circumstances under which the contract was made. It was for the jury to say what they were, and they have done so, and said they were of the last importance. The selling value of the rice was much affected by the fact of the vessel being at Rangoon or not, and the words must apply to the particular circumstances. Sir H. James says different words receive different interpretations in different contracts. This is so, and Behn v. Burness shows it. The verdict must stand.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Messrs. Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Solicitor for defendants, W. J. Foster.

Feb. 16 and March 6, 1876.

THIS AND OTHERS v. BYERS.

Ship and shipping—Liability of charterer for delay in unloading caused by foul weather. Where a given number of days is allowed to a charterer for unloading, a contract is implied on his part that from the time when the ship is at the usual place of discharge he will take the risk

Q.B. Div.]

THIS AND OTHERS v. BYERS.

[Q.B. Div.]

of any ordinary vicissitudes which may occur to prevent his releasing the ship at the expiration of the lay days.

By the terms of a charter-party a vessel was to proceed for a voyage from P. to a safe port in the United Kingdom with a cargo of timber, "sixteen working days to be allowed the merchants for loading the ship at P., and to be discharged at such wharf or dock as the charterer may direct, always afloat, in fourteen like days, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days at 10l. per day." The ship was loaded and ordered to M.; and, having arrived at the usual place of discharge, commenced the unloading. It was the duty of the master to put the timber over the ship, and form it into rafts, so that it might be conveyed away by the charterer. In the course of unloading bad weather came on, and as the rafts could not be formed, the charterer could not convey the timber away. A delay of four days was thus caused in discharging the ship, and the shipowners claimed 40l. for demurrage:

Held, that, as by the charter-party a given number of days was allowed for discharging the cargo, the charterer was, under the circumstances, liable for the delay in unloading the vessel, notwithstanding such delay was occasioned by bad weather.

THE declaration alleged that in consideration that the plaintiffs would deliver to the defendant certain timber forming the cargo of and carried by a certain ship of the plaintiffs then lying and being at a certain port, to wit, Stockton-on-Tees, and would allow the defendant fourteen laying days for the unloading of the same, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days; the defendant promised the plaintiffs to pay to the plaintiffs freight on the carriage of the first timber from Pensacola to Stockton-on-Tees aforesaid at certain dates agreed on between the plaintiffs and defendant, and to discharge and unload the said ship within fourteen days from the day on which the master of the said ship should signify his readiness and willingness to unload, and to pay 10l. per day demurrage for each demurrage day that the said ship should be detained by reason of the defendant not unloading the same over and above the said fourteen laying days.

Breach that the defendants did not unload and discharge the said ship within the time so agreed upon as aforesaid, but kept the same on demurrage over and above the said fourteen days for a long time, to wit ten days, on demurrage, and the defendant thereby became liable to pay, but has not paid, to the plaintiffs demurrage at the rate aforesaid for ten days, and the defendant also detained the said ship one day without any payment or satisfaction to the plaintiffs on that behalf, whereby the plaintiffs were deprived of the use of the said ship during that time, and incurred expense, &c.

There was also a count for money payable for demurrage of a ship.

Fourth plea to first count.—That defendant was prevented from unloading and discharging the ship solely by the acts and defaults of the plaintiffs and their agents on that behalf.

The case came on for trial before Grove, J. and a special jury, in London, during the Michaelmas Sittings, 1875, when the following facts were proved. The plaintiff was a shipowner, and the action was for eleven days' demurrage, and 1l. 14s. 6d. for extra dock charges. By the charter-party dated Jan. 31st, 1874, the Norwegian vessel Singleton, chartered by Messrs. Price and Pierce as agents, was to proceed to Pensacola with all convenient speed to load a full cargo of timber, and being so loaded to proceed to any safe port in the United Kingdom; sixteen working days to be allowed for loading, "and to be discharged at such wharf or dock as the charterers may direct, always afloat, in fourteen like days, and ten days on demurrage, over and above the said laying days at 10l. per day." The bill of lading incorporated the terms of the charter-party, and was indorsed by the captain. In pursuance of the charter-party the vessel proceeded to Pensacola, and was there duly loaded (bills of lading being presented and signed by the captain), after which she proceeded by order of the defendants with the cargo to Middlesborough. She arrived at the usual place of discharge on Sunday, the 28th of June, 1874, and was ready to discharge her cargo to the defendants, by whom the freight was paid the following day—viz., the 29th. The time for discharging expired on the 14th of July, but the vessel was not in fact discharged till the 25th. The vessel was thus kept eleven days beyond the time; but, as the delay of three of these days was admitted to be due to default on the part of the plaintiff, a verdict was ultimately found for the plaintiff for 81l. 14s. 6d., being eight days' demurrage at 10l. per day, and 1l. 14s. 6d. for extra dock charges. As regards four of these days it was admitted that the delay in unloading was occasioned by bad weather which prevented the master, as was his duty, from putting the timber over the ship and forming it into rafts, and that the charterer was in consequence unable to take the timber away. The learned judge accordingly gave leave to the defendant to move to reduce the verdict by 40l., if the court should be of opinion that on the true construction of the charter-party the defendant was not responsible for delay occasioned by bad weather. The case now came on for argument.

Russell, Q.C. and E. Pollock for the defendant (the charterer).—There is not an absolute contract in the part of charterers or consignees to unload within a stipulated time where they are prevented therefrom by something beyond their control. Here the inability to unload arose from something which prevented the plaintiffs themselves from performing their duty of putting the timber over the ship's side.

Ford v. Cotesworth, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 127; Id. 501, 544; 38 L. J. 52, Q. B.; 39 Id. Q. B. 188; 19 L. J. Rep. N. S. 634; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 165; 3 Mac Law Cas. O. S. 190, 468; Abbot on Shipping (11th edit.), 269; Randall v. Lynch, 2 Camp. 356; 12 East, 179; Lee v. Yates, 3 Taunt. 387; Dobson v. Droop, 4 C. & P. 112.

Herschell, Q.C. and Webster for the plaintiff.—Where the number of lay days is fixed the discharge must take place within those days, or the consignee or charterer is responsible, unless the delay was occasioned by the default of the shipowner. The delay here was delay out of the control of either party, and for this the defendant must pay.

Brown v. Johnson, 10 M. & W. 331; 11 L. Ex.;

Q. B. Div.]

HOPPER v. BURNES AND OTHERS.

[C.P. Div.]

Penwick v. Schmals, L. Rep. 3 C. P. 313; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 27; 37 L. J. 78, C. P.; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 64;

Tapscott v. Balfour, ante, vol. 1, p. 501; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 46; 42 L. J. 18, C. P.; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 710;

Ashcroft v. Crow Orchard Colliery Company (Limited), ante vol. 2, p. 397, L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 540; 48 L. J. 194, Q. B.; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 266;

Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267;

Barratt v. Dutton, 4 Camp. 333,

Cur. adv. vult.

March 6.—The judgment of the court (Blackburn, and Lush, JJ) was delivered by

LUSH, J.—This is an action for demurrage. The verdict was entered for the plaintiff for 81l. 14s. 6d., leave being reserved to the defendant to reduce the amount by 40l., being for four days detention at the stipulated rate of 10l. per day; and the question is whether, when a charter party allows a given number of days for discharging the cargo, the charterer or the ship's owner takes the risks of casualties in the weather, which interrupt the process of unloading.

The charter-party was for a voyage from Pensacola to a safe port in the United Kingdom, as ordered, with a cargo of timber. The clause upon which the question turns is in these words: "Sixteen working days to be allowed the said merchants (if the ship is not sooner dispatched) for loading the ship at Pensacola; and to be discharged at such wharf or dock as the charterer may direct, always afloat, in fourteen like days, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days, at 10l. per day."

The ship having been ordered to Middlesborough, arrived at the usual place of discharge in the river, and commenced the unloading. It was the duty of the master to put the timber over the ship, and form it into rafts; and the charterer was to take the rafts away.

In the course of unloading bad weather came on, and though the ship did not leave her anchorage, the rafts could not be formed, and the charterer could not consequently do his part in taking the timber away. The bad weather caused a delay of four days in discharging the ship; and the contention of the defendant was, that as he was not in default, but was ready to receive the timber, but the master was not ready to deliver it, the time lost in consequence of the bad weather ought not to be reckoned as part of the fourteen days.

We took time to look into the authorities, and are of opinion that where a given number of days is allowed to the charterer for unloading, a contract is implied on his part that, from the time when the ship is at the usual place of discharge, he will take the risk of any ordinary vicissitudes which may occur to prevent his releasing the ship at the expiration of the lay days. This is the doctrine laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Randall v. Lynch (ubi sup.), which was upheld by this court; and it has been accepted as the guiding principle ever since: (see Leek v. Yates, ubi sup.; Harper v. McCarthy, 2 W. R. 258; Brown v. Johnson, ubi sup., and the other cases cited in the argument.)

The obvious convenience of such a rule in preventing disputes about the state of the weather on particular days, or particular fractions of a lay, and the time thereby lost to the charterer in the course of the discharge, makes it highly expedient that this construction should be adhered to, whatever may be the form of words used in the particular charter.

The judgment of the court will therefore be for the plaintiffs for the full amount.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

Solicitor for the defendant, Cree.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS and CHAS. DODD, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, Feb. 23, 1876.

HOPPER v. BURNES AND OTHERS.

Charter-party—Sale of cargo at intermediate port—Freight pro rata itineris.

Plaintiff chartered a ship to defendants to carry cargo for freight payable on delivery at the port of destination. The captain was obliged to sell part of the cargo at an intermediate port for necessary repairs. The price obtained was higher than it would have been at the port of destination. Plaintiff, having paid the proceeds of the sale to defendants under an average statement, claimed freight pro rata itineris on the cargo sold.

Held, that defendants were entitled either to demand an indemnity for the sale of the cargo, or to treat the transaction as a forced loan, and demand the proceeds of the sale, and that having treated it as a loan, they were not liable to pay freight pro rata itineris.

THE plaintiff's claim was for freight and money received. The plaintiff was the owner of the ship Verena, and he chartered her to the defendants to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Point de Galle, in Ceylon. The freight was to be 21s. a ton on the quantity of coals delivered at Point de Galle, and if the quantity delivered should be less than the amount named in the bill of lading, the defendant might deduct the cost of the coals so deficient from the freight due. The defendants shipped a cargo of 704 tons of coal at Cardiff; the coals were by the bill of lading to be delivered to the order of the defendants. The invoice price was 11. per ton. The ship sailed for Point de Galle, but met with bad weather off the Cape of Good Hope, and put in disabled. The captain, being unable to raise money on bottomry for the necessary repairs of the ship, sold 470 tons of coal at the Cape of Good Hope, which fetched 3l. 3s. 6d. a ton, a considerably higher price than they would have fetched at Point de Galle. Forty-two tons of coal were jettisoned, and the ship, having been repaired, proceeded on her voyage, and the remainder of the cargo, 192 tons, was delivered at Point de Galle. The defendants afterwards employed Messrs. Davidson and Lindley, average staters, to draw up an average statement, and the plaintiff paid the amount which the average statement showed to be due from him to the defendants. The statement debited the plaintiff with the amount of the net proceeds of the coals sold at the Cape of Good Hope, but made no allowance to him for freight in respect of these coals. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to freight pro rata itineris in respect of the coals sold at the Cape of Hope, and sought to recover back from the defendants the amount of such freight, which, he contended, ought to have been allowed to him in the average statement, and also to recover the amount for which the coals sold at the Cape over the cost price. At the trial, before Huddleston, B., at the Liverpool Summer Assizes, 1875, the verdict was entered for the plaintiff, with leave to the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them or a nonsuit, on the ground that the defendants were not liable to pay the freight claimed. A rule nisi was obtained during the Michaelmas sittings.

Herschell, Q.C. and Crompton showed cause.—It cannot be that the defendants are entitled to keep all that was received as the price of the coal sold at the Cape of Good Hope, and pay nothing to the plaintiff, who took it there, for freight. The money was paid to the defendants under a mistake of fact, and can therefore be recovered as money received to the use of the plaintiff. If the charterer takes the goods from the shipowner at a point short of the port of destination he is bound to pay freight pro rata itineris, and if he takes the produce of the goods it comes to the same thing. Taking the money which the coal sold at the Cape of Good Hope produced is the same as if the defendants had taken the coal itself there. In Baillie v. Mondigliani (1 Park on Marine Insurance, 116, 8th edit.), there is an express opinion of Lord Mansfield in favour of the plaintiff's contention. He says, "In this case the value of the goods was restored in money, which is the same as the goods; and therefore freight was certainly due pro rata itineris." In 2 Arnould on Marine Insurance, 803, 4th edit., the law is stated as follows: "Goods sold for the general benefit are to be paid for in contribution, if the adventure reaches its destination, at the net value they would have fetched at the port of discharge, or at the sum they actually brought at the intermediate port, deducting freight, duty, and landing expenses. If the adventure does not reach its destination, the amount of contribution is the price obtained for the goods at the port of distress, less freight pro rata, duty, and landing expenses. The shipowner in the former case would seem to be entitled to full freight, and in the latter to freight pro rata to the port of sale." For this proposition Atkinson v. Stephens (7 Ex. 567) is cited.] [Benjamin, Q.C., for the defendants, referred to Campbell v. Thompson (1 Starkie, 490.)] That does not touch the present case, for the sale there was wrongful; there was no urgent necessity for it. [ARCHIBALD, J., referred to Hunter v. Prinsep (10 East, 378.)] In that case also the act of selling was tortious. [BRETT, J.—In MacLachlan on Merchant Shipping 449, second edition, it is stated that "where the master sells the cargo in the course of the voyage, although properly, and to prevent its entire loss in consequence of damage by perils of the sea, he is not entitled to freight for carriage to the port of sale," and Vlierboom v. Chapman (13 M. & W. 230), and Hunter v. Prinsep (ubi sup.) are cited.] If the sale is justifiable, it is the same as if an express authority to sell had been given; there is an implied authority to sell if it is necessary for completing the adventure. It is reasonable to imply that the defendants are not to be benefited more under the existing circumstances than they would have been if the contract had been completed. [BRETT, J.—The shipowner would be entitled to recover on a policy of insurance on freight.] Lord Mansfield's doctrine in Baillie v. Mondigliani (ubi sup.) has only been overruled in the case of a wrongful sale, as in Hunter v. Prinsep (ubi sup.); Vlierboom v. Chapman (ubi sup.) was a different kind of case from the present. It would seldom happen, as here, that the forced sale produced gain instead of loss, and this is a material element of difference between this case and most others. A contract to pay freight pro rata ought to be implied as against the defendants from their having taken the proceeds of the sale. As to the claim for money received, Kelly v. Solari (9 M. & W. 54) shows that money paid under bona fide forgetfulness of facts disentitling the other party to receive it, can be recovered. The average statement is not binding on the plaintiff. It does not amount to an award, and it was made with a different object from that of fixing the position of the parties, viz., to settle what claims should be made on the underwriters.

Benjamin, Q.C. (Myburgh with him) in support of the rule.—The correspondence shows that the plaintiff agreed to be bound by the average statement, and this was a voluntary payment made after full examination of the facts. The entire argument for the plaintiff is based on Lord Mansfield's dictum in Baillie v. Mondigliani (ubi sup.), which is shown not to be law by the later decisions which have been referred to. The true principle is that the master has a right to borrow money or goods from the owner of the cargo to repair the ship, and when he sells it is a forced loan by the owner of the cargo to the owner of the ship. The shipowner is only entitled to freight on the goods delivered, and the owner of the cargo is entitled to have the amount of the forced loan repaid. [BRETT, J.—But if the goods were sold for less than they would have fetched at the port of destination, he would not be content with that.] He has an option either to treat it as a loan or to demand an indemnity. Here the defendants asked for the proceeds of the sale, which is in effect asking for repayment of money lent. In Atkinson v. Stephens (ubi sup.), Pollock, C.B., puts the right of the master to sell cargo on the ground of being "a lawful mode of borrowing money for the necessary purposes of the ship," and the same learned judge expresses the same view in Duncan v. Benson (1 Ex. 537, affirmed 3 Ex. 644), where he says, "To accomplish the object of repairing the vessel, the master is authorised to bind his owner . . . by selling a portion of the cargo, which is in effect borrowing from the shipper through the medium of a sale." (1 Ex. 555.) [BRETT, J. referred to Richardson v. Nourse, 3 B. & A. 237.] If the owner of the cargo asks for an indemnity, he must allow what he would have had to pay for freight if the goods had been carried on, but not if he asks for repayment of the loan. The principles applicable to the case are clearly explained by Lord Ellenborough, delivering the judgment of the court in Hunter v. Prinsep, 10 East, at p. 394. [He was then stopped by the court.]

BRETT, J.,—In this case the plaintiff brought an action, first to recover freight, and secondly for money received. He says that the money was inadvertently paid, and claims to recover it back on the ground that he has paid the defendants without deducting payment for freight. It is obvious that he cannot recover, unless he is entitled to

Q.B. Div.]

HOPPER v. BURNES AND OTHERS.

[C.P. Div.]

the freight, so the main question is as to the claim for freight.

The plaintiff is a shipowner, and he made a charter-party, by which he chartered his ship to the defendant for a voyage from Cardiff to Point de Galle; the freight was 21s. per ton of coals (of which the cargo consisted), payable upon the quantity delivered at Point de Galle. The rest of the charter-party is immaterial. The ship was disabled by perils of the sea, and put in at the Cape of Good Hope, and there the captain was unable to borrow money on bottomry or otherwise. Under these circumstances the maritime law gives a title to the captain to sell part of the charterer's cargo to realise money to repair the ship; and he can sell without doing a wrongful act, though it is the duty of the shipowner to repair the ship at his own expense. The captain sold a portion of the coal, and having expended the amount realised upon the repairs of the ship, he proceeded to Point de Galle, and delivered that part of the cargo which remained.

Now, it so happened that the coals which were sold at the Cape of Good Hope fetched more than those which were taken on and sold at Point de Galle, and it is suggested that, therefore, the plaintiff is not only entitled to freight on the coals delivered at Point de Galle, but also to other freight for the coals which were sold at the Cape of Good Hope.

According to the charter-party freight was obviously only to be paid on coals delivered at Point de Galle, and if the plaintiff is entitled to freight on the coals sold at the Cape of Good Hope, it must be on some other ground. If he is entitled on any ground, it would be that he had become entitled to freight which was earned at the Cape of Good Hope. I know of no mode by which the shipowner can become entitled to freight on such a charter-party as this, where the goods are not delivered, unless he becomes entitled to freight pro rata. The principle of pro rata freight is, that it is payable where there is a mutual agreement to do certain things, on which the law will imply an undertaking to pay, not the stipulated freight, but freight pro rata. The only case in which it can become payable is where the captain is able and willing to carry on the cargo, but the charterer or shipper desires to have the goods at an intermediate port, and the captain gives them up at the owner's request, express or implied. There there is an implied promise to pay freight. Here the captain sells the goods, and by that very act puts it out of his power to say that he was ready to carry them on to the port of destination, for he was not able to do so. Therefore one ground on which the liability to pay freight pro rata depends does not exist.

It has been said that the charterer has an option, and Mr. Crompton said that here the charterers have exercised that option, and therefore by implication they undertook to pay pro rata freight. It is said that the charterer has an option to treat the proceeds of the sale as a loan, or to say "you sold my goods against my will; I cannot say that you did wrong, because the law allows it under the circumstances, but I insist on an indemnity"—not treating it as a mere loan; in fact, that he has an option either to treat it as a loan or to require an indemnity. If it is treated as a loan, it does not come within the rule; it gives no claim to pro rata freight. If the charterer is of opinion that the goods have fetched more at the intermediate port than they would have fetched if they had been carried on to the port of destination, he may treat the transaction as a loan at once, and may sue for the amount of the proceeds of the sale before the ship has arrived at her port of destination. If the ship is lost between the intermediate port and the port of destination, he cannot ask for an indemnity on the footing that the goods would have fetched more at the port of destination. If the ship had been lost between the intermediate port and the port of destination, he never would have been able to insist—it would not have been in his power to insist—on an indemnity. He could say that it was a loan, and that as the shipowner had sold part of the cargo he must pay the price of it to the charterer. If the goods fetch more at the intermediate port than they would have fetched at the port of destination, the owner of the cargo insists upon treating the transaction as a loan, as is the case here. If he had insisted on an indemnity on the footing that if the goods had been carried on they would have fetched more, he would have been entitled to claim the difference between the price at the intermediate port and the price at the port of destination, but he would have had to allow for freight. But he has a right to treat it as a loan, and if it is treated as a loan the claim to pro rata freight cannot arise, and the shipowner cannot add pro rata freight to the charter-party freight.

It is a hardship arising from the form of the contract and from the nature of maritime perils. The proper remedy would be for the shipowner to insure the freight, and if he did I have no doubt that under such circumstances as these he could recover. The rule must be made absolute.

ARCHIBALD, J.—The question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to pro rata freight for the conveyance of goods to an intermediate port. I am of opinion that under the circumstances he is not.

The charter-party gives no right to freight unless the goods are delivered at the port of destination, or a new contract is made, or there are facts from which we should imply a new contract. We are asked to imply a new contract because the goods were sold and the proceeds of the sale was paid to the defendants, but this is not sufficient to make it right to imply such a contract. It is possible that there may sometimes be circumstances which would raise that implication, but the facts here do not make it out. We have been referred to Baillie v. Mondigliani (ubi sup.), as establishing that the produce of the goods is equivalent to the goods themselves, but that view is corrected by Hunter v. Prinsep (ubi sup.), which shows that one can imply a contract in that way only where the captain is able and willing to carry on the cargo, but the charterer accepts it short of the port of destination.

There was no option in the charterer here. The shipowner has disposed of the charterer's property, and I think the true view is, as Mr. Benjamin contends, that it is a forced loan—that the money for which the goods were sold is to be regarded as a loan, which the charterer is entitled to recover, if he chooses to take it in that shape. The cases show that in the event of the ship reaching the port of destination the charterer could claim an indemnity, but he only would do so where the goods would have fetched more if they had been carried on to the port of destination and sold there. Receiving the money does not amount to the same thing as receiving the goods, or establish an implication that the charterer is bound to pay freight pro rata. On the other point, it is unnecessary to say more than that I agree with the views which Mr. Benjamin has put forward in his argument. The rule must be made absolute.

EX. DIV.] STONE AND OTHERS v. OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF GOTHENBURG. [EX. DIV.]

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

In the first place, the goods were never delivered to the defendants at all, but were dealt with in another way, being sold by the captain in order to provide for the cost of repairing the ship. If receiving the money by the captain amounted to a loan by the defendants to the plaintiff, the plaintiff's case fails. We cannot consider where the money came from; but if we get at the principle of the thing, the transaction is a loan, and there is an end of the plaintiff's case. I think this is the true view, and that the rule ought to be made absolute.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Oliver and Botterell.

Solicitors for defendants, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Reported by H. LEIGH and PAWSON, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, Jan. 19, 1876.

STONE AND OTHERS v. THE OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY (LIMITED) OF GOTHENBURG.

Marine insurance—Voyage policy—Leave to go to—Change of destination—Termination of risk—Return of premium.

A ship was insured for a voyage from Liverpool to Philadelphia and the United Kingdom. Subsequently by a memorandum endorsed upon the policy, leave was given to proceed to Baltimore instead of Philadelphia. The ship discharged her cargo at Baltimore, and sailed with a fresh cargo for Antwerp. After she had so sailed a further memorandum was endorsed upon the policy, stating that in consideration of an additional premium it was agreed that the ship should go to Antwerp. Orders were received by the captain when in the outer dock, on her way to the inner dock, which is the usual place of discharge at Antwerp, ordering him to sail for Leith. Whilst on the latter voyage the ship was totally lost by perils of the sea.

Held, that under the policy and memorandum the ship had the option of going to Antwerp or the United Kingdom, or to the United Kingdom and then to Antwerp, and that the voyage from Antwerp to Leith was not within the risk.

Held, further, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any return of premium.

This was an action upon a policy of reinsurance, in which a verdict was entered for the plaintiffs for 300*l.* subject to the following special case.

The plaintiffs are underwriters in London, and the defendants an insurance company established at Gothenburg, but carrying on business in London.

On the 18th March 1873 the owners of a vessel called the Ravenworth Castle insured her with the plaintiffs for twelve months.

Subsequently the plaintiffs effected a policy of reinsurance with the defendants' agents in London of the same vessel for "300*l.*, at 30*s.* per cent, 4*l.* 10*s.* on hull and machinery, subject to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy, and to pay as may be paid thereon, including risk of craft to and from the vessel a sum of 300*l.* from Liverpool to Philadelphia and the United Kingdom against all risks which, according to Lloyd's rules, can fall upon the company, but subject to the conditions specially expressed and agreed upon in the policy."

After this policy of reinsurance had been made with the defendants' agents, the plaintiffs' agent heard that the ship was going to Baltimore instead of Philadelphia, and at his request the defendants' agents indorsed on the policy of reinsurance the following memorandum:—"It is hereby agreed to allow the vessel Ravenworth Castle to proceed to Baltimore instead of Philadelphia. London, 1st Nov. 1873."

After the making of the last mentioned indorsement the vessel sailed with a cargo for Baltimore. At the time she sailed her destination beyond Baltimore was not fixed. She duly arrived at Baltimore, and having discharged her cargo, she received from the charterer's agents a cargo of wheat.

The greater part of this cargo had been sold for Antwerp by the charterer, and was deliverable to his order at Antwerp.

On the 11th Dec. the vessel sailed from Baltimore to Antwerp without any intention on the part of the captain, owners, or charterers of proceeding to the United Kingdom on that voyage, and with the full intention of proceeding direct to Antwerp as her port of discharge in fulfilment of the charter-party. At the time she left Baltimore no destination further than Antwerp had been fixed upon, nor was any such destination fixed upon until the 1st Jan. 1874 when she had arrived at Antwerp, and while in the outer dock on her way into the inner dock the usual place for discharging her cargo.

On the 2nd Jan. the plaintiffs' agent learnt that the vessel and her cargo had sailed from Baltimore to Antwerp, and upon that same day the following memorandum was agreed upon between him and the defendants' agent, and indorsed on the policy of reinsurance, and initialled on behalf of the defendants.

"In consideration of an additional premium of 7*s.* 6*d.* per cent. being paid hereon, and which we acknowledge to have received, it is hereby agreed to allow the vessel the Ravenworth Castle to go to Antwerp. 2nd Jan. 1874."

At the time of the making and initialling the memorandum, neither the defendants nor their agents had any knowledge of the destination of the vessel, or the route she had taken, except what they derived from the entries in Lloyd's lists, and the fact that they had learnt that the vessel might perhaps go to Antwerp, and the plaintiffs and their agents, and the defendants and their agents, believed that the vessel was then at sea. During the negotiation a conversation took place between the plaintiffs' and the defendants' agents which was tendered in evidence, but rejected subject to the opinion of the court as to its admissibility. The ordinary rates of insurance from American ports to Antwerp are the same as the rates from American ports to the United Kingdom.

The reception of this fact in evidence was objected to by the defendants' counsel, and the fact was inserted in the case subject to the opinion of the court as to its admissibility in evidence.

EX. DIV.] STONE AND OTHERS v. OCEAN MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY OF GOTHENBURG. [EX. DIV.]

Upon the 3rd Jan. a telegram was sent to the captain ordering the ship to sail for Leith. The telegram was received by the captain when the vessel was in the outer dock on her way into the inner dock, the usual place of discharge at Antwerp. On account of the state of the river at Antwerp, the vessel was unable to leave the dock until the 7th Jan. On that day she sailed from Antwerp for Leith, and while on the voyage to that place was totally lost by the perils of the sea. The plaintiffs paid to the owners of the vessel their proportion of the loss under the original policy of insurance.

The first question for the opinion of the court is whether or not the defendants are liable to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of 300*l*.

If the court should be of opinion that the defendants are not so liable, then a further question arises, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a return of the premiums of 4*l*. 10*s*., and 1*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*. on either of them.

Benjamin, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce for the plaintiffs, contended that the effect of the policy and memoranda was that the vessel might go from Baltimore to Antwerp and thence to the United Kingdom. The words "go to" are larger words than the words "touch at." If Antwerp is to be taken as the final port of discharge, then the vessel had arrived there and was in the outer dock before the memorandum was made, and the risk had then terminated, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover back the additional premium. And the fact that the premiums between Baltimore and Antwerp, and Baltimore and the United Kingdom are the same is favourable to my view. He cited

Duer on Insurance, vol. 1 p. 171.

Preston v. Greenwood, 4 Douglas p. 28.

Butt, Q.C., Mansel Jones and Stubbs for the defendants, argued that the strict meaning of the policy was that the vessel might go to the United Kingdom or to Antwerp, or that it might possibly mean that she might go to Antwerp by way of the United Kingdom, but that it could not mean that she might go to Antwerp first and afterwards to the United Kingdom. Neither are they entitled to a return of the premium, for the voyage cannot be said to be at an end until the vessel has arrived at the usual place of discharge, which at Antwerp was in the inner dock. See Anonymous Case, 1 Skinner, 243; Arnould on Insurance, 4th edit., p. 389.

Gainsford Bruce replied.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the defendants.

It was at first contended that under these words "from Liverpool to Philadelphia and the United Kingdom" the ship might go on some independent voyage which had nothing to do with Philadelphia, as, for instance, to the Cape of Good Hope; but that point has been given up. The case really turns on the construction to be put on the policy and the two memoranda indorsed upon it. These in my opinion must be read together without reference to the conversation set out in the case; and without reference to the fact of the premium being the same to England as to Antwerp, for the argument attempted to be founded upon that has been answered, one answer being that it was intended that there should be a positive increase of risk. I am also inclined to doubt whether we ought to consider the amount of the premium at all in order to see what was the risk. I think, therefore, that we must construe these three documents without any reference to evidence of that description.

Now several constructions have been put upon them. One is that the parties meant that the vessel might go to Antwerp instead of to the United Kingdom; another, that she might go to Antwerp by way of the United Kingdom. It is not necessary to discuss here which of these interpretations is right, because neither of them would protect the plaintiff. According to the plaintiff's counsel the vessel might go to Antwerp and afterwards sail for England, either having previously discharged her cargo at Antwerp and taken in ballast, or with her cargo, and that the voyage to England would be within the risk. I am quite certain that no such thing was in the contemplation of the parties, nor is it the proper meaning of the words. Vessels that are intended to discharge in England, very rarely, I should say, go to Antwerp for orders. All we have to do is to construe the memorandum which allowed this vessel to go to Antwerp when it was already open to her to go to the United Kingdom. I think this allowed her the alternative of going to Antwerp or of going to the United Kingdom, or possibly of going first to the United Kingdom and afterwards to Antwerp, but not to permit her to go to Antwerp first and sail thence to the United Kingdom. I think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover on the policy.

Then the question is whether they can recover back their additional premium, and that to my mind must depend upon whether the voyage was continuing or had come to an end at the time of making the memorandum. In my judgment the voyage was not ended. The vessel's voyage was from the port of departure to her moorings at the port of destination. What is the end of a voyage may differ under different circumstances, but here there is a statement in the case that on the 3rd Jan. when the telegram was received by the captain the vessel was in the outer dock on her way to the inner dock. This to my mind is conclusive. If the policy is treated as an insurance to Antwerp it must surely be treated as lasting up to the time when she came to a state of rest. If she had arrived at the terminus and was waiting her turn to unload, she might have finished her voyage, but in this particular case I think the voyage was not finished. Something remained to be done which was part of the voyage or certainly part of the adventure. The matter may be tested in this way. Supposing the sailors had been hired for the voyage would they have been entitled to leave the vessel in the outer dock? I should say decidedly not. I quite agree with the statement in Arnould on Insurance (4th edit. p. 389) that where there is no clause as to mooring in good safety for any given time, if a vessel got to her port and was in moorings waiting her turn to unload, she would have finished her voyage; but that is not the case here. Further than this even if the voyage had finished, I do not think the plaintiffs are entitled to a return of the premium. The vessel may have been damaged on her voyage; if the facts had been known, it would have been known that there was no risk, but they were not known, and therefore the underwriters took on themselves the hazard of an unknown matter.

Ex. Div.]

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[Ex. Ch.]

I think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are neither entitled to recover on the policy nor to a return of the premium.

AMPHLETT, B.—I am of the same opinion.

There was originally a time policy covering voyages to any part of the world subject to certain restrictions. Before the re-insurance was made the places to which the ship was not to go were altered. That no doubt increased the risk and the plaintiffs were minded to decrease it by re-insurance. They did not, however, take the re-insurance to cover the same risk, but the risk so insured against was to cover a voyage policy only. Then a memorandum is introduced in which it is said that the vessel is to proceed to Baltimore instead of to Philadelphia; it still, however, remained a re-insurance for a particular voyage. Then it appears that the vessel was intended to proceed to Antwerp, and the plaintiffs having learnt this, determined to make a corresponding alteration in the counter insurance and they went to the defendants and got this memorandum. "It is hereby agreed to allow the vessel to go to Antwerp," and it is upon this the question turns. This appears to me to be different from liberty to touch at Antwerp, as was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs, for in that case the vessel might go beyond that port. The intention of allowing the vessel to go to Antwerp might be either that she should go there direct from Baltimore, or by way of the United Kingdom; most probably the latter. Either way, Antwerp is substituted for a port of the United Kingdom as the place at which her arrival terminates the risk.

Then on the question whether the additional premium ought to be returned because the vessel had arrived at the port of discharge before the additional premium was paid (like the case of insuring the life of a man who was dead at the time, where there is an entire failure of consideration) Antwerp being the port of discharge, the vessel cannot be said to have safely arrived at her port of discharge till she is safely moored in the dock at Antwerp for the purpose of discharging her cargo. It is found in the case that the captain was, in fact, in the act of moving to the usual place of discharge, and there was, therefore, some risk still remaining which prevents the plaintiff recovering the return of the premium. In Phillips on Insurance paragraph 969 it is said that "the risk on a vessel under a policy of insurance to a place generally without any provision as to her safety there, terminates on the vessel being safely anchored at her port of destination, in the usual place for discharging her cargo." And this I think is the correct rule. The defendants are, therefore, entitled to our judgment on both points.

HUDDLESTON, B.—I am of the same opinion.

I think the insurance was from America to the United Kingdom and from thence to Antwerp, where it ceased.

Now as to the other point, the case of Samuel v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company (8 B. & C. 119), which has been handed up to me, is almost conclusive. The question there was whether the voyage had terminated under a policy by which the vessel was insured until she arrived at London and was moored at anchor twenty-four hours in safety. The evidence was that she arrived at Deptford and was moored alongside a king's ship, near the dock gates of the King's Dock, where she was to deliver her cargo. There was evidence that many vessels laden with timber discharged their cargoes at the place where the vessel was moored, and upon this it was contended that the place where she was moored must be considered as the place of her destination, in which case she had been in safety for twenty-four hours before the loss. Lord Tenterden, however, said it was manifest that there never was an intention to discharge the cargo there, and so that ground of defence failed. That seems to me to be an authority distinctly applicable to the present case, to show that the voyage had not come to an end when the vessel was in the outer dock at Antwerp, as there was no intention to discharge there.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitor for plaintiffs, W. Flux.

Solicitors for defendants, Druce, Son, and Jackson.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-law.

May 10 and 11, 1875, and Feb. 26, 1876.

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Policy of marine insurance—Risk or adventure—Time policy—Member of society by estoppel—Agreement to decide disputes—Condition precedent—30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, s. 7.

Plaintiff had an equitable interest in a ship, and afterwards received a transfer of the legal interest from the registered owner, who was a member of the defendants' society. The owner insured the ship with the defendants in the plaintiff's name by a policy incorporating the rules of the society, and providing among other things that every insurance effected should be valid and binding from noon on that day until noon of the 1st January then next following. By the rules persons became members only by signing the articles, and none but members could own their ships. The rules also required certain notice upon sale of a ship or shares thereof. The plaintiff had never signed the articles nor given notice of the transfer to him of the legal interest, but had paid contributions claimed from him as owner by the society. It was also provided by the rules that the directors should decide claims and disputes of members, and that aggrieved members might appeal for reconsideration of decisions, first to the directors themselves, and then to the whole society; and also that no member should be allowed to bring or have any action, suit, or proceeding, or other remedy against the society for any claims or demands upon or in respect of the society or the members thereof, except as therein provided. Upon loss of the ship plaintiff was refused his claim upon this policy by the directors twice, but made no appeal to the whole society.

Held, by the Exchequer Chamber (affirming the Queen's Bench), that the policy incorporated the rules so as to be a sufficient compliance with s. 7 of the Stamp Act 1867; and that the defendants were estopped from disputing the plaintiff's claim.

EX. CH.]

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[EX. CH.]

interest in the policy, and his right as member to claim upon it.

Held, also, by the majority of the Exchequer Chamber (overruling the Queen's Bench), that the plaintiff was not bound by the decision of the directors; but that this action was maintainable.

THIS was an appeal from the unanimous decision in the defendants' favour of Blackburn, Mellor, and Lush, JJ. on a special case stated by order of Nisi Prius.

The special case and the exhibits are fully set out in the report of the case before the court below: (ante, vol. 2, p. 469.)

May 10 and 11, 1875.—Cohen, Q.C. (with him Kenelm Digby), argued for plaintiff, the appellant.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. (with him B. T. Williams), for defendants.

The arguments are sufficiently alluded to in the judgments of the court.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 26, 1876.—AMPHLETT, B.—The facts are sufficiently stated in the case and exhibits.

Two points were relied upon in the argument before us on behalf of the defendants: First, that the plaintiff was insured, if at all, upon the terms of the articles; secondly, that under articles 39, 83, and 84, it was made a condition precedent to his right to bring an action that the amount of his claim should be determined by the directors.

On the first point, in my judgment, the defendants are right. The plaintiff knew that he was dealing with a registered society, and the articles are referred to in the contract signed by the directors in a manner which, I think, clearly shows that both parties intended to contract on the footing of the articles. In fact unless the articles are considered (as I think they ought to be) incorporated, the contract would be altogether invalid for (among other reasons) the omission herein of any enumeration of the perils insured against.

On the second point I think that, upon the true construction of the articles, it must be taken to have been the intention of the parties to give exclusive jurisdiction to the directors to settle all claims between the society and its members, and the question whether an agreement to that effect is void as being against the policy of the law is in my judgment concluded by the decision in the House of Lords in Scott v. Avery 5 H. L. Cas. 811). It is true that in the present case the directors are to decide not the mere amount of the claims, but also any dispute that might arise respecting insurances; but so they were in Scott v. Avery, and both the learned Lords who decided that case held such extension of the power of the directors to be immaterial. Under these circumstances it is not necessary to consider at length the subsequent decisions of the inferior courts. I may, however, refer to Tredwen v. Tolman (1 H. & C. 72), Elliott v. Royal Exchange Insurance Company (L. Rep. 2 Ex. 237), and Dawson v. Fitzgerald (L. Rep. 9 Ex. 7), the first of which is, in my judgment, undistinguishable from the present case.

I think, therefore, that this action cannot be maintained, unless it can be shown that the conduct of the directors in the (so-called) arbitration has made it inequitable to compel the plaintiff to submit his claim to their determination. Hence the conduct of the directors in this aspect has become very material, and requires a minute examination. The facts are to be found in paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 of the case, which are as follows: (11) "On the 2nd Dec. 1870, the plaintiff sent in to the defendants a claim for the amount of the insurance of the Hermione, viz., 1000*l.*, and soon after Daniel Davies (who was the master of the ship when she was lost) was requested to attend a meeting of the board of directors on the 6th Jan. 1871. He attended accordingly, and was questioned as to the circumstances of the loss of the vessel. The directors expressed to Davies their opinion that his account of the wreck was not satisfactory, and that the loss was not shown to have been caused by perils of the seas. When he had withdrawn from the room, they came to the resolution 'That the owners of the Hermione had no claim upon the society.' (12.) The plaintiff had no notice of the meeting, and neither Davies nor the plaintiff had notice of this resolution, or was required to attend the directors on any subsequent occasion. (13.) On the 6th April 1871 a notice signed by ten members of the association, but not signed by the plaintiff or Davies, was sent to the defendants' office. This notice was submitted to the next quarterly meeting of the directors. No notice to attend was given either to the plaintiff or Davies, and in their absence the directors, without further inquiry, came to the same resolution as before, viz., that the owners of the Hermione had no claim upon the society." In my opinion, these proceedings of the directors were unjustifiable, and can only be accounted for, consistently with honesty and good faith, by supposing that they had mistaken their real position, and that being agents of the society, they supposed they had no duty to perform towards the plaintiff. It is beyond doubt, however, that when they undertook the delicate task of adjudicating between their own society and a member, their functions, if not strictly the same, were analogous to those of an arbitrator, and they were bound to act judicially and with perfect fairness and impartiality between the parties: McIntosh v. Great Western Railway (2 De G. & Sm. 758). To come to a decision, under these circumstances, in favour of their own society and against the plaintiff, without hearing him or giving him an opportunity of being heard, was contrary to every principle of justice, and ought not I think to be held by any court of law or equity to be binding upon him.

Moreover, I think that it would be unreasonable to compel the plaintiff now to submit his claim again to the directors, they having already prejudged the case in his absence. It is hardly likely that, after what has occurred, the directors could now approach the subject with that even and unbiassed mind which is, as the Vice-Chancellor said in Kemp v. Rose (1 Giff. 264), "essential to the validity of every judicial proceeding." If the matter had rested only on the first meeting of the directors on the 6th Jan. 1871, it might have been suggested that the directors, having had no notice of the transfer of the vessel to the plaintiff, considered Davies as the owner, and thought it sufficient to have him before them; but it did not rest there, for no notice of that resolution was ever given either to Davies or to the plaintiff, nor was any notice given to either of them of the subsequent quarterly meeting to which the notice signed by ten members was submitted, and at which the same resolution was confirmed in the absence of both. I infer from these facts that the attendance of Davies, who, as I said before, was master of the lost vessel, was requested as a witness and not as the supposed owner, and his presence therefore at the first meeting does not alter the view I have taken of the directors' conduct in the matter.

[Ex. Ch.]

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[Ex. Ch.]

But it is said that the determination of the directors having been made a condition precedent to bringing an action, a court of law at least cannot interfere, as that would be making a new contract for the parties. I think there is a fallacy in this argument. Courts of equity have no more power to make new contracts for parties than courts of law, and yet they would undoubtedly interfere when a contract is performed on one side, and the mode agreed upon for ascertaining the amount to be paid by the other has failed in any way without the plaintiff's fault. Put the simple case, which is in principle the same as that we are considering:—A. contracts to do work for B., the price to be determined by the engineer of B. The work is done, and before the price is determined, the engineer by some act of his own, not necessarily fraudulent, becomes incapacitated to act as arbitrator. I cannot persuade myself that courts of law are powerless to prevent the gross injustice of B. having the benefit of the work without compensation to A., except by the inconvenient and often ineffectual course of bringing an action for neglect of duty against the engineer and his employer. To give direct redress in such a case seems to me only another application of the well-known principle that a man shall not take advantage of his own wrong, under which even precedent conditions in their strictest sense have been held to be discharged where performance was prevented by the defendant himself. See Comyn's Digest, tit. "Condition," l. 6, and the case of Hotham v. The East India Company (1 T. R. 638). Courts of equity have concurrent jurisdiction, even in respect of legal contracts, with courts of law in cases of fraud, and they appear to have assumed jurisdiction in the sort of cases we are considering, on the ground that where the acts of the defendants, which prevented the amount of the plaintiff's claims being ascertained in the agreed mode, were not in themselves fraudulent, yet they would become fraudulent if used for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's rights. (See McIntosh v. Great Western Railway (2 De G. & Sm. 758), and on appeal (2 Mac. & G. 74). It most frequently happens that the circumstances of these cases are complicated, and can be more conveniently investigated in a court of equity than a court of law; but in a case like the present, where a court of law can do complete justice by simply disallowing a defence founded on the failure of the agreed arbitration through the acts of the directors, the convenience is quite the other way; and I can see no reason why a court of law should not determine the matter themselves.

For these reasons, I think that the plaintiff can sustain his action, and there is no difficulty about the amount, as it is found in the case that the defendants now admit, contrary to what their directors had determined, a total loss of the vessel by perils of the sea. The decision of the court below is, therefore, in my opinion erroneous, and ought to be reversed; and judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for 1000*l.* with interest and costs of suit.

POLLOCK, B. delivered the judgment of ARCHBOLD, J. and himself.—This action is brought by the plaintiff as owner of a vessel called the Hermione, against the defendants, who are a limited company for mutual insurance of ships, to recover upon an insurance effected with the defendants, whereby the Hermione was insured from the 24th Feb. 1870 to noon of the 1st Jan. following.

The defendants admit that the Hermione was insured, and also that there was a total loss as above stated; but they contend that the plaintiff can maintain no action against the company until he has complied with the company's articles which relate to the adjustment and settlement of losses. The plaintiff alleges that the document by which the insurance was effected gives him a right of action independently of these articles. The Hermione was bought by one Daniel Davies in 1868, to whom the plaintiff made advances to enable him to purchase her; and in Jan. 1869 she was insured with the defendants by Davies, who directed that the policy should be made out in the name of the plaintiff, and handed to him. In Jan. 1870, Davies being absent with the ship, the plaintiff applied for a renewal of the insurance, and on the 24th Feb. he paid the annual premium and duty, amounting to 17*l.* 15*s.*, and obtained the document usually issued to members insuring. This document is headed "Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society (Limited), registered pursuant to the Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89." It contains the rates for various insurances, rules as to periods of sailing, and other matters; and at the close of one relating to allowance for repairs is a reference, "vide article 70." It states also "That every insurance effected shall be valid and binding from twelve o'clock of the noon on that day on which the insurance shall be effected until twelve o'clock of the noon of the first day of Jan. next following." The document ends as follows:

This is to certify that Mr. Evan Edwards, as ship's husband for the Hermione, 162 tons, A 1 registered, whereof is master at the present time Daniel Davies, has this day paid 17*l.* 10*s.* for the insurance of 52 shares, 1000*l.*, on the said vessel. Value of whole ship, as per rule for this class, 17*l.* 10*s.* per ton, 12*l.* 15*s.* 1000*l.*

Signature of { J. N. EVANS, Chairman.
Directors { W. J. REES.
DAVID JONES.

£1000.	£ s.
Premium...	17 10	Secretary, JOHN JAMES
Duty .....	0 5	Treasurer, THOMAS JONES
	£17 15

In March 1870 application was made to the plaintiff for a further sum of 17*l.* 10*s.*, being his contribution to the losses of the year 1869, payable in respect of the ship Hermione at the rate of 100 per cent. and this sum was paid by him; and in Oct. 1870 a further call was made, and paid by the plaintiff for losses of the year 1870. On the 14th May 1870 Davies, by bill of sale, duly registered, transferred the Hermione to the plaintiff, and notice of this transfer was given to the defendants. In Nov. 1870 the Hermione was wrecked and became a total loss. Except by the reference, "vide article 70," and the words "as per rule for this class," there is no allusion to any articles or rules other than those contained in the documents dated the 24th Feb. 1870, and the mentioned rule is contained in the articles repeated in the document. The defendants' suit was, however, governed by a memorandum of association, and by articles of association (

CH.]

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[EX. CH.]

1864, which contained in all 98 articles, provide for the constitution of the society, ties of its directors, rates of insurance, and matters usually found in the rules of a mutual insurance society; and many of those relating to the terms of insurance are repeated in the document which was given to the plaintiff on paying his premium in Feb. 1870. Amongst not so repeated are the following: Memorandum of Association, article 3 "The objects for the company is established are the mutual insurance of ships belonging to members of the society, and the doing of all such other things incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects." Articles of Association, article 3: "Every person shall be deemed to have agreed to become a member of the company who signs any ship or share in a ship, in pursuance of the regulations hereinafter contained." Article 4: "That the directors shall have full power to enter into and execute, and also to modify, alter, amend, or vary any contract or agreement respecting the business in which the society may be interested, to adjust, settle, and decide all claims and demands upon the society by the members thereof, and to decide and determine all disputes, controversies, and matters arising between the society and its members concerning insurances, claims upon or liabilities by or to the society, concerning the laws, rules, regulations, and orders of the society; and the decision of the directors shall be final and conclusive, as well as the decision of the society as the members thereof; and no member of the society shall be allowed to bring or take any action, suit, or proceeding or other remedy against the society or the members thereof for any claims or demands upon or in respect of the society or the members thereof, as is provided by these presents." Article 5: "That in all cases of any vessel or share insured by the society being lost, wrecked, damaged, burnt, abandoned, captured, damaged, injured by being run down or otherwise injured by any other vessel, the owner, master, or some of the crew shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, give notice thereof to the secretary of the society, who shall thereupon by the several directors summon a board of directors on the first convenient day, not exceeding fourteen days from the receipt of such notice, and the directors shall proceed to examine the vessel, master, and mate, and such of the crew as they shall think necessary, as to the cause of loss or damage, and shall make such further inquiries and take such measures and make such orders and regulations thereon as in their opinion the case shall require; and the owner of any vessel so lost, wrecked, stranded, abandoned, captured, damaged, or injured, shall not commence any repairs except such as may be deemed necessary for the immediate use of such vessel, or settle or compromise any claim or disputes, or prosecute or defend any action or suit in relation thereto, without the consent of the directors." Article 84: "If any member of the society shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the directors, as to the settlement of any loss or damage sustained by him, or as to any claim or other matter lost, adjusted, or decided by the directors, and such member so dissatisfied shall procure ten members of the society, not being directors, to join with him in a written requisition to the directors to reconsider and revise their decision, the directors shall thereupon call a board of directors of not less than ten, and reconsider and revise such decision; and in case such member shall be dissatisfied with the further decision of such board of directors, such member so dissatisfied, together with twenty other members of the society, may by writing under their hands require the secretary to summon a special general meeting of the society to be held at any time not exceeding fourteen days from the receipt of such writing by the secretary; and such special general meeting shall have full power to confirm or vary the decision of the directors, and whatever shall be decided by the special general meeting shall be final and binding as well upon the society as upon all the parties interested in the decision." No copy of these articles was furnished to the plaintiff; he had not read them, nor did he know their contents. It was contended for the defendants that this was immaterial, because, by the Companies Act 1862, s. 16, the articles of association, when registered, are binding on members as if each member had signed and sealed them, and there was a covenant contained in this on his part to conform to all the regulations contained in them. This contention in my judgment fails, for section 23 defines members to be persons who have agreed to be members, and whose names are entered on the register of members. The plaintiff's name was not so entered, and he is not made a member by the statute.

Under these circumstances the first question that arises is, what was the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants? and I will consider this at present apart from the Stamp Act. It appears to me to be extremely doubtful whether a complete contract of insurance could, under any circumstances, be gathered from the document dated 24th Feb. 1870, taken by itself. At best it is rather in the nature of a receipt for premium than a policy, and it contains no covenant or contract for payment. But, however this may be, it is, I think, clear that those who signed it had no authority to bind the company to any contract of insurance other than what is contemplated and provided for by the articles. If, therefore, the document in question stood alone, the result would be that there would be no contract with the company. The document is, however, headed "Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society (Limited)," and, therefore, denotes that the object of the society is the mutual insurance of ships belonging to members. It has reference to one article not contained in it, and in its form it resembles rather a certificate that a contract exists than a contract itself. From what is expressed, and also from what is absent, the plaintiff must, I think, have been aware that it did not contain all the terms of the proposed insurance as to adjustment and settlement, and the defendants are entitled to present to the plaintiff the dilemma that either there is no contract, or the contract is that which they admit, viz., an insurance subject to the articles. We have power to draw inferences of fact, and the proper inference appears to me to be, that the plaintiff has entered into a contract, which is evidenced by the document dated the 24th Feb. 1870, and the articles of association. When the latter are referred to, what is deficient in the certificate is supplied, for although there is no undertaking to pay to the assured upon a loss so as to give an immediate right of action, as indeed there never is by the rules of a mutual insurance society; Articles 39, 83, and 84, provide for a member who has any claim giving notice thereof, for the summoning of a board of directors to examine into it, and for their decision thereon; and, further, that if the member is dissatisfied, he may, if ten other members will join him, summon a second board of directors to reconsider their decision, and if he is dissatisfied with the decision on appeal, he may, if twenty members will join him, appeal to a special general meeting, who may confirm or vary the decision.

[EX. CH.]

EDWARDS v. ABERATRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[EX. CH.]

It was strongly argued on behalf of the plaintiff, that the effect of the decision of the court below would be to deprive the plaintiff of his right to resort to the courts of law to enforce his rights, and the well-known arguments against ousting their jurisdiction were resorted to. If, however, the view I take of the articles be correct, no such objection arises, because their effect is not to substitute a special tribunal to deal with an existing cause of action, but to provide by the contract between the parties, upon which alone any claim of the plaintiff is based, a mode by which that claim shall be established, and which must be pursued as a condition precedent to any right to payment arising. There is no more displacement of a cause of action or ousting of jurisdiction than there is when parties agree that a builder shall be paid such a sum as an architect shall name, and the case comes within the principle acted on in Scott v. Avery (5 H. L. Cas. 811), Tredwen v. Holman (1 H. & C. 72), and Elliott v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company (L. Rep. 2 Ex. 237), and not within that by which the court was governed in Horton v. Sayer (4 H. & N. 643). The distinction between these cases is well pointed out by Bramwell, B., in Tredwen v. Holman, where he says: "If a tenant covenants that he will cultivate the devised land in a husbandlike manner, and also covenants that if any dispute shall arise in respect thereof, it shall be referred to arbitration, an action may nevertheless be maintained; but where the covenant is to pay such damages as shall be ascertained by an arbitrator, no action will lie until the arbitrators have given their decision." And, again, in similar language in Dawson v. Fitzgerald (L. Rep. 9 Ex. 10).

Before leaving this part of the subject, I must not omit, however, to notice the construction of article 39, that was pressed upon us by Mr. Cohen, as counsel for the plaintiff. The article provides that no member shall be allowed to bring any action, suit or proceeding, or other remedy against the society or the members thereof for any claims or demands upon or in respect of the society or the members thereof, "except as is provided by these presents." He argued that these words were intended to preclude a member from bringing any action against the society, even where his loss has been adjusted by the directors, and they decline to pay. It appears to me that, although the language used is not very clear or accurate, the intention of the parties is limited to requiring that members having claims on the society shall proceed according to the mode of proof pointed out by the articles, and that if all conditions precedent were fulfilled, and the decision of the directors was obtained in favour of the claimant for a specific amount, an action would well lie against the society if they refused to pay it.

I have hitherto dealt with the question apart from the Stamp Act, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23. Section 7 of this Act provides that "no contract or agreement for sea insurance shall be valid unless the same is expressed in a policy, and every policy shall specify the particular risk or adventure, the names of the subscribers or underwriters, and the sum or sums insured." And by sect. 4 the word "policy" is declared to mean "any instrument whereby a contract or agreement for any sea insurance is made or entered into." The object of this enactment is to prevent persons obtaining the benefit of a marine insurance without paying stamp duty. It clearly does not make any particular form of policy compulsory, else it would have referred to as essential the form mentioned in sect. 5 and schedule E, which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are thereby bound to provide; nor does it forbid companies or underwriters importing into their stamped policies, by reference or otherwise, terms which are not expressed in them, provided the risk and other matters mentioned in sect. 7 are contained in a stamped policy. It seems to me, therefore, that the document dated the 24th Feb. 1870, satisfies the requirements of and is sufficient as a policy within the Stamp Act, although terms relating to the adjustment and settlement of any loss that may arise under it which are not contained in it, and yet are binding on the plaintiff. To apply to this case the well-known principle acted on in Boydell v. Drummond (11 East, 181) would be, I think, unnecessary and unreasonable, for there is no such reason for the exclusion of parol evidence to connect the various documents which are intended together to constitute the contract or policy of insurance, as there is in the case of contracts within the Statute of Frauds.

Although, therefore, the inartificial manner in which the policy and rules are drawn creates some difficulty, I find it satisfactory to arrive at a conclusion which supports what was the substance of the transaction, and prevents the plaintiff setting up a contract which it is obvious he could not himself have contemplated, and which certainly could never have been intended by the defendants, as it would have been a departure from the fundamental principles and the daily practice of the company.

For these reasons the judgment of the Queen's Bench should, in my opinion, be affirmed.

BRETT, J.—This was an action to recover a total loss on the vessel Hermione.

The vessel was originally purchased by David Davies, the plaintiff's brother-in-law, in Dec. 1868. She was mortgaged to the plaintiff, who eventually, in May 1870, became the registered owner. In Jan. 1869, Davies effected an insurance on the vessel with the defendants, directing that the policy should be made out in the plaintiff's name and should be handed to him. The document sued on as a policy was forwarded by the defendants to the plaintiff. It was stated in the case to be "the usual form of policy issued by the defendants to their members." In Jan. 1870 the plaintiff applied for renewal of the insurance, paid the premium, and received an acknowledgment in his own name. In March 1870, the defendants applied to

EX. CH.]

EDWARDS v. ABBEYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[EX. CH.]

plaintiff by way of call for the contribution in respect of the Hermione to the losses of the year 1869, and the plaintiff paid the call. The same occurred in Oct. 1870. The vessel was registered in the plaintiff's name in May 1870. She was wrecked and became a total loss in Nov. 1870. In Dec. 1870 the plaintiff sent in his claim. On the 6th Jan. 1871, the directors of the defendants' company summoned Davies before them, who was captain of the vessel at the time of the wreck, and having heard his account, resolved that it was not shown that the vessel was lost by perils of the sea, and that the owners of the Hermione had no claim upon the society. No notice of this meeting or of the resolution was given to the plaintiff, and he was not heard, nor was any one on his behalf, before the resolution was passed. In April 1871 ten members signed a notice as to this decision, which notice was referred to a quarterly meeting of the society. The meeting confirmed the resolution. No notice of this meeting or appeal was given to the plaintiff, and he was not heard upon it. The case then stated that the defendants now admitted the total loss of the vessel by perils of the sea, but contended that the document upon which the plaintiff brings the action does not specify the risk, and is therefore void as a policy of insurance under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, ss. 7 and 9. They further, as the case stated, contended that the rules and articles of the association are to be treated as incorporated with the policy, and that under the rules the resolutions come to by the directors were a decision upon the plaintiff's claim, and that not having been appealed from in the manner pointed out by rule 84, the decision had become final and binding. The court was to have power to draw all such inferences of fact as should have been drawn by a jury, and to amend so as to enable the plaintiff to recover all or any of the moneys paid by him to the defendants.

Upon the argument before us, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that there was a valid contract of insurance, that the contract was to be found solely in the document of March 1869, that such document did not incorporate the articles and rules of the association; that whether it did or not, the plaintiff's right to maintain the action was not abrogated, for that rule 39 was no answer to the action, being an attempt to set up a private tribunal to try a right of action accrued, and that no such decision by the directors or the meeting as was relied upon could affect the plaintiff, who had not been summoned or heard when it was arrived at.

It was admitted on behalf of the defendants that there was a contract of insurance contained in a valid policy, and that there was a total loss, and that the plaintiff was a member of the association; but it was argued that the policy consisted not only of the document of March 1869—which, if it stood alone, was no policy at all, because in it the risk was not sufficiently specified—but of that document and the articles and rules; that by the rules the plaintiff was bound to submit his claim to the decision of the directors, subject to an appeal to a quarterly and a general meeting; that no right of action accrued to any member in respect of a loss unless he could obtain from the directors or the association a decision in his favour that his claim was valid and to a certain amount; that the plaintiff had not obtained such a decision; that the adverse decisions of the directors and the quarterly meeting were final; and that the plaintiff therefore never had a cause of action against the defendants.

Several points argued in the Court of Queen's Bench were not urged before us.

The questions before us are: First, is the document of March 1869 to stand alone as the policy, or are it and the articles and rules, or some of them, to be read together, and so to form a policy in writing? Secondly, if the document of March 1869 is to stand alone, is it a valid policy in writing? Thirdly, do the rules, if they are to be considered as no part of the policy, prevent the plaintiff from maintaining this action? Fourthly, do they prevent the plaintiff from maintaining the action, if they are to be considered as part of the policy?

As to the first question, it was argued that there is no contract of insurance here, unless it be formed by the document of March 1869; that such document contains no reference to the rules which are said to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining the action, and therefore does not incorporate them. And the case of Boydell v. Drummond (11 East, 142) was cited. That case was decided on the Statute of Frauds. The ground of decision was that separate documents in writing could not be joined together to make a memorandum in writing within that statute unless there was a sufficient reference from one writing to another contained in the documents themselves to show that they were intended to be jointly the memorandum, without being obliged to have recourse to parol evidence to show such intention; for otherwise the danger from parol evidence would arise, which it was the intention of the statute to obviate. That ground of decision is applicable only when the question is, whether there is or is not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds. It does not seem to me to be applicable to a question whether there is a sufficient policy of insurance in writing, or as to what documents form that policy. I see no reason why parol evidence should not be admitted to show what documents were intended by the parties to form an alleged contract of insurance. It seems to me in the present case obvious, as an inference of fact from the whole relation between the parties (and we have power to draw inferences of fact), that the intention was that the contract of insurance should be found not alone in the document of March 1869, but in it and such of the rules as are applicable to a contract of insurance.

Such being my opinion, it is unnecessary to determine the second question. Still my opinion is, that there is nothing in the Stamp Act to prevent the document of March 1869 from being considered as a valid policy. I agree with the interpretation of the Stamp Act contained in the judgment of Blackburn, J. in this case in the Queen's Bench.

Neither is it necessary to determine the third question. Though here, again, I should think it plain that if the articles and rules are a separate contract from the policy, no agreement in them, however strong and absolute not to sue, could prevent the plaintiff from maintaining an action on the separate policy or contract of insurance.

The fourth is therefore the main question in this case. It seems to me to raise these questions: What is the contract as to payment in case of loss? What is the stipulation as to the assured suing in

EX. CH.]

EDWARDS v. ABERATHON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[EX. CH.]

court of law or equity? What is the limit of the rule of law established by the case of Scott v. Avery? Does it prevent the maintenance of the present action?

Now as to the first, there is no express stipulation as to any payment being due in case of loss in the document of March 1869. Neither is there any in the articles of association. Those articles contain rules for the management of the society, and rules as to the making of contracts of insurance, and rules which, as I have said, form, in my opinion, parts of the contract of insurance. With the rules which deal solely with the management of the society we are not concerned. Those which are applicable to the making of contracts of insurance are rule 28, which primarily gives the power of making such contracts to the directors; rule 40, which gives authority to the directors to delegate the power of signing policies to two directors and the chairman, and enacts that no policy but one so signed shall be binding on the society; and rule 53, which adds further restrictions. These rules show that there would be no valid insurance in this case without the document of March 1869, but do not, in my opinion, prevent the incorporation into or adjunction to that document as part of the contract of such rules as are applicable to the contract. Rules which thus form part of the contract are, amongst others, rule 61, which shows that the society insures not only against total loss, but also against partial loss or damage, if to a certain amount; and rule 83, which by a necessary implication discloses the perils insured against, including loss or damage by collision. I do not doubt that rules 39 and 84 are also included in the contract, and form part of the policy. What, in my opinion, is the true construction of them I will presently state. But for the present I observe that neither of them contains any express undertaking to pay in case of loss, or to pay at any specified time. There is no rule which has any express stipulation to pay anything in case of loss. But then there never is any such express stipulation in any policy of marine insurance in ordinary form. A Lloyd's policy contains no such express stipulation. It has always been implied that a liability to indemnify arises directly there is a loss or damage by a peril insured against, unless such liability is prevented by some stipulation or condition expressed or implied in the policy. In the policy, therefore, in this case, it is to be implied that such liability to indemnify arises directly a loss or damage is caused by a peril insured against, unless the true construction of sect. 39 is that it postpones the attaching of liability to a later time, or makes it depend upon another event than a loss or damage caused by a peril insured against. The first rule applicable to events in order of time after an alleged loss or damage is rule 83. "In all cases of any vessel, &c., being lost, &c., the owner, master, or mate, or some of the crew shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, give notice thereof to the secretary, &c.; and the directors shall proceed to examine the owner, master and mate, and such of the crew as they shall think necessary, as to the cause of such loss or damage, and shall make such further inquiries, and take such measures, and make such decision and regulations thereon as in their judgment the case shall require." There is to be inquiry and decision, not merely as to the amount of loss or damage, but as to the cause of loss or damage. This seems to me to assume to give power to decide whether the loss was or was not caused by a peril insured against, so as to decide whether the society is or is not liable for the loss or damage in respect of which a claim was made. By rule 84, "if any member shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the directors," amongst other things, "as to any claim or other matter decided by the directors," he may appeal to a special general meeting. And by rule 39 the directors shall have full power, amongst other things, "to decide and determine all disputes, controversies, and matters arising between the society and members of the society concerning insurance, or claims upon, or liabilities by the society." These confirm and strengthen the view that it was intended that the directors should decide and determine not only the amount for which the society should be liable if a liability could be proved, but the question whether there was or was not any liability. And it was upon the latter view that the directors in the present case assumed to decide and determine that the society was not liable to the plaintiff.

The next question is, what is the effect endeavoured to be given by the rules to the decision of the directors or of the general meeting of the society? By rule 39, "And the decision of the directors shall be final and conclusive, as well upon the society as the members thereof." That is to say, a decision as to whether the society is or is not liable at all, is to be final and conclusive. Then the rule continues, "And no member of the society shall be allowed to bring or have any action, suit, or proceeding, or other remedy against the society, or the members thereof, for any claims or demands upon or in respect of the society or the members thereof, except as is provided by these presents." The rule then provides that the directors may, if they think fit, cause "any of such claims"—i.e. any claim upon the society concerning insurance, i.e. the whole claim—to be referred to the decision of any person practising as an average adjuster. The powers given to this person are clearly to be exercised judicially, as if by a tribunal. "And the decision or award of such average adjuster shall be final and conclusive on the society and claimant, and no appeal shall be allowed therefrom." And so by rule 84, "Whatever shall be decided by the special general meeting shall be final and binding, as well upon the society as upon all the parties interested in the decision." These inquiries and decisions are not confined to the question of amount contingent on a liability being admitted or established. They may, so far as I can see, take place where the amount is not in dispute, if a liability be established; but where the liability is disputed, the terms are certainly wide enough to include every question which may arise upon any claim by a member for any alleged loss under a policy. They assume a claim in respect of an alleged right, a dispute as to the validity of such claim, an inquiry into such dispute, and a decision which shall be final and conclusive. If the decision ought to be arrived at after hearing evidence and the parties, it is a judicial decision. If so, it seems difficult if not impossible to say that there is not an attempt and intention to set up a private tribunal, which is to replace the ordinary tribunals of the country. The stipulation as to the procedure before the average adjuster that those who drew the rules intended that there should in all the inquiries be a judicial investigation before a tribunal, which is therefore a judicial tribunal. These rules do not seem to me to confine the inquiry and decision of which they treat to the amount to be paid, leaving the liability to pay to be established before the ordinary courts, or merely to postpone the liability to pay until the amount to be paid has been determined by the directors or an arbitrator; they do not affect the time of payment in respect of a loss; they do not therefore alter the implied contract to indemnify directly a loss arises; they leave that contract to be independent, they deal no more with that than with any other stipulation in the contract of insurance; but they are, as it seems to me, intended to create a tribunal to hear and determine every question which may arise in respect of a policy made with the society, and to determine everything finally and compulsorily, so as to prevent any application to the ordinary courts.

[Ex. Ch.]

EDWARDS v. ABERAYRON MUTUAL SHIP INSURANCE SOCIETY (LIMITED).

[Ex. Ch.]

Then arises the question, what is the law? I agree with Martin, B. in Horton v. Sayers (4 H. & N. 650), that if the decision in Scott v. Avery in the House of Lords is to be interpreted according to the opinion expressed therein of Lord Campbell, the former cases are overruled, and the doctrine previously maintained with regard to ousting the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts is exploded. But I do not think it is possible to say that the decision of the House of Lords did overrule the former decisions. Baron Martin thought it did. He so stated in Horton v. Sayers, and so in terms ruled in Tredwen v. Holman (1 H. & C. 72). The facts in Scott v. Avery, as interpreted, did not make it necessary to decide more than this, that there may be a valid and binding contract that no action shall be maintained until the amount of damage, if any, has been ascertained in a specified mode. "It appears to me perfectly clear," said the Lord Chancellor, "that the language used indicates this to have been the intention of the parties: that, supposing there was a difference between the person who had suffered loss or damage, and the committee, as to what amount he should recover, that was to be ascertained in a particular mode, and that until that mode had been adopted, and the amount ascertained according to that mode, no right of action should exist. In other words, that the right of action should be not for what a jury should say was the amount of the loss, but for what the persons designated in that particular form of agreement should so say." This ruling, as it seems to me, in no way conflicts with the right in either party to litigate before a court of law or equity any other question than the amount of damages which might arise under or in respect of the contract. The terms of the rules in that case were not the same as in this. They were, first, "that the sum to be paid to any suffering member for any loss or damage shall in the first instance be ascertained and settled by the committee." And then "that no member who refuses, &c., shall be entitled to maintain any action at law or suit in equity on his policy until the matters in dispute shall have been referred, &c., and then only for such sum as the said arbitrators shall award, and the obtaining the decision of such arbitrators on the matters and claims in dispute is hereby declared to be a condition precedent to the right of any member to maintain any such action or suit." These terms seem rather to assume than to forbid the possibility of an action or suit upon questions other than the amount. There is no dispute as to the principle, says Coleridge J. in the Exchequer Chamber, 8 Ex. 500. "Both sides admit that it is not unlawful for parties to agree to impose a condition precedent with respect to the mode of settling the amount of damage, or the time of paying it, or any matters of that kind which do not go to the root of the action. On the other hand it is conceded that any agreement which is to prevent the suffering party from coming into a court of law, or in other words which ousts the courts of their jurisdiction cannot be supported." And in order to found or support the judgment the large terms in that case were by reference confined so as to be applied to a reference of the amount only and not of the liability. In Horton v. Sayer (4 H. & N. 643), the stipulations in the lease were "that if at any time during the said term, or at or after the expiration thereof, any difference should arise touching or concerning any covenant, &c., all and every the matters in difference should be finally settled by arbitrators, and every such award should be binding and conclusive, and that the parties should not commence or prosecute any action or suit, or seek any remedy either in law or equity, for relief in the premises without first submitting to such arbitration as aforesaid all matters in difference, &c." It is obvious that in those stipulations the arbitration was not confined to settling an amount of damages, but was general. "In this case," says Pollock C.B., "the deed discloses nothing more than an agreement generally to refer all disputes to arbitration, and that does not prevent the plaintiff from maintaining this action." And Bramwell B. says, "I think Scott v. Avery was rightly decided, though perhaps I may have some bias in consequence of having been counsel for the plaintiff. The principle of that decision is very intelligible. If a man covenants to do a particular act, and also covenants that if any dispute shall arise in respect thereof, it shall be referred to arbitration, that is the case with reference to which the courts have used the unfortunate expression that their jurisdiction is ousted by the agreement of the parties. On the other hand, if a man covenants to do a particular act, and that in the event of his not doing it the other party shall be entitled to receive such a sum of money as they shall agree upon, or if they cannot agree such an amount as shall be determined by an arbitrator, there is no debt which can be sued for until the arbitrator has ascertained what sum is to be paid." He then decides in favour of the plaintiff, because "there is a distinct and unqualified covenant by the defendant that he will do a particular act, and also a covenant that if any difference shall arise it shall be referred to arbitration." It is impossible, as it seems to me, to have a more clear statement than that Scott v. Avery did not overrule the former decisions, and the case is an authority that the distinction is between an agreement to refer a particular point as a condition precedent to an action, and to refer all matters in dispute so as to have no action. In Roper v. Lendon (1 E. & E. 825), the 10th condition in a fire policy was, "the amount of every loss will be paid immediately after the same shall have been established to the satisfaction of the directors." The 15th condition was, "in case any difference or dispute shall arise between the insured and the company touching any loss, &c., or otherwise in respect of any insurance, such difference shall be submitted, &c., and the award shall be conclusive and binding on all parties." The 6th plea relied on the 15th condition; Mr. Lush arguing for the defendants admitted that the 6th plea was bad. This of itself is high authority. Lord Campbell giving judgment said, "the 6th plea is clearly bad. The agreement to refer contained in the 15th condition is merely collateral to the agreement to pay. The courts will not, therefore, treat the agreement to refer as ousting their jurisdiction until there has been a reference. The distinction between the present case and cases like Scott v. Avery is plainly pointed out in the judgment there delivered in the House of Lords: "The present case does not fall within that decision, &c." And Hill J.: "The 6th plea is bad. The case is clearly not within the decision in Scott v. Avery. Here the agreement to refer is collateral to the agreement to pay. There the agreement was to pay only such a sum as the arbitrators should award." This seems to me a conclusive statement by or with the assent of Lord Campbell, on whose judgment in the House of Lords reliance was placed for the proposition that the doctrine as to ousting the jurisdiction of the courts is abrogated, that Scott v. Avery did not overrule that doctrine, that it still exists, and that the test is whether the agreement to refer applies only to the ascertaining a particular fact, or to the decision of every dispute which may arise. In Cooke v. Cooke (L. Rep. 4 Eq. 77), Sir W. Page Wood, at p. 85, thus discusses Scott v. Avery: "These observations of Lord St. Leonards have been commented on by the present Lord Chancellor in Scott v. Corporation of Liverpool, which fell within the principle of Scott v. Avery, a simple case where a contractor had agreed that he should be paid only what the engineer should certify, and it was held that there was no right of action until the certificate was made. But the Lord Chancellor distinguishes that simple class of cases from the other, where a distinct right, such as a debt or an obligation to account, has arisen, and the parties have agreed upon a particular private tribunal, which shall adjust the right for them. Speaking of the latter class of cases the Lord Chancellor says, 'A right of action has accrued, and it would be against the policy of the law to give effect to an agreement that such a right should not be enforced through the medium of the ordinary tribunals.'" But the case of Tredwen v. Holman (1 H. & C. 72) is said to be contrary to these views. The stipulation in the policy was "and all other cases of dispute of whatever nature shall be referred in like manner, and no action at law shall be brought until the arbitrators have given their decision." The court decided in favour of the defendants. Martin, B. in delivering the judgment said, "The case of Scott v. Avery decided that the insurer and the underwriter may contract that no right of action (to be enforced in a court of law) shall accrue until an arbitrator has decided not merely as to the amount of damages to be recovered, but upon any dispute that may arise upon the policy. The agreement is clear and unambiguous, and the parties probably meant to act upon Scott v.

Avery, and exclude the jurisdiction of the courts to law except for the purpose of enforcing the award to be made by the arbitrator." This judgment seems to me to be founded upon the view entertained by Martin, B. that the judgment in the House of Lords in Scott v. Avery, which was contrary to the opinion given by him in that case, overruled all the previous decisions on the subject. "It seems to me," he said, in Horton v. Sayers (4 H. & N. 650) "that Scott v. Avery has overruled all the previous decisions on the subject." As I cannot accede to this view I venture to say that Tredwen v. Holman cannot be supported. The true limitation of Scott v. Avery seems to me to be that which was expressed in it, and which, as I have pointed out, has so often been expressed about it, that if parties to a contract agree to a stipulation in it which imposes as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a suit or action for a breach of it, settling by arbitration the amount of damage or the time of paying it, or any matters of that kind which do not go to the root of the action, i.e. which do not prevent any action at all from being maintained, such stipulation prevents any action being maintained until the particular fact has been settled by arbitration; but a stipulation in a contract which in terms would submit every dispute arising on the contract to arbitration, and so would prevent the suffering or complaining party from maintaining any suit or action at all in respect of any breach of the contract, does not prevent an action from being maintained; it gives at most a right of action for not submitting to arbitration and for damages probably nominal. And the rule is founded on public policy. It in no way prevents parties from referring to arbitration disputes which have arisen, but it does prevent them from establishing as it were before they dispute a private tribunal which may from ignorance do what the invented tribunal here did, viz. act in contravention and insist on acting in contravention of the most elementary principle of the administration of justice.

In this case, upon a careful consideration of such of the rules in the articles of association as are in my opinion parts of the written contract of insurance, I come to the conclusion that there is nothing to postpone the attaching of the implied liability to indemnify for a loss to any time subsequent to the loss, that the stipulations as to arbitration by the committee of meetings would, if carried out according to their terms, prevent the assured under any policy of the society from maintaining any suit or action at all in the ordinary courts of the country in respect of any dispute arising on the policy; and therefore that such stipulations do not prevent the plaintiff from maintaining this action.

I am consequently of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench should not be supported, and that judgment should be given for the plaintiff.

KELLY, C.B.—I agree in opinion with Mr. Justice Brett, and chiefly upon the grounds upon which he has delivered that opinion.

It seems to me impossible to deny that insurance as by the contract between the parties the defendants have agreed that an insurance has been effected, and as they now admit that a total loss has been sustained, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of that loss. If there be no policy and no insurance, for what can they pretend that the

Q.B. Div.]

KOPITOFF v. WILSON.

[Q

on the ground that the learned judge misdirected the jury by laying down that there was an absolute obligation on the shipowner to make his ship seaworthy as regards the stowage, and that he would be liable if, in consequence of the non-performance of that obligation, the goods should be lost.

Dec. 14 and Jan. 11.—Cohen, Q.C. (with him Butt, Q.C. and Mathew) showed cause.

Theisner, Q.C. (with him Sir H. James and Webster) supported the rule.

The pleadings, facts, and arguments sufficiently appear in the judgment of the court.

The following authorities were cited and discussed:

Lyons v. Mells, 5 East, 428;
Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353;
Stanton v. Richardson, ante, vol. 1, p. 449; vol. 2, p. 228; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 421; and 9 C. P. 390;
Readhead v. Midland Railway Company, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 381; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 628;
Worms v. Storey, 11 Ex. 427;
Davis v. Garratt, 6 Bing. 716;
Thompson v. Hopper, 6 E. & B. 173, 387; E. B. & E. 1086;
Lloyd v. General Iron Screw Collier Company, 3 H. & C. 284;
Dixon v. Sadler, 5 M. & W. 405;
The Freedom, ante, vol. 1, p. 28; L. Rep. 3 P. C. 594;
Notara v. Henderson, ante, vol. 1, p. 278; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 225;
Laurie v. Douglas, 15 M. & W. 746;
Phillips v. Clark, 2 C. B., N. S., 168;
Montoya v. London Assurance Company, 6 Ex. 451;
Redman v. Wilson, 14 M. & W. 478;
Abbot on Shipping (3rd edit.), p. 229;
Maunder and Pollock on Merchant Shipping (3rd edit.), p. 263;
Emerigon, Traité des Assurances, s. 4, pp. 372–375;
Roccus, Not. 19, pp. 57, 69;
Molloy, book ii. c. 2, s. 10;
Wellwood's Sea Laws, t. 7, p. 22;
Tropicong, Contrat de Louage, book i. p. 335;
Parsons on Shipping, p. 171.

Cour. adv. vult.

Feb. 23.—The judgment of the court (Blackburn, Quain, and Field, J.J.) was delivered by—

FIELD, J.—This is an action in which the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the loss of a large number of iron armour plates and bolts which were lost on board the defendants' ship Walamo, on a voyage from Hull to Cronstadt. The cause was tried before Blackburn, J. at Guildhall at the Sittings after Hilary Term 1875.

The declaration contained several counts, and amongst them was a count alleging that the defendants had warranted that the ship should be seaworthy and reasonably fit to carry the goods in question, and alleged that by reason of a breach of such warranty the goods were lost. There was also a count upon the bill of lading, alleging a promise to deliver, with the exception of certain perils, &c., and a loss not within any of the exceptions. The defendants denied the warranty, and also alleged that the cause of loss was within some of the exceptions.

On the trial it appeared that the plaintiff, who was an agent of the Russian Government, had entered into a contract with the defendants, who were shipowners at Hull, by which the defendants undertook to ship for Cronstadt from time to time large quantities of armour plates, which the plaintiff was having manufactured in this country, at agreed rates of freight, varying according to the season of the year. The other terms of the contract are not material points raised before us.

Three armour plates, of great weight eighteen to fifteen tons weight each, livered by the plaintiff to the defendants' ship, and were by them shipped on Sept. in the defendants' own steamship under a bill of lading containing warranties. The defendants themselves, by their servants, stowed the ship. The armour plates were by them placed on the top of a girder railway iron, and then secured there by bolts. There was a conflict of testimony whether this was or was not a proper stowing of them. It was not disputed that the steamship was in herself a good ship, but contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the mode of stowing these plates adopted by the defendants made her unseaworthy on this point. On getting out to sea she encountered a severe weather, the wind being high and the sea running, and she rolled heavily. There was no evidence as to the degree of this bad weather, the cause of this rolling; the plaintiff contended that the wind and sea were no more than to be expected, and that the loss was owing to the improper stowage of the plates. The defendants contending that there was an unusual storm, which would have made it impossible to stow them otherwise well. After the ship was out at sea for some hours one of the armour plates broke loose, and went through the side of the ship, which in consequence went down, and was totally lost, with all her cargo.

The plaintiff's contention was, that the loss of the plate was because it was improperly stowed and secured; the defendants contending that it was a direct consequence of the rolling of the ship, which was a peril excepted in the bill of lading. These contentions raised questions of fact for the jury. Leave was reserved at the close of the case to enter a nonsuit, if the exception in the bill of lading protected the defendants in the circumstances.

The case was thus left to the jury. The judge told the jury as a matter of law, that it was a question for them, that a shipowner was bound to make his ship when she sails, fit to encounter the perils of the sea, and merely that he will honestly and bona fide endeavour to make her fit; and after explaining to the jury what reasonably fit meant, he referred to a North Sea voyage, and the facts in the case, left the following questions to the jury:—

First, was the vessel at the time of her departure in a state, as regards the stowing and securing of these plates, reasonably fit to encounter the ordinary perils that might be expected on a voyage at that season from Hull to Cronstadt?

Secondly, if she was not in a fit state, was the loss that happened caused by that unfitness?

These questions were put in writing, and read to the jury, and on that paper the plaintiff put in writing what he had previously said in his opening, summing up, that they were "to answer" (in answering this second question) that the disaster would not have happened, if the plates had not been considered as caused by the unfitness of the vessel; and the jury think that the plates would have been lost.

Q.B. Div.]

KOPITOFF v. WILSON.

[Q.B. Div.]

adrift when they did, had the stowage been such as to put the ship in a fit state."

The jury answered the first question in the negative, and the second in the affirmative. No complaint has been made as to these findings not being justified by the evidence. Upon these findings the learned judge directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff for the agreed amount, 6550*l.*; and in Easter Term 1875, the defendants obtained a rule to show cause why a nonsuit should not be entered pursuant to the leave reserved, or why there should not be a new trial on the ground "that the learned judge misdirected the jury, in directing them there was an absolute obligation on the shipowner to make his ship seaworthy as regards the stowage, and that he would be liable if, in consequence of the non-performance of that obligation, the goods should be lost." That part of the rule which prayed for a nonsuit, although not expressly abandoned for any future purpose, was not attempted to be supported before us; and with regard to the remaining portion of the rule, we took time to consider our judgment; not because we entertained any doubt as to the correctness of the direction of the learned judge, but because the case involved considerations which rendered it desirable that our reasons should be fully and explicitly stated.

We think that the rule must be discharged. We hold that, in whatever way a contract for the conveyance of merchandise be made, where there is no agreement to the contrary, the shipowner is by the nature of the contract impliedly and necessarily held to warrant that the ship is good, and is in a condition to perform the voyage then about to be undertaken, or in ordinary language is seaworthy, that is, fit to meet and undergo the perils of the sea and other incidental risks to which she must of necessity be exposed in the course of the voyage. For this proposition we have the high authority of Lord Tenterden, who lays it down in the first edition of his book, published in 1802, and for the correctness of which he vouches Emerigon and other eminent writers or commentators upon the subject: (Abbot on Shipping, 1st edit. p. 146). The accuracy of the proposition thus stated in 1802 has not, that we are aware of, ever been brought into question in any of the subsequent editions, or of the numerous text books since published on the subject. In further support of the implication of such a warranty, we have the authority of Lord Ellenborough, who, in the case of Lyon v. Mells (5 East, 428), lays it down that it is a part of the contract on the part of a carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employment for which he offers it; and although it is true, as was pointed out by Mr. Thesiger in his argument before us, that the warranty thus expressed by Lord Ellenborough is expressed in terms limiting it to a contract for the carriage of goods by a person holding himself forth as the owner of a lighter or vessel ready to carry goods for hire, the measure of liability thus laid down by him has been considered generally applicable to any contract for carriage (per Blackburn, J. in Readhead v. The Midland Railway Company, L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 6), and in the cases of Havelock v. Geddes (10 M. 536), Stanton v. Richardson (ante, vol. 1, 449; vol. 2, p. 228; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 421; and in the Ex. Ch. 9, ib. 390); the judgment in which latter case has recently been affirmed in the House of Lords, was actually applied to contracts for carriage by charter-party.

In further support of this proposition, the existence of such a warranty as a general implication arising in all contracts of shipment was universally recognised or assumed in the opinions expressed in the case of Gibson v. Small (4 H. of L. Cas. 353).

We further find that the same doctrine obtains in the American courts (1 Parsons on Shipping, 171). It appears to us, also, that there are good grounds in reason and common sense for holding such to be the law. It is well and firmly established that in every marine voyage policy the assured comes under an implied warranty of seaworthiness to his assurer. If we were to hold that he has not the benefit of a similar implication in the contract which he makes with a shipowner for the carriage of his goods, the consequence would be that he would lose that complete indemnity against risk and loss which it is the object and purpose to give him by the two contracts taken together. Holding as we now do, the result is that the merchant by his contract with the shipowner having become entitled to have a ship to carry his goods warranted fit for that purpose, and to meet and struggle against the perils of the sea, is by his contract of assurance protected against the damage arising from such perils acting upon a seaworthy ship.

The main argument addressed to us on the part of the defendants, however, was that it was not intended, by the propositions and authorities which we have above referred to, to assert the existence of an independent implication of warranty applicable to every contract of carriage by water, but that the doctrine thus asserted was a subordinate part of the more extensive liability attaching to carriers, and that inasmuch as the latter were bound to carry safely and securely, the act of God and the Queen's enemies only excepted, it was by virtue of that obligation, and not by any specific contract to be implied, that the duty arose. It was therefore said that the defendants not being common carriers, there was no room for any such implication in the present case.

But we have already pointed out that, although it is strictly true that Lord Ellenborough's proposition in Lyon v. Mells is in its terms confined to carriers or persons holding themselves forth as ready to carry, the principle itself has always received a wider application; and in the cases of the Liver Alkali Company v. Johnson (ante vol. 1, p. 380; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 267; and on appeal, ante vol. 2, p. 332; L. Rep. 9 Ex. 338); and Nugent v. Smith (L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 19), in the observations of the courts the existence of the warranty in question on the part of a shipowner is asserted with reference to his character as such, and not as existing only in those cases in which he is also acting as a public carrier.

Mr. Thesiger, however, in his able argument, mainly and very properly relied on the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber in Readhead v. Midland Railway Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 381). The point decided in that case was, that the obligation of the carrier of passengers by land did not extend so far as to warrant the roadworthiness of the carriage supplied by him against latent defects, and did not therefore directly decide anything as to the obligation of a carrier by sea of goods to warrant the seaworthiness of his ship even against latent defects; but we think Mr. Thesiger was justified in saying that the reasoning of the judgment threw doubt upon that position. The more recent case of Francis v. Cockerill (L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 501) in the Exchequer Chamber, we think, establishes that the obligation or warranty even on land extends to everything except latent defects which could not by any reasonable diligence or skill be discovered. In the case now before us there was no necessity to consider the law as to latent defects, or to direct the jury on that point, for nothing of the sort was suggested.

Q.B. Div.]

SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN.

[Q.B. Div.]

We think that it is not a misdirection entitling the party against whom the verdict passes to a new trial, if the judges make an inaccurate statement of the law on some point not involved in the issue, and on which the jury required no direction, and consequently we need not express any opinion on this point. We are not, however, to be understood as intimating that the ruling in this respect was wrong.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless and Co.

Tuesday, April 11, 1876.

SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN.

Question between defendant and third party—Notice to third party—Determination of question—Judicature Act 1875, Order XVI., rules 17 and 18—Shippers and consignees—Demurrage.

Shipowners brought an action for demurrage against their charterers. Defendants by the charter-party had agreed to discharge the cargo as fast as the custom of the port should allow; and if the ship should be detained by the defendants or their agents beyond the time specified for discharging the cargo, demurrage was to be paid by the defendants at the rate of 12l. or equivalent per day. Before arrival of the ship, the defendants sold the whole cargo to be delivered at the port of arrival; but the agreement for sale made no terms as to time of discharging cargo nor amount of demurrage. Defendants obtained an order from a master under Order XVI., rules 17 and 18 of the Judicature Act 1875, that notice be given to the purchasers of the cargo that the question in the action should be determined between them, the plaintiffs and the defendants.

Held, upon appeal, that the proceedings under these rules are only applicable where the question between the defendant and the third party is identical with that between the plaintiff and defendant; and that the master's order in this case could not be maintained.

This was an action for demurrage upon a charter-party entered into abroad, by which the plaintiffs, the owners of the ship Helen Burns, agreed with the defendants, Messrs. Duncan, Fox, and Co., the charterers, that the ship and cargo should go to Queenstown or Falmouth for orders, and thence to a specified port of discharge and deliver the whole of her cargo which the defendants agreed to discharge as fast as the custom of the port should allow; and if the said ship should be detained by the defendants or their agents beyond the time specified for discharging the said cargo, demurrage was to be paid by the defendants at the rate of 12l., or equivalent per day for each day of detention afterwards. The defendants, through their brokers, sold the entire cargo expected to arrive by the Helen Burns to the British Agricultural Association carrying on business in Scotland. The sold-note to the said association stated that the cargo was to be delivered at a safe port in the United Kingdom, but made no terms as to the time to be allowed for discharging the cargo, nor as to the demurrage in case of detention of the vessel.

The Helen Burns, when she arrived at Falmouth for orders, was sent by the British Agricultural Association to discharge her cargo at Leith. She duly reached that port on the 8th Oct., but was kept there thirty-one days before her cargo was discharged. The defendants' answer to the claim for this demurrage was, that if the plaintiffs were entitled to it, the delay beyond the custom of the port was caused by the fault of the British Agricultural Association, whose business it was to discharge the cargo, and who would be liable to the defendants for the damages which the plaintiffs might obtain.

An order was accordingly obtained from a master at the instance of the defendants, by which the defendants were at liberty to serve notice on the British Agricultural Association under Order XVI., rules 17 and 18 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. From this order the British Agricultural Association appealed to the judge in chambers (Archibald, J.), who referred the matter to the court.

By rule 17, "Where a defendant is, or claims to be, entitled to contribution or indemnity, or any other remedy or relief over against any other person, or where from any other cause it appears to the court or a judge that a question in the action should be determined not only as between the plaintiff and defendant, but as between the plaintiff, defendant, and any other person, or between any or either of them, the court or a judge may, on notice being given to such last-mentioned person, make such order as may be proper for having the question so determined." And by rule 18, "Where a defendant claims to be entitled to contribution, indemnity, or other remedy or relief over against any person not a party to the action, he may, by leave of the court or a judge, issue a notice to that effect, stamped with the seal with which writs of summonses are sealed. A copy of such notice shall be filed with the proper officer, and served on such person according to the rules relating to the service of writs of summonses. The notice shall state the nature and grounds of the claim, and shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, be served within the time limited for delivering his statement of defence. Such notice may be in the form No. 1 in Appendix B. hereto, with such variations as circumstances may require, and therewith shall be served a copy of the statement of claim, or if there be no statement of claim, then a copy of the writ of summonses in the action."

Rules 20 and 21 of the same order relate to the point in dispute: by rule 20, "If a person not a party to the action, who is served as mentioned in rule 18, desires to dispute the plaintiff's claim in this action as against the defendant, or

Q.B. Div.]

SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN.

[Q.B. Div.]

behalf the notice has been given, he must enter an appearance in the action within eight days from the service of the notice. In default of his so doing, he shall be deemed to admit the validity of the judgment obtained against such defendant, whether obtained by consent or otherwise. Provided always that a person so served and failing to appear within the said period of eight days may apply to the court or a judge for leave to appear, and such leave may be given upon such terms, if any, as the court or a judge shall think fit." And by rule 21, "If a person not a party to the action served under these rules appears pursuant to the notice, the party giving the notice may apply to the court or a judge for directions as to the mode of having the question in the action determined; and the court or judge upon the hearing of such application may, if it shall appear desirable so to do, give the person so served liberty to defend the action upon such terms as shall seem just, and may direct such pleadings to be delivered, or such amendments in any pleadings to be made, and generally may direct such proceedings to be taken, and give such directions as to the court or a judge shall appear proper for having the question most conveniently determined, and as to the mode and extent in or to which the person so served shall be bound or made liable by the decision of the question."

Castle, on behalf of the British Agricultural Association, now moved by way of appeal from the master's order, that the notice of the defendants under Order XVI., rule 17, should be set aside on two grounds. First, there is no provision in any of the Orders for service of a notice of this kind out of the jurisdiction. Rule 18 certainly provides for service of notice according to the rules relating to the service of writs of summons; but the service of such writs out of the jurisdiction is limited by Order XI., rule 1, to where the contract ought to be enforced or otherwise affected, or for the breach whereof damages or other relief are or is demanded, was made or entered into or broken within the jurisdiction. And even if this objection could be overcome, rule 4 of the same order provides that "Any order giving leave to effect such service or notice within which such defendant is to enter an appearance, such time to depend on the place or country where or within which the writ is to be served or the notice given." This is quite inconsistent with the provision in Order XVI., rule 18, that the person shall be served with notice by the defendant within the time limited for service of statement of defence; and, secondly, this is not a case in which the defendants claim to be entitled to contribution or indemnity or any other remedy or relief over against the British Agricultural Association, within the words of rules 17 and 18 of Order XVI. There is no privity of contract between the latter and the plaintiff, and the measure of damages between the defendants and the association is not the same as between the plaintiffs and defendants. Moreover, the same questions do not arise between the various parties, and the question determined between plaintiffs and defendants can be in no way binding upon this association:

Chappel v. Comfort, 10 C. B., N. S., 802;

Sims v. Bond, 5 B. & Ad. 389.

sect. 24, sub-sect. 3 of the Judicature Act 1873, gives power to grant relief to a defendant against a plaintiff in respect of any equitable or legal right claimed in the pleadings, which might be granted in a separate suit; "and also all such relief relating to or connected with the original subject of the cause or matter, and in like manner claimed against any other person, whether already a party to the same cause, or matter, or not, who shall have been duly served with notice in writing of such claim pursuant to any rule of court, or any Order of the Court, as might properly have been granted against such person if he had been made a defendant to a cause duly instituted by the same defendant for the like purpose; and every person served with any such notice shall thenceforth be deemed a party to such cause or matter, with the same rights in respect of his defence against such claim, as if he had been duly sued in the ordinary way by such defendant." In Treleaven v. Bray (45 L. J. 113, Ch.), Mellish, L.J., said, "The meaning of sect. 24, sub-sect. 3, was very carefully considered by the judges. We came to the conclusion that it was not advisable to make any rules which would enable one defendant to obtain relief against his co-defendant without an independent action against him. We considered that we had power to do so, but we thought that it would be intolerable that a plaintiff who might have a good case against the original defendant, should be compelled to wait for his remedy while the defendants were fighting inter se. The only object of the rules was to bind the third party conclusively by the judgment given as between the plaintiff and the original defendant, but if he wants to get an indemnity or other relief against the third party he must bring an action of his own."

J. C. Mathew showed cause for the defendants against this appeal motion. There is nothing in the facts of this case to prevent the writ of summons from being served upon the defendants if they were out of the jurisdiction, and Order XI., rule 1, is to be read together with and as part of Order XVI., rule 18. [QUAIN, J.—Order XI., rule 1, which allows service of a writ out of the jurisdiction, is applicable only when the original contract, upon which the action is brought, is made or broken within the jurisdiction. It does not follow from the words of Order XVI., rule 18, that service of a notice may be similarly performed upon a bye contract with which the plaintiff has nothing to do.] As to the second point, the main issue in the action is whether the cargo was discharged as fast as the custom of the port of Leith allowed, and that would be the issue in an action between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association. The association therefore ought to be bound by the determination of this action; this is "a question in the action," which, in the words of Order XVI., rule 17, "should be determined not only as between the plaintiff and defendant, but as between the plaintiff, defendant, and any other person, or between any or either of them."

Castle was not heard in reply.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I have felt some hesitation, but I think the proceedings under Order XVI., rules 17-21, which were allowed to be taken by the master, are not in this case open to the defendant. I think it was the intention of the Legislature to limit the application of these rules to cases in which the claim of the defendant against the third person is identical with that of the plaintiff against the defendant. Unless that be so, the allowing of the introduction of such third person into the cause would be extremely embarrassing to the plaintiff and to the trial of the action, and it would also be hard on such third person if he could not, by refuting the claim of the plaintiff, put himself in a position not to be liable when the defendant's time should come to enforce his, the defendant's, claim against him. I think there is great force in what has been said as to rules 20 and 21; they show that the question between the defendant and the third party should be the same as the question in the action, and on the whole I am of opinion that the proceedings under rules 17 and 18 are only applicable where the questions are identical. Then what we have to see is, whether they are so applicable in the present case. Now I am not satisfied that the question between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association would necessarily be the same as that between the defendants and the plaintiffs. The association might defend itself in an action by the defendants for some other reason than the discharging the cargo according to the custom of the port. That being so, the order of the master must be set aside, and it is unnecessary to give any opinion on the other point as to whether, being out of the jurisdiction, the association can be served with the notice.

Q.B. Div.]

THE WETTERHORN.

[ADM.]

QUAIN, J.—I am of the same opinion. With respect to the service of a notice under rule 18 out of the jurisdiction of the court, there is very great difficulty in applying rule 1 of Order XI, which relates to the service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons, and I think under the circumstances it is better to give no opinion on the subject. Now I agree with my Lord that in the present case there is a distinctly different question between the defendants and the Agricultural Association to that between the defendants and the plaintiffs, and I do not think that such a case as this is one to which it was ever intended rules 17 and 18 of Order XVI. should apply. They contemplate the case of an indemnity or suretyship where the only thing which the third party, who was liable to the defendants on the indemnity or suretyship, could do would be to fight out the original cause of action; and if the defendants were liable in the action, so he would be liable to the defendants. So far from this being the case here under this charter-party, the defendants are bound to discharge as fast as the custom of the port should allow, and it is agreed that the charge for demurrage is to be at the rate of 12l. for each day of detention of the vessel beyond the time there specified for discharging the cargo. Now that is the only question between the parties to the original action. The British Agricultural Association, who are the third parties, are not parties indemnifying the defendants from liability under that contract, but are parties who have entered into a separate and distinct contract with the defendants for the cargo to be delivered at any safe port in the United Kingdom, and the only thing which they are bound to do is to take delivery of the cargo within a reasonable time. The measure of damages under the first contract is distinct from that under the second contract, and the causes of litigation are also distinct; and I think it never was intended to bring these together when there is no privity between the parties. Rules 20 and 21 of this same Order point to the matter in dispute in the original action, and evidently never contemplated a case in which the matter in dispute is under a separate and different contract from that in the original action, and to which the plaintiff is no party.

POLLOCK, B.—I also think that the order of the Master in this case should be set aside. The objection to the order which has been made is this, viz., that the case is not one contemplated by the rules 17 and 18 of Order XVI. My impression is, that it was intended to give to the Common Law Divisions the same advantage which the courts of equity alone possessed before the Judicature Acts, by which all the parties might be brought before the court who should be necessary for the purpose of having the contract completely worked out. Instances are given in form I in Appendix B to the Act, in which it would be for the benefit of the suitors that there should be this power of bringing in a third party, and in which there would be no difficulty in applying the Act; and there are other cases, where the same fact being in question between all the parties, it would be desirable to have the matter determined once for all. The present, however, is not one of those cases. The facts in dispute between the parties are different, and if the third party were brought in it would involve the necessity of various separate inquiries, as well to the evidence as to the damages arising out of these different contracts, with a separate direction as to each by the judge at the trial. Such a case was never contemplated by the rules, and this order of the Master must therefore be set aside.

Judgment for the British Agricultural Association.

Solicitors for the British Agricultural Association, Simson and Co.

Solicitors for defendants, Field, Roscoe, and Co., for Bateson and Co., Liverpool.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Jan. 11, 1876.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE WETTERHORN.

Damage to cargo—Particulars—Practice.

In a cause of damage to cargo the court, contrary to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, made an order for particulars of the plaintiff's claim, so as to enable the defendants to pay into court in respect of those items of the claim for which he was prepared to admit liability.

THIS was a motion on appeal from an order of the registrar refusing an application made on summons on behalf of the defendants, the owners of the barque Wetterhorn, for particulars of the plaintiff's claim. The action was brought by the plaintiff as indorsee of a bill of lading of the cargo of the Wetterhorn for damage done to the cargo. The statement of claim alleged that the cargo, consisting of 17,102 sacks of wheat was shipped in good order and condition on board the Wetterhorn at Astoria, Oregon, and that the master gave a bill of lading for the same, by which it was acknowledged that the wheat was in good order and condition and was to be delivered in order of the consignees at a safe port in the United Kingdom, or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg (the dangers of the seas and fire only excepted); that the bill of lading was duly indorsed and delivered to the plaintiff in whom the property in the wheat thereby became vested; that the barque arrived at the port of Hull, whither she had been ordered, on the 12th Oct. 1875; that the plaintiff was entitled to have the 17,102 sacks of wheat delivered to him in like good order and condition as the same were in when shipped as aforesaid on board the said barque at Astoria; that (par. 7) "the said 17,102 sacks of wheat were delivered to the plaintiff, but not in such like good order and condition, but in a wetted, damaged, and deteriorated condition; many of the said sacks had been cut open and the contents started, and thereby further damage and deterioration had been caused to the said cargo;" that the defendants were not prevented by the expected perils from delivering the cargo in good condition; that the barque was unseaworthy, and that (par. 10) the plaintiff had lost part of the value of the wheat, and had been put to great expense about taking care of and improving the same, and having the same surveyed and otherwise; and the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was entitled to the damage proceeded for and a reference to the registrar and merchants to report the amount thereof.

ADM.]

THE N. P. NEILSEN.

[ADM.]

The defendants' notice of motion asked for particulars (under par. 7) of the number of sacks alleged to be delivered, wetted, damaged, and deteriorated, and of the quantity of wheat delivered, wetted, damaged, and deteriorated, and the loss claimed by the plaintiffs in respect thereof; particulars of the number of sacks alleged to be cut open and their contents started and the further damage to the said cargo by reason thereof and the loss claimed by the plaintiffs in respect of such further damage; also particulars of the expenses referred to in the 10th paragraph of the statement of claim.

James P. Aspinall, in support of the motion, contended that the defendants were entitled to particulars in order to enable them to pay money into court if they should be so advised. Without knowing the items of the plaintiff's claim the defendants might try the cause, and, after incurring great expense, go before the registrars and merchant, and then for the first time discover that they had been contesting items, in respect of which they had no possible defence. By means of the particulars they would be able to judge whether they were liable in respect of any and what part of the plaintiff's claim. They were specially desirous of obtaining particulars of the number of sacks which had been cut open, and had had their contents started and the amount of damage sustained thereby and of the expense the plaintiff had sustained in respect of this portion of the cargo. For this damage the defendants would probably have to admit liability, and without particulars it was impossible for them to plead or to be prepared to pay into court.

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, contra.—It is wholly contrary to the practice of this division to give particulars in these cases. The question of liability is determined first and the items of the plaintiff's claim are only delivered when the reference to the registrar and merchants is ordered. This naturally follows from the practice of the court itself in never assessing damages, and a defendant is always protected against costs by the practice of disallowing them unless a plaintiff recovers a certain proportion of his claim. The only case where a defendant is entitled to particulars is where he admits liability.

Aspinall in reply.—The defendants are prepared to admit liability in respect of the damage sustained by cutting open the sacks, &c., provided the plaintiff shows damage to have been sustained on his particulars; and they must admit it because it could only have been done by the negligence of their crew. As to the rest of the claim there is a good defence.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE considered that the defendants were entitled to be put into a position to admit liability and pay into court, and ordered the plaintiff to deliver to the defendants particulars in writing of the number of sacks alleged to have been cut open and their contents started, and of the amount of damage occasioned thereby and claimed by the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Solicitors for the defendants, Stibbard and Cronshey.

Jan. 25 and 26, 1876.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE).

THE N. P. NEILSEN.

Collision — Damage — Particulars — Total loss — Practice.

Where a ship was totally lost in a collision, the court, contrary to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, made an order, in an action by the shipowners against the vessel doing the damage, for particulars of the plaintiff's claim to be delivered to the defendants.

THIS was a motion on appeal from an order of the registrar refusing an application made on summons on behalf of the defendants for particulars of the plaintiff's claim. The action was instituted on behalf of the owner of the schooner Burfield Brothers against the N. P. Neilsen to recover damages for a collision. In the plaintiff's statement of claim it was alleged that the Burfield Brothers, in consequence of the collision, sustained so much damage that she sank almost immediately and was lost together with her cargo and everything on board of her.

R. E. Webster, for the defendants in support of the motion.—In the other divisions of the court this order would be made as a matter of course, so as to enable the defendant to pay into court, and such an order has been made here in the case of The Wetterhorn, ante, p. 168.

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, contra.—In the Wetterhorn special cause was shown for particulars because there were two heads of claim, and the defendants were prepared to admit liability and pay into court under one of the heads. The question here is whether the practice of the High Court of Admiralty or of other courts is to be followed? Hitherto liability and amount have been kept apart in this court. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE. Actions have always been instituted at once and before any repairs have been executed to damaged vessels and before expenses ascertained, and if this application were granted generally causes would be delayed and witnesses would disperse.] The defendants are attempting to tie the plaintiffs down as to the amount of their claim, but this is sufficiently provided for by the rule which disentitles the plaintiffs to their costs if they claim too much.

ADM.]

THE CATTARINA CHIAZZARO.

[ADM]

R. E. Webster in reply.—In this case the plaintiff's ship was totally lost; if she had been only damaged it might be said that particulars need not been given because there had not been time to ascertain the extent of the damage till repairs were completed. But where a ship is lost her value must be within the knowledge of her owners as well at the commencement of the action as when the reference takes place.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 26.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This action is brought to recover damages for the total loss of an English schooner which has gone to the bottom with everything on board of her. Without interfering with the usual practice in causes of damage where a vessel is partially damaged only, I think I ought to make the order as prayed, subject to the power being reserved to the plaintiff to amend their values if necessary.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Thomas Cooper.

Solicitors for the defendant, Plews and Irvine.

March 21 and April 4, 1876.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE).

THE CATTARINA CHIAZZARO.

Collision—Lis alibi pendens—Irish Admiralty Court—Stay of proceedings—Practice.

Where a plaintiff in a cause of damage has commenced two actions; one, first in order of date, in the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland, and a second in the High Court of Justice in England, he will not be allowed to proceed with the latter until he has abandoned proceedings in the former. It is not sufficient that he is desirous of abandoning proceedings in the former, and that he is not allowed to do so by the Irish court; such refusal should be corrected by appeal.

This was an action of damage instituted on behalf of the owner of the British brigantine Harriett Williams against the Italian barque Cattarina Chiazzaro to recover damages for a collision between the two vessels, and the case now came before the court upon motion by the owner of the Cattarina Chiazzaro to dismiss the action with costs and condemn the plaintiff in costs.

The collision occurred on the 9th Dec. 1875, close to the harbour of Queenstown, in Ireland, and the owner of the Harriett Williams on Dec. 20 instituted a suit in rem in the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland in the sum of 900*l.* against the Cattarina Chiazzaro. The latter vessel was arrested in this action by warrant under the seal of the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland on 21st Dec. 1876; but an appearance was subsequently entered for her owner, and she was released on 24th Dec. on bail being given on their behalf. On Dec. 23 a cross cause was commenced by the owners of the Cattarina Chiazzaro against the Harriett Williams in the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland, and the owners of the latter vessel appeared in that suit and gave bail. On Jan. 26 the owner of the Harriett Williams commenced this admiralty action in rem in the sum of 1000*l.* against the Cattarina Chiazzaro in the High Court of Justice in England, and claimed damages for a collision on 9th Dec., being the same collision in respect of which they had proceeded against the Cattarina Chiazzaro in the Irish Admiralty Court. The Cattarina Chiazzaro was arrested in this action on 27th Jan. 1876 by the Marshal of the Admiralty Division. An appearance under protest was entered by her owners. The above facts appeared from an affidavit of the defendants' solicitor filed in support of the motion, which continued (so far as material) as follows:

7. The aforesaid action and cross-action are still outstanding and pending in the said High Court of Admiralty of Ireland, and the owners of the Cattarina Chiazzaro are desirous that the proceedings therein should be taken to judgment and conclusion in the said High Court of Admiralty of Ireland.

8. The High Court of Admiralty of Ireland is a court of competent jurisdiction to hear and determine the said action and cross-action.

10. The owners of the Cattarina Chiazzaro are advised that in actions in rem brought between the same parties and for the same cause of action in two different courts having co-ordinate jurisdiction, that the court which has possession of the case when the second action is commenced, and has powers adequate to the administration of justice therein, is entitled to retain jurisdiction in the action first commenced.

11. The High Court of Admiralty of Ireland has co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice.

The owner of the Harriett Williams brought in an affidavit alleging that he had applied to the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland to dismiss the principal cause of damage instituted there against the Cattarina Chiazzaro, but that the application had been refused; that the officials in the Registry of the Irish Admiralty Court had refused to file a declaration of the non-prosecution of the principal cause, and of the consent of the owner of the Harriett Williams to the dismissal of the bail given therein; that the owner of the Harriett Williams was desirous that the action commenced in the Admiralty Division should be heard out: that all possible means had been taken on his part to abandon and put an end to the action commenced by him in the Irish Admiralty Court, and that he was still willing that the same should be dismissed, and would pay the costs incurred therein.

R. E. Webster for the defendant under protest in support of the motion.—I ask the court to dismiss the action and to stay proceedings. The point has already been decided.

The Lanarkshire, 1 Spinks, A. & E., 189;

The Mali Ivo, L. Rep. 2 Adm. & Eco. 356; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 681; 3 Mar. Law Ca. O. S. 244;

Walsh v. The Bishop of Lincoln, L. Rep. 4 Adm. & Eco. 242.

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff.—It must be admitted that a plaintiff cannot keep up two actions at the same time, but where he is willing to abandon one, and pay all costs occasioned thereby, I submit that the court will not stay his proceeding in the action in which he elects to proceed. The plaintiffs have a right to choose their forum, and it is not because an action has been commenced elsewhere, that they can be barred from the right of proceeding in this court even after verdict.

The Velocity, L. Rep. 3 P. C. 44.

The Orient, L. Rep. 3 P. C. 165.

R. E. Webster in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

ADM.]

MORRIS v. LEVISON.

[C.P. Div.]

April 4, 1876.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In this case an action has been entered on behalf of the owner of a vessel called the Harriett Williams. The facts of the case, which it is necessary to state, appear to be these. The Catarrina Chiazzaro is an Italian barque, and the owners reside at Genoa. The owner of the brigantine, Harriett Williams, resides in the city of Cork, in Ireland. On the 19th Dec. of last year, the two vessels came into collision near Roche's Point, near to the harbour of Cork, in Ireland; and the owner of the Harriett Williams instituted a suit in the High Court of Admiralty of Ireland against the Catarrina Chiazzaro, and the action was brought for 900*l*. A warrant under the seal of the court issued, and upon Dec. 21 the Catarrina Chiazzaro was arrested. An appearance was duly entered for her, and on Dec. 24 a bail bond was entered into on behalf of the owners in the sum of 900*l*; and on Dec. 31 the vessel was released by the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland, and proceeded to her final port of discharge, Liverpool. On Dec. 23 a cross-action was entered in the High Court of Ireland on behalf of the Catarrina Chiazzaro against the Harriett Williams for the damages occasioned by the collision, and I think it was in the month of Feb. that the owner of the Harriett Williams, the first plaintiff in the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland, gave notice that no further proceedings be taken in the suit against the vessel, and that the plaintiff would be at the costs which at that time had been fixed. The court in Ireland had already stated that it was not competent to the plaintiff to abandon the action until he had first released the vessel from the English jurisdiction. Now, the suit in England was instituted on Jan. 26, and on March 14 an appearance, under protest, was entered on behalf of the owners of the Catarrina Chiazzaro, and the petition then produced was handed in.

Now, the objection and protest is to the effect that there is a lis alibi pendens between these two vessels in the court in Ireland; and it appears that an application has been made to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland to dismiss the suit on behalf of the original suitor, the owner of the Harriett Williams, and the court refused to do so. Therefore the state of things is this: that there was a suit instituted in the High Court in Ireland by the same plaintiff who now institutes a suit in this court, there being a cross suit in Ireland; and the judge having refused to dismiss the plaintiff on his application from the suit, it is contended that it is competent to me to meet the matter by dismissing the proceedings instituted in the suit in this court.

I am of opinion that I ought not to allow this suit to be proceeded with at present. I think that it is shown that there is a case pending before the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland between the same parties, for the same object, and arising out of the same cause of action, and that, no doubt, apart from technical considerations, it would be a most inconvenient course of proceeding to allow the same case to be heard at the same time in two different courts.

What I have had to consider is, what the other courts have decided. The law as to lis alibi pendens is laid down in Walsh v. The Bishop of Lincoln (L. Rep. 4 Adm. & Ecc. MS), and it is clear from that decision that a plaintiff bringing two actions in different courts for the same cause, and that if he does not elect he will be restrained from proceeding with the one which is last begun. I think that the plaintiff here has lost his way. I think that he should have applied to the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland to dismiss the suit as he did, and if that was refused, as it was refused, to have appealed from that refusal.

At all events, in the present state of things, I shall order the proceedings in this court to be stayed.

E. C. Clarkson.—We shall appeal, and I shall ask for stay of execution.

R. E. Webster.—It must be under terms.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I shall not allow the vessel to remain under arrest. I order the proceedings to be stayed in this court, and the ship to be released.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Pritchard and Sons.

Solicitor for the defendants, under protest, Thomas Cooper.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by P. R. HUTCHINS and CYRIL DOBBS, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Feb. 10, 1876.

MORRIS v. LEVISON.

Charter-party—"Say about 1100 tons"—Construction of charter-party—Words of contract—Words of expectation.

By a charter-party the defendant agreed to load "a full and complete cargo, say about 1100 tons."

The actual capacity of the chartered vessel was 1210 tons, the defendant loaded only 1080 tons:

Held by the court (Brett, Archibald, Lindley, JJ.), that the words "say about 1100 tons," were words of contract, and not merely words of expectation, and that the defendant did not undertake to load the vessel up to her full capacity, but only to load as fully as could be done by providing a cargo of "about 1100 tons."

Held also by the court, drawing inferences of fact, that if the defendant had provided a cargo of 1133 tons, he would have performed his contract, and that he was liable to pay damages for 53 tons short cargo, 3 per cent. being a reasonable excess to require over the 1100 tons.

THE facts in this case were stated for the opinion of the court in the form of a special case. It is not necessary to set out the whole of the facts for the purposes of this report, but so far as the facts were material to the determination of the point upon which this case is reported, they were as follows:

The defendant chartered from the plaintiff a vessel. The charter-party, so far as is material, was as follows, that the ship "should proceed with all possible despatch to Portman, and there load in the customary manner, where ordered by the shipper's agent, a full and complete cargo of iron ore, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry, over and above her ordinary tackle, apparel, provisions, and furniture, say about 1100 tons, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to West Hartlepool and there deliver the same."

The carrying capacity of the ship was 1210 tons. The cargo which the defendant provided was 1080 tons.

C.P. Div.]

MORRIS v. LEVISON.

[C.P. Div.]

The court had power to draw inferences of fact, and the question was whether the defendant, in providing a cargo of 1080 tons had performed his contract, or if not what amount he was legally bound, under the circumstances, to have provided.

Butt, Q.C. (J. C. Mathew with him) for the plaintiff, contended that the defendant was bound to load a full and complete cargo, and that the words "say about 1100 tons" did not relieve him from his obligation to do so, that such words were not words of contract, but merely words expressing the opinion or the expectation of the parties, or that even if these words were words of contract, still the obligation was not fulfilled, since the obligation then would be to load a full and complete cargo, so far as it could be done by providing a quantity about 1100 tons, and that the contract meant that if anything like 1100 tons was required to fill the ship, the defendant was to provide it—he was not to hesitate about a few tons more or less. The case of Gwillim v. Daniel (2 C. M. & R. 61) he contended was an authority to show that words such as these are not treated in law as words of contract. Lord Abinger there said of the words "say from 1000 to 1200 gallons" that they mean merely that in all probability the quantity produced will amount to 1000 to 1200 gallons, and do not amount to a warranty. The most recent case was McConnell v. Murphy (L. Rep. 5 P. C. 202; 28 L. T. Rep. 713); the agreement there was for a sale of "all of the spars manufactured by McConnell, say about 600 red pine spars," and only 497 spars were tendered, no more being manufactured by McConnell of the agreed dimensions, yet the court held that the agreement had been complied with by the tender of the 497 spars, and that the words "say about 600," were words of expectation and estimate only, and did not amount to an undertaking. He also referred to Lieming v. Snaith (16 Q. B. 275.)

Cohen, Q.C. (Wood Ifill with him), for the defendant, contended that the words, "say about 1100 tons," were inserted to relieve the defendant from any obligation to load a full cargo, if it could not be done with about 1100 tons, and if the defendant put on board a quantity which was substantially about 1100 tons, he did all that he need do. That about 1100 tons meant something a little more than 1100 tons, or something a little less, and that whether the defendant put something a little more, or something a little less than 1100 tons on board, he fulfilled his contract. That, consequently, the contract was fulfilled by the defendant when he provided 1080 tons. The shipowner, who knew the capacity, or ought to know it, inserted those words in order to let the charterer know beforehand what quantity to provide, and to relieve him from the expense of providing a quantity that might turn out too great, or from the expense of having to obtain a further supply of ore, if what he had at first provided turned out too little. The word "about" was considered and commented on in the case of Croes v. Eglin (2 B. & Ad. 106), and there it was shown that it gives a very considerable latitude.

BRETT, J.—I have felt some difficulty in deciding the question now before us, but I do not think that any advantage will be gained by taking further time for the consideration of the matter. It is a question which depends upon the proper construction to be given to the charter-party. The defendant undertook by the charter-party to load a "full and complete cargo of iron ore, say about 1100 tons." Now, the cargo actually loaded by the defendant upon the chartered vessel amounted only to 1080 tons, whilst the ship required a cargo of 1210 tons in order to be fully and completely laden. It is obvious, then, that the defendant did not load a "full and complete cargo of iron ore," according to the ordinary sense of those words. The plaintiff seeks to recover for the whole difference between what would constitute a full and complete cargo and the cargo actually shipped.

In order to construe this contract the relationship of the parties must be borne in mind. The shipowner undertakes to have the ship ready at the port of loading to receive the cargo by the specified time, he, rather than the charterer, ought to know the capacity of the ship which he lets out to the charterer. The charterer undertakes to have the cargo ready for loading at the specified time and place, and to pay demurrage if, by reason of his default in that respect, the ship is detained beyond the lay days.

Now, what is the law as laid down by the courts applicable to statements made as to the capacity of ships in charter-parties? for parties must be taken to make, as in fact they do make, their contracts with reference to the construction which has been put upon similar instruments in courts of justice. The cases of Thomas v. Clarke (2 Stark. 450) and Hunter v. Fry (2 B. & Ald. 421) decide that where, in the commencement of a charter-party, a ship is described as of the burden of so many tons, and in the body of the charter-party the charterer agrees to load a full and complete cargo, the description has no effect upon the agreement to load a full and complete cargo, and however much the actual capacity of the ship exceeds the capacity so stated, the charterer is bound to load a full and complete cargo. Instead of a statement similar to the one in the cases mentioned, made at the beginning of the charterparty, we find now that it is usual to insert in the clause itself, by which the charterer agrees to load a full and complete cargo, the words "say about" so many tons. This alteration in the form of charterparties must be considered by the light of the cases I have mentioned, and so considering it, it is, in my opinion, plain that the words "say about" so many tons are intended to have some effect on the agreement to load a full and complete cargo, and are not mere "words of expectation." It seems to me that we give proper effect to these words if we hold the meaning to be that the shipowner will be content with a cargo of about 1100 tons if the ship will hold more than that quantity, and that if she will only hold less than that quantity, then a full cargo, whatever that may be, must be shipped. If the words are mere words of expectation they may have the effect of deluding charterers, by causing them to bring down for shipment cargoes of about the specified quantity, only to find that they have brought down much too small cargoes, and that they have to incur fresh expenses and bring down further quantities, paying, perhaps, demurrage on the ship the while.

Construing the words, then, as I have suggested, it becomes necessary in this case for us to determine what we will say is the quantity required to fulfil an agreement to provide about 1100 tons. I

ADM.]

MOORE v. HARRIS.

[PRIV. CO.]

the present had been a case in which the jury had to decide upon this point, the proper direction to them would have been that the deviation from 1100 tons must not be a very large one, that they must say what deviation would ordinarily be understood as allowed by the word "about." There can, of course, be no exact rule of law as to this, but as we have to decide it we must do so, and we think that 3 per cent. above the 1100 tons is somewhere about a fair allowance. We, therefore, for the purpose of this particular case, find that the shipowner ought to have had a cargo of 1133 tons loaded, and that he is entitled to damages for the short loading, 1080 tons only having, in fact, been loaded. Then he will not be entitled to quite the full freight on these 53 tons, because it would have taken longer to load the ship if the additional quantity had been loaded, he will be entitled to the freight which he would have received on these 53 tons, had they been duly shipped, minus the cost of earning it.

ARCHIBALD, J.—I am of the same opinion, though I have during the course of the argument felt some difficulty in arriving at the true construction of this charter-party. The cases of Gwiltim v. Daniell (2 C. M. & R. 61) and Leeming v. Snaith (16 Q. B. 275; 20 L. J. 164, Q. B.), which have been cited, were cases in which the contracts upon which the courts had to place a construction were contracts for the sale of goods. In the former of these cases the words "say from 1000 to 1200 gallons" were held to be words merely of expectation, whilst in the latter the words, "say not less than 100 packs," were held to be not mere words of expectation but words of contract. The subject-matter of each contract must be looked to in dealing with phrases of this kind, and the nature of each contract and the form and object of it. Cases relating to sales of goods do not throw much light on the present case. This is a case of a contract for the charter of a ship, and in considering its construction we must not forget the relative positions of the charterer and the shipowner. The charterer cannot be expected to know the capacity of the ship he is about to charter so well as the owner of the ship knows it. The words "say about 1100 tons" seem to me, when considered by the light of the relationship of the parties, and the nature of the contract, to be words of contract. We give, it seems to me, an effect to all the terms used by the parties by holding that the charterer's obligation was that he should load the ship up to her actual capacity, if it could be done by loading a quantity about 1100 tons, but that, if it required a greater quantity, then that the shipowner would be satisfied with about 1100 tons. He was bound, then, to load a full cargo of "about 1100 tons" in the present case. This he has not done. I agree with the rest of the court as to three per cent. being a reasonable percentage to allow, and also as to the damages to be awarded.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The words "say about 1100 tons" were meant, I think, to guide the charterer as to the amount of cargo which he was to be prepared with. One construction sought to be given to them was that the words "full and complete cargo" governed them, and they were mere words of expectation, or, in other language, words which had no effect whatever. This cannot be so; it would be a construction giving no meaning to part of the language used. Another construction suggested was that the charterer could not be bound to load more than 1100 tons at the most. This seems to me to be a construction open also to the objection of giving no meaning to part of the language used. It gives no meaning to the words "full and complete cargo." The true construction must be one giving effect, if possible, to all the words used, and this I think the construction which we adopt does—that is, that the charterer is to load a full and complete cargo, provided that such cargo shall not exceed a quantity about 1100 tons. Then as to what cargo does not exceed a quantity "about 1100 tons," I think the suggested 3 per cent. is a fair amount to require.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Waltons, Bubb and Walton.

Solicitors for defendant, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH FOR LOWER CANADA.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

March 17, 18, 23, and 24, and April 7, 1876.

(Present: The Right Hons. Sir JAMES COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir M. SMITH, and Sir ROBERT COLLIER.)

MOORE v. HARRIS.

Bill of lading—Exceptions—Place of destination—Latent and apparent damage—Removal of goods—Canadian law.

By a bill of lading it was agreed that certain goods were "to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease, at the port of M., unto the G. Railway Company, and by them to be forwarded to T., and at the aforesaid station delivered to A. . . . No damage that can be insured against will be paid for, nor will any claim whatever be admitted, unless made before the goods are removed."

The goods arrived in a damaged condition, but the damage was not discovered till they arrived at A.'s warehouse, though there was evidence that it might have been discovered by a careful examination on the wharf at M. or at the station at T. In an action brought by the consignee against the shipowner to recover such damage:

Held, that the "removal" contemplated by the bill of lading was removal from the railway at T., the ultimate destination, not only from the ship at M.; that the exception covered latent as well as apparent damage, and that the plaintiff could not recover.

Held further, that the bill of lading, having been made in England by the master of an English ship, was a contract to be governed and interpreted by English law, and that principles derived from the maritime law of France and the Canadian civil code could not be applied to it.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada, affirming a decree of Mackay, J. in favour of the respondent.

This was an action brought by Charles Moore and Berry Moore, of the city of Toronto, merchants, and co-partners, carrying on trade under the name or firm of "Charles Moore and Co.," against David Harris, of the city of Montreal,

[Priv. Co.]

MOORE v. HARRIS.

[Priv. Co.]

master of a certain screw steamship called the Medway, then lying in the port of Montreal to recover the sum of 9553 dollars and 5 cents, as the value of 306 packages of tea, shipped at London on board the said ship Medway, of which the respondent was then master. On the 12th April 1870, a writ of attachment on the said ship Medway was issued in the said superior court for the district of Lower Canada on the 6th July 1870, and annexed to the writ was the declaration, dated the same day. In the declaration the appellants alleged that certain persons named Torry, Paget, and Co., at London, had shipped on board the said ship Medway, in good order and condition, certain packages of tea, marked as per margin of bill of lading, to be delivered as per bill of lading, signed by the defendant, at the port of Montreal unto the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to be by the latter forwarded thence by railway to Toronto to the plaintiffs, the consignees of the said packages. That about the beginning of the month of May the Medway arrived at Montreal with the 306 packages on board, which were then delivered to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and by them forthwith conveyed to Toronto and delivered to the plaintiffs about the 15th May. The declaration further alleged that the said packages of tea on the voyage between London and Montreal, through the mere carelessness, negligence, and improper conduct of the said defendant and his mariners in scattering about chloride of lime and other substances, became so impregnated and affected by the smell and taste of chloride of lime as to be utterly valueless, and the plaintiffs claimed from the defendant for damages 9553 dollars 5 cents, as the value of the said packages.

The defendant by his plea denied the allegations in the declaration, and further set forth the exception clause and certain other conditions of the bill of lading, and alleged that the said bill of lading and the exception clause and conditions thereof relieved the defendant from liability.

1. Because no damage was caused to the said packages by any cause not excepted in the bill of lading.

2. Because the defendant delivered the said packages to the Grand Trunk Railway Company at Montreal, and no claim was then or before, or for a long time afterwards, made by the said railway company or by the plaintiffs or the defendant.

3. Because the plaintiffs accepted and received the said packages at Toronto, and for a long time made no claim on the defendant.

4. Because the invoice value of the said tea was equal only to 6132 dollars, and that even supposing the goods were damaged by a cause not excepted in the bill of lading, the defendant could not be held responsible or made liable for such damages to a greater extent than such invoice value.

The plaintiffs by their replication and answer took issue on the facts alleged in the defendants' plea, and the parties proceeded to evidence, and on the 30th Dec. 1872, the Superior Court gave judgment for the defendant and dismissed the case of the plaintiffs. The judgment of the court was delivered by Mackay, J., before whom the case was, as follows:

The court having heard the parties by their counsel, as well upon the motion by defendant to reject evidence in rebuttal of plaintiff's, and to which said motion due regard has been had as on the merits of this cause, having examined the proceedings, proofs of record, and evidence adduced, and having maturely deliberated.

Considering that plaintiffs have failed to establish right to a judgment against defendant in the present cause or action.

Considering that some of the material allegations of their declaration are unproved and some of them disproved:

Considering that the conduct of consignees of goods carried by common carriers ought to be frank and loyal towards the carriers in all cases in which it is claimed against them that goods carried have been lost or damaged during the carriage:

Considering that the defendant was bound to deliver all the tea he got to carry for plaintiffs in the condition in which he got them, and if they be damaged must pay damages according to their value, and that plaintiffs were bound to receive said tea if not totally unmerchantable and good for damages (proper indemnity), and if meaning to take the position that the tea were totally unmerchantable ought to have offered to give them up to defendant for his own account, and to have notified him to that effect, and thereupon charge him as in case of total loss:

Considering that plaintiffs by their declaration charge defendant as for total loss of the tea referred to, which are said to be lost and "utterly worthless," that the plaintiffs nevertheless received the tea which have not even yet been fairly enough examined to warrant plaintiffs charging defendant as they do:

Considering that plaintiffs have never abandoned said tea to defendant, nor notified him to that effect, but have actually refused to allow him (by his agents and servants in that behalf) to take samples of them as he wished, the plaintiffs retaining (even after the institution of the present action) a possession of said tea adversely to defendant.

Considering it plain that the said tea, instead of being "utterly worthless" have a material value, and would sell for a large sum of money, probably over six thousand dollars.

Considering plaintiffs' treatment of defendant arbitrary, and that their present suit or action cannot be maintained, doth dismiss said plaintiff's action, and doth declare the attachment in this cause dissolved, the whole with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada, and on the 22nd Sept. 1874, that court consisting of Mr. Chief Justice Dorion, Mr. Justice Monk, Mr. Justice Taschereau, Mr. Justice Ramsay, and Mr. Justice Sanborn, confirmed the decision of the court below, holding that the appellants had failed to establish by proof the allegations of their declaration, and particularly the quality of the tea when shipped, or that the said tea was damaged while on board the Medway, and, further, that the appellants did not use due diligence in notifying the defendant of the alleged damage to the said tea. They, therefore, confirmed the said judgment, with costs, and ordered remission of record to the court below. From this decision Mr. Justice Monk dissented.

From this judgment the consignees appealed.

The facts and arguments appear fully in the Lordships' judgment.

PRIV. Co.]

MOORE v. HARRIS.

[PRIV. Co.]

Cohen, Q.C. and R. Vaughan Williams appeared for the appellants.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Lumley Smith for the respondent.

April 7.—Sir MONTAGUE SMITH delivered the judgment of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada, affirming a decree of the Superior Court, which dismissed the plaintiff's action.

The appellants, who are merchants in Toronto, brought the action against the respondent, the owner of the steamship Medway, one of a line of steamers between London and Montreal, for the value of the damage alleged to have been done to 306 packages of tea on the voyage from London to Montreal.

By the bill of lading, signed in London by the master's agent on the 12th April 1870, the 306 packages were "to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease, at the port of Montreal," . . . "unto the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and by them to be forwarded thence per railway to the station nearest to Toronto, and at the aforesaid station delivered to Messrs. Charles Moore and Co., or to their assigns." The exception contains a long list of special risks, besides general perils of the sea, whether arising from negligence or otherwise. The instrument also contains the following condition, upon the last clause of which a material question arises:—

"No damage that can be insured against will be paid for, nor will any claim whatever be admitted unless made before the goods are removed."

The case of the plaintiffs, as stated in their declaration, was that during the voyage the tea "had become impregnated and affected with the odour and taste of chloride of lime and other injurious substances," and that the damage so occasioned was not within any of the exceptions of the bill of lading. The defence, stating it generally, was first that the tea was not damaged on board the ship; and if it was, that in one way of accounting for it, the injury was within the excepted risks; and secondly, that the claim was barred by the delay which occurred in making it.

The evidence for the plaintiffs was to the effect that, during the voyage, scarlet fever broke out among the steerage passengers, and, under the advice of the surgeon, chloride of lime and carbolic acid were employed as disinfectants. That the chloride was thrown in large quantities about the fore cabin and other parts of the ship occupied by the passengers, and carbolic acid sometimes used in the same places, appears to have been satisfactorily proved. The plaintiffs' packages—how many of them did not appear—and packages of tea belonging to other consignees were stowed in the hold under this cabin, and the passengers' trunks were in a place near them. The passengers, it is said, suffered greatly during the voyage from the smell of the disinfectants, and when their trunks were opened on shore the clothes contained in them were found to be strongly impregnated with the same odour. The ship arrived at Montreal on the 2nd or 3rd May, having sailed from London on the 14th April.

There were, in all, 4000 or 5000 packages of tea on board dispersed in various parts of the ship. The plaintiffs' were landed with the others, and all were placed in shipping sheds, where they were sorted, and then taken to the freight sheds of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. From thence they were carried by railway to Toronto, and deposited in the railway company's bonded warehouses there. After lying a day or two in these warehouses the packages were carried in the railway company's waggons to the plaintiffs' own warehouse.

The unloading of the ship occupied several days, and the plaintiffs' packages were forwarded in three lots. These lots were removed from the shipping sheds to the railway freight sheds in Montreal on the 6th, 9th, and 12th May, and were respectively delivered at the plaintiffs' warehouse in Toronto on the 13th, 16th, and 17th May.

Much evidence was given as to the storing and transport of the packages after they left the ship, to exclude the supposition that they were damaged in their transit from the ship to the plaintiffs' warehouse.

It appears that upon the arrival of some of the packages at the plaintiffs' warehouse, their shipping clerk and foreman (Macfarlane) perceived a peculiar smell in them, and called the attention of the carmen to it.

On the 18th May the plaintiffs called, in four persons, viz., two grocers, a merchant, and a tea broker to examine the tea, and obtained from them the following report, which was sustained by their evidence given in the cause: "We find the entire lot damaged and unmerchantable. The damage appears to have been caused by chloride of lime, or some other chemical. We find the packages impregnated with the odour, as also the contents."

On the 27th May another survey of the tea was held for the purpose of obtaining a return of duty, and the surveyors then called in reported damage to the extent of 99 per cent.

No notice whatever of the damage or of these surveys was given to the captain or agent of the ship until the 30th May, when the solicitors of the plaintiffs wrote to Mr. Shaw, the agent of the ship at Montreal, informing him that "the tea upon its arrival was found to have been spoiled and rendered almost worthless by reason of its having been improperly carried," and inviting him to be present at a survey of the tea proposed to be held on the 9th June. To this letter, which was received by Mr. Shaw on the 3rd June, no answer was returned. The survey, however, took place, and a report, in substance the same as that of the 18th May, was made. Other evidence was given by the plaintiffs, but none as to the condition of the tea when shipped.

The defendant called witnesses to rebut the presumption that the damage was done in the ship, and among them stevedores and others who were present when the cargo was discharged, and say that as far as they observed, the floors over the hold were tight, and the packages undamaged; but it is remarkable that none of the officers or crew of the ship were examined.

Mr. Justice Mackay, the Judge of the Superior Court, who tried the cause, does not seem to have grappled with the question, whether the tea was damaged in the ship. The "considerants" of his judgment are principally directed to the conduct of the plaintiffs in delaying to make their claim, and in exaggerating the extent of the damage; and it can only, if at all, be inferred that this question was decided by him in the negative from the general "considerant," that some of the material allegations of the declaration are unproved, and some of them disproved.

Their Lordships, however, have had the advantage of seeing the reasons given by the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, and the majority certainly find the question of fact against the plaintiffs. But the judges, in dismissing the action, rest their decision principally upon other grounds, and their opinion on the question of fact is evidently not a firm one. It is based on what they consider the insufficiency of the evidence, and especially in the absence of proof of the condition of the tea when shipped.

Their Lordships cannot but think that the plaintiffs' evidence, although on some points open to unfavourable comment, does, on the whole, make out a strong prima facie case that the damage was done in the ship, and that the presumption arising from it is greatly strengthened by the conduct of the defendant in declining to call any of the officers or crew of the ship to explain in what manner and under what conditions the chloride of lime and carbolic acid were used, and the state of the ship during the voyage.

They also think that the judges gave undue weight to the consideration that the plaintiffs offered no proof of the condition of the tea when it was shipped. There is not, and, in the nature of things, cannot be, any general rule of law or evidence on the subject. It must depend on the circumstances of each case, how far such proof is necessary, and the case is to be regarded as inconclusively proved without it. Where, for instance, a cargo of grain is found to be heated—a damage which may arise either from its bad condition when shipped, or from some cause existing in the ship—it may be essential to prove the state of the cargo before its shipment. But where, as in this case (supposing, of course, the evidence to be believed), noxious substances, calculated to produce the peculiar damage actually present, are found to have been used in close proximity to the tea, cause and effect are so nearly brought together that a conclusion can be reached without proof of its condition at the time of shipment.

Their Lordships would have thought it right to discuss the evidence with greater minuteness, if overruling the finding of the judges on the question of fact would have led to the reversal of the judgment under appeal. But their opinion being adverse to the appellants on another part of the case, it is enough to say that they are not so satisfied of the correctness of the conclusions of the judges below on that question as to be able to advise Her Majesty to rest her affirmation of the judgment appealed from upon them.

It is also unnecessary, after what they have just intimated, for them to consider the point raised by Mr. Watkin Williams, that in one way of accounting for the damage, the injury, if done in the ship, would fall within the excepted points mentioned in the bill of lading.

Their Lordships will now proceed to the defence founded on the condition in the bill of lading, that no claim whatever for damage will be admitted unless made before the goods are removed.

It was not, and could not be denied, that this condition, stringent as it is, was binding on the consignees; but its application to the claim in question was disputed. It was contended that, "before the goods are removed" meant removal from the ship at Montreal, and not from the railway station at Toronto; and that the condition applied only to apparent damage, and the injury sustained by the tea was not such damage.

There is undoubtedly difficulty, owing to the ambiguous language and inconsistent provisions of the bill of lading, in determining whether the removal referred to was that from the ship or the railway station. The construction most consistent with the rest of the instrument seems to point to the latter place. It was at the railway station that in express terms the goods were to be delivered to the plaintiffs, "freight being payable by the consignees as per margin;" this freight being, as it was admitted, a through freight from London to Toronto. By another clause it is provided that "goods must be taken away within twenty-four hours after arrival at the railway station to which they are destined." Again, freight is made due, if payable by consignees, "on arrival at the place of destination." On the other hand it was pointed out that it is provided that the goods are to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease, and this delivery is to be to the railway company; but, although the liability of the ship for the subsequent damage then ceases, it would be the duty of the ship to contract with the railway company to carry on the goods to Toronto, and, as already observed, the railway station is spoken of as the place of destination, and it is there the goods are to be delivered to the plaintiffs.

The clause: "The goods to be taken from along side by the consignee immediately the vessel is ready to discharge, or otherwise they will be landed and stored at the expense of the consignee, and at his risk"—is no doubt opposed to the above construction, but this clause is inconsistent with the engagement of the shipowner to send on by railway at a through freight to Toronto. It is evidently one of the printed clauses, and cannot control the specific undertaking to forward the goods to Toronto.

Mr. Cohen, in insisting that the condition referred to the removal from the ship, desired to assist his main contention that the condition should be confined to claims for apparent damage, since there being, as he said, little opportunity for examination on a delivery from the ship's side, it would be unreasonable to suppose the parties intended it to apply to claims other than for such damage. Supposing, however, removal from the ship was meant, that construction would not, in their Lordships' view, materially assist his contention; for in that case the railway company would be the agents of the plaintiffs to receive the goods from the ship, and if the plaintiffs, who had come under this stringent condition, were not content to leave the examination of the packages to the officers of the company, they should have taken care to employ a competent agent for that purpose. There were shipping sheds on the wharf alongside the ship in which the packages on being landed were placed, and where the goods remained in charge of the agents of the ship, who sent and afterwards delivered them to the railway company's servants. There is no reason for supposing that opportunity would not have been

[Priv. Co.]

MOORE v. HARRIS.

[Priv. Co.]

afforded in these sheds for inspecting and examining the packages.

But the principal contention on behalf of the plaintiffs was that, whichever was the place of removal referred to, the condition should be confined to apparent damage. Now, its language is plain, and without any ambiguity. The first branch of it, "no damage that can be insured against will be paid for," although limited to insurable damage, clearly applies to such damage, whether apparent or latent. The words of the last branch are unlimited and universal, "any claim whatever." It was not, indeed, denied that these words would, in their natural sense, include all damage, but it was said they should be construed as the usual acknowledgment found in bills of lading, "shipped in good condition," has been, and confined to external and patent damage. It is to be observed, however, that, although the general understanding may have been so to limit the words of this acknowledgment, it is not an uncommon practice to qualify them by such expressions as "weight, value, and contents unknown."

But in truth the supposed analogy does not exist. This is a condition for the shipowners' benefit, and it may well be, that stale claims for latent damage were those against which he most desired to guard. Tea is an article peculiarly liable to such damage. It may be injured not only by contact with, but by the vapours or odours arising from, other substances, as in this case from chloride of lime. In the long voyage from China, even if sound when shipped, and in the removal and storage of it in England, it may have been subjected to noxious influences, which would spoil or deteriorate its condition without any external appearance of damage. Its susceptibility to similar injury would, of course, also exist after it was taken from the ship, and stored or otherwise dealt with by the merchant. A shipowner may choose to say, I will not be liable for any damage to an article of this kind, unless a claim is made so that it may be looked into and checked by my agents before the goods are removed from their control. And when a condition to this effect is found in a bill of lading, expressed in language which, in its ordinary and natural sense, includes all damage, whether latent or not, can the courts undertake to say it is so unreasonable that the parties could not have meant what they have said? No doubt this condition may bear hardly on consignees, but so also may the very large exceptions to the responsibility of the shipowner inserted in the body of this bill of lading. Certainly, no reasons for narrowing the scope of the condition can be gathered from the general tenor of the instrument, which is manifestly framed throughout with a view to exempt the shipowner (as far as could be foreseen) from liability for damage. It may be that this has been done to an unreasonable extent, but the plaintiffs are merchants and men of business, and cannot be relieved from an improvident contract, if it really be improvident. Possibly, in shipping under bills of lading thus framed, the merchant gets a corresponding advantage in a lower rate of freight.

None of the cases cited at the bar bear a close analogy to the present. The decisions relating to conditions common in the sales of horses, providing that the liability on the warranty shall cease at a certain date, were referred to, in which it has been held that latent defects are within them: (see Smart v. Hyde, 8 M. & W. 723; Chapman v. Gwyther, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 477; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 463.)

Reference was also made to a well-known class of decisions on policies of fire insurance, in which conditions, requiring claims to be sent in within specified periods, have been strictly construed. In a recent appeal before this tribunal from the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada (Whyte v. The Western Assurance Company, not reported) (a), in which a question arose, whether the period of thirty days for sending in proofs of the claim was a material part of the condition, Lord Justice Mellish, in delivering the opinion of the committee, observed: "It was said that, although it was a condition precedent that the proofs should be sent in, yet the period of thirty days was not material; but if that were so, then there would be no time at all appointed within which the proofs were to be sent in, and the assured might wait one or more years before he sent in his proof, and still be entitled to recover, which would appear to be entirely contrary to the true meaning of the condition." Exactly the same consequences, if the plaintiff's construction of the condition were to prevail, might happen in this case, and would be equally opposed to its meaning.

But if any limitation of the condition could be implied, it could not reasonably go further than to exclude such damage only as could not on an examination of the packages, conducted with proper care and skill at the place of removal, have been discovered, and their Lordships think it appears upon the evidence that if such an examination had taken place either at the shipping sheds at Montreal or the railway station at Toronto, the damage complained of might have been discovered. The odour of chloride of lime, even from the packages themselves, was very strong. A peculiar smell was perceived by MacFarlane, the plaintiffs' foreman, as soon as they were delivered, and he not only called the attention of the railway carmen to it, but made a memorandum on some of the receipts that the packages were damaged.

Again, Mr. Mills, a witness, whose tea formed part of the Medway's cargo, upon examining his packages on the wharf at Montreal on the day they were landed, discovered that they were damaged by chloride of lime and carbolic acid. He says the smell was quite perceptible.

The surveyors also, who examined the plaintiffs' tea on the 18th May, report that they found "the packages," as well as the contents, impregnated with the odour of chloride of lime. It is true the steredores employed in unloading the ship say they did not observe any smell about the packages; but they do not appear to have examined or even handled them. Their Lordships cannot doubt that if a competent agent of the plaintiffs, like MacFarlane,

(a) This was an action on a policy of fire insurance. The appeal was heard in March 1875, before Sir James Colvile, James and Mellish, L.J.J., and Sir M. Smith, and dismissed with costs, on the ground that it was a condition precedent in the policy that proofs of the loss sustained should be sent in within thirty days, and this condition had not been complied with by the appellant, and there was no waiver by the respondents, as contended.

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

had been ready to receive the packages, either at the shipping sheds or the railway station, the smell would have been at once detected by him, and, having detected it, he might, without difficulty, have further examined the tea by taking and testing samples from the packages in the simple and usual manner described by the surveyors. The damage would then have been fully disclosed, and a claim in respect of it might have been made before the packages were removed.

The opinion of their Lordships, whilst it sustains the second "considerant" of the judgment under appeal, rests entirely on the express condition in the bill of lading. Some of the learned judges below gave the same effect to it; but all of them found their decision, in part at least, upon the maritime law of France, and Article 1680 of the Canadian Civil Code, applying the principles derived from these sources to what, upon the evidence, they deem to be unreasonable and unfair delay on the part of the plaintiffs. It is often useful, especially in mercantile cases, to refer for illustration to the laws and usages of countries other than that whose law governs the particular case. But the judges seem to have gone further, and to have thought that a substantive defence arising from the delay might be founded upon their own law. Their Lordships, therefore, think it right to observe that, in their opinion, the bill of lading, having been made in England by the master of an English ship, is a contract to be governed and interpreted by English law, and that, whilst the presumptions arising from the conduct of the plaintiffs may properly be regarded in determining the question whether the damage was in fact done, as they assert, in the ship, neither their conduct, nor the delay in making the claim, would constitute, by English law, an answer to the action, apart from the express condition in the bill of lading: (See Peninsular and Oriental Company v. Shand, 2 Mar. Law Cas. O.S. 244; 3 Moo. P. C., N. S., 272; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 809; Lloyd v. Guibert, 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 26, 283; 4 B. & S. 100; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 602).

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment appealed from, and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ingle, Cooper, and Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Parker and Clarke.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

July 2, 1875; Feb. 25 and March 30, 1876.

(Before Lords CHELMSFORD, HATHERLEY, PENZANCE, O'HAGAN, and SELBORNE).

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER IN ENGLAND.

Marine Insurance—Policy on freight—Freight payable in advance—Total loss.

When by the terms of a charter-party a part of the freight is made payable and is paid in advance, the charterer has a right to deduct the whole amount so paid by him from any freight which may actually be earned, in case of a loss of part of the cargo, and not only a proportionate part of it.

The appellant, a shipowner, chartered his ship for a voyage from Greenock to Bombay. The charter-party provided that freight was to be paid on unloading, and right delivery of the cargo at the rate of 42s. per ton on the quantity delivered, "such freight to be paid one half in cash on signing bills of lading, the remainder on right delivery of the cargo." Half of the estimated amount of freight was paid on shipment, and the appellant insured the unpaid freight with the respondents. The ship was lost, but half the cargo was saved, and delivered without any additional payment by the charterer. The appellant then claimed as for a total loss of the unpaid half of the freight. Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that on the proper construction of the charter-party and policies he was entitled to recover as for a total loss of half the freight.

Dictum of Lord Kingsdown in Kirchner v. Venn (12 Moo. P. C. 361), explained. (a)

The appellant in this case was the owner of the ship Merchant Prince, and he chartered her to one De Mattos for a voyage from Greenock to Bombay, with a cargo of coals, freight to be paid at the rate of 42s. a ton on the quantity delivered. The freight was to be paid one half in cash on signing bills of lading, and one half on delivery of the cargo at Bombay. A cargo of 2178 tons of coal was loaded, and bills of lading signed, and 225s. was paid on account of freight. The appellant insured the freight under the charter-party with the respondents. The ship was lost within a short distance of Bombay, but about half the cargo was saved, and delivered to the consignees of the charterer free of freight.

The appellant then brought this action on the policy, seeking to recover as for a total loss of the unpaid half of the freight, but the respondents contended that he was only entitled to recover half of the unpaid freight, and they paid that amount into court.

(a) This decision firmly establishes the doctrine of English law that freight paid in advance cannot be recovered back by the consignee on the failure of the shipowner to perform his contract of carriage. Doubts sometimes been thrown upon this doctrine, but after the present decision it will be impossible for our courts to hold otherwise. This, of course, applies only to those cases in which the advance by the charterer is in the nature of freight, and is not a mere loan. The decision also puts an end to the argument often raised that the word "freight" may bear different meanings in the same charter-party. It has long been a favourite contention that where an advance is made by the charterer to the shipowner before the sailing of the ship, and advance is not freight properly so called, nor a payment made in consideration of the carriage of the goods, but is a payment made in consideration of the taking of the goods on board. This contention their Lordships have refused to adopt, pointing out that there can be no room for placing different meanings upon the same word in the same mercantile instrument, and that the time of payment cannot really affect the nature of the payment made. Hence an advance of freight must be considered as "freight" in the ordinary sense of that word, except in so far as it cannot be recovered back. Nor, unless there be an express stipulation to that effect, can an advance be treated as other than a part of the whole sum to be ultimately paid as freight, and consequently to be deducted from that whole sum, whatever it may be. An insurer or shipowner is not entitled to divide an advance into so many parts, and treat each part as a separate advance on each proportionate part of the cargo. The decision finally settles one or two points of considerable importance in mercantile law.—ED.

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

The case was tried before Brett, J. and a special jury in December 1872, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to the defendants to move to set it aside, and to enter a verdict.

A rule was accordingly obtained, but it was discharged by the Court of Common Pleas (Bovill, C.J., Brett and Grove, JJ.) as reported ante, vol. 2, p. 54.

The case was then taken on appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, where the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas was reversed by Cockburn, C.J., Mellor, J., and Amphlett, B., Cleasby and Pollock, BB., dissenting (ante, vol. 2, p. 312).

This appeal was then brought to the House of Lords, 2nd July 1875. The judges were summoned, and Kelly, C.B., Mellor, Brett, and Grove, JJ., and Pollock B., attended.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and McLeod (Cohen, Q.C. with them), appeared for the appellant.

C. Russell, Q.C. Benjamin, Q.C., and Fullarton, for the respondents.

At the conclusion of the arguments the following question of law was left by their Lordships to the learned judges, "Whether, upon the circumstances of the case, there was a total or only a partial loss of the subject matter of insurance?"

Feb. 25th, 1876.—The learned judges, having taken time to consider, delivered their opinions as follows:—

Kelly, C.B.—My Lords, I venture to think that some topics have been introduced into the discussions which have taken place in this cause which are either immaterial altogether or irrelevant. The substance of the whole case is this: The plaintiff having granted a charter-party of his ship the Merchant Prince, to carry a cargo of coals from Greenock to Bombay, the freight upon which was estimated at some 4000*l.* and upwards, received under a provision of the charter-party 2000*l.* and upwards in advance of the freight; and he insured by policies, before and after the date of the charter-party and advance, "freight payable abroad" valued at 2000*l.* He had thus secured to himself one-half the freight by the payment in advance, and he secured himself by thus insuring the other half by the policies in question. The ship was lost, but one-half of the cargo arrived at Bombay, and was landed in safety. The freight on this was met in the strict terms of the charter-party by the advance made at its execution; and the other half freight, the cargo not having reached Bombay, was lost. And the plaintiff now claims the loss as a total loss under the policies. It was only this unpaid half that he insured, and this he lost, and this I am of opinion is a total loss, and that the plaintiff is entitled to your Lordships' judgment.

Brett, J.—In this case the action was brought by the plaintiff, a shipowner, on two policies of insurance, to recover an alleged total loss of freight. The first policy described the subject matter insured as "freight valued at 2000*l.*"; the second described it as "freight payable abroad valued at 2000*l.*" The plaintiff claimed for the total loss of freight, which he alleged would, if there had been no loss, have been payable to him under a charter-party made between him as shipowner, and one De Mattos as charterer. By the charter-party, dated March 7th, 1867, the ship was to load at Greenock a cargo of coals, and proceed forthwith to Bombay, and there deliver the same. "The freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42*s.* per ton on the quantity delivered," &c., and "such freight" is to be paid, say, one-half in cash on signing bills of lading, less four months interest, &c., 5 per cent. for insurance, and 2½ per cent. on the gross amount of freight in lieu of consignment at Bombay, and "the remainder" on delivery of the cargo agreeably to bills of lading, less cost of coal short delivered, in cash, &c. The vessel to be addressed to the freighter's agent abroad, free of commission, owners to have an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, &c. Under this charter-party the charterer loaded about 2000 tons of coal on board the ship, and paid the plaintiff about 2000*l.* The bills of lading were dated April 15th, 1867. A receipt was given by the plaintiff on the same date, endorsed on the bills of lading, for the sum received, in the following terms, "being advance of half freight on within shipment, &c." The dates of the policies sued on were April 13th and April 22nd, 1867. There were four policies in all effected by the plaintiff, by which collectively the amount insured was 2000*l.* Upon the case as stated the court had power to draw inferences of fact. Half the cargo was lost, and half was delivered at Bombay.

In the Court of Common Pleas it was argued on behalf of the defendants that they had a right to treat the policies as insurances of the whole freight to be earned by the ship; because the policies were in general terms "on freight," and there was no notice of any other than the whole freight. Upon this it was answered on behalf of the plaintiff, and determined by the court, that, as matter of law, the policy in general terms must be held to take effect either upon such freight as the assured had at risk on the voyage insured, or as he had at risk and intended to insure, and as matter of fact, by deduction, that in this case the assured intended to insure the freight which he supposed he had at risk, namely, about 2000*l.*, the amount which he would have to receive at Bombay if the cargo arrived safely, and which he supposed he would lose if the cargo was lost. This decision was founded on the facts in this case, and on the cases of Irving v. Richardson (2 B. & Ad. 193), and Stephens v. The Australasian Insurance Company (ante, vol. 1, p. 458; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 585). Those cases seem to me to justify a decision that by reason of the general understanding of merchants, which has been sufficiently made known to the courts, it is to be held as matter of law, without further proof, that wherever the subject-matter of a policy is described in it in general terms, it is to be taken to cover the interest which is within its terms, which the assured has at risk, unless the contrary appear to have been the intention of the assured from other parts of the policy, or other proof.

In this case, if the matter be not one of law, it seems to me clear upon the facts that the plaintiff intended to insure not the whole charter-party freight, but the part which had not been paid to him when the ship sailed, and which he evidently estimated at 2000*l.* It will be observed that the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber assumes that this was so, and that this point was not pressed before your Lordships. For it was admitted in argument by the counsel for the respondents that the whole question must ultimately depend upon the construction of the charter-party, whether

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

the shipowner could by virtue of its claim under the circumstances anything from the charterer. "I admit," he said, "that if he could claim nothing, there was a total loss." The question, therefore, is whether, upon the proper construction of the charter-party, the shipowner could or could not have maintained a claim against the charterer for any amount of freight beyond the sum paid to him when the bills of lading were signed.

The first observation I will venture to make is that this question should be determined upon a consideration of the charter-party alone, that is to say, as if no policy had been effected. And, secondly, that the construction of it, as of any other mercantile document, should not be made to depend on its strict grammatical form, or on the apparent meaning of any one phrase in it taken by itself, but on the apparent expressed meaning as to practical results of the whole. It should be construed by considering the terms of it, and the decisions in former cases of terms similar, though perhaps not identical. Upon charter-parties and bills of lading similarly framed, the disputes found in the books to have been raised have been whether the money advanced should be treated as a loan or as an advance of freight; if the first, whether it should be deducted from freight, if freight should be earned, or be paid back wholly or in part to the charterer, if no freight, or not a sufficient amount of freight should be earned by delivery at the port of discharge; if the second, whether if in fact paid, it, or any part of it should be paid back; or, if not paid, whether it could be claimed by the shipowner where, in either case, by perils of the sea the cargo should not be delivered at the port of discharge. The first case on the subject is the Anonymous case (2 Show. 283): "Advance money paid before, if in part of freight, and named so in the charter-party, although the ship be lost before it came to a delivering port, yet wages are due according to the proportion of the freight paid before; for the freighters cannot have their money." As the terms of the charter-party are not given the case is of little assistance as to the construction of the present charter-party, but it suggests a distinction between charter-parties, namely, that by some the advanced payment is a payment in part of freight, and in others not, and if not the advance must be a loan; and it is an authority that in the reign of Charles II. the acknowledged understanding and rule was that money to be paid in advance of freight by the terms of the contract of carriage could not, if paid, be demanded back in consequence of the loss of the ship and cargo on the voyage. In Blakey v. Dixon (2 B. & P. 321), the declaration alleged a promise to pay the money due for freight, and a delivery of the bill of lading, and then alleged that "by reason thereof" the defendant was liable to pay the freight. There was no allegation of the arrival of the ship or of the delivery of the goods. Upon a special demurrer, Lord Eldon and others decided for the defendant; but the judgments obviously intimate that if the promise or contract to pay the freight on the delivery of the bill of lading had been set out with sufficient particularity, the claim might have been supported without alleging the arrival of the ship or the delivery of the cargo. Such intimation is authority for the proposition that if by the contract there is to be a prepayment of the freight, or part of it, an action may be maintained for such money before the cargo has arrived, or although it be lost. In Mashier v. Buller (1 Camp. 84), the evidence consisted of the bills of lading, some of which stated that the goods were to be delivered at Lisbon, "freight for the said goods being paid in London," and others "the shippers paying freight for the said goods in London." The ship sailed, but was lost in the Downs; and Lord Ellenborough held that the words in these bills of lading only meant that the freight should be paid in London instead of in Lisbon, and that they by no means dispensed with the performance of the voyage. He added that "if the defendants had paid the freight upon the shipment of the goods, they might have recovered every penny of it back again." The decision, it should be observed, is that by virtue of these bills of lading, expressed as they were, the only stipulation was that the freight should be paid in London instead of at Lisbon; that is to say that it did not alter the time of payment, but only the place. The freight, according to that construction, was not payable until after the ship had arrived at Lisbon, though it was to be paid in London instead of in Lisbon. The case is no authority upon any question of law arising where money to be paid for the carriage of goods in ships is by the contract to be paid before the delivery of the goods. In Andrew v. Moorhouse (5 Taunt. 435), the shipowners were held to be entitled to recover, after the loss of the ship on the voyage, the whole amount of freight for the whole cargo shipped, because the contract of carriage was found to be a contract to carry the goods to the Cape for 5*l.* per ton, and there to deliver them, "freight being paid," and also that "the 5*l.* was to be paid in London." The court held that if the true construction of the contract was that the freight was to be paid in London on the sailing of the ship, the shipowner was entitled to recover the whole of it, although none of the cargo had been carried to the port of delivery by reason of the whole having been lost at sea. No point was made of each party bearing half the loss; the charterer had to pay the whole of the freight after the loss, because he had agreed that the whole should be prepaid. In De Silve v. Kendall (4 M. and S. 37), the action was brought by the charterer to recover money paid in advance. The charter-party was as near as possible in the same form as in the present case. It was, amongst other things, to convey cotton from Maranham to Liverpool, at and after the rate of 2½ annas per lb. weight, "for each and every pound of cotton which should be delivered at the King's Beam at Liverpool, such freight to be paid as follows, viz., as much cash as may be found necessary for the vessel's disbursements at Maranham to be advanced, &c., "free from interest and commission," &c., and the residue of such freight to be paid on the delivery of the cargo in Liverpool. The plaintiff advanced 192*l.* at Maranham for the ship's disbursements. A cargo was loaded, but the ship was captured on the voyage, and never arrived at Liverpool. It was argued that the advance was either a loan or an advance of part of the freight liable to be refunded if in the result no homeward freight should become due. It was held that the advance was a prepayment of freight, and that by the law of England prepaid freight is not to be returned because by accident the cargo is lost. In order to interpret the charter-party all the judges

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

upon the phrases, "such freight to be paid as follows," and "the residue of such freight to be paid," &c., which are the words used in the present charter-party. They also rely upon the stipulation that the advance is to be "free from interest and commission." In Manfield v. Maitland (4 B. & Ald. 582), the action was on a policy to insure an acceptance of 219*l*. The acceptance had been given by the plaintiff, the assured, in pursuance of a charter-party by which he had chartered a ship to carry deals from Quebec to Bridgwater, and there deliver them, being paid freight for the deals 10*l*. 8*s*. per 100, one-half the freight to be paid in cash on unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the remainder "by bill in London at four months. The captain to be supplied with cash for the ship's use." The ship was lost. It was held that the plaintiff had no insurable interest under the policy, because, on a true construction of this charter-party the advance was not a prepayment of any part of the freight, but only a loan; and being a loan the plaintiff was entitled to deduct it from freight, if freight became payable, and to obtain its repayment if no freight became payable. In that charter-party the whole of the freight was made payable on unloading and right delivery, half of it in cash, and half by a bill to be then given. The stipulation as to the advance was not incorporated into a sentence headed "such freight to be paid," &c. There were no words such as "the residue of such freight to be paid on delivery," &c. In Saunders v. Drew (3 B. & Ad. 445), the action was brought to recover back money paid in advance. The charter-party was, in part, for the hire of the ship for an intermediate voyage at the rate of 1*l*. per ton per month for every ton of the ship's register tonnage, the charterer to pay four months "of such monthly hire" in advance, and the "balance that may be due at the termination of the period" for which she may be hired, in cash, at the port where she may be discharged. The ship was hired for the intermediate voyage, and the plaintiff paid in advance 1734*l*. for four months' time. The ship was lost two months after the hiring. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover any part of the 1734*l*. because it was in terms a prepayment of part of the freight. There was no suggestion made in argument or judgment that the charterer and shipowner should each bear half the loss, and that, therefore, the plaintiff should recover the payment in respect of one of the two lost months. In Hall v. Janson (4 E. & B. 500), a declaration on a policy was held good on general demurrer, because it alleged that the insurance was expressed in the policy to be on freight, and then alleged as a fact outside the policy "that E. S. was interested in the money so insured, as being money advanced to him as owner of the ship, on account of freight, and being subject to the risk of the said voyage." It was held that it was consistent with this allegation that although by the contract of carriage the advance was to be on account of freight, it was stipulated by the same contract that it should be returned if the ship were lost. This case suggests prepaid freight, but accompanied by an express stipulation that it should be repaid if the cargo should not arrive. It is however, in truth, a case of pleading. In Hicks v. Shield (7 E. & B. 633; 26 L. J. 205, Q.B.), the charter-party was between the plaintiff as charterer, and the defendants as owners, to carry rice from Rangoon to London, and there deliver the same, on being paid freight as follows: 5*l*. 5*s*. per ton net rice delivered, &c., "cash for ship's disbursement to be advanced" to the extent of 300*l*., free of interest, but "subject to insurance," and 2½ per cent. commission in full of port and pilotage charges, &c. The freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery, &c. The plaintiff advanced 300*l*.; the ship was lost. The question was whether the defendant was bound to repay the whole or any part. It was argued that the advance was a mere loan, but it was held otherwise, because of the indication arising from the stipulation that the advance might be insured. In this case the stipulation as to insurance was relied on in the absence of such phrases as "such freight to be paid as follows," and "the residue of such freight to be paid on delivery." It is an authority as to the effect of the stipulation as to insurance, and shows that it indicates that the advance is an advance of freight, and is not by way of loan. Again, there was no allusion to the idea of each party bearing half the loss. In Jackson v. Isaacs (3 H. & N. 405) the declaration was on a charter-party between the plaintiff as owner, and the defendant as charterer, by which the ship was to carry a cargo of salt to Fernando Po, and there deliver the same on being paid freight at 20*s*. per ton on the quantity shipped, "payable by charterer's acceptance at four months on ship clearing at the custom house, Liverpool, subject to insurance." Breach for not giving the acceptance. Plea, that the freight was to be paid in advance "subject to insurance," and that the plaintiff never did insure for the benefit of the defendant, or otherwise, and that the ship and cargo were wholly lost. Demurrer. The plea was held to be bad. This case shows the true meaning of the stipulation that the charterer will advance freight, or part of it, "subject to insurance" or "less insurance." If there were no advance the shipowner would have to insure. If the charterer were to advance without deduction the shipowner would obtain the whole freight without the burden of having to insure, and the charterer would pay the full freight, and besides have to insure. In order to restore the position of both to what it would be if the freight were paid at the end instead of at the beginning of the voyage, the advance is paid less insurance. The shipowner gets the freight at the beginning, less what he would have had to pay for insurance if he were only to get the full freight at the end; the charterer pays the freight at the beginning less the amount which he must, for doing so, have to pay for insurance against the risk cast upon him by the prepayment. This is precisely the explanation of the present charter-party given by Cleasby, B. in the Exchequer Chamber. In Byrne v. Schiller (L. Rep. 6 Ex. 20; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 741; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 514) in error (ante, vol. 1, p. 511; L. Rep. 6 Ex. 319; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211) the action was on a charter-party between the plaintiff as owner and the defendant as charterer, to recover a sum of 737*l*., alleged to be due for advance freight, although the ship was lost on the voyage. In the Court of Error it was argued that a prepayment of freight is not final, but can be recovered if the goods are lost, and the freight, therefore, never earned. In answer, Cockburn, C.J. said: "We are all agreed that the law is too

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

firmly settled for us to depart from it even in a court of appeal, that where freight is paid in advance it cannot be recovered." No one suggested that anything less than the whole advance freight was payable, although the whole cargo was lost. It becomes necessary in the next place to consider the true import of the often quoted words of Lord Kingsdown in Kirchner v. Venus (12 Moo. P. C. 361). In that case there was no dispute that the freight was payable by the shipper in advance. It was agreed that it should be paid by him in advance at Liverpool. The port of discharge was Sydney. The bills of lading were indorsed for value. The shipper did not make the stipulated payment in advance. The captain at Sydney, claiming a lien on the cargo for freight, refused to deliver to the assignee of the bill of lading. The Privy Council held that there was no lien. It was not necessary to say that advance freight was not freight at all, it was only necessary to say that the incident of lien did not attach to freight so to be paid, and I think that is all that is said by Lord Kingsdown. He does not say that the money payable in advance is not freight at all. The decision is that where the agreed time of payment of the freight is not contemporaneous with the time of delivery of the cargo, there is no implied right of lien. The observations of Lord Kingsdown are pointed to that question. The true meaning of them is, that so far as concerns a question of nothing being due until delivery, or a question of lien, it is the same in effect as if the money were to be paid for taking the goods on board, and as if it were not to be paid for carrying them. The case of Tamvaco v. Simpson (13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 160; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 249), in the Exchequer Chamber (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 893; L. Rep. 1 C. P. 363; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 343), is in accordance with the case in the Privy Council. The case of Watson v. Shankland (ante, vol. 2, p. 115; L. Rep. 2 H. L. Sc. 304; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 349) was an appeal from Scotland. There is great doubt whether the English rule as to prepaid freight applies in Scotland. The decision, however, was that, assuming the advance to be a loan, it could not be recovered. If in the present case the advance could be treated as a loan, it might be necessary to consider that case with the utmost attention, but it would, as it seems to me, be impossible to hold that without overruling all the cases on this subject, or the doctrine assumed in them all, which have been decided since the time of Charles II.

I have drawn attention to all the cases in order to show how uniform the view has been as to what construction is to be put upon shipping documents in the form of the present charter-party, and as to the uniform, though perhaps anomalous rule, that the money to be paid in advance of freight must be paid though the goods are before payment lost by perils of the sea, and cannot be recovered if paid before the goods are so lost. Although this course of business may in theory be anomalous, I think its origin and existence are capable of a reasonable explanation. It arose in the case of the long Indian voyages. The length of voyage would keep the shipowner for too long a time out of money, and freight is much more difficult to pledge as security to third persons than goods represented by a bill of lading. Therefore the shipper agreed to make the advance on what he would ultimately have to pay, and for a consideration took the risk, in order to obviate repayment which disarranges business transactions.

It seems to me that, on a review of all the cases, the true construction of the charter-party in this case is that the 2000*l.* which was to be paid, and was paid, in advance, was a prepayment of the freight payable under the charter-party, and that no part of it could be recovered by the charterer from the shipowner, and that the stipulation as to deduction for insurance did not alter this right. I do not understand that it is denied that the freight to be earned by the shipowner in this case was 2*l.* per ton on the amount of coal delivered at Bombay. Indeed, to hold otherwise would be flatly to contradict the charter-party. But it is suggested, and was held in the Exchequer Chamber, that the payment under such a contract is not in respect of the freight which is eventually earned, but of the freight which would be earned if the whole cargo should arrive and be delivered, so as to be a prepayment of so much per ton on every ton of the cargo shipped. Let this be tested on the assumption that no part of the advance can be paid back, which, I submit, is conclusively proved to be a correct assumption by the cases I have cited, and that there is no insurance by either party. Taking the figures of the present case, the charterer must, upon the assumption, pay in effect more than 2*l.* per ton in every case except where the whole cargo is delivered; and if the shipowner is to pay back a part, then either part is a mere loan, or money which as prepaid freight must be paid back, both of which views are contrary to all the cases. Whereas, on the contrary, if the amount of freight earned is set down according to the quantity of cargo delivered, and is debited to the charterer, and he is credited against it as a whole with the amount paid in advance, every word of the charter-party is satisfied, and nothing is done in conflict with any decided case. It follows that, in my opinion, the shipowner, the plaintiff in this case, could not have claimed anything more from the charterer than the 2000*l.* which had been prepaid; that the only freight which the plaintiff had at risk was the balance of freight, if any, to be received at Bombay if the ship with sufficient cargo arrived there; that the freight which was insured was that balance of freight which was to be received at Bombay if the cargo should arrive safely, and lost if it did not, and that there was a total loss of such insured freight.

I entirely agree with the judgment of Cleasby, B., in the Exchequer Chamber, and with the reasons given by him for it. I cannot agree with those judgments which seem to me to be rested on suggested equities between the charterer and shipowner which never existed, and on suggested equities between different underwriters, which, if they existed, should not be considered in this case.

I answer your Lordships' question by saying that, in my opinion, there was a total loss. In this opinion my brother Pollock agrees.

Grove, J.—I agree with the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, and that of Cleasby and Pollock, BB., in the Exchequer Chamber. I can add nothing to the reasons given. I answer your Lordships' question by saying that, in my opinion, there was a total loss.

Mellor, J.—My Lords, in answer to the

OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

propounded by your Lordships, I am of opinion that under the circumstances there was a total loss only, and not a total loss of the subject matter of insurance. I expressed my opinion to that effect in the judgment which I delivered in the Exchequer Chamber, to which I am now to refer. I forbear to trouble your Lordships with any further observations on the case, especially as I entirely concur with the opinion of my brother Blackburn, expressed in the answer which he is prepared to give to the question propounded by your Lordships.

My Lords, in my opinion there is only a partial loss of the subject matter of insurance. My reasons for this opinion are as follows:

First, the reward payable to the carrier for the safe carriage and delivery of goods; it is payable only on the safe carriage and delivery; and goods are lost on the voyage nothing is payable; and in cases where the freight is made payable at so much per ton of the goods, and part of the goods only are delivered, a proportionate part only of the freight is payable. But a sum of money payable by the shippers of the goods at the port of shipment does not acquire the legal character of freight, because it is described under another name in a charter-party. It is, in effect, money to be paid for taking the goods on board, and undertaking to carry them, and not for carrying them. This, which I have taken with a slight alteration from the judgment of Lord Kingsdown in Kirchner v. Venus (12 Moore P. C. 361), in my opinion is an accurate statement of the law. An advance of money may be advanced as a loan on the security of the freight to be earned, and in such a case the money may be recovered though the freight is lost; but I think it has always been held that a stipulation which shows that the merchant is to advance the amount, is almost conclusive to show that it is not a loan on the security of freight to be earned, but an advance of freight (Hicks v. The Ship "Ed" (7 E. & B. 633), Traves v. Worms (19 N. S. 159; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 548; 1 R. Law Cas. O. S. 209); and if it is an advance of freight, then by our law it cannot be recovered whole or in part, though the ship, or the cargo, or part of them are lost, and consequently the freight is in whole or part unearned: see v. Schiller, ante, vol. 1, p. 511.) Merely to attach weight to a stipulation as to who is to bear the risk of loss; I cannot doubt that both the plaintiff and the defendant, the charterer, perfectly understood that the money paid on signing the bill of lading under the charter-party was an advance of freight, which was to be at the risk of the owner of the goods, and could not be recovered though the goods were lost; that it was in effect, to use Lord Kingsdown's language, not freight for carrying the goods, but money paid for taking the goods on board, and undertaking to carry them. It might be secured by the owner of the goods either under a description of "prepaid freight," or as "the assessed value of the goods by prepayment of freight," which latter form was adopted in this case, the charter-party being expressed "freight to be 42s. per ton, one guinea to be paid on the bill of lading on delivery, and one guinea in advance on signing bills of lading," there could have been no dispute about the matter. The loss of a certain number of tons would have caused the shipowner to lose a proportionate number of guineas, because his freight, pro tanto, was not earned; and would also have caused the owner of the goods to lose an equal number of guineas, because he had lost the benefit of the number of guineas he had paid for the undertaking to carry his coals. The loss of each individual ton would have occasioned the same loss to each, and in the event that has happened there would be a loss of 50 per cent. on this policy on the freight, and also a loss of 50 per cent. on De Mattos' policy on "the coals, and increased value thereof by prepayment of freight."

The defendants contend, and I think rightly, that on the true construction of the charter-party, the effect is the same as if it had been expressly stated as above. But the plaintiff puts a different construction on it; he contends that it was intended that the advance was to be against whatever freight was ultimately earned, and at the end of the voyage to be deducted from whatever freight was earned, and, consequently, that though it was in one sense the risk of the owner of the goods, as it could not be recovered in any event, yet he was to lose nothing in respect of the prepaid freight, or the enhanced value of the goods, until half or more of the goods were lost: that the loss of the first ton of coals was a loss to the shipowners of two guineas of freight, and no loss at all of the money paid in advance, nor of the increased value of the goods, and that so it continued till half of the coals were lost, and then that the loss of each ton above the half would be no loss to the shipowner at all, but a loss to the owner of the goods of two guineas out of the money paid in advance. That, in short, under this charter-party, the loss of the freight was total as soon as half the coals were lost, and the risk to the owner of the goods, as far as regards the prepaid freight or enhanced value of the goods, did not commence till half the coals were lost.

Had the underwriters pleaded and proved that the insured did not disclose this peculiar nature of the charter-party, making the risk double what in ordinary circumstances it would have been, that would have been a good defence. They have not so pleaded, and therefore we must act on the supposition that the charter-party was disclosed, in which case, if the underwriters misconstrued it, it was their own fault. But, as already said, I do not think they have misconstrued it; and what is the true construction of the charter-party is really the matter in dispute in this cause. It is very difficult to argue on the construction of such an instrument, or to do more than state one's views of what it means. The words are, "freight to be paid on unloading, and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42s. per ton on the quantity delivered," and had it stopped there I think there would be no room for doubt that it meant 42s. per ton for each ton delivered, and nothing for those not delivered, so that a partial loss of the goods would be a loss of a proportionate part of the freight. But it goes on, "such freight to be paid, say, one half in cash on signing bills of lading, less certain deductions, including 5 per cent. for insurance. That clearly expresses that 21s. less these deductions was to be paid for every ton put on board, without reference to whether it was all delivered or not, "and the remainder on right delivery of the cargo." I think that means the remainder of the 42s. per ton on the right delivery

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

of each ton. Had the broker who drew up the charter-party adopted language similar to that used in Byrne v. Schiller (ante, vol. 1, p. 511), and said, "the amount paid on signing the bill of lading to be deducted from freight on settlement thereof," it would clearly have expressed what the appellants say was the intention. But in the absence of those or any similar words, I think that is not the meaning of the words used. The construction contended for by the appellant seems to me forced and unnatural, and not that which mercantile men would put upon such a contract. I do not like to make assertions as to what mercantile men would say, knowing as I do that other judges would make contrary assertions; and we have very little to assist us in ascertaining what merchants really would think. I see that my brother Cleasby, in his judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, attaches weight to the conduct of the master in delivering up the coals without payment of the 21s. per ton, as evidence of the understanding of merchants on the construction of the charter-party; and this was repeated on the argument at your Lordships' bar. I am not sure that a legitimate argument as to the mercantile understanding can be deduced from the conduct of parties after the dispute has arisen, and in no case do I attach much weight to the conduct of a captain seeking to charge underwriters, whom all captains are too apt to think their legitimate prey; I should myself attach more weight to the conduct of the insurance brokers, who worded both policies as if they believed that the risk as to the freight and as to the enhanced value of the goods was the ordinary risk, subject to a partial loss or the loss of any part of the goods. Had De Mattos and his brokers thought that no part of the prepaid freight, which formed more than half of the value which he insured was to be lost till more than one-half of the goods were lost, so as to render the risk as to this much less than the risk as to the goods themselves, he would, I should think, not have shaped his policy so as to lump these two unequal risks together. He would, I think, have severed the two in his policy, and have required that the premium for the smaller risks should be less, instead of insuring as he did, as if his risk as to the enhanced value of the goods was the same as that on the goods themselves.

I have only further to observe that the terms of the charter-party, "42s. per ton delivered to be paid one-half in cash on signing bills of lading," are exactly equivalent to saying, "21s. to be paid on every ton put on board." If no disaster happened the number of tons delivered would be the same as the number of tons put on board, but I do not think it an accurate statement to say that the payment was to be one-half of the estimated freight, which is the phrase used by each of the judges in the Court of Common Pleas, and I cannot but think that a fallacy lurks under this, to my mind, inappropriate expression.

I have only to add that where there has been such a difference of opinion on the question of what is the intention of the parties as expressed in this charter-party, it is impossible to say that the meaning is clear. It will appear different to different minds. I can only say that to me the intention appears to be to express that which the respondents say has been expressed.

And, such being my opinion, I answer your Lordships' question by saying that there was only a partial loss of the subject matter of insurance.

Their Lordships took time to consider, and on March 30.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD CHELMSFORD.—My Lords, this appeal is from a judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in an action brought by the plaintiff on two policies of insurance to recover a total loss of freight. The Court of Common Pleas unanimously gave judgment in his favour, but the Court of Exchequer Chamber reversed that judgment by a majority of three to two, holding that there was only a partial loss of the subject matter of insurance, and the learned judges who have been summoned to assist your Lordships have differed in opinion; so that in the result there are five judges in favour of the plaintiff, and four in favour of the defendant. In this difference of opinion it is impossible not to feel that the question is one of some difficulty. It appears to me to depend altogether upon the proper construction of the charter-party. [His Lordship read the charter-party, and, after going through the facts of the case, continued:]

In considering the question it is necessary in the first place to determine the character of the payment which was made by the charterer at the time of signing the bills of lading. Was it an advance in the nature of a loan, or was it a prepayment of half the freight, the whole of which was to be earned by the unloading and delivery of the cargo at Bombay? It is unnecessary to consider the case of Kirchner v. Venus (11 Moo. P. C. 361), which was often referred to in the course of the argument, but which appears to me to have turned entirely upon the question of lien, so that the language used with respect to payments made by the shippers of goods at the port of discharge not acquiring the legal character of freight, must be received with some qualification. But this case is altogether removed from the authority of that case, because here the parties, by their charter-party, have agreed that the payment shall be the advance of half the freight, and that the shipowner shall have an absolute lien for freight. The charter-party contains a provision for the charterer to deduct from the payment of half freight five per cent. for insurance, and Blackburn, J. in his opinion delivered to the House, stated "that it had always been held that a stipulation that the merchant is to insure the amount, is almost conclusive to show that it is not a loan on security of freight to be earned, but an advance of freight." There can be no doubt, therefore, that the sum paid by De Mattos was a prepayment of freight, and as such, according to settled authorities, could not be recovered again. That portion of the freight received by the plaintiff was, therefore, never at risk on the voyage insured.

But then the question arises, What was the portion of freight which was covered by this prepayment? On the part of the defendants it was contended that under the words of the charter-party the freight being payable not in a gross sum, but after the rate of 42s. per ton of coals on the quantity delivered, the freight must be distributed over the whole cargo at the rate of 42s. for each ton, which will be equivalent to the payment of 21s. on every ton of the cargo on board, leaving 21s. to be paid for freight.

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

entire cargo delivered. If this mode of calculating the freight is adopted, the plaintiff's loss would, of course, be only a partial one. But I am not disposed to take this view of the stipulation as to payment of freight in the charter-party. I think that the freight payable is the freight upon the whole quantity of coals delivered at the rate of 42s. per ton, and the part which was prepaid was assumed upon an estimate of half of that quantity. If the parties had intended that the prepayment should be calculated upon the footing of one half of the cargo, at so much per ton, nothing would have been easier than to have expressed this in words. The bill of lading was signed for 2178 tons, the half freight was to be paid on signing the bill of lading, and the receipt was indorsed on the bill of lading. If the prepayment was meant to be applied to half the rate of freight over the whole number of tons of coal shipped, the amount could have been easily ascertained, and the intention clearly expressed. The manner in which the half of the freight was agreed upon satisfies me that the sum paid was taken generally as representing one half of the freight of the entire cargo at the rate of 42s. per ton. This being my view of the case, it follows that the plaintiff never had more than half the freight as a gross sum at risk on the voyage insured. If all the coals had been delivered he would have had to receive the amount of the whole agreed freight, minus the 2286*l.* already paid. In the event which occurred he had secured himself against the loss of one half of the freight by the prepayment; the only insurable interest in the freight which remained to him was the unpaid half, the whole of which he lost by the perils of the seas, and, therefore, his loss was a total loss.

I think the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought to be reversed.

LORD HATHERLEY.—My Lords, I concur entirely in the view which has been taken of the case before us by my noble and learned friend who has preceded me in expressing his opinion upon it.

The two points to be considered are, first, what is the insurance that has been effected by the policy, and the subject matter thereby insured; and we are led in consideration of that point to the further question as to what was the contract between the insurer and the person with whom he bargained, as the charterer of the ship, in order to ascertain what were the perils of the sea against which the assured desired so to protect himself.

Now we must bear in mind in this inquiry, in the first instance, that if there be any question or doubt (I think in truth we shall find there is none) as to what the subject matter of insurance is, then on principle it is to be held in all cases that that in respect of which the insurance is made is that which is capable of being a subject matter of insurance, namely, that which is at risk; and that in regarding the contract of insurance, we must not assume, and we cannot in any way consistently with law assume, that the insured is endeavouring to effect a policy upon that which is at no risk whatever. Next, when we come to look at the contract itself, it being a contract of freight, we have to remember that for a very long time it has been settled in our maritime law that prepaid freight cannot be recovered. I think when we consider these two points we shall be led very easily and safely to the solution of the difficulty which appears to have arisen in the case before us. We have now had the advantage of hearing the opinions of several judges who, both in the court below and also in your Lordship's house, have expressed their opinions upon the matter; and we have had the benefit of hearing the arguments upon which these opinions were founded, as well as the arguments which were adduced at the bar. Therefore it may well be that a subject which has been one of considerable doubt, and has been supposed to be one of difficulty, before arriving at this stage of the argument, may, without presumption on my part, appear to me to be free from difficulty as regards the final conclusions we are bound to arrive at.

In the first place, the contract of insurance is an insurance of freight. The question is, what is that freight that was so insured? To answer that question we look at the charter-party which was entered into between the shipowner and the charterer; and that charter-party we find to be a contract or engagement on the part of the charterer with reference to a cargo of coals to be delivered at Bombay, that he will pay freight "on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42s. per ton on the quantity delivered," neither more nor less. He is not to pay more freight than at that rate upon whatever is delivered. That is the sum and substance of his agreement. But then as to the mode of paying the freight, instead of waiting until the time of delivery as regards the whole cargo, he engages that he will pay "one half in cash on signing bills of lading, less four months interest." That is the discount on the payment in respect of its being made at once, and before the period of delivery at Bombay. "Less four months interest, and less 5 per cent. for insurance." Now what seems to have grown up to be the practice in shipping transactions of this character is founded very probably upon the determination of the courts of law that prepaid freight cannot be recovered. What seems to have happened is that the parties who are desirous of having the freight prepaid to a certain extent, in order to avoid being kept out of their money during a long voyage, have entered into an arrangement with the charterer to this effect: I shall wish to have my money in hand, to some amount at all events, upon this charter of freight, I therefore stipulate with you that some of this money shall be paid down (in this case one half), but I will give a rebate of interest, which is in effect discounting this prepayment; and I will give a further rebate of insurance, because, inasmuch as you are making this payment, and inasmuch as you cannot recover it in the event of there being a loss of the cargo, the risk becomes yours, not mine. What would ordinarily be the risk of the shipowner with regard to the freight so prepaid is transferred in this way to the charterer, and the shipowner has the money in his pocket; and having it in pocket, and seeing that it cannot be recovered, it is at no risk. Whatever loss happens at sea he retains that money, and therefore, if there be a total loss of the whole cargo, the loss in respect of this prepayment of freight falls upon the person who has so prepaid it. Consequently, a custom seems to have grown up of allowing a sum by way of insurance, in order to compensate the person making this prepayment for the risk he thereby runs, inasmuch as he cannot recover it if there be a total loss of the cargo. That being so, you find this state of things: as to a moiety of this freight the ship-

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

owner is quite safe; he cannot want to insure it, he has got it. But as to the other moiety, he is not safe as regards the perils of the sea, because if there should be a total loss, and if he should not be able to deliver any part of the goods, then he would get no more freight. He has got one moiety safe in his pocket; the other moiety is that which is at risk, and that he can insure. Therefore, when you look at the contract of insurance in this case, and ask as to which of the moieties of freight the insurance is effected, the answer must be that the shipowner has effected the insurance upon the unpaid moiety, which may be lost entirely to him. He cannot effect an insurance upon that which is at no risk; therefore he must be taken to have done that which only he rightly could do, namely, to have insured against that which is at risk, the other moiety of the freight, which may be lost to him in consequence of the perils of the sea. On the other hand, what is the position of the charterer? It is this: he has agreed to pay 42s. per ton only on whatever is delivered to him; he has paid down to the extent of 21s. per ton; he can have only 21s. per ton more to pay, if the whole of the cargo is delivered to him; but supposing there is no more delivered to him than the 21s. per ton would cover, what is then to happen? Why, he is entitled to say, you have delivered to me half the cargo, I was only to pay you 4000l. for the 2000 tons of coal, if you delivered the whole quantity; you have delivered to me, instead of 2000 tons, only 1000 tons. I have paid you for 1000 tons already, and I am not to pay more. Otherwise, if you were to say that the charterer is to pay in respect of the half of the cargo saved, that is 1000 tons, he would be paying 3l. for every ton of coal delivered. Would he not have a right to say, you have delivered to me 1000 tons; I paid 2l. per ton on 1000 tons before the ship started, under the contract I entered into, and now you ask for another 1l. in respect of the portion of the coals which has been saved, there being only one-half saved altogether; in that way you are making me pay 3l. per ton for the coals delivered as to which I entered into an agreement to pay you 2l. per ton, and no more. When we look at the case in that simple way, it appears to me that the whole difficulty is at once solved. On the one hand you have the charterer saying, I am not to be compelled to pay more than I agreed to pay; On the other hand you have the other party insuring, not the freight he has got in his pocket, but freight that is still at risk, and which he may lose by the loss of half the cargo.

Having said this much, I have very little more to add upon the subject. But, with regard to the view taken by Blackburn, J., for whose opinion I have the highest respect, it appears to me that he is under error when, in advising your Lordships, he thus states the case. He says that the contention of the plaintiffs in the cause is this: "That in short, under this charter-party, the loss of the freight was total as soon as half the coals were lost, and the risk to the owner of the goods, as far as regards the prepaid freight, or enhanced value of the goods, did not commence till after the coals were lost." But, as I said before, instead of being a total loss of freight to him he had got half the freight in his pocket. No doubt, when half the coals were lost he lost half the freight, but he had got the other half already in his pocket. I cannot conceive how by any process of reasoning, on the one hand, the shipowner can be taken to have insured what he had already got, or, on the other hand, how the charterer should be called upon to pay a higher freight than he had contracted to pay, namely, 42s. per ton. I do not think that the case of Kirchner v. Venus (12 Moore P.C.C. 361) has any bearing upon the case before your Lordships. Of course, any opinion of Lord Kingsdown is always cited by those who can cite it as an authority as all for their proposition, and it certainly carries with it great weight. But Brett, J., whose opinion is of very great value, I think, in assisting your Lordships to arrive at a correct view of this case, dealt with Kirchner v. Venus in the mode in which, in my opinion, it ought to be dealt with, and in which all judgments should be dealt with, namely, by taking it as applied to the subject matter. What Lord Kingsdown there says is this: In the first place, it is not that prepayments are not freight, but that they are not the same thing as freight, having all the legal incidents of freight; and, in the second place, there is the case of lien. Applying Lord Kingsdown's opinion to the subject matter, you will not find him saying that prepaid freight is not freight, because it is freight to all intents and purposes. In settling the account you say, "That is part of the freight," in this case and in every other case where freight comes to be adjusted. And what you find to be the course of shipowners and merchants dealing in this way with regard to the affreightment of vessels is this, the real transaction takes this form, the risk of so much as is prepaid is transferred to the charterer, instead of being at the risk of the shipowner, the latter taking the money and keeping it in his pocket under all circumstances, whatever may happen. In respect of that an allowance is made for insurance. When you come to look at it in this point of view, you see how this course of proceeding has naturally arisen. And in truth, if we were to say that the plaintiff had not insured the freight, which he has entirely lost, on account of the total freight earned not amounting to more than a set-off to the half that has already been paid, if we were to say that that was the result, we should, as it appears to me, disturb the whole of those contracts which are made in the form of the one we have now before us in this case, and which seem to have become tolerably frequent—we should be in effect saddling the charterer before us with regard to what was the position between him and the shipowner, with a greater payment than say that he had contracted to make.

Some difficulty, no doubt, arose in the mind of one of the learned judges in the court below, Amphlett, B., in consequence of the charterer having himself effected an insurance on the cargo of coals in the form of an insurance of the coals, value increased by freight prepaid; so that he said it appeared to him that the result would be to make the different underwriters by whom the insurance had been effected pay twice over in respect of this loss. Whether or not the underwriters could have resisted the claim I will not stop to inquire, because I think there is another answer to the argument. But J. has pointed out that answer also, as he has done with almost every part of the case, with great clearness. He says the insurance so effected was effected on a valued policy, and if there is any apparent lack of justice towards the underwriters with reference to recovering upon

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

policy, it arises from the law allowing these valued policies. This being taken as a valued policy payment had to be made, although it might possibly be that the insurer's interest was not such as, but for the law allowing valued policies, could have been made the subject of contract with the underwriter. We have nothing to do with that here. All we have to do in the present case is to consider what is the engagement which the assured (here the plaintiff) has entered into with those who accepted the risk, and for that purpose to look at the contract which was entered into between him and the charterer; and when we look at that contract the whole matter comes out plainly, that what was insured is exactly that which has been lost to him in consequence of the perils of the sea.

Lord PENZANCE.—My Lords, the appellant brings his action upon two policies of insurance, one on "freight valued at 2000l." the other on "freight payable abroad valued at 2000l.," and he claims a total loss. The answer of the underwriters is that the loss is only partial, as he might lawfully have claimed a part of the freight said to have been lost, from the charterer of his vessel, and whether he could do so or not depends on the terms of his charter-party. There is, therefore, in substance, but one question in this case, the proper construction of that charter-party as to the amount that became ultimately payable for freight in the events that happened.

It is admitted on both sides that freight was earned in respect of a quantity of coals delivered, to the extent of what may in round numbers be called half the cargo; but it is contended on the one side, that as freight to that amount had already been paid in advance there was nothing more for the merchant to pay; on the other, that the money so paid in advance was not all paid in discharge of such freight as might ultimately turn out to be earned, but was to the extent of a half only paid on that amount; and consequently that there still remained a quarter of the entire freight for the merchant to pay. This latter view has been upheld by the Exchequer Chamber in the judgment now under appeal, and I am of opinion that it cannot be sustained. I will test it in the first place by considering what results will flow from its adoption.

It is incontestable that if in accordance with this proposition the merchant should actually pay, in addition to the half freight previously advanced by him, another quarter of the entire freight, the result would be that the shipowner would have received three-quarters of the entire freight, though he had earned only half of that freight by carrying half the cargo safely to its destination. The result is so startling, and so irreconcilable, not only with apparent justice, but with all notions of freight as a payment earned and measured by the quantity of goods safely carried and delivered, that it challenges the closest attention to the proposition upon which it is based. But it is, moreover, directly opposed to the actual language of the charter-party itself. It is impossible that the shipowner should receive this three-quarters of the entire freight for the carriage and delivery of half the cargo only, without doing violence to the express provision of the charter-party, by which the amount payable for freight is defined. That provision is in these words: "The freight is to be paid at and after the rate of 42s. a ton on the quantity delivered." There is no other provision in the charter-party defining the rate or amount of freight to be paid but this, and whatever time or times may have been by other provisions fixed for the payment of it, the amount itself is thus unquestionably fixed in plain language admitting of no two interpretations, at 42s. a ton, calculated not on the number of tons put on board, but on the number of tons actually delivered. If, therefore, the shipowner be really entitled to receive not 42s. but 63s. a ton on the quantity delivered, it cannot be as freight earned under the charter-party that he does so, but it must be under some other and different kind of obligation created by that instrument. And accordingly the learned counsel for the respondent, recognising the difficulty, ingeniously argued that though the advance of money made in this case was in the charter-party called "one-half of the freight," yet that it really was not freight at all, but something else, and cited expressions in other cases by which the sort of payment for which he was contending was variously described. I do not feel called upon to enter upon a review of those cases, because the decisions or expressions in them depended in each case upon the particular circumstances then existing, and because, whether those decisions were justified or not upon those circumstances, the language to be found in this charter-party excludes, in my opinion, the possibility of affirming that the word "freight," one-half of which was to be advanced, was intended to convey anything short of, or beyond, or different from, its ordinary meaning. In the first place it is, I think, difficult to maintain, when one and the same word is used several times within the short space of eight or ten consecutive lines of a written document, that it means one thing in one place, and a totally different thing in another. Nothing but the absence of any other reasonable construction ought to lead to such a result. But if, in any case, it could be permissible to deal with a word so used in such a manner, it is, I think, impossible to do so in this instance, because the expressions of this charter-party in relation to this word "freight" are so bound up and connected together as to make it plain that the "freight" spoken of is one and the same throughout. The mere grammatical construction, therefore, of the terms in which the charter-party is framed forbids the supposition that there are two sorts of freight spoken of, or that anything is intended by the word except that which is commonly known as "freight," which is to be earned only on safe delivery. It is not inconsistent with this that a part of what is thus to become due on delivery should, like any other payment due on a future day or event, be, by special agreement, made payable by anticipation at an earlier period, and the effect of such a payment when made is simply to create a credit to that amount in favour of the person making it when the account is finally taken. The event upon which the right to freight is to accrue and its amount to be determined is one thing; the times at which it shall be paid is another. In this case a part of the payment is to be made by anticipation, but this is not inconsistent with the stipulation, in language perfectly unambiguous, that the entire amount of freight shall be calculated on the quantity delivered.

But then it is said a payment of freight in advance cannot be recovered if the goods do not arrive, and that this has been held good law in successive cases. This at least shows that such an advance is not unfamiliar either to the commercial community or the courts of law, and as to the injustice of it, the provisions of the present charter-party show how easily and simply any injustice is practically avoided. An advance of freight is nothing more than arrangement for the convenience of the shipowner who wants an advance, and if the merchant will make it, is willing to pay the cost of insuring the advance when made, thus practically taking upon himself in another form the risk which properly belongs to him of the freight never being earned at all. It is no doubt true that it is impossible to know until the voyage is completed, and the cargo, or such part of it as arrives in safety, is delivered, what the actual amount due for freight, calculated at the stipulated rate, will turn out to be; and it is consequently impossible to calculate with accuracy, for the purpose of making the advance, what the half of that freight will amount to. But it is, I think, obvious enough that in speaking of "half the freight" being paid in cash on signing bills of lading, the parties intended "half the estimated freight," calculated on the quantities in the bills of lading at the rate named in the charter-party. The above mode of interpreting the charter-party, while it gives effect to the main and leading provision, that the entire freight shall depend on the quantity of goods delivered, treats the provision for an advance as meaning what it says, namely, as "freight to be paid one-half in cash." There seems little therefore to justify the conclusion that the shipowner could lawfully have demanded from the merchant a further payment of freight, notwithstanding that an amount equal to all the freight which had actually been earned had been already paid to him.

But the most plausible form in which that proposition is maintained remains yet to be stated. It has been said that the true meaning of this charter-party is the same as if the words had run thus: "Freight to be at 42s. a ton, 21s. to be paid on right and true delivery, and 21s. in advance on signing bills of lading," thus splitting up the freight into separate sums of 21s. on each ton put on board, and 21s. on each ton delivered. But such a mode of translating the charter-party is only arrived at by omitting the particular provision upon which, in my opinion, the whole matter turns, namely, that the freight is to be calculated not at 42s. per ton as suggested, but at 42s. per ton delivered. This brings into a prominent light the real difference upon which the two opposite modes of reading the charter-party are based. The view now under discussion is based upon the proposition that the number of tons upon which the 42s. are to be paid is the number of tons put on board, half to be paid at once, and half on arrival, not the number of tons which are put out at the port of destination. The contention of the appellant, on the contrary, is that the measure of freight intended is not the number of tons which the cargo may weigh when shipped, but the actual weight of the goods when they are delivered; although for the purpose of making a money advance, a probable estimate of the latter must be made from the amount of the former. I have already pointed out that the appellant has the express words of the charter-party in his favour on this point: "42s. a ton on the quantity delivered."

But there is another consideration which appears to me to place the matter beyond doubt. It is very well known that after a long voyage, even though the ship has met with no disaster, and the cargo has suffered nothing from "perils of the sea," the weight of the cargo when delivered will frequently differ, and sometimes very considerably, from its weight when shipped. Whether the weight, therefore, which is to be the criterion for calculating freight is to be the weight when put on board, or the weight when delivered cannot fail to be a matter of much importance. It is also to be observed that a partial loss of his advance, in consequence of the cargo having decreased in weight, could not be covered by the merchant under any policy of insurance, for losses arising from the cause supposed are not caused by any of the perils insured against, and are not the subjects of marine insurance. And yet it is obvious that the sum allowed by the shipowner as premium for insurance was intended to keep the merchant free from risk.

Another reason against the adoption of this reading of the charter-party is that it would establish a distinction between an aliquot part, such as a half or a third of the freight being paid in advance, and a lump sum of money, such as 500l. or 1000l. being advanced, as is frequently the case in a similar manner. For it could hardly be said in the latter case that any particular sum was paid in respect of any particular part of the cargo.

One other argument only remains to be noticed. It has been said that the merchant in this case has by the policy which he opened to protect his advances, entitled himself to recover £1 per ton in respect of the coal which was lost, over and above the value of such coal, and that if the appellant's view of the charter-party be correct, this £1 per ton must be a profit beyond anything he has lost, a result so inequitable that the appellant's view of the charter-party must, it is argued, be mistaken. The answer to this seems to me to be twofold; first, that the consequences of any contract entered into between the merchant and third persons can hardly affect the true construction of the contract previously entered into between him and the shipowner; secondly, that on the assumption of the appellant's view of the charter-party being correct, the merchant ought not, upon the common principles of insurance law, to be able to recover either £1 per ton or any other sum from the underwriters. For the first principle of insurance is indemnity, and when no loss of the subject of insurance has been sustained, there ought to be nothing to recover under a policy. If the merchant in this case had the full value of his entire advance by setting it off against the freight actually earned, as the appellant contends that he is entitled to do, he has suffered no loss in respect of that advance, and ought to have no legal claim for indemnity. If, therefore, it be true that under the particular policy which has been effected in this case any such claim arises, it must be by reason of the special form of that policy, which I observe is a valued one, the result of which may be that the insured can obtain compensation beyond the amount of any loss which he has really suffered.

Upon the whole, therefore, I think it is clear

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

the appellant could not have lawfully demanded from the charterer any further freight beyond that which was covered by the previous advances; and, consequently, that he was entitled to claim of the respondents a total loss under their policy. The judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought, therefore, in my opinion, to be reversed.

LORD O'HAGAN.—My Lords, the question in this case is a short one; but the remarkable difference of opinion among the learned judges who have considered it, forbids us to regard it as free from serious difficulty. It arises really—extraneous and irrelevant matter being put out of account—on the construction of a single document, which is common and familiar in its form. We have to decide on the effect of the charter-party, which was executed between the plaintiff, a shipowner and Mr. De Mattos, the charterer of the ship. And for that purpose we are not much assisted by authority, although many cases have been cited in the progress of the argument. We must deal with the document itself, having regard to the circumstances in which it originated, and the relations of the parties to it, and endeavouring to give a fair interpretation to its words in their natural and customary meaning.

The question arises, as I have said, on the construction of the charter-party, and not on the policy which is the direct foundation of the suit, but will be operative for the appellant or the respondent, according to the view we take of that construction. And for rightly ascertaining it I do not think your Lordships are at liberty to travel into considerations dehors itself, which have been pressed upon the House. For instance, we cannot properly consider the dealings of the charterer with other parties. Putting out of account all such irrelevant suggestions, I shall ask the attention of your Lordships for a very short time to the words of the charter-party. [His Lordship read the charter-party, and continued.]

The question is, half of the cargo having been lost by perils of the sea, and half duly delivered at Bombay, and the owner having received payment for the carriage of one half of it, had he any further claim upon the charterer, or was the money received in England applicable to discharge the freight which had been earned at Bombay? The captain thought it was, and delivered the cargo without claiming any further freight, and the plaintiff brought his action on his policy as for a total loss. I think he was warranted in doing so, and is entitled to recover. I should add, that in the receipt for the freight paid by the charterer it is described as "the sum of 2286l. 10s., being an advance of half freight on within shipment." It seems to me that the purpose of the charter-party is very clear. It was to secure to the owner an integral freight for the voyage, the amount of which was approximately fixed according to the value of the coals to be put on board, and intended to reach Bombay; but it was to be paid half in advance on signing bills of lading, and the remainder on right delivery of the cargo.

What was the risk against which the owner insured? What was the purpose of his insurance? He received half of the freight, and having received it, it was his absolutely, and was irrecoverable under any circumstances by the charterer. The peculiar doctrine of the English law is abundantly established by De Silve v. Kendall

(4 M. & S. 37); Byrne v. Schiller (ante, vol. 1, p. 511; L. Rep. 6 Ex. 20, 319; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 741; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211), and many other cases, to which full reference is made in the able opinion of Brett, J. The owner had thus got prepayment of a moiety of the entire debt which the charterer had contingently incurred for the hire of the ship, or a portion of it, and which might be described, reversing our ordinary legal phrase, as "Dabitum in futuro, solvendum in presenti." That prepayment was applicable generally to the freight, which, although a single liability, had been divided for the purposes of convenience into two halves, to be dealt with in different ways and at different times. And when by the perils of the sea the owner has been disabled from fully completing his part of the contract, and failed to earn more than one-half by delivery at Bombay, that being the express and essential condition of the charterer's liability, the prepayment became applicable to answer the only demand he could maintain, the charterer owed him nothing, and he fell back properly on his policy for the remainder of the freight which, not having earned it according to his bargain, he was unable to demand from the charterer. This appears to me to be a reasonable view of the matter, and the terms of the charter-party justify, I think, no other. The only thing at risk was the unpaid balance, and when that was hopelessly and totally lost the liability of the insurer was complete. There has been much discussion as to the meaning of the word "freight" in the charter-party, and it has been represented as having been in the nature of a loan, or of a payment not for the carriage of the goods, but for taking them on board the vessel and agreeing to carry them. But I see nothing to warrant the adoption of such a view. "Freight" has a definite meaning. It is described by Phillips on Insurance, c. 3, s. 2, in a passage cited by Bovill, C.J., as signifying "the earnings or profit derived by the shipowner from the use of it himself, or by letting it to others to be used, or by carrying goods for others;" and by Lord Tenterden in Flint v. Flemming (1 B. & Ad. 45), as importing "the benefit derived from the employment of the ship." In this charter-party "freight" surely means nothing else. It is "the profit to be derived by the shipowner," on the delivery of the cargo at the end of the voyage, "for the use of the ship" in conveying the coals of the charterer. I agree with the clear words of Cleasby, B. in the Exchequer Chamber: "We cannot depart from the settled meaning of the word 'freight,' and the meaning expressly given to it in this charter-party, namely the amount to be paid at the end of the voyage for what is ready for delivery at the stipulated rate. This had been wholly satisfied by the advance made, and so the shipowner was entitled to receive no more, and the captain was right in delivering the half cargo free of freight." The charter-party speaks first of "freight" generally, as to be paid "on unloading and right delivery," and it is "such freight" which it afterwards divides into the "one-half" and the "remainder." Why should we strive to put an unnatural and unaccustomed meaning on an ordinary word, which is accepted by the parties as it is commonly understood, when they give and take a receipt for the money paid, not as a loan, or a payment for putting the cargo on board, or for accepting the goods without delivery, but asking "advance of half

H. OF L.]

ALLISON v. THE BRISTOL MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

freight on within shipment," plainly pointing to an entire freight on the entire cargo to be fully or partially landed, and paid on the full or partial delivery of that cargo at Bombay. Reliance has been placed on some expressions of Lord Kingsdown in Kirchner v. Venus (12 Moore P.C.C. 361), in which he states that "freight is the reward payable to the owner for the safe carriage and delivery of goods," and that "a sum of money payable before the arrival of the ship at her port of discharge, and payable by the shippers of the goods at the port of shipment, does not acquire the legal character of freight because it is described by that name in a bill of lading." Any opinion of Lord Kingsdown, even an obiter dictum like this, is entitled to high consideration, and I do not think it at all necessary to impeach the correctness of his words for the purpose of sustaining the view I am submitting to your Lordships. Immediately after using them he goes on to recognise the right and power of those who enter into shipping agreements, "to supersede by a special contract the rights and obligations which the law attaches to freight in its legal sense," and that, even assuming the accuracy of his definition, seems to me exactly what the parties have done in the present case. They have made a contract which unmistakably deals with the prepayment as of "freight" and nothing else; and whatever might have been the legal force of the term if it stood by itself, and without the specific directions as to the "one-half" and "the remainder," those directions equally give to both the character of "freight," although the first half is to be paid before delivery. So that I do not conceive the dictum of Lord Kingsdown to be adverse in reality to the contention of the appellant. And that contention on this particular point is strongly sustained by several cases, to two of which I shall briefly advert. In De Silvale v. Kendall (4 M. & S. 37), a charter-party provided that the charterer should pay "for the freight and hire of the vessel" a specified sum in advance, and "the residue on the delivery of the cargo." The provision in that instrument was substantially the same as that with which we are dealing, and it was contended there as here that the advance was not freight, but in the nature of a loan. And there Lord Ellenborough said, "If the charter-party be silent the law will demand a performance of the voyage, for no freight can be due until the voyage be completed. But if the parties have chosen to stipulate by express words, or by words sufficiently intelligible to that end, that part of the freight should be paid by anticipation, which should not depend on the performance of the voyage, may they not so stipulate?" Every word is applicable to the circumstances of this case; and, as Lord Ellenborough insisted on deciding on the terms of the charter-party before him, and declined to consider other cases, applying, as he said, "to other forms of covenant," so I think your Lordships may safely found your judgment upon the express words of this particular contract. In that case also the judges held expressly that there is no doubt of the competency of parties to stipulate for part payment of the freight before it can be known whether any freight will accrue or not. So in Byrne v. Schiller (ante, vol. 1, p. 511), the last case bearing on the present, the charter-party provides that a vessel is to be sent on a voyage at a specific rate of freight, "such freight," as here, to be paid partly in advance, and "the remainder on right delivery of the cargo at the port of discharge." And then the court dealt with the payments as "on account of freight." The circumstances of those cases make the observations of the judges directly applicable to the case before us, and they and others show also that a stipulation to pay freight in advance, and before delivery, is not only legal, but of common use amongst commercial people.

I might have been disposed to dwell on the inconvenience possible to arise in a case like this from the adoption of the view of the respondents, but this point has been so well put by my noble and learned friend who last addressed the House that I shall not occupy time by dwelling upon it. I am satisfied, with much deference to the adverse view that has been so strongly supported, that on the construction of the charter-party alone the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and I prefer to base my opinion upon that sufficient ground.

I think the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber should be reversed.

LORD SELBORNE.—My Lords, the difficulty in this case—for I certainly felt some difficulty during the argument, and it has been the subject of much difference of opinion between judges of high authority—arises out of the peculiar rule of English mercantile law, that an advance on account of freight to be earned, made at the commencement of a voyage, is, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, an irrevocable payment at the risk of the shipper of the goods, and not a loan repayable by the borrower if freight is that amount be not earned. The authorities referred to by Brett, J. certainly establish this general rule, whether reasonable in the abstract or not; and it must be taken that payments in advance, such as that which was made by the charterer in the present case, are in this country generally made and received, as between the parties to contracts of affreightment, upon this understanding.

It is, however, remarkable that none of the authorities seem to touch the precise question in this case, namely, whether the charterer under a contract like that before your Lordships, has a right to deduct the whole amount paid by him in advance from any freight which may actually be earned in case of a loss of part of the cargo; or whether such advance ought to be apportioned over the whole cargo delivered on board, so that the loss of a proportionate part of it will fall upon the charterer if part of the cargo is lost. In that case it does not seem to me to be material, or to create any difficulty in the application of the principle, whether the advance is of an aliquot part of the estimated freight or of a gross sum of money. Blackburn, J., if I understand him rightly, thinks that on principle the latter view is that most consistent with the rule established by the authorities, and that there is nothing in the express contract between these parties to justify a different conclusion. The actual settlement between the shipowner and the charterer did indeed take place upon the opposite view; but the insurer was no party to that settlement, and what was done inter alios could not enlarge his liability. It may be that the principle on which that settlement proceeded was according to a general usage of trade, but of this I find no proof. I am by no means clear that the reasoning of Blackburn, J. is fully met by the dis-

F. APP.]

THE M. MOSHAM.

[OT. OF APP.]

Brett, J., that if this be not the correct view, "the charterer must in effect pay more per ton in every case except where the cargo is delivered." If the whole cargo is must in "effect" pay 1l. a ton on the ton on board, though under the contract no whatever has been earned. The introduction of the words "in effect," when the question is the legal consequences of an anomalous contract expressed in terms by the contract, may be fallacious. On the other hand the view of Blackburn, J., rests entirely upon the fact that in a contract so worded as the present, the amount paid in signing the bill of lading ought not to be deducted from freight in settlement of the freight if it is not earned. I am unable to adopt that opinion, and in the whole case, though I should have thought it satisfactory if there had been some authorities of information as to the usage of the law, I think that the view of the proper construction of the effect of such a contract taken by the majority of the learned judges, and by your Lordships, is the more reasonable, and that it is most in accordance with the natural meaning of the words of the charter-party, and the probable intention of the contracting parties.

there was clearly, in this case, a total loss of the whole interest of the assured in the whole matter of the insurance; and the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought, therefore, to be reversed.

Judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber reversed, and judgment of the Court of Common Pleas affirmed.

For the appellant, W. Nash.
For the respondents, Argles and Raw-

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.
led by JAMES P. AARFALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Feb. 8 and 9, 1876.

JAMES and MELLISH, L.J.J., and BAGGALLAY, J.A.)

THE M. MOSHAM.

Done by ship to really abroad—Governing law—Jurisdiction—Pleading—Demurrer. Question of the liability of a shipowner, provided against in the English Admiralty Court, in injury done by his ship to a pier projecting into the sea, but attached to the soil of a foreign country is governed by the law loci, and not by the law of the flag.

An English ship, by the negligence of her crew, ran into and damaged a pier on the coast of Spain, and the owners of the pier sued against the ship for the damage in the Admiralty Court, and the shipowner pleaded that the law of Spain as a shipowner is not responsible for damage occasioned by the negligence of the master and crew:

Held (reversing the decision of the High Court of Admiralty), that the plea is a good defence to the action.

Quere, can an English court entertain an action for damage to realty in a foreign country, apart from some agreement or contract of the parties?

This was an appeal from an interlocutory decree of the High Court of Admiralty on a motion to strike out certain paragraphs in an answer, filed by defendants in a cause of damage, instituted on behalf of the Marbella Iron Ore Company, Limited, against the steamship or vessel the M. Mosham, her tackle, apparel and furniture, and the freight due for the transportation of the cargo now or lately laden on board thereof, and against the owners of the said steamship.

The plaintiffs' petition was, so far as material, as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the Marbella Iron Ore Company, Limited, an English joint-stock company, established under the Companies' Act 1862, and the Acts incorporated therewith, for the purpose, among other things, of exporting iron ore from Marbella, in the country of Spain, to England and other places. The offices of the company are at No. 1, Crown-buildings, Queen Victoria-street, in the City of London. The plaintiffs were at the time of the grievance hereinafter mentioned, possessed of a pier, situate at Marbella aforesaid, for the purpose of shipping iron ore on board ships.

2. About 8.30 a.m. on the 5th Oct. 1874, the steamship M. Mosham came to Marbella for the purpose of loading iron ore from the said pier of the plaintiffs. There was scarcely any wind at the time, and the sea was perfectly smooth, and there was no current.

3. Those on board the M. Mosham, instead of keeping clear of the pier, as they could and might easily have done, so negligently navigated the said steamship that she approached and came into violent collision with the said pier, and carried away the whole head of the pier, causing enormous damage to it, and throwing several trucks laden with iron ore into the sea.

4. The aforesaid collision and the damages consequent thereon were occasioned by the negligence and improper navigation of those on board the M. Mosham.

5. The plaintiffs, in addition to the expense of repairing the pier, have sustained and will sustain considerable damages by reason of being called upon to pay demurrage to divers ships at the time of the said collision, under charter to load iron ore at the said pier, and by reason of extra expense incurred in the shipment of iron during the repair of the said pier, and extra freight in consequence of delay in loading vessels.

The answer filed on behalf of the owners of the M. Mosham was as follows:

Parker and Clarke, solicitors for Ebenezer Cory, &c., the owners of the steamship or vessel M. Mosham, the defendants in this cause, say as follows:

1. They deny so much of the first article of the petition as alleges that the plaintiffs are possessed of the Marbella pier in the said petition mentioned.

2. They say that the said alleged collision was not a violent one, and that it took place owing to the current and the shallowness of the water near the said pier preventing the M. Mosham from answering her helm, as but for such matters she would have done, and that the said alleged collision was not occasioned by any negligent navigation of the M. Mosham, but was the result of inevitable accident.

3. They further say that the said pier was so weakly and insufficiently and improperly constructed and fastened, as not to be capable of sustaining contact from such ships as the M. Mosham necessarily incidental to their going alongside the said pier for the purposes in the said petition stated, and that the said alleged collision was a usual and ordinary contact necessarily incidental to the M. Mosham going alongside the said pier for the said purposes, and one which the said pier ought, if properly and sufficiently constructed and fastened, to have sustained without being damaged, and no more, and that the said alleged damage was wholly occasioned by the said pier having been so weakly and insufficiently and improperly constructed and fastened, and not otherwise.

CT. OF APP.]

THE M. MOSHAM.

[CT. OF AP.]

4. They further say that the said alleged collision happened within the territory and jurisdiction of Spain, and that at the time of the said collision the said pier was annexed to and formed part of the land of Spain, and that if the said collision was occasioned by any negligence or improper navigation of those on board the M. Mosham it was solely occasioned by the negligence of the master or mariners of the M. Mosham, and not by the defendants or any of them; and that by the law of Spain in force at the time and place of the said collision the master and mariners of the ship, and not the ship or her owners, are liable in damages in respect of a collision occasioned as in the petition alleged, and by such law neither the M. Mosham nor the defendants nor any of them are or is liable in respect of the damages proceeded for in this cause.

5. They deny the truth of the fifth article of the said petition, and further say that the said article is irrelevant, as being matter only for the registrar in the event of a reference.

6. The defendants further say that by the law of Spain in force at the time and place of the said collision, whenever the owner of a ship has become liable in damages by reason of the act or default of the master of such ship, such owner is not liable in damages beyond the value of such ship and her freight being earned at the time of the commission of such act or default, and can fully discharge such liability by abandoning such ship and freight to the person claiming such damages, or by paying to such person the full value of such ship and freight; and the defendant say that if they are liable to the plaintiffs in respect of the collision in the said petition mentioned they have so become liable by the act or default of the master of the M. Mosham, and not otherwise, and that by the law of Spain in force as aforesaid they are not liable to the plaintiffs in respect of the said collision beyond the value of the M. Mosham and her freight being earned at the time of the said collision, and are entitled to fully discharge such liability by abandoning the M. Mosham and her said freight to the plaintiffs or by paying to the plaintiffs the full value of the M. Mosham and her freight being earned as aforesaid.

And the said Parker and Clarke pray the right honourable the judge to pronounce against the damage proceeded for, and to dismiss the defendants and their bail from all further observance of justice in this suit, and to condemn the plaintiffs in costs, or to pronounce that the defendants are not liable to the plaintiffs in respect of such damage beyond the value of the M. Mosham and her freight being earned at the time of the said collision, and that they are entitled to discharge such liability by abandoning the M. Mosham and her freight or by paying the full value thereof to the plaintiffs, and that further and otherwise right and justice may be administered to the defendants in the premises.

The plaintiff moved in the court below to strike out the fourth article of the answer upon the ground that the same formed no answer to the action. The defendants had originally pleaded that the court had no jurisdiction, on the ground that the injured property formed part of the land of Spain; but, it having been shown that the ship was arrested in Spain, and released by the plaintiff on the undertaking on the part of the defendants that liability of the defendants should be determined by the English courts, the defendants withdrew the plea as to the jurisdiction, and motion stood only to strike out the fourth paragraph of the answer.

The learned judge of the court below ordered the said fourth paragraph to be struck out, holding that English law governed the question: (See the report of the case in the court below. 33 L. T. Rep. N.S. 463; 3 Asp. Mtr. Law Cas. p. 95), and from this decree the defendant now appealed.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and E. O. Clarkson (J. O. Mathew with them), for the appellants.—It is well established that in the case of contracts the law of the place where they were made governs the construction. So in cases of tort the question of liability for a wrong done must be governed by the law of the place where that wrong was committed.

Scott v. Lord Seymour, 22 L. J. 61, Ex.; 8 L. T. Rep. N.S. 511;

The General Steam Navigation Company v. Gillet, 11 M. & W. 877.

It is only where the lex loci sought to be applied is mere matter of procedure that the English courts set it aside and apply their own rule: (Bullock v. Caird, L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 276). Liability for a tort does not arise unless injury has been done to the person claiming; hence the act of negligence, in respect of which the plaintiff seeks to recover, is not the mere careless navigation which led to striking the pier, but the striking the pier resulting in damage; this act, for which the defendants are liable, was clearly done upon the soil of Spain, and not upon the high seas, and hence the liability of the defendants must be determined by the law of Spain; and if by the law of Spain the defendants are not responsible for negligence of the person doing the act occasioning the injury, the plea is good. Where the law declares that a person is not responsible for an act done there, the English courts cannot hold him liable: (Phillips v. Eyre, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 213; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 1.) The ship in approaching and striking this pier was not using the sea as a public highway, but was within Spanish jurisdiction, and was coming alongside the pier for landing purposes, and as a matter of favour, and was amenable to the laws of the country within whose jurisdiction she then was.

The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon, 7 Cranch 116; Twiss's Rights of Nations, 308.

In a case of collision between an English and a Spanish ship, in a Spanish river, it is clear that the Spaniard could plead the Spanish law; and it is contended that the British ship could claim exemption from liability if given to her by the Spanish law? The law of the place must govern both parties; one cannot have a right in respect of such law which the other does not equally possess; if such a collision occurred upon the high seas it would be determined by such law as was binding upon both parties.

The Zollverein, Swab. 96; R. v. Coombs, 1 Leach C. C. R. 328.

Where a wrong not actionable in a foreign country is committed there, no remedy can be obtained in this country; there must be a conflict of the laws of both countries to give a remedy here (1 Smith's Leading Cases, 7th edit. pp. 71, 701). Even in the case of a collision on the high seas, it has been held that the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, as to limitation of liability, does not apply where the collision is between a British and a foreign vessel.

Cope v. Doherty, 4 K. & J. 367; 31 L. T. Rep. 173, 307; 4 Jar. N.S. 451, 609; 27 L. J. 604, C. General Iron Screw Colliery Company v. Schurman, 4 L. T. Rep. N.S. 138; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. & C. 29 L. J. 883, C.

Bull, Q.C. and Benjamin, Q.C. (R. E. Withers with them) for the respondents.—It is clear that in questions of contract the English courts will apply the lex loci, but is this the case in questions of tort? By English law the master of a ship is personally responsible for his own negligence in the navigation of his ship, but his ship is also responsible for his acts as their agent. The master's acts must be considered as

OF APP.]

THE M. MOXHAM.

[CT. OF APP.]

British soil, because a British ship is a part of British territory: (Reg. v. Anderson, L. Rep. C. R. 161.) If, then, the master's acts are upon British soil, the question of liability be governed by British law. [MELLISH, —Is there not a difference between an act within the vessel and an act done by the vessel object external to it? In the criminal cases not committed has been done by one member of crew to another.] The law which regulates rights as between owner and crew and third persons is a personal statute, which is carried with the ship into whatever countries she may go. If the policy of the English law to render the master responsible for the acts of his servant, the master cannot escape liability by alleging a foreign law which did not govern his relation to that servant. Lloyd v. Guibert (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 115), uphold the principle in cases of contract that the law of the flag determines the responsibility, here is no sound reason why the principle should not also apply to cases of tort. The court was right in saying that it had jurisdiction independently of any agreement between the parties; venue is the only ground for excluding jurisdiction, and in Admiralty there is no venue of such thing as a local action. Coulson v. Matthews, 4 T. R. 503; Costyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161.

MES, L.J.—This case is the case of the owner of a piece of the Spanish soil bringing an action against the owner of an English ship, damage done by that ship in knocking down a vessel attached to the Spanish land. In this respect a very novel action, and very grave difficulties might have arisen as to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain any action or proceed whatever with respect to an injury done to and of a foreign state. The question of jurisdiction has probably been successfully got by what has been done in this case, that is to say, that the ship in question—the owner of which was released, and which by a figure of speech may be called the delinquent ship—having been sued in England, was released, upon an agreement between the parties that all remedies against the ship and against the owners of that ship should be tried in England. Such an agreement would give jurisdiction by contract, not only jurisdiction by contract; and it must be taken that the parties admitted that their ship should be liable here in the same way as she would have been liable according to the law of Spain. Possibly this would get rid of the question, and the Court of Admiralty would have jurisdiction to enforce against the ship an equitable right arising from this equitable act by virtue of which the ship was released, its liability under the jurisdiction in Spain. This was properly conceded by Mr. Benjamin, in the argument, that the question must be tried in England in the same way as if it were being tried in Spain, and he admits that he could not successfully argue in support of the decision of the court below, unless he could make out that it would be the duty of the Spanish court, if the action had proceeded there, to apply the principles of the English law to the case. The principle of the English law applicable to the case being to him, is that the master and crew of a vessel being the servants of an English owner, are by the English law themselves liable, and on the principle of respondent superior, make their principals responsible for their negligence; and, further, that they carry with them this doctrine, so that it extends to every foreign country, and every foreigner who is brought in any way into contact, whether by way of contract or tort, with the master and crew as the agent of the owner.

No authority was cited for that proposition, and I am really unable to follow the principle. One can understand that a contract between master and servant, or relations between principal and agent, may affect the contracts made by the agent, quod agent, with foreign people, that is to say, may affect the nature and extent of the agency; but the liability of one man to answer for the acts of another in matters of tort seems a thing which at least cannot be carried by the agent into a foreign country. If I take my coachman to France, and through his negligence an accident occurs, and damage is done, the doctrine of respondent superior does not apply if that doctrine is unknown in France, the place where the damage was done. It appears to me, therefore, that the contention that the personal status, arising from the fact that the shipowner and his servants were virtually in England, was carried into Spain, cannot avail, as the wrong is done absolutely, according to the allegation in the plea, on Spanish soil; it was done within the Spanish territory; it was done by a vessel to something which is in Spain. Now it is the law of Spain, according to the allegation here, that where the wrong act is done by a servant of this particular kind, when it is done by the master and crew of a ship, the owner of the ship has not that wrong imputed to him, and the rule respondent superior does not make him answerable for that which is the actual wrong doing of his servants. If that is so, why is he not entitled to the benefit of the Spanish law?

It is settled in all the cases, that if the act is lawful, even if the act is excusable, or if the act has been legitimatised by a subsequent act of the Legislature, in that case this court would take into consideration that state of the law, that is to say, if by the law of the country a particular person is justified or excused for the thing done, he is not answerable here. Why is he answerable if by the law of the country he never was answerable for it?

I ventured to observe to Mr. Benjamin in the course of the argument, that you do not talk of the thing that is wrong: it is the man that is wrong, and if he is not a wrongdoer according to the law of the country where the wrong is done, that is to say, if he is not answerable for his servant, he is not answerable according to the Spanish law, and it is our duty to give him the benefit of the Spanish law in this case.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. A great many cases have been cited in the argument in this case, but they almost all relate to actions respecting either wrongs to personal property or to actual personal injuries, and the law respecting personal injuries and respecting wrongs to personal property appears to me, in the result of those cases, to be perfectly settled, and that is, that no action can be maintained in the courts of this country on account of a wrongful act either to a person or to personal property, committed within the jurisdiction of a foreign country, unless the act is wrongful by the law of the country where it is committed, and also wrongful by the law of this country. The two cases of The Halley (L. Rep. 2 P. O. 193) and Phillips v. Eyre (L. Rep. 6 Q. B.

1) seem to me, together with the other cases in conformity with them, to be conclusive upon the subject.

In the case of The Halley there was a collision with a ship in foreign waters. By the law of the foreign country the ship was liable; the owners were liable as owners of the ship; by the law of England the ship and owners were not liable, because there was a pilot on board, who was navigating the ship, and who was taken compulsorily on board, and the negligent act was his act. Beyond that it was held that, notwithstanding that the ship and the owners of the ship were liable according to the law of the country where the act was committed, yet, inasmuch as they were not liable by the law of England, no action could be maintained against them. Then in the case of Phillips v. Eyre (L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 1), which was an action brought for a crime committed in a foreign country, it was decided that the liability of the defendant had been taken away by the law of the country where the act was committed, and, therefore, that no action could be brought in this country. Therefore, if that is the rule respecting personal wrongs, and respecting wrongs to personal property, it seems to me a fortiori it must be the rule respecting wrongful acts to real property in a foreign country; whether the rule respecting wrong to immovable property in a foreign country does not go still further, and prevent an action being brought at all is not a question which it is necessary to determine in this case, because, having regard to the consent of the parties and the agreement that has been entered into, I do not think it is pretended that any objection could be taken in this case with reference to the jurisdiction; but it appears to me beyond all question a fortiori if the rule before mentioned is applicable to personal property and wrongs, it must be applicable to damage done to real property in a foreign country.

But then it is said that though that is the general rule, yet here the act was not done in the foreign country, because the wrongful act was committed on board an English ship on the high seas. I agree that for acts on board a ship itself, no doubt the English ship carries the English law with it, but I am not convinced that it carries the English law with it with reference to wrongful acts done by guiding an English ship against a pier which is part of a foreign country. It is unnecessary to consider what would be the rule in a case—though I do not think it would present any more difficulty—what would be the rule if the ship was outside the three mile limit, and they had fired a gun and caused damage within the foreign territory. Here the ship itself was really within the Spanish dominions at the time it committed the wrong, as Mr. Clarkson put it, she was just coming into a Spanish port where she had no right to go, except by licence given to her by the law of Spain, and where she was bound to obey the law of the country while she was there. In that position she comes in contact with that which is stated in the plea to be part of the soil of Spain, and so renders it necessary to apply the general rule that no action can be brought in this country in respect of an alleged wrongful act committed in a foreign country which is not wrongful by the law of that country.

Then it is said by Mr. Benjamin that although that is perfectly true as a general rule, and although, as I understand, he admits that if the act itself was not considered a careless act by the law of Spain, no action could be brought in this country; yet, that inasmuch as it is considered a wrongful act by the law of Spain as far as the master is concerned, then when you come to the question whether the master alone is liable, or the ship and the owner also, that question, he says, is not to be governed by the law of Spain but by the law of England.

I do not think any sufficient authority has been cited for that proposition, and it appears to me it would make a further distinction in the law, which would be very inconvenient in the result. There is a well known distinction between substantive law and mere procedure. If it could be proved that this question of liability turned upon mere procedure by the law of Spain, then that law would not be regarded in this country. It appears to me that the rule that a particular person is not to be liable at all, although somebody else possibly may be liable, is a part of the substantive law of the country where the act is committed, and that, therefore, if by the law of the country where the act is committed, by the substantive law which is to govern the case—the defendant is not liable, then he would be discharged altogether. If there is any authority wanted for that proposition it is laid down by Park, B., in The General Steam Navigation Company v. Guillou (ubi sup.) That was a case of an injury done on the high seas by a French ship, and there he says: "The injury complained of is averred to have arisen on the high seas, and out of the jurisdiction of England, and not to have been committed by the defendant personally, but by a third person, who was master of the French vessel, the defendant being a French subject. So far the plea is free from obscurity: if the defendant was not liable for the act of that other by that law which is to govern this case he has a good defence to the action, and for the defendants it is contended that the plea means to aver that by the law of France he was not liable for those acts, but that a body established by the French law, and analogous to an English corporation, were the proprietors of the vessel, and alone liable for the acts of the master, who was their servant, and not the servant of the individual composing that body, and if such be the true construction of this plea, we all are strongly inclined to think that there is a good defence to this action."

I am of opinion that that rule applies to this case, and that if the defendant is not liable for the act of the master by the law which is to govern the case, he has a good defence to the action, and if, therefore, according to the true rule, the law which is to govern the case is Spanish law, the defendant is not liable by that law, and has a good defence to the action.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—I am of the same opinion. The learned judge of the court below seems to have relied very much in his judgment upon the decision in the case of Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.), but that case, it appears to me, was a very distinguishable one from the case with which we have to do now. In that case the argument proceeded much upon the question whether Anderson was liable, inasmuch as he was a foreigner, upon a French ship, in French waters, than if he had been an Englishman, but their Lordships thought that having entered into articles to serve on her

CT. OF APP.]

THE PETER DER GROSSE.

[CT. OF APP

English ship, so long as he remained on board that ship he was in the same position as an English subject would have been. Then the great difference is this, that in that case the offence was fully and entirely committed on the vessel upon which Anderson and the murdered man were. I am unable to see any analogy between that case and the present.

Then, the learned judge of the court below referred to several other cases, and amongst them to The Halley, which he said appeared to his view to follow the same course as Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.). There, again, I am unable to agree with the learned judge. Where a suit is instituted in an English court in respect of a tort committed in a foreign country, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to show that there is a liability on the part of the defendant in respect of foreign law, but he must also show a liability in respect of the English law, and therefore in that case of The Halley (ubi sup.), inasmuch as by English law there is no liability on the owners by reason of their having engaged a pilot by compulsion, it was not open to the plaintiff to claim or receive damages, because, by the law of Belgium the owners were not relieved from responsibility because they did employ a pilot by compulsion.

The principles seem to be laid down much more clearly and distinctly, I think, in the case of Phillips v. Eyre—I am reading from the judgment of Willes, J.—they are laid down in these terms: "As a general rule, in order to found a suit in England for a wrong alleged to have been committed abroad, two conditions must be fulfilled, first, the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in England. Therefore, in The Halley, the Judicial Committee pronounced against a suit in the Admiralty, founded upon a liability by the law of Belgium, for collision caused by the act of a pilot whom the shipowner was compelled by that law to employ, for whom, therefore, as not being its agent, he was not responsible by English law; secondly, the act must not have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was done."

If English law alone is applicable to this case, there would have been an actionable wrong just as the wrong had been committed in England; then the question remains would it have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was done. For the purpose of the present proceedings we are bound to presume that according to the law of Spain, there is no liability or responsibility on the part of the owners of the ship for the acts of the master and crew. It appears to me, therefore, by applying the principles so enunciated in Phillips v. Eyre (ubi sup.), we are able to arrive at the conclusion in the present case that the law of Spain, and not the law of England, applies.

I am reminded by my learned brother that the words "for action justifiable," must mean with regard to the particular defendant against whom the action is brought; we, therefore, think it is clear from that that the proceedings against the defendant must fail by reason of there being no liability under the Spanish law.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Parker and Clarke.
Solicitors for the respondents, Ellis and Co.

Wednesday, March 1, 1876.

(Before JAMES and MELLISH, L.JJ., and BAGGALLAY, J.A.)

THE PETER DER GROSSE.

Damage to cargo—Bill of lading—Weight, contents and value unknown—Onus of proof.

A master signing a bill of lading in which it is stated that the goods were "shipped in good order and condition," but which contained a memorandum of "weight, contents, and value unknown," admits that, as far as could be seen externally, the goods were shipped in good condition, and if they arrive damaged the onus lies upon the shipowner to excuse himself from the damage.

THIS was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Admiralty of England in a cause of damage to cargo instituted on behalf of Schoetensack, Riecken, and Co., merchants of London, against the Russian steamship Peter der Grosse, and her owners intervening.

In June 1874, Scheumann and Sprengel, of St. Petersburg, shipped on board Peter der Grosse, then lying at St. Petersburg, seventeen bales of down and eight of feathers for delivery to the plaintiffs in London, and the master signed and gave to the shippers in respect of the said bales bills of lading, which were in the following words and figures:

Shipped in good order and well-conditioned, by Scheumann, Sprengel, and Co., in and upon the good steamship, called the Peter der Grosse, whereof is master for the present voyage, H. Godtman, now lying at anchor in the harbour of St. Petersburg, and bound for London:

W.D. 1180/1186, 7 bales, down, gross weight, 35p. 38lb.
G.D. 1336/1345, 10 bales,	51p. 15lb.
P. 1670/1674, 5 " feathers	25p. 27lb.
1104/1108, 3 "	15p. 16lb.

being marked and numbered as in the margin, which are to be delivered in the like good order, and well-conditioned at the aforesaid port of London (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, machinery, boilers, steam, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and steam navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted), unto Messrs. Schoetensack, Riecken, and Co., or to their assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods, at 70s. sterling per ton, gross weight, in full with primage and average accustomed. In witness whereof the master and purser of the said ship hath signed five bills of lading all of this tenor and date, one of which bills being accomplished, the others to stand void.

Dated in St. Petersburg, the 8th June 1874.

H. GODTMAN.

The ship had a very long passage from St. Petersburg to London. On her arrival at the latter port, the bales were discharged from the ship by means of lighters, and were at once examined, and were found to be stained and damaged by some offensively smelling liquid, the exact character of which was not ascertained, some persons supposing it to be oil of tar, others some sort of spirit; portions of the feathers and down in the bales were wetted with the liquid and completely spoiled. When the bales were landed, they were marked on the outside so that the lighterman in giving his receipt for them made an entry therein of "bales dirty." The bales were sold at a loss of 156l. on their proper value of 840l. 12s. 6d.. Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs to show that the bales could not have been damaged by internal heating or other inherent vice, and that they sustained no injury in the lighters. From the defendant's evidence it appeared that the damaged feathers and down were stowed in the forehold on the top of some bales of wool, and were covered with sail cloth; also that although there was some strong spirit in the afterhold, there was no part of the cargo in the forehold of the ship that could have produced the damage complained of. The ship on her voyage was compelled to put into Revel, having broken her propeller. Between Cronstadt and Revel the ship carried passengers who lived down in the forehold on the top of the feathers. Evidence was also given for the defendants that no other goods in the ship were in any way damaged, and that the feathers were no worse damaged than feathers arriving by steamer from Russia usually are. The defendants alleged that the damage was not occasioned by any negligence, breach of duty, or contract on the part of themselves or their servants, but by reason of inherent vice in the feathers and down and by reason of improper curing; and that the goods were properly stowed and preserved on board ship.

[CT. OF APP.]

THE PETER DER GROSSE.

[CT. OF

The cause was heard before the learned judge of the Admiralty Court on the 22nd July 1875, and he then delivered the following judgment:—

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—This suit relates to seventeen bales of down and eight bales of feathers which were placed on board the Russian vessel Peter der Grosse in the month of June 1874. There is no question whatever as to the fact that these bales were taken out of the ship in a bad condition—in what one of the witnesses has called “a not merchantable condition.” The question which the court has to determine, upon the evidence before it, is, whether the plaintiff has succeeded in maintaining the position that he put these bales on board in good order, and that therefore the damage must have occurred from some cause with which he may not be acquainted, but which could not arise from the state of the cargo itself when put on board the vessel. Now, the bill of lading says, “Shipped in good order and well-conditioned by Scheumann and Spiegel, in and upon the good steamship called the Peter der Grosse, whereof is master for this present voyage H. Sodtman, now lying at anchor in the harbour of St. Petersburg, and bound for London;” and then there follows the numbers of the bales of down and of feathers, and then the bill of lading goes on, “which are to be delivered in the like good order and well-conditioned at the aforesaid port of London:” then the usual exceptions, “unto Messrs. Schoetensack, Riecken, and Co., or to their assigns,” and there is the freight, and in the margin is written, “Not accountable for accidents from fire at sea or on shore; weight, contents, and value unknown.” Now the vessel made a very long voyage; she was six weeks before she reached the port of her destination, and she was detained by the necessity of repairs at Revel for 17 days. The evidence as to the state of these bales when they were taken out is important, not only with respect to the latter part of the case, but in respect to the former part. Soon after their arrival early intelligence was given by the consignees of their objection to the state of the cargo. I need not enter into the details of the letters which passed as to the state of these goods when they arrived. One fact is very clearly established by all the witnesses, and is undisputed in this case—that the feathers were of the best class, and the down also, that could be in the class. They were surveyed by two gentlemen experienced in the business, one appointed by the consignees and one by the ship-owners. Mr. Brookes, a person appointed by the consignees, and who surveyed the feathers and down in company with another gentleman whose name was Blum, and he gives evidence that a clerk was present, Messrs. Bailey and Leatham, who were the representatives of the owners of the ship during the time, and he put in a report. The essence of this report was that the bales had a very bad smell, which smell was, in the expression of the witness, “foreign to the natural smell of feathers,” and, in his opinion, also the damage to them must have come from the outside. He said there was no evidence of heat; the outside of the canvas in which these feathers were placed was more or less stained. I think it was stated that they were stained high, or thereabouts, and 3ft. broad. They were stained with a black stain, and also smelt more or less. That is the substance of the evidence given by Mr. Brookes. Mr. Blum, who, as I have said, was appointed by the shipowners, says that he deals in down and feathers, and he surveyed these bales, and he says the outside was as if some liquid had been poured over them, while the inside had an offensive smell more or less through it; certainly not a very strong smell, something quite strange to the article. Then another witness was examined, also a gentleman with what is called the feather business, a gentleman of the name of Worrall, who has imported a great deal, and that he bought a sample of the feathers from the plaintiff in this case. He afterwards refused to take the sample on account of the condition in which he found it. He said that he got a notice that the goods were damaged; that he went down to the quay the next morning, and found every bag stained more or less, some in the side, and some in the middle. He put his hand nearly through, and he says the damage was from the outside decidedly; that the goods were not damaged by the inherent vice. He proceeded to say that the smell was a very strong one, and certainly one not natural to the feathers, and I think he said from 8 in. to 12 in. deep. The interior was quite wet, he refused to accept the goods; he said that the smell of the feathers would be quite different. He was then cross-examined, that he put his hand on the goods, that they were of an oily or greasy appearance. The next witness of importance is, I think, the lighterman who fetched the bales from the Peter der Grosse, and he, when he received them, called attention to their condition. He said they looked as if they had been in mud, and when he gave his receipt for them, it was in these words: “Received the goods in good condition, into barge Result, Number 1, to be landed at the Custom House, barge then he delivered them to Mr. Mackenzie, at the Custom House quay, who was managed by Dudley Smith at the Quay. Mr. Mackenzie says the goods were landed about the 27th of July, and he says the outside of the bales was dirty and stained, and looked as if they had been drawn across mud. The cause of this condition was not

OF APP.]

THE PETER DER GROSSE.

[Ct. OF APP.]

not externally in a merchantable condition. I did not examine the inside. It is clear, therefore, that these goods were taken out in an unmerchantable condition, and that they were damaged externally as well as internally, that the damage was recent, that the damage was not one which would be naturally inherent in any goods in the hands of the shipper, and that the feathers and themselves were of the very first quality. These points being established, it becomes incumbent on the defendant to show that the bill of lading, as to their condition when they were put on board, and I agree with the objection which has been made by Mr. Clarkson, is fairly construed, and giving all due weight to the legal effect of the marginal note, the result is that apparently, and so far as meets the eye, and externally, they were placed in good order on board this ship. Well, then, if that be the case, the plaintiff has shown by prima facie evidence that, having put these bales on board in good order on board the ship, they were then taken out in bad condition both externally and internally, then I think with the observation which was made it is not incumbent on him to show either when the damage was done. It is for the plaintiff to displace the evidence, which shows that it did not occur from any intrinsic mischief inherent in the feathers or the goods and was not one which had any external cause when they were put on board the ship. It has been asserted that the shipowner has shown the impossibility of the mischief having occurred on board the ship; but it does not seem to me that the evidence goes to that. There were reports of strong smell on board this ship; there were passengers who, for a time, were living in the vicinity of this cargo in and amidst the cargo; the vessel was in days at Revel, and the cargo was damaged, I think, according to the evidence, at the same time, and there was a leak, or leaks, among the cargo. But even these circumstances do or do not suggest any reason for the damage which unquestionably happened to these goods, I think that the plaintiff has discharged the burden of proof as upon them, and it was for the defendant if they could, to displace that burden of proof by showing that when the goods were put on board the vessel they were in a bad condition, and that the bad condition showed at the time in the external state of the goods in which the goods were placed. I need repeat what I have already said, that no evidence has not been furnished, but that evidence which has been given leads me to the conclusion, from the facts before me, that the plaintiff has established their case, that these goods were on board the vessel in good order and condition, and taken out of that vessel in bad condition.

I therefore pronounce for the prayer of the plaintiff, and I must order the documents and the cargo to be left with the registrar and merchant to report the amount of damage done.

There was accordingly made in favour of the plaintiff, and from this decree the defendants appealed.

J. Smith (O. Hall with him) for the appellant.—The master by inserting the words "weight, contents, and value unknown" in the bill of lading refuses to sign a clear bill, and asserts that he knows nothing of the condition of the goods. It is consistent with the evidence that the goods were damaged before shipment. When the consignee shows that the goods are delivered damaged he proves, no doubt, a prima facie case, and the shipowner must show that nothing on board could have caused the injury which the consignee states the goods to have received; but on the shipowner giving such proof the onus goes back to the consignee, who must show that the shipowner did the damage. A shipowner is not estopped from showing that the goods carried by him are injured out of the ship, although his bill of lading states them to have been shipped in good condition, provided it contains the words "weight, contents, and value unknown."

Jessel v. Bath, L. Rep. 2 Ex. 267;

Lebeaux v. The General Steam Navigation Company, ante, vol. 1, p. 433; L. Rep. 5 C. P. 22; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 447.

The consignee has no better right than the shipper, who alone, before the Bills of Lading Act could have sued, and the master signing such a bill of lading would have been at liberty to show as against the shipper, that although the goods were shipped apparently clean they came in contact with nothing on board the ship that could account for the damage. It has been shown here that the injury to the goods was not of a nature which could have been caused on board the ship, more especially as these were the only goods damaged out of the whole cargo.

H. O. Clarkson and Langen for the respondents were not called upon.

JAMES, L.J.—The judgment of the court below must be confirmed.

The appellants have sought to contend that because the master signed a bill of lading containing the words "weight, contents, and value unknown," it must be taken that he repudiated anything like an admission as to their condition when shipped, but I do not think that these words have such a meaning; the bill of lading taken together must be considered to admit that the goods when shipped were, as far as they could be seen, in good order, and by adding the words above quoted, the master does no more than say that he does not admit anything as to the contents of the packages, which he cannot see. He does admit, however, that the goods appear to be in good condition outside, and this throws upon the appellants the onus of proving that the damage did not arise whilst the goods were on board the ship or in their custody, or that it comes within the exceptions of the bills of lading. For the purpose of doing this they have attempted to show that there was nothing on board the ship that could have occasioned damage of the nature sustained, but looking to the evidence as to the passengers, I do not think that this is made out. Again, they contended that the damage could not have been done on board the ship because only this consignment was damaged, whereas, if material of the nature causing the damage had been in the ship, other goods must likewise have been damaged. But there is no force in this argument, because these bales were all together, and it was most probable that the cause of the damage might affect a particular lot of bales. Many causes of damage are necessarily purely local, as in the case of ink spilt over books; it is true a whole cargo may be damaged by a leak, or by some portion rotting, and affecting the rest, but saturation by an oily substance may very well be local, and affect only a portion, especially if the amount of damaging matter has been small. I am of opinion that the appellants have failed to show that this damage was not done on board ship, and in fact the evidence satisfies me that it was done on board the ship and not outside of it. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

MELLISH, L.J., and BAGGALLAY, J.A. concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Plews, Irvine, and Hodges.

Solicitors for the respondent, Stibbard and Cronshey.

APPEAL FROM THE COMMON PLEAS.

Reported by GILBERT G. KENNEDY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 24 and May 29, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., JAMES and MELLISH, L.JJ., MELLOR, J., and CLEASBY, B.)

NUGENT v. SMITH.

Act of God—Carrier by water—Damage to mare—Accident caused partly by storm, partly by terror of animal—Liability of owner of ship not a general ship.

A loss occasioned by the act of God is a loss arising from and occasioned by the agency of nature which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence so as to prevent its effect.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant in London a mare to be carried by the defendant by steamer from London to Aberdeen, between which places the defendant ran steamers as a common carrier. A storm arising during the voyage, the mare was so injured that she died. The jury found that the injury was caused partly by excessive bad weather and partly by the fright and struggling of the mare, and they negatived all negligence on the part of the defendant.

Held, reversing the decision of the Common Pleas, that upon these findings of the jury the defendant was not liable.

Per Cockburn, C.J.—There is no authority for the proposition, nor is there any trace of a special custom of the Realm, i.e., common law, that all carriers by sea are subject to the liability of a common carrier, whether by sea or land.

This was an action against the defendant as secretary of a steamboat company, who advertised and ran a line of steamers from London to Aberdeen. The plaintiff delivered to the company in London two horses to be carried to Aberdeen. The horses were shipped without any bill of lading. At a part of the voyage, during rough weather, one of the animals, a mare, was injured to such an extent that she died, and the plaintiff brought the action for damages occasioned by the loss.

The action was tried before Brett, J., at the sittings in London after Hilary Term 1874, when the following questions were left to the jury:

1. Was the injury to the mare caused by negligence of the defendant's servants, either in preparing for bad weather or in attempting to save the mare from the consequences of bad weather? Answer, No.

2. Or, was the injury caused solely by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling, without any negligence of the defendant's servants? Answer, No.

3. Or was the injury caused solely by the peril of the sea, i.e., by more than ordinary rough weather, without any negligence of the defendant's servants, or any fright and consequent struggling of the mare?—Answer, No.

4. Or was it caused partly by more than ordinary bad weather, and partly by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling, without any negligence of the defendant's servants?—Answer, Yes.

5. Were there any known means, though not ordinarily used in the carriage of horses by people of ordinary care and skill, by which the defendant could have prevented the injury to the mare? The jury were unable to agree upon this question.

Upon the answers to these questions the learned judge entered a verdict for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move to enter the verdict for him. In Easter Term 1874, a rule nisi was granted, against which cause was shown in Easter Term 1875. The considered judgment of the court (Brett and Denman, JJ.) was, on 2nd Nov. 1875, delivered by Brett, J., in favour of the plaintiff (ante, p. 87; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 731; L. Rep. 1 C. P. D. 19).

Against this judgment the defendant now appealed.

Benjamin, Q.C., Holl, and Douglas Walker for the defendant, the present appellant.—We do not appeal against that part of the judgment of the court below which decides that the defendant is liable as a common carrier, but we contend that by the act of God the defendant is excused from legal responsibility. In order to come within the legal definition of the act of God, the act must be one from which all human intervention is absent. The doctrine of the common law, that a common carrier by water is liable as an insurer, is founded on public policy, because if any human intervention, however irresistible, were allowed to be pleaded by him as an excuse for loss or injury, there would be no safety to the person entrusting him with goods; the doctrine does not extend to loss occasioned by the act of God or by the King's enemies, for the reason that such case would preclude the possibility of any collusion of the carrier's part. Such is the theory of the law. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Only as confined to English law]. It is founded on the Roman law. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The Roman law only contains caupones, et stabularit; but must we not look at a cognate matter, and see how far a storm, however wild, is covered by the words "perils of the seas" in a policy of marine insurance?] There has been a distinction between perils of the sea and the act of God, in this way, that perils of the sea are what could be averted; for instance, if an ordinary bad weather a ship strains and water gets through her seams so that the goods get injured, the owner is liable; but if a wave rushing on board, breaks into a hatch, that is within the sense of the exception, the act of God. The reason of the rule is that it does not apply where human collusion is possible, and if the carrier has not neglected any human precaution he is not liable. The case is Forward v. Pittard (1 Term Rep. 27), where judgment was delivered by Lord Mansfield. That case is followed by the case of The Vent and Mersey Navigation Company v. Wood (3 Esp. 127; 4 Doug. 287), also before Lord Mansfield. The result of the authorities is summed up by Story on Carriers, ss. 10, 511. [JAMES, L.J.—Supposing the horse had been put in a padded box?] The duty of the carrier is not so to pack the goods that no harm can come to them; as, for instance, in order to prevent wet reaching goods, is he bound to pack them in waterproof coverings? He is not bound to use extraordinary means. His liability is only to use reasonable care. Even in the case of fine weather, such circumstances might be found as could amount to the act of God, and which would therefore exonerate the carrier from liability; as, for instance, if calm weather delays a ship so that fresh meat carried by her becomes corrupt, the carrier is excused: (Taylor v. Dunbar, L. Rep. 4 L. P. 206.) [MELLISH, L.J.—If injury resulting from the act of God is an excuse, as well as injury resulting from the inherent character of the thing, the combined action of the two is an excuse.] Such is our contention here. The guiding rule in determining what is the act of God is that no human agency has been concerned with the act. If the moving cause has been from natural causes, and there has been no contributory negligence on the part of man, the carrier is excused. The following authorities were also on his point referred to in the argument:

[CT. OF APP.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[CT. OF APP.]

Angell on Carriers, sect. 156, note;
Amies v. Stevens, 1 Strange 128;
Oolt v. M'Mechen, 6 Johnson's Reports of the Supreme Court of New York, 159;
Abbott on Shipping, 8th edit., 345, 382;
M'Arthur v. Seers, 21 Wendell's New York Reps. 190;
Williams v. Grant, 1 Day Conn. Rep. 487;
Nicholls v. Marsland, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 265; L.
 Rep. 10 Ex. 255; 44 L. J. 184, Ex.;
 1 Parsons on Shipping, 253.

Secondly, the accident was owing to the inherent qualities of the animal. An insurer is not liable if injury is caused by the inherent quality of the thing:

Taylor v. Dunbar, (ubi sup.);
Kendall v. South-Western Railway Company, 26
 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 373; 41 L. J.
 184 Ex.;
Blower v. Great Western Railway Company, L. Rep.
 7, C. P. 655;
Jones on Bailments, App. 21;
Clark v. Rochester and Syracuse Railway Company, 4 Kernan's (American) Rep. 570;
Smith v. Newhaven Railway Company, 12 Allen 531.

Cohen Q.C. (Lanyon with him) for the plaintiff. —If the common law presses harshly on the carrier, he may protect himself by a bill of lading; he is not liable for injury occasioned by the act of God or the Queen's enemies, but the onus is on him to show that the loss was so occasioned, and unless he discharges himself from such onus, he is liable. The question is, what is the meaning of the phrase actus Dei? It is not sufficient to show that the intervention of man is absent. Here there was no more intervention than in a case where a bale of cotton catches fire by spontaneous combustion, and sets fire to adjoining bales; the carrier would be exonerated from liability for the original bale, but not for the others. Where damage was done to goods on board a ship by rats, the shipowner was held liable for such damage, although he had kept cats on board: (Laveroni v. Drury, 8 Ex. 166; 22 L. J. 2, Ex.) The tendency of rats to bite wood and the tendency of a bale on fire to set fire to other bales is not the intervention of the hand of man. The act must not only be the act of a higher power in order to exonerate the carrier, but it must be an act that is sudden, overwhelming, and extraordinary. The common law rule by which the carrier by sea is rendered an insurer was founded by the Roman law at a time when owners navigated their own ships, and therefore as the goods were entirely under the control of the shipowner and his servants, it was impossible for the owner of the goods to enter into any question of how injury was caused to the goods while under the care of the shipowner. Therefore it was in order to prevent litigation, not collusion, that the common law rule came to be what it is at the present day. That was before insurance. Now the shipowner can protect himself by exceptions in the bill of lading. He is not liable for perils of the sea: (Lawrence v. Aberdeen, 5 B. & Ald. 107; Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 B. & C. 793.) All the American jurists and the greatest English judges have laid it down that it is not the act of God unless it is something unusual, sudden, and certain, and one that no care operating between the cause and the effect could provide against. [JAMES, L. J.—If between the commencement of the storm and the happening of the injury, the placing of two men at the head of the horse could have prevented the accident, then you say that the act was not in a legal sense the act of God?] Quite so. Kent's Comm. 8th edit. pp. 784, 785. The evidence shows that there was plenty of human intervention—how difficult for the plaintiff to show whether such intervention was wise or not!

Benjamin, Q.C. in reply.—The act of God must first be established, then comes in the human intervention; the human intervention must not be practically impossible but physically impossible. The evidence shows that all care was taken.

Our adv. vult.

May 29.—The following judgments were delivered.

COCKBURN, C.J.—This case involves a question of considerable importance as regards the law relating to carriers by sea, but the facts are few and simple.

The plaintiff being the owner of two horses, and having occasion to send them from London to Aberdeen, shipped them on board a steamship belonging to the company of which the defendant is the representative, plying regularly as a general ship between the two ports. The horses were shipped without any bill of lading. In the course of the voyage a storm of more than ordinary violence arose, and partly from the rolling of the vessel in the heavy sea, partly from struggling caused by excessive fright, one of the animals, a mare, received injuries from which she died. It is to recover damages in respect of her loss that this action is brought. The jury, in answer to a question specifically put to them, have expressly negatived any want of due care on the part of the defendant either in taking proper measures beforehand to protect the horses from the effect of tempestuous weather, or in doing all that could be done to save them from the consequences of it after the storm had come on. A further question put to the jury was whether there were any known means, though not ordinarily used in the carriage of horses by people of ordinary care and skill, by which the defendant could have prevented the injury to the mare, but to this question the jury returned no answer.

The question is whether, on this state of facts, the shipowners are liable. For the defendant it was insisted that the storm, which was the primary and in a partial degree the proximate cause of the loss, must be taken to have been an "act of God" within the legal meaning of that term, so as to afford immunity to the defendants as carriers (all due care having been taken to convey the mare safely) from liability in respect of the loss complained of, and the question to be determined is whether this contention is well founded.

The judgment of the Common Pleas Division in favour of the plaintiff, as delivered by Brett, J., involves, if I rightly understand it, the following propositions: First, that the Roman law relating to bailments has been adopted by our courts as part of the common law of England; secondly, that by the Roman law all ships, whether common carriers or not, are equally liable for loss by inevitable accident; thirdly, that such is the rule of English law as derived from the Roman law, and as evidenced by English authorities; fourthly, that to bring the cause of damage or loss within the meaning of the term "act of God," so as to give immunity to the carrier, the damage or loss in question must have been caused directly and exclusively by such a direct, and violent, and sudden, and irresistible act of nature as the defendant could not, by any amount of ability, foresee would happen; or if he could foresee that it would happen, he could not by any amount of care and skill resist so as to prevent its effect; fifthly, that notwithstanding the inability of the jury to agree to an answer to the fifth question left to them, the defendant has in this case failed to satisfy the burden of proof cast upon him so as to bring himself clearly within the definition, as it is impossible to say that no human ability could foresee the reasonable probability of the happening of rough weather on the voyage, and that a horse at sea might be frightened by it, or that no human ability could prevent injury to a frightened horse in such weather as occurred. In no part of this reasoning am I able to concur.

In the first place, I think it right to observe, that as the vessel by which the mare was shipped was one of a line of steamers plying habitually between given ports, and carrying the goods of all comers as a general ship, and as from this it necessarily follows that the owners were common carriers, it was altogether unnecessary to the decision of the present case to determine the question so elaborately discussed in the judgment of Brett, J., as to the liability of the owner of a ship not being a general ship, but one hired to carry a specific cargo on a particular voyage, to make good loss or damage arising from inevitable accident.

The question being, however, one of considerable importance, though its importance is materially lessened by the general practice of ascertaining and limiting the liability of the ship owner by charter-party or bill of lading, and the question not having before presented itself for judicial decision, I think it right to express my dissent from the reasoning of the court below, the more so as for the opinion thus expressed I not only fail to discover any authority whatever, but find all jurists who treat of this form of bailment carefully distinguish between the common carrier and the private ship. Parsons, a writer of considerable authority on this subject, defines a common carrier to be "one who offers to carry goods for any person between certain termini, and on a certain route." He is bound to carry for all who tender to him goods and the price of carriage, and insures these goods against all loss, but that arising from the act of God, or the public enemy, and has a lien on the goods for the price of the carriage." "If either of these elements is wanting, we say the carrier is not a common carrier, either by land or by water. If we are right in this," he adds, "no vessel will be a common carrier that does not ply regularly, alone or in connection with others, on some definite route, or between two certain termini" (1 Parsons' Shipping 245). Story seems to be of a like opinion. "When it is said," he observes, "that the owners and masters of ships are deemed common carriers it is to be understood of such ships as are employed as general ships, or for the transportation of merchandise for persons in general, such as vessels employed in the coasting trade, or foreign trade, or on general freighting business for all persons offering goods on freight for the port of destination. But if the owner of a ship employs it on his account generally, or if he lets the tonnage, with a small exception, to a single person, and then for the accommodation of a particular individual, he takes goods on board for freight, not receiving them for persons in general, he will not be deemed a common carrier, but a mere private carrier" (Story on Bailments, sec. 501). So Angell, speaking of shipowners as common carriers, says, "When it is said that the owners and masters of ships are treated as common carriers, it is to be understood of such ships as are employed for the transportation of merchandise for all persons indifferently. Should the owner of a ship employ it on his own account, and for the special accommodation of a particular individual take goods on board for freight not receiving them for all persons indifferently, he does not come within the definition of a common carrier, he not holding himself out as engaged in a public employment." But the learned author does not say what would be the case where a shipowner holds himself out as ready to send his vessel with cargo to any place that may be agreed on, but on a private bargain and not as a general ship.

In the absence of all common law authority for the proposition that by the law of England every carrier by sea is subject to the same liability as the common carrier, the authority of the Roman law is invoked, but this law on which so much stress is laid in the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas affords no support to this doctrine. In the first place it is a misapprehension to suppose that the law of England relating to the liability of common carriers was derived from the Roman law, for the law relating to it was first established by our courts with reference to carriers by land on whom the Roman law, as is well known, imposed no liability in respect of loss beyond that of other bailees for reward. In the second place the Roman law made no distinction between inevitable accident arising from what in our law is termed the "act of God," and inevitable accident arising from other causes, but

CT. OF APP.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[CT. OF APP.]

the contrary, afforded immunity to the carrier without distinction whenever the loss resulted from casus fortuitus, or as it is also called damnum fatale, or vis major, unforeseen and unavoidable accident. The language of the Prætorian Edict as given in the digest, might, indeed, if it stood alone, lead to the supposition that the liability of the carrier by sea was unlimited. "Ait prætor, nautæ, caupones, stabularii quod cujusque saluum fore receperint, nisi restituant, in eos judicium dabo." (Dig. IV., Lib. 9, pro.) But, Ulpian, who gives the words quoted in his treatise on the edict, explains this meaning: "Hoc edicto omnimodo qui recepit tenetur, etiam si sine culpâ ejus res perit vel damnum datum est nisi si quid damno fatali contingit. Inde labeo scribit si quid naufragio aut per vim piratarum perierit, non esse iniquum exceptionem ei dari. Idem erit dicendum si in stabulo aut in cauponâ vis major contigerit." In the one case the absence of culpa makes no difference. In the other it does. No difference of opinion exists among civilians as to the law on this subject. There is no doubt that inevitable accident, "damnum fatale," "casus fortuitus," "vis major," for these are synonymous terms, exempt the carrier from liability. "Casus fortuitus," says Averani, "appellatur vis major, vis divina, fatum, damnum fatale, fatalitas." Such is the Roman law, and such is the existing law of all the nations which have adopted the Roman law, France, Spain, Italy, Germany, Holland, and, to come nearer home, Scotland. It is embodied in the Code Civile of France. Treating of carriers by land and by water, the Code says (art. 1754): "Ils sont responsables de la perte, et des avaries des choses qui leur sont confiées, à moins qu'ils ne prouvent qu'elles ont été perdues et avaries par cas fortuit ou force majeure." That such is the law of Scotland we learn from what is said in Erskine's Institutes (pp. 591, 592, n), from which it appears that not only storm and pirates, but also housebreaking and fire constitute damnum fatale, which will exonerate the innkeeper or carrier. See also the appendix to Stair's Institutes, by More (p. 57).

But not only does this essential difference between the Roman law and our own suffice to show that so far as the liability of carriers is concerned, our law has not been derived from the Roman; as matter of legal history we know that the more rigorous law of later times, first introduced during the reign of Elizabeth, was in the first instance established with reference to carriers by land, to whom by the Roman law no such liability attached. It was not till the ensuing reign, in the 11th of James I., that it was decided, in Rich v. Kneeland (3 Cro. Jac. 330, Hob. 17), that the common hoyman or carrier by water stood on the same footing as a common carrier by land, and rightly, for in principle there could be no difference between them. The next case in point of date (and it is the first case in the books) in which the liability of the owner of a seagoing ship comes in question, is the well-known case of Morse v. Slus (1 Ventris, 190, 238), in which it was held, after a trial at bar, that where a ship, lying in the Thames, was boarded by robbers, who took the plaintiff's goods, which had been loaded on board the vessel, out of her, in an action brought against the master, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. And it certainly surprises me that this case should be relied on as an authority for the position that the liability of a common carrier attaches to the shipowner or master where the ship is not a general ship; for though it is not expressly said that the ship in question was a general ship, which has led to the somewhat hasty assumption that she was not, the internal evidence shows conclusively that she was so. In the first place the declaration is laid on the custom of the realm, and we know that the only custom to which effect had, up to that time, been given, and that quite in recent times, was in respect of common carriers by land, and still more recently in respect of common carriers by water. Secondly, Hale, C.J., in giving judgment, puts the case as on all fours with that of a common carrier or hoyman and nowhere says that it is to be treated as that of a private ship. "He who would take off the master from this action," says the Chief Justice, "must assign the difference between it and the case of a hoyman, common carrier, or inn holder." Doubtless the counsel for the defendant, if the case had been distinguishable on the ground that the vessel was not a common ship, would have pointed out the difference, and, at all events, taken the point; and in the corresponding report of the case in Levinz (2 Lev. 69), the case of Rich v. Kneeland having been referred to, the Chief Justice is reported to have said that the case "differed not from that of the hoyman." But in that case of Rich v. Kneeland we know that the barge or hoy was a common vessel, and it is obvious that if in Morse v. Slus the vessel had been a private one, instead of treating the case as identical with that of the common hoyman, the Chief Justice would have put it on the ground that all sea going vessels were subject to the larger liability. But, besides this, there is a circumstance which appears to have been overlooked, which is a decision to show that the ship must have been a general ship. It is mentioned in the report in Ventris that the ship was a vessel of 150 tons burden bound for Cadiz, while the goods shipped by the plaintiff consisted of three trunks, containing 400 pairs of silk stockings and 174lb. of silk. It seems idle to suppose that a ship of that size would have been hired on such a voyage for the purpose of carrying the plaintiff's three trunks as her entire cargo. There seems, therefore, no reasonable doubt that the ship was a general ship. In like manner in the case of Dale v. Hall (1 Wilson, 281), although the declaration was not upon the custom of the realm, but upon the implied obligation to carry safely, it appearing that the defendant was a shipmaster or keelman who carried goods from port to port, the court decided in favour of the plaintiff, expressly on the liability of the defendant as a common carrier (though the latter was prepared to show an absence of negligence on his part), on the ground that the allegation of the duty of a common carrier "to carry safely" was equivalent to a declaration on the custom of the realm. In the subsequent case of Barclay v. Cuculla y Guna (3. Doug. 389), which was a case where as in Morse v. Slus goods had been forcibly taken by thieves from a ship lying in the Thames, on the objection being taken on behalf of the defendant that he was not charged in the declaration on the custom of the realm, while there was neither express undertaking or negligence to make him liable otherwise, the answer of the court is "that there was no question at the trial as to the ship being a general ship," and Lord Mansfield adds that it was impossible to distinguish the case from that of a common carrier. Thus far the reported cases as to carriers by sea have been cases of general vessels. The next case in point of time, that of Lyon v. Mells (5 East. 428), was one in which the defendant kept sloops for carrying other persons' goods for hire, and also lighters for carrying such goods to and from his sloops, as well as to and from the sloops of other owners. One of these lighters, in which goods of the plaintiff were being conveyed on board a sloop, proved leaky, and took in a quantity of water, and the goods became seriously damaged, and it was also found as a fact that the goods had been negligently stowed. The defendant relied on a notice that he would not be answerable for any loss or damage unless occasioned by want of ordinary care of the master and crew, in which case he would pay 10 per cent. on the loss or damage, but that persons desirous of having their goods carried free from any risk in respect of loss or damage, whether arising from the act of God, or otherwise, might have them so carried on entering into an agreement to pay extra freight in proportion to the risk. The question was whether, no extra freight having been paid, the defendant was protected by this notice from liability for more than 10 per cent. of damages. Nothing in reality turned upon his being a common carrier, or subject to the liability of a common carrier. Some discussion, it is true, took place on the argument as to whether the defendant was a common carrier or not; but Lord Ellenborough, in giving judgment, put the matter on the right footing, namely, that a carrier by water impliedly engages that his vessel should be water tight, an obligation obviously applicable to all carriers, whether common carriers or otherwise, and that the defendant could not be taken to have intended by such a notice to claim immunity in respect of his own breach of contract, but only immunity above 10 per cent. for loss or damage arising from the negligence of the master and crew, and total immunity in respect of loss or damage from the act of God or other cause unless extra freight was paid. The owner, no doubt, thought his liability that of a common carrier, and, as Lord Ellenborough points out, sought to protect himself accordingly; but Lord Ellenborough nowhere treats him as such, but decides the case on a general ground applicable to all carriers, whether common or private. Yet this case is relied on as showing that a man who lets out a lighter or ship not to carry the goods of general comers, but to a particular individual on a specific job or contract, if his business be to let out lighters or ships, is a common carrier, or is at all events subject to an equal degree of liability. The last case is that of the Liver Alkali Company v. Johnson (ante, vol. 1, p. 380; vol. 2, p. 332; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 95; L. Rep. 9 Ex. 338; 43 L. J., 216, Ex.), in which the defendant was a barge owner and let out his vessels for conveyance of goods to any customers who applied to him. Each voyage was made under a separate agreement, and a barge was not let to more than one person for the same voyage. The defendant did not ply within any fixed termini, but the customer fixed in each particular case the points of arrival and departure. In an action against the defendant by the plaintiffs for not safely and securely carrying certain goods, the Court of Exchequer Chamber held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, that the defendant was a common carrier, and liable as such. Mr. Justice Brett, differing from the majority, held that the defendant was not a common carrier, but asserting the same doctrine as in the judgment now appealed from, held him liable upon a special custom of the realm attaching to all carriers by sea — of which custom, however, as I have already intimated, I can find no trace whatever. We are of course, bound by the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, in the case referred to, as that of a court of appellate jurisdiction, and which therefore can only be reviewed by a court of ultimate appeal; but I cannot help seeing the difficulty which stands in the way of the ruling in that case, namely, that it is essential to the character of a common carrier that he is bound to carry the goods of all persons applying to him, while it never has been held, and, as it seems to me, could not be held, that a person who lets out vessels or vehicles to individual customers on their application was liable to an action for refusing the use of such vessel or vehicle if required to furnish it. At all events, it is obvious that the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber having proceeded on the ground that the defendant in that case was a common carrier, the decision is no authority for the position taken in the court below that all shipowners are equally liable for loss by inevitable accident. It is plain that the majority of the court did not adopt the view of Brett, J.

While it does not lie within our province to criticise the law we have to administer, or to question its policy, I cannot but think that we are not called upon to extend a principle of extreme rigour peculiar to our own law, and the absence of which in the law of other nations has not been found by experience to lead to the evils for the prevention of which our law was supposed to be necessary, further than it has hitherto been applied. I cannot, therefore, concur in the opinion expressed in the judgment delivered by Brett, J., that by the law of England all carriers by sea are subject to the liability which by that law undoubtedly attaches to the common carrier whether by sea or by land.

But there being no doubt that in the case before us the shipowner was a common carrier, we have now to deal with the question on which the decision turns, namely, whether the loss was occasioned by what can properly be called the "act of God."

The definition which is given by Brett, J. of what is termed in our law the "act of God" is that "it must be such a direct, and violent, and sudden and irresistible act of nature as could not by any amount of ability have been foreseen, or if foreseen, could not by any amount of human care and skill have been resisted." The judgment then proceeds, "We cannot say, notwithstanding the inability of the jury to agree to an answer to the fifth question left to them, that the defendant has in this case satisfied the burden of proof cast upon him so as to bring himself clearly within the definition. It seems to me impossible to say that no human ability could foresee the reasonable probability of the happening of rough weather on the voyage, and that a horse at sea might be frightened by it, or that no human ability could prevent injury to a frightened horse in such weather as occurred." The exposition here given appears to me to be wide as regards the degree of care required of the shipowner, and as exacting more than can properly be expected of him. It is somewhat remarkable that previously to the present case no judicial exposition has occurred of the meaning of the term "act of God," as regards the degree of care to be applied by the carrier in order to entitle himself to the benefit of its protection. We must endeavour to lay down an intelligible rule.

That a storm at sea is included in the term "act of God" can admit of no doubt whatever. Storm and tempest have always been mentioned in dealing with this subject as among the instances of vis major coming under the denomination of "act of God." But it is equally true that it is not under all circumstances that inevitable accident arising from the so-called "act of God," will, any more than inevitable accident in general by the Roman and continental law, afford immunity to the carrier. This must depend on his ability to avert the effects of the vis major, and the degree of diligence which he is bound to apply to that end. It is at once obvious, as was pointed out by Lord Mansfield in Forward v. Pittard (1 T. R. 27) that all causes of inevitable accident, "casus fortuitus," may be divided into two classes, those which are occasioned by the elementary forces of nature unconnected with the agency of man or other cause, and those which have their origin either in the whole or in part in the agency of man whether in acts of commission or omission, of nonfeasance or of misfeasance, or in any other cause independent of the agency of natural forces. It is obvious that it would be altogether incongruous to apply the term "act of God" to the latter class of inevitable accident. It is equally clear that storm and tempest belong to the class to which the term "act of God" is properly applicable. On the other hand, it must be admitted that it is not because an accident is occasioned by the agency of nature and therefore by what may be termed the "act of God" that it necessarily follows that the carrier is entitled to immunity. The rain which fertilises the earth, and the wind which enables the ship to navigate the ocean are as much within the term "act of God" as the rainfall which causes a river to burst its banks and carry destruction over a whole district, or the cyclone that drives a ship against a rock or sends it to the bottom. Yet the carrier, who by the rule is entitled to protection in the latter case, would clearly not be able to claim it in the former. For here another principle comes into play. The carrier is bound to do his utmost to protect the goods committed to his charge from loss or damage, and if he fails herein becomes liable from the nature of his contract. In the one case he can protect the goods by proper care, in the other it is beyond his power to do so. If by his default in omitting to take the necessary care, loss or damage occurs, he remains responsible though the so-called "act of God" may have been the immediate cause of the mischief. If the ship is unseaworthy, and hence perishes from the storm which it otherwise would have weathered; if the carrier, by undue deviation or delay exposes himself to the danger which he would otherwise have avoided, or if, by his rashness, he unnecessarily encounters it by putting to sea in a raging storm, the loss cannot be said to be due to the act of God alone, and the carrier cannot have the benefit of it. This being granted the question arises as to the degree of care which is to be required of him to protect him from liability in respect of loss arising from the act of God.

Not only, as has been observed, has there been no judicial exposition of the meaning of the term "act of God," as regards the degree of care to be applied by the carrier in order to entitle himself to its protection, but the text writers, both English and American, are for the most part silent on the subject, and afford little or no assistance. As we are here on common ground with the civilians, so far as one head of inevitable accident is concerned, it may be of use while endeavouring more clearly to fix the limits of that class of inevitable accidents which comes under the head of "act of God," to turn to their views on that subject with reference to inevitable accidents in general. As the result of the different instances of casus fortuitus, which occur in the Digest, Viminus gives the following definition: "Casum fortuitum definimus omne quod humano captu prævideri non potest, nec cui proviso potest resisti:" (Instit. Juris. lib. 2, c. 66.) He enumerates various instances: "Casus fortuiti varii sunt, veluti a vi ventorum, turbinum, pluviarum, grandinum, fulminum, cæstus, frigoris, et similibus calamitatibus quæ cælitus immittuntur. Nostri vim divinam dixerunt. Græci Θεου βίαι. Item naufragiæ, æquarum inundationes, incendia, mortes animalium, ruinæ ædium, fundorum chasmata, incursus hostium, prædonum impetus. His adde damna omnia a privatis illata quæ quominus inferrentur, nullâ curâ caveri potuit." Baldus (Quest. 12 No. 4) gives the following definition: "Casus fortuitus est accidens quod per custodiam curam vel diligentiam mentis humanæ non potest evitari ab eo qui patitur." In our own law on this subject judicial authority, as has been stated, is wanting, and the text writers, English and American, with one exception, afford little or no assistance. Story, however, in speaking of the perils of the sea, in which storm and tempest are, of course, included, and, consequently, to a great extent the instances of inevitable accident at sea, which come under the term, "act of God," uses the following language: "The phrase, 'perils of the sea' whether understood in its most limited sense as importing a loss by natural accidents peculiar to that element, or whether understood in its more extended sense as including inevitable accidents occurring upon that element, must still in either case be understood to include such losses only to the goods on board as are of an extraordinary nature, or arise from some irresistible force, or from inevitable accident, or from some overwhelming power which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. Hence it is that if the loss occurs by a peril of the sea, which might have been avoided by the exercise of any reasonable skill or diligence at the time when it occurred, it is not deemed to be in the sense of the phrase such a loss by the perils of the sea as will exempt the carrier from liability, but rather a loss by the gross negligence of the party." Story, it will be observed, here speaks only of "ordinary exertion of human skill and prudence and the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence." I am of opinion that this is the true view of the matter, and that what Story here says of perils of the sea applies equally to the perils of the sea coming within the designation of "acts of God." In other words, that all that can be required of the carrier is that he shall do all that is reasonably and practically possible to insure the safety of the goods. If he uses all the known means to which prudent and experienced carriers ordinarily have recourse he does all that can be reasonably required of him, and if under such circumstances he is overpowered by storm or other natural agency, he is within the rule which gives immunity from the effects of such vis major as the act of God. I do not think that because some one may have discovered some more efficient method of securing the goods which has not become generally known, or because it cannot be proved that if the skill and ingenuity of engineers or others were directed to the subject, something more efficient might not be produced, that the carrier can be made liable. I find no authority for saying that the vis major must be such as "no amount of human care or skill could have resisted," or the injury such as "no human ability could have prevented," and I think this construction of the rule erroneous.

That the defendants here took all the care that could reasonably be required of them to insure the safety of the mare, is, I think, involved in the finding of the jury directly negating negligence, and I think it was not incumbent on the defendants to establish more than is implied by that finding. The matter becomes, however, somewhat complicated from the fact that the jury have found that the death of the mare is to be ascribed to injuries caused partly by the rolling of the vessel, partly by struggles of the animal occasioned by fright, leaving it doubtful whether the fright was the natural effect of the storm, or whether it arose from an unusual degree of timidity peculiar to the animal, and in excess of what would generally be displayed by horses. But the plaintiff is in this dilemma, if the fright which led to the struggling of the mare was in excess of what is usual in horses on ship board in a storm, then the rule applies that the carrier is not liable where the thing carried perishes or sustains damage by reason of some quality inherent in its nature, without any fault of his, and which it was not possible for him to guard against. If on the other hand the fright was the natural effect of the storm, and of the agitation of the ship, then it was the immediate consequence of the storm, and the injuries occasioned by the fright are sufficiently closely connected with the storm, in other words, with the act of God, to afford protection to the carrier.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and judgment entered for the defendant.

MELLISH, L.J.—I do not wish to give any opinion on the question whether the defendant if he had not been a common carrier would have been subject to the liability of common carriers. It is unnecessary to give any opinion on that question, because it was admitted in the argument before us that the defendant was a common carrier.

I agree with the Lord Chief Justice that the judgment of the Common Pleas Division ought to be reversed, and generally with the reasons he has given in his judgment. If the jury had found that the injury to the mare was caused solely by more than ordinary bad weather without any negligence of the defendant's servants, or any fright and consequent struggling of the mare, I am of opinion that a plea that the injury to the mare was caused by the act of God would have been proved. It is obvious that if a horse is properly secured on deck, and properly attended to by the carrier's servants, and is quiet, and nevertheless is so injured as to be killed by the pitching of the vessel, the violence of the storm must be very great indeed, and the whole accident would be of such an extraordinary character as plainly to amount to the act of God within the authorities. So, also, if the jury had found that the injury was caused solely by the conduct of the mare herself by reason of fright and consequent struggling without any negligence on the part of the defendant's servants, I am of opinion that a plea that the injury to the mare was caused by the vice of the mare herself would have been proved. The cases of Kendal v. London and South-Western Railway Company (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 735; 41 L. J. Rep. 184, Ex.; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 373) and Blower v. The Great Western Railway Company (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 655) are direct authorities to this effect. Now, if these conclusions are correct, it seems to me it would be absurd to hold that, although the injury to the mare was occasioned by two causes combined, for neither of which the carrier was responsible, nevertheless he was liable. It may, no doubt, be true that as the injury of the mare was not solely occasioned by more than ordinary bad weather, the bad weather may not have been so bad as to deserve the description of a direct and violent and sudden and irresistible act of nature, which, in the court below, it was said it must amount to, in order to amount to an act of God. The bad weather may not have been irresistible, because, if it had not been for the conduct of the mare herself, it might have been resisted. So, also, the conduct of the mare herself may not have been the sole and irresistible cause of the injury, because, if it had not been for the bad weather any injurious effect from the fright and struggling of the mare might, by reasonable precautions, have been prevented. Still it may be perfectly true, and I think the jury must be taken to have found it was true, that the more than ordinary bad weather, and the fright and struggling of the mare herself, did together form a direct and violent and irresistible cause of the damage which the mare suffered.

In the court below the learned judges first consider the question whether the loss in this case can be considered to have occurred by the act of God; and because the bad weather did not, in their opinion, amount to a direct and violent and sudden and irresistible act of nature, they came to the conclusion that the loss was not occasioned by the act of God. They then consider whether the loss was occasioned by the vice of the mare herself, and because they think that the fright and struggling of the mare was occasioned principally by the bad weather they hold that the loss was not occasioned by the vice of the mare herself. The objection to this mode of considering the case seems to me to be that the two causes of loss are considered separately, and because neither, taken separately, affords an answer to the plaintiff's claim, it is assumed that both, taken together, cannot afford an answer.

Now, I am of opinion we ought to hold that notwithstanding neither the more than ordinary bad weather, nor the fright and s

CT. OF APP.]

NUGENT v. SMITH.

[CT. OF APP.]

gling of the mare herself, each taken separately were sufficient to account for the loss, yet if both taken together formed an irresistible cause of the loss in this sense, that by no reasonable precaution on the part of the carrier could the damage resulting from them have been prevented, the carrier is protected. It being a clear rule of law that if the loss of the goods carried is occasioned by an irresistible act of nature the carrier is protected, and another clear rule of law that if the loss of the goods is solely occasioned by a defect in the thing itself the carrier is also protected, it seems to me to follow that if a loss is occasioned partly by an act of nature, although one not by itself irresistible, and partly by a defect in the thing itself, although that defect is not the sole cause of the loss, and the carrier has no means of preventing the combined effect of the two causes, he ought to be held to be protected. The principle seems to me to be that a carrier does not insure against acts of nature, and does not insure against defects in the thing carried itself; but in order to make out a defence the carrier must be able to prove that either cause taken separately or both taken together formed the sole and direct and irresistible cause of the loss. I think, however, that in order to prove that the cause of the loss was irresistible it is not necessary to prove that it was absolutely impossible for the carrier to prevent it, but that it is sufficient to prove that by no reasonable precaution under the circumstances could it have been prevented.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed, and the rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff discharged.

CLEASBY, B.—I should hesitate to decide this case upon the general ground much insisted on during the argument that where there is a loss or destruction of anything intrusted to a carrier from natural causes without the intervention of any human agency the carrier is discharged. In other words, that the exception of "the act of God" from the carrier's responsibility applied to every condition of things resulting from natural causes. The words "act of God" as applied to the carrier's exemption comprehend no doubt such events as earthquakes and all other convulsions of nature. Violent storms and tempests have always been considered as coming within the words, and men have thought they could avert them by prayers and offerings. Mr. Wallace, the American editor of Smith's Leading Cases, as cited in the note to Angell on Carriers, sect. 155, p. 153, attempts a definition, "Upon the whole it would seem that the act of God signifies the extraordinary violence of nature." This entirely disapproves of those American cases referred to in the argument, Colt v. M'Meeher and Williams v. Grant (ubi sup.), which appeared to go to the extent of showing that "act of God" and "act of nature" meant the same thing. I mean, of course, "act of God" as applied to the carrier's exception. I would not adopt this or any definition as exact and including all cases; but wherever there is that unusual violence of nature against which, in the opinion of the jury, precautions would be considered unavailing, and could not be expected to be taken, I should say the case would come within the exception.

Now how does the present case stand as regards this? I should have been better satisfied if the note of the case had shown more distinctly that there had been in this case the intervention of the act of God in the sense which I have mentioned. Still, looking at the language of the questions put to the jury, and the answers, it is a fair conclusion, I think, that the weather was of such a nature "more than ordinary bad weather," as to come within the meaning of "act of God." It seems to have been argued in that way, and if that be so, the judgment of the Court below is subject to this criticism, that though the carrier is excused by the "act of God," he is yet bound to use precautions against the "act of God." This seems an inconsistency, and I should feel fully justified in saying that if the "act of God" and the nature of the animal combined to produce the injury, the defendants would be discharged. The fifth question asks: "Were there known means not ordinarily used in the carriage of horses by sea by people of ordinary care and skill, by which the injury might be prevented?" It is not surprising that the jury could not agree upon an answer to this question. Some would say it must be possible to use means to attain this end, and of course they could not be unknown contrivances, but known to persons of skill, and this would lead to one answer; others would say, the only known means, in the proper sense of the words, were means in use, that is in ordinary use, and this would lead to an opposite answer. It does not appear to me that an answer to that question was essential to determine the case, because, whichever way it was answered, the answers to the other questions, particularly the fourth, determine the case in favour of the defendants. I consider it expressly found that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants in any way contributing to the injury. If the second question had been answered in the affirmative the case would have come within the authority of decided cases. Carriers of live animals are not, as such, without negligence responsible for injury to or death of the animals carried by themselves: (Blower v. Great Western Railway Company, Kendall v. London and South-Western Railway company, ubi sup.) But in the present case it appears that the injuries were due to two causes together, the rough weather and the nature of the animal. If the extraordinary rough weather can be regarded as the act of God within the meaning of those words in the exception then, as I have before stated, the case appears clear; but if it be not, still as the jury have negatived negligence in their answer to the fourth question, it amounts to this—that the defendants took all reasonable and proper precautions against rough weather, but still the extraordinary bad weather and nature of the animal caused the injury. This, in my opinion, is sufficient to absolve the carriers, because, all negligence being negatived, they cannot be said in any way to have contributed to the injury, and so far as being carriers they are insurers, this liability does not extend to injuries caused by the animals themselves, and even though the extraordinary rough weather may have contributed directly, yet no direct conclusion could be founded upon the joint operation of the two causes, as no division could be made of the result caused by each. The third finding negatives the injury being caused by the rough weather alone, and as it follows that the character and conduct of the animal must have been an effective cause the sounder conclusion seems to be

[Ct. of App.]

THE LIMERICK.

[Ct. of App.]

that the plaintiff fails in making out a case to recover anything rather than that the defendants are to be made responsible for the whole consequences of both causes combined.

The effect of this opinion is that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

MILLER, L.J. stated that James, L.J. concurred that the decision of the court below must be reversed, and desired to add the following observation:—The act of God is a mere short way of expressing this proposition: A common carrier is not liable for any accident as to which he can show that it is due to natural causes directly and exclusively, without human intervention, and that it could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight and pains and care reasonably to be expected from him. In this case the defendant has made this out.

MELLOR, J. agreed that the judgment of the court below must be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lynes and Holman.

Solicitors for the defendant, Laurance, Plews, Boyer, and Co.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, May 3, 1876.

(Before JAMES L.J., BAGGALLAY, J.A., and LUSH, J.)

THE LIMERICK.

Master's wages and disbursements—Shipwright's claim—Collision—Bond given by master—Liability.

Where shipwrights execute repairs to a ship at the order of the master given under circumstances by which the shipwrights acquire a right to claim against either the owners or the master, and they elect to claim against the master, the latter may, in an action for wages and disbursements, proceed against the ship and recover for the amount of such shipwrights' claim as a disbursement made on ship's account.

Where a ship through the default of her master has run into and damaged another ship, and the master of the former has in respect of such collision given a bond for the amount of the damage binding himself and his owners and the ship, he, being himself a wrongdoer, cannot, in an action for wages and disbursements, claim the amount of such bond or to be indemnified against any claim to be made against him thereunder in respect of the collision.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Right Hon. Sir R. Phillimore in a case of wages and disbursements instituted in the High Court of Admiralty of England on behalf of Sheriff Hopkins, master of the steamship Limerick against that vessel, and against James Watson, mortgagee of the vessel, intervening.

The cause was instituted by the plaintiff—in consequence of the failure of the owner of the vessel, Mr. Ireland, and of the arrest and sale of the ship in other suits—to recover his own wages and disbursements made on account of crew's wages and provisioning, fitting, and repairing the ship. The defendant did not oppose the claim altogether, but made a reference, and in consequence the judge on the 14th July 1875 made a decree for the plaintiff's claim, and referred the same to the registrar and merchants to report the amount due. The claim was heard before the registrar (Mr. Rothery), assisted by merchants, on the 13th Dec. 1875, the 12th and 14th Feb. 1876. The plaintiff then claimed amongst other things 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* the amount of an account due for repairs of the ship to Messrs. Dowson and Worth, shipwrights, but which had not been paid to them; and also 20*l.* in respect of a "bond given by the master in respect of a collision between the Limerick and the schooner Skitty Belle."

In reference to Dowson and Worth's claim it appeared that the Limerick was in need of some repairs in 1875, and the master was taken to Dowson and Worth by Messrs. Breslau and Co., who were the managing agents of the ship, and he then engaged them to effect the repairs. Breslau and Co. had many ships under their control, and were in the habit of employing Dowson and Worth. The master's evidence on this point was as follows:

Messrs. Dowson and Worth are known to Messrs. Breslau, but they were not employed by him. Mr. Pat (their clerk) took me and introduced me to Messrs. Dowson and Worth, telling them that the Limerick was at one of their ships, they only managed her. I sent account for the bill being made out only to the owner. I, in the first place, sent to Messrs. Dowson and Worth for their account; I did not know whether I was liable or not, and wished to have all the accounts. I should say that this is the account they sent me (account produced). They did not at the time make any demand on me. I did not hear personally from them until two months ago. They have not sued me nor threatened me with a suit.

The account referred to in the evidence was headed "The owners of the steamship Limerick" and not "captain and owners," as is usual. On the 13th March 1876, Dowson and Worth wrote to the plaintiff saying:

We are sorry to have to trouble you again with regard to our account against the Limerick, but as Mr. Jones denies his ownership, and Mr. Ireland has failed, we must apply to you for payment. Our contract was made with you, and you are equally liable as master of the vessel.

Yours faithfully, (Signed) Dowson and Worth.

As to the claim on the bond given for the collision with the Skitty Belle, it appeared that the collision occurred on the last voyage of the Limerick whilst in charge of the plaintiff in the port of Huelva in Spain. The Limerick was leaving the port in charge of the plaintiff, and by his default ran into and damaged the Skitty Belle. The plaintiff admitted in cross-examination that if anybody on board his ship was wrong, he was wrong. The plaintiff did not communicate with his owners before giving the bond. The material parts of the bond were as follows:—

British Consulate, Huelva.

Agreement between Sheriff Hopkins, master of the S.S. Limerick on behalf of the owners, underwriters, and all others concerned in the said vessel, and Mr. William Rees, master of the brigantine Skitty Belle of Swansea, for and on behalf of the owner and all others concerned in the said brigantine.

Mr. Sheriff Hopkins acknowledging, as he does by these presents, the liability of the said steamship Limerick to the payment of the damages, losses, detentions, costs, and expenses sustained by the brigantine Skitty Belle, in consequence of her being run into by the said steamship Limerick under his command, hereby binds himself, owners, underwriters, and all others concerned in his said vessel to the payment of the said damages, losses, costs, detentions, and expenses in the manner and with the conditions hereinafter stated.

1. Mr. William Rees, master of the Skitty Belle, causes such temporary repairs to be done to the

[CT. OF APP.]

THE LIMERICK.

[CT. OF APP.]

at this port as to put her, in the opinion of surveyors, in a seaworthy state to proceed on her intended voyage to the port of Liverpool. (Then followed various provisions as to the full repairs and payment therefor.)

6. On signing these presents, Mr. Sheriff Hopkins will be at liberty to proceed with the said steamship Limerick on her intended voyage without any further hindrance or detention on the part of the owners, masters, or others, concerned in the Skitty Belle.

For the faithful performance of the foregoing agreement, Mr. Sheriff Hopkins binds himself, the owners of the steamship Limerick, and all others concerned, in the penal sum of 200*l.* to be paid unto the owner or owners of the said Skitty Belle, his or their executors, administrators, or assigns.

This done, sealed, and executed at Huelva, on this 6th day of April 1875.

(Signed) S. HOPKINS.
W. BARR.

Before me (Signed) EDWARD DIXON, British Vice-Consul.

The registrar made his report on the 16th Feb. 1876, and found that the said sum of 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* was recoverable by the plaintiff, and allowed that amount in the schedule to the report, and as to the bond for 200*l.*, and the right of the plaintiff to priority, he found as follows:—

"I am also of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to have the sum of 200*l.* retained in court to answer any claim that may be established against him under the bond given by him in respect of the collision between the Limerick and the Skitty Belle. I am further of opinion that the plaintiff in this cause is entitled to payment of the amount found due to him out of the proceeds of sale of the vessel Limerick that may be now remaining in court in priority to all other claims."

On the 23rd Feb. 1876, the defendant gave notice of objection to this report, and in due course filed his petition in objection to the report, and amongst other things alleged as follows:—

4. The defendant objects to the said report in so far as it finds that the plaintiff is entitled to have the sum of 200*l.* retained in court to answer any claim that may be established against the plaintiff under the bond given by him in respect of the collision between the Limerick and the Skitty Belle, upon the grounds that such bond was given by the plaintiff without authority from or due communication with the owner of the Limerick, that the plaintiff himself was at the time of the collision conducting the navigation of the Limerick, and that he was personally liable in respect of the damage done to the Skitty Belle by reason of the said collision at the time when he executed the said bond.

5. And the defendant also objects to the said report in so far as the same allows to the plaintiff by item fifty-four of the schedule thereto the sum of 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in respect of a claim by Dowson and Worth, shipwrights, upon the ground that such sum never was claimed of the plaintiff by the said Dowson and Worth, and that the plaintiff never was liable to the said Dowson and Worth in respect of the said claim.

The plaintiff's solicitor, in the answer to this petition, alleged, amongst other things:—

2. The bond referred to in the fourth article of the petition was given on behalf of the owners of the Limerick by the plaintiff, acting under the advice of the British Consul at Huelva, in Spain, where the collision occurred, and for the best interests of the owner of the Limerick, in order to prevent her arrest and detention in the port of Huelva, and consequent losses and expenses, and loss of freight, and war, as they submit, within the scope of the plaintiff's authority. The act of the plaintiff in giving this bond was approved and ratified by Frederick Ireland, the then managing owner of the Limerick. Insurance had been effected by the said Frederick Ireland, and on behalf of the owners of the Limerick against loss by collision, and the amount of the said bond has on or might have been recovered from the underwriters the said insurance for the benefit of those interested in the Limerick.

3. They deny the plaintiff was personally liable in respect of the damage done to the Skitty Belle by reason of the collision referred to in the fourth article of the petition.

4. They say that Dowson and Worth have claimed of the plaintiff the sum allowed in item fifty-four of the Registrar's report, and they submit to the court whether the plaintiff is liable or not in respect of the said claim.

The defendants denied the allegations of the answer, and the pleadings were concluded.

March 21, 1876.—E. C. Clarkson for the defendant, in objection.

W. G. F. Phillimore for the plaintiff.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—I am asked to overrule the decision of the Registrar on two points in this case. One is as to a sum of money due to Messrs. Dowson and Worth of 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, which the registrar has allowed. I understand, on the ground that it is at least doubtful whether the master be not liable to those who furnished the articles for the benefit of the ship, and I think it doubtful in spite of the argument which has been addressed to me. I think it is very possible myself that the master may be found liable for the 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* to Dowson and Worth; at all events it is a question as to which I should be sorry to give an off-hand opinion upon. But I think the justice and equity of the case will be answered by allowing the mortgagee to have the 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* upon his giving security that if the master be found liable for this sum he will be repaid. That seems to me to be a fair proposition, and I think the same principle applies to the other item. The bond given by the master for 200*l.* in respect of the collision between the Limerick and the Skitty Belle falls under the category of those cases decided in this court, where a master, acting bond fide for the purpose of getting his ship out of arrest in a foreign country, has always been upheld. He may or may not be personally liable under this bond, but I think that what he did was for the benefit of the owners, and I think it would be a harsh thing to compel him to pay, although the bond was given in his name as well as in that of the owners; it would be a harsh thing to deprive him of a lien he would otherwise have on the ship. But I do not see what harm will happen if the 200*l.* is paid out of court upon security being given to cover it: he should be made liable.

The minute of the order made upon this judgment as entered in the registry was as follows:—

The judge, having heard counsel on both sides, adjourned for a fortnight the further consideration of the objection to the registrar's report in this case, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to give within fourteen days if he shall think fit a valid guarantee to secure the plaintiff in respect of the sum of 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, claimed by Messrs. Dowson and Worth, being item No. 54 in the schedule annexed to the said report, and in respect of costs, if he shall be sued for the same, and also in respect of any claim that may be established against the plaintiff under or in consequence of the bond for 200*l.* given by him, and referred to in item No. 50 of the schedule to the said report.

The defendant, however, declined to give security, and was desirous of appealing, whereupon the judge, on the 4th April 1876, made an order confirming the registrar's report as to the two items above mentioned, as well as other matters not material, and pronounced the sum found by the report to be due to the plaintiff, and condemned the proceeds of the vessel Limerick therein.

CT. OF APP.]

SHAND AND OTHERS v. BOWES AND OTHERS.

[Q.B. DIV.]

May 3, 1876.—From this order the defendant now appealed.

E. O. Clarkson, for the appellant.—The master was himself a wrongdoer in respect of this collision, and cannot claim contribution from his owners in respect of his own wrongful act. Moreover, he has bound himself personally by the bond, and is in consequence a principal. As to Dowson and Worth's claim, credit was not given to the master, and he is not liable.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and W. G. F. Phillimore, for the respondent.—The bond was given bonâ fide by the master to release the ship when there was urgent necessity to do so, therefore the master must be taken to have acted with authority and on behalf of his owners. If he did so act his owners cannot, we submit, set up that he was personally liable, and if they cannot, how can the mortgagees do it? The act of the master in giving the bond was the best thing he could do for his owners. As to the claim of Dowson and Worth, the master, having given the order, was jointly liable with the owners, and the material men had an option as to whom they might sue, and they have elected to claim from the master. The master possibly had no implied authority to charge his owners for necessities supplied in a home port, but here there was express authority, because he was taken to the shipwrights by the managing agent of the ship:

Mitcheson v. Oliver, 5 Ell. & Bl. 419.

JAMES, L.J.—On the first point the objection must fail as to the allowance of 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* in respect of the repairs. The Judge of the Admiralty Division came to a right conclusion with regard to that. The plaintiff is liable to Dowson and Worth if it was a debt contracted under such circumstances as to enable the shipwrights to elect whom they would sue, the owners or the master; and I am of opinion that it was such a debt.

With regard to the other point it stands upon the evidence and the statement of the captain and in the bond itself, that it was entirely due to his own negligence that the collision happened, and that he was the wrongdoer. It is impossible upon any principle to say that an agent can charge as a disbursement against his principal the money which he has made himself liable to pay by reason of his own wrong. It was his duty to remedy the mischief, and if he does pay the money under a bond it is impossible to allow him to recover the sum against his principal as a disbursement for the ship in order to cure a mischief which he himself has brought about.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree with my lords on the first point. As to the second point contended for by the plaintiff, that the giving the bond was the best thing to do for the owners, as it extricated the ship from a difficulty, the master was bound to do the best for the owners, and he would have incurred greater liability the longer he kept the ship there; but although it was done for the benefit of his owners that does not give him a charge against them for money paid in respect of any liability he incurred in consequence of his own wrongful acts. The negligence is an admission by the master himself, and he might have been re-examined on the matter; but it is left nakedly as he gave it on his cross-examination. It is clear that the master cannot charge as a disbursement against his principal an expense which he incurred by his own wrongful act.

*Appeal allowed as to the 200*l.*, and disallowed as to the 102*l.* 0*s.* 2*d., and without costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lowless and Co.
Solicitors for the defendant, Linklater and Co.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, J. M. IREY and
E. H. AMFLETT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

April 25 and 26, 1876.

SHAND AND OTHERS v. BOWES AND OTHERS.

Consignment to be shipped in one of two months—Material part shipped in neither of the two months—Refusing to accept—Whether refusal to accept justified—Time for delivery.

The plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant to buy, 600 tons of rice, "to be shipped in the months of March and April." About 8000 bags were put on board in February, and about 50 bags in March, whereupon the defendant refused to accept: Held, that the shipment was not a March shipment, and that the defendant's refusal to accept was justified.

Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep., C. P. 530.), distinguished.

THIS was an action for the non-acceptance of 600 tons of rice. The rice had been sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants by two contracts, dated March 17 and March 24 respectively. Both these contracts stipulated that the rice was to be "shipped at Madras or coast for this port during the months of March <sup>and</sup> April 1874, per Rajah of Cochin." The rice was shipped in 8200 bags, all of which, except about 50, were put on board before the 1st March. Bills of lading were given as follows:

February 23 .....	1780 bags.
" 24 .....	1780 bags.
" 28 .....	3560 bags.
March 3 .....	1080 bags.

The ship sailed on the 10th March, but the defendants having refused to accept the cargo this action was brought.

The cause was tried before Brett, J. and a special jury, at the Michaelmas Sittings 1875, when the jury found that the cargo was a shipment in March <sup>and</sup> or April, in the ordinary business sense of the terms.

April 25.—Benjamin, Q.C. (with him Gaisford Bruce), moved to enter judgment for the defendants, pursuant to leave reserved. He cited Alexander v. Vandersee, L. R. p., 7 C. P. 530.

Cohen, Q.C. and J. O. Matthiaw, argued for the plaintiffs. Cur. adv. vall.

April 26.—The court delivered oral judgment as follows:

BLACKBURN, J.—We have considered this case since the argument, and have come to the conclusion that judgment ought to be entered for the defendants. It appears that the defendants had entered into two contracts to take 600 tons of rice, to be shipped during March or April. The object of that contract is, that if the rice had been

Q.B. Div.]

LUTSCHER v. COMPTOIR D'ESCOMPTE DE PARIS.

[Q.B. Div.]

ped during either of the agreed months, the defendant would have been bound to accept it, otherwise not. The question therefore is, whether or not there was a shipment during those months. Now we are met at the outset by Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), decided by the Exchequer Chamber. This case, of course, is binding on us here, but I take it to be distinguishable. The facts of it were these: The defendant contracted for the purchase of a large quantity of Danubian maize for shipment in June <sup>and</sup> July 1869. In fulfilment of this contract, two cargoes of maize were tendered to the defendant, the bills of lading for which were dated the 4th and 6th June 1869. The loading of these two cargoes was commenced on the 12th and 16th May, and completed on the 4th and 6th June. More than half of each cargo was put on board in May. It was left to the jury to say whether the cargoes were "June shipments" in the ordinary sense of the term, and they found that they were. The majority of the court held, affirming the decision below, that the verdict was rightly entered for the plaintiff, and also that the question was one for the jury. Now what are the undisputed facts here? Three parcels, amounting in the whole to nine-tenths of the cargo, were shipped in February, and the bill of lading in respect of those parcels was signed in February. So far as these parcels are concerned, there was in every sense a complete shipment. With respect to the remaining parcel, the shipment of that was not completed till the 3rd March. If all the parcels had been dealt with in a manner similar to this last, a question might have arisen how far Vandersee v. Alexander (ubi sup.), would apply. But it does not become necessary to consider this question. The defendant agreed to take 600 tons in March or April; such a contract is not answered by the delivery of 15 tons in March and 185 in February.

MELLOR and LUSH, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Stevens, Wilkinson, and Harries; Dattly and Hart.

Tuesday, June 20, 1876.

LUTSCHER v. COMPTOIR D'ESCOMPTE DE PARIS.

Advances upon cargoes to be shipped—Bills drawn and documents hypothecated—Equitable title of agent of sale.

Plaintiff had arranged with a merchant in Africa that the latter should purchase articles of produce and ship them for sale in this country by the plaintiff upon commission, plaintiff allowing the African merchant to draw upon him in order to purchase the articles, and the documents of title of the shipments being hypothecated to the plaintiff so as to enable him to provide funds to meet the bills drawn upon him. The day after the shipment of a cargo under this arrangement, the African merchant stopped payment, and his liquidator gave the bill of lading to the defendants with instructions not to part with it unless paid the value of the cargo. On action brought to recover back the value paid by the plaintiff under protest, and damages for the detention of the bill of lading:

Held, upon demurrer, that the plaintiff had an equitable title to the bill of lading under the arrangement, and that the action was maintainable.

VOL. III, N. S.

THIS was a demurrer to the following statement of claim:

1. The plaintiff is a merchant and carries on business at 8, Austin Friars, London.

2. The defendants are bankers carrying on business at 144, Leadenhall-street, London.

3. During and since the month of April 1875, the plaintiff has had consigned to him by Mr. Louis Levy, a merchant, carrying on business at Oran, in Africa, cargoes of palm leaves and other produce, upon the terms mentioned in the next paragraph.

4. In order to place the said Mr. Levy in funds for the purchase of the said produce, the plaintiff agreed to allow him to draw upon the plaintiff's said firm. The said Mr. Levy was to make purchases in Africa of the said produce and ship the same to the plaintiff. The plaintiff agreed to effect sales in this country of such shipments, charging a commission thereupon. The documents of title of such shipments were hypothecated to the plaintiff so as to enable him to provide funds to meet the bills drawn by the said Mr. Levy.

5. On the 27th May 1875, the plaintiff, at the request of the said Mr. Levy, and in pursuance of the said agreement set out in the 4th paragraph, contracted with the Tovil Paper Company (Limited) carrying on business at Maidstone, in Kent, to sell to them 250 tons of palm leaves at 3l. per ton free on board in Oran, payment to be by acceptance of the buyers at three months on delivery of the bill of lading. The cargo to be shipped by vessel chartered by the buyers to arrive at Oran aforesaid not later than 31st Oct. 1875.

6. The said Mr. Levy having drawn upon the plaintiff in pursuance of the said agreement set out in the 4th paragraph was enabled to purchase, and did, in fact, purchase 250 tons of palm leaves, and the same were shipped on board the steamship Sydenham, chartered by the said Tovil Paper Company (Limited), the loading of the cargo being entirely completed on the 22nd Oct. 1875.

7. The bill of lading was, on the 22nd Oct. 1875, duly signed and handed by the captain of the steamship Sydenham to the said Mr. Levy, and the plaintiff alleges that the same should have been transmitted to the plaintiff by the said Mr. Levy in order to put the plaintiff in funds to meet drafts of the said Mr. Levy upon the plaintiff under the agreement aforesaid.

8. Upon the 23rd Oct. 1875, the said Mr. Levy stopped payment and his affairs were placed in liquidation. The liquidator having obtained possession of the said bill of lading instructed the Bank of Algiers to transmit it to their correspondents in London, who are the defendants, with directions not to part with the same until they were paid the sum of 538l. 4s. 2d., the alleged value of the cargo of 250 tons of palm leaves.

9. Upon the 4th Nov. 1875, the plaintiff, having paid the drafts of the said Mr. Levy to a large amount, which amount is still due to the plaintiff, applied to the defendants for the bill of lading, but was informed of the instructions they had received. The plaintiff claimed the bill of lading under his said agreement with the said Mr. Levy, but the defendants refused to part with the same unless they were paid the sum of 538l. 4s. 2d.

10. The plaintiff, on the 8th Nov. 1875 under protest paid to the defendants the sum of 538l. 4s. 2d., and obtained the said bill of lading.

P

Q.B. Div.]

LUTSCHER v. COMPTOIR D'ESCOMPTE DE PARIS.

[Q.B. Div.]

They then handed over the bill of lading to the said Tovil Paper Company (Limited) in performance of the contract aforesaid.

11. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants improperly withheld from the plaintiff the said bill of lading to which the plaintiff was entitled under the said agreement with the said Mr. Levy.

The plaintiff claims: First, the payment of 538*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* and interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. from the 8th Nov. 1875 until judgment; secondly, 250*l.* damages for the detention of the bill of lading; thirdly, such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

The following was the second paragraph of the statement of defence:

The defendants demur to the plaintiff's statement of claim and say that the same is bad in law on the ground that it shows no legal title in the plaintiff to the bill of lading in question, and that the mere breach of an agreement on the part of Mr. Levy (assuming that it applied to the cargo in question, which is not alleged) gave no legal title to the bill of lading as against the liquidator or the defendants under the circumstances mentioned in the plaintiff's statement of claim, so as to entitle the plaintiff to recover the money claimed; and on other grounds in law sufficient to sustain the demurrer.

The following were the plaintiff's points of argument: First, the statement of claim shows a legal title in the plaintiff to the bill of lading; secondly, the statement of claim shows an equitable title in the plaintiff to the bill of lading; thirdly, the statement of claim shows that the assignee of Mr. Levy took the bill of lading subject to its previous hypothecation to the plaintiff, and the defendants as agents of the assignee can have no better title; fourthly, the plaintiff has a legal title to the 538*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*; fifthly, the plaintiff has an equitable title to the 538*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

The following were the defendants' points: The defendants contend that the statement of claim does not show such a title in the plaintiff to the bill of lading and such a wrongful detention thereof by the defendants from him as entitles him to recover back the money paid to obtain possession of the document. That there was no hypothecation of the document by Mr. Levy so as to pass the property in it to the plaintiff. That the mere breach of an agreement on the part of Mr. Levy, assuming that it applied to the cargo in question (which is not alleged), gave no title to the plaintiff, after Levy's affairs were placed in liquidation, to have the bill of lading delivered up to him without payment of the value of the cargo. That the mere fact of the plaintiff having paid the drafts of Mr. Levy, and Mr. Levy having become indebted to the plaintiff, gave him no legal right to the bill of lading so as to support this action.

Holl argued for the defendants.—The facts stated put the plaintiff's claim within the decision of Chinnoek v. Sainsbury (6 Jur. N. S. 1318). That was a demurrer to a bill in equity which prayed substantially, as was held by the Master of the Rolls, for the specific performance of a contract of agency; in consideration of the plaintiffs (auctioneers) having advanced to the defendant a sum of money, the defendant agreed in writing to deposit with them for sale the whole of his collection of pictures, &c., upon the understanding that the amount of advances and the commission were to be deducted from the proceeds of the sale.

The defendant deposited only a portion of the collection which, however, the plaintiffs proceeded to sell, but it realised a very much smaller sum than was anticipated; in fact not more than half the amount of the advances. The defendant refused to deposit for sale the remaining portion of the collection, and the plaintiffs filed their bill for specific performance of the agreement. The demurrer to this bill was allowed. The Master of the Rolls considered that "the object of the bill was to have it declared that the property not delivered to the plaintiff is a security for the amount advanced upon the property which was handed over to them. On the facts of the case, I am of opinion that the 1500*l.* was not advanced on the security of the property not deposited with the plaintiffs; the property was handed over at different times, and there was no refusal on the part of the plaintiff to advance the money until the whole collection was deposited. It must therefore be assumed that they were satisfied with the security offered by the amount deposited with them. I am of opinion, therefore, that no case has been made out for enforcing the contract in this court. The plaintiffs must proceed at law to ascertain what is due to them on account of the loan and commission, and for the damages which they have sustained." The plaintiff has the same remedy in this case, but he cannot be held to have met the bills drawn by Levy on the security of this cargo of which the bill of lading had not been deposited with him.

Benjamin, Q.C. (with him Anderson), for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff had a sufficient equitable title to this bill of lading, on the agreement alleged, to support his claim in this action. Chinnoek v. Sainsbury is cited and discussed in Fisher on Mortgages. The effect of it is stated in these words (sect. 3): "A mere contract to deposit property for sale, and out of the proceeds to pay advances made by the intended depositors will not amount to a security, if it appear that the advances were not in fact made on the security of the property, but will be treated only as a contract to make a deposit." Here, however, it appears that plaintiff's advances were in fact made on the security of these hypothecations, and that the agreement was to give plaintiff a lien upon each cargo shipped. Mr. Fisher, in treating of Agency Liens, says in sect. 201: "An agent who has advanced money or incurred liability on account of his principal is protected by a lien on the property in respect of which the advances were made, or on the produce of the sale of it. An army agent, therefore, in respect of his advances to an officer for his outfit, has a lien on the purchase-money of his commission; and a person who has carried on trade for another, upon the stock and debts, of which he may restrain the assignees in bankruptcy of his principal from taking possession. An agreement that the lender of money shall be employed to sell, and shall be repaid out of the proceeds of goods expected to be purchased, there being no contract for the purchase of such goods, will not however give him a lien upon goods which are afterwards purchased and sent, but were not paid for with the money advanced." The authority for the last-mentioned instance, Deane v. Byrnes (13 W. R. 299), does not apply to this case, for here the purchase was completed with the money drawn by Levy upon the plaintiff. This is a case with

Div.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[Ex. Div.]

lication of Bristow v. Whitmore (9 H. of L. 1). [COCKBURN, C.J.—How can the defendant contend that this is not an equitable lien the plaintiff possesses over the bill of lading?]

in reply.—The statement of claim does make it clear that the cargo was purchased by the plaintiff's advances, nor that this bill of lading have been hypothecated to the plaintiff if he had not stopped payment. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The facts may be loosely stated, but the statement is to make the case in my opinion too clear for argument]. At all events Chinnock v. Sainsbury is an authority distinctly in the defendants' favor.

BURN, J.—I think upon the statement of claim here can be no question that this cargo of palm leaves was shipped under the contract stated between Levy and the plaintiff. Levy had drawn upon plaintiff for the cargo to purchase the cargo, and that in pursuance of the agreement the bill of lading ought to have been hypothecated to plaintiff as the security which he allowed Levy to draw upon him. Being so, the plaintiff was entitled at least in equity to be paid his advances out of the value of the cargo shipped under his agreement with Levy.

LEWIS and FIELD J.J. concurred.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Attorney for the plaintiff, A. G. Ditton.

Attorneys for the defendants, Lyne and Holman.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Decided by H. LEIGH and A. PAWSON, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

May 29 and 30, 1876.

Before KELLY, C.B., and CLEASBY, B.)

FISHER v. SMITH.

Insurance—Shipowner and insurance broker—Broker employing a sub-agent—Lien of sub-agent for premiums paid by him—Principal's liability—Notice.

The plaintiff, a shipowner, who had, on several occasions during three years previously, employed the defendant and Co. as insurance brokers, to effect marine insurances for him, authorised them to effect an insurance for him on a cargo by a ship of his, and they accordingly did through the sub-agent of the defendant, also an insurance broker, paid the premiums on the policies, and who on previous occasions, by the instructions of the defendant and Co., effected policies for the plaintiff and persons. The defendant had notice throughout that S. and Co. were acting as brokers, and the plaintiff was their principal; but the plaintiff did not know, until after the policies had been effected, that they had been effected through the defendant, or by any other person than S. and Co.

The plaintiff, who had monthly accounts with S. and Co. in such matters, paid them, in the usual course of business between them, their monthly accounts, in which, in usual course, they debited him with the amount of the premiums on policies in question, but he neither asked for nor received the policies at that time. The defendant was aware of the course of dealing between the plaintiff and Skinner and Co., paid premiums in usual course to the underwriters effecting the policies, and, in accordance with the usual course of business between him and S. and Co., sent a debit note of such premiums to S. and Co., with whom he had monthly accounts for insurances effected by him under their instructions for the plaintiff and other persons; but he kept the policies in his own hands, as was his usual practice, until the premiums should be repaid him by S. and Co. He subsequently delivered his monthly account to S. and Co., which included, among other items, the premiums on the policies in question, but S. and Co. never settled such account, or repaid him the premiums paid by him as above mentioned.

A loss having occurred, the plaintiff brought an action of detinue for the policies against the defendant, who, in answer thereto, set up a lien on the policies for the premiums paid by him upon them, and it was Held by the Exchequer Division (Kelly, C.B., and Cleasby, B.), that the defendant had no such lien, the relation and course of dealing between the parties creating no liability as between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the contract between S. and Co. and the defendant and the liability arising therefrom were confined to themselves alone, and its effect clearly was that the defendant should look to S. and Co. alone for repayment of the premiums advanced by him to the underwriters.

Westwood v. Bell and another (4 Camp. 349) distinguished.

THIS is an action of detinue to recover four policies of marine insurance effected upon a cargo of steel rails, per steamer E. S. Milligan, and money payable upon accounts, for money lent and money received for the use of the plaintiff, and for interest, and for moneys due on accounts stated, and the amount claimed as damages is 3200l.

The defendant pleaded a denial of the detinue of the said policies, or any of them; and, secondly, a denial of the plaintiff's property in the policies; and, thirdly, that he had a lien on them for premiums paid by him as an insurance broker upon and for the said policies respectively of the plaintiff, and at his request, which premiums remained due and payable by the plaintiff to the defendant during the said detention; and, fourthly, a general lien of the defendant for money due by the plaintiff to the defendant as insurance broker for effecting the said policies and other policies as such broker, and for money paid for premiums on the said policies, and other policies effected by the defendant as such insurance broker for the plaintiff; and fifthly, sixthly, and seventhly, to the remaining counts, never indebted, payment, and set-off.

The plaintiff replied by taking and joining issue on the above several pleas.

The cause came on to be tried before Archibald, J. and a common jury at the last spring assizes for Gloucestershire, held at Gloucester, when a verdict was taken by consent for the plaintiff for the damages in the declaration and 40s. costs of suit, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following

CASE.

1. The plaintiff is a shipowner and merchant at Barrow-in-Furness, at Lancashire, and sole shipper at that place for the steel rails of the Barrow Hematite Steel Company, which company carries on its business also in Barrow-in-Furness, and are the only manufacturers of steel rail there.

EX. DIV.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[

The defendant is an insurance broker carrying on business at Liverpool in connection with W. H. Brand.

2. On or about the 19th July 1874, the plaintiff authorised Messrs. Skinner and Co., who are insurance brokers at Barrow-in-Furness, to effect marine insurances to the amount of 4000*l.* on part of a cargo of steel rails from Barrow to St. John's, New Brunswick, per ship Eliza S. Milligan, provided they could effect such insurances at 40*s.* per centum.

3. On the 1st Aug. 1874, the plaintiff received from Messrs. Skinner and Co. a covering note, of which the following is a copy :

58, Hindfoot-road, Barrow-in-Furness.
1st Aug. 1874.

Insured for account of Messrs. James Fisher and Sons 4000*l.*, per Eliza S. Milligan, Captain

From Barrow to St. John's.

On steel rails valued at 4000*l.*

"f. p. a." "f. g. a."

		£	s.	d.
4000 l. at 40 s. per cent. ...		80	0	0
Policy ...		0	10	0

	80	10	0
10 per cent. of 76 l. ...	7	12	0

£72 18 0

W. J. SKINNER AND CO.
FREDERICK EVANS.

The letters "f. p. a.," "f. g. a.," and "f. c. and a.," meaning "from particular average," "foreign general average," and "free from capture and seizure," refer to known clauses or conditions which were to be among the terms of the policies. The deduction of 10 per cent. in the amount of the premium represents the annual underwriter's discount, and the signature "Frederick Evans" to the said note is the signature of the clerk in the employ of Skinner and Co., who made out the note.

4. The plaintiff had employed Skinner and Co., as insurance brokers, to effect policies of marine insurance on cargoes of steel rails for about three years. There are no underwriters in Barrow, and Skinner and Co. effected such insurances in Liverpool or London, either directly with the underwriters or through other insurance brokers in those towns.

5. The plaintiff generally knew the name of any insurance office with which Skinner and Co. effected policies without the intervention of any broker, and in the present case had been informed, before receiving the covering note, that the policies which Skinner and Co. were authorised to effect, as above stated, had been effected through Brand and the defendant.

6. The course of business between the plaintiff and Skinner and Co., which was the usual course of business in the trade, was for that firm to make out and deliver to the plaintiff, on the 8th day of each month, an account, debiting him with the sums money due and payable by him to Skinner and Co. in respect of premiums, brokerage, and other charges in relation to policies of insurance effected by Skinner and Co. for the plaintiff in the course of the month then preceding, and for the plaintiff thereupon to pay the amount of such account by his bills of exchange for the amount at one month's date; and such course of business had been regularly followed, and all such monthly accounts had been duly paid and settled up to and including that for July 1874, which was delivered and paid early in August.

7. Of this account the first two items date of 4th Aug. were in respect of policies of insurance to the amount of respect of the before-mentioned cargo per S. Milligan. On the 5th Sept. 1874, the plaintiff paid and settled such account with Skinner and Co., by his bill at one month, which was duly honoured and paid. And the plaintiff was in no way indebted to Skinner and Co. in respect of any other account, and all accounts between them have been long since settled.

8. The plaintiff did not demand of Skinner and Co. the policies of insurance until after Aug. 1874, when an average loss accrued of the said cargo of the Eliza S. Milligan; thereupon the plaintiff required possession of said policies for the purpose of recovery of amount due in respect thereof. Three policies were at that time in the possession of the defendant, under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned. The fourth policy has never been in the defendant's hands, and as to that question arises.

9. No communication had, up to the time of the passing of the account, passed between the plaintiff and the defendant, nor did the plaintiff know that Skinner and Co. had not paid the premium on the policies when the plaintiff required the policies. The three above mentioned policies were in the possession of the defendant. He thereupon refused to deliver them from him, but the defendant refused to deliver them up, on the ground of a lien for underwriting commissions, he having effected the policies under the circumstances hereinafter mentioned.

10. Skinner and Co., immediately upon receiving instructions from the plaintiff to procure insurance upon the cargo of the Eliza S. Milligan, set forth, communicated by letter, addressed to W. H. Brand, at Liverpool, requesting him to effect the said insurances. The defendant answered the letter in his own name, and Skinner and Co. continued the correspondence, sometimes in his name and sometimes addressing the defendant by name. Ultimately the insurances in question were effected by the defendant at the request of Skinner and Co.

11. The defendant sent debit notes of the premiums paid in respect of such policies to Skinner and Co., and also forwarded to Skinner and Co. copies of the said policies, and such copies were received from the defendant on the 5th Aug. 1874. A duplicate of one of such copies accompanies the account of this case. The 2½ per cent. mentioned in the note at the foot of the copy of the policies represents one moiety of the brokerage of 5*l.* per cent. allowed by the underwriters, 10 per cent. represents the usual discount by all underwriters to brokers, and the balance to the merchants. (a)

12. Skinner and Co. have effected policies of marine insurance through W. H. Brand and the defendant during the last six months, or thereabouts, upon the understanding that they were to be sharing equally the brokerage fee of 5*l.* per cent. in respect of the premiums payable on such policies; and the course of business was

(a) The usual brokerage of 5*l.* per cent. on the premiums was shared between Skinner and Co., the defendant, the sub-agent, and the plaintiff. The account with S. and Co. credited them with the brokerage on the transaction at 2½ per cent., but the usual allowance.

Ex. Div.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[Ex. Div.]

said W. H. Brand, or the defendant, to effect the policy with the underwriters, and procure and deliver to Skinner and Co. copies of the policies, and also to send to Skinner and Co. a debit note of the premiums paid, and at the commencement of each month to make out and deliver to Skinner and Co. an account debiting them with the money due in respect of the premiums paid on the several insurances effected for them during the month then preceding, and on the 10th of each month the account of premiums paid on the preceding month was paid.

13. It was not the usual practice for the defendant or Brand to part with the original stamped policies to Skinner and Co. until the premiums were received from Skinner and Co.

14. The defendant sent to Skinner and Co. during the first week in August the usual monthly account for such premiums due for the month of July 1874, and inserted in such account, as the two last items in point of date, 26l. 7s. and 26l. 11s. 9d., premiums due and payable in respect of the policies effected upon the said cargo of the Eliza S. Mulligan. Upon examination of such account Skinner and Co. objected to such account as incorrect, on the ground that such last items ought not to have been introduced until the account for the next month (August). The defendant admitted such objection to be valid; the account for the month of July was corrected accordingly, and paid.

15. Early in September, 1874, the defendant delivered the usual monthly account of the sums due and payable in respect of premiums paid during the month of August, including the two items mentioned in the last paragraph, and transferred from the prior account as before mentioned, but Skinner and Co. have not paid such account. The defendant retains the three policies in dispute; first, on the ground of a lien for the unpaid premiums on the policies; secondly, on the ground of a general lien for unpaid premiums on other policies effected under similar circumstances for the benefit of the plaintiff, upon instructions received from Skinner and Co.

16. The defendant had notice throughout the transaction that Skinner and Co. were acting as brokers, and that the plaintiff was their principal.

17. The premiums paid by the defendant on the three policies retained by him and still owing to him, amount to 52l. 18s. 9d. The premiums paid by the defendant on other policies effected by him for the benefit of the plaintiff on the instructions of Skinner and Co., under similar circumstances to those stated above, and still owing to him, amount to a much larger sum.

It is agreed between the parties that the pleadings in this action on both sides shall form part of the special case, also that the court be at liberty to draw any inferences or find any fact which in the opinion of the court a jury ought to have drawn or found.

The questions for the opinion of the court are, first, whether the defendant was entitled to retain the said policies of insurance as against the plaintiff in respect of a lien for the premiums on those policies; secondly, whether he was entitled to retain the said policies in respect of a general lien for the unpaid premiums upon the other policies mentioned in the 15th paragraph of this case.

If the court shall be of opinion in the affirmative on both questions, the verdict entered for the plaintiff is to be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant generally, with costs. If the court shall be of opinion in the affirmative on the first question only, a verdict is to be entered for the defendant with costs, except on the 1st, 2nd, and 10th pleas, on which a verdict is to be entered for the plaintiff. If the court shall be of opinion in the negative on both questions, the verdict entered for the plaintiff is to stand for 3000l. with costs, to be reduced to 40s. upon the three policies in the defendant's possession being given up to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's points for argument:—First, that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant under the circumstances stated in the case out of which any lien, either general or specific, could arise in respect of the premiums on the policies effected through the defendant, by Skinner and Co. Secondly, that Skinner and Co. were the defendant's agents to receive the amount of the premiums, and the plaintiff has paid Skinner and Co. the whole of such amount. Thirdly, that the defendant, with a knowledge that Skinner and Co. were only brokers, and were acting for the plaintiff, allowed the plaintiff to pay the premiums to them, and settle his accounts with them on that footing. Fourthly, that the defendant has waived his lien as against the plaintiff. Fifthly, that the defendant elected to take the exclusive liability of Skinner and Co. for the premiums. Sixthly, that Skinner and Co. have paid the defendants the premiums in respect of the policies claimed.

The defendant's points for argument:—First, that the defendant, having effected the policies sued for in this action, and paid the premiums thereon in his business of an insurance broker, has a lien upon such policies for the premiums so paid, as against everybody otherwise having a right to the possession of such policies. Secondly, that the defendant has such a lien, notwithstanding that the policies were effected through the instructions of Messrs. Skinner and Co., also insurance brokers, particularly as they knew that the policies were effected by the defendant as an insurance broker. Thirdly, that the first and second questions for the opinion of the court, and each of them, ought to be answered and decided in the affirmative.

Powell, Q.C. (with whom was Pritchard), for the plaintiff.—The question in substance is whether the plaintiff having employed Skinner and Co., as his brokers, and paid them every penny they were entitled to, and Skinner and Co. having employed the defendant as their agent in the matter, and not having paid him, the defendant as such sub-agent, and knowing all the facts at the time, can recover from the plaintiff the moneys which Skinner and Co. ought to have paid, but failed to pay him. The principle with regard to the employment of a sub-agent is clearly laid down in Story on Agency, paragraphs 387 and 388 (8th edit., p. 474). The case is defective in not stating whether or not the plaintiff knew of the employment of the sub-agent before or at the time the policies were effected. The case of Power and another v. Butcher and another (10 B. & C. 329), is an authority for the proposition that if a merchant directs a broker to insure and the broker does not pay the premium and the principal does, the broker can nevertheless recover it. This agrees with the rule

Ex. Div.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[Ex.

as laid down in Arnould on Insurance, pp. 194-5-6, 4th edit., by MacLachlan.

H. Matthews, Q.C. (with him was J. O. Griffiths, Q.C.) for the defendant, contra.—The first point is that the defendant had a lien on the policies for the amount of premiums paid by him upon them. In the face of the authorities a general lien is not here claimed or contended for; but as against the plaintiff a lien for all premiums paid in respect of these particular policies. The defendant here is within the rule of law stated and assigned and laid down in Maans v. Henderson and others (1 East, 336), and having paid these premiums, he has a lien for them on the policies on which they were so paid. [KELLY, C.B.—Is there not a distinction that in that case the third person was not, as here, a broker?] It is contended that no such distinction is known to the law: (Mann v. Forrester, 4 Campb. 60; Olive v. Smith (per Gibbs, C.J.), 5 Taunt. 56; 2 Rose 122.) The point is, not whether or not the plaintiff knew that the defendant acted as the broker, but it is that the defendant expended money on the policy the benefit of which the plaintiff claims, and can only claim with the burden of the lien on it: (Westwood v. Bell, 4 Campb. 349.) Had the defendant done anything to induce the plaintiff to pay Skinner and Co. it might have been considered a payment to the defendant, whose lien can only be so discharged: (Heald and others v. Kenworthy, 10 Ex. 739; 24 L. J. 76 Ex.) A sub-agent effecting an insurance has a lien on the policy for the premiums paid by him, even although he has no authority from the principal:

Whitehead v. Vaughan, 6 East, 523, note b;

Westwood v. Bell, ubi sup.;

Lanyon v. Blanchard, 2 Camp. 597;

Story on Agency, s. 389;

1 Arnould Marine Insurance, p. 197.

The lien accrues for work done, whether he has the authority of the original principal or not. If he has none, the plaintiff is not entitled to the policy; if he takes up the policy, the principal ratifies his acts (per Gibbs, C.J. in Westwood v. Bell). The lien once attaching, attaches against all the world, and continues until it is discharged:

2 Duer's Law of Marine Insurance (American) p. 282, sed. 2, 3, et seq.;

Threfall v. Borwick, in the Exchequer Chamber, on appeal from the Queen's Bench, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 95; 44 L. J. 87, Q. B.; s. c. nom. Threfall v. Borwick, L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 210.

Powell, Q.C., in reply, cited

Smyth and others v. Anderson, 7 C. B. 21; 18 L. J. 109, C. P.; 13 Jar. 211;

Pinnock and another v. Harrison, 3 M. & W. 532; 7 L. J., N. S., 137, Ex.

KELLY, C.B.—It is essentially necessary to look at the precise facts of this case when we are about to pronounce a decision upon it, because it will be found that they differ entirely from those in any of the cases which have been cited and so ably dealt with and relied on in the course of this argument by Mr. Matthews on behalf of the defendant.

Now, we find in the present case, as in every other case in which he had any dealings with Skinner and Co., with respect to their effecting policies of insurance for him, that the plaintiff contracted with them, and with them alone, and gave them no authority to employ a sub-agent or otherwise to act in the transactions which took place between them than on his behalf alone, and for themselves alone, to act, and alone to acts which they were employed by him to the matter. Moreover, it is perfectly clear the time of their employment, and at the making of the policies, and indeed up time when the defendant actually effected and so, as between himself and the under entitled himself to the receipt and possession of the policies, the plaintiff had no knowledge the defendant had been employed, and had no authority, express or implied, to Skinner Co. to employ him or any other person who, or, by delegating the authority conferred them by their contracts with the plaintiff, to promise the latter's rights in any way, so instance, as his right to the possession of policies.

And, in considering the employment of the defendant by Skinner and Co., it becomes a question, to which I will advert hereafter, was the actual contract between them as defendant?—whether, as between him and Skinner and Co., it conferred upon the defendant either in its terms or its legal effect, any whatever to claim a lien upon the policies he should effect under that employment? as we are entitled to draw inferences from facts stated in the case, I own the inference appears to me to be such as put an end to the defendant's claims, and upon the ground which I will afterwards state. To revert, however, at present to the facts.

It appears that the plaintiff, who was a shipowner, had on many occasions employed Skinner and Co. to effect policies of marine insurance on his behalf, and it likewise appears in paragraph 2 of the case that Skinner and Co. were insurance brokers, were authorised by the plaintiff to effect insurances to the amount of 4000*l.* on the cargo in question; and it appears moreover, that down to that time, although transactions had taken place between the plaintiff and Skinner and Co., the plaintiff had no knowledge that any of the insurances effected for him by Skinner and Co. had been effected through the agency of any persons or otherwise than by Skinner and Co. themselves. Then, it further appears by paragraph 3 of the case that on the 1st Aug. 1874, Skinner and Co. had been authorised to effect these policies according to the usual course of business between the plaintiff and Skinner and Co., the account of their claim in respect of the premiums then amounting, less the usual discount of ten per cent. to 72*l.* 18*s.* (I need not go further into the account which has been called the covering note); as the account was paid and settled by the plaintiff in the usual course by means of a bill payable at three months' date, which was duly met and paid at maturity. Now, thus far it appears that, as in numerous other transactions which had previously taken place, the plaintiff never directly or indirectly conferred any authority upon Skinner and Co. to employ any sub-agents, or to do otherwise than effect these insurances themselves. It further appears that until the insurances in question had been actually effected, the plaintiff did not know that Skinner and Co. had employed any defendant or any other person in any other transactions.

Now, the contract between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, under which these insurances were effected by Skinner and Co. a

[Ex. Div.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[Ex. Div.]

brokers, must be regulated and interpreted according to the course of dealing between the parties, which, and also the usual course of business in the trade, appears from paragraph 6 of the case to have been for Skinner and Co. to make out and deliver to the plaintiff on the 8th of each month an account debiting the latter with the sum of money due and payable by him to them in respect of premiums, brokerage, and other charges in relation to policies effected by or through them for the plaintiff in the course of the then preceding month, and for the plaintiff to pay the amount of such account by bills at one month's date. And it is here that, exercising our power to draw inferences, when we find that this course of dealing was not only the course of business between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, but was the usual course of business in the trade, I draw the inference, and I entertain no doubt that the defendant perfectly well knew that that was the course of business between the parties, and that he therefore not only knew that the plaintiff was the principal in all these transactions, but that he also knew from the course of business between him and Skinner and Co., who were to effect the policies, that, whether Skinner and Co. should obtain them or not, or whether they should have effected the policies themselves, or through any other person, the premiums would be paid to them by the plaintiff on the 8th of the month succeeding that in which the policies should be effected. Then what follows? Such being the contract between the plaintiff and Skinner and Co., there was nothing pointing to any sub-agency, or to Skinner and Co. taking upon themselves to delegate the power received by them under their contract to any other person. Under these circumstances, without any authority from the plaintiff, or any knowledge on his part, Skinner and Co. effect the insurances through the medium and agency of the defendant. Then comes the question, what was the relation and what the contract between the defendant and Skinner and Co.? If we look at the case, and bear in mind that it was (as appears by paragraph 6) the same course of dealing which prevails in the trade, then on looking at paragraphs 9, 10, and 11, we find, not merely that the same course of dealing existed between them, but that the defendant actually sent in his monthly account under this course of dealing to Skinner and Co., including, among other claims, claims for the premiums in question. I do not advert to the circumstances which may or may not bear materially upon any question arising in this case, that the plaintiff did not demand the policies until he had learned that a loss had taken place. It appears, and we know independently of any finding in the case before us, that it is the practice in many cases for the merchant to leave the policies in the hands of the insurance broker until the event of the voyage is known. If the ship arrives in safety the policy becomes of no value; but if a loss takes place the merchant applies for and obtains the policy from the insurance broker.

We now come to the course of dealing between Skinner and Co. and the defendant, and the question is, what was the contract which we are to infer to have been made between Skinner and Co. and the defendant, with respect to any claim by the defendant as against Skinner and Co., or any body else, with respect to the amount of the premiums paid on effecting these policies? I do not hesitate to say that I find, as a fact, that the contract between Skinner and Co. and the defendant was confined to transactions between themselves and themselves alone, and that the effect of it was that the defendant should look to Skinner and Co. and to them alone, for the repayment of the premiums which he should advance to the underwriters. If that be so, it would be the common course, as between principal and factor, and sometimes between principal and insurance brokers, and, when the latter employ sub-agents, between them and such sub-agents, that the broker employed by the principal, looks to the principal, and to the principal only, for the amount of the premiums which he would be entitled to, and which would be paid upon the effecting of the policies, and that the sub-agent in any transaction of this nature looks solely and exclusively to the insurance broker who has employed him. Consequently, therefore, applying that course of dealing, and drawing the inferences therefrom, and from the facts of the case which we are entitled and authorised to draw, I am of opinion that the contract between Skinner and Co. and the defendant was that the defendant should look to Skinner and Co. alone for the repayment of any premiums advanced by him on effecting the policies. If that be so, then it is the not unusual case of a merchant or shipowner employing an insurance broker, and a contract being made between them, the liability arising out of that contract is confined to themselves, the two parties to the contract, the employment on the one side and the definitive execution of the work to be done on the other, and no question arises or can arise between the merchant and the sub-agent.

We have been referred to many cases and various authorities, and there may be general propositions stated in several of them which may seem to apply to a case like the present; but I do not see one of them in which the facts are the same or analogous to those in the present case. The only case at all like it, and on which Mr. Matthews, in his able argument, placed his principal reliance, is that of Westwood v. Bell and another (4 Camp. 349). There undoubtedly a sub-agent was held to be entitled to a lien as against the principal in respect of certain premiums which he had paid. But a distinction, and a marked and obvious one, between that case and the case now before the court is that in Westwood v. Bell and another the party there, the sub-agent, in the situation of the present defendant, did not know that there was any principal at all behind the person who had actually employed him in the business. The marginal note in that case is as follows: "If A. employs B. to effect a policy of insurance for his benefit, and B. without A.'s knowledge employs C. to effect the policy, representing himself to C. as the principal, C. has a lien on the policy as against A. for the general balance due to him from B." The marginal note does not notice that the defendant not only was unaware that there was any principal behind his immediate employer, but believed that his immediate employer was himself the principal. It thus became the common case of one employing another to do a certain act in respect of which a liability arises, and when it turns out that the person who acted as and was believed to be the principal was only acting as the agent of another, then, if that other, the real original principal, adopts the act

EX. DIV.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[EX. DIV.]

that has been done, he adopts the employment and takes the benefit of it, and must of course take it cum onere, and treat the sub-agent as an agent of his own. That rule was the ground of the decision, or rather it was that which pervaded the summing-up to the jury of the learned judge, Gibbs, C.J.; in that case his Lordship (at p. 352 of 4 Campb.) said, "I am of opinion that the action cannot be maintained. I hold that if a policy of insurance is effected by a broker, in ignorance that it does not belong to the persons by whom he is employed, he has a lien upon it for the amount of the balance which they owe him." And so if the policies here had been effected by the defendant in ignorance that they were being effected for the plaintiff, and he had believed that his immediate employers, Skinner and Co., were themselves the principals in the transaction, no doubt Westwood v. Bell would then have applied. Gibbs, C.J., then proceeds: "In this case Clarkson" (now Clarkson in that case is the Skinner and Co. of the present one). "Clarkson miscondacted himself, and is liable for not disclosing that he was a mere agent in the transaction; but the defendants, who had every reason to believe that he was the principal, are entitled to hold the policy. If goods are sold by a factor in his own name the purchaser has a right to set-off a debt due from him in an action by the principal, for the price of the goods. The factor may be liable to his employer for holding himself out as the principal; but that is not to prejudice the purchaser, who bonâ fide dealt with him as the owner of the goods, and gave him credit in that capacity." Now, is that so here? Did the defendant ever deal with the plaintiff as "the owner of the goods, and give him credit in that capacity?" The very reverse is the fact as it appears to me. The learned Chief Justice then goes on, "The lien of the policy broker rests on the same foundation. The only question is whether he knew, or had reason to believe, that the person by whom he was employed was only an agent; and the party who seeks to deprive him of his lien must make out the affirmative. The employer is to be taken to be the principal until the contrary is proved. If the plaintiff's assent to the employment of Clarkson is denied, then he can have no right to the policy, and there is no privity between the parties. The argument about pledging the policy is fallacious. This never was a policy of the plaintiff's, which he held unencumbered and handed over to his agent. In its very origin and creation it was burthened with the lien." That would be so in the present case if the defendant had not known that the plaintiff was his principal, but had believed that Skinner and Co. were and had so dealt with them. "It never," Gibbs, C.J., goes on to say, "has been the plaintiff's for an instant, but subject to the lien which is now claimed. The rights of the parties do not stand on the same footing as if Clarkson had said he had authority to pledge the policy, but as if he had said 'the goods to be insured are mine, the policy is for my benefit alone, and I agree that when it is effected it shall remain in your hands till the whole of the balance I owe you is satisfied; and on the strength of it you will continue to trust me.' If that had passed, can I say that the defendants are to be stripped of their right on account of a fact of which they had no knowledge, and that they are to deliver up to a stranger the policy which they have effected under a contract that they should hold it as a security for the balance due to them from their employer? Nor do the cases cited on the part of the plaintiff at all contravene the doctrine I am laying down. In Saunders v. Davidson (2 Campb. 218), the person who employed the defendants to effect the policy, said that it was for a correspondent in the country. In Lanyon v. Blanchard (2 Campb. 519) likewise, the defendant must be taken to have had notice that the person who employed him was not the principal. The representation made by Croug that he had authority to endorse the bill of lading was abundantly sufficient to show that he was only an agent, and I entirely subscribe to what Lord Ellenborough is there supposed to have laid down respecting the risk which the defendant ran in giving faith to that representation. The subsequent case of Munn v. Forrester (4 Campb. 60) is quite decisive. The doctrine stands upon authority as well as upon principle. I should have had no difficulty in determining the question were it entirely new; and I find myself strongly fortified by the opinions of other judges."

Now, in the case before us, this defendant had clear and express notice from beginning to end that Skinner and Co., who employed him, were not principals, but that, on the contrary, they were acting only for the plaintiff, and that the latter was the principal, with whom the defendant had no communication, and to whom he gave no notice of any claim, and with whom in fact he had no dealings at all until the present question arose upon, what we must assume to have taken place, the insolvency of Skinner and Co. Now the very foundation of the ruling of Gibbs, C.J., which I have quoted at length, and to which I entirely accede, was that the defendants there, the sub-agents, believed that they were dealing with the intermediate parties as principals, and had no knowledge that there was a real principal behind.

Under those circumstances, without adverting to the other cases which have been cited, on the one side or the other, no one of which is parallel in its circumstances with, or lays down any principle applicable to, this particular case, it appears to me that the present is not a case in which the sub-agent, the defendant, is entitled to the lien which he claims, and that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action for the policies, and that these policies were his, and that it makes no difference that they were procured, not by Skinner and Co. alone, but through the sub-agency of the defendant.

Upon these grounds, therefore, I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be in favour of the plaintiff.

CLEASBY, B.—I am of the same opinion.

I do not think that it is intended at all to question the lien in general of an insurance broker actually effecting a policy and paying the premiums, as against any person desiring to avail himself of that policy by obtaining possession of it. It is, no doubt, as has been stated, a common practice for the broker who has actually communicated with the underwriters to retain the policy, and simply to settle for the matter and deduct his premium in that particular case, and any other premiums that he may have paid. The authorities seem to show that that is so, and we have to consider how far in the present case that course is justified by the circumstances.

[EX. DIV.]

THE JUNO.

[ADM.]

Now here we have one transaction as between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, the amount insured being 4000*l.*, but as between Skinner and Co. and the defendant there were three separate transactions. In this case, therefore, we are asked to make the plaintiff, who was a party to only one transaction with Skinner and Co., a party to three different transactions with the defendant, so as to establish an account with him. And we are also asked to go further, and, although there is this one transaction between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, and, although that one transaction was settled by him according to the usual course of business, we are asked to say that he was unable to close it by a settlement with Skinner and Co. on the 5th Sept., according to the usual course of trade, and that he must be a party to I know not what number of other transactions.

Now the facts may be stated very shortly as follows: The plaintiff, a merchant, had a cargo on his hands, and he instructed Skinner and Co., insurance brokers, in his own town, to effect an insurance for him on such cargo, and thereupon Skinner and Co. employed the defendant, who was an insurance broker, to do it, and he did it accordingly. The defendant knew that the policies were effected through him by Skinner and Co. for the benefit of the plaintiff; and the plaintiff knew, soon after the policies of insurance were effected, that Skinner and Co. had employed the defendant to effect them. Now the usual course of the business, and the usual course between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, was for a monthly account of premiums to be sent in by them to be settled by the plaintiff. It appears that in all previous transactions of the same nature—and there seems to have been several—the plaintiff had always paid Skinner and Co., and Skinner and Co. had always paid the defendant. There never had been a transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The real transaction then is that the defendant knew that the policies were the property of the plaintiff, and not of Skinner and Co., and he knew that the plaintiff settled for the premiums with Skinner and Co. That I take to be a fact, and a decisive fact in the case. In other words, we knew that the plaintiff settled with Skinner and Co. and not with him for these premiums, which he, the defendant, had advanced. I cannot see how to escape from that conclusion. If they were to be paid in that way, then whatever money the defendant advanced was to be paid to Skinner and Co., and not to the defendant, and it follows thence that the lien of the defendant is not in respect of the premiums unpaid to him, but of the premiums unpaid by the owner of the policies to Skinner and Co. It is in reality a sort of joint transaction between Skinner and Co. and the defendant, and they divide the brokerage. Of course it follows that the lien was one subject to be discharged and intended to be discharged in the usual way by payment to Skinner and Co. I do not consider it necessary to advert to the fact that the plaintiff paid on the 5th instead of the 8th of the month. There seems on both sides to have been some deviation, and for doubtless a sufficient reason, from the ordinary course, but it would be monstrous that the case should be decided upon the fact of the payment being made on the 5th instead of the 8th of the month. I take it to be a fact quite clear that when the plaintiff paid on the 5th Sept. no claim whatever had been made by the defendant, nor had the plaintiff any knowledge that the defendant had not been paid. That is not quite clearly or distinctly stated, but I think it is an inference which we may reasonably draw from the case, and particularly from paragraph 9.

I quite concur with my Lord, and for the reasons he has adduced, that our judgment should be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Chester, Urquhart, Mayhew, and Holden, agents for Bradshaw and Pearson, Barrow-in-Furness.

Solicitors for the defendant, Sharpe, Parkers, Pritchard, and Sharpe, agents for Gill and Archer, Liverpool.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPINALL, and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Feb. 3, 1876.

(Before the Right Hon. Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE JUNO.

Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Falmouth Harbour—Costs.

Falmouth Harbour being within a Trinity outport district for which pilots were licensed by the Trinity House prior to 1854, pilotage is, by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, compulsory there for a vessel bound from a Mediterranean port to the port of Falmouth.

Where defendants in an action of collision raise the defence of compulsory pilotage only and succeed therein they are entitled to their costs.

THIS was an action brought by the owners of the British barque Indus against the Swedish barque Juno to recover damages in respect of a collision between the two vessels.

The plaintiffs alleged that the Indus was lying at anchor in a proper berth off St. Maw's Castle, in the harbour of Falmouth on the 13th Dec. 1875, at about 8 p.m., with her regulation anchor light duly exhibited and burning brightly; that the Juno entered the harbour under sail, and instead of keeping clear of the Indus improperly let go her anchor at a short distance from the Indus, and came into collision with her and did her considerable damage.

The defendants admitted the plaintiffs' allegations, but alleged that the Juno was on a voyage from Alexandria to Falmouth with wheat, and whilst entering the harbour as alleged the Juno was in charge of a duly licensed Trinity House pilot named E. W. Chard, and that "before and at the time of the collision aforesaid the Juno was by compulsion of law in charge of the said Elias W. Chard, who was a pilot duly licensed for the district in which she was being navigated, and the said collision and the damage proceeded for in this action were caused by the negligence of the said Elias W. Chard and not by any fault of the Juno, her master and crew."

In support of this defence the master and crew of the Juno gave evidence to the effect that the pilot was in charge of the Juno, and that he gave the order to let go the anchor, and the order was obeyed. As to the pilotage being compulsory, James Henry Hart proved that he had been a clerk in the Trinity House for thirty-three years, that Chard was duly licensed at the time of the collision for the Falmouth district, including the

ADM.]

THE FYENHOOD—THE EMMA.

[ADM.]

harbour of Falmouth (the license was produced and read); and that prior to the year 1854 the Trinity House had been in the habit of licensing pilots for the Falmouth district and the harbour of Falmouth. By the licence Chard appeared to have been duly examined and licensed by the sub-commissioners of pilotage for the Falmouth district.

The defendants called evidence to show that the order to let go the anchor was not given by the pilot of the Juno.

Butt, Q.C. (W. G. F. Phillimore, and Stubbs), for the defendants, contended that the facts showed that the pilot alone was to blame for the collision. Assuming that to be the case the pilotage was compulsory. By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 369), "The Trinity House shall continue to appoint sub-commissioners . . . for the purpose of examining pilots in all districts in which they have been used to make such appointments," &c.; sect. 370, "The Trinity House shall continue, after due examination by themselves or their sub-commissioners, to appoint and licence under the common seal pilots for the purpose of conducting ships within the limits following, or any portion of such limits—that is to say . . . 'The Trinity House outport districts' comprising any pilotage district for the appointment of pilots within which no particular provision is made by any Act of Parliament or charter;" sect. 376, "Subject to any alteration to be made by the Trinity House, and to the exemptions hereinafter contained, the pilotage districts of the Trinity House within which the employment of pilots is compulsory are the London district and the Trinity outport districts, as hereinbefore defined," &c. There is no exemption in the Act which would excuse a foreign vessel coming from Alexandria from taking a pilot. Hence pilotage is compulsory.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, contended that the evidence showed the pilot did not give the orders which brought about the collision. The defendants have not shown that there is no particular provision made by Act of Parliament or charter; hence it cannot be held to be a Trinity outport district.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The evidence satisfies me that the orders were given by the pilot, and that the collision was occasioned by his sole default. And I am also satisfied that the defendants have shown that the Falmouth district is a Trinity outport district and that pilotage at Falmouth is compulsory for vessels of the class of the Juno. I must, therefore, give judgment for the defendants.

Butt, Q.C. applied for costs against the plaintiffs upon the ground that the only issue raised being compulsory pilotage, and the defendants having succeeded thereon, they were entitled to costs on the authority of The Royal Charter (L. Rep. 2 Adm. & Ecc. 362; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 109; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 282).

Clarkson contended that the allowing of costs in these cases was purely discretionary, and that as the plaintiff's case was brought forward bonâ fide, and there was a great conflict of evidence, the plaintiff ought not to be condemned in costs.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I look upon it as an established rule that where compulsory pilotage is within the knowledge of the plaintiffs the only defence, and the defendants come into court and prove that the collision was occasioned by the pilot's sole default, the plaintiff disputing the fact and failing must pay the costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Thos. Cooper.

Solicitors for the defendants, Stokes, Samdin, and Stokes.

Tuesday, March 7, 1876.

THE FYENHOOD.

County Court appeal—Salvage—Tender—Amount awarded under 50l.—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, sects. 26, 31.

No appeal lies from the decision of a County Court in a salvage cause where there is a tender of less than 50l. and that tender is upheld, the amount tendered being the amount "decreed or ordered" within the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), sect. 31.

THIS was a motion for leave to appeal in a case of salvage, which was instituted in the City of London Court (Admiralty jurisdiction) to recover reward for salvage services alleged to have been rendered by a pilot to the foreign ship Fyenord. The defendants had tendered 5l. for the service, and the learned Judge of the City of London Court upheld the tender.

Myburgh, for the plaintiff, now moved for leave to appeal against the award as insufficient.

E. C. Clarkson opposed the motion, contending that there was no jurisdiction because the amount decreed or ordered was under 50l., and in such case there was no appeal by the provisions of the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, sect. 31).

Myburgh, in reply, submitted that the section did not apply because the decree in effect was a decree for the defendant, and the section clearly did not apply to cases where the plaintiff recovered nothing. If the plaintiff could not appeal how a defendant could always stop appeals by tendering a small sum where he had any prospect of their being upheld.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If there had been no tender, and the court had awarded 5l. or any other sum less than 50l. there would have been no appeal. In effect the court has said that 5l. is enough, and that that sum is the award it would have made if there had been no tender. How is the upholding of a tender different from the making of an award? 5l. is the amount decreed or ordered. The application must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.
Solicitor for the defendant, Thomas Cooper.

Tuesday, April 4, 1876.

THE EMMA.

Discovery—Action in rem—Foreign ship—Præcipe. In an action in rem against a foreign ship whose owners are resident abroad, the court will make an order for discovery of documents against the owners, but will always allow a reasonable time for making the affidavit of documents.

THIS was an action instituted in rem against the American ship Emma, and her freight, on behalf of Messrs. De Wolf, of Liverpool, the owners of the barque City of Halifax, to recover damages in respect of a collision between the two ships.

An appearance was entered on the 25th 1876, on behalf of the owners of the Emma.

ADM.]

THE MEDINA.

[ADM.]

on the 31st March, the solicitors for the plaintiffs took out a summons calling upon the defendants to show cause why the defendants should not answer within three days stating what documents were in their, or either of their custody, possession, or power, relating to matters in question in the action, or what they or either of them knew as to the custody they or any of them were in, and whether he or they objected, and, if so, on what ground, to the production of such as were in his or their possession or power. This summons was taken out before the delivery of pleadings, and came on to be heard before the judge in court.

E. C. Clarkson, on behalf of the plaintiffs.—By the rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. XXXI. r. 12, plaintiffs are entitled to an order directing the defendants to make the discovery asked for by the summons on oath.

R. E. Webster for the defendants.—The defendants are resident abroad, and I submit that the court has no jurisdiction to make any order for the discovery of documents against them, having in effect no power to enforce such an order. The defendants are willing to produce the log book, protests, and other documents material to the case, which are in the control of their master. Even if the court makes the order, the defendants ought to have more than three days to file an affidavit of documents. Three days is insufficient.

Sir R. Phillimore.—I shall make the order directing the defendants to make discovery on oath, but I wish it to be understood that in all cases where a similar order is made on the owners of foreign ships, I shall allow a reasonable time for them to obey the order.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Gregory, Rowcliffe, and Co.

Solicitor for the defendants, Thomas Cooper.

Monday, May 1, 1876.

THE MEDINA.

Salvage of life—Agreement—Exorbitancy—Setting aside.

Where the master of a vessel found passengers of another vessel (550 pilgrims) wrecked on a rock on the Red Sea in fine weather, and refused to carry them to Jeddah for a less sum than 4000l., and the master of the wrecked vessel was by such refusal compelled to sign an agreement for that amount, and the service was performed without difficulty or danger, the agreement was held inequitable and set aside. 1800l. awarded in the place thereof.

This was an action brought by the owners of the Timor against the Singapore Steamship Company (Limited) to recover an amount alleged to be due to the plaintiffs under an agreement for services rendered to the passengers on board the defendants' ship Medina. The action was originally commenced in the Exchequer Division, but was by order transferred to the Admiralty Division. No statement of claim was delivered by the plaintiffs, but the endorsement on their writ was as follows:

The plaintiffs claim 4000 due from the defendants to the plaintiffs under an agreement dated 1st Oct. 1875, between Captain J. Brown, master of the plaintiffs' ship Timor, for and on behalf of the plaintiffs and Captain Charles Black, master of the defendants' ship Medina, and on behalf of the defendants for the conveyance of passengers by the plaintiffs' ship

Timor from Parkin Rock, Harniah Island, to Jeddah, with interest at 25 per cent. per annum from the date of the said agreement until payment, and 24 4s. for costs, and if the amount claimed be paid to the plaintiffs or their solicitors within fifty days from the service hereof further proceedings will be stayed.

The defendants' statement of defence was so far as material as follows:

1. On the 30th Sept. 1875 the Medina while on a voyage from Singapore to Jeddah with a general cargo and having on board 550 passengers (pilgrims) who had embarked at Penang for Jeddah was wrecked on the Parkin Rock in the Red Sea and the pilgrims were landed by the Medina's boats on the rock.

2. The Parkin Rock is a small sharp rock about thirty miles from the mainland and about 240 miles from Aden and from two or three days' voyages from Jeddah.

3. The Medina's boats were so knocked about in landing the pilgrims on the rock as to be useless and the lives of the pilgrims for whom there was scarcely standing room on the rock were exposed to danger.

4. About 10 a.m. of the 1st Oct. the master of the Medina observed a steamer which proved to be the Timor bound on a voyage from Kurrachee to Liverpool, and made signals of distress which were observed by the Timor and she altered her course and bore down to the rock.

5. When the Timor approached the rock the master of the Medina went on board of her and told the master of the Timor the position of the pilgrims and asked him to render assistance.

6. Thereupon negotiations took place between the master of the Timor and the master of the Medina. The master of the Timor refused to take the pilgrims from the rock to Jeddah for less than 4000 and the master of the Medina who offered 1500 and subsequently 2000 to the master of the Timor for his services and after these offers had been refused proposed to refer the amount to arbitration which proposal was rejected was ultimately forced to acquiesce in the demand of the master of the Timor and to sign the agreement sued on. The Medina was totally lost on the said rock.

7. The said sum of 4000 was not a reasonable amount for the services to be rendered by the Timor, but was an exorbitantly excessive amount for such services and the master of the Timor in procuring the master of the Medina to sign the said agreement took undue advantage of the position in which the master of the Medina and the pilgrims were placed and the defendants further say that the master of the Medina had not any authority to enter into the said agreement on behalf of the defendants, and that the said agreement was extorted and improperly obtained from the master of the Medina and is wholly unjust and inequitable and is not binding on the defendants.

8 The defendants are ready and willing to pay to the plaintiffs such reasonable amount for their services as the court may think just.

The plaintiffs replied as follows:

1. Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the statement of defence are admitted.

2. The plaintiffs join issue upon paragraphs 6 and 7 of the statement of defence except the averments that negotiations took place between the master of the Medina and the master of the Timor, and the latter refused to take the pilgrims from the rock to Jeddah for less than 4000.

3. As to the 8th paragraph of the statement of defence the plaintiffs submit that the agreement of the 1st Oct. 1875 is a valid and subsisting agreement and binding upon the defendants, and that the defendants are liable to pay to the plaintiffs the said sum of 4000 and no less.

At the hearing it appeared that the Medina being on a voyage from Singapore to Jeddah with a general cargo took on board at Penang 550 pilgrims bound for Mecca. On the 1st Oct. 1875 in the morning she struck on the Parkin Rock in the Red Sea, nearly 200 miles from Aden and thirty miles from the mainland. The Parkin Rock is about 400ft. long the highest part of it being 6ft. out of the water, and some of it level with the water. All the passengers were landed on this island by means of the Medina's boats. At about

[ADM.]

THE PARANA.

[ADM.]

11.30 a.m. on the same day the Timor was passing the rock on a voyage from Singapore to Liverpool, when her assistance was requested by the master of the Medina, who came off in a boat. The master of the Medina boarded the Timor without difficulty and asked the master of the Timor to remove the pilgrims from the rock and take them to Jeddah. There was a considerable discussion between the masters as to the terms upon which the service should be rendered. The master of the Medina offered first 1500*l.* and then 2000*l.*, and finally offered to refer the amount to arbitration thereafter, but the master of the Timor refused to render the required service for any less sum than 4000*l.*, and ultimately the following agreement was made and signed by the master of the Medina.

Agreement made this 1st Oct. between Captain Brown of the Timor, of London, and Captain Black, of the steamer Medina, belonging to the Singapore Steamship Company (Limited), that the said Captain Brown agrees with Captain Black of the Medina to take the whole of his passengers (pilgrims) from off the Parkin Rock and take them to the port of Jeddah, and as near thereto as she can safely get, for the lump sum of £4000 sterling.

The master of the Timor duly performed this agreement. He also tried to get the Medina off the rock, but without success, and she became a total loss. The weather was and remained calm and fine during the whole service.

The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and Myburgh, for the plaintiffs, contended that the service was not a mere life salvage, but was also a completion of the contract of the defendants to carry the pilgrims to Jeddah by which they were enabled to earn freight. There was risk on entering the port of Jeddah; and if any of the pilgrims had been ill, the Timor might have been put in quarantine, and have incurred great expense. The fact that no delay or danger did accrue is not a fact to be considered: (The Enchantress, Lush. 93.) This agreement was entered into between competent persons, and ought, therefore, to be upheld.

Wood Hill (Cohen, Q.C. with him), for the defendants.—Where a demand is exorbitant and a master improperly accedes to it, the court will not uphold an agreement made upon such a basis: (The Theodore, Swabey 351). Here the demand was outrageous, and forced upon the master of the Medina. The amount recoverable for life salvage is only a reasonable amount under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 458, and this amount is unreasonable, the services being unattended by either difficulty or danger.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—The circumstances of this case are very singular, but it is one in which the court really feels no doubt at all as to the judgment which it ought to give. It is not necessary that I should go into an examination of the authorities which I recently referred to in the case of Cargo ex Woosung (3 Asp. Mar. Law Cases 50). And which I also referred to in the case of The Waverley (3 L. Rep. A. & E. 369), but I may state the result of them to be this: that it is the practice of the court, partly for the protection of absent owners, and partly on the grounds of general policy, to control agreements made by captains, when an examination of the agreements shows that they are clearly inequitable.

In the present case there were upwards of 500 pilgrims on a rock which is just six feet above water, their ship had gone to pieces, and the plaintiffs' vessel, the Timor, came up close without any difficulty or danger at all, because the evidence is that the water was quite deep up to the rock; she came up and her captain in effect says, "I will not relieve you from this situation, which four hours of bad weather might convert into a most imminent danger, indeed it may be said into your total destruction; I will not take you away unless you give me 4000*l.*" Now what is 4000*l.* with regard to the matter saved, which is human life? On the other hand, however, that sum is the whole sum that was to be paid for conveying pilgrims to Jeddah. And in my opinion if the Timor had not taken these pilgrims off the rock in the circumstances stated, and bad weather had come on, and they had lost their lives in consequence, he would hardly have been in a better condition than that of a pirate. Nevertheless, it was certainly a valuable salvage service according to the principles upon which such services have always been considered in this court, but I am of opinion that 4000*l.*, is a great deal too much, and I shall reduce it to 1800*l.*

As to the costs, there has been no tender, and I shall, therefore, leave each party to pay their own costs. If there had been a sufficient tender I should have given the defendants the costs. I shall not give costs to either side.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Brooks, Jenkins, and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Dawes and Son.

Tuesday, May 23, 1876.

THE PARANA.

Objection to registrar's report—Damage to cargo—24 Vict. c. 10—Measure of damages—Loss of market.

Where, through the negligence of a carrier by sea, goods carried by him are not delivered in a reasonable time, the owner of the goods or assignee of the bill of lading for the goods is entitled to recover as damages from the ship owner the difference between the market value of the goods when they ought to have been delivered and the market value when they actually were delivered.

This was an objection to a report of the registrar (H. C. Rothery, Esq.) in a cause referred to him by the court.

The cause was instituted under the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 6, on the 14th Dec. 1873, in the High Court of Admiralty, on behalf of Joseph Samuel, of London, the assignee of certain bills of lading for goods (sugar and hemp) forming part of the cargo of the steamship Parana, against that vessel, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the freight due or payable for the transportation of the cargo, and against William Malcolmson, of Portland, in Ireland, her owner, intervening. After the pleadings in the cause had been concluded, and witnesses had been examined by commission at Manila and Hong Kong, the defendant, on the 14th April 1874, admitted his liability, and consented to a reference of the accounts to the registrar and merchants.

On the 14th Dec. 1875 the plaintiffs brought into the registry a claim containing three heads: First, loss of market in respect of the

ADM.]

THE PARANA.

[ADM.]

secondly, loss of interest; and thirdly loss by drainage of sugar by reason of the unusual length of the voyage. The defendant, before the registrar, admitted that there was some unreasonable delay, and that he was ready to make good any damages necessarily resulting therefrom. The facts of the case, which were not disputed, are detailed by the registrar in his report as follows:

"The Parana was a trading steam vessel of 1372 tons gross and 1027 net register, and she was of 180 horse power nominal, which the master stated was a small power for a vessel of her size. When she left England she was, according to the master, 'frightfully deep,' having from 1000 to 1300 tons of iron as dead weight, and she was filled up with light goods.

"She took ninety days to get to Hong Kong, and having there discharged her cargo was docked, surveyed, and repaired. She thence proceeded in ballast to Manila, where the master entered into a charter-party with Messrs. Engster and Co. to load a cargo at Manila and Ilo-Ilo, and to proceed thither to London, passing through the Suez Canal.

"In pursuance of the charter-party she took on board some parcels of hemp and sugar at Manila, and having sailed to Ilo-Ilo she then took in further parcels of sugar, but as the charterers were not able to supply her with a full cargo it was agreed that she should be at liberty on the homeward voyage to call in at Singapore to fill up. She left Ilo-Ilo on the 24th July 1873, but owing to the defective state of the boilers she was obliged on the 30th of the same month to put into Labuan for repairs. Thence she proceeded to Singapore, where she took in some cargo and a large quantity of coals, and having effected some further repairs to the boilers she again proceeded on her voyage. On the 18th Aug., owing to the state of the boilers, she was obliged to put into Acheen, and after effecting repairs she again proceeded. On the 1st Sept. she had to alter her course for Point de Galle, it being found that she could only carry 11lb. steam. She arrived in Point de Galle on the 4th Sept., and, having completed her repairs, she left again on the 9th. On the 1st Oct. she arrived at Acheen, where further repairs were done to her boilers, and again at Port Said, at Malta, and at Gibraltar, so that it was not until the 28th Nov. 1873, 127 days after leaving Ilo-Ilo, that she arrived in the Port of London.

"As to the lamentable state in which this vessel's boilers were there can be no two opinions. It seems that after the vessel had discharged her cargo she proceeded to Greenock, where her boilers were taken out. We have no information as to what may have been the condition of one of the boilers, as it was broken up before the surveyors saw it; but the other was examined by two practical engineers, who reported that of the eighty-three tubes of which the boiler originally consisted, one had never been used, twenty-one others had been plugged up with either iron covers or wooden plugs, so that only sixty-one tubes were at all effective. It was found also that the backs of both furnaces had been patched with large patches, and that there were traces of considerable leakage on the crowns of the furnaces. There were also numerous patches on the shell of the boiler varying from 4ft. by 2ft. 3in. wide to 12in. long by 8in. wide. The rivets also were worn away by long use, so that they had but little hold of the plates, and some of the plates were worn away by corrosion to half their original thickness. They further said that although this boiler, when new, was constructed to bear a pressure of from 30lb. to 35lb. of steam to the square inch, they thought in that condition in which they found it she could not with safety have borne a pressure of more than 10lb. or 12lb. There is no reason to suppose that the boiler which had been broken up was in any better condition. A more lamentable state of affairs can hardly be imagined to anyone at all acquainted with the construction of steam engines. It is apparent that with engines originally of small power, with a tubular boiler, of which twenty-two out of eighty-three of the tubes were perfectly useless, of which the plates were so much worn away that they would bear only 10lb. or 12lb. instead of 30lb. to 35lb. to the square inch, and with the crowns of the furnaces leaking badly, the available power to contend with the S. W. monsoon must have been very small, and it can therefore hardly be wondered at that the vessel made on an average but four knots an hour, and that she had frequently to put into port for repairs, and to replenish her stock of coals."

The reference was concluded on the 27th Jan. the 14th Feb., and 13th April 1876. Evidence was taken both by affidavit and by oral examination, and the registrar, after hearing counsel on both sides, made a report and gave his reasons, saying, inter alia, "that the plaintiff would have had no reasonable grounds of complaint, if the voyage from Ilo-Ilo to London had lasted ninety days. But it did, as a fact, take 127 days. We think, therefore, that the ship's owner is, by his admission, liable for the excess of thirty-seven days, during which the voyage lasted, beyond what may be called a not unreasonable time. Taking thirty-seven days then as the measure of the unreasonable delay in the voyage, let us consider what damages may be said to have resulted directly from this delay." He then proceeded to discuss the three different items of the claim, and allowed, first, for extra loss occasioned by drainage of the sugar during the thirty-seven days  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. in the original shipment of 500 tons equal to  $7\frac{1}{2}$  tons at 12l. 10s. per ton or 93l. 15s.; secondly, for interest 5 per cent. for thirty-seven days on the invoice value of the cargoes, 19,959l. 9s. 11d. or 101l. 3s. 3d.

On the third point the registrar's report was as follows:

"There remains the last, and by far the most important question, namely, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any compensation for the alleged loss of market by reason of the non-delivery of the cargo within a 'reasonable' time. The question does not arise on the sugar, in regard to which no claim has been made for loss of market, but on the hemp only."

It was said by the plaintiff that, had the vessel arrived by the middle of October, or even by the 22nd or 23rd Oct., which would be about ninety days after leaving Ilo-Ilo, the hemp could have been sold for about 41l. 10s. per ton, but that not having arrived until the 28th Nov., it was impossible to get the hemp landed and placed on the market before the middle of December, and that it was then impossible to get within 20s. a ton of

ADM.]

THE PARANA.

[ADM.]

that price. It was said that the owner continued to hold the hemp in hopes that the market would rally, but that it never did, and that ultimately he had to sell it at a considerable loss. He claimed, not, indeed, the difference between the price at which he might have sold it, had it arrived in October, and the price at which he ultimately did sell it; but the difference between the former, and the price which he might have got for it, immediately after it had been delivered. It was shown that during November and in the first week of December there was a fair demand for hemp at 41l. 10s. per ton, and that price might have been obtained for it. It was also shown that it would have taken about three weeks after the vessel's arrival to have got the hemp sampled and put upon the market; that by that time there was no demand for it, and that, although the prices current had not altered much, a seller forcing any quantity upon the market would have had to submit to a reduction of at least 20s. in the ton. It was proved, also, that after Christmas the market continued to fall, owing to large shipments of hemp brought to Liverpool, so that, as one of the brokers observed, the market was knocked all to pieces.

"Assuming, then, that by the delay in the delivery there was a loss of market, the question arises whether this is an item which can be properly allowed in a claim of this description; whether, in fact, a claim for loss of market can be allowed on account of an unreasonable delay in the delivery of the goods. The case must have frequently arisen in this court, as, for instance, when a vessel has been run into by another, and the delivery of the cargo has been delayed by the vessel having to put into port for repairs; and yet I think that I may say with certainty that no such claim has ever yet been preferred in this court, certainly not during the time I have held this office, now nearly twenty-three years. It may be, however, that we have hitherto proceeded on a wrong principle, and as the point has been very strongly urged in this case by a counsel who is not wont to maintain an untenable position, I propose to examine carefully all the authorities which have been cited in support of that position, as well as the grounds upon which it has hitherto been thought that a claim for loss of market cannot properly be allowed."

The Registrar then referred to and discussed the following cases:

The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. p. 4;
Josling v. Irvine, 6 Hurl. & Nor. 512;
Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 Hurl. & Nor. 79;
Fraser and others v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company, L. Rep. 7 Q.B. 566;
Hadley v. Bazendale, 9 Exch. 341;
Smeed v. Foord, 1 Ell. & Ell. 602;
Horne v. Midland Railway Company, L. Rep. 8, O.P. 131; and concluded his report as follows:

"It seems to me that the cases of Hadley v. Bazendale, Smeed v. Foord, and Irvine and another v. The Midland Railway Company (ubi sup.), are conclusive on the point; and that the practice of the Court of Admiralty, in refusing to entertain any claim for loss of market in such cases, is in entire accordance with that of the courts of common law, and I shall refuse to alter that practice until I am corrected by superior authority. I may add that the merchants by whom I am assisted, entirely concur with me in the conclusions to which I have come."

As to the costs of the reference, the report was as follows:

"The general rule in collision cases is that where more than one-third is taken off, the claimant shall pay the costs of the reference. But this rule does not apply to cases of this description. The defendant in the first instance denied altogether his liability, and set up several pleas, which he afterwards withdrew; the condition of the boilers of his vessel was most discreditable, and he entailed heavy losses on the plaintiff; he has, moreover, made no tender on account of the sums which the latter was undoubtedly entitled to recover. On the other hand, the plaintiff has failed in the main issue, the question of loss of market. On the whole, we think that justice will be done by leaving each party to pay his own costs of the reference, but the reference fees will have to be paid by them in moieties."

A motion was heard in court in objection to the report of the Registrar, "to modify and alter the same so far as it disallows the sum of 289l. 5s. 9d., claimed as damages for the defendant's breach of contract in respect of the depreciation in value by loss of market on 2408 bales of hemp, weighing 5785 cwt., forming part of the cargo of the above-named steamship, because the disallowance of such damages is based upon a misapprehension of law, and is erroneous, and the plaintiff is legally entitled upon the facts of the case appearing by the Registrar's report to recover such damages, and also to alter the said report so far as it orders the plaintiff to bear his own costs of the reference, and to make such order as shall be meet and right in and about the premises, and to condemn the defendant in the costs of this motion."

Clarkson, in support of motion.—It is admitted that the speed of the Parana was defective, and the plaintiff claims 285l. 5s. 9d. for the loss of market. The Registrar has allowed nothing in respect of this claim. The only cases in which loss of market has been disallowed as the measure of damages, are those in which it has been occasioned by a special sub-contract, unknown, and not in the consideration of both parties: In Smeed v. Foord (1 Ell. & Ell. 602) the wheat claimed for was not the subject matter of the contract, which was for the delivery of thrashing machines, not to deliver wheat; but the subject matter of the contract was the carriage and delivery of the hemp; the plaintiff could have recovered on the thrashing machines if he had procured others at a higher price. The Registrar relied also on Hadley v. Bazendale (9 Exch. 341), but that case is in my favour, for the fluctuation of the market is a matter in the knowledge of both parties. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There are two criteria (1) Was it in contemplation of the parties? (2) Was it the natural result of the negligent delay of the defendant?] Fraser v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company (L. Rep. 7 Q.B. 566) lays down the law under which damages of this description may be recovered. The breach of contract there was in not supplying a vessel whose principal moving power was steam; here it is for delay in delivery of goods occasioned by defective power of ship, and the loss caused thereby is the difference of price caused.

Forne v. Midland Railway Company 3 C. P. 131) is really in favour of the reason that the extra sum there for loss upon the contract by delivery not being recovered was because defendants had not notice of any special contract which would increase the ordinary value by non-delivery in time. In Borutchinson (34 L. J. 169, C. P.) the case was what was the proper measure of damages, from the delay of the carrier, the state of his market altogether, and there, also, says, "In ordinary cases, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract market price." In O'Hanlon v. Great Western Railway Company (34 L. J. 154, C. P.) the general principle is the same, and in Great Western Railway Company v. Redmayne (L. Rep. 1 C. P. 329) the court held that the value of the goods at the time was the measure of damages. In Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company (4 L. T. 410; 7 H. & N. 79) also, the plaintiff, however, was held entitled to recover the difference between the market value and the con-

Williams, Q.C. and G. Bruce, in support of the report.—The principle adopted by the Registrar is the only correct one. The court cannot be taken to know the purpose for which the cargo is intended, and to be involved in questions concerning the fall of the market. The only question is whether the fall of market occasioning the loss is in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, and whether the cargo has depreciated intrinsically. Hadley v. Baxendale (9 Exch. 341) settled, at all events, that compensation for such a loss could not be claimed. There must also be some general principle applicable to all cases, and that the Registrar has correctly stated in his report. Iron Works and Shipbuilding Company v. T. Rep. N. S. 495; L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 101 is not a question between carrier and merchant, but I especially rely on the judgment therein by the Lord Chief Justice. It is necessary to look at the nature of the contract and the circumstances under which it was made. If the damage resulting was such as was in the contemplation of both parties. Here it was not in the contemplation of shipowner that loss of market value; some loss was contemplated, certainly; that is fairly represented by the five per cent. on the value of the cargo allowed by The British Columbia, &c., Saw Mills Limited v. Nettleship (L. Rep. 3 C. P. 131) in point; there the non-delivery of a piece of machinery stopped the whole business of the defendant was held not to be liable for arising therefrom, but only of the loss of the goods which he had lost, valued at the rate of five per cent. for the delay caused by his negligence, and this is the principle to allow a rough mercantile rule. Any other rule would lead to complications insoluble by the court. The amount of damage cannot be looked to, as it cannot be in the contemplation of the parties. The cases cited for the plaintiffs are between vendor and purchaser, and do not apply. The plaintiff's contention is opposed to the universal practice of this court and to the analogy of insurance law, by which underwriters in goods are never made responsible for loss of market. The plaintiff cannot recover such damages as these without notice to shipowner that he wanted the goods to be delivered for a particular market:

Horne v. Midland Railway Company, L. Rep. 8 C. P. 181;

Wilson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 30 L. J. 232, C. P.; 9 C. B., N. S., 632;

O'Hanlon v. Great Western Railway Company, 34 L. J. 154, C. P.;

Borries v. Hutchinson, 34 L. J. 169, C. P.;

Great Western Railway Company v. Redmayne, L. Rep. 1 C. P. 329;

Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 H. & N. 79; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 410;

Smeed v. Ford, 1 Ell. & Ell. 602.

Clarkson in reply.

In addition to the cases mentioned above, the following authorities were cited in the course of the argument.

Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Company, ante, vol. 2, p. 435; L. Rep. 10 C. P. 125;

The Lucy, 3 C. Rob. 208;

Phillimore's International Law, vol. 3, p. 699, 2nd edit.;

Smith's Leading Cases, vol 2, Vicar v. Wilson, 6th edit., p. 503.

Curr. adv. vult.

June 13.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I have taken time to consider my judgment in this case, partly on account of the great number of reported cases to which I was referred, but more especially because, unfortunately, I am unable to agree with the very elaborate and carefully reasoned opinion of the Registrar from whose ruling this appeal has been prosecuted.

It is admitted in this case that the carrier must make some compensation to the merchant for the loss sustained by him in consequence of the delay in the execution of the contract; the question is, what are to be the items of that compensation. The registrar has found that these items are 93*l.* 15*s.* for deterioration in quality of a portion of the cargo and 101*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* for loss of the interest, during the detention in consequence of the delay, at five per cent. on the value of the cargo. The merchant also claims, in addition to these items, the ascertained difference between the market value of the goods at the time when they might have been sold, if the carrier had not unreasonably delayed the fulfilment of his contract, and their value at the time when they did actually arrive, and the justice of this claim is the sole subject of this appeal.

The law applicable to this question has apparently been difficult to ascertain and the application of it when ascertained more difficult. The general rule of law is stated with his usual clearness by M. Massé in the last edition of his Droit Commercial, vol. 3, p. 239, edit. 2, Lib. 5. Tit. I. Ch. 3, sect. iv., § 1. The principle of this rule is in different words expressed in the English and American judgments. In accordance with this principle the carrier has been held liable to pay damages on the hypothesis that he contemplated payment of a certain kind of compensation in the event of his not executing, or his unreasonably delaying to execute his part of the contract. Another form of stating that proposition is to be found in the judgment of the Lord Chief Baron in the Exchequer Chamber in Horne

ADM.]

THE SISTERS.

v. Midland Railway Company (Limited) (L. Rep. 8 C. P. 135) decided in the year 1873. "The principle clearly to be declared for all the authorities is that the damages for a breach of contract must be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally, i.e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may be reasonably supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable results of the breach of it." The last English judgment which I have been able to find is one delivered by the Lord Chief Justice in 1876, in the case of Sampson v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 274). It is the only English case, I think, for the knowledge of which I am not indebted to the industry of counsel. "The law," the Lord Chief Justice says at p. 277, "as it is to be found in the reported cases, has fluctuated, but the principle is now settled, that whenever either the object of the sender is specially brought to the notice of the carrier, or circumstances are known to the carrier from which the object ought in reason to be inferred, so that the object may be taken to have been within the contemplation of both parties, damages may be recovered for the natural consequences of the future of that object." The latest American decision, I believe, is that of Ward v. The New York Central Railroad Company (47 N. Y. 29), it is thus stated in a note to the last edition of Sedgwick on Damages (p. 430): "It is here held, that where a carrier from mere negligence, or plain violation of duty, omits to transport merchandise within a reasonable time, and its market value falls in the meantime, the true rule of damages is the difference in its value at the time and place it ought to have been delivered and the time of its actual delivery, the court observing that sagacious men rely upon their own ability to judge of the market in undertaking large commercial projects, and according to their views of the market send their merchandise by a quick or by a slow carrier, and make compensation accordingly. A contrary rule would deprive them of all benefit of a rapid transit. The court further remarked, had the goods been injured by reason of improper exposure by the carrier, and thus become depreciated in their market value, the carrier would be liable for the loss. Here his negligent delay caused the loss; the injury also is natural and direct; arriving later by the carrier's negligence, these goods, measured by the only standard that regulates value, were not worth as much as at the time when they should have arrived." I do not refer to other cases besides those two, but I have read them all with care; most of them will be found in the notes to Mr. Sedgwick's valuable work on the Measure of Damages (6th edit., chap. 3, p. 81; chap. 13, p. 430), to which I have already referred.

The result of the reported decisions is, that this merchant may claim to be indemnified for the actual loss in the value of the goods shipped (perte qu'il a fait)—damnum emergens—and from loss of profit, gain (dont il a été privé)—lucrum cessans—when such loss is the direct consequence of the carrier's default. Why should not the ascertained difference between the market price, when the goods might have been sold had there been no delay, and the market price which they would fetch after the delay, be a reasonable measure of the loss of the merchant's profits; the depreciation is the direct consequence of the default; in other words, he must be taken known or contemplated that the merchant a safe and quick transport of his market to their intended market. This is the knowledge with which a carrier receive and it is on this principle, as it appears that in Horne v. The Midland Railway (Limited) (L. Rep. 8 C. P. 135), already a difference between two market prices was ordered to be the proper measure of the damage.

The case before me is not one of a specious speculation or particular mercantile operation which delay may inflict as much injury on the shipper with respect to the market value of the goods as their deterioration from want of requisite appliances or improper exposure to the passage. Upon the same principle the carrier is responsible for both injuries, the depreciation of the market value of these goods has been in my opinion the natural consequence of the unreasonable delay—Propter rem ipsam habitam, as the civilians say—and for the already alleged, I think the shipper is entitled to have included in his damages the difference between the market price at the time the goods did arrive and at the time when they should have arrived.

I must therefore direct that the report be varied by adding to the damages the sum of 289l. 5s. 9d., which represents the loss of market. I think that the justice of the case demands that the plaintiffs have the benefit of the appeal and of the reference.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Hillyer, Fenn & Stibbard.

Solicitors for defendants, Parker, Walker & Clarke.

Tuesday May 30, 1876.

THE SISTERS.

Limitation of liability—Practice.

A vessel under arrest in a cause of damage liberated on payment into court of the sum which her liability was limited under the Act of 1862, together with a sum for costs and interest, and subsequently she was released solely to blame for the collision. The owner had instituted a suit for limitation of damages, and moved for a decree in that suit, and money in court should be transferred to the plaintiff out of that suit;

The court granted the prayer of the first motion but not of the latter, holding it unnecessary.

On the 15th Oct. 1874, the Sisters, a tug company with two other barges, the Vols and the Alfreda, were cruising up Halfway in the river Thames. A steamer called the Thames was going down the river, and after just doing serious damage to the Sisters, ran and sank the other two barges with their crew, caused the death by drowning of two of the persons on board the Alfreda. The Vols instituted an action against the Thames, which was dismissed on the ground that the Thames was obliged to adopt the course she had taken in the imminent danger of collision with the Sisters, which was occasioned by the improper management of that vessel. The Alfreda then, on instituted an action against the Sisters and ed her; the Volunteer also instituted an action against the Sisters; the owners of the Sisters on the 22nd Feb. 1875 instituted a cause of action of liability, and on the 2nd March 1875 the court to release that vessel on payment of 960*l.* 7*s.*, that being the amount at per ton, for which the owners were liable - 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, and the court, hearing counsel, permitted the release on sum and a further sum of 329*l.* 8*s.* to cover cost and costs, being paid into court, and the vessel was released accordingly. On the hearing of the cause of damage the Sisters was found alone at fault, and that decision was confirmed on appeal (ante p. 122; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 338). W. Raikes, on behalf of the plaintiffs in the action of liability suit, the owners of the Sisters, moved the court for a decree in that suit giving the plaintiff's liability to 15*l.* per ton and costs incurred in the causes of damage and action of liability, for a stay of proceedings in the cause of damage, and that the sums paid into in that suit should be transferred to the plaintiff's account for the suit for limitation of liability. He submitted that as the jurisdiction in cases of action of liability was originally vested in the Court of Chancery, by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, § 514, and was only transferred to the Court of Admiralty in certain cases, by the Admiralty Court Act 1861, § 13, the plaintiff's suit must be in the limitation of liability suit and not in the cause of damage, and that the purpose of the money in court should be referred to that suit.

[L.]

THE CLUTHA.

[ADM.]

C. Clarkson, for the defendants in the action of liability suit only required that whatsoever the court pursued with reference to the money in court, that the defendants' costs in the action of liability suit which had not yet been paid should be secured.

R. PHILLIMORE, after consultation with the registrar as to the practice, made the decree in that suit in the limitation of liability suit, the plaintiff's solicitors undertaking that the costs in that suit should be paid, and ordered a stay of all proceedings in the damage suit, but as to the plaintiff's motion made no order, on the ground that whatever might have been requisite for the cause for limitation of liability been in the division of the high court, the money in this division it was immaterial which suit was referred to the credit of.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Deacon, Son, and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ingladew, Ince, Greening; Keene and Marsland.

Tuesday, Aug. 1, 1876.

THE CLUTHA.

Readings—Limitation of liability—Counter claim.

Under the system of pleading established by the Limitation Act and rules, the defendant, who admits his liability for the damage done by a collision, but claims to have his liability limited to 8*l.* or 15*l.* per ton of his vessel under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, can so claim by counter claim instead of by instituting a separate suit for limitation of liability.

of by instituting a separate suit for limitation of liability:

Seemingly, when liability is not admitted a similar course may be adopted in the alternative.

In this case actions were commenced against the Clutha and her owners by the owners of the Russian barque Tovernus, and of a portion of the cargo laden on board her, for damages sustained by a collision between the vessels whilst the Tovernus was at anchor in the river Clyde on the 23rd Dec. 1875. The Tovernus was sunk by the collision, and three of her crew drowned.

These actions were, by order of the court, consolidated and statement of claim in the consolidated action delivered on the 26th June 1876.

On the 14th July 1876, the defendants delivered a statement of defence and counter claim, which so far as material was as follows:

Between RICHARD JANSSEN, of Parga, and others, the owners of the Russian barque Tovernus (plaintiffs),

and
The owners of the steamship or vessel Clutha (defendants) (by original action),

and
Between WILLIAM STOWELL and OTHERS, the owners of the said steamship or vessel Clutha (plaintiffs)

and
RICHARD JANSSEN, of Parga, and others, the owners of the Russian barque Tovernus and the owners of the cargo lately laden on board the said barque, and the survivors of her crew, and the legal personal representatives of such of her crew as are deceased, and against all and every person or persons whomsoever claiming to be entitled to claim in respect of damage or loss to the said barque Tovernus or her boats, or to any goods, merchandise, or other things on board of her at the time of the collision, in the statement of claim mentioned, or in respect of any loss of life or personal injury occasioned by the said collision (defendants)

(by counter claim).

Statement of defence and counter claim.

1. The defendants in the said original action admit the statements contained in the statement of claim, and that the said collision was occasioned by improper navigation of the said steamship or vessel Clutha, and by way of counter claim the said defendants say as follows:

2. The said defendants were before, and at the time of the said collision, the owners of the said steamship Clutha, which is a duly registered British steamship.

3. On the 27th June 1876, another action, numbered 1876 O No. 330, was commenced against the said steamship Clutha by the said owners of cargo, laden on board the said barque and in the statement of claim mentioned, to recover damages for the loss of the said cargo in the said collision, and such action has by order of the court been consolidated herewith.

4. No other action or suit save as aforesaid has yet been brought against the said defendants or the said steamship Clutha or her freight in respect of the said collision, but the defendants apprehend other claims in respect of a damage to goods, merchandise, and other things on board the said barque Tovernus, and also in respect of loss of life and personal injury caused to persons on board of and carried in the said barque Tovernus at the time of the said collision.

5. The said collision took place without the actual fault or privity of the said defendants, or either or any of them, and the said defendants submit that they are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 and the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Act 1862, for limiting their liability in respect of the said collision.

6. The gross tonnage of the said steamship Clutha,

Q

ADM.]

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

without deduction on account of the engine room, is 514 <sup>70</sup>/<sub>100</sub> tons.

7. The said defendants are willing, and they hereby offer to pay in such manner as the court shall direct, the amount to which they are liable in respect of the said collision, regard being had to the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Acts 1862.

The said defendants claim

1. A declaration that the defendants are not answerable in respect of loss of life or personal injury caused by the said collision, together with loss or damage to ship's boats, goods, merchandise, or other things to an aggregate amount exceeding 15*l.* for each ton of the gross tonnage of the said steamship Clutha, without deduction on account of the engine room, nor in respect of loss or damage to ship's goods, merchandise, or other things on board the said barque Tovernus, caused by the said collision to an aggregate amount exceeding 8*l.* for each ton of the gross tonnage of the said steamship Clutha without deduction on account of the engine room.
2. That the said defendants may be at liberty to give bail for such an aggregate amount and for such interest as the court may think fit to award.
3. That upon the filing of the bail bond all further proceedings in the said actions, numbered 1875 J, No. 106, and 1876 O, No. 330 respectively, may be stayed, and the respective plaintiffs in the said actions, and all and every other person and persons claiming in respect of damage or loss to the said barque Tovernus, or to her boats, or to any goods, merchandise, or other things on board her, or in respect of loss of life or personal injury occasioned by the said collision, may be restrained from bringing any other action or actions in respect of these said losses or injuries.
4. That all proper directions may be given by the court for ascertaining the persons who have any just claim in respect of loss or damage to ships, goods, merchandise, and other things caused by the said collision, and in respect of loss of life and personal injury caused by the said collision, and for the exclusion of any claimants who shall not come in within a certain time to be fixed for that purpose.
5. That the amount of the said defendant's liability may be rateably distributed among the several persons who may establish a claim thereto.
6. Such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require.

On the 19th July the plaintiffs replied by not admitting the truth of the 5th and 6th paragraphs of the counter-claim, and on the 1st Aug. 1876 the case came on for hearing.

Clarkson, for owners of barque Tovernus.

Phillimore, for owners of part of cargo.

Aspinall for defendants, mentioned the matter to the court, as the pleadings were new to the practice of this division, but he submitted that under the Judicature Act and rules the defendant was entitled to raise the question of the limitation of his liability by counter-claim to the original action, instead of instituting a special suit for the purpose, the affidavit and copy of register usual in such suits being filed in this. He referred to Order XIX., rule 9, Order XXII., rule 5, and Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, sect. 24, sub-sects. 4, 6, 7; Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 514; Common Law Procedure Act 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. ch. 126, sect. 35), and the Admiralty Court Act 1862 (24 Vict. c. 10, s. 13).

Clarkson and Phillimore agreed that it was now the proper course to pursue.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE said that there could be no doubt that course could now be pursued, and that under the circumstances it was the proper one to adopt, and ordered all proceedings in the actions to be stayed except for taxation and payment of costs, 8*l.* per ton, on the gross of the Clutha, to be paid into court, and be given for the remainder up to 15*l.* per the gross tonnage of the Clutha, with or interest.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Thomas Coop

Solicitors for the owner of the cargo,

Saunders, and Stokes.

Solicitors for defendants, Pritchard and March 13 and 15, 1876.

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

Life salvage—Cargo—Separately saved—to pay life salvage—Merchant Shipping Act sect. 458.

Where life salvage is performed, cargo, separately saved from the same vessel as the lives persons wholly distinct from the life is liable to contribute towards the payment reward due to the life salvors under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 18458.

THIS was an action in rem instituted on behalf of the owners, masters, and crews of the pike Rapid and the boats O. and M., Guinevere, against the cargo of the late German ship Schiller, to recover salvage reward for services rendered to the lives of the passengers that vessel.

The Rapid was a pilot cutter belonging to the Island of Bryher, one of the Scilly Islands, the value of 500*l.*, and at the time of the loss was manned by a crew of eight hands. The O. and M. was a six-oared gig belonging to the Island of St. Agnes, one of the Scilly Islands, at the time of the services was manned by a crew of six hands, including a licensed Trinity Boatman. The Guinevere was also a six-oared gig belonging to the Island of St. Agnes, and was manned by a crew of seven hands. The Swift was a boat belonging to the Island of St. Agnes, and was manned by a crew of four hands.

The Schiller went ashore on the 8th of March, which is about three miles and a half west of the Island of St. Agnes, and two miles and three-quarters west of the south of the Island of Annett. The service was rendered during the morning of the 8th of March 1876, and during a dense fog. The Swift picked up one passenger from the Schiller's lifeboat, which was discovered full of water in the Sound; the Rapid picked up two men from the rocks of Minalto and Mincarlo; the O. and M. discovered the Schiller herself, and picked up the spars and wreckage five men; the Guinevere got to the Schiller and picked up two men among the wreckage; all these men were saved ashore and saved. The O. and M., after the men she picked up ashore, got a steamboat was going to Penzance to go to the wreck, and proceeded to the Schiller, the pilot from the O. and M. being on board the boat. The O. and M. was damaged by the collision with the Schiller the second time, and had to be towed back to the pier, but the steamboat and lifeboat went on to save more lives. The Guinevere also sent two boats to the Schiller, and these saved

.]

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

[ADM.]

sons saved were taken ashore by the persons who picked them up, and were landed either in or out of St. Agnes or St. Mary's. The plaintiffs alleged that during the services the weather was very bad, the sea running very high, and that the services were rendered at great risk to the lives of the crew. A small portion only of the stores and the Schiller were saved, but large portions of the cargo, mainly specie, to the value of 40,000*l.*, were saved. The above facts and others appearing in the judgment were fully set out in the statement of claim in twenty-two paragraphs.

The cargo proceeded against was not nor was it not of it saved by the plaintiffs, nor was it for a considerable time after the services rendered by the plaintiffs. The defendants' (the owners of the specie saved) statement was as follows:

"The defendants admit the statements of fact in paragraphs 1 to 22, inclusive of the statement of claim.

"The services of the plaintiffs to the passengers of the Schiller were rendered at some risk to themselves, and at great risk, as alleged.

"The said passengers were not the owners of the cargo proceeded against in this action, and the plaintiffs did not go to services to and did not attempt to save the cargo or the owners thereof. Such cargo was saved in the circumstances in the next article mentioned.

"At the time after the wreck of the Schiller, and after she was partially broken up, and with her cargo in deep water, and had been abandoned by all hands, the defendants determined to endeavour to raise the cargo of specie belonging to them, and which were on board in the vessel's hold. The defendants engaged a staff of divers and workmen, and worked for several weeks at great expense, and with great uncertainty as to the success of their operations. During the time, and so long as it remained doubtful whether the operations would not be altogether unprofitable, the defendants did not profess to be interested, or to have a claim against the cargo in respect of which the operations were proceeding.

"For many weeks of unsuccessful and unremunerated operations, the defendants succeeded in raising the barrels of specie and a portion of the contents of another barrel, of the total value of 40,000*l.*, and the same was conveyed to Penzance. This cargo proceeded against in this action.

"After the arrival of the specie at Penzance, the defendants were induced by persons who had taken no part in the salvage services to put forward the claim in this action, and they consented to do so upon indemnification against liability for costs, and this being prosecuted in the plaintiffs' name under the name of the plaintiffs.

"On the arrival of the specie at Penzance, it was in two distinct actions by or in the names of the plaintiffs in the present consolidated action, and a third action was afterwards instituted on behalf of the said plaintiffs. The said actions were all commenced by the instructions of the plaintiffs acting or professing to act as agent for the plaintiffs, and through the same solicitor, and the claimants might or ought to have been put forward, in one action.

"The several portions of the Schiller, and of her tackle, and furniture had been saved and recovered by other than the defendants prior to the commencement of these actions, but the plaintiffs made no attempt to enforce a claim against such property.

"The plaintiffs respectively have received or are to receive, and can upon application receive, from the persons to whom they rendered the said services, the owners of the Schiller, and from the German Government, ample remuneration for their said services.

"The Schiller at the time of her loss was a German ship sailing under the German flag, and by the law of the ship and the owners thereof, and the passengers themselves, are liable for the remuneration of the crew in the statement of claim mentioned, and the defendants as owners of the cargo on board the ship are not in the circumstances aforesaid liable for such remuneration.

The plaintiffs' reply was, so far as material, as follows:

1. It is not true, as stated in the fourth paragraph of the statement of defence, that during the time therein mentioned the plaintiffs did not profess to be interested in, or to have a claim against, the cargo therein mentioned.

2. The several allegations in the sixth paragraph are untrue. It is further untrue, as stated in the seventh paragraph, that the actions therein mentioned were all commenced by the instructions of the same person, or that the claim of the plaintiffs might or ought to have been put forward in one action. The costs of the separate institutions of the two suits and action are trifling. The several allegations in paragraphs 6 and 7 are immaterial.

3. It is not true that any portions of the Schiller, or of her tackle, apparel, or furniture, which were or are of any appreciable value, had or have been saved or recovered.

4. It is true, as stated in paragraph 10, that the Schiller was at the time of her loss a German ship, sailing under the German flag, but with this exception, the several allegations in paragraphs 9 and 10 are untrue.

5. At the time of the rendering of the services stated in the statement of claim, the Schiller was a ship stranded or in distress on the shore of a sea or tidal water situated within the limits of the United Kingdom, and the services so stated were rendered wholly or in part in British waters.

From an affidavit filed by the plaintiffs in answer to interrogatories administered to them on behalf of the defendants, it appeared that the crew of the O. and M. received 75*l.* from three out of the five persons saved by that boat; that none of the other persons saved paid the plaintiffs anything; no claim other than these actions had been made upon the persons saved or the owners of the Schiller; that the crews of O. and M. and Guinevere sent in a statement by way of petition to the German Government and also to the Board of Trade, but no reply thereto was received before the institution of these actions; that the crew of the Swift accepted as a present from the German Government the sum of 1*l.* per head without prejudice to their present claim; and that, save as aforesaid, no other sums had been received by the plaintiffs for the services proceeded for in these actions.

March 13, 1876.—The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and W. G. F. Phillimore, for the plaintiff.—The facts are admitted, and the only question is the case is whether the plaintiffs can by law recover reward for salvage of life. The right arises under the Merchant Shipping Acts. Even if the Schiller can be said to have been wrecked outside of British waters, the plaintiffs performed part of their service within British waters by taking the persons rescued to and landing them on the islands of St. Agnes and St. Mary. The first case on the point is The Johannes (Lush. 182; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 757; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 24), where it was held in 1860 that the Court of Admiralty had no original jurisdiction over life salvage, and that the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 458 only gave jurisdiction over life salvage rendered within the limits of the United Kingdom. In the following year the Admiralty Court Act (24 Vict. c. 10) s. 9, extended the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act "to the salvage of life from any British ship or boat, wheresoever the services may have been rendered, and from any foreign ship or boat, where the services have been rendered wholly or in part in British waters." Hence there is clearly jurisdiction. In The Fusilier (Bro. & Lush. 341; 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 699; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 39, 177) it was held that passengers must be taken as "belonging to such ship" within the 458th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. In The Willem III. (ante, vol. 1, p. 129; L. Rep. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 487; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 386) the services were rendered wholly outside British waters, and it was held that the plaintiffs could not recover for life salvage against the ship and cargo.

ADM.]

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

[ADM.]

Butt, Q.C. and Lodge, for the defendants.—It is an admitted fact that the plaintiffs made no attempt to save the vessel or cargo. In The Fusilier (ubi sup.) there was a joint salvage of ship, cargo, and lives of crew and passengers by the same salvors. Here the services rendered were wholly separate from those subsequently rendered to ship and cargo. The cargo now proceeded against was got up some time afterwards by a wholly distinct set of persons. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 458, salvage is payable for "assisting such ship or boat;" for "saving the lives of the persons belonging to such ship or boat;" and for "saving the cargo or apparel of such ship or boat, or any portion thereof," and is made payable "by the owners of such ship or boat, cargo, apparel, or wreck, to the person by whom such services or any of them are rendered." Dr. Lushington, in The Fusilier (ubi sup.), says: "That section begins by defining what constitutes a salvage service; it states three special heads. . . . The section then goes on to declare, that payment shall be made by the owner of the ship or cargo of a reasonable amount of life salvage. If the statute ended there, I should say the effect of it was simply to constitute the saving of life to be per se a salvage service, and to leave the mode of payment to be according to former practice; for I cannot find any words in this section adequate to effect so serious a change in the law, as to introduce a new system of payment, in substitution of the ancient rule which, where life was saved together with ship and cargo by a single set of salvors, threw upon the cargo a part of the proportionate increase of the salvage reward. The existing grievance was not the mode of payment—charging the cargo in part—but the absence, in some cases, of all payment for life salvage." Does not that passage show that the Merchant Shipping Act makes life salvage chargeable upon the cargo, whether saved with the lives or not?] We submit that if such was the effect of the decision it must have been given without consideration of the 459th section which, provides that "salvage in respect of the preservation of life or lives of any person or persons belonging to any such ship or boat as aforesaid shall be payable by the owners of such ship or boat in priority to all other claims for salvage; and in cases where such ship or boat is destroyed, or where the value thereof is insufficient, after payment of the actual expenses incurred, to pay the amount of salvage due in respect of any life or lives, the Board of Trade may, in its discretion, award to the salvors of such life or lives out of the Mercantile Marine Fund, such sum or sums as it deems fit." This clearly shows that the intention of the Act was that life salvage should only be payable where the persons saved are identified with the owners of the property saved. That is to say, that if the whole service to ship, cargo, and life is effected at once, the whole fund should contribute, but if only the lives are saved and no salvage to ship or cargo rendered until a later period, the ship only should be liable to pay the reward for the salvage of life. The cargo here was got up not by salvors, but by the owners of the cargo itself, and cannot be identified in any way with the salvage to life or the persons saved. If the ship was not sufficient, the plaintiffs should have obtained reward from the Board of Trade. The plaintiffs have accepted reward in respect of the services rendered.

The Admiralty Advocate in reply.—In The Cairn (ante, vol. 2, p. 257; L. Rep. 4 Adm. & Ecc. 50) reward for salvage to life was given, although no services were rendered to ship and cargo at the time of the life salvage.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 15, 1876.—Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—It appears that on the 7th May last year, shortly before midnight, the plaintiffs heard the whistle of a steamer and the report of a gun, at the Island of St. Agnes. At that time there was a very dense fog over the whole of the Scilly Islands. It appears that, nevertheless, suspecting some vessel might be in danger, the crew of the O. and M. started from the Island of St. Agnes towards the Western Rocks. The weather continued densely thick, with fog, the wind was from the S.W., and a heavy sea was running through the rocks and breaking over the sunken ledges, between which the boats had to pass before they could get outside, to such an extent as to greatly imperil the lives of those on board them. The facts, I should have said, are all admitted, except that the great danger to the lives of the salvors is not admitted; as to this, the admission is qualified, for it is said that at this time there was not great danger. At the same time, it is a fact that the fog had shut out all landmarks, and, although some of the plaintiffs were Trinity pilots, they found great difficulty in making their way. One of the men on the Island of Bryher saw three spars wash on shore where he then was, and about six a.m. he saw some broken deck planks floating in the water. He immediately summoned the crew of the Rapid, who got her under weigh and passed down the channel between the islands of Sampson and Bryher. The statement of claim goes on to state that the coxswain of the Swift, being at the look out above Smith's Sound, on the Island of St. Agnes, saw a broken ship's lifeboat drifting to the southward, through the Sound, with something dark in it, which he could not distinguish for the fog. He immediately, with the crew of the Swift, launched that boat, and proceeded as fast as possible in the direction where he had seen the lifeboat. They saw her close to Buccaba, and rowing up to her, found she belonged to the Schiller, and that there was lying in her a passenger from the Schiller, groaning, benumbed with cold, and in a very weak state. The lifeboat was very much damaged, one half of her port side being done gone. She was floating on a level with the water, and the passenger was immersed in water, over his head and shoulders, and he had lost all power of speech. Having got him on board the Swift, they took every measure to restore him to consciousness. In the meanwhile, the other boats, the O. and M., and Guinevere, were making the best of their way to the wreck of the Schiller. The first went to the Reef of Meledgen, the Corregan, Rosevean, Rosevean, and Cairn.

M.]

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

[ADM.]

one of which reefs could they discover any. Shortly before seven a.m. the crew of the U, which was then reaching in towards *U*to, heard cries, but could see no one, owing to fog. Their statement goes on to show that they went in the direction of the cries, between the rock of Mincarlo and Minalto, which is a narrow channel, and there they saw a man in the water, whom they rescued, and, soon, they saw another man, whom they took on board. It appears that the Rapid made several tacks in order to see if there were more men in the water, and not seeing any, and finding none they had got out required care, they went to St. Mary's for medical assistance, and then so proceeding, they passed quantities of clothing, clothes, and trunks, which they did not pick up, being anxious to obtain assistance for two men. I mention these facts because not disputed that the account of the men is true. On the whole, the plaintiffs saved ten men and must be considered as having indirectly saved more, because the O. and M. obtained a letter which was going to Penzance, and the U sent word of the distress and danger to the Schiller was in, and some of the passengers were saved and got on board the U and some fishing smacks.

Now, a question of law has been raised with respect to these services; and it has been said, first, that the cargo is not liable to pay any remuneration for saving the lives of these persons. It is admitted that no part of the cargo was saved; but the claim was rested solely and entirely upon the preservation of human life. The question was, it was admitted, raised in The Fusilier (ubi sup.), both in the Court of Admiralty and in the Privy Council, and a conclusion favourable to the plaintiff arrived at in both courts. The case is reported in Moore's P. C. C., N. S. 55, where Dr. Lushington is reported to have said: "Several questions of law have arisen respecting what is life salvage, and to these questions I will draw my attention before considering the peculiar facts of the case. First, then, as to the law respecting salvage of property—the law on any statute was passed on the subject. As is, I apprehend, no doubt that the law was, where no ship or cargo had been saved, no property rescued from destruction, but life had been saved from the ship, no suit for salvage could be maintained. One reason for this was, that no property could be considered applicable to the purpose. There could be no proceeding in rem, the ancient foundation of a salvage suit. It is true that sometimes an unusual case did arise, where one set of salvors saved life, and another, wholly distinct, saved the ship and cargo; but, even in these circumstances, the salvors of life alone could not recover the property amenable to their claim. Then, in the case where life and property had both been saved by one set of salvors, it was the practice of the court to increase the amount of salvage that would have been given if property only had been saved, and such doctrine does, I think, rest on high authority to be doubted. The practice, as that all the property saved should pay in an increased rate of salvage—the ship, the cargo, and the cargo, each in proportion to its share. Such being the state of the law and the practice of the court, a question arises—what was the grievance which required the interposition of the Legislature? That grievance clearly was, that persons who had risked their own lives, perhaps, and saved life only, or with so little property as not to afford the payment of an adequate reward, could not be justly compensated. That was the grievance intended to be remedied. No doubt the leading motive for the legislative enactment to remedy this grievance was to encourage the saving of life; but there was a subsidiary ground—the encouragement of salvors generally, for the reward of life salvage operates as a further incentive to salvage exertions. This being so, it would be reasonable to suppose, a priori, that the remedy given by the Legislature would be commensurate to the evil, and effect no further change." Then the learned judge enters into a consideration of provisions in the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 458 and 459, and he comes to a conclusion that the cargo was clearly liable to pay the life salvage. The matter was argued on the pleadings before the Privy Council, and I had the honour to appear for the appellants, and Dr. Deane for the respondents. The question was very fully gone into and considered in the Privy Council, and Lord Chelmsford delivered the judgment and said: "The general rule as to the parties liable to pay salvage is, that the property actually benefited is alone chargeable with the salvage recovered. But this rule is inapplicable in the case of life salvage, because it is difficult to imagine a case where the saving of the lives either of the crew or of the passengers of a vessel in distress would be any benefit either to the vessel or to the cargo. The Legislature, therefore, could not have intended to enact that the benefit to property should be the criterion of the liability to the payment of life salvage. All that seems to have been contemplated is, that there should be included in the entire sum payable for the salvage of ship and cargo a distinct award for the preservation of human life." Then he goes into the question of the 458th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, much discussed before me, and then says: "The Legislature seems merely to have had in view the rewarding at a higher rate persons whose services were more meritorious from having rescued human life as well as property from peril, and almost to have assumed that the liability to the salvage would attach, without any distinction, upon all the owners of property exposed to the common danger." And then, entering into a consideration of the 468th and 469th sections of the statute, which removed any doubt which the previous sections created upon this point, his Lordship concluded the judgment by saying: "The object of the Legislature in the different sections referred to seems to have been to give a legislative sanction to the practice of the Court of Admiralty of indirectly rewarding salvors for the preservation of human life by allowing the value of their services to be made the subject of a distinct estimate, but without intending to fix the responsibility of payment upon one class of owners of property involved in the common peril more than on another."

Now, it has been contended, as I have already observed, that these judgments are erroneous, and should be reconsidered, and would, perhaps, be reversed before another tribunal. I am not of that opinion myself, but I am clearly of the opinion that if I was, it would be improper in me to give a judgment in any way at variance with the decision of my predecessor and the Privy Council, and I decline to do so. It has been contended that there is a distinction between this case and The Fusilier—that in this case the cargo was saved afterwards by the owners, and no cargo at the time by the salvors, when the lives of these passengers were saved. I am unable to follow any distinction in principle between the two cases. The Fusilier I have before me, and the argument there, that it was not a salvage service, appears to me to be wholly untenable. The property here saved amounted to 40,000*l.* in specie. I think that the cargo so saved was liable under the statute to which I have referred, in accordance with the judgment to which I have adverted, and was liable to pay salvage remuneration to those who saved the lives, by whomsoever it was saved. I am of opinion, therefore, that the judgment in The Fusilier supports the present case.

It remains only to say what shall be the remuneration the court ought to award. The property is very large—40,000*l.*; and the services, though very effective, were not long or attended with much danger to the parties concerned. They lasted between three and four hours, and there is no doubt whatever that the lives of these persons would have been irrecoverably lost but for the exertions of these men. I have already spoken of the praise which they deserve in their hastening to save human life, and, therefore, I need not refer to that again. It has been said that they have received 75*l.* But, on looking at the affidavit, it appears it must be really considered as not paid so as to cover the amount payable as its proportion by the cargo, but as paid by the passengers themselves, from their natural desire to give some reward out of their own pocket to those who saved their lives. There are four boats, and I think I shall make a fair award if I allow 500*l.* to all the boats, and that is the judgment which I deliver.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, April 12. 1876.

THE VICTORIA.

Appeal—Security for costs—Arrest of ship—Bail bond—Supreme Court Rules, Order LVIII., rules 15, 16.

The Court of Appeal will not order security for costs of an appeal except under special circumstances. A plaintiff arresting a ship which is released on bail and against which he obtains a decree is not entitled to security for the costs of appeal, merely because the bail bond only covers the cost of the court below and not of the Court of Appeal. This was a cause instituted on behalf of the master of the Victoria against that vessel for his wages and disbursements. The ship was arrested and was subsequently released on ordinary bail bond being given by the defendant in the month of Sept. 1875. The cause was tried in Dec. 1875, and a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff and the question of appeal was referred to the registrar and merchants. On appeal, this decree the defendants appealed and obtained an order from the judge of the Admiralty staying proceedings pending the appeal of the rules of the Supreme Court Order 1 rule 16.

The plaintiff now applied to the Court of Appeal that the defendant might be ordered under Order LVIII., rule 15, to make or give a deposit security for costs.

MacLachlan, for the plaintiff.—The ship was released and the bail bond does not cover the cost of the appeal. It is the ordinary form before the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (2 c. 10), and consequently does not cover the cost of appeal despite sect. 33 of that Act. (The B. & L. 425). The Privy Council has in certain cases enforced distinct security for costs of an appeal. (Macpherson, P.C. Practice p. 156.)

E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants.

JAMES, L.J.—It must not be considered the general practice to require security for costs of an appeal. It will be required only in special circumstances, and such do not exist here. No form of bond covering the cost of an appeal has been shown to us, and the practice of the Privy Council seems clear that except in special circumstances security for costs is required. The same practice will be followed in this application dismissed with costs.

MELLISH, L.J. and BAGGALLAY, J.A. concurred.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, H. Aird.

Solicitors for the defendants, Parker and

Tuesday, May 16, 1876.

THE CITY OF BROOKLYN.

Collision—Speed—Steamship—Lights—Signal astern—Regulations.

When a night is so dark that a steamer cannot make out other vessels until within her own lights of them, she is not justified in running at a speed that she cannot then avoid causing collision with them.

A vessel is not bound to show a light or signal astern to a following vessel, unless there is apparent danger from such vessel.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice in an action brought by the owners of the barque, I. Mille, against the owners of the steamer, City of Brooklyn, to recover damages caused by a collision between the two vessels.

The statement of claim on behalf of the plaintiff was as follows:

1. Shortly before 4 a.m. of 7th Jan. 1876, the barque, I. Mille, of 376 tons register and tonnage, which some of the plaintiffs were the owners, was proceeding on a voyage from New York to Genoa, under the command of Guiseppi Burlando, her master, and a crew of hands, was about thirty-five miles distant from the Head of Kinsale, proceeding on a voyage.

[Ct. of App.]

THE CITY OF BROOKLYN.

[Ct. of App.]

apple to Queenstown for orders as to her port of discharge.

2. The wind at this time was about S.E. by E., the weather was cloudy but clear, and the I. Mills was under larer jib foretopmast stay-sail, foresail, lower foretop-sail, main upper and lower topsails, and mizen storm-sail close hauled on the starboard tack, heading N.E. by E., and making about three knots an hour, with a green light on the starboard side, and a red light on the port side, both duly exhibited and burning brightly, and a good look-out was being kept from on board her.

3. At such time the bright white light of a vessel, which proved to be the steamship City of Brooklyn, was seen at the distance of about three or four miles, and on the port quarter of the I. Mills. Shortly afterwards the green light of the City of Brooklyn was also seen, and the I. Mills was kept on her course close hauled to the wind on the starboard tack, in the expectation that the City of Brooklyn would keep out of her way. The City of Brooklyn, however, notwithstanding that the bell of the I. Mills was rung, and those on board the I. Mills loudly hailed the City of Brooklyn to keep away, ran into and struck the I. Mills on the port side about the main beam, and cut into her, and did her so much damage, that she sank shortly afterwards and three of her crew were drowned. The rest of the crew of the I. Mills succeeded in getting on board the City of Brooklyn, and were afterwards taken by her to Liverpool.

4. A good look-out was not kept on board the City of Brooklyn.

5. The City of Brooklyn improperly neglected to take in due time proper measures for keeping out of the way of the I. Mills, and improperly neglected to keep out of the way of the I. Mills.

6. The City of Brooklyn improperly neglected to comply with Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

The defendants' statement of defence was so far as material as follows:—

1. About 4.15 a.m. on the 7th Jan. 1876, the steamship City of Brooklyn, of 1978 tons register, 2911 tons gross measurement, of which the defendants were and are owners, whilst on a voyage from New York to Liverpool via Queenstown with a general cargo and passengers was about 25 miles east of the Fastnet.

2. The wind at such time was about south-east, a moderate breeze, the tide was ebb and of little force, the weather was cloudy and very dark, and the City of Brooklyn was under steam alone, proceeding at the rate of about ten knots and a half per hour. She had her proper masthead and side lights duly exhibited and burning brightly, and a good look-out was being kept on board her.

3. At such time the red light of the I. Mills was seen at the distance of about from one to two ship's lengths from the City of Brooklyn, and bearing about from half point to a point on her starboard bow. The engines of the City of Brooklyn were immediately stopped and reversed, and an order was given to put the helm hard-a-lee, but such order was immediately countermanded, and an order was given to hard-a-starboard, and the helm was starboarded, but the City of Brooklyn, with her starboard side of her stem came into collision with the port side of the I. Mills, about abreast of the fore-cabin, and the I. Mills shortly afterwards sank, and although every effort was made by the master and the crew of the City of Brooklyn to save the master and crew of the I. Mills, several of the crew were drowned.

4. Before the said red light of the I. Mills was seen, the relative positions of the two ships were such that the City of Brooklyn was coming up without any light of the I. Mills visible to those on board the City of Brooklyn, and owing to the darkness those on board the City of Brooklyn, although they kept a good look-out, were unable to discover the I. Mills until her said light was seen as aforesaid.

5. Those on board the I. Mills acted negligently and improperly by omitting to show a light or make a signal, or otherwise to take proper measures to warn those on board the City of Brooklyn of the presence and position of the I. Mills.

6. Those on board the I. Mills neglected to observe and comply with the provisions of Articles 19 and 20 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

7. The collision was so far as regards the City of Brooklyn the result of inevitable accident.

The plaintiffs joined issue on this statement of defence, and also demurred to so much of the 5th paragraph thereof as alleged that the I. Mills acted negligently and improperly by omitting to show a light, and said that the said paragraph was bad in law, because it was not the duty of the I. Mills to show a light other than the regulation lights.

Feb. 15.—Gainsford Bruce in support of the demurrer contended that the duty as to exhibiting lights and signals was prescribed by the Regulations for preventing Collisions at Sea, and that there are in such regulations no rule prescribing such a light or signal as that required by the defendants.

E. C. Clarkson contended that whether there was or was not such a duty depended upon the circumstances of each case. There might be circumstances where there was such a duty, and one of the questions of fact in the present was, whether such circumstances existed here. Hence the pleading was good.

The Earl Spencer, ante, p. 4; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 235; The Anglo-Indian, ante, p. 1; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 233

Gainsford Bruce in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—As the circumstances may be such as to bring the case within the ruling of the Privy Council in the cases cited, and may show a duty to exhibit a light or signal as alleged, the defendant is entitled to judgment on the demurrer with costs. The question of law as to the duty will arise when the facts have been heard.

Feb. 19.—The action came on for hearing.

Milward, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce for the plaintiffs.

Butt, Q.C., Clarkson, and Myburgh for the defendants.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of collision which happened shortly after four o'clock in the morning on 7th Jan. 1876, and I may observe, in passing, that it is satisfactory that a case may be brought into this court in such a short time after the accident happened. The direction of the wind is variously stated as S.E. by E. and S.E., and the weather, which is an important element in the decision of this case, is admitted on all hands to have been as follows:—There was an extremely dark night, in which lights were visible at the proper distance, but objects were not visible until within a shorter distance. The speed of both vessels is not contested in this case. There is no dispute that the City of Brooklyn was an overtaking vessel, and that the Italian barque was the vessel ahead. In my judgment, the rule of law which applies to this case is in the 17th Article of the Sailing Rules, which says, "Every vessel overtaking any other vessel, shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel. Here it may be proper to observe that the evidence fully establishes that the sailing vessel kept her course, and, further, that at the time when the sailing vessel was discerned by the steamer, no manœuvre on the part of the steamer could have prevented the collision, either by porting or starboarding.

Now, the defence is this, that the collision so far as regards the City of Brooklyn, was the result of inevitable accident. On that I have had a careful conference with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, who are satisfied that the accident cannot be properly described as inevitable. Disposing of that part of the defence, I come to another, in which the I. Mille is charged with acting negligently or improperly by not showing another light to warn those on board the City of Brooklyn of her presence. The first question which I have had to consider with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House is this, whether the Italian barque carrying the canvas that is specified—inner jib, foretopmast staysail, foressail, lower foretopsail, main upper and lower topsails, and mizen stormstail—ought to have been visible at a sufficient distance, that is, between 300 and 400 yards, by a good look out on board the City of Brooklyn. The Elder Brethren have brought to the solution of this question their own personal knowledge and experience of the distance at which vessels are visible in such a state of the weather as is proved in this case, and they are of opinion that the I. Mille ought to have been seen at a distance which would have prevented the collision. Unfortunately the starboard look-out, who is an important person in this case, has not been produced. It is proved that search has been made for him, but that he cannot be found, and his absence is an important circumstance. The elder brethren are of opinion that the barque could be seen from the fore-castle further off than from aft, and that she ought to have been visible in sufficient time to have enabled the steamer to have got out of her way. But I do not like to leave the case solely upon that issue.

The next question I have to put to them is whether the sailing vessel, seeing this green and white light—assuming it was her duty to exhibit some light or make some signal—was not justified in thinking that up to the last moment the steamer would pass clear of her to leeward. I think that she was so justified—that is, all along proceeding on the assumption that it was necessary for the sailing vessel to do some act by indicating her presence to the overtaking vessel.

The next question I have had to deal with is whether the speed of the steamer was or was not proper in the circumstances. Now she was going within four or five miles of the Irish coast, where the currents would be rapid, and she was going full speed, although it was so dark that she could not see another vessel ahead of her until she came absolutely alongside of her. Now in my opinion that speed, under the circumstances, was improper on the part of the City of Brooklyn, and that that has another bearing besides is proved in the result upon the facts of the case.

If it was the duty of the sailing vessel to give a signal to the vessel overtaking her at a time when she saw she could not pass her, she did make the attempt to do so, she caused the bell to be rung before the time of the collision, but this was for some reason or other never heard by any one on board the City of Brooklyn. The boatswain was also sent up to light the flare or flash light, but he was unable to do more than move about two or three lucifers, which did not take light, and he was then obliged to go away because the other vessel was advancing at a rate of about a quarter of a mile in a minute and a half, therefore the speed of the other vessel prevented the overtaken vessel from doing that which it is contended she ought to have done—i.e., making a signal to the other vessel. I am bound to say, as to the duty of the vessel ahead, that has been discussed in the cases of The Earl Spencer and The Anglo-Indian, and there is a decision of the Privy Council upon the point (ante, pp. 1, 4). Now their Lordships there say they are very far from saying that it is never the duty of a vessel ahead to look behind. There may undoubtedly be circumstances of an exceptional character which may throw upon the vessel ahead the duty of looking behind further than giving some signal, by way of a light or otherwise, to the vessel behind, whilst there are circumstances under which there is reason to suppose that the other vessel does not see the vessel in front, and where there is danger of collision. So far as the statute regulations are concerned, I went into the matter at considerable length in the case of The Earl Spencer (ubi sup.), and as far as they are concerned there is certainly no law binding upon the vessel ahead to exhibit a light astern, and if it had been the intention of the Legislature that she should be under that obligation, there are several rules in which one would expect to find an expression of that intention. But I am of opinion and the elder brethren agree with me, that in this case there are no exceptional circumstances which compelled this vessel to exhibit a stern light, at least at the time when she attempted to do so, and when the speed of the other vessel prevented her succeeding in the attempt.

Looking to all the circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that the City of Brooklyn is alone to blame for this collision, and I decree accordingly, with costs upon the higher scale. Execution stayed for a fortnight.

From this judgment the defendants appealed.

May 16.—The appeal came on for hearing before James, L.J., Baggallay, J.A., and Lush, J., and two nautical assessors.

Butt, Q.C., E. C. Clarkson, and Myburgh, for the appellants.—The night being clear there was no reason why the steamer should not go at full speed. To condemn a vessel for going fast under ordinary circumstances is to interfere with the convenience of commerce and passengers, and unless there is apparent danger there ought to be no restriction. But even if the steamer was going at too high a speed the barque contributed to the accident by not showing a proper light in time to warn the steamer. She must have known the steamer could not see her, and that she must be overtaken. There is nothing in the regulations expressly compelling such a course, but it is an ordinary seamanlike precaution which ought to have been taken in this case:

The Earl Spencer, ante, p. 4; 33 L. T. Rep. 111, 235;

The Anglo-Indian, ante, p. 1; 33 L. T. Rep. 111, 233;

The Saxonian, Lush. 410;

The Olivia, Lush. 497;

The John Fenwick, ante, vol. 1, p. 249, L. Rep. Adm. & Ecc. 500; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 332.

Milward, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce, for the respondents, were not called upon.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that we cannot come to any conclusion different from that to which the learned judge below has come, the conclusion being in accordance with the

[OF APP.]

THE TRANSIT.

[OF APP.]

a nautical assessors upon this matter, which is to a great extent a matter of nautical skill and common sense.

The learned judge was of opinion that the complaint of was going at a speed not to be justified, having regard to the state of the tide, the position of the coast, and the probability of there being other vessels coming in the night, and I am bound to say that however convenient it may be for commerce and travellers—never convenient it may be to be able to go to sea at eleven or twelve miles an hour—it is a speed which it does not seem to us to be suitable for a steamer like this to go at when near from the coast, and on a night so dark, relying to the evidence of their own witnesses, they could not see another vessel more than the length of a ship away. It is said a lookout on a night could not, with the steamer going at such a pace, have seen a vessel ahead in time to avoid her, and that consequently the steamer was not to have gone at such a pace.

It is said on the other hand, on behalf of the steamer, that if the other ship did see the steamer she ought to have shown a light. Unless we cannot suppose that any captain would wantonly neglect to take the necessary precautions to save his own life and the lives of his men, which would necessarily be at fault if such a steamer as this ran into their vessel. Therefore we must suppose that the captain made the best judgment he could, and did nothing that would help to avoid a collision. When he saw the danger, he did, apparently, all he could; he ordered the bell to be rung, but it was too late.

It is of opinion, therefore, that whatever may have occurred in other cases, where it was held to be the duty of a ship to warn another of the risk it was running, there were in this case no such instances as to show any neglect of duty on the part of the crew of the Italian ship, or that they did anything to justify our charging with contributory negligence. I am, upon the whole, of the same opinion as the court

SALLAY, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

MR. J.—I am also of the same opinion.

It is the rule of law, with regard to travelling by sea, that a ship is to be treated as if it were identical with the law of travelling on the land. No one on a dark night has a right to go at such a rate of speed as not to be able to stop in an accident if he happens to follow immediately in the wake of another, whether it be by sea or by land. I think that the rate of speed at which the vessel was proceeding was an unjustifiable rate for that vessel to run at on a dark night, when she could not discern another vessel until within her own length of sight.

As to contributory negligence, I do not think it is any necessity for a ship ahead to look out for ships that are behind her unless the danger is apparent. It is only when there is apparent danger that the necessity arises for the vessel to take the best they can for their own safety. The persons on board the first ship did so, but it was too late.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for plaintiff, T. Cooper.

Solicitors for the defendants, Gregory and Co., for Duness, Hill, and Dickinson, Liver-

May 17, 18, and 29, 1876.

THE TRANSIT.

Collision—Appeal—Facts—Reversing decision of court below—Lookout.

The Court of Appeal has great reluctance in reversing a decision of a judge of first instance where he has come to a conclusion of fact upon conflicting testimony and after hearing the witnesses, but where the court of first instance draws inferences from the facts proved before it, a decision founded upon such inferences will be reviewed, and if necessary reversed without great pressure by the Court of Appeal, if erroneous.

A steamship running through a roadstead should, in addition to her master on the bridge, carry a lookout man in the day time.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Admiralty Division in an action instituted on behalf of the owners of the steamship Glennibanta against the steamship Transit and her freight to recover damages occasioned by a collision between the two ships.

The plaintiffs' statement of claim in the court below was so far as material as follows:

1. Shortly before 1 p.m. on the 23rd Jan. 1876, the three-masted iron screw steamer Glennibanta, of 536 tons register, and ninety-nine-horse power, of which the plaintiffs were owners, whilst proceeding from London to the Tyne in ballast, had passed St. Nicholas' light-vessel for the purpose of entering and proceeding through Yarmouth Roads.

2. The wind at this time was about south-west, a light breeze, the weather was fine, and the tide was in the last quarter ebb and of the force of about half a knot per hour, and the Glennibanta, under steam and sail, was steering about north, and proceeding at the rate of about nine knots per hour.

3. At such time those on board the Glennibanta observed an approaching steamer under steam and sail (which proved to be the steamship Transit) proceeding against in this action) bearing about two points on the port bow of the Glennibanta, and at the distance of about one half to three quarters of a mile.

4. The helm of the Glennibanta was slightly ported, and she was kept on with a view to passing the Transit port side to port side. The Transit, instead of passing the Glennibanta on her port side as she should have done, starboarded her helm and caused danger of collision, and although the engines of the Glennibanta were immediately stopped and reversed, and her helm was starboarded, the Transit, with her starboard side abreast of the foremast, came into contact with the stem of the Glennibanta, and a great deal of damage was thereby done to the Glennibanta.

5. The Transit improperly neglected to take proper measures for passing the Glennibanta on her port side.

6. Those on board the Transit improperly starboarded the helm of the Transit.

7. Those on board the Transit did not duly observe and comply with the provisions of article 16 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

8. The said collision was occasioned by the negligent and improper navigation of the Transit.

9. The said collision was not occasioned by any negligence or default on the part of those on board the Glennibanta.

The defendants delivered a statement of defence and counter-claim which so far as material was as follows:

1. The Transit a screw steamship of 345 tons register and ninety-horse power with a crew of twenty-one hands left Grimsby about 2 a.m. of the 23rd Jan. 1876, with a general cargo bound for Dieppe.

2. Shortly before 1 a.m. of the same day the Transit in the course of her voyage was passing through Yarmouth Roads heading about S. by W. and keeping well over to the east side of the roads as is the practice with vessels southward bound. The wind was about S.W. The weather was fine. The tide was ebb about three knots an hour. The Transit under sail as well as steam

CT. OF APP.]

THE TRANSIT.

[CT.

was making about eight knots an hour. A good lookout was kept on board her.

3. In these circumstances those on board the Transit observed the steamship Glannibanta about a mile off right ahead and drawing on to their starboard bow under steam and sail, having signals flying and apparently heading towards the town of Great Yarmouth. The helm of the Transit was starboarded about two points and then steadied, and the Transit kept on, those on board her expecting the Glannibanta, to pass starboard side to starboard side. The Glannibanta, however, as she drew near ported her helm and caused danger of collision and notwithstanding that the engines of the Transit were stopped and reversed the Glannibanta came into collision with her striking her with the stem very violently on her starboard bow in the fore-rigging.

4. Save as hereinbefore appears the several allegations contained in the statement of claim are untrue.

5. A good lookout was not kept on board the Glannibanta.

6. The helm of the Glannibanta was improperly ported.

7. Those on board the Glannibanta improperly neglected or omitted to keep her on her course.

8. Those on board the Glannibanta improperly neglected or omitted to ease, stop, and reverse her engines.

9. The collision was occasioned by some or all of the matters and things alleged in the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th paragraphs hereof or otherwise by the default of the Glannibanta or those on board of her.

10. No blame in respect of the collision is attributable to the Transit or to any of those on board her.

The cause was heard in the court below on the 21st March 1876 before the judge (Sir R. Phillimore) and Trinity Masters; judgment was then given.

Milward, Q.C. and Clarkson, for the plaintiff.

Benjamin, Q.C., Phillimore, and Stubbs, for the defendants.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an important case of collision which happened about one o'clock in the middle of the day on the 23rd Jan. this year, in Yarmouth Roads somewhere between the South Elbow Buoy and the South-west Scroby Buoy off the Scroby Sands; the state of the weather was fine and clear and the tide was ebb. The vessels that came together in this collision were the three-masted iron screw steamship the Glannibanta, of 534 tons register, and ninety-nine horse power, the plaintiff in this suit, going from London to the Tyne in ballast, and the Transit, a screw steamer of 345 tons register, and ninety-horse power, with a crew of twenty-one hands, bound from Grimsby to Dieppe with a general cargo. The parts of the vessels which came into contact were the stem of the Glannibanta and the starboard side of the Transit, just abreast of the foremast.

The case has been very well argued on both sides, and the importance of it well deserved such an argument. I have carefully considered the arguments and the evidence with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, and it is with their entire concurrence that I pronounce the following judgment:

It appears that the Glannibanta, preceded (a very material fact in this case) by a steamer called the Paradox, came through Hewitt's Channel, and left the St. Nicholas light vessel on her port side and the Scroby S. Elbow Buoy on her starboard side. It is expedient in all these cases, if possible, to see what the natural and proper conduct of a vessel would be, before we consider the conduct she actually pursued. Now in this case the natural and proper conduct for the Glannibanta was to make a fair course under a starboard helm to the N.N.W., and to port when clear of the buoys, and alter her course as she plighted to N. or N. half E., and having to straighten down the roads, keeping to on her starboard hand. That is not denied been her natural course, but it has been and with very great power, that her fault that she went towards Yarmouth further necessary and proper and thereby brought board side open to the Transit, which, on starboard side, was justified in starboard; it is admitted that she did. Amid a conflict of evidence, we are of opinion that safely rely upon the testimony given by board the Paradox—by the two witnesses produced from that steamer—and according evidence the Transit passed the Paradox to port side. At that time the Glannibanta about a quarter of a mile astern, it had been a little more or little less, and had on the port quarter of the Paradox, a witness described it "on the edge wake" on a north course. It is clear Transit did not alter her helm until passed the Paradox, and therefore, not Glannibanta had straightened down, subsequently the Glannibanta must have been time on the Transit's port bow. It is that the Transit starboarded about the and the great debate before me has been effected that manœuvre.

Now for the reasons alleged it appears that she must have done so when the Glannibanta was on her port side, and that therefore she is to blame.

From this judgment the owners of the Glannibanta appealed, and the appeal came on for before James, L.J., Baggallay, J.A., and assisted by nautical assessors.

The facts and arguments are fully stated in the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

May 17 and 18.—Benjamin, Q.C., Phillimore, and Stubbs, for the appellants.

Milward, Q.C., Butt, Q.C., and Clarkson, respondents.

Cur. adv. May 29.—The judgment of the court. L.J., BAGGALLAY, J.A., and LUSH, J., assisted by two nautical assessors) was delivered by BAGGALLAY, J.A.—On the 23rd Jan. 1876, at 1 p.m., two iron screw steamships, the Glannibanta and the Transit, came into collision in Yarmouth Roads, and both vessels sustained considerable damage. The weather was fine and clear, the wind the S.W., blowing a light breeze, with no sea, the tide on the last quarter ebb, running to the westward. It does not appear that the roads were unusually crowded with vessels, and it is difficult to imagine a state of circumstances which, with the use of reasonable precaution, would have less likely to occur.

On the 25th Jan. an action for damages in respect of this collision was commenced in the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice by the owners of the Glannibanta, against the owners of the Transit, and was met by a claim for damages on the part of the latter.

The action came on for hearing before the judge of the Admiralty Division on the 21st March. On the latter day the judge decided that the Transit was alone to blame, and made the usual order for assessing tunity of seeing the witnesses and observing their demeanour, had come, on the balance of testimony, to a clear and decisive conclusion, the Judicial Committee would not be disposed to reverse such decision, except in cases of extreme and overwhelming pressure, and it was urged upon us that in the present case there was no such extreme and overwhelming pressure as should induce us to reverse the decision of the Admiralty as to the question of fact upon which its decision was based. Now we feel, as strongly as did the Lords of the Privy Council in the cases just referred to, the great weight that is due to the decision of a judge of first instance, whenever, in a conflict of testimony, the demeanour and manner of the witnesses who have been seen and heard by him are, as they were in the cases referred to, material elements in the consideration of the truthfulness of their statements.

But the parties to the cause are nevertheless entitled, as well on question of fact as on questions of law, to demand the decision of the Court of Appeal, and that court cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence, and drawing its own inferences and conclusions, though it should always bear in mind that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses, and should make due allowance in this respect.

In the present case, it does not appear from the judgment, nor is there any reason to suppose, that the learned judge at all proceeded upon the manner or demeanour of the witnesses; on the contrary, it would appear that his judgment in fact proceeded upon the inferences which he drew from the evidence before him, and which we have really the same means of considering that he had, and with this further advantage, that we have had his view of the inferences to be drawn from the evidence as well as the evidence itself made the subject of elaborate and able discussion on both sides.

Having given our best consideration to the evidence in this case, we are unable to arrive at the same conclusion as that arrived at by the learned judge of the Admiralty Division. It is quite true, as has been already stated that the evidence of the captain and helmsman of the Paradox is to the effect that in their opinion the Glannibanta ported her helm immediately after she had passed the lightship, and that such evidence is in accordance with the captain and helmsman of the Glannibanta, but it is in our opinion clear, from the circumstances to which we are about to advert, and to which the attention of the judge of the Admiralty Division does not appear to have been directed, that these witnesses must have been mistaken. The captain of the Glannibanta himself most distinctly states that he saw the Transit directly after he ported, and that she was then about half a mile or a little more from the Glannibanta; and this is supported by other persons who were on board the Glannibanta. Now, there is no dispute that the point at which the collision took place was upwards of a mile to the north of the lightship, though there is some slight difference of opinion as to the distance from Scroby Sands, and as the two vessels were approaching each other at about equal rates, the Transit must at the time when the Glannibanta passed the lightship have been at least a mile to the north of the point of collision, and at least two miles from the Glannibanta, and had the Glannibanta ported her helm immediately on passing the light the Transit, when first seen from the Glannibanta must have been at least two miles distant in of half a mile or three-quarters of a mile, most of the witnesses, except those who were on board the Paradox, agree in treating as about distance between the two ships when the Glannibanta straightened her course. If, however, contended by the defendants, the Glannibanta not port her helm until she had left the light more than half a mile behind her, she would have been when she ported about half a mile to quarters of a mile from the Transit, each about a quarter of a mile from the eventual point of collision.

Under these circumstances, having given our best consideration to all the evidence in the case, and having had the benefit of the advice of nautical assessors, by whom we have been assisted on the present occasion, we have arrived at the following conclusions, in which they all concur:

1. That the Glannibanta continued on her course for more than half a mile after she passed the lightship, whether or not she did so for the purpose of interchanging signals with the Transit, as suggested by the defendants, is immaterial for us to consider. The fact is proved by the evidence of the captain of the Glannibanta, and it follows from this.

2. That by keeping on this course she led on board the Transit to believe, and that she was justified in believing, that she was a starboard vessel, and would pass them starboard.

3. That, having regard to these circumstances, the Transit was fully justified in starboard when the Glannibanta was first seen from the deck, and that the Glannibanta was not justified in porting when in such close proximity to the Transit.

4. That the collision was occasioned by the improper porting of the Glannibanta, it being practically impossible to avoid a collision if the course of the Glannibanta had been changed.

In arriving at these conclusions, we are less dissenting from the view expressed by the captain and helmsman of the Paradox, upon which the Judge of the Admiralty Division relied, than we can well understand how in such a case persons desiring to speak with the most honesty and accuracy, may have been misled. There was nothing in the surrounding circumstances prior to the collision to direct the attention of the people on board the Paradox to the movements of the Transit and the Glannibanta, to induce them to watch such movements with particular nicety, and the want of such casual notices as were taken is excusable by the circumstance that the captain of the Paradox states that the Glannibanta, after she straightened her course, was a quarter of a mile astern of him, whilst his helmsman maintained a distance of 200 yards only, and the captain of the Glannibanta says he was as much as half a mile or nearly so, astern.

We cannot part with this case without expressing our surprise that there should have been no proper or sufficient look-out on board the Glannibanta, for had there been a proper look-out the Transit had been seen from the Glannibanta in such case she must have been kept

[CT. OF APP.]

THE ANNA.

[CT. OF APP.]

ported, we cannot for a moment suppose that that change of course would have been made. The captain of the Glannibanta, in his examination, stated that it was not a customary thing to keep a man on the look-out in the daytime on board ships belonging to his owners, and, on the occasion in question, until after she had ported, the captain was the only person on the look-out, and he was on the bridge, with his view forward limited by reason of the sails on his own ship to four points on the starboard bow. A very different course was pursued by the Transit, on board of which an efficient look-out was kept by her captain and mate on the bridge, and by a seaman well forward in the bows. We have only further to remark, that having regard to the fact that the Transit had a proper and sufficient look-out in every direction, the course pursued by her of starboarding when she first saw the Glannibanta would be quite inexplicable if the vessels had been approaching each other port side to port side, as contended for by the plaintiffs. It appears to us impossible to adopt the suggested explanation of the plaintiffs, that by crossing the bows of the Glannibanta the Transit might save a little distance in her course to the south, and that that was her object in starboarding. On the other hand, we can well understand that the Glannibanta, having no sufficient look-out, ported her helm in ignorance of the position of the Transit, and simply with the view of straightening her course down the roads.

The Transit was, in our opinion, very carefully and cautiously handled. The Glannibanta was carelessly and recklessly managed in changing her course in ignorance of the position of another vessel which was only half a mile off. It is possible, no doubt, that the careful ship may have blunderingly gone wrong, and that the careless ship may by accident have gone right, but the further proof on the latter is then very heavy, and the Glannibanta has certainly not discharged in this case.

It may be well to add, that having regard to the position of the Glannibanta and Paradox in passing the lightship, and their position when the Glannibanta sighted the Transit, the Glannibanta, the latter ship, must have lost instead of gaining ground, which can only be accounted for by the Transit having taken a straight and the other a vicious course. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the Glannibanta was alone to blame, and that, consequently, the appeal must be allowed, the order of the court below discharged, and the usual order of reference made for assessing the damage sustained by the Transit. The costs both of the court below and of the appeal must follow the result.

Judgment reversed.

Solicitors for the Transit, Pritchard and Sons.
Solicitors for the Glannibanta, Stokes, Saunders, and Co.

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Thursday, May 18, 1876.

THE ANNA.

Necessaries—Jurisdiction—Foreign ship—Colonial port.

The Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction to entertain an action brought for necessaries supplied to a foreign ship in a British Colonial port. The Wataga (Swab. 165) followed.

Where a master in a colonial port unable to procure or pay for necessaries otherwise draws a bill of exchange upon a firm of shipbrokers in this country who accept and pay the bill, such shipbrokers can proceed against the ship as for necessaries supplied in default of payment of the amount due by the shipowners.

The Onni (Lush. 154) followed.

This was an action in rem brought by Lloyd, Lowe, and Co., shipbrokers, of London, against the Norwegian vessel Anna, her owners intervening, to recover an amount alleged to be due to the plaintiffs as appeared by the following:

STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

1. The said barque or vessel is a Norwegian vessel belonging to the defendants, and arrived in the port of Liverpool, in the month of Dec. A.D., 1875.
2. The plaintiffs are shipbrokers, carrying on business in co-partnership, in London.
3. About the end of Oct. or beginning of Nov. A.D. 1875, the said vessel was lying at the port of Quebec, bound for some safe port on the West Coast of Great Britain.
4. The master of the said vessel was at Quebec aforesaid, then and there obliged to make certain necessary disbursements to the extent of 293l. 8s. 2d. for and on account of and for the use of the said vessel, and for the supply of necessaries thereto; and being himself without funds and without credit, procured the said sum of 293l. 8s. 2d. for the said necessaries, by means of a bill of exchange for the said amount then and there drawn by him upon the plaintiffs; and the said master thereupon advised the plaintiffs of the same by a letter, which was in the words and figures following:

"Quebec, 6th Nov. 1875.

Messrs. Lloyd, Lowe, and Co., London.

Dear Sirs,—I have this day taken the liberty to value on you at thirty days' sight for 293l. 8s. 2d. sterling—Two hundred and ninety-three pounds eight shillings and two-pence—in favour of Mr. Francois Gunn, of Quebec, being for the necessary disbursements of my vessel, the barque Anna of Christians, which I hope you will duly honour or presentation, and please charge to account of said vessel and owners. P. Hernandson, Esq., of Christians. Your obedient servant, H. W. HANSEN,

Master of the barque Anna."

P.S. The above amount is duly insured from Quebec to Liverpool. Policy enclosed.

5. The plaintiffs duly accepted and paid the said bill of exchange at maturity.

6. The said bill of exchange was accepted and paid by the plaintiffs as aforesaid in the necessary service of the said vessel as aforesaid, and upon the credit of the said vessel, and not on the personal credit of the said master; and the said sum of 293l. 8s. 2d. still remains wholly due and owing to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs claim:

1. Judgment for the said sum of 293l. 8s. 2d.
2. The condemnation of the said vessel and the defendants and their bail therein, and in the costs of this suit.
3. A reference, if necessary, of the claim of the plaintiffs to the registrar, assisted by assessors, to report the amount thereof.
4. Such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

To this statement the defendants demurred upon the grounds that a foreign ship cannot be made answerable for a claim in respect of necessaries supplied in a foreign port, and that the plaintiffs were, under the circumstances stated in the statement of claim, in no better position than the persons who supplied or advanced the alleged necessaries at Quebec aforesaid.

March 7. — Myburgh for the defendants in support of the demurrer. — If The Wataga (Swab. 165) is still to be considered as of binding authority, where it decided that necessaries supplied in a colonial port are within the jurisdiction, this point must be taken against me. But that decision can be supported upon the ground alone that the ship was upon the high seas at the time of the supply. Moreover, that decision is not consistent with Dr. Lushington's decisions in The Ocean (2 W. Rob. 368), and The India (12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 316; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 390), where it was held that the statute did not give jurisdiction over necessities supplied to a foreign ship in a foreign port. There is nothing in the act to show any distinction between a colonial and a foreign port, and all the argument in the judgment of The India (ubi sup.) covers colonial as well as foreign ports. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—No points for argument have been delivered. I consider that as this court now has demurrers before it, the practice prevailing in the Common Law Divisions should prevail here also, and that in all cases to be argued on demurrer, the points for argument should be delivered.] The second point is that there is no allegation in the statement of claim, that at the time the money advanced was expended for necessary supplies, the owners of the ship were without credit; thirdly, the plaintiffs accepted the bill of exchange on the personal credit of the owners of the ship, as appears by the master's letter set out. Hence there is no claim against the ship, the plaintiffs having elected to proceed against the owners.

OT. OF APP.]

THE ANNA.

[Cr.

E. C. Clarkson for the plaintiffs.—Since the decision in The Wataga (Swab. 165), acquiesced in since 1856, the Legislature has dealt with the whole question by the Admiralty Court Act 1861, (24 Vict. c. 10), and has not seen fit to enact anything with respect to necessities supplied to foreign ships in colonial ports. Hence it must be taken that the Legislature left the law as defined by this court intentionally as it then stood; secondly, the plaintiffs are at liberty to show the circumstances under which the necessities are supplied, and it is sufficient for them to allege in their statement of claim, that the supplies were necessary. The jurisdiction does not depend upon whether credit is given to the owner or to the ship. The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, gives jurisdiction independently of the question of credit. It must be presumed that the ship is liable, inasmuch as the necessities were for her use: (The Perla, Swab. 353.) He also referred to

The Ella A. Clark, B. & L., 32.

The Onni, L. Rep. 4 P. C. 161.

Myburgh in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a discussion which relates to the admissibility of a demurrer to a statement of claim.

The Norwegian vessel Anna arrived in the port of Liverpool in the month of December 1875, and the master, finding himself without funds, had carried on board goods to the amount of 293l. 8s. 2d. for the purpose of supplying necessities to the vessel, and had borrowed the money by means of a bill of exchange, which is in these words:

Quebec, 6th Nov. 1875.

Messrs. Lloyd, Lowe and Co., London.

Dear Sirs,—I have this day taken the liberty to draw on you at thirty days' sight for 293l. 8s. 2d. sterling (two hundred and ninety-three pounds eight shillings and two pence, in favour of Mr. Francis Gunn, of Quebec, being for the necessary disbursements of my vessel, the barque Anna, of Christiana, which I hope you will duly honour on presentation, and please charge to account of said vessel and owner, P. I Esq., of Christiana.—Your obedient servant,

H. W. HANSEN, Master of the barq

P.S.—The above amount is duly insured to Liverpool. Policy enclosed.

Now these points have been made in this demurrer, and it will be convenient the first point last, because it is one of the importance. The first of the two last is that it appears upon the statement of money which had been paid by the bill of had been expended in necessities, and tained on the captain's personal credit without funds ready. I am of opinion point is untenable. The third point is bill was accepted on the credit of th That depends on the construction in som of the letter I have read. It is said th no claim upon the ship, and that the the vessel supplied the necessities, a look only to the owners. Now in the fir is distinctly pleaded in the sixth article bill of exchange was accepted and pai plaintiffs for the necessary supplies of t and not on the personal credit of the ms is contended that this written docum receive any construction from the statet tained in the 6th paragraph. I am by certain that it would not be proper in th order to understand the letter to whic referred, to take into consideration rounding circumstances. But I do no necessary to place the rejection of the upon that ground. I consider the que was raised by my learned predecessor i of The Onni (Lush 154) is substantially t the point raised here to-day. In that case "I must now consider my jurisdiction governed by the 3rd and 4th of Vict. c. 6 That section merely says that the cour authorised to decide all cases for neces plied to any foreign ship or seagoing v to enforce payment thereof. It make tinction whether the necessities were on personal credit or not. I have held advance of money for the procuring of n is within the equitable construction of th Can the present case be considered as that kind? I can only judge by the int afforded me, and according to that aff master obtains the money to procure n by means of this bill, and the money so was duly expended for the benefit of the think in these circumstances I am ju allowing this claim."

In this case the money was obt means of a bill of exchange to provide n for the benefit of the ship. I am unab any substantial distinction on the matter the two cases. I consider that case, the a precedent for the court in the present

I have only to advert to the first poi in the discussion to which I referred, the question as to whether the court has a diction in the circumstances of this case cumstances of this case being bri Norwegian vessel has obtained neces lying in the port of Quebec, and the pl ship's brokers, bring this suit under th of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, which enacts th Court of Admiralty shall have jurisd all claims and demands whatever made for assistance to the Indian Government. The Secretary of State for India telegraphed to the Resident at Aden to send a gunboat to protect the property, if he thought it necessary. In accordance with these instructions, the Resident at Aden directed the Kwangtung to proceed to the assistance of the Woosung, giving Capt. Elton the instructions contained in the following letter:—

Sir,—I have the honour to annex for your information a note respecting the steamship Woosung, on the island of Kotama, and to request that you will proceed to the spot at full speed, after landing the relief detachment at Perim. You will notice the Woosung is said to be holed in several places, and to be full of water. If practicable, your stay at Kotama for salvage services should not exceed forty-eight hours, as your early return to Perim is desirable, to convey to Aden the released detachment of the 2nd Grenadiers, and other details. The Kwangtung can return to Kotama, if it should be considered advisable on the receipt of your report, but from the condition of the ship it seems doubtful whether much cargo can be saved.

The Kwangtung did proceed to the wreck, and rescued much of the cargo. Capt. Elton, however, declined to undertake the service except under an agreement, which was, after much discussion, signed by the master of the Woosung, by which the plaintiffs were to have half the proceeds of the property salvaged. This agreement was upheld by the learned Judge of the High Court of Admiralty (Sir R. Phillimore) and from his decree the owners the cargo appealed.

The facts and arguments are fully set out in the report of the case below: (ante, p. 50; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 394).

Sir H. James, Q.C., Cohen, Q.C., and Phillimore for the appellants.

Butt, Q.C., Herschell, Q.C., and Edwyn Jones for the respondents.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that, having regard to the admitted circumstances of the case, this agreement cannot stand as a final measure of the amount to be paid as a remuneration to the captain, officers, and crew of the ship Kwangtung.

The circumstances of the case seem very simple. The ship Woosung was wrecked on a reef in the Red Sea, and was in a position of imminent peril. The lives of the passengers and crew were saved, but as far as the ship itself is concerned, she was in such peril that she never was rescued, but went to pieces, and the cargo was got out of her when she was on the reef in this state of the most imminent peril. That being so, it so happened that in consequence of a passing ship coming up, a communication was made to London to certain persons interested in the ship and cargo, in the position in which she then was, and thereupon they wrote to the India Office, and the result of this communication was that the office gave directions to the proper authorities at Aden to send a ship to the rescue of the Woosung. A letter had been written by the agent of the Salvage Association, making offers to reimburse the expenditure for coal consumed on board the ship to be sent, and to make presents to her officers and crew.

It was contended by Sir Henry James that this amounted to an agreement which precluded any right to salvage afterwards. I do not think that it can be fairly said that it in any degree whatever interfered with what otherwise would be the right of the captain as to the salvaging of the ship. What was said was, "We will pay for coals, and make such present to the men as you may think fit."

But it cannot be contended that by accepting that offer the men were not to have what they otherwise would be entitled to. They retain their rights as salvors notwithstanding.

It was settled in the case of The Azalea (a) that, having regard to the peculiar position of the captain and officers in the Bombay Marine, they are to receive such salvage as would be allotted to the officers and crew of a merchant vessel in similar circumstances. That must be considered as a rule to be applicable to all these vessels, and the men would be entitled to remuneration, like the officers and crew of a merchant vessel.

That being so, the Resident at Aden directed Captain Elton to go to the ship. He is to go, according to the letter, to the spot, to the reef, and he is told, "the Woosung is said to be holed in several places, and to be full of water. If practicable, your stay at Kotama for salvage services should not exceed forty-eight hours, as your early return to Perim is desirable, to convey to Aden the released detachment of the 2nd Grenadiers, and other details. The Kwangtung can return to Kotama, if it should be considered advisable on receipt of your report, but from the condition of the ship, it seems doubtful whether much cargo can be saved."

Then the captain, under that direction, does proceed; and I think it was his duty to render his services—all reasonable services—upon the usual terms, that is to say, on receiving such a salvage reward as would be allotted to the officers and crew of a merchant vessel under similar circumstances. He was there to use his ship in a reasonable manner for the protection of the ship and cargo. When he states that he makes a bargain by which he is to give his services, and those of the officers and men of the ship, for the saving of the fittings of the disabled ship, and for the purpose of saving as much as possible of the cargo, in consideration for which salvage services one sum is to be given, and that is one-half of the salvaged property, this is an agreement which, upon the face of it, cannot stand. If it had been an agreement between the captains of ordinary merchant vessels, beyond all question it would have been for a salvage service to be performed by ship, captain, officers and crew—the price given being for the whole service to be performed. It appears that that alone would show that it would be entirely impossible that this can stand as the price to be paid for the service.

(a) June 8, 1875.—The Azalea.—This was a case of salvage instituted by the commanding officer, officers, and crew of the Dalhousie, another vessel belonging to the Bombay Marine, against the cargo of the steamer Azalea, which was also wrecked in the Red Sea on the 26th July 1873. The work was very great, owing to the decomposition of the cargo, which consisted of rice, and hides.

The value of the cargo salvaged was 22,400*l*.

Milward, Q.C., E. C. Clarkson, and Goldney for the plaintiffs.

Brett, Q.C. and Myburgh for the owners of cargo.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE said that although there was no danger from sea or weather, the service was of great merit, owing to the great heat and the state of the cargo, and the liability to sickness to which the men were exposed. It was, however, a circumstance that the court must bear in mind, that the Dalhousie, being a Government steamer, was not to be considered as a salvor, but, on the other hand, her officers and crew were entitled to salvage reward, and their services were to be remunerated, excluding the ship, and that the ship and crew were entitled to 4500*l*.

[Ct. of App.]

CARBO on WOSUNG.

[Ct. of App.]

of the officers and men alone. It is one entire consideration. We have no means of determining what proportion is to go to the ship, and what to the officers and crew. Therefore, we are driven to find some other mode of ascertaining how much the officers and crew are to receive.

Independently of that, I consider that it would be passim exempli if a person placed in the position in which Capt. Elton was, sent by the local Government to this ship to assist it, and not content to take the salvage upon the same footing as on merchant officers, could say to the master of the wrecked ship, "Well, if you do not agree to give me my terms, I will sail away, and leave you here to do whatever you can with such assistance as you can get, inadequate as it is; although I have been told to come here for the purpose of assisting you." It would be something odd if that could be said by any public servant who had a public duty to perform, and that he could say, "I will not render those services which I have been ordered to render with a public vessel, unless you come to my terms." Nobody, except under circumstances of enormous pressure, would think of agreeing to pay half the proceeds of the cargo.

For all these considerations, I think the agreement cannot stand, but that the captain and the crew are entitled to a full, adequate, and liberal remuneration, of which the amount will have to be considered.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

I concur with the Lord Justice in thinking Capt. Elton was in no way restricted as to what he might do under the circumstances in which he was placed, by what took place in London between the Salvage Association and the India Office.

But that brings me to the second question, which is the most important one in this case—namely, whether Capt. Elton was at liberty to enter into a salvage agreement such as that entered into by him on the 9th March. Now, he was at that time acting under the orders of the Bombay Government, commanding a ship belonging to her Majesty, and was sent to protect property which was in this reef in the Red Sea. Without actually deciding the question, I entertain a strong opinion that it was contrary to his duty as an officer in the service to enter into the agreement in question; and that is borne out by considering the 484th and 485th clauses of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854. The 484th section provides:—"In cases where any salvage services are rendered by any ship belonging to her Majesty, or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be allowed for any loss, damage, or risk thereby caused to such ship, or to the stores, tackle, or furniture thereof, or for the use of any stores or any other articles belonging to her Majesty supplied in order to effect such services, or for any expense or loss sustained by her Majesty by reason of such services." But the 485th section goes on to provide for a claim for salvage services rendered by the officers and crew of one of her Majesty's ships, and no proceedings are to be taken, and "no claim whatever on account of any salvage services rendered to any ship or cargo, or to any appurtenances of any ship, by the commander or crew, or part of the crew, of any of her Majesty's ships, shall be finally adjudicated upon, unless the consent of the Admiralty has first been obtained." That authorizes the officers and crew to commence proceedings in the Court of Admiralty. Then the 486th clause relates to the various steps to be taken when salvage services have been rendered by her Majesty's ships abroad; and it provides that any officer entering into any port with salvaged property, is to make a statement on oath, specifying so far he can the particulars of the property, and the place, condition, and circumstances in which the ship, cargo, and property was at the time when the services were rendered for which salvage is claimed; and the nature and duration of the services rendered, also the value of the property salvaged, and then the consular officer or a judge to fix the amount of the bond to be given by the owner or master of the salvaged property. That appears to negative the power of an officer commanding a ship belonging to her Majesty to enter into such an agreement as in question here. But it is unnecessary to decide that question, because it appears that the agreement was not one which could be allowed to stand.

Two cases have been referred to in the course of the argument. One is the case of The Helen and George (Swab. 368), where it was held, "That salvage would be upheld unless proved to be very exorbitant, or to have been obtained by compulsion or fraud." Therefore, the ground of exorbitancy of the agreement would be sufficient to set it aside. The case of The Inca (Swab. 370) laid down this rule, that a moiety of the property salvaged, with costs, is the maximum remuneration that should be allowed to the salvors. Here is, then, a moiety of the property saved not in the hands of those in whom it ought to be, but claimed for the services of the officers and crew, entirely omitting from consideration any services of the ship employed. That alone would be sufficient to show that this agreement was inequitable. But beyond this we have this fact, that at the same time services are rendered by a Greek trader, who was to receive one-third of the proceeds, and on whom was cast the obligation of providing boats and necessary appliances, and he had to pay a heavy price to secure the services of an interpreter. Therefore the case falls within that of The Helen and George, and the agreement cannot stand.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. Even if Capt. Elton could have entered into any agreement, the agreement before us is not one which could stand. As the learned judges have already delivered their judgments, it is not necessary for me to do more than say that I think that Capt. Elton was precluded from entering into any such agreement. He was an officer sent on that special service, and it was not competent for him to stipulate for payment. Although he was not an officer in the navy, he was not in the position of a merchant captain. The provisions on this subject contained in the Merchant Shipping Act are entirely consistent with public policy, and are such as the Court would act upon without express legislation upon the subject.

Appeal allowed.

Their Lordships having expressed their opinion that the compensation ought to be on a liberal scale, it was agreed between the counsel for the plaintiffs and defendants that the amount to be paid to the India Office for the master and crew of Kwanlung should be 6000*l.*; the respondents to have their costs in the court below, the appellants theirs in the Court of Appeal.

CT. OF APP.]

RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF AP.]

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Kearsey, Son, and Hawes.

Solicitors for defendants, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by R. H. APPELLET, and W. APPELTON, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, May 23, 1876.

RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

Harbours, &c., Clauses Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 74—Damage to pier by abandoned vessel—Liability of owner—Act of God.

Sect. 74 of the Harbours, &c., Clauses Act of 1847, enacts that "the owner of every vessel or float of timber shall be answerable to the undertakers for any damage done by such vessel or float of timber, or by any person employed about the same, to the harbour, dock, or pier, or the buoys or works connected therewith," &c.

Held, by the court (unanimously reversing the decision of the court below), that the damage contemplated by this section was damage such as human agency could avert, and not damage caused by the Act of God, or of the Queen's enemies.

Dennis v. Tovell (ante, Vol. 2, p. 402 n.; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 10; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 482; 42 L. J. 40, Q. B.) overruled.

The defendants' ship, The Natalian, whilst endeavouring to make the port of Sunderland for shelter during a storm, was driven ashore by the violence of the gale. The crew were saved and the ship necessarily abandoned. While the storm continued the vessel was driven by the force of the winds and waves against the pier of the plaintiffs and did damage to it to the amount of 1500l. The weather was such that nothing could be done by the crew or other persons to prevent the ship damaging the pier—in other words, the accident was inevitable.

The plaintiffs sought to make the defendants, the owners of the vessel, liable under sect. 74 of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27 (The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Act 1847).

The cause was originally tried at the Durham Summer Assizes 1873, before Quain, J., and a special jury, when a verdict was entered for the plaintiffs, and leave reserved for the defendants to move to have the verdict entered for them on the ground that the damage was solely the result of the storm.

The Queen's Bench Division, on the authority of Dennis v. Tovell (ubi sup.) discharged the rule.

Against this decision the defendants appealed.

Gorst, Q.C. and Greenhow (with them the Attorney-General, Sir J. Holker, Q.C.), argued for the appellants.—This case is distinguishable from Dennis v. Tovell (ubi sup.). In that case there were still some of the crew on board. Here the ship was abandoned. If we make no exception the defendants might be liable for acts arising from the clear negligence of the plaintiff, or, again, in the case of salvors bringing in the ship, must the owner still be held liable for their negligence? The latter part of the section shows that some exception was contemplated. The law compels the employment of a pilot—here the owner is compelled by the act of God. This court is not bound by the decision in Dennis v. Tovell (ubi sup.).

Herschell, Q.C. and H. Shield (with them C. Russell, Q.C.), contra.—The first part of the section is general, and limited in no way—it starts with an absolute rule. The damage must fall somewhere; it should rather fall on the person whose property has done the damage, than on a person whose property has suffered the injury. It is somewhat dangerous to insert words into an Act of Parliament. Probably, by excluding the owner's liability when there was a plot on board, the Legislature showed they intended to include all other cases. [MELLISH, L.J.—When the law imposes a duty does it not always except what happens by the act of God or the Queen's enemies? The terms of the law are precise and plain. In either case an innocent party must suffer.

JESSEL, M.R.—No doubt there are difficulties attending any proper construction of the section the meaning of which we are called upon to decide. It is equally indubitable that a mere literal construction would, on a consideration of the nature and objects of the statute, lead one to the conclusion that in every case the owner of the vessel was liable for any damage done by the vessel to the harbour, dock, or pier. But the conclusions to which such a construction would lead are so startling that I think we must consider that they could not have been in the contemplation of the Legislature.

The first proposition is this: that if a vessel is driven by stress of weather without the fault of anyone, and is shipwrecked against the pier, the unfortunate owner of the vessel must not only lose his vessel by shipwreck, but must also pay the damage done to the pier. It is something like the hospitality which in the long past was shown to vessels when they had the misfortune to be wrecked on the coast. That would be a very startling conclusion to arrive at; but the matter does not stop there, because, if the vessel were driven against the pier by the undertakers themselves, so that it was their wrongful act which caused the vessel to be driven against the pier, the damage would still be done by such vessel. Again, a literal construction would lead to this result—that the person who did the act might make the person who was wholly innocent pay for the damage done by such wrongful act. There are many other cases which might be put. One was put in argument perhaps not so probable as the first I have suggested, but perhaps not more improbable than the second, the vessel might be taken by the Queen's enemies, and before condemnation be used either as a battering ram or otherwise against the pier, and then, being recaptured, the unfortunate owner is whom the title would reveal would be liable for damage done to the pier by the Queen's enemies. A great number of other cases equally startling might be put as the result of construing the section literally. If that leads to so absurd and revolting a conclusion, then I think it is the duty of a court when construing the section to give what they may consider a fair interpretation. In the first place on reading the section we find that it contains a limitation—there is a proviso at the end of the section—"provided always that nothing herein contained shall extend to impose any liability for any such damage upon the owner of any vessel which shall at the time when r ge is caused be in charge of a duly licensed whom such owner or master is bound by law employ and put his vessel in charge of." The n, which appears tolerably obvious to my , for that proviso is this—the owner is com- i by law to put the vessel in charge of the and he ought not to be liable for the acts of pilot when the State takes the charge of the l from him and puts it into the hands of body else. The pilot may be liable, but the is only liable for negligence, so that if in the I put of storm or tempest—or as we lawyers it, by the act of God—the vessel is driven at the pier, the loss in that case would fall the pier owners. Therefore there is one case ick, at any rate, the pier owners are to take hance, which every owner of a pier must know result from the action of the weather, of ge in the same way as he might be damaged thunderstorm, or by any other accident, dently of any vessel being concerned in g the damage. It appears to me, therefore, ng from that proviso, the Legislature did not d to make the owner always liable where the er happened from causes entirely beyond his ol.

. OF APP.]

RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

efore we are driven back on the familiar m of law—"That where there is a duty im- l or a liability incurred, as a general rule, is no such duty required to be performed, no such liability required to be made good e the event happens through the act of God e Queen's enemies." Considering that that a general rule of law, and looking at the al object and purview of this Act of Parlia- , and considering the exceptions I have men- d, I think we may well come to the conclusion the act of God and the Queen's enemies were ntended to be comprised within the first s of the section, and consequently, in this the defendants ought not to be liable. erefore, I think the decision of the court r must be reversed.

LLY, C.B.—I entirely agree with Mr. Her- l in the argument he has urged that we are o disregard the express terms of an Act of ament because their literal construction does provide against a possible case of incon- ce or even of injustice. But there are certain iples of law which, though not expressed r in the common law or in the judgments of s, or in the language of Acts of Parliament, heless must be held to qualify all that may rom judges in expounding the common law ll that is to be found throughout the statutes s various Acts of Parliament. Among those iples and maxims is this—that no man can be erable, unless by express contract, for any ief or injury occasioned to another by the f God, and the justice of that maxim, and that s apply to all cases, except where by express act it is otherwise provided, is so clear I think we ought to apply it to the nt case, and though at first sight the Act s to provide that the owner of the vessel be liable when it comes in contact with pier, we must qualify that provision by lucing into it the maxim of the law that no is to be answerable for the act of God. I that is implied in the Act of Parliament, re cannot hold the defendant liable here.

t I must say upon a technical consideration of the language of the Act, I go further, and think that reading the whole of it together, it contemplated the case of a vessel or float of timber which was in charge of some person or persons. The words are: "The owner of any vessel or float of timber shall be answerable to the undertakers for any damage done by such vessel or float of timber, or by any person employed about the same to any harbour, dock, or pier, or the quays or wharves connected therewith"—if it had stopped there, no doubt the provision would have been general, absolute, and imperative; but it does not, there is a comma in the Act of Parliament after the word "therewith," and the section proceeds—"the master or person having the charge of such vessel or float," that is, continuing the same sentence, and, therefore, seems to imply that the sentence refers to a vessel of which some master or person has the charge; and then it goes on to say: "The master or person having the charge of such vessel or float of timber, through whose wilful act or negligence any such damage is done, shall also be liable to make good the same, and the undertakers may detain any such vessel or float of timber until sufficient security has been given for the amount of damage done by the same." Then what is the meaning of the word "also?" It is to superadd to the liability of the master or person by whose wilful act or negligence the mischief is occasioned—the liability there enacted by the statute. It appears to me that it is a reasonable construction of the statute, even apart from the implication to which the Master of the Rolls has alluded (and in whose observations I entirely concur), as to anything arising from the act of God. In addition to that, I think upon the reasonable construction of the statute itself the defendants cannot be held liable.

I would only observe in regard to what has fallen from the Master of the Rolls, that it is clear it never was the intention of the Legislature to make the owner liable, except in the character of owner, for anything for which another is made expressly responsible, and which takes the power out of the owner's hands to prevent the act, whatever it may be, which may occasion the mischief. If it had been intended by the Legislature that from whatever cause, whether through the wilful act or negligence of the master or other persons, the pier had been injured, yet nevertheless the owner should be liable, they would never have introduced into the same section the provision that where there is a pilot whom the owner is bound to employ who takes the management of the vessel out of his hands, then he shall be no longer liable. It is to be observed upon this question, and that fortifies the construction which I must say, speaking for myself, I put upon the section taking it altogether, though this section exonerates the owner, it does not exonerate the master or any other person through whose wilful act or negligence the mischief is occasioned. It says the owner shall be liable where either the master or person in charge of the vessel, by wilful act or negligence, occasions the mischief to the pier, or runs the vessel against the pier, save only in the case of the pilot; but it also goes on to provide, and that is the principal object of that part of the section, that in addition to the liability of the owner, which no doubt is specially enacted, the individual who is the wrongdoer and who occasions the mischief, in question, whether the master or the person in charge, who is the real origin of the mischief, shall be likewise liable as well as the owner.

CT. OF APP.]

RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[CT.

I think, therefore, on all these grounds, the defendants are not liable, and consequently the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

I think, taking the language of the section, it clearly was the intention of the Legislature to extend the liability of the owners of vessels in favour of the owners of piers and harbours, beyond the liability which is imposed on them by common law; because if that is not the intention it is not easy to see the objects of the section at all. Looking at the pointed language in which negligence is brought in, or "wilful act," and looking to the fact that the section goes on to speak of the master or the person having the charge of the vessel, it seems to show clearly that the owner is intended to be liable even in the case where neither the owner nor the crew had anything to do with it. But the question arises, because we may decide that the owner may be made liable where it is not proved that he or the master was guilty of negligence, are we bound to hold that in every case whatever where the vessel physically damages the wall, the owner is to be liable? I am of opinion the statute only contemplates the case where either directly or indirectly, through the act of man, the vessel is caused in some way or other to run against the pier. It is quite consistent with our law, that in certain cases a person may be made liable as insurer against the acts of all the men whom he may have under his control. And many examples of that may be put; but although that is the case with regard to the act of man, the act of God is in point of law opposed to that which may be said to be the act of man, and the act of God does not impose any liability upon anybody. Although, of course, the Legislature are not bound by any such rule, and may make a person liable for what is the consequence of the act of God if the Legislature so pleased, yet, in construing the words of the Act of Parliament, we are justified in assuming that the Legislature did not intend going against the ordinary rules of law, unless the language they have used obliges the court to come to the conclusion that they did so intend.

Then the question is, looking at the whole of the section, did the Legislature intend to make the owner of the ship liable only for the act of man, or did they intend to make him liable for the act of God, or where without his own fault, or the fault of anybody whatever, but through the violence of nature the vessel has been taken against the pier? Looking at it so, without going through the words of the section again, it appears to me that I am bound to agree with the remarks which have been made by the Master of the Rolls and by the Lord Chief Baron, and that the section points to something that is done by the act of man, or to the act of the person in charge; it looks as though the Legislature considered somehow or other through the act of man damage might be done to the pier, and then they say, to get the owner of the pier out of the difficulty of having to prove that it was owing to some particular person's negligence, and that that person was the servant of the owner, they say he shall be liable; but if it was the consequence of the negligence of somebody else, that person is not discharged, but you have your remedy. Then they make one exception to that in the case of the pilot. They say, if a pilot is in charge of the vessel, even although it may be the owner will not be liable. I do not think it was intended by the Legislature to put upon the owner the absolute liability for damages caused by the ship being driven against the pier, as she is really upon the high seas, and the vessel is driven from outside the harbour by the winds and waves against the pier; therefore, I agree that the judgment should be reversed.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

No doubt, taking the words of sect. 74, it is possible to hold that they include an absolute liability on the part of the owner of the vessel to the owner. The words are strong, intelligible, grammatical; but I am of opinion that, in the final words of the section, some qualification should be put on those words, not by introducing new words into the Act of Parliament, or such a clause to exist in it which does not exist in the law, but by qualifying those words by well known principles of law which must be taken to govern the Act of Parliament. I apprehend that no principle of law better established than that in every Act of Parliament words are to be construed to impose a liability for acts done, upon individuals, if those acts are done by individuals, or not caused by the negligence of a party or servants, but are acts which are substantially caused by a superior power, such as the law calls the act of God. In this case there can be no doubt, from the evidence, that the damage was occasioned by the vessel was not the result of neglect on the part of the owner, or on the part of any person having charge of the vessel, but was the effect of the violence of the winds and waves overcoming all control on the part of the owner or owner of the vessel, and forcing the vessel against the pier. Under these circumstances, I apprehend, upon the general principle that every statute is to be so construed as to leave untouched a principle of common law which applies to all similar cases, we are bound to hold, and ought not to hold in this case, that the damage was done by the vessel within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, but that, on the other hand, it was damage that was occasioned by the act of God, and, therefore, no action lies.

With regard to the other words of the section, I think a strong argument arises from the fact that the section contemplates the punishment of a person who has had charge of the vessel. I do not myself go so far as to think that there might not be cases where the owner of the vessel would be liable, if no person was in charge. If there was a person appointed, although not on board, but who was to have been controlling the vessel, and his negligence the accident is occasioned, then the section would apply. Therefore, I think that qualification on the proposition that it be the act of man. I think this section excludes the exception of the act of God, in my opinion, was the sole cause of the damage here; and, so thinking, I am of opinion that the defendants are not responsible.

POLLOCK, B.—I am of the same opinion. I think the process of reasoning by which I have arrived at that conclusion is not the one adopted by the other members of the court.

constitution of the association. So I must take it that they effected their insurance with a full knowledge of the rules: they must have had notice. That being so, if they had such notice, they must have had notice of the limited powers of the agents to enter into a contract which was beyond the scope of their authority. The policy was void on that ground alone wholly independently of the objections founded on the statute. The result, therefore, is that there is nothing binding on the association. Therefore the premium was paid for nothing. That is so far clear, and nothing more was done.

Then it is said that the premiums were paid to Jackson and Sheppard as managers, who were not entitled to receive the premiums, and consequently that there is an individual liability on the members. But this cannot be shown. The association was a shifting number of persons; nobody knew of whom it consisted. It varied as to its members every year in form, every day in fact. I do not know whether there was even a common council. The premiums were received by Jackson and Sheppard. There was no evidence in the winding-up that there ever was a common authority granted to Jackson and Sheppard.

Besides all this there is another difficulty. It is not quite true that there is a total failure of consideration. They had the personal security of the managers. If the policies had been valid, and the managers had themselves failed, the arrangement made was this—the managers were empowered to draw on each of the other members for contribution. The premiums were a personal debt to the managers. There is here the machinery of a quasi partnership. The present applicants were as much responsible for an insolvent manager as those who were members of the association. It is quite possible that if the policy had been a legal one, and the managers had ceased to pay, and the members were able to pay, that I could have made the members pay—that is, if the association had been legal and the members were liable to pay the manager. In that case the applicants might, through a court of equity, have obtained payment. There is no doubt that Jackson and Sheppard were liable to pay, and there is equally no doubt that if they had been partially insolvent, the present applicants would have been entitled to be paid the full amount of the dividend declared on their estate. De Winton and Co. got a security, which was valuable in this sense, and in that sense there is no total failure of consideration.

The present application must be refused, but as this is a representative case, the costs will be allowed.

Solicitors: Hilbery; W. W. Wynne; Roberts and Barlow; Webb, Stock, and Burt.

(Before Vice-Chancellor BACON).

Reported by H. L. FRASER, F. GOULD, and W. COWELL DAVIES, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

March 6 and 11, and April 6, 1876.

BARING v. STANTON.

Principal and agent—General agent for remuneration—Discount on insurances—Agent's right to retain as against principal—Custom of London merchants—Agency revoked on one insurance—

Effect of on agent's right to charge commission for collecting policy moneys.

S., a shipowner, employed B. and Co., merchants as his general agents at a remuneration, transacted all his business through them. Part of the business was the insurance of S.'s ships which was effected by B. and Co., who receive commission of 2½ per cent. for collecting the insurance moneys on lost ships.

In 1872 a ship was lost, and S. demanded of B. and Co. the policies in order that he might collect the insurance moneys himself. B. and Co. although they had no lien or claim on the ship refused to give up the policies, and collected policy moneys themselves, charging S. with 2½ per cent. commission for so doing.

On a bill by B. and Co. against S., to assert a lien on certain ships, and for an account:

Held, that in taking the accounts, B. and Co. were entitled to retain for themselves the 10 per cent. discount allowed them by underwriters in respect of insurances effected by them for S.

Held, also, that as the agency of B. and Co. in respect of the lost ship had been revoked, they had no right to withhold the policies, and were entitled to charge S. with the usual commission for collecting the policy moneys.

The defendant, George Stanton, was a shipowner and from the year 1861 to the year 1872 kept current account with the plaintiffs, Baring Brothers and Company, a firm of bankers and merchants, through whom he transacted all his business.

The course of business between the defendant and the plaintiffs in respect of the current account was, that they charged interest on debit transactions at the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum, and allowed interest at the rate of 4l. per cent. per annum on all credit transactions, and charged also a commission of 1l. per cent. on the amount of what was called the "balance of the account"—that is to say, that side of the account which showed the largest amount of transactions. They also obtained an advantage of 15l. per cent. on all premiums for insurance, and charged a separate commission of 2½l. per cent. for collecting moneys payable for losses and policies.

In May 1872, the plaintiffs filed their bill against the defendant, seeking to assert a lien on certain ships of the defendant for the balance due to them from him on his account current, and for consequential relief.

On the 24th Feb. 1875, a decree was made in the plaintiffs' favour, which directed an account to be taken of what was due to them for principal and interest. Under this order the plaintiffs came in two accounts, one showing the current account from the year 1861 to the year 1871, the other showing the balance due from the defendant. Upon proceeding to take these accounts, two questions arose, first, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to retain the discount of 10l. per cent. allowed to them by the companies with whom insurances were effected; secondly, whether they were entitled to charge the defendant with a sum of 525l. for commission on receiving the insurance moneys of the Knightbridge, a ship which was never mortgaged to the plaintiffs.

As to the first point, the plaintiffs asserted that they were entitled to retain the discount in accordance with the well settled custom

AM. DIV.]

BARING v. STANTON.

[CHAN. DIV.]

ants. The defendant, however, denied that was any such custom.

to the second point, the facts were as follows : on 24th Jan. 1870, the defendant received a letter informing him of the destruction by fire of the ship Knightsbridge, which was insured with heretofore for 21,000*l*. The policies on this ship were in the hands of the plaintiffs on the defendant's account. The same day the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs the following letter :

Gentlemen,—The policies on the ship Knightsbridge have been refused to be handed over to me this morning by your Mr. Theobald, with a reply that what I require I had better inform you by letter, I therefore say that the ship Knightsbridge having been destroyed by fire at sea it is necessary for me to give notice of abandonment to the respective underwriters for this purpose may I ask you to be good enough to them to be handed over to the bearer, as no time is to be lost.—Your obedient servant,

GEO. STANTON.

On the same day the plaintiffs wrote to the defendant the following reply :

—In reply to your letter of this date we beg to say that the insurance on the Knightsbridge was effected in our name, and in our name we will give the requisite notice of abandonment to the respective underwriters.—Your obedient servants, BARING BROTHERS & CO.

In answer to the last-mentioned letter the defendant, on the 25th Jan. 1870, wrote as follows : Gentlemen,—I am this morning in receipt of your letter of yesterday's date as to the insurance on the Knightsbridge. I reply, I beg to repeat my request for the policies and to pay you the premiums in respect of the same. The plaintiffs did not give up the policies, but they themselves collected the insurance moneys and repaid their usual commission for so doing.

On the 10th Feb. 1876, the plaintiffs took out a writ, now adjourned into court, to the effect (1) in taking the accounts directed by the decree the plaintiffs might be allowed the full amounts due to the defendant in the accounts they had kept in for insurances on the defendants' ships, for freights, or ship's stores, or disbursements, without giving credit to the defendant for the amount received by or allowed to them by underwriters in respect of such insurances as claimed by the defendant.

That the plaintiffs might be allowed to have as their own moneys the sum of 525*l*., being the difference between the sum of 21,000*l*. (the sum for which the ship, the Knightsbridge, was insured by the plaintiffs), and the sum of 20,475*l*. (the sum for which credit was given by the plaintiffs as mentioned in their claim for the total value of the same ship), which sum of 525*l*. was received and retained by them as their commission at the rate of 2*l*. 10*s*. per 100*l*. for collecting the moneys payable for such loss, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

On the first point, Q.C. and J. Kaye, in support of the sum.—On the first point they relied on Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe (ante, 2, p. 298; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 661; L. Rep. App. 525). They also cited Mos v. Wickham, 14 C. B., N. S., 435, 460; Over v. Butcher, 10 B. & C. 329.

On the second point, they contended that as the insurance had been effected by the plaintiffs, not at the request of the defendant, but on their own responsibility and with a view to protect their own interests, they were entitled to collect the insurance money and charge their commission.

Kay, Q.C. and Caldecott, for the defendant.—Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe (sup.) does not apply to this case at all. The distinction is, that the defendant in that case was employed as an insurance broker and nothing else; here the plaintiffs are general agents as merchants and not simply insurance brokers. They are general agents on terms of special remuneration, which does not include the right to charge specially as insurance brokers. Any profit, therefore, which they made over and above their commission as agents they must account for to their principal :

Turnbull v. Garden, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218; 38 L. J. 331, Ch.;

Queen of Spain v. Parr, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 555; 39 L. J. 73, Ch.;

Williams v. Stevens, L. Rep. 1 P. C. 352.

As to the second point. The plaintiffs had no interest in the ship and no claim whatever on the policies except for the premiums they had paid, and these the defendant offered to repay them. Neither was the defendant bound to the plaintiffs to employ them as his agents in any special manner. When, therefore, he demanded the policies on the Knightsbridge, there was a revocation of their authority as agents in this particular transaction, which in point of law they could not resist. Therefore, as they refused to comply with his demand, and insisted on collecting the policy moneys themselves, they are not entitled to charge him with the usual commission.

Cotton, Q.C., in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Upon the first point the case is conclusively covered by the decision in Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe (sup.), which makes it impossible for me to adhere to any opinion adverse to that decision. Lord Justice James there says (p. 300) : "Whether you call him a broker or not, the person who is the agent for the merchant or anybody else, by a well established practice obtains the insurances, and receives a discount of 5 per cent., which he puts into his own pocket. He is paid by the underwriter instead of by his principal. And then, by a practice quite as well known, recognised by everybody connected with the business, recognised by the courts of law of this country, referred to over and over again, there is another thing—there is a gratuity which the broker receives upon the settlement of the accounts, being 12 per cent. upon the balance, if the balance should happen to be a favourable one, that is, if the underwriter finds it to be a profitable account he gives 12 per cent. upon it to the broker who brought the business to him. It is not, as I gather, upon the particular transaction, but it is upon the whole result of transactions which the broker has introduced to the particular underwriter, and is calculated upon all the business during the whole year. That is the established remuneration which a broker receives for effecting that business, and in my opinion that is as right a thing as the 5 per cent." Then the evidence of the plaintiffs, although it does not conclusively establish the custom for which they contend, yet it proves the system on which they carried on their business. I cannot, therefore, in the face of that evidence and of the decision in Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe, come to any other conclusion than that the plaintiffs are entitled to the discount which they claim.

As to the second point, that also, in my opinion, is abundantly clear. I quite agree that the plaintiffs were general agents of the defendant, and that unless their authority was revoked they were entitled to carry on the transaction to a conclusion. The defendant, however, was not bound to them by any special agreement, and he was therefore entitled to revoke their authority in whole or in part. True, they might have refused to continue to act as his agents altogether when he demanded back the policies, unless he permitted them to collect the insurance money. They did not do this, however, but insisted in collecting the money, and paid themselves a commission. In my opinion that was an unreasonable and unlawful claim on their part. In my opinion, the defendant had a right to say, "don't you receive that insurance money; I am ready to receive it myself." They choose, however, to go on and collect it perforce, but that did not give them the right to receive that which the defendant would have received himself.

Ex. Div.]

COHEN v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

[1]

The defendant, therefore, is right on the second point and wrong on the first. I make no order as to costs.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Markby, Tarry, and Stewart.

Solicitors for defendants, Shum, Crossman, and Crossman.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Reported by H. LEIGH and H. F. DICKENS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Jan. 20 and 21, 1876.

(Before BRAMWELL, AMPLETT, and HUDDLESTON, BB.)

COHEN v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Carrier—Railway company—Carriers by rail and steam vessel—Passengers' luggage—Liability for loss of—Special contract—Signature of by passengers—Conditions limiting liability.

The luggage of a passenger by railway comes within sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), fixing the liability of railway companies for the loss of or injury to "any articles, goods, or things in the receiving, forwarding, or delivering thereof," and no condition therefore limiting the company's liability in respect of such luggage is binding, unless it be a "just and reasonable one," and be embodied in a special contract, signed by the passengers or the person delivering such luggage to the company for carriage.

By sect. 16 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act is incorporated, and its provisions extended and made applicable to luggage conveyed by railway companies on board steam vessels used by them for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports.
Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (19 L. T. Rep. N.S. 302) discussed and distinguished.

By the first count of his declaration the plaintiff charged that the defendants were carriers of passengers and their luggage by sea from Boulogne, in the Republic of France, to Folkestone, and thence by land from Folkestone to London; and in consideration that the plaintiff caused his wife to become and be a passenger, to be carried, with luggage, by sea from Boulogne to Folkestone, and thence by land from Folkestone to aforesaid, for reward then paid by the plaintiff to the defendants in that behalf, the plaintiff promised the plaintiff to use all due and careful care in so carrying the plaintiff's wife and her luggage; and all conditions were fulfilled in the times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the defendants perform their said promise, yet the defendants did not use due and careful care in carrying the said luggage, but by negligence of the defendants, while the said luggage was being carried by them by sea from Boulogne to Folkestone, a certain trunk, containing apparel of the plaintiff's wife, and other articles belonging to the plaintiff, being a part of the plaintiff's luggage, fell into the sea, whereby the said trunk and the contents thereof, were greatly injured, and the plaintiff suffered damage to the plaintiff.

By the second count the declaration charged that the defendants were carriers of passengers and their luggage, as in the first count mentioned, for reward to the defendants, and the defendant at the request of the plaintiff, received the plaintiff's wife as a passenger, with her luggage, including the trunk in the first count mentioned, to be by them, as such carriers, safely and securely carried by sea from Boulogne to Folkestone, and thence by land from Folkestone to London, for reward then paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, yet the defendants did not safely and securely carry the said trunk by sea from Boulogne to Folkestone, but while the said trunk was being carried by them as aforesaid, it fell into the sea and was injured, and the plaintiff suffered damage in the first count mentioned, to the plaintiff claims 100*l.*

For a fifth plea (amongst others), to the effect of the declaration the defendants say, that the plaintiff is a railway company incorporated for the carriage of passengers with their luggage within the United Kingdom, and upon lines of railways therein, and that Boulogne in the declaration mentioned is a place or town in the Republic of France, and beyond the extent of the defendant's lines of railway; and that the said damage to the plaintiff's luggage in the declaration mentioned, did happen or occur whilst the said luggage was being carried or conveyed on the defendants' line of railway; and that the plaintiff caused his wife and her luggage to be received by the defendants, as the same were received by the defendant to be carried as in the declaration mentioned; under a special contract between the plaintiff's wife, as agent for the plaintiff and the defendant, and subject to certain conditions contained in the said contract, and set out in a certain thoroughfare taken by the plaintiff's said wife, as agent for the plaintiff, from the defendants, one of which conditions was that the defendants would not be responsible for luggage if the value thereof exceeded 6*l.* And the defendants say that the value of the plaintiff's wife, delivered to the defendants to be carried by them as in the declaration mentioned, exceeded the value of 6*l.*

Replication to the said fifth plea, the defendants are a railway company authorized to build, or buy, or hire, and to use, maintain, work, or to enter into arrangements for maintaining, and working steam vessels for the purpose of carrying on a communication between the towns or ports, amongst others, of Boulogne and Boulogne aforesaid, and to take to

EX. DIV.]

COHEN v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

[EX.]

or things," and such luggage is like other "goods" carried by the company, of which they are common carriers. The case of Richards v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company (7 C. B. 839; 18 L. J. 251), is conclusive for the plaintiff on that point. The proposition contended for is clearly put in Hodges' Law of Railways (5th edit., by Manley Smith), at p. 570; and Richards v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway is cited, with other cases, in support of the propositions there stated. [BRAMWELL, B.—It must be assumed, I think, that a passenger's luggage is in a position similar to goods sent for carriage alone.] Again, secondly, the provisions of sect. 7, and the liability of railway companies, have been extended by the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 16, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 78, s. 12, to traffic by steamboats, and, therefore, if luggage is included in the term "goods," it comes within sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854, even when carried on board a steamboat: (Moore v. The Midland Railway Company, Ir. Rep. 8 C. L. 232.) Again, the condition limiting the liability to the value of 6l. is unreasonable. He cited also

Aldridge v. The Great Western Railway Company, 15 C. B., N. S., 582; 33 L. J. 161, C. P.;

Willis, for the defendants, contra.—The common law liability of the company as common carriers of the luggage is not disputed, but sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act is restricted in its application to ordinary merchandise conveyed as "goods" apart from passengers. If that is not so, the liability of a railway company can only be limited by obtaining the signature of every individual passenger to a special contract with regard to his luggage, which would be practically impossible. [BRAMWELL, B.—I think this Act has been misconstrued occasionally; the intention of its framers was, I believe, that the company under the first proviso might give a general notice limiting their liability, if only such limitation were just and reasonable, independently of any contract being signed. I think it a mistake to hold (although it has been so held) that such a condition would be void if it were not signed. The Act plainly means that notice should not limit the company's liability unless the conditions were reasonable; but the framers of it should have added a clause that the companies might make any condition they pleased, reasonable or otherwise, so long as it was signed by the other party. That is my construction of the Act, and it is, I know, that which was intended.] The 7th section, and the words therein, "receiving, forwarding, and delivering," are inapplicable to a passenger's luggage, but strictly applicable, and intended to be so, to "articles, goods, and things" sent as ordinary merchandise. Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (ubi sup.), cited contra, is a decision directly in favour of the defendants, for there is no distinction, as regards liability for luggage, between an excursion train and an ordinary train. Pollock, C.B., in his judgment there, said the court were all of opinion that the case was not within the Act; but it cannot be said that the luggage there was not quite as much "received, forwarded, and delivered," as it was here. [BRAMWELL, B.—I am not over well satisfied with my judgment in that case. Not one of the judges there says directly that passengers' luggage is not within the Act.] In The Great Western Railway Company v. Tally (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 413; L. Rep.

6 C. P. 44; 40 L. J. 9, C. P.) the passenger's charge of his luggage in the carriage was held, and the court held that the company was liable. Further, the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 16, and 35 Vict. c. 78, do not incorporate section only the first six sections of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act; and the word "traffic" does not occur in sect. 7. It was not intended that railway companies carrying by sea should be on a different footing from other steamship companies. Lastly, the contract was made in England, as stated in the declaration. [BRAMWELL, B.—The point does not arise, and it must be assumed there being no allegation to the contrary, the contract was made in England.]

Bryon, in reply.—In Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (as stated above), nothing is said as to passengers' luggage being within sect. 7. The ground of the decision there was that it was not an ordinary passenger's luggage, and that there was a special contract between the company and the traveller.

BRAMWELL, B.—The second question is, whether Mr. Willis in his argument on behalf of the defendants is, whether the Regulation of the Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119) does or does not extend to and include the 7th section of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31). Mr. Willis contended that the first mentioned Act of 1868 includes the first six sections of the Act of 1854, but does not include the 7th section of the Act of 1854. I think, however, the best and short answer to that is that the 32 Vict. c. 119, by sect. 16 expressly says that the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854, so far as the same are applicable, shall extend to steam vessels and to the traffic carried thereby. Mr. Willis wants us to read the provision as if it had said "some of the provisions of that Act 'minus sect. 7 shall extend, &c.' that we cannot do. Indeed, it is very obvious that if the Legislature had intended what Mr. Willis suggests, they would have said so; therefore, unless by necessity, arising from some absurdity or incongruity on the face of it, we are obliged to say otherwise, we must read the section as it stands, as extending to the railway company's steam vessels, and the traffic carried thereby; and I can see no incongruity or absurdity in the matter at all, nor any reason why it should not so extend. There is too, I think, a reason for saying that that view of the Act is corroborated by sect. 14 of the Act of 1868, which says that; and therefore, on the short ground that, in the absence of any absolute necessity for so doing, we ought not to limit the operation of the Act, the language of sect. 16, which incorporates section 7 of the Act of 1854, are bound to hold that that section is included in the provisions of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868, and so therefore extends to the present case.

That being so, the next question is, whether the 7th of this Act of 1854 applies to passengers' luggage. Now the words of it are, "Every railway company, as aforesaid, shall be liable for any loss of, or for any injury to, any horses, cattle, sheep, or other animals, or to any articles, goods, or things received, forwarded, or delivered, or for any loss or injury occasioned by the neglect or default of such company or its servants," and so forth. These goods—passengers' goods, or luggage—received by the company, forwarded by the company, and delivered by the company

EX. DIV.]

COMMON v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

[E

common carriers with respect to passengers' luggage. That has been, for the purposes of the argument, very properly admitted by Mr. Willis to be so, and it really would be almost impossible to contest it at this time of day; because there are two positive decisions on the point—namely, Richards v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company (7 C. B. 829; 18 L. J. 251), and Le Conteur v. The London and South-Western Railway Company (13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 325; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 54; 35 L. J. 40, Q. B.; 12 Jur. N. S. 266.) In both of these cases it was decided that with regard to passengers' luggage railway companies are common carriers. There were some very weighty observations made against that view of the case in Tally's case (L. Rep. 6 C. P. 44), by Mr. Justice Willes; but those observations were not really necessary for the decision of that case. The matter was again brought before the Court of Queen's Bench in Macrow v. The Great Western Railway Company (ubi sup.), where Tally's case was cited and fully discussed; and Macrow's case is also another clear decision on the point in question. The railway company, therefore, being clearly common carriers, and subject to liability as such, the question is whether upon any fair construction of the 7th section, any distinction can be drawn between "goods" carried by the company as luggage and "goods" carried by them in the ordinary way as merchandise. I confess that I can see none.

Then Mr. Willis argued that the last proviso, which was that no special contract between the company and any other parties, as to the receiving, forwarding and delivering of any articles, &c., shall be binding upon or affect any such party, except the same be signed by him, or by the person delivering such articles, &c., meant and was only applicable to ordinary merchandise, or goods sent by commercial people in the ordinary way by goods trains; but, in my opinion, the words of this section apply equally to the case of luggage which we are now considering. Then we were pressed with the argument ab inconvenienti, that it would be excessively inconvenient and practically impossible for a passenger, at the moment of starting, to have to sign a special contract. I quite agree that it would be practically impossible; and that any company who insisted upon it would doubtless lose a vast deal of traffic, and would probably not long continue to insist on it. But is that really so? Parliament would say, "You, the railway company, practically have a monopoly in the carrying of passengers, and you must not be allowed to tell a passenger that you will not carry him unless he signs a special contract." Now, the Legislature has already said that if railway companies do not have a special contract with their passengers they shall be liable as common carriers; and although it may be as my learned brother has observed, that it is a slip in the Act of Parliament, and that it was never intended, I confess I cannot see that there is any very great hardship in a railway company being obliged to take a passenger's luggage as common carriers, or at all events that they should not be able to free themselves of a common carrier's liability unless they elect to do injury to their traffic by insisting upon their passengers signing a contract. I do not think, therefore, that the argument ab inconvenienti ought to prevail against the clear and distinct words of the statute. It would be wrong to raise exceptions which do not, and never were intended to, rest on such grounds.

Therefore our judgment must be for

III.

HUDDESTON, B.—For the reasons stated learned brothers I hold the same opinion have expressed on the matter, and think it that the provision at the end of sect. 1 of the Act of 1868 refers to the three sects. 1, 16.

If, then, that be so, what is the meaning of the 7th section of the Act of 1854? Now I think that section has undergone a judicial in the House of Lords. In the case of Peel v. The Staffordshire Railway Company in the House of Lords (8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 768; 10 H. C. 473; 32 L. J. 241, Q. B.; 9 Jur. N. S. 91) Westbury and Wensleydale adopted the view of Jervis, C.J. in the case of Simons v. The Western Railway Company (18 C. B. 805; 55, C. P.) and of Williams, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in the case of McManus v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (4 H. & N. 327; 28 L. J. 47, Ex.), and held that in fact "special contracts" in the statute were synonymous with the words "special contracts" in the case of Simons, and that they were two things, and that a condition being a condition one need not be signed. Lord Westbury there explained what he understood to be the meaning of the 7th section, and said (8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 770): "I think that the true construction of that section may be expressed in a few words. I take it to be equivalent to a simple contract, that no general notice given by a railway company shall be valid in law for the purpose of limiting the common law liability of the common carriers. Such common law liability is limited by such conditions as the court shall determine to be just and reasonable with this proviso, that any such conditions limiting the liability of the company shall be made in a special contract in writing between the company and the owner or person delivering goods to the company, and which contract limiting shall be signed by such owner or person." (See 1 Smith's L. C. 7th edit., p. 236.) Then the Act expressly states that any condition for its object the relief of a railway company from liability for neglect or default of such conditions shall be null and void.

If that be so, the question arises whether passengers' luggage is "goods" within the meaning of the 7th section? Mr. Willis tried to draw a distinction, and said, that that Act merely referred to "goods" which were sent, and not to those which were carried by the passengers, and that that was so not only upon the words of the section themselves but also from their construction. Now the words themselves seem to me to be very general, and quite to include passengers' luggage; and, with reference to the construction, it seems to me that the section deals with two classes of matters, namely, first, "articles, or other animals," and then the class, namely, "articles, goods, or other things," it speaks of "the receiving, forwarding and delivering thereof." Now is not passengers' luggage

Ex. Div.]

GREEN v. WRIGHT.

[C.]

before her "turn" came again. When that came round again she was ready. The wind, however, had in the meantime come on to blow hard, and the harbour being crowded with shipping, the harbour master would not permit the plaintiff's ship to be taken alongside the loading place in the harbour, for fear of an accident from collision, &c., and in consequence she was detained for a further period of three days. The plaintiff then claimed damages, as demurrage, in the present action for the detention of the ship and loss of time for the whole period of fourteen days. The jury found that the loss of the "first turn" to load was occasioned by the default of the defendants, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages for the detention of his vessel, such damages including the sum of 93*l.* 15*s.* as demurrage for the three days during which the vessel was prevented by the harbour master from moving up to the loading berth as before mentioned, and leave was reserved to the defendants, by the learned judge, to move to reduce the damages by such last-mentioned sum.

Benjamin, Q.C. (with whom was Foard), on the part of the defendants, now moved for a rule to that effect accordingly, and argued that the defendants were in no manner responsible for the delay and detention during the three days, such detention being the result entirely of "perils of the sea." It is not contended for a moment that the defendants are not liable for the delay in not being ready to load when the vessel's first turn came again; but when that second turn came she was ready, and it was by no act or omission of the defendants that she did not then proceed to load; but it was the act of the port authority, over which the defendants had no control, and they are not liable or responsible for the consequences resulting from it. The damages claimed for these three days are too remote, and arise from a cause and a state of things which the parties never contemplated. They are not the natural result of the first default of the defendants, and the damages, therefore, ought to be reduced by the amount mentioned, namely, 93*l.* 15*s.*

OLEABY, B.(a)—I am of opinion that in this case we ought not to grant a rule for the reduction of the damages on the ground on which it has been asked for by the learned counsel for the defendants. The detention of the plaintiff's vessel for the three days must properly be taken into consideration as part of the damages sustained by him. There were not two separate detentions, but only one. The defendants' contract was to "load in regular turn," and it was not a question of the first turn or the second turn. The defendants did not load the ship "in regular turn," and it was the breach of their contract in that respect that caused the delay and detention of the ship for fourteen days altogether. Mr. Benjamin has argued that the defendants are not to be held responsible for the three last days of the fourteen, because the detention of the vessel during that latter period was caused, not by any default on the part of the defendants, but by events and circumstances over which they had no control. I cannot agree with that argument. It seems to me that the proximate cause of the detention of the vessel during those three days was the default of the defendants in not being ready to load the vessel's first or "regular" turn arrive not performing their contract, and that it is the result of any vis major, or any accident which the defendants can be said to have control.

AMFLETT, B.—I am entirely of the same Rule:

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Chester, and Co., for Gill and Archer, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, R. M. Wiggins.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS and CYRIL DODD,
Barristers-at-Law.

May 3 and 10, 1876.

GREEN v. WRIGHT.

Shipowner and master—Reasonable notice of dismissal.

The master of a ship in the absence of stipulation in the contract of hiring, to reasonable notice of dismissal from owner.

This was an action for wrongful dismissal by the plaintiff, who had been in the employment as captain of a ship, against the defendant, who was a shipowner. The plaintiff entered into an agreement with the defendant in his service as captain of the ship Gi at a salary after the rate of 180*l.* a year, wages were to begin when the plaintiff's ship. The question on which the decision was whether either party could determine the agreement without notice, and the clause in the agreement relating to this question was as follows: "Should owners require captain to leave ship abroad, his wages to cease on the day required to give up the command, and the captain to have the option of paying or not paying his expenses travelling home." The defendant dismissed the plaintiff in Liverpool without notice, and without any reasonable cause, after the ship was partly loaded for an outward voyage. It was for this dismissal that the present action was brought. The case was tried before Lush, J., at the Liverpool Winter Assizes 1875, and the verdict was directed to be entered for the plaintiff. A rule nisi was afterwards obtained for a new trial on the ground of misdirection by the learned judge, in ruling that the plaintiff, having agreed to the terms of the engagement, could be dismissed without notice.

T. H. James showed cause.—The agreement did not entitle the plaintiff to notice if he is dismissed abroad, for if he is entitled to notice under the circumstances the provision that wages are to cease from the day when the captain is required to give up the command would have no effect, and there is nothing in the agreement to show that he is entitled to notice if discharged in his own country. Where there is no specific agreement as to notice, the question must be determined by custom: Manley Smith on Master and Ship, page 77, 3rd edition; but where there is a stipulation and no custom there is no right to notice. In the cases where it has been held that notice was necessary, there has always been a custom, as in Hiscox v. Batcheller (1807).

(a) KELLY, C.B., had left the court.

ADM.]

THE DELTA.

[AM.]

been a short and simple ground, if a sound one, for upholding the verdict in that case.

But without intending to throw any doubt whatever upon these cases, we decide the one before us upon its own circumstances, and upon considerations especially applicable to the contract on which the dispute arose. And we think that the order must be absolute for a new trial.

Order absolute.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Evans and Lockett, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, Gregory, Rowdies, and Co., for Hull, Stone, and Fletcher, Liverpool.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by J. P. ASHFALL and F. W. BAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

July 10, 11, and 25, 1876.

THE DELTA.

Collision—Foreign judgment—Estoppel—Res judicata—Lis alibi pendens.

In an action of collision a judgment of a foreign court given in a cause between the same parties cannot be pleaded as an estoppel unless such judgment was obtained prior to the institution of the action in this country; there being no res judicata, but only lis alibi pendens, when the plaintiff instituted his action here, he can claim to proceed to judgment in this country if he chooses.

Semble, a judgment in a foreign court against a person not subject to the jurisdiction of that court to be an estoppel, must be a judgment on the merits, and not merely by default.

These were cross causes of collision instituted respectively by the owners of the Italian barque Erminia Foscolo, and of her cargo against the French steamship Delta, and the French company of the Messageries Maritimes, her owners intervening, and by the owners of the Delta, against the owners of the Erminia Foscolo.

The collision occurred in the Straits of Gibraltar on 11th Aug. 1871, and resulted in considerable damage being done to both vessels.

The petition (in the principal cause against the Delta) was in the ordinary form, alleging the facts charging negligence against the Delta.

The answer, after dealing with the facts, and charging negligence against the Erminia Foscolo, continued as follows:

7. The Erminia Foscolo, at the time of the collision, was an Italian ship, and her owner was then, and always since has been, and now is, resident in Italy, and an Italian subject.

8. In or about the month of Sept. 1871, the owner and master of the Erminia Foscolo commenced a suit against the said company, the owners of the said steamship Delta, and against the said steamship in the court of the Tribunal of Commerce at Marseilles, in the republic of France, and prayed the said tribunal to declare the said owners of the Delta responsible for the consequences of the collision between the Erminia Foscolo and the Delta, on the night of the 11th Aug., as hereinbefore mentioned, and to condemn the said defendants, the owners of the Delta, to pay to the said plaintiffs in the said suit the amount of their damages and costs.

9. In or about the said month of September 1871, the master of the Delta and the company of the Messageries Maritimes, the owners of the said steamship, instituted proceedings against the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo, and the said barque in the said Tribunal of Commerce at Marseilles, and prayed the said tribunal to condemn the defendants in the said suit jointly and severally, the one as master and the other as owner of the Erminia Foscolo, to be civilly liable to pay to the said company the amount of the damage and losses occasioned to the Delta in the said collision between the Delta and the Erminia Foscolo, which had taken place in the Straits of Gibraltar, as hereinbefore mentioned, by the improper navigation of the captain of the Erminia Foscolo, together with costs.

10. At the time of the institution of the said respective suits and proceedings, and until and at the time of the judgments given in the same as hereinafter mentioned, the said Tribunal of Commerce was a court of competent jurisdiction to entertain the said suits and proceedings, and to adjudicate thereupon, and had jurisdiction over the said parties to the said suits and proceedings and all about the premises.

11. The master and owners of the Delta duly appeared as defendants in the suit brought against them by the said master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo, in the said Tribunal of Commerce as aforesaid, and the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo appeared and defended the suit brought by the said master and owner of the Delta. Subsequently to such appearance proceedings were duly had and taken in the said suit before the said tribunal in accordance with the laws of France.

12. After several adjournments, granted at the request of the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo, the cause which they had brought against the said company of the Messageries Maritimes, the owners of the Delta, was definitely fixed for hearing by the said tribunal upon the 22nd Dec. 1871. Upon the said 22nd Dec. the said Tribunal of Commerce delivered judgment by which it found against the plaintiffs in the said suit, and rejected their claim against the said company, and dismissed the said company from the suit brought against them as defendants.

13. The cause brought by the owners of the Delta against the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo, was also appointed by the said Tribunal of Commerce to be heard upon the said 22nd Dec.; and upon the said day the plaintiffs in the said cause having proved their case to the satisfaction of the court, and the defendants in the said cause not appearing to contradict their evidence, the said Tribunal of Commerce delivered its judgment in the said cause, and condemned the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo to pay to the said company the amount of the loss and damage sustained by the latter by reason of the said collision, which was, by the said judgment, determined to have been occasioned by the improper navigation of the Erminia Foscolo.

14. Notice of the said decrees was duly given to the owner and master of the Erminia Foscolo in accordance with the requirements of the law of France, and all things on the plaintiffs' part have been done to make the said judgments have now by the law of France become and are valid and conclusive, and final judgments, binding upon the plaintiffs, and are still in full force and effect.

15. The defendants submit to this honourable court that by reason of the aforesaid judgments, the plaintiffs ought not to be allowed to farther prosecute their suits against the Delta.

To this answer the plaintiffs' solicitor replied, and, after dealing with the facts, averred as follows:

3. He denies the truth of the several allegations contained in the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th articles of the said answer.

3a. He says that if any such suit as stated in the 8th article of the said answer was brought in the name of the master and owner of the Erminia Foscolo, the bringing of such suit was never authorised or ratified by the plaintiff, the owner of the cargo of the Erminia Foscolo.

4. He says that if any suit was commenced by the owner and master of the Erminia Foscolo, as in the 8th article alleged, it was commenced against the company of the Delta only and not against the Delta, and that it was subsequently and before the 22nd Dec. 1871, and before the 18th Nov. 1871, the day of the institution of this suit, and before the 20th day of the same month, the day of the appearance of the defendants in the said suit, and that the judgment in the 12th article default has not been executed within six months from its being pronounced, and it consequently becomes lapsed (non avenue: See Code de Procédure, sect. 156). Neither of the judgments before-mentioned had been executed either by the French or Italian tribunals. French and Italian law are the same upon these matters.

ADM.]

THE DELTA.

The remaining facts and dates are fully stated in the judgment.

Milward, Q.C. and E. O. Clarkson, for the Erminia Foscolo.—We ask for judgment notwithstanding the defence made by the owners of the Delta. As far as relates to the owners of the cargo of the Erminia Foscolo, they never were summoned, and had no notice of the foreign proceedings, and hence cannot be bound by them. The present action was commenced (18th Nov. 1871) before they obtained judgment in the French actions (22nd Dec. 1871), and they appeared in this action without protest (20th Nov. 1871) and gave bail and then they subsequently (15th Jan. 1872) commence a cross action in this court against the Erminia Foscolo. In none of their proceedings do they mention the French judgments until the answer in the action against the Delta. In the petition against the Erminia Foscolo there is no mention of those proceedings. These judgments are a good answer to the action if they amount to an estoppel, and a judgment, to be an estoppel, must be a judgment on the merits of the case. There is no case which establishes that a judgment other than a judgment on the merits is an estoppel. Again, before a judgment can be pleaded by way of estoppel, such estoppel must have been operative at the time of the institution of the cause in which it is pleaded; it cannot become an estoppel during the process of the cause. There was no judgment in the French tribunals until after this cause was instituted in this court, and consequently there can be no estoppel. The owners of the Delta should have followed the course indicated in The Mali Ivo (L. Rep. 2 Adm. & Ecc. 356), and have put the owners to their election as to which action they would continue, and should have pleaded lis alibi pendens, not res judicata. There was no judgment in Italy until 4th June 1872, that is, after the defendants' answer was filed (22nd March 1872), and consequently at that time there was no judgment in Italy. An English court will examine into a foreign judgment before giving it effect: (Don v. Lippman, 5 C. & F. 1.)

The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and R. E. Webster, for the Delta.—This is res judicata. There have been judgments by default against plaintiffs, and these are binding against them, and must be acted upon by English courts so long as they are in accordance with French law, and there is a duty upon the plaintiffs to obey those judgments: (Schibsey v. Westenhols, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 155.) That they are binding upon the plaintiffs in accordance with French law is clear from the evidence laid before the court. There was a duty upon the plaintiffs to obey the judgments, because they themselves were suing the defendants in respect of this same collision, and were constructively present in Marseilles by their agent or advocate when the actions in the Tribunal of Commerce were commenced and judgment was given. Moreover, in consequence of the treaties existing between France and Italy, the judgments became Italian judgments, and the plaintiffs were Italian subjects and resident in Italy, and hence the duty to obey those judgments. A judgment appealed from, whether by default or not, is res judicata, and when once it is so it bars further proceedings between parties, and is a good plea to an action by the party who has been condemned.

Martin's Droit des Gens, vol. 1, s. 24;
Westlake's International Law, p. 376;
Story's Conflict of Laws, ss. 586, et seq.;
General Steam Navigation Company v. T. M. & W. 877;
Dig. c. 44, tit. I. II, De exceptionibus, De res judicata.

A judgment by default in a foreign court can be questioned by the party against who passed, where he has subjected himself to jurisdiction and has had notice of the proceedings and even in some cases when he has notice:

Turleton v. Turleton, 4 M. & S. 20
Copin v. Adamson, L. Rep. 9 Ex. 345; L. J. Div. 17; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 242; 33 L. N. S. 800;
Valles v. Demerys, 4 Bosh. 200.

[Sir R. Phillimore.—It seems clear that a judgment on the merits of a case may estoppel, but how can that be the case who has been no decision on the merits? there has been notice to the party in default must answer for his own default.

Milward, Q.C., in reply.—No judgment an estoppel unless the case has been shown the merits: (Langstead v. Maple, 17 G. B. 255.)

Our note:

July 25, 1876.—Sir R. Phillimore—I are cross causes of collision, brought on in the High Court of Admiralty; the first by the owners of the barque Erminia Foscolo and the owners of the cargo, against the ship Delta; the second by the owners of the Delta against the Erminia Foscolo.

In the suit against the Delta the plaintiff besides narrating in the ordinary form the facts of the collision, raises a further issue, and further issues, in the following manner. At paragraphs 7 to 15, inclusive, of the answer as amended, as follows: (The learned judge then read the articles of the answer as given above.) At paragraphs 3 to 7, inclusive, of the reply, as also amended, as follows: The truth of the allegations in the answer is denied, and it is further stated: The learned judge then read the reply as given. A rejoinder was put in, which was as follows (as given in the rejoinder set out above). The pleadings in the Erminia Foscolo case raise the issue as to the blame of the two vessels.

When the causes came on for hearing, the last question was decided first, and in the result I then found the Delta alone to blame for the collision. The question, however, remains—on which opinions of jurists and others have been since given, which was finally argued on the 10th month—whether the question in dispute between the parties had not previously been decided by another competent court, so that it was in the category of res judicata.

The collision occurred on 11th April 1871, at Gibraltar. On 9th Sept. 1871, the

ADM.]

THE THOMAS LEA.

The judge having adjourned the summons into court,

E. O. Clarkson, on behalf of the owners of the City of Mecca, contended that the collision having occurred on the high seas, which is within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, the act done was done within the jurisdiction. Hence, under Order XI., rule 1, and Order II., rule 4, of the rules of the Supreme Court, the court has power to order the writ to issue, and can direct service of notice of the writ out of the jurisdiction.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In this case the court would, if the Insulana could have been arrested within the territorial jurisdiction, have exercised jurisdiction so far as the res was concerned, but it would, under the old law, have possessed no jurisdiction in personam over the owners of the vessel, unless they could have been served with a citation within the territorial jurisdiction. I do not think that the Legislature, in enacting the 1st rule of the 11th order in the schedule to the Judicature Act, contemplated any alteration of the law in cases similar to the present, and, in the circumstances, I am not satisfied that I can grant the leave asked for. If I acceded to the application I should be exercising a jurisdiction in personam over persons for doing an act at a time when they were without the territorial jurisdiction of this country.

Motion refused.

Solicitors for the owners of the City of Mecca, Gellatly, Sons, and Wharton.

Thursday, Aug. 3, 1876.

THE THOMAS LEA.

Sailing rules—Regulations for preventing collisions at sea—Rule 20.

When a vessel is aground in a place where her ordinary riding light cannot be distinguished by approaching vessels, and where vessels are not expected to lie, it is her duty to exhibit a light on a mast or some elevated position, and to have a lookout to give warning to approaching vessels of her position by the best means in her power.

This was a cause of damage instituted by the owners of the screw steamer Belmont against the screw steamer Thomas Lea.

There was no cross cause.

The Belmont was a vessel of 576 tons register, belonging to the port of Sunderland, and the Thomas Lea was a vessel of 486 tons register, belonging to the port of London.

The collision occurred on the 19th Jan. 1876, about 8.15 p.m. The Belmont was then lying on the ground at the entrance of the tidal basin of the Sunderland Docks, and the Thomas Lea was about to enter the basin, inward bound from London.

It was alleged by the plaintiffs that those on board the Thomas Lea did not keep a proper lookout, and by the Thomas Lea that the Belmont neglected to give proper warning of her peculiar position, and that a light alleged to have been shown over her stern was either not exhibited at all or of insufficient power, and obscured and red-dened by smoke on the glass of it.

Webster and Phillimore, for the plaintiffs.

Butt, Q.C. and Myburgh, for the defendants.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of collision between two steamships near the tidal basin in the river Wear, at the entrance of land South Dock. The plaintiffs, the owners of the Belmont, had finished her cargo, on the morning of the collision, and she drew 16ft. and 3 or 4 ft. of water. She seems to have had a fair wind before her—either to have gone down the river over the bar—she entered the basin she took the ground on her side, her head towards the dock, her stern projecting into the river. The collision took place at 8.15 p.m.

The Thomas Lea, a steamship, was in the river and going into the South Dock was blowing very hard from the S.W. The night was dark and cloudy, though light seen at some distance. The Thomas Lea had proper lights up and burning, but the question as to whether she had a good lookout on her own account is, that "whilst rounding the river into the harbour, her engine was easy astern, and they had but little power," about half a knot, and she ran into the Belmont, striking her about 20ft. from the port side.

Now, on the one hand, it is urged that the collision was in consequence of the want of a proper lookout on board the Thomas Lea; and, on the other, it is contended that the collision was caused by the Belmont of due notice being given, by proper lights, to vessels entering the harbour, of the existence of the Belmont.

There can be no doubt that it was the duty of the Belmont, whilst she remained in the tidal basin at the entrance of the dock, to take every precaution in her power to warn of her position to vessels entering of that position. She says that she complied with that requirement in the following manner:—She put up two lights, one in her starboard position, and the other 3ft. above the wheel, the wheel itself standing 2ft. above the deck. It is admitted that the light rigging could have no effect in apprising vessels entering of the position of the Belmont; not being seen by them in consequence of the objects on shore; it may, therefore, be a matter for consideration. The only question then is, if she had a light over the wheel or the mast, if that light was of sufficient power in the circumstances at the time in a proper condition, and if that was a sufficient precaution. Now, the duty of the Belmont, in the circumstances, was to have a good lookout. The mind of the court is directed by the attention of the Elder Brethren, who were anxiously directed to an examination of the vessel. The mate was on shore, and his orders were to put up two lights, one 'aft and one in the fore rigging; the anchor watch was a sailor who has not been examined, and was to be on a foreign voyage. Where was the mate? It seems that common sense would have suggested that he should be looking out. He was not there. He went up and down the deck, forward and aft, and gives this extraordinary evidence that he had taken a walk forward and aft, and saw no light of a steamer coming up the

.]

THE STAR OF INDIA.

[ADM.]

off; and when he returned from his walk he the masthead light of a vessel pretty close, right into his port quarter. What did he did he take any steps when he first saw the coming up, and knew he was in an anomalous position where no one could expect a vessel to He did nothing whatever. In my judgment the Elder Brethren are of the same opinion ought to have blown the whistle, and taken precaution to announce his position, instead oh, the converse is the case, and hence the

What measures were taken to avoid the collision? None whatever; the only precaution was the placing of the light aft, and it is important to consider the evidence with to that light. Assuming, in favour of the Star of India, that the light was there, it is extremely difficult to me whether it was of sufficient quality proper colour for the purposes for which it intended. We are, moreover, of opinion that not placed in a proper position, as it ought been on a mast, or in some way elevated higher above the deck than it was; and I already said that even if the light were ly placed, there ought to have been a better t, and other modes adopted of warning an ching vessel of the position in which the Star of India was lying.

result at which I have arrived, with the and assistance of the Elder Brethren, is, ie Belmont has not shown that she used the tions it was incumbent on her to adopt in cular position, and that unquestionably she bad lookout, and, therefore, she cannot r in this suit. I dismiss her petition with sitors for the plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.

sitors for the defendants, Gellatly and Co.

June 13, July 20, and Aug. 1, 1876.

THE STAR OF INDIA.

Damage by collision—Measure of—Damages—
Loss of charter-party.

Estimating the loss sustained by a ship in a collision, a charter-party previously entered into ingent on the arrival of the ship at a fixed date nother place should be taken into consideration and cancelled by the charterers by reason of delay occasioned by the collision, the amount verable being the freight that would have earned under the charter-party, less deduction for freight actually earned after repairs and expenses and saving of wear and tear, &c., h would have been incurred in the performance of the charter-party.

Entitlement to such damages the shipowner is entitled to demurrage during the time he is detained repairs at the usual rate allowed to ships.

Sum of damage was instituted by the owners of Cheviot against the Star of India, for es sustained by the former vessel in a collision which took place in Madras Roads on the 1st 875, between the two vessels whilst the Star of India was shortening in her cable to proceed to on the Coromandel Coast, from which she artered to London.

defendants, the Merchant Shipping Company (Limited), the owners of the Star of India, ed their liability for the damage sustained by the Cheviot, and on the 31st Dec. 1875, the amount thereof was referred to the registrar and merchants.

The registrar, after examination of witnesses on both sides, and hearing counsel, reported on the 27th March 1876, as follows:

I find there is due to the plaintiffs in respect of their said claim the sum of 577*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.*, together with interest thereon, as stated in the schedule hereto annexed. And I am also of opinion that each party ought to be left to pay his own costs of the reference, the reference fees to be paid by the plaintiffs.

The following schedule is that referred to:

	Claimed. £ s. d.	Allowed. £ s. d.
1. Demurrage of the barque Cheviot , of 494 tons, at 4 d. per day from 1st May to 4th July 1875, viz., 65 days .....	535 3 4	535 3 4
2. Loss of charter-party .....	583 18 9	0 0 0
3. Surveyor's fees at Madras .....	15 16 3	15 16 3
4. Telegrams from Madras .....	16 15 3	16 15 3
5. Telegrams from Glasgow to Madras .....	6 10 0	6 10 0
6. Repairs to figure head .....	3 15 0	3 15 0
	£1161 18 7	577 19 10

With interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the 4th July 1875, until paid.

The plaintiffs, on the 12th April 1876, filed a petition in objection to this report, in so far as it disallowed the second item in the schedule and made the above order as to costs, for these reasons (among others):

(A.) At the time of collision the Cheviot, which was in Madras Roads, was under charter to take a cargo from the Coromandel Coasts to London, at the rate of 55*s.* per ton nett weight, delivered, and was heaving short in order to proceed to Gopalgore, the first or only port under the charter. The cargo which she would have carried would have been a dead weight cargo.

(B.) The collision occurred on the 1st May 1875, and as the Cheviot was so damaged that she could not possibly reach Gopalgore by the 10th May, the charterers, in accordance with a power given to them to that effect, cancelled the charter.

(C.) By the time the Cheviot was repaired, the season had nearly closed and freights had fallen.

(D.) The Cheviot was not sufficiently repaired to take in cargo till the 4th July, nor sufficiently repaired to proceed to sea till the 13th July.

(E.) On the 4th July, the Cheviot could have been chartered for a similar voyage to that which she had been chartered at the rate of 45*s.* per ton, but she could not have sailed for the ports of loading till on or after the 13th; instead thereof she was loaded at Madras on and after the 4th July, at the rate of 45*s.* per ton of measurement goods.

(F.) The plaintiffs' claim is for the difference between the freight of which the Cheviot would have earned under the cancelled charter-party and that which she earned under the loading at Madras.

The plaintiffs have not claimed or received demurrage for the detention of the Cheviot after the 4th July.

(G.) If the plaintiffs succeed wholly or partially in their claim, the cost of the reference ought to be awarded to them.

and prayed the court to order the report to be reformed by allowing to the plaintiffs the said sum of 583*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, or such part thereof as to the court may seem just, and by condemning the defendants in the costs of the reference, and that the defendants might be condemned in the costs of the appeal.

On the 2nd May 1876, the defendants answered as follows:

1. They say that the respective reasons alleged in the said petition were not borne out by the charter-party and evidence produced before the registrar and merchants, and they crave leave to refer to such charter-party and evidence.

ADM.]

THE STAR OF INDIA.

2. They say that the alleged damage claimed by the plaintiffs in respect of the loss of the said charter-party was too uncertain and too remote, and that it was therefore properly disallowed by the registrar.

3. They say that, regard being had to the demurrage allowed to the plaintiffs and to the other facts and circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs failed to prove that they had in fact incurred any loss by reason of their not having fulfilled the said charter-party, and that on the contrary the profits actually earned by the plaintiffs were fully equal to the profits which they would have earned had the Cheviot performed the said voyage to Gopalgore and received her intended cargo and proceeded to London therewith and delivered the same there.

4. The defendants have always been ready and willing to settle the claims of the plaintiffs other than the said claim for loss of charter-party, from which latter claim alone the necessity for the reference arose.

and prayed the court to confirm the report of the registrar, and to condemn the plaintiff in costs.

June 13 and July 20.—The petition came on for hearing before the judge, when the facts stated in the petition were proved or admitted.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Phillimore, for the plaintiffs.—The owners are entitled to recover the loss they have sustained by the tort of the defendants, and to be put in the same position exactly as that they would have occupied but for his misconduct. The question of remoteness does not arise here, as the charter-party was entered into and the plaintiffs were actually taking the first step to earn the money under the charter-party when they were prevented from doing so by the act of the defendants: (Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; Jebson v. East and West India Dock Company, L. Rep. 10 C.P. 300, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321; and the notes to Vicars v. Wilcocks, in Smith's Lead. Cas. 7th edit. vol. 2, p. 551, et seq.) The case is different from those in which damages are claimed for a breach of contract, where that only can be recovered the loss of which was in contemplation of both parties or which was the natural result of the breach of contract: (France v. Gaudet, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 199.) In Davis v. Garrett (6 Bing. 716) the owner of a barge was bound to make a restitution in integrum for damage done to a cargo through his wrongful deviation, and that is the proposed measure here; we should have earned all we asked for, and are entitled to recover it. Had the cargo been on board, and the delay occasioned a loss of market, that loss would have been recoverable, and this is really the same case. He also referred to The Frederick Warren (Pritchard's Ad. Digest, p. 708 n. 153), and The Gladiator (Pritchard's Ad. Digest, p. 707, n. 143).

E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants.—The damage claimed is too remote. Had the ship been at her loading port ready to load under a charter-party the amount might perhaps have been allowed, but here there is the chance, first, of the non-arrival at her loading port at all, and, second, of her non-arrival in time to prevent the charterers taking advantage of their option to cancel the charter party; she had only eight or ten days to reach Gopalgore in, and the ordinary chances of a sea voyage might well prevent her getting there in that time. The case is the same in principle as Portman v. Middleton (4 C. B., N.S., 322), and the notes to Vicars v. Wilcocks. [Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE referred to The Parana since reported, ante, p. 32.] This principle is further illustrated by Walker v. Goe and others (3 H. & N. 395; 4 H. & N. 350). The loss of the charter-party was not the necessary result of the damage, but of a chance in the party itself, requiring the ship to be at (by a certain date, and that is a matter the defendants cannot be supposed to have contemplated. Hadley v. Baxendale (341), so far as it is in point at all, my contention for the court says: "the proper rule is this—the damage be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, i.e., according to the usual course of things . . . or such reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties." But that case is a measure of damages for breach of contract a tort; in the latter class of cases only the loss which is the natural and obvious result of the tort can be recovered, for nothing more is considered to be in the contemplation of the parties at the time. At all events, they can only be considered for the loss of the chance of being able to charter-party, not for the loss of the party. The vessel might have had another charter-party to come into operation on her return to England from Gopalgore; if so, could the plaintiff recover for the loss of that? The damage is remote and hypothetical. Had the damage been sustained at all she would have sustained much time and sustained loss by wear and tear in beating back again from Gopalgore, and an insurance for the voyage would have been high for all these things were in contemplation of both parties to the charter, and, therefore, the freight was higher; besides, they have got a rate at 4d. per ton per day, and this is a profitable employment of the ship for five days. [The Registrar, in reply to Sir PHILLIMORE, explained that the practice allowed demurrage at the rate of 2d. per ton for the actual costs of the employment of the ship and another 2d. as representing a profit on her employment.] The plaintiff has shown that he has suffered any real loss of 10s. per ton of freight, but he has lost a month's time on the voyage, and all the time and expense thereby, the extra premium insurances, and has been paid demurrage for the profitable employment of his ship sixty-five days. Davis v. Garrett is different from this case. It was there said truly that a trader could not qualify his wrong, but that was the direct cause of the damage; in Davis v. Garrett, in allowing the demurrage, I went further than any case at common law.

Phillimore, in reply, referred to France v. Gaudet (L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 199), and admitted that some deduction must be allowed for the loss of the voyage, and saving of wear and tear, and claimed to be entitled to the amount of the freight less such deductions, and less the amount actually earned on the voyage from Madras. It was an inception of the proceedings to enquire into the chance of not earning it was no greater than that of a person for whose death a claim was made under Lord Campbell's Act, not earning anything, making profits: (Rowley v. London and North Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 180.) Fourpence does not represent a profitable employment of the ship; that is stated in the case to be 120 rupees per diem, and would make a difference over and over the allowed of 208l. 15s. We had an issue

ADM.]

THE STAR OF INDIA.

[ADM.]

in the freight, and had we insured it, could have recovered on the policy (Maude and Pollock on Merchant Shipping, 2nd edit. p. 305), and the defendants must indemnify us to the same extent.

Our. adv. vult.

Aug. 1.—Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—The Cheviot, a vessel of 494 tons, was run into on the 1st May 1875, while at anchor in Madras Roads, by the Star of India. This vessel admitted her liability, and the usual reference was ordered to the registrar, assisted by merchants, to ascertain the amount of damages. On the 27th March, 1876, the registrar made his report, in which all the items of the plaintiffs' claim were allowed except one; each party to pay his own costs. The item not allowed was for the loss of a beneficial charter-party, estimated at 583l. 18s. 9d.; the whole of this sum was disallowed. Against this ruling, and against that which left each party to pay his own costs, the owners of the Cheviot have appealed.

The case has been ably and carefully argued before me. The following averments in the petition are proved or admitted. [His Lordship then read the paragraphs (A to E) of the petition set out above.]—The clauses of the charter-party to which it is necessary to refer are the following: "Twenty-five working days are to be allowed the charterers or their agents, if the ship be not sooner despatched, for loading the said ship on the Coromandel Coast, to commence twenty-four hours after the captain has given notice in writing to the charterers' agent that he is ready to receive cargo, and ten days' demurrage over and above the said laying days at 120 rupees per day, to be paid to the master day by day as due at his option. Time occupied in changing ports not to count as lay days. Lay days not to commence before 10th April 1875. Charterers to have the option of cancelling this charter-party if the vessel do not arrive at her first loading port and be ready to take in cargo by 10th May."

The main ground upon which the registrar founded his rejection of the loss of the beneficial charter-party, and which has been insisted upon in the argument before me, was that the claim for damages on this account was too remote. This was the main ground, but the registrar appears also to have held that the proximate cause of the loss was the option given by the charter-party to the charterer, and which he exercised, of cancelling the agreement, because the ship did not arrive as to be ready to take in cargo by the 10th May. I may dispose of this latter question first. I am unable to see how the granting of this option which it was perfectly competent for the owners of the Cheviot to do, can be in any legal sense considered the real or proximate cause of the loss. But for the damage, there is every presumption that the Cheviot would have arrived in proper time, and that there would have been no opportunity given for the exercise of the option. With regard to the main objection of remoteness, it has been contended that the ordinary length of the voyage was six months and six days; it is admitted that the ship had eight days over the time necessary to enable her to get to her loading port in time to fulfil it, and that at the time the collision occurred, according to the evidence of the captain, the Cheviot was ready to proceed to Gopalspore, which was the first port she had to proceed to on the Coromandel Coast to load, and indeed the crew were actually heaving short on board the Cheviot for the purpose of getting under weigh to proceed to the said port of Gopalspore. The voyage may, therefore, be said to have begun, but it is contended that nevertheless the ship might have met with some perils before she arrived at her loading port, might have been lost, or at least delayed by bad weather, and that all the plaintiffs can be said to have lost was the chance of performing the charter-party, which is too remote an item to be taken into account in the consideration of compensation. The answer to these objections appears to me to be that though they may avail to show that the whole sum which represents the loss of the beneficial charter-party cannot be claimed, but that a certain deduction should be made from it, they do not avail to show that the item should be entirely struck out.

With respect to various decisions which were cited relating to cases of insurance contracts and the like, I must observe that this is the case of compensation demanded from a wrongdoer and governed by different principles of law. In the case of The Halley (L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 3; 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 329; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 556), I said what I must now repeat: "I gladly avail myself of Dr. Lushington's language in this matter in a case in which he distinguishes—speaking of the duty of the registrar and merchants as referees of the High Court of Admiralty—between cases of collision and cases of insurance. 'One,' he says (The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. p. 280), 'of the principal and more important objections to the report under consideration is this: that the registrar and merchants in fixing the amount to be paid for repairs and the supply of new articles in lieu of those which have been damaged or destroyed, have deducted one-third from the full amount which such repairs and new articles would cost. This reduction, it is said, has been made in consideration of new materials being substituted for old, and is justified upon the principle of a rule which is alleged to be invariably adopted in cases of insurance. The first question then which I have to consider is the applicability of the rule in question to a case of the present description, and this question, it is obvious, involves principles of considerable importance, not only as regards the decision in this particular case, but as establishing a rule for assessing the damage in all other similar cases. Now in my apprehension a material distinction exists between cases of insurance of damages by collision and for the following reasons.' And then the learned judge explains the nature of an insurance contract, and he continues: 'With regard to cases of collision it is to be observed that they stand upon a totally different footing. The claim of the suffering party who has sustained the loss arises not ex contractu but ex delicto of the party by whom the damage has been done, and the measure of the indemnification is not limited by the terms of any contract, but is co-extensive with the amount of the damage. The right against the wrongdoer is for a restitutio in integrum, and this restitutio he is bound to make without calling upon the party injured to assist him in any way whatever. If the settlement of the indemnification be attended with any difficulty, and in these cases difficulties must and will frequently occur, the party in fault must bear the inconvenience. He has no right to fix this inconvenience upon the injured party, and if that party derives incidentally a greater benefit than mere indemnification, it arises only from the impossibility of otherwise affecting such indemnification without exposing him to some loss or burthen which the law will not place upon him.' In the more recent case of France v. Gaudet (L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 190), the distinction between an action of contract for the recovery of damages, and an action against a wrongdoer, appears to have been very clearly taken.

ADM.]

THE JULINA—THE EVANGELISTRIA.

[A

Lastly, it has been contended that the grant of demurrage in this case of 4d. per ton per day from the 1st May to the 4th July (sixty-five days) puts an end to any claim founded on difference of freight, and includes the profitable employment of the ship during that time: that 2d. per ton covers the expenses, and the other 2d. per ton compensates the owner for the use of the capital. I am not of opinion that on those accounts the claim founded on the difference of freight is extinguished. It is not merely the beneficial charter-party which is lost, but also the sixty-five days during which the vessel has not been beneficially employed, and upon the whole I am of opinion that I must refer this matter again to the registrar, with the assistance of merchants, to report upon what may be in the circumstances, according to their opinion, a compensation for the loss of the beneficial charter-party.

The whole sum, viz., 583l. 18s. 9d., ought not to be granted, and indeed is not claimed. Among the deductions from this sum will have to be considered the difference between a voyage from Madras to London and from the Coromandel Coast to London; the saving of what is called wear and tear to the vessel, and the uncertainties and perils incident to all sea voyages. Other circumstances justifying deductions will perhaps suggest themselves to the great experience of the registrar and merchants, as to which I have no desire to fetter their discretion. The judgment which I now deliver is that the items for the loss of the beneficial charter-party, which, as being too remote and uncertain has been disallowed, ought to be considered and allowed, subject to all just and reasonable deductions. The question of costs must stand over till the amended report is made.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Saxton and Co.

Tuesday, July 18, 1876.

THE JULINA.

Wages—Cause by default—Waiver of proceedings—Intervention of foreign consul—Solicitor—Officer of court.

Where a ship has been sold in a cause in which no appearance has been entered, and the proceeds remain in the registry, all preliminary proceedings in a cause of wages may be waived, and the money due paid out of court.

The court will not pay the money to a foreign consul at his request, but will require the solicitor of the parties to satisfy any claims the consul may have before receiving the money.

In this case the Julina, which was a Russian vessel, had been sold by order of the court in another suit in which the proceedings had by default of appearance, and the proceeds of sale remained in the registry.

W. G. F. Phillimore replied on behalf of master and a portion of the crew, that the due to them, and a sum of money by way of cum, as well as in respect of certain new expenses incurred by them, should be paid by the court at once without requiring them to pleadings or take the other steps customary in a case of default of appearance.

The Registrar read a letter from the British consular officer stating that he had made advance of money to the crew for their expenses, and by the law of Russia the money payable to the crew ought to be paid to him on their behalf.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE made an order was under the circumstances all the preliminary in a cause by default, and ordering the money to be paid out of court, on the solicitor of the plaintiff before the court undertaking to pay the British consular officer the sums he had advanced for the necessities or producing his receipt.

June 27 and Aug. 8. 1876.

THE EVANGELISTRIA.

Jurisdiction—Foreign vessel—Possession—Fore mortgage—Decree of foreign court—Intervention of foreign consul—Practice.

The arrest necessary to found the jurisdiction of the High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) claims by mortgagees of foreign ships under 3 Vict. c. 65, must be in a cause over which the court has jurisdiction; a mere de facto arrest is not sufficient.

The High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) has jurisdiction, independent of the Judicial Acts, to and will entertain, on the intervention of the representative of a foreign state, or by consent of parties, a cause of possession or mortgage of a foreign ship belonging to such state, far as to ascertain the true position of the claimants and the nature of their title, and will, when it is for the advantage of all parties, order the sale of the ship.

The See Reuter (1 Dods. 22) followed.

Where a defendant objects to the jurisdiction in a cause in rem, and appears under protest, the former practice of the High Court of Admiralty, as to proceedings under protest, must be observed throughout.

This was a cause of possession.

The Evangelistria, a Greek vessel, arrived at Falmouth in April, 1876, and whilst there the defendants, two brothers of the name of Pappas, who at that time had the control of the vessel, were by the authority of the Greek consul dismissed, and the plaintiff Empirikos substituted for them, on the ground that by the judgment of a Greek court at Syra the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the vessel. The vessel was under the control of the plaintiff to Swansea, whilst there the plaintiff was forcibly dispossessed, and the master appointed by him expelled from her by the defendants. Whilst at Swansea the vessel was arrested in a cause of necessity, which caused the present plaintiff to appear under protest on the ground that the alleged necessity had been supplied in a foreign port, and the court had no jurisdiction. Whilst the vessel was still under arrest in that suit the plaintiff

PHILLIMORE.—The old practice must be carried out entirely, and not merely partially.] I have to ask for time to file the answer on protest.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE dismissed the defendants' motion with costs, and gave the plaintiff a fortnight's time to file his answer on protest.

The petition on protest being admitted, on the 17th July 1876, the plaintiffs delivered their answer, which, after admitting the truth of the 1st, and denying the truth of the 2nd paragraphs of the petition on protest, proceeded as follows :

3. By an agreement or deed of sale, dated the 21st Sept. 1874, and duly made at Syra, in the Kingdom of Greece, before a notary public, with all the formalities required by the law of Greece, and numbered 15,742, the defendants being owners of the Evangelistria, sold to the plaintiff the Evangelistria, and delivered to him the possession thereof for the price of 54,450 drachma of government tariff (Greek), paid to them by the plaintiff.

4. The said agreement was valid and effectual according to the law of Greece to pass the property, ownership, and right of possession of the said ship to the plaintiff, in whom such property and ownership and right of possession have been ever since and are now vested.

5. Such sale to the plaintiff was duly registered on the 23rd Sept. 1874, at the Port of Syra aforesaid, by the proper authorities, and the plaintiff thereupon became, and has ever since been, and still is the sole registered owner of the said ship.

6. On the 4th Oct. 1874, an agreement, being the agreement mentioned in the 4th paragraph of the said petition, was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants. Such an agreement was and is in the Greek language, and the following is a correct translation thereof :

It is this day agreed between the undersigned Constantine Empirikos of the one part, Gianuli N. Piangos and George N. Piangos of the other part, the following:

I. By an agreement made before the notary public, S. Bisti, dated the 22nd Sept. A.D. 1874, No. 15,742, Messrs. Giannuli N. Piangos and George N. Piangos, sold to Constantine Empirikos their ship called Evangelistria at the price of 54,450 drachmas, of government tariff.

II. Right of repurchase of ship is conferred on the brothers Piangos, such right to be exercised within a period of three years commencing from the date of the sale document No. 15,742, within which time they have the right to pay to Mr. C. Empirikos in full or by any instalments, the above amount, with interest at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum; they will also pay the sum of 5381 drachmas government tariff, with interest thereon, which according to the particulars given below in Clause III., Mr. Empirikos paid up to this day; and also any sum or sums which Mr. Empirikos may in future pay for accounts of Messrs. Piangos. After payment of all the above sums Messrs. Piangos will become the rightful owners of the ship.

III. M. Empirikow has this day paid to the brothers Giasuli N. Piangos and George N. Piangos 5381 10 per cent. drachmas government tariff, and is a loan for the settlement of the accounts for the purchase of ship, building material, and for the necessary expenses for dispatching the ship. On the above sum interest at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum will be charged from this date.

IV. The interest or the 54,450 drachmas, and 5381 10 per cent. drachmas must be paid down regularly every voyage, and at the port of discharge of the ship. At the end of the second year one-third of the whole sum at least must be repaid to Mr. Empirikos, and there must not be any default in the payment of interest, otherwise in case of the non regular payment of the interest, or in default of payment of one-third of the original sum at the end of two years, Mr. Empirikos has the right to sell the ship at public auction, hereafter giving notice to the Piangos brothers to be present at such auction. In such case Mr. Empirikos has the right of bidding for the ship at the auction.

V. After the ship is sold, according to the above clause, out of the price fetched M. Empirik be repaid the sum of 59,531 drachmas 10 per government tariff, and interest thereon, as expenses incurred, and whatever other sums I have paid for account of Messrs. Pianos, and deducting the above there is any balance left balance remains for the benefit of the M. Pianos.

VI. The profits as well as the losses of the ship during the period of three years, as well as all expenses incurred for account of the brothers Piangos, they entirely concern, and who have a right to insure in their own name the sum of 100,000 drachmas on the value of the ship, but without any responsibility on the part of M. Empirikis for the payment of the insurance premiums thereon.

VII. After the expiration of the last day of the years the right of re-purchase on the part of brothers Piangos ceases, and the ship remains indisputable property of M. Empirikos, his value equal to the sums mentioned in the document No. 15,742. In addition to this all belonging to M. Empirikos that the Pi have in their hands at the time will be sold at the value of the ship.

VIII. Captain of the ship for the period of three months will be one of the brothers Piangos, but the brothers Piangos have the right of appointing a superintendent on the ship, taking his meals with the captain. In case the captain is dismissed through a court of law, and if the superintendent is dismissed M. Empirikos has the right of the sale of the ship. The expenses of keeping of the superintendent are borne by the Piangos brothers.

Two similar documents were made and signed by contracting parties.

Syrac. 4th Oct. 1874.

Signed { CONSTANTINE EMPIRE
GIANULI N. PIANGOS.
GEORGE N. PIANGOS.

Copied by Constantine Empirikos.

7. In pursuance of the said agreement the Evangel proceeded upon several voyages in charge of and the command of the defendants, or of one or all of them.

8. Before the Evangelistria could leave the Kingdom of Greece to proceed on such voyages the plaintiff compelled by the law of Greece to give, and he did, she left the Kingdom of Greece give, with the knowledge of the defendants, a bond to the proper authorities in two-thirds of the value of the Evangelistria conditional for the return of the Evangelistria to the Kingdom of Greece within the period of two years from the date of her so leaving Greece. The said period of two years will expire in the month of September now next ensuing.

9. The plaintiff denies the allegations contained in the 4th paragraph of the said petition, and says that the sum of 54,450 drachmas and 5381, 10 per cent. are still owing to the plaintiffs, and the defendants made default in the payments of interest due under the terms of the said agreement of the 4th Oct. 1921, that large sums of money are now due and owing to the plaintiff from the defendants in respect of such sums.

10. On or about the 15th Oct. 1875 the plaintiff instituted a suit in the Commercial Division of the First Instance at Syra aforesaid, being a competent jurisdiction in that behalf, against the defendants, and prayed the said court by reason of default as aforesaid, and upon other grounds, that the defendants or such one of them as was the master of the Evangelistria should be substituted in his (the plaintiff's) confidence, and that execution of the decision should be ordered, and the personal arrest of the defendants, and that the defendants should pay the costs.

11. The defendants were duly summoned to the said suit in accordance with the law of the State of New York, but failed to appear therein.

12. On the 22nd April, 1876, the said sub-before the said court, and the said court judgment therein, and ordered expulsion wards from the said ship, and that they

[.]

THE EVANGELISTRIA.

[ADM.]

d by a captain enjoying the plaintiff's confidence, dered the personal arrest of the defendants, and med them in costs, and requested the proper to execute or assist in executing the said judg-by order of such judgment the Greek consular ities in this country, being the proper authorities ; behalf, dismissed the defendants from the said n her arrival at Falmouth on or about the 28th 876, and put on board her a person appointed by intiff and enjoying his confidence, and put her s possession of such person on behalf of the plain- d such person took the said ship from Falmouth sea to discharge her cargo.

On the arrival of the said ship at Swansea, the nts, against the will of the plaintiff and of the onulate authorities, forcibly ejected the said so appointed by the plaintiff from the said ship, reibly took possession of her, and they remained sion of her against the will of the plaintiff and said consulate authorities.

By the law of Greece all persons in charge of any vessel entering a foreign port are required to all the ship's papers with the Greek consular at such port. On the arrival of the said ship at a, the Vice-Consul of Greece at that port, being nsular officer as aforesaid, applied to the defen- and required them to deposit such papers with uch papers include the libretto or certificate of r showing the ownership of the said ship. The nts have refused and still refuse so to deposit pers, and the plaintiff is unable to obtain pos- of the said papers, including the said libretto, h such libretto shows the plaintiff to be sole f the said ship.

The plaintiff admits the truth of the allegations ed in the 6th and 7th paragraphs of the said he defendants have threatened and intend, unless ed by the court, to take the Evangelistria to South or to some other foreign port or place not being a port or place, and to deprive the plaintiff of the f taking the Evangelistria to Greece within the owed by the said bond, and of the power of selling ngelistria at Syra, under the said agreement of of Oct. 1874, and they refuse to give up posses- the said ship to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff obtain possession of the said ship or of the without the assistance of this honourable court.

answer then prayed the court to pro- for its jurisdiction, and to overrule the 1 on protest, and to condemn the defen- in costs. On the 2nd Aug. the defendants by a simple denial of the answer and of issue, and on 8th Aug. the question idiction came on for argument.

Discussion arose as to the mode in which the s to be brought before the court for deci- he defendants contending that the court as in the case of a demurrer, to decide on adings as they stood, the plaintiffs main- that the defendants must prove by evi- he facts averred in the petition on protest. nt ruled that although on motion to reject on on protest the facts therein stated must n as true, yet at the hearing on protest it ferent, and that the defendants must now s evidence in support of their petition, and e plaintiffs would then be at liberty to heir answer, and that the former practice stitions on protest must prevail. The de- s were then called in support of their peti- nd in their evidence claimed to be the of the ship, the plaintiffs by their cross- ation and the subsequent evidence setting same claim. The defendants stated that ntiffs were only mortgagees.

judgment of the Greek Court, with the nt (an ordinary bill of sale) referred to in paragraph of the answer, attached to it, and also the document set out in the 4th para- graph of the answer, were put in evidence, and the Greek Consul-General deposed that on the instructions of his government he was desirous that the court should if possible exercise jurisdic- tion.

Aug. 8.—Benjamin, Q. C. and W. G. F. Philli- more, for the defendants, in support of the petition.—The question is not one of ownership or possession, but of mortgage; the payment of interest is inconsistent with ownership. The court has no jurisdiction to entertain a question of mortgage except by statute. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, ss. 3, 4, applies only to British ships, and to them only when under arrest; even if it could apply to a foreign vessel at all, it can plainly only do so when the vessel is under arrest, and this vessel cannot be considered to have been under arrest, as the arrest was not a lawful one, and consequently a mere nullity. 24 Vict. c. 10, ss. 8, 11, applies expressly only to British registered ships, and mortgages registered under the Merchant Shipping Acts, and therefore cannot include the case of a foreign ship and foreign mortgage: (The Innisfallen, L. Rep. 1 Ad. 72; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 71; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 470.) The judgment of the Greek court at Syra was given on an obviously defective knowledge of the facts. Only one document is annexed to it, and referred to in it, and that is a document apparently of sale, but the subsequent document which plainly shows the nature of the transaction to be a mortgage, was not shown to the court and is not referred to in the judgment. Besides, the judgment was obtained without any notice being given to the present defendant on protest, and in his absence: (The Highlander, 2 W. Rob. 109.) In a matter of co-ownership the court might in virtue of its original jurisdiction entertain a cause by request of the parties or of their government (The See Reuter, 1 Dods. 22), but not in a case of mortgage where the authority given by the statute is limited by the statute to British vessels and mortgages under the Merchant Shipping Act. Even if the court could obtain jurisdiction the question must be decided by English law, as it is here a question of procedure and is governed by the lex fori. The court must dismiss the suit and allow us to take the ship and pay the mortgagees their interest. A mortgage is unknown to the law maritime, and if the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in this cause, the Judicature Acts have made no difference, for the High Court of Justice has only acquired the same jurisdiction in rem as the Court of Admiralty had, and this is a suit in rem. They also referred to

The Cathcart, L. Rep. 1 Ad. & Ecc. 314; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211;
The Neptune, 3 Hagg. 132;
Simpson v. Fogo, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 61; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 312.

Clarkson, for plaintiffs.—Relief in rem may be obtained now in any division of the High Court (Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, sect. 4, sub-sects. 6, 7), it is only a question of procedure, and each division and every judge has all the powers of any court (Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, sect. 39), and, therefore, the court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, whether in rem or in personam. Here the writ was in personam, but the warrant in rem was only a subsequent matter of procedure in the cause. The Greek judgment must be taken to be a good judgment. The absence of the defendant may be immaterial, as it frequently is in the practice of this and the divorce divisions of the High Court, and even supposing this to be a mortgage, the plaintiffs were mortgagees in possession both de facto and de jure until they were unlawfully ousted by the defendants, and, therefore, this is a suit of possession, and exactly similar to The See Reuter (1 Dods. 22).

ADM.]

THE ST. OLAF.

[1

Phillimore, in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This case has been very carefully and elaborately argued, and it raises a question by no means free from difficulty; but at the same time a careful examination of the matter results in this, that the only question is, whether the court has jurisdiction to examine into the claims of the respective parties or not. It is not a question whether the law of Greece is in favour of one party or the other, but whether, under the circumstances—and they are very peculiar—the court ought to decline jurisdiction to inquire into the matter at all. The contest is between two foreigners, each claiming possession of the vessel, one contending that he was the original possessor and that he has never parted with the property in the ship by sale or otherwise; the other, that the former had parted with the property in the ship, and that the right of possession had passed to him. One of the pieces of evidence which has been submitted to the court, and which has been gravely discussed, is the judgment of the Greek Court of First Instance at Syra, where the court pronounced in favour of the ownership of one of the defendants upon the question of the expulsion of one captain and the substitution of another. Against the judgment many objections have been taken, but it has been enforced by the Consul-General of Greece in this country so far as, in his opinion, it was competent for him to do so, and he has expressed his desire that the court should, if possible, exercise jurisdiction in the matter.

It has been contended that this court had no original jurisdiction in questions of mortgage, and many authorities have been cited to establish that proposition, and to show that previously to the statute giving a limited authority over mortgages, the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction over mortgages even of British vessels, and that if they had none by English law, still less had they any in a case of foreign law. The question, upon the authorities cited, appears to be still an undecided one. But here the question is whether the plaintiff is not to all intents and purposes the owner of the vessel. The defendants have assumed by their protest, to maintain the position that the court is not competent to entertain a suit of this description.

Now this court has always been in the habit of entertaining suits between foreigners in matters of Admiralty law and jurisprudence. In The See Reuter (1 Dods. 22), Lord Stowell said: "The court has never entertained suits of this kind"—i.e., causes of possession between foreigners—"unless the cases had been referred to its decision by the consent of parties, or by the intervention of the representative of the foreign state devolving the jurisdiction of his own country on the court." He then proceeds to consider whether the authority in the case before him could be considered equivalent to the consent of an accredited agent of the state, and he says: "Here is a judicial order or decree by the masters and councillors of the city of Boston senate assembled, and in whom the admiralty jurisdiction of that city is said to be directing the master to deliver up possession of the ship to Mr. Martens. This document is subscribed by the prothonotary of Boston is given under the seal of that city, and its authenticity is not denied on the part of the master. I am of opinion that this instrument arms the court with sufficient authority."

What are the facts here? That there is facie a judgment of a competent Greek court in a matter where two Greeks are concerned, one pronouncing in favour of the plaintiff's right to the vessel, that that judgment, whatever its fault be, has been acted upon by the Consul-General in this country, and that he has expressed his opinion that he wishes this court to exercise jurisdiction.

Now, without entering into the argument on sect. 39 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, and on the intention of the Legislature, every court should exercise the jurisdiction of the court in matters that come properly before it, which appears to deserve considerable attention whenever it becomes necessary to decide a point, I think, for the reasons I have stated. I ought not to decline to exercise jurisdiction in this case so far as I am asked to do—that is, to inquire into the question between these two parties. The real owner is entitled to possession of the ship, and it may turn out that the parties in this case are neither of them mortgagees, or that the plaintiff in this case is not the owner. The position that I am about to pronounce is that I will exercise jurisdiction so far as to inquire into the position of the respective parties, and not further.

I pronounce for my jurisdiction, and the ship to be sold, the money to be paid into court, and put out at the usual rate, both parties to be entitled to bid at the sale, all questions of costs to be reserved.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Pritchard and Toller.

Friday, May 12, 1876.

THE ST. OLAF.

Master—Dismissal—Ship's certificate of registry and papers—Refusal to deliver up—Lien—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, sect. 50—Jurisdiction—The High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) power, upon the application of the owner of the ship, to order a master who has been dismissed from their employment to deliver up the certificate of registry and other papers and property belonging to the ship where he refuses to surrender them. Semble, a master, whether co-owner or not, is not liable upon a certificate of registry and other papers in case of wrongful dismissal by managing owners.

This was a motion made in an action of debt instituted on behalf of James Bremner, John Bruce, John Cormack, and William Harcourt, owners of the schooner St. Olaf, against James Cormack, part owner and also late master of the schooner, in order to procure a settlement of the accounts of the earnings of the said schooner had been purchased by the plaintiff.

[DM.]

THE SCEPTRE.

[ADM.]

ndant, and was worked by them under a written sement, signed by all the part owners, by which es Bremner was managing owner, with power ppoint and dismiss the master. The defendant een appointed master, and had sailed the oner in several voyages. On the return of the oner in April 1876, from a voyage from Ter- Bremner discharged defendant from his ement as master without notice, and took position of the schooner. The alleged ground for a discharge was that the master had improperly n some of the cargo as food for the crew, the ter stating that conduct was made necessary he condition of the cargo and the delay of the age. The defendant left the schooner, but ined possession of her certificate and register of the keys and papers belonging to her, ing that he was wrongfully dismissed and he was entitled to retain possession of these gs.

he cause was commenced on or about May 10th 3, and after the defendant had been served the writ, and before any further proceedings e taken in the cause, the plaintiff moved the t for an order that the defendant might be red forthwith to deliver possession of the cerate and register of the schooner St. Olaf, of k, and the keys and all papers belonging to said vessel to Mr. William Marshall, the plain- agent, and that he may be restrained from g or suffering any matter or thing whereby above named James Bremner may be proed or hindered from performing or exercising rights and duties as managing owner and s husband of the said vessel.

G. F. Phillimore, for the plaintiffs, in sup- of the motion.—This court has power to and interfere to give possession of the certificate egistry. In The Frances (2 Dods. 420) Lord well, after saying that justices have power by ute in certain cases to order the delivery of ificates, says: "But these statutes have nothing n with the Admiralty jurisdiction upon such ters. If the Admiralty had no jurisdiction hat it derives from these statutes, it has no ediction at all upon such subjects, for they do refer to the jurisdiction of that court—they ely give new powers in certain cases to icees of peace. The jurisdiction of the istry (if it exists) is of older date and larger extent. We know that it is not ommon for parties, after applications to justices, out effect, to resort to this court for its moni- . This court would certainly not have hesi- d to go the length of granting its monition, how cause why the register should not be ored." By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 50, it is expressly enacted . "the certificate of registry shall be used for the lawful navigation of the ship, and l not be subject to detention by reason of any ien, charge, or interest whatsoever" by any ion, and that justices or "any court capable alking cognisance of such matter" may summon person detaining the certificate before it and ine him in relation to the detention, and if e was no reasonable cause may inflict a penalty. is a court capable of taking cognisance of i matter, and the master having no lien upon certificate (Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112) has no onable cause for detaining it.

O. Clarkson, for the defendant.—The managing owner had no power to dismiss under the circumstances of the case. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The agreement between the owners expressly says he shall have power]. But it must be implied that such power can only be exercised upon due notice (Green v. Wright, p. 254; L. Rep. 1 O. P. Div. 591). [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If the master has been wrongfully dismissed his remedy is to bring an action against the managing owner for damages. The power to dismiss has been exercised, and the remedy is not to detain the ship's papers.] Then, as we have a counterclaim for wages and damages, we ought to have security for the amount of our claims in this action to save the expense of arresting the ship.

W. G. F. Phillimore, in reply, undertook to give security for any damages which might accrue from the making of the order prayed.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I am of opinion that I have authority to make the order asked for, and I shall do so. I direct the defendant forthwith to deliver to William Marshall the certificate and register, and all keys belonging to the St. Olaf, upon the plaintiffs undertaking to be answerable for any damage occasioned by such delivery. Costs of the motion to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Harper, Broad, and Battcock.

Solicitors for the defendant, Lowless and Co.

Tuesday, July 25, 1876.

THE SCEPTRE.

Forfeiture—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103—Concealing British character—Assuming foreign character.

Where a British subject, the owner of a British ship, by a representation to the collector of customs at the port of registry that his ship has been sold to foreigners procures the closing of the registry, and sails her under a foreign certificate of registry and under a foreign flag, whilst he continues to own her and to receive the profits of working her, doing such acts with the intent to conceal her British character from the officers of customs, and prevent her seizure as unseaworthy, he commits an offence against the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103, by reason of which his ship is liable to, and will be condemned to forfeiture to Her Majesty.

THIS was an action instituted by Her Majesty's Procurator General on behalf of Henry Hallett, collector of customs, at Hartlepool, against the Sceptre, and her owner intervening, to obtain the forfeiture of the Sceptre to Her Majesty, for the commission of offences by her owner against the provisions of the 103rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, which, so far as material, is as follows:

SECT. 103. The offences hereinafter mentioned shall be punishable as follows (that is to say): . . .

(2) If the master or owner of any British ship does or permits to be done, any matter or thing, or carries or permits to be carried any papers or documents, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from any person entitled by British law to inquire into the same, or to assume a foreign character, or with intent to deceive any such person as lastly hereinbefore mentioned, such ship shall be forfeited to Her Majesty, and the master, if he commits or is privy to the commission of the offence, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. . . .

And in order that the above provisions as to forfeiture may be carried into effect, it shall be lawful for any commissioned officer on full pay in the military or naval service of her Majesty, or any British officer of customs, or any British consular officer, to seize and detain any ship which has, either wholly or as to any share therein, come subject to forfeiture as aforesaid, and to bring her for adjudication before the High Court of Admiralty in England or Ireland, or any court having Admiralty jurisdiction in her Majesty's dominions, and such court may thereupon make such order in the case as it may think fit, and may award to the officer bringing in the same for adjudication such portion of the proceeds of the, if any, forfeited ship or share as it may think right.

The plaintiffs' statement of claim setting out the offences charged was as follows:

1. The plaintiff was on and before the 10th Nov. 1874, and has ever since been and still is a British Officer of Customs, within the intent and meaning of the 103rd sect. of "The Merchant Shipping Act 1854."

2. Before and on the said 10th Nov., the ship or vessel Sceptre, proceeded against in this action was a British ship, registered at the Custom House of Sunderland, as a British ship, in the name of the defendant, James Saunders, as sole owner, and she then belonged to the defendant as sole owner. The said defendant is a natural born British subject.

3. On or about the 9th Nov., the defendant as such owner wrote and sent to the collector of customs, at the port of Sunderland, being the registrar of British ships at that port, and a person entitled by British law to inquire into the character of the said vessel, a letter informing the said collector that the said vessel was sold to foreigners, and inclosed and sent in the said letter to the said collector the certificate of registry of the said ship, for the purpose of the register of the said ship being cancelled by the said collector, and requested the said collector to forward to him, the defendant, a certified copy of the register of the said ship.

4. The said collector received the said letter on the 10th Nov., and acting upon the statements and representations contained therein, made an endorsement upon the register of the said vessel as follows, namely: "Certificate cancelled, register closed 10th Nov. 1874. Vessel sold to foreigners," and drew a line across the said register.

5. The said vessel was not on or before the 10th Nov. 1874, sold to any foreigner or foreigners, but she was on that day and she afterwards continued to be owned by the defendant as sole owner, and she then was and she subsequently continued to be a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the 103rd section of the "The Merchant Shipping Act 1854."

6. On or about the 12th Jan. 1875, the defendant being still the sole owner of the said ship, produced and exhibited to one William Robert Arkless, the Superintendent of Customs and Mercantile Marine, at Seaham, a person entitled by British law to inquire into the character of the said ship, a document purporting to be a certificate of ownership of the said ship, and dated on or about the 28th Nov. 1874, by which document it was stated and represented that one Henry Thomas Watson, of Antwerp, Belgian citizen, having purchased the said ship, had by bill of sale become the owner of the said ship, and that the said ship was then Belgian property.

7. The said statements and representations in the said document lastly mentioned were respectively wholly untrue. The said ship, on the said 28th Nov. 1874, continued to be and was the property of the said James Saunders as sole owner thereof, and a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said 103rd section.

8. On the 5th Feb. 1875, one James Farguson, the then master of the said ship, by and with permission of the defendant as sole owner of the said ship, applied at the Custom House, at Seaham, in the port of Sunderland, to one William Farrow, the officer of customs then on duty in that behalf, for a transire or clearance coastwise for the said ship, and the said master then and thereby, and with the permission of the defendant, declared to the said William Farrow the name of the nation to which the said master claimed that the said ship belonged as being the Belgian nation, and that her port of registry was the port of Antwerp, in the Kingdom of Belgium, and the said William Farrow then inscribed such port as the port of registry of the said ship on a clearance or transire, which he then granted, and the said master, by and with the permission of the defendant, then and there sign upon the said clearance or transire a declaration that he the said master certified that all the requirements of the said Act had been fully complied with.

9. The nationality of the said ship was not upon said 5th Feb. 1875 Belgian, but the said ship then and continued to be the sole property of the defendant as sole owner thereof, and a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said 103rd section, and said declarations respectively made and signed by said master as in the last paragraph stated were false.

10. On or about the 21st Aug. 1875, the defendant then the sole owner of the said ship, applied as such owner thereof to the said William Robert Arkless, still in such superintendence of customs and mercantile marine as aforesaid, at the Custom House, at Seaham, for a clearance or transire of the said ship, and at the name of the said ship to be the Cotopaxi, of Peru, and declared to the said William Robert Arkless the name of the nation to which he, the defendant, claimed the ship belonged to be Uruguay, and the said William Robert Arkless thereupon inscribed the name of the nation upon a coasting clearance or transire which then granted, and the defendant then and there sign declaration upon the said clearance or transire that he certified that all the requirements of the said Act had been fully complied with.

11. The name of the said ship was not on the said 21st Aug. 1875, the Cotopaxi, of Peru, and the nationality of the said ship was not upon that day Uruguayan, but the said ship then was, and continued to be, the property of the defendant as sole owner thereof, and a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said 103rd section, and the said declarations so made and signed respectively by the defendant were wholly false.

12. The said ship subsequently to the 10th Nov. 1874, and whilst she still continued to be the property of the defendant and a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said 103rd section, was sailed by the defendant or by and with his permission under a false flag, to wit under the Belgian flag.

13. The several matters and things hereinbefore alleged to have been done or permitted to be done by the defendant, or some or one of such matters and things were or was matters or things, or a matter or thing done by the defendant as owner of the said British ship Sceptre, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from the said collector of customs at Sunderland, and from the said William Robert Arkless, and the said William Farrow, and from others the collectors and officers of customs at divers British ports, and from the officials of the Board of Trade defined by the said Act, or from some or one of such persons, such persons being persons entitled by British law to inquire into such character, or with intent to deceive such persons as aforesaid, or some or one of them, and thereby the said ship became and is forfeited to Her Majesty.

14. The said document or certificate in the 6th paragraph of this statement of claim, mentioned and stated, and represented that the said document or certificate would remain in force for not exceeding one year from the date thereof, to wit, from the 28th Nov. 1874, and was issued for the purpose of proving the nationality of the said ship until her arrival in Belgium, and the said document was carried by the defendant or by the master of the said ship, by and with the permission of the defendant as owner of the said ship, as a certificate of the nationality of the said ship. Such document or certificate was not according to the law of Belgium, and a valid certificate of the nationality of the said ship, as the said ship was not on the 12th Jan. 1875 a Belgian ship or entitled to a certificate of nationality as a Belgian ship, but she then continued to be and was the property of the defendant as sole owner thereof, and a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said 103rd section. Such document was carried by the defendant as sole owner of the said ship or by the master of the said ship by and with the permission of the defendant as sole owner of the said ship, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from the said William Robert Arkless, and others, the collectors and officers of customs at divers British ports, and the officials of the Board of Trade defined as aforesaid, or from some or one

N.]

THE SFACTORIA.

[ADM.]

a, all such persons being persons entitled by law to inquire into the same, or with intent to a foreign character, or with intent to deceive persons or some or one of them, and thereby the ship became as is forfeited to Her Majesty.

The plaintiff as a British officer of customs has and detained the said ship as having become liable to forfeiture to Her Majesty as aforesaid, and has it her for adjudication before this court pursuant said section.

plaintiff claims—declaration and judgment that the said ship Sfactoria has become and is forfeited to Her Majesty.

sale of the said ship Sfactoria by the marshal of court.

award to the plaintiff of such portion of the proceeds of the sale of the said ship as the court may think right.

condemnation of the defendant in the costs of the action.

such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require.

The defendant, James Saunders, delivered an answer denying the statement of claim; but at the hearing the defendant himself was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and admitted that the contents of the statement of claim were substantially accurate. He stated that he was, prior to Nov. 1874, the sole owner of the Sfactoria, which was then registered as a British ship, that about that date he was informed by some brokers that they could procure the registration of his ship in Belgium on the payment of a fee, and that by this means he would be enabled to avoid the then recent legislation relating to unseaworthy ships. He accordingly consented to the collector of customs at Sunderland where the ship had been registered, that the ship was sold to foreigners, and requested the collector to send him a copy of the register of the ship.

The shipbrokers before-mentioned procured from the provisional certificate mentioned in the statement of claim, paragraphs 6 and 14, represented the ship as being a Belgian ship, and she was sailed under the Belgian flag, and never ceased to be the sole property of the defendant, and he had, after the closing of her registry, worked her himself, and had received the freights and profits. The action was ended at the hearing.

Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and Clarkson, for the plaintiff.

R. Phillimore.—The facts stated in the statement of claim being admitted by the defendant, must pronounce in this case that the owner of the ship was intending to conceal the British character of the ship from the person entitled to seize it, and that the vessel assumed a foreign character, with intent to deceive the officer of customs, and is therefore liable to forfeiture under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 v. 104, s. 103), and therefore pronounce for forfeiture of the vessel.

Order for the plaintiff, the Queen's Proctor, and Oliver and Botterell.

Tuesday, Nov. 7, 1876.

THE SFACTORIA.

Case—Default in pleading—Signing judgment according in rem—Supreme Court Rules: r. XXIX., rule 2.

XXIX., rule 2, of the Supreme Court Rules, requiring signing judgment in default of pleading, not apply to proceedings in rem.

Where in an action in rem for a liquidated sum for necessities supplied, the defendant makes default in delivering his statement of defence, the plaintiff cannot at once sign final judgment, but must bring the case on for hearing before the judge upon affidavit.

THIS was an action of necessities instituted on behalf of John Abbot and Francis Parry Adey, ship chandlers at Cardiff, in rem, against the Greek ship Sfactoria. The necessities supplied were ship's stores, and were supplied by the order of the master of the ship.

The plaintiff, in the statement of claim, alleged that the goods were supplied on three several occasions, and that the amounts due for such supplies were 412l. 16s. 9d., 61l., and 84l. 17s., making together 557l. 13s. 9d., and that the goods were supplied upon the credit of the ship and not of the master.

The owners of the ship duly appeared in the action, and the statement of claim was served upon them by special leave during the vacation.

The defendants, after obtaining several extensions of time for the purpose, made default in delivering their defence. The plaintiffs now brought the matter before the court on motion for an order that, the defendants having failed to deliver their statement of defence within the time limited, the plaintiff be at liberty to sign final judgment for 557l. 13s. 9d., together with interest, as claimed in the statement of claim, and costs of suit, and for an order that a commission do issue for the sale and appraisement of the Sfactoria, and that the proceeds thereof be brought into the registry of the court.

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, in support of the motion.—Here the plaintiff's claim is for a liquidated demand, and, consequently, under Order XXIX., rule 2, of the Supreme Court Rules, the defendant having made default in pleading, the plaintiff becomes entitled to sign final judgment; that is to say, if the rule applies to proceedings in rem. It is true there may be grave objections to judgment being signed in such a manner in these cases; as, for instance, a friend of the plaintiffs might collusively appear in the action and make default in pleading, and judgment go against a ship which had never been liable. As the decree would go against all the world, it is perhaps desirable that some proof of the validity of the claim should be given. This might be done either by giving final judgment subject to a reference, or by ordering the action to be set down for hearing on proof by affidavit, which the court would have power to do under Order XXXVII., rule 1, of the Supreme Court Rules. At the same time, we are within the words of the rule before quoted.

Sir R. Phillimore.—I do not think that Order XXIX., rule 2, was ever intended to apply to proceedings in rem. To so apply it would be dangerous, as the court might condemn and sell the wrong ship. There ought to be some inquiry in such cases. I shall order the case to stand over for hearing on the next motion day, when proof of the plaintiff's claim can be given on affidavit. The court, according to the old practice of the Court of Admiralty, has power to order evidence to be taken on affidavit, independently of Order XXXVII., rule 1.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Englewood, Ince and Greening.

Priv. Co.]

THE NORMA.

[Priv. Co.]

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Reported by J. P. ASHALL and F. W. RAINE, Esq.,
Barristers-at-Law

Thursday, March 30, 1876.

(Present, the Rt. Hons. Sir J. W. COLVILLE, Sir E. J. PHILLIMORE, Sir MONTAGUE SMITH, and Sir ROBERT COLLIER.)

THE NORMA.

Collision—Practice—Vice-Admiralty Courts—Preliminary Acts—Examination of witnesses—Rule of the road—Regulations for preventing collisions at Sea, Arts. 15, 16, 18.

The form of preliminary Acts now in use in the High Court of Justice in collision cases should be used in similar cases in the Vice-Admiralty Courts.

In collision cases in the Vice-Admiralty Courts witnesses should, as far as possible, be examined viva voce before the court, not upon written interrogatories before an officer of the court prior to the hearing.

A sailing vessel, meeting a steamer, is bound to keep her course, and it is not the rule of the road that she should port her helm on nearing the steamer, such a deviation from the rules being allowed only under circumstances of immediate danger.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Canada, in a suit brought by the respondents against the appellant for damages sustained by them by reason of a collision between the James Seed, carrying a cargo of copper, of which the respondents were owners, and the Norma, of which the appellant is owner.

The collision in question occurred in the river St. Lawrence, between Bic and Quebec, and between 10 and 11 p.m. of the 11th Aug. 1874. The wind was S.W. or S.W. by W., a moderate breeze; the night was clear, and the tide was ebb. The James Seed, a three-masted schooner, of 156 tons, with a crew of eight hands and a pilot, was going down, and the Norma, a steamship, of 653 tons, with a crew of twenty hands and a pilot, was going up the river. Both vessels had their proper regulation lights. The parts of the two vessels which first came in collision were the port-bow of the James Seed and some part of the starboard-bow of the Norma. The James Seed sunk almost immediately, with the loss of five lives.

On these points both parties were agreed.

The remaining facts of the case as stated in the preliminary Act and libel filed on behalf of the respondents, were substantially as follows:

The James Seed, making about four knots an hour, was heading N.E. by E., when the bright and red lights of the Norma were observed from two to three miles off, about a point on the starboard-bow. The helm of the James Seed was put to port, and the lights were brought on the port-bow. The James Seed then steadied her helm and kept her course. After some time, the green light of Norma came in sight. Those on board the James Seed then hailed the Norma (which was then coming directly upon them), to port her helm, and put their own helm hard-a-port. The Norma, however, starboarded her helm, and without stopping or reversing her engines, came into collision with the James Seed, with violence, as to do the damage already mentioned.

The case of the Norma, as stated in the responsive allegation, filed on behalf of the plaintiffs, was as follows:

5. That at about half-past 10 o'clock at night, on said 11th Aug., the Norma, then going at the rate of seven knots per hour, and being a few miles from Bic, look-out man reported a light about two miles off, on the port bow, which was first supposed to be a light, but which subsequently proved to be a gun of a vessel coming down the river, which said vessel was subsequently ascertained to be the James Seed.

7. That, immediately upon the said light being reported, the said pilot, Joseph Laviole, perceiving vessel coming down the river to be a sailing vessel, the order to put the helm hard-a-starboard, which was obeyed, and the green light of the James Seed thereby brought about a point on the starboard of the Norma, the Norma, as a steam vessel, giving to the James Seed.

8. That the green light of the James Seed was visible to the people of the Norma until a few minutes before the collision, when suddenly the James Seed put her helm hard-a-port, bringing herself right across the bows of the Norma, and disclosing her red light.

9. That the people on board of the Norma sent those on board of the James Seed to put her helm to board, but the James Seed continued to pay off to board, keeping her helm hard-a-port.

10. That thereby a collision was rendered inevitable the Norma striking the James Seed in her forebody the James Seed sinking immediately, and carrying her the starboard anchor and sixty fathoms of the Norma, and making an immense hole in the fore compartment of the Norma, which for some time threatened the safety of the ship.

11. That immediately after there appeared any sign of collision the engines of the Norma were stopped, then reversed.

The cause came on for hearing before the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, assisted by two assessors, the evidence of several witnesses, taken before the registrar of the court previously, read, and the preliminary Acts were on. The preliminary Acts were those ordinarily in use in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, and did not contain all the questions and answers contained in the preliminary Acts in use in the High Court of Justice of England. The following were the questions: "VI. State and force of the tide;" "VIII. Lights, if any, carried by her;" "X. The lights, if any, of the other vessel which were first seen;" "XI. Whether any lights of the other vessel than those first seen came into view before collision." The learned judge submitted the questions to the nautical assessors, who, after the answers thereto, were as follows:

1st. Whether after the vessels sighted could they had time to take the necessary precautions to prevent the collision which followed? Ans. Yes.

2nd. Whether the steamer at any time, on seeing the schooner's light should have ported her helm and whether she pursued a proper course in putting it to starboard when she did? Ans. The steamer on seeing the schooner's light should have stopped a little on her port bow should have stopped her engines to ascertain the exact position of the schooner and then acted accordingly.

3rd. Whether the schooner was to be kept porting her helm instead of keeping her helm steady? Answer. The schooner in porting her helm followed the rule of the road and was not to be blamed.

4th. Whether the schooner by putting her helm to starboard was to be blamed for the collision? Answer. The schooner by putting her helm to starboard was to be blamed for the collision.

v. Co.]

THE NORMA.

[PRIV. CO.]

f the schooner's port helm? Answer. The er seeing that she was nearing the schooner idly should have stopped and reversed full instead of starboarding her helm, which had ffect of showing her side lights to the ner, and justified the latter in porting her

. Whether the steamer was to blame for not g stopped her engines earlier than she did? er. Yes.

. Whether the collision was inevitable or occasioned by the carelessness, mismanage- or want of proper skill on the part of both s, or of either and which of them? Answer. ollision was occasioned by want of caution xperience on the part of the steamer, which have avoided a collision by keeping to the ward or by stopping her engines in time, as the schooner in porting her helm, to shew ed light, was following the rule of the road, ore we consider the Norma is alone to learned judge then delivered judgment, , after setting out the facts and the above ons and answers, was as follows:—

ART. J.—It is beyond doubt that after sight- ch other both vessels continued their course within about half a mile of each other, and I dd that it appears to me that if neither had ted from her course then they would have clear, though they might have passed nearer it was prudent to do, the responsibility collision must therefore rest on the vessel altered her course at the eleventh hour. pilot and man at the helm of the Norma lish that they both saw the James Seed's light two miles off, and the mate deposes when the schooner's green light was on the Norma the people of the schooner have seen the masthead and red lights of eamer. This is proved to have been so by ilot of the James Seed. The chief officer of Norma says, "she (the schooner) would con- to see those lights until we starboarded and ht her on our starboard bow when she lose our red and see our green light, ur green light must have remained visible that time till the collision." Charles Dale, nan on the look-out on the Norma says, ctly after the Norma began to answer her ard helm the James Seed, which up to that ad shown her green light, then showed her ght." Thus the change in the lights which ishes the alteration of the course of these essels relatively to each other is attributed e witnesses who were themselves executing ange in the course and observing its effect action of the Norma's starboard helm, and to relieve the persons in charge of the said Seed of any imputation of having contri- to this altered and very dangerous condi- f things. It is made certain by the evidence he schooner, upon seeing the lights of the a, took her course and pursued it without ion until the steamer, then a short distance ened up her coloured lights, and "was seen g end on" on the schooner, when, in pursu- of the rule, she ported her helm. It is t certain from the evidence of the crew of Norma that the steamer saw the schooner's ght at a distance of about two miles, and e continued her course for a full half hour—so says the pilot—when she starboarded her helm and exhibited her coloured lights to the schooner. It does not appear to have been taken into calculation by the persons directing the course of the Norma that before the red light of the steamer was shut out and the green light substituted instead there would be an interval of time when both her coloured lights would appear to the persons on the schooner and show a condition involving the greatest danger of collision end on and making it a duty on the schooner to port her helm in compliance with the rule of the road. These, then, are all the circumstances influencing the relative positions of these two vessels immediately before the collision, which caused the schooner to sink on the spot, and the largest part of her crew to be drowned, to which the law is to be applied. The relative duties towards each other of these two vessels under the circumstances are to be found in the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

Art. 15.—"If two ships, one of which is a sailing ship and the other a steamship are proceeding in such directions as to involve risk of collision, the steamship shall keep out of the way of the sailing-ship."

Art. 16.—"Every steamship when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision and shall slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop reverse."

It was held in the case of The Ross (2 Wm. Rob. 1) that the expression "giving way" in the Trinity House Regulations means not crossing a vessel's bows, but going under her stern. The term used in the 15th article, "Shall keep out of the way," appears to me to correspond in meaning with "giving way." In that case a steam vessel having three lights and proceeding at the rate of ten knots an hour came into a collision with a sailing vessel having no light, and proceeding at the rate of four knots an hour. On discovering each other the sailing vessel ported her helm, and the steamship starboarded. The steamer was condemned in damages and costs. In the case of The James Watt (2 Wm. Rob. 270) a steam vessel discovered a sailing vessel approaching her, which from the direction and state of the wind she was aware must be sailing closehauled, but from the darkness of the night was unable to make out upon what tack. It was held she should (in order to comply with the general rule which obliges a steamer to give way to a sailing vessel) have at once stopped her engines until she had ascertained the exact course of the other vessel, and should not by mere surmise put her helm one way or the other. The defence set up on behalf of the steamer that she had ported her helm was not deemed sufficient. The first of these decisions held the steamer answerable for the collision for putting her helm astarboard instead of aport. The second held the steamer answerable though she had ported her helm, because she had not stopped her engines. Both of these decisions militate against the Norma. With these decisions, and the opinion of the Assessors, in which I concur to the full, I should have no hesitation in coming to a conclusion, but I am confirmed in my views by a decision in the Privy Council in the case of The Velasquez (L. Rep. 1 P. C. Rep. 494). This last case in its important features is identical with the present one. The steamer Velasquez was sighted by the Star of Ceylon at a sufficient distance to have avoided a collision, the steamer took no steps until the vessels were very near each other, when she starboarded her helm, and the sailing vessel ported her helm to avoid the collision, which, notwithstanding, took place. It was held that the steamer was alone to blame, as it was the duty of the steamer to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel provided she could do it either by starboarding or porting her helm, and that on the other hand it was the duty of the sailing vessel to keep her course, and that she could only be excused from deviating from it by showing that it was necessary to do so to avoid immediate danger. The Norma kept her course though the danger of this proceeding was apparent to the apprentice pilot whose suggestions as to the propriety of porting her helm before she had got so near was disregarded by the pilot. The Norma then, as the Velasquez, is chargeable with approaching too close, and is answerable for a manœuvre which threatening a collision end on imposed it as a duty on the schooner to port her helm, and leaves the steamer with the whole burden of the occurrence. I cannot do better than reproduce the words of Lord Westbury in the case of The City of Antwerp (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 25), "It is undoubtedly true in cases of collision between a sailing ship and a steamer that although the sailing ship may be found to have been guilty of misconduct, or not to have observed the sailing regulations, yet the steamer will be held culpable if it appears that it was in her power to have avoided the collision. It cannot be too much insisted on that it is the duty of the steamer where there is risk of collision, whatever may be the conduct of the sailing vessel, to do everything in her power that can be done consistently with her own safety to avoid the collision." To this extent does the law make responsibility weigh upon steamers, and as they are independent of the wind and always under command, it seems humane and just it should be so. Applying these principles of law to the facts proved in these cases as the Norma saw the green light of the James Seed two miles off, when the combined speed at which they were approaching was twelve miles an hour, and a period of time of ten minutes only was afforded to take the precautions necessary to avoid collision, I am of opinion the Norma should then have slackened speed so as to be in a condition to stop or reverse her engines if upon the nearer approach of the vessels the safety of the sailing vessel required a resort to that expedient (The James Watt, ubi sup.). Instead of this the Norma proceeded at full speed down to the moment of collision. I am further of opinion that the attempt to cross the bows of the schooner at the last moment was unseamanlike and culpably hazardous, as the event has demonstrated, and lastly the Norma is answerable when so near the schooner as to involve risk of collision for having starboarded her helm when the rule required her to port. (The Rose, The Velasquez) (ubi sup.). For these acts of omission and commission the owner of the Norma is answerable to the promoters for the catastrophe. I decree against the owner of the Norma, and order the usual reference in both cases to the registrar and merchants to report on the damage.

PRIV. Co.]

THE NORMA.

[PRIV.]

From this judgment the owners of the Norma appealed, for the following, amongst other, reasons:

1. Because the learned judge of the court below held that the steamer was bound to get out of the way of the James Seed by porting her helm, whereas she was entitled to do so either by porting, or starboarding, or keeping on as those on board her thought fit.
2. Because the steamer, by starboarding her helm, performed the duty imposed on her of keeping out of the way of the James Seed, and the evidence proved there would not have been a collision if the James Seed had performed her duty by keeping her course.
3. Because the learned judge of the court below held that the James Seed was justified, according to a rule of the road, in porting and hard porting her helm, whereas there is not and was not any such rule.
4. Because the learned judge was wrong in holding that the steamer should have stopped or slackened speed at the time he holds in that behalf.
5. Because the evidence proved that the collision was not occasioned by any negligent or improper navigation on the part of the Norma.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for appellants.

Brett, Q.C. and W. G. F. Phillimore, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by Sir R. J. PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Quebec, in a suit for damages, the consequence of a collision between two vessels, the James Seed, a sailing vessel, and the Norma, steamship.

Before their Lordships approach the consideration of the merits of this case they desire to say a few words with respect to the pleadings and the manner of taking evidence in the court below. The "Preliminary Acts," the operation of which has been eminently conducive to the ascertainment of truth in these cases, are in the same form as what was first tried in the High Court of Admiralty. Since that time, sections 6, 8, 10, 11, which form an important part of the present Preliminary Acts in the English Court of Admiralty, have been introduced, and their Lordships think that it would be expedient to introduce similar regulations in the practice of the Vice-Admiralty Courts; but their Lordships must express a hope that in subsequent suits this defect will be remedied. The mode of taking the evidence before the Registrar and the use of written interrogatories, which, in their Lordships' opinion, be advantageously changed for the practice of the vivâ voce examination of witnesses at the hearing before the judge, is to decide the case, in causes where it was possible to obtain their attendance for the purpose without inconvenience or additional expense, a practice which has been for a long time prevalent in the English Court of Admiralty, and attended with very beneficial results.

The judge of the court below pronounced against the Norma—the steamship—to be alone to blame in the collision. From this judgment the owners of the Norma have appealed to this court. The collision occurred in the river St. Lawrence between ten and eleven o'clock of the night of the 11th Aug. 1874, five or six miles from a place called Bic. The James Seed, a masted schooner of 156 tons, with a crew of eight hands, and a pilot, was going down the river; the Norma, a steamship of 653 tons, with a crew of twenty hands and a pilot, was coming up the river; the two vessels were approaching each other, not exactly, but within about a point, on opposite courses. Both vessels had their proper lights. The weather was fine and clear, and a starlight night, and there was a moon.

[No.]

PEARSON v. THE COMMERCIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

south-west under the influence of which oner was approaching Bic—having pre-aken in her foresail—at the rate of about ts through the water. At a distance of e miles from the Bicquette light, the pilot the schooner saw through his glass the d light, and the red light of the steamer o miles off and about a point on his star-w. At the same distance the “look-out” d the steamer reported a bright light her port bow. The schooner, under the ders, ported enough to bring the steamer’s id red lights a little on her port bow; her s then steadied, and she kept her course hin half a mile of the steamer, when the ghts of that vessel came in sight; the s helm was then ported and hard-ported, steamer was hailed to port; she did not nd struck with her stem and starboard schooner’s port bow so severe a blow ank directly, and five of her crew happily drowned. To return to the the bright light which had been reported on her port bow proved, as the vessels ed each other, to be a green light; the continued her course at a speed of seven 1 hour for some minutes, when, at a of about half a mile, her pilot gave the starboard and the collision took place in described.

ontention of the respondents (the plain-he court below) was that the collision was y the starboarding and the continuance of d of the steamer. The contention on the he appellants (the defendants in the court as that the collision was caused by the of the schooner.

earned judge was assisted by nautical s, to whom he submitted various ques-their answer to which was, in sub-that the steamer should have stopped and full speed instead of starboarding, and schooner followed what they called the the road in porting her helm, and there not to blame. The learned judge unely adopted this latter premiss, and, as he l, supported it by reference to certain of the Regulations for preventing Col-t Sea. He cited Article 15, which is: “If os, one of which is a sailing ship and the steam ship, are proceeding in such direc-to invoke risk of collision, the steam ship ep out of the way of the sailing ship;” icle 16, which says that, “every steam en approaching another ship so as to risk of collision shall slacken her speed, cessary, stop and reverse.” The learned mitted to notice the 18th Article, which, s it concerns the present case, is, “where ove rules one of two ships is to keep he way, the other shall keep her course.” entire mistake as to the existing law to that it is the duty of a sailing vessel when a steamer to port her helm; it is her keep her course. And if the conclusion the learned judge arrived could only be d by adopting the grounds upon which us mainly to have founded it, it would be of their Lordships to recommend Her to reverse the sentence; but their Lord-e of opinion in this case that though the g is partially incorrect, the conclusion is, on the whole, right. Their Lordships, after conference with their nautical assessors, are of opinion, on the one hand, that the first porting of her helm by the schooner was, at the least, having regard to the distance and the degree, an innocent manœuvre; and, on the other hand, that it is not proved that the schooner’s red light was seen on board the steamer. But their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the steamer is to blame for having approached too close to the schooner before she altered her helm; that she did wrong in continuing up to so late a period the position of danger and embarrassment which exists when the green light on one vessel is opposed to the red light on another. The steamer came so close that she had not time to go off more than a point and a half under her starboard helm. The nautical assessors think that if she had starboarded a quarter of a mile off she would have cleared the schooner; and with regard to the second porting of the schooner almost in the moment of collision, they think that in the circumstances it was the best manœuvre she could have adopted.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the court below, and to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Thos. Cooper.

Solicitors for the respondent, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 15 and 20, 1876.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lords CHELMSFORD, PENZANCE, and O’HAGAN.)

PEARSON v. THE COMMERCIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

ERROR FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER IN ENGLAND.

Ship—Fire policy—Construction—Localization of policy.

A ship belonging to the appellant was insured against fire with the respondents by a time policy. In the policy the ship was described as “lying in the Victoria Docks, London, with liberty to go into dry dock.” The ship went into dry dock, and after leaving the dry dock was moored for some time in the river in order that certain repairs might be done which were usually done in the river, but might have been done, though at a greater cost, in the Victoria Docks. While so moored the ship was completely destroyed by fire. Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the loss was not covered by the policy.

THE plaintiff had effected a policy of insurance against fire with the defendants on the steamship Indian Empire for three months from May 14th, 1862. The ship was described in the policy as “lying in the Victoria Docks, London, with liberty to go into dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of the policy.” The Indian Empire was a paddle steamer of very large size, of 2000 tons, 249ft. long, and 60ft. beam, and it was found that the only dry dock in the Thames capable of receiving a ship of that size was Lungley’s dry dock at Deptford, two miles higher up the river than the Vict Dock, and to enter this dock it was necessar remove the lower part of the paddle wheels. This was done in the Victoria Docks, and the ship was towed up to Lungley's Dock, and after the repairs there were finished, she was towed down the river again to a point 600yds. or 700yds. from the entrance to the Victoria Docks, and moored there, in order that the halves of the paddle wheels might be replaced. While so moored she was burnt. The present action was brought on the policy. It was proved that it was usual to replace the paddles in such cases outside the docks, but that it might have been done inside at a much greater expense. The utmost despatch was used in replacing the paddles and the work was not quite finished when the fire happened. Evidence was given at the trial that great precautions were in force within the Victoria Docks to prevent accidents by fire.

The cause was tried before Erle, C.J., at the sittings in London after Trinity Term 1863, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, 10,000l.

This verdict was set aside by the Court of Common Pleas (Erle, C.J., Williams, and Keating, JJ.) as reported in 33 L. J. 85, C. P.; 9 L. T. Rep. N.S. 442; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 401, on the ground that on the true construction of the policy the ship was not covered at the time of the loss; and in June 1873 this decision was affirmed by the Court of Exchequer Chamber (Kelly, C.B., Martin and Cleasby, BB., Blackburn, Quain, and Archibald, JJ.) as reported in ante, vol. 2, p. 100; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 548, and 29 L. T. Rep. N.S. 279.

From this judgment error was brought to the House of Lords.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Lanyon, for the plaintiff in error, argued that the ship was covered by the policy up to the 14th Aug., and that the "liberty" given by the policy must be taken to mean liberty to do what was usual under the circumstances, not only what was strictly necessary, and that underwriters are bound to know the circumstances of the trade to which their policy relates. They cited

Noble v. Kennoway, Doug. 492;

Bouillon v. Lupton, 15 C. B., N. S., 113; 33 L. J. 37, C. P.;

Pelly v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 1 Burr. 341;

Bond v. Gonsales, 2 Salk. 445;

Vullance v. Dewar, 1 Camp. 503;

Moxon v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 200;

Lindsay v. Janson, 4 H. & N. 699;

Newman v. Cazalet, Park on Ins. 900;

Long v. Allen, Ibid. 797;

Salvador v. Hopkins, 3 Burr. 1707;

And the following American authorities:

Webb v. National Fire Insurance Company, 2 Sand. N. Y. 497;

Fitchburg Railway Company v. Charlestown Insurance Company, 7 Gray, Mass. 64; and also Phillips on Insurance, vol. 1, p. 489.

Cohen, Q.C., J. C. Mathew (Benjamin, Q.C. with them), for the defendants in error, maintained that this was a localised fire policy, and that the analogy of voyage policies was false. The risk must be clearly present to the minds of both parties: (See Rodocanachi v. Elliott, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 21, p. 399; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 840; 31 ib., 239.) The policy only covered what was necessary for the transit to and from the dry dock. Usage may be resorted to for the purpose of explaining the terms of a policy, but not in express disregard of them; the risk not be altered.

Watkin Williams, Q.C., in reply.

June 20.—Their Lordships gave judgment follows:

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My the insurance in this case was an insurance fire, effected by the appellants with the dents on a large paddle-steamer called the Empire, which so long ago as the year 1862 the appellant was proceeding to have repaired port of London.

The policy is a time policy for three months from 14th May 1862 till 14th Aug. 1862. The insurance, however, does not protect the ship wherever it might be, or wherever it might be in the port of London. The ship is confined and localised for the purpose of the risk by the words, "lying in the Victoria Docks, with liberty to go into dry dock, and lig boiler fires once or twice during the currency of this policy."

The ship is, therefore, covered by the policy during the three months so long as it is lying in the Victoria docks, and so long as it is in the dock, or at all events in a dry dock in the port of London. Nothing is expressly said as to the insurance attaching while the ship goes from the Victoria Dock into dry dock, but the court have held, and as it appears to me rightly, that the liberty to go into dry dock necessarily carries with it the protection of the insurance while the ship should be in transit from the Victoria Docks to the dry dock and back again.

I think, further, there can be no doubt that the transit to and from the dry dock the ship would be at liberty to do anything and everything usual under the circumstances for the accomplishment of the end in view, namely, the transit from the dry dock. Any delay usual and necessary under the circumstances, any deviation usually or necessarily made from the straight line, provided delay and deviation are connected with and tend to the attainment of the end in view, in my opinion be justifiable under the words of the policy which I have read. A delay or deviation of this kind would fairly come within the words of Lord Mansfield in the case of Perkins v. The Royal Exchange Assurance (ubi supra), "it is absurd to suppose that when the end is the usual means of attaining it are meant to be excluded." If on the other hand a delay in transit to or from the dry docks were to be treated not as part of the usual and ordinary mode of effecting the transit, but for some collateral object or purpose, then, in my opinion, however usual and convenient a delay for the purpose of attaining that collateral object might be, the ship would not, during the delay, be covered by the policy.

It is unnecessary to speculate whether the risk would or would not be greater when the ship was in the river than when it was in the dock. There is, as it seems to me, evidence that the risk would be greater in the former case than in the latter, but it is sufficient to say that the respondents have defined the risk which they were willing to undertake, and that risk was enlarged beyond the ordinary meaning of the words upon any theory that the difference in the risk is immaterial.

Applying these observations to the

H. OF L.]

PEARSON v. THE COMMERCIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

present case, your lordships find that the dock called "Lunley's Dry Dock" was the only dry dock in the Thames which could take in the Indian Empire, and that even into this dock the ship could not be received without taking off the lower half of the paddle-wheels. Accordingly the lower halves of the paddle-wheels were taken off in the Victoria Docks, and having thus been made ready for the dry dock, it was towed two miles up the Thames from the Victoria Docks to Lunley's Dry Dock, and the repairs were proceeded with, and, so far as they were to be done in the dry dock, were completed there.

The ship was then taken out of the dry dock, and it being intended to take her back to the Victoria Docks, there was nothing to prevent her being taken back there at once, and the halves of the paddle-wheels might have been replaced, just as they had been removed, in that dock. In place, however, of being towed back to the Victoria Docks, it was towed still further up the river, and moored there; the paddle-wheels were brought from the Victoria Docks in a barge, and the work of replacing them was proceeded with in the river. While this was being done the repairs to the masts, rigging, and capstans of the ship, and other carpenters and joiners' work, were continued at the same time, and at the end of ten days, before the paddles were completely replaced, the ship was burnt.

It is found by the case that it is usual after a ship whose paddles have been removed is taken out of dry dock to moor it in the river, for the purpose of replacing the paddles. And it is also found that though the paddles could have been replaced equally well in the Victoria Docks, it would have cost four times as much as if done in the river. My Lords, I am clearly of opinion that the delay which was thus occasioned was a delay for a purpose altogether collateral. When the ship left the dry dock the course, if it was wished to maintain the insurance, was to bring her back to the Victoria Docks; and I assume that anything done in the usual course towards the attainment of this end would be within the insurance. But that which was done did not in any way contribute to that end. It may have been usual, and because it was economical it may have been convenient, but it did not in any way facilitate or conduce to the transit of the ship to the docks from which it had come.

My Lords, it was the unanimous opinion of the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer Chamber that the respondents, in the events which have happened, were not liable under this policy for the loss which occurred. I think there is no ground whatever for differing from their judgment, and I propose to your lordships that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

LORD CHELMSFORD.—My Lords, from the moment this case was fully opened it seemed to me impossible to doubt the propriety of the judgment in which no fewer than ten judges agreed. I can see no ground for the statement which was made to us on the part of the appellant, that the true point of the case was never submitted to the court. Everything which was urged in argument before us appears to me to have been brought under the consideration both of the Court of Common Pleas and of the Exchequer Chamber.

The question turns entirely on the construction of the policy, which is a localised time policy against fire upon the steamsip Indian Empire, lying in the Victoria Docks, London, with "liberty to go into any dry dock." The place to which the insurance principally applies is the Victoria Docks. This place the vessel is to be at liberty to leave only for the purpose of going into a dry dock for repairs. That object being satisfied, the policy seems to require that it should return without delay to its original situation, and be again "lying in the Victoria Docks." Of course the policy impliedly covers the permitted transit to and from one dock to the other. But if the parties contemplated, as it is clear they did, that during the currency of the policy the vessel would be usually lying in the Victoria Docks, when the intended repairs in the dry dock were completed it was the duty of the assured to return without delay to the Victoria Docks. Instead of doing so the ship was towed to a part of the river about 600yds. or 700yds. from the Victoria Docks, and there moored for ten days, during which time it was while so moored totally destroyed by fire. The loss, therefore, did not occur in the actual passing from the dry dock to the Victoria Docks.

But it is said for the appellant that according to the usual course of proceeding in the repair of steam vessels of the size of the one in question, the mooring in the Thames for the purpose of replacing the half of her paddle-wheels must be regarded either as a necessary incident to the transit from the dry dock, or must be taken to have been intended to be included in the policy.

But it seems to me that the precise terms of the policy afford no ground for such an argument. An insurance against fire necessarily has regard to the locality of the subject-matter of the policy, the risk being probably different according to the place where the subject of the insurance happens to be. In the present case it appears that there was greater risk where the loss happened than there would have been in the Victoria Docks, to which place the policy principally applied.

The parties cannot be said to have contracted with reference to the usual practice of large paddle steamers going into dry dock to remove a portion of their paddle-wheels, because it is stated in the special case that neither party knew that the vessel was of a width too great to admit of its entering the dock adjoining the Victoria Docks, where it would be expected it would go under the liberty to go into dry dock. And therefore the argument of the appellant must go the length of asserting that as it was an implied term of the policy that if it should be necessary to remove a portion of the paddle-wheels for the purpose of enabling the vessel to enter the dry dock, its return to the Victoria Docks might be delayed during the mooring in the Thames for any time that was required to complete the work of replacing the wheels.

But I agree with what was said by Blackburn, J., in the Exchequer Chamber, that if the parties wished to cover the risk of the ship while so moored, they should have provided for it by appropriate words in the policy. Whether the underwriters would have undertaken this risk it is impossible to say; as they were not aware that it would arise, there was of course no provision applicable to it.

It would be a strong implication to raise against the underwriters, that they necessarily contracted by the policy to extend the locality to which the insurance against fire was expressly confined, upon the ground of a usual practice of dealing with large steam vessels under repair, which they did not know would have to be resorted to on the part of the assured. More especially is this the case when it appears that the whole work upon the paddle wheels might have been done in the Victoria Docks. In fact the halves of the wheels were taken off in the Victoria Docks, and it is stated in the special case that the work of replacing them might have been equally well done in those docks, but that it would have cost four times as much as if done in the river; a very good reason for the assured running the risk of performing the work beyond the limits of the policy, but no reason at all for imposing upon the underwriters, by implication, an undertaking to accept a risk different and more extensive than that to which they expressly agreed to be liable. The policy only attached while the vessel was in the Victoria Docks or the dry dock, or was passing directly to and from one dock to the other. It therefore did not extend to the time the ship was moored in the Thames, and the underwriters are not liable for the loss which then occurred.

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment appealed from is right, and must be affirmed.

LORD PENZANCE.—My Lords, the protection intended to be given by this policy was limited expressly not only to a period of three months, but to a particular place, the Victoria Docks, in which the vessel was to lie. When lost it was not lying in that place, but was moored in the river, and the only question is whether, at the time of the loss, being moored in the river was a circumstance within the special liberty which had been reserved to the owner in the policy under the words "with liberty to go into dry dock."

The Court of Common Pleas held, as it seems to me very properly, that this liberty was not confined to any particular dry dock, and that the plaintiff might take the vessel to any convenient dry dock without losing the protection of the policy. The vessel therefore was justified within the limits of the liberty in proceeding to Lungley's Dry Dock, two miles away from the Victoria Docks, in which it was to lie, but it is contended that these limits were exceeded in the course taken with the vessel on its returning from the dry dock.

In construing the meaning and extent of this liberty, I think great latitude should be allowed. To state at length in writing all that the vessel might be intended to be allowed to do in going to the dry dock, in lying there while being repaired, and then returning, the length of time to be occupied, and all that was to be done in various alternative events, would be the work of a lawyer, and a work that could not be comprised in any but a very lengthy document. The convenience of mercantile transactions makes this impossible in many cases, and in this mercantile contract of insurance especially, it is always the custom to express the mutual bargain in short and conventional terms.

In construing such terms it is always to be borne in mind that the object of insurance is indemnity from the risks attending some commercial adventure or operation which the owner of the subject of insurance is engaged upon; and it is well understood by both parties that the desire and object of the assured is that the policy extend to all such risks of the character against, as may arise by the adventure or operation being carried out in the usual and ordinary manner. The assured therefore is not intended to be bound to make his mode of carrying the adventure conform to the words of the rigidly construed and confined to what is absolutely necessary, but the general words of the policy are intended to be construed so as to conform to the usual and ordinary method of pursuing the adventure.

This, as I understand it, is the principle governing the cases on voyage policies which have been cited; they are all instances of a policy being extended to cover proceedings which are usual and ordinary in the course of performing the voyage assured, though the exact words of the policy did not extend to them, or were adverse to them. To the extent, therefore, the principle involved in these cases, I think it is applicable to the present case, although I think that this "liberty to go into dry dock" should be said to have all the incidents of a policy.

It follows from this that the vessel in proceeding to Lungley's Dry Dock, in being repaired and in returning to the Victoria Docks, was protected so long as it was engaged in doing merely what was necessary, but what was ordinary and usual for these purposes. If, for instance, it was usual, though not necessary, to take off the paddle wheels, as is admitted to have been the case here before entering the dry dock further, if, in order to do that, it had been necessary for the vessel to lie a certain time in the river outside the dock while it was being done, I should have thought that the vessel would have been protected in doing so, because it was taking the usual course for the purpose of going into the dry dock and being repaired. But when the repairs were completed, or so far completed as they were intended to be in the dry dock, and the vessel was brought out of that dock again, all that remained to be done within the liberty contained in the policy was to return to the Victoria Docks. Here, again, if it had been usual to wait in the river, or to perform the passage in any particular way, thereby encountering a delay which was usual but not necessary, and the vessel had been lost, I should still have thought that it would have been protected.

But what the vessel really did was to stop for the time, returning to the Victoria Docks and remaining for some days in the river for the purpose of a certain repair, namely putting on of the half paddle wheels which had been taken off, a purpose which had no connection with returning to the Victoria Docks, and was in no way even ancillary to getting there. I am admitted that it is usual for shipowners to do this species of work done in the river instead of in a dock, because it is cheaper; but it cannot be said that a delay for that purpose was the usual course of vessels moving from one dock to the other.

It appears to me, therefore, that the vessel was in the river, during which the vessel was being repaired, was created for a purpose apart from the independent of, the liberty to go into the dry dock to be repaired there, and then to return to the Victoria Docks, which had been conceded to the assured.

H. OF L.]

PEARSON v. THE COMMERCIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

policy, and that the protection of the policy was consequently lost.

Lord O'HAGAN.—My Lords, I am of the same opinion.

The question is one of construction, and we must endeavour to ascertain from its terms the intentions of the parties to the policy of insurance upon this steamship, the Indian Empire. The facts are undisputed, and the words of the policy, if they are literally taken, import merely a contract to insure the ship for a period of three months against loss by fire whilst lying in the Victoria Docks, and whilst going into dry dock, according to the liberty specifically granted for that purpose. This is all that the words expressly convey, but I quite concur with the counsel for the appellant that they imply a liberty to return from the dry dock, and are an undertaking to insure during the transit back again. The real matter for decision is whether the ship when burnt was returning to the Victoria Docks, within the implied meaning of the policy, and according to the true contract of the parties.

Now it is found in the case that the vessel, having been taken out of the dry dock, was "towed up the river to the Government buoy off Deptford, about six or seven hundred yards off the Victoria Docks, and altogether out of the course from Lungley's Dock to the Victoria Docks, and there moored, for the purpose of having the lower parts of the paddle wheels replaced." So that we find the vessel removed to the place at which it was destroyed by a course altogether different from that to the Victoria Docks, and for a purpose wholly alien from that of returning thither. I feel it impossible to hold that in such circumstances it was covered by a policy which, even assuming that the doubt of one of the ablest judges of England (Blackburn, J.), whether the vessel was insured while passing from the dry dock to the Victoria Docks, should be, as I think it should be, disregarded, only assured the vessel during that passage. It had made, as I have said, a totally different passage, with a totally different object. I do not think the policy was ever designed to insure the ship in a condition of facts which it does not profess to contemplate, and which the parties to it could not have foreseen.

It is said that such contracts should be construed liberally, and for the interests of commerce; this view has not improperly been entertained in certain cases. But it can never justify indifference to the real purpose of a policy, or warrant the recognition of an obligation which was not directly, or by reasonable implication, imposed by its terms, when those terms are fairly interpreted according to their natural and ordinary meaning. Here the parties were vigilant to specify the risks they undertook, by providing for "liberty to go into dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of the policy;" and we, in my opinion, are not free to add another material condition to their contract, and say that this carefully limited liberty would authorise the taking of the vessel wholly out of the course of passage to the dry dock and back again, with the manifest increase of danger of her destruction. The case, by setting forth the precautions taken in the Victoria Docks to prevent or extinguish fires, shows the nature of this increase very clearly. Watchmen at all hours, policemen and other persons trained to the use of fire engines, and carpenters ready to scuttle ships on fire, with an ample supply of water, diminished the risks of fire in the Victoria Docks; while in the river those appliances were wanting, and in the particular case of the Indian Empire nearly an hour elapsed between the breaking out of the fire and the arrival of one of the three floating engines placed at considerable distances from each other, and alone available to control the conflagration, which probably from that delay resulted in the loss of the ship. Without discussing the question of the admissibility of evidence on the one side or the other, these facts are persuasive to show that the effect of the policy, according to the view of the appellant, must have been to burden the respondents with a liability for risks far more serious than those for which they would have had to answer on their own construction of it; and it is to my mind quite plain that when it was framed such larger risks were not in contemplation of either insurer or insured. Neither of them knew that the width of the Indian Empire was too great to allow it to go into the graving dock, which was close to the Victoria Docks, and both of them had in view the prompt passage to the "Thames Graving Dock," by pontoons and hydraulic pressure, which, if they could have been applied, would have obviated the necessity of taking off the lower half of the paddle wheels, and removing the ship to "Lungley's Dry Dock," and would have prevented the unfortunate transfer up the river to the place at which it was burned. They expected a prompt, quick, and safe exercise of the privilege of going into dry dock, and we may assume that the premium was arranged accordingly.

Can we say that if the size of the vessel, and the effect of that in inducing removal first to a distant dry dock, and then to an unguarded portion of the river, far from the Victoria Docks had been known, a heavier rate would not more properly have protected the insurer? He might not have accepted the risk at all, or he might have accepted it on terms more favourable to himself, and more onerous to the assured.

And on this point we should remember that the vessel might have been brought back immediately and directly to the Victoria Docks, and refitted there with an avoidance of the greater perils to which I have adverted; but that the appellant deviated from this proper course, took the ship to a place of danger, and delayed it long upon the river, not from any necessity or difficulty in doing otherwise, but simply to save himself the fourfold expense which would have been incurred by an immediate return to the safer Victoria Docks. If he chose to act in this way, and solely for his own apparent advantage, it does not seem unreasonable that the resulting loss should fall on him, rather than on the insurers, who never contracted to sustain it under such circumstances.

The authorities on the subject of usage have been already sufficiently discussed. They do not appear to me to apply to the circumstances before us. The analogy of voyage policies is not a true one, and we must deal with this case according to the contract of the parties. It may be right and reasonable that a usage known to exist, which affects directly the progress of a voyage, or the dealing with a mercantile venture, should be held to be contemplated by insurers, and to regulate more or less their liabilities; but it must be a usage not collateral to, and unconnected with the voyage which is the subject of insurance. Here the custom of merchants to save money by refitting a ship in the river rather than in the docks had nothing to do with the specific contract of the insurer to cover a vessel in the Victoria Docks, in the dry dock, and in the passage from one to the other; he did not cover it in a place different from any of these, to which it had been taken by the insured's own option, and for his own interest. I think, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

C.P. Div.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[C.P.]

Judgment appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Tatham, Oblein, and Nash.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, and CYRIL DODD, Esqrs., Barriers-at-Law.

Feb. 10 and 21, and June 14, 1876.

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

Mortgage of ship—Omission to register—Rights of mortgagee as against assignee of freight.

A mortgage of a ship transfers the ownership, so far as to entitle the mortgagee to the whole of the mortgagor's interest as security for his money.

The only effect of the omission to register a mortgage of a ship is to postpone it to a subsequently registered mortgage.

A mortgagee of the ship is entitled to freight as against an assignee of freight by an assignment made after the mortgage, but before its registration.

A ship was mortgaged to plaintiffs. Afterwards defendants advanced money on the security of the cargo without notice of plaintiffs' mortgage. Defendants and the mortgagor then sold the cargo to J., on the terms that 55s. a ton freight should be paid. An assignment of freight was made to defendants as security for their advances. The ship was then mortgaged to H., who registered his mortgage. Afterwards plaintiffs registered their mortgage. Defendants, by arrangement, acquired J.'s rights. H. and plaintiffs took possession; H., being satisfied with the ship as security, made no claim to freight.

Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to the freight of 55s. a ton as against defendants, notwithstanding their omission to register their mortgage.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of the court in an action brought by the plaintiffs as mortgagees of the ship Stonehouse, to recover money alleged to be due to them from the defendants in respect of freight.

1. The plaintiffs are merchants, carrying on business under the style or firm of James Wyllie and Co., in London. The defendants are corn-factors and brokers, carrying on business under the style or firm of Burrows and Perks, in London. The action is brought by the plaintiff claim as mortgagees in possession of the Stonehouse, to recover moneys alleged to have come due and payable in respect of freight the defendants under the circumstances hereafter appearing.

2. Mr. John Morison, of Billiter-street, in London, under the style or firm of John Morison and Co., was, during the period covered by this case, registered owner of 60-64ths of the Stonehouse. Mr. Bley, the captain, being the registered owner of the remaining 4-64ths.

3. On the 1st Dec. 1874, Morison executed a mortgage of his 60-64ths of the ship in favour of the plaintiffs to secure 7500*l.* and interest account current, and any further sum might become due.

4. The Stonehouse was at this time at San Francisco seeking employment, and the market being disorganised owing to a commercial failure, her captain, Bleg, determined rather than accept the low offers of freight which were being made in the thick of the crisis, to take a cargo of wheat "on account of the ship," but by its sale in England to realise a better result than what was available as freight at the port of loading.

5. Accordingly, a cargo of 23,644 sacks of wheat (being the cargo in respect of which the plaintiff claim arises), was obtained through Messrs. Parrott and Co., merchants at San Francisco, shipped on board the Stonehouse. The invoice dated the 2nd Dec. 1874, stated that the cargo was shipped by Parrott and Co. on board the Stonehouse, bound to Falmouth or Downs, under orders, consigned to order, that is, to the order of Parrott and Co. (they thus keeping control of the cargo until the money found by them for purchase thereof should be paid), by order of John Morison and Co. for account and risk of whom it may concern.

6. Bills of lading were made out for the cargo deliverable to the order of, and were handed to Parrott and Co., stating the freight payable on delivery to be 1*s.* per ton. Parrott and Co. simultaneously drew bills of exchange on Morison sixty days' sight against the wheat, to realise themselves for the price of the wheat, and the commission, and sold the bills of exchange and three bills of lading, indorsed by Parrott and Co. attached thereto, to the Bank of British North America.

7. It is a common practice in many places for foreign shippers, when a cargo is to be shipped "for the account of the ship," to draw bills of lading for a nominal instead of a blank freight, there being an opinion among merchants that a blank freight is not a desirable thing.

8. On or about the 3rd Dec. 1874, the Stonehouse sailed from San Francisco. The freight general at this date at San Francisco was only 55*s.* per ton; but the plaintiffs were informed by Morison that they would receive 6000*l.* for the freight of the Stonehouse. The defendants, however, did not know that Morison had given the plaintiffs any information on the subject, or that they had any interest in the cargo.

9. On the 21st Dec. 1874, Morison sent bills of exchange payable at the City and County Bank on the 22nd Feb. 1875.

C.P. Div.]

* KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[C.P. Div.]

10. On the 1st Jan. 1875, Morison effected two policies of insurance in respect of the Stonehouse, or freight valued at 4000*l.* and 1000*l.* respectively.

11. The sum necessary to meet the bills of exchange at maturity was 10,364*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*; and at some time in Dec. or the beginning of Jan., it had been arranged between Morison and the defendants that the defendants should advance to Morison the moneys necessary for the purpose, that the defendants in return should be at liberty to sell the cargo and receive the proceeds of sale on Morison's account, and that the bills of lading and policies of insurance should be deposited with the defendants as security for their advances.

12. Before making and carrying out this arrangement with Morison, the defendants searched the ship's register at the Custom House, and found that 60-64ths were registered in Morison's name, and that there was no incumbrance whatever on the register. The defendants had no notice in any way that Morison had mortgaged his shares in the Stonehouse.

13. On the 4th Jan. 1875 the defendants advanced to Morison 3000*l.*, and shortly afterwards, in pursuance of the arrangements then made, received from him the former of the two policies, being the policy on freight valued at 4000*l.*

14. On the 2nd Feb. 1875 Morison executed another mortgage in similar terms of his interest in the ship to the plaintiffs, to secure 4000*l.* and other advances. Morison subsequently, on the 2nd March 1875, further mortgaged his interest in the Stonehouse to Joseph Harrold, who registered his mortgage on the 3rd March 1875, and thus became the first mortgagee, the plaintiffs not having registered their mortgages until the 6th March 1875, as hereinafter mentioned.

15. On or about the 16th Feb. 1875 the defendants offered the cargo of wheat for sale to divers persons on cost freight and insurance terms, but did not succeed in obtaining a purchaser until on the 19th Feb. they effected a sale of the cargo on the terms hereinafter appearing.

16. On the 19th Feb. 1875 the defendants, on behalf of Morison, and on their own account to the extent of their advances, sold the cargo to Henry Jump and Sons, of Liverpool. The following is a copy of the contract signed by Harris Brothers and Co., brokers, on behalf of the buyers:

London, 19th Feb. 1875.

Bought of Messrs. John Morison and Co., through Messrs. Burrows and Perks, for Messrs. Henry Jump and Sons, Liverpool, a cargo of Californian wheat of fair average quality of the season's shipments when shipped. Shipped per Stonehouse, first class, from San Francisco, bill of lading dated about 2nd Dec. 1874, say 644 bags, containing 3,089,775*lb.*, at the price of 1*s.* 6*d.* per quarter of 500*lb.*, shipped, bags weighed and id for as wheat, including freight and insurance to any port in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, calling at Falmouth or the Downs for orders. Free to discharge afloat. No charge for damage or loss. Payment, cash in London within seven days, less account for unexpired portion of two months from this date at 5 per cent. per annum in exchange for bill of lading and policies of insurance (free of war risk) effected with approved underwriters, but for whose agency sellers are not responsible. Damage by sea, fire, or otherwise (if any) to be taken as sound. Invoice quantity is to be final. Sellers to have our brokerage half per cent. contract cancelled or not cancelled. Any average incurred before this date to be for account of and settled by sellers. Sellers to give policies of insurance for 3 per cent. over the invoice amount, including half per cent., and any amount over this to be for their account; three days for awaiting orders at port of call. To discharge according to the custom of the port. Should any dispute arise, it is agreed by buyer and seller to leave the same to be settled by two London cornfactors respectively chosen, with power to call in an umpire, whose decision is to be final. As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55*s.* per ton of 2240*lb.*, and invoice to be rendered accordingly.

HARRIS BROTHERS AND CO. Brokers.

17. The defendants would have had a difficulty in disposing of the cargo without allowing an amount equivalent to freight to remain unpaid until the vessel's arrival, and would not have obtained so large a price for it.

18. In accordance with the above contract an invoice was subsequently made out by Morison, of which the following is a copy:

Invoice of cargo of wheat, per Stonehouse, of San Francisco, sold to Messrs. Henry Jump and Sons, of Liverpool, as per contract of 19th Feb. 1875.

23,644 sacks of wheat, weighing 3,089,775*lb.*

6179½ qrs. at 43 s. 6 d. per 500 lb. .....	£	s.	d.
Freight on tons, 1379 7 1, 55 s. per 2240 lb. .....	3	793	5 0

	£	s.	d.
	29	647	5 5
Brokerage, ¼ per cent. ....		67	4 0

	£	s.	d.
	29	580	1 5

Interest from 26th Feb. to 19th April,
52 days, at 5 s. .....	68	4	10

	£	s.	d.
	29	511	16 7

BURROWS AND PERKS.

London, 22nd Feb. 1875.

19. On the 22nd Feb. 1875, Morison obtained a further advance from the defendants of 9000*l.*, making with the sum of 3000*l.* previously advanced, the sum of 12,000*l.* With such advance he paid the said bills of exchange at maturity, and received the bills of exchange and the bills of lading thereto attached from the London and County Bank, as arranged with the defendants.

20. On the 23rd Feb. 1875, in pursuance of such last-mentioned arrangement, Morison handed the bills of exchange, with the three bills of lading attached, to the defendants, and the following memorandum was endorsed on the bills of lading, and signed by Morison:—

We assign our interest in the within freight to Messrs Burrows and Perks, London, whose receipt or that of their appointed agents, will be sufficient discharge.

The freight assigned is at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton.

J. MORISON AND CO
24/2/75.

Such endorsement, although dated the 24th Feb. 1875, was not really made and signed until about the 26th Feb.

21. At the same time Morison handed to the defendants the aforesaid invoice, made out in pursuance of the contract with Messrs. H. Jump and Sons for transmission to the buyers, together with a letter to the defendants themselves, dated the 25th Feb. 1875, and enclosing the policies therein referred to, which was as follows:—

21, Billiter street, 25th Feb. 1875.

Messrs. Burrows and Perks—

Dear Sirs,—We further give you, in security, policy of insurance on wheat 1500*l.*, and on freights 1000*l.*, both in the Stonehouse. Should this vessel be lost we trust you will give us the collection on them, as well as on the former policies.

J. MORISON AND CO.

Both of the above policies are in the Marine Insurance Company.

22. The invoice was duly forwarded by the de

C.P. Div.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[C.

defendants to H. Jump and Sons, who thereupon paid the balance thereon appearing of 9511l. 16s. 7d., in pursuance of their contract. The cargo was subsequently resold by Jump and Sons to Ross F. Smyth and Co., of Liverpool.

23. On the 6th March 1875, the plaintiffs duly registered their mortgages.

24. On the 13th April 1875, the Stonehouse arrived at Falmouth for orders. She was then taken possession of by Mr. Harrold and the plaintiffs, as first and second mortgagees respectively. Mr. Harrold's debt being more than secured by the ship, he laid no claim to the freight. The Stonehouse proceeded in the possession of Harrold and the plaintiffs to Liverpool, where she arrived on the 19th April 1875, on which day Messrs. Lowless and Co., on behalf of the defendants, wrote a letter to the plaintiff's attorney, Messrs. Freshfields and Williams, as follows:—

Dear Sirs,—We have a telegram that this vessel (Stonehouse) is now off the port, and that the market is a falling one. Should there, therefore, be any difficulty in obtaining delivery, the purchasers may repudiate their bargain, and a loss of 1000l. might easily be sustained, in addition to the charges for landing and warehousing. Will you, therefore, please let us have your determination instantly. We are obliged to give you notice that our clients will seek to recover all damages sustained from Messrs. Wyllie and Co., and we have given you special notice of the circumstances, in order that our clients may be entitled to recover. We hope, however, that there will be no necessity for this.—LOWLESS & CO.

25. The plaintiffs refused to allow Messrs. Ross F. Smyth and Co. to take delivery of the cargo, except on payment of freight at 55s. per ton, and were prepared to protect themselves in the manner in the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1862; but to avoid such detention of the cargo, and the deterioration and expenses which would have been the result of it, the following agreement was made between the plaintiff and the defendants through their respective attorneys.

It is hereby agreed between Messrs. Freshfields and Williams, as representing Messrs. James Wyllie and Co., and Messrs. Lowless and Co., as representing Messrs. Burrows and Perks, that 3500l., being the amount of freight on the cargo of the ship Stonehouse, claimed by Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. as second mortgagees in possession of the Stonehouse, shall be paid into the London and Westminster Bank in the joint names of Messrs. Freshfields and Williams and Messrs. Lowless and Co., to abide the result of an action to be brought by Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. against Messrs. Burrows and Perks, who hereby admit, for the purposes of the action, that they are the owners of the cargo under the bill of lading thereof, and liable to pay whatever freight may be due thereon. The action to be commenced within thirty days from this date, and duly prosecuted. In the event of no action being brought within the time aforesaid, or of Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. not obtaining a verdict in the said action, the amount so deposited, with any interest thereon, is to be paid to Messrs. Burrows and Perks or order; and, in the event of Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. recovering a verdict for the said sum of 3500l., or any part thereof, the amount of such verdict is to be paid to them or order out of the sum deposited, and the balance (if any) to Messrs. Burrows and Perks or order.

It is admitted, for the purposes of the said action, that the amount of freight specified in the bill or bills of lading has been tendered, Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. to withdraw any stop which they may have put upon the goods on the money being deposited, Messrs. Burrows and Perks to have the same right of recovering interest on the sum to be deposited as if the money had been paid at the proper time into a wharfinger's hands under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act. Dated 19th April 1875.

FRESHFIELDS AND WILLIAMS.
LOWLESS AND CO.

26. It was subsequently found that 55s. per ton amounted to 3577l. 5s. 7d., the execution of the agreement and the of the 3577l. 5s. 7d. as subsequently agreed instead of 3500l., into the London and West Bank, the plaintiffs gave delivery of the

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to delivery except on payment of freight at 55s. per ton, or whether any freight on the said cargo beyond freight at the 55s. per ton. If the opinion of the court on this point should be in the affirmative, judgment to be entered for the plaintiffs for 3577l. with costs; if in the negative, for the defendants.

Feb. 10.—The case was argued by B. Q.C. (C. Bowen with him, for the plaintiffs) and Webster (Thesiger, Q.C. with him), for the defendants.

The court took time to consider, but afterwards desired that the case should be reargued on the point whether any equity was created as between the plaintiffs and the defendants by the fact that the defendants had searched the register, and found no incumbrance.

Feb. 21.—The case was accordingly reargued. The following are the authorities which were referred to in the course of the arguments:

Mercantile and Exchange Bank v. Gladstone, L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 233; Law Cas. O. S. 89;

Liverpool Marine Credit Company v. Wilson, vol. 1, p. 323; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717; 17 Ch. 507; 41 L. J. 798, Ch.;

Brown v. North, 8 Ex. 1; 22 L. J. 49, Ex.;

Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 552;

Brown v. Tanner, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621; 13 Ch. 597; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 94;

Gardner v. Cazenove, 1 H. & N. 423;

Dickinson v. Kitchen, 8 E. & B. 789;

Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 1 J. & H. 1;

Wilson v. Wilson, ante, vol. 1, p. 265; 26 L. T. N. S. 346; L. Rep. 14 Eq. 32; 41 L. J. 423, (C. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 37 (the former Merchant Shipping Act));

Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. ss. 57, 66, 69, 70, 71.

Cur. adv. n.

June 14.—The judgment of the court (by Archibald, and Lindley, J.J.) was delivered by LINDLEY, J.—The material facts are the following: On the 1st Dec. 1874, mortgage by Morison to the plaintiffs of a ship for 7500l. and further advance on 4th Jan. 1875, defendants advanced Morison 4000l. on security of cargo, without notice of the plaintiffs' mortgage. 2nd Feb. 1875, Morison mortgaged the ship to the plaintiffs for 4000l. further advances. 19th Feb. 1875, sale of cargo by defendants and Morison to Jump and Co. on terms of freight, being paid at 55s. per ton. 26th Feb. 1875, further advance by the defendants of 9000l. 26th Feb. 1875, assignment to them of the freight at 55s. per ton, as security for the advances. 2nd March 1875, Morison mortgaged the ship to Harrold. 3rd March 1875, Harrold's mortgage was registered. 6th March 1875, the plaintiffs registered their mortgage. 13th March 1875, the ship arrived, and Harrold and the plaintiffs took possession; Harrold being satisfied that the security on the ship did not claim the cargo. The arrangement was come to by which the defendants acquired Jump and Co.'s rights.

Consider, first, how the case was been no mortgage to Harrold. Two would then have arisen, viz., (1), would the mortgage be payable to the plaintiffs as first mortgagees? (2), if the plaintiffs have been entitled to the mortgage, have they been entitled to the freight against the defendants?

As to the first of these questions, it is true that although a nominal freight was payable by the bills of lading, the freight was bought for the owner of the contract with Jump and Co., the plaintiffs, who are agreed to be 55s. per ton, and assigned to the defendants as like-ly to be 55s. per ton. The defendants, however, they claim through Jump and the assignment to themselves, are on to deny that the sum payable as freight was to be 55s. per ton. It is true that the freight was not made payable when the ship was on board, nor when the defendants took possession of the cargo, and that it was made payable by an agreement entered into between the defendants and the plaintiffs, after the date of the plaintiffs' taking possession of the cargo, but there is no reason why the benefit of the freight should not accrue to the ship on his taking possession of the cargo, such possession he is entitled to under charter-parties or bills of lading. There is no difference material to the case between freight payable under such a bill of lading and freight payable under an agreement as that which is here to be made. No authority on this point was cited, either side, and, on principle, 55s. per ton, being the freight, must be so treated for the purpose of the case.

As to whether the plaintiffs as mortgagees, or the defendants as assignees, would have had the better title to the mortgage to Harrold turns on the question of a mortgage of a ship and of the omission of the plaintiffs to register the mortgage before the freight was paid to the defendants.

As to the plaintiffs was in the standard by which the ship was mortgaged to the plaintiffs is a well known word, transfer of property by way of security. Com. 158; Termes de la Ley. A mortgage is a transfer of all the interest in the thing mortgaged, but it is not absolute; it is made only for security, or in other words it is subject to redemption. Unless, therefore, there is any agreement to the contrary, the plaintiffs are required by their mortgage to the whole of the ship's interest in the ship, or in other words legal title to the ship as a security.

It is true that the effect of the instrument is to give the plaintiffs a legal title to the ship as a security. But the statutes relating to ships are framed with a view to determine what is the effect of registration or non-registration.

Under statutes relating to merchant ships and mortgages were made, and such bill of sale had no effect at law or in equity until registered. The cases collected in The Liverpool v. Turner, 1 J. & H. 150; 2 De

G. J. & J. 502; Macnablan, on Shipping, p. 39, 2nd edit. (n).

The Merchant Shipping Acts now in force, however, make a marked distinction between transfers of ships otherwise than by way of security and mortgages; and there are different groups of sections with distinct headings applicable to these two different subjects: (See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 55-65, which relate to transfers and transmissions, and ss. 66-75, which relate to mortgages.) Amongst other distinctions between these two modes of dealing with ships the following are the most noteworthy: A transfer (otherwise than by way of mortgage) must be by a bill of sale (sect. 55), and must be produced to the registrar for registration (sect. 57), and the transferee, if not a corporation, must make a declaration that he is a natural born British subject: (sect. 56, and schedule Form F.)

On the other hand a mortgage must be by a different kind of instrument (sect. 66), and there is no enactment requiring such instrument to be produced to the registrar (compare sect. 66 with sect. 57), and the mortgagee is not required to make any declaration as to his nationality.

It is true that in The Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (ubi sup.), Wood, V.C., and Lord Campbell, held that an unregistered equitable mortgage of a ship could not be enforced. But in consequence of this decision, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, was passed, and the validity of an unregistered mortgage as against all persons except registered transferees or mortgagees (see sects. 43 and 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.) can hardly now be disputed: (See Stapleton v. Haymen, 2 H. & C. 918.)

It appears from the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 itself, that a mortgagee has an interest in the ship capable of transmission by bankruptcy, death, or marriage (sect. 74); and on payment off of the debt secured by a registered mortgage and entry of the payment in the registry, the estate, if any, which passed to the mortgagee vests in the person in whom the same would have vested if the mortgage had not been made (sect. 68).

The mortgagee, however, is not to be deemed the owner of the ship, except so far as may be necessary for making her a security for the mortgage debt (sect. 70). This section was inserted for his protection against liability which might have attached to him by reason of his interest in the ship (see Dickinson v. Kitchen, 8 E. & B. 789); and would have been quite unnecessary if the mortgage transferred no interest in the sense of ownership in her to him; or in other words if it created a mere charge on her in his favour.

Sect. 72, which protects registered mortgagees of ships from the operation of the reputed ownership clauses of the Bankruptcy Acts, would also be unnecessary if a mortgagee had not such an interest in the ship as might render him her true owner within the meaning of those clauses.

Again, the right of a first registered mortgagee to take possession of the ship is too well settled

(c) Mortgages are still effected in the United States by bill of sale, and by the U. S. Statute of 1850, sect. 1: "No bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, or conveyance of any vessel, or part of any vessel of the United States, shall be valid against any person other than the grantor or mortgagee, his heirs and devisees, and persons having actual notice thereof, unless such bill of sale, mortgage, hypothecation, or conveyance be recorded in the office of the Controller of Customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled."—Ed.

to be capable of dispute; but the statute confers no such right in express terms, and it only exists by reason of the ownership transferred to the mortgagee by the mortgage itself; a mere charge would confer no such right. (See Fisher on Mortgages, p. 197.) But as a mortgagee, unless in possession, would have no power of sale if it were not expressly conferred upon him; and as the mortgage contains no such power, the statute itself expressly confers it on registered mortgagees (s. 71). But this affords no argument against the view that the mortgage itself confers on the mortgagee an interest in the sense of ownership in the ship herself.

The conclusion, then, to be drawn from the mortgage and the statute is that the mortgagee of a ship, like the mortgagee of any other property, acquires an ownership in the ship, viz., such ownership as the mortgagor has to give. A first mortgagee will thus acquire the whole ownership in the ship, but only of course as a security for his money. Second and other mortgagees will only acquire the interest left in the mortgagor, or in other words, his right to redeem. That right will be legal or equitable, according as the time for paying off the first mortgage has not yet arrived or has passed.

That this is the true nature of a mortgage of a ship appears not only from the above observations, but also from the following decisions: Dickinson v. Kitchen (8 E & B. 789); and Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson (ante vol. 1, p. 323; L. Rep. 7 Ch. 507).

The plaintiffs in this case having acquired by their mortgage the ownership of the ship, and that title being prior in point of date to the equitable assignment of the freight to the defendants, such title must prevail against them unless there be some sufficient reason to the contrary (see Rice v. Rice; 23 L. J. 289, Ch.). The only reason alleged is the non-registration of the plaintiffs' mortgage before the date of the assignment to defendants. If an unregistered mortgage of a ship were null and void, or if it had no legal effect before the time of registration, then the title of the plaintiffs would have accrued after that of the defendants, and would have to be postponed to theirs (see Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522). But the present Merchant Shipping Acts contain no enactment to this effect, and, as already observed, an unregistered mortgage is not now void; moreover, sect. 69 of the Act of 1854 enacts in effect that if there is more than one registered mortgage the mortgagees shall be entitled in priority one over the other according to the dates of registration. So far, therefore, as the Act itself is concerned, the only consequence of not registering a mortgage is to postpone it to a subsequent mortgage or a transfer, (see sect. 43), which is registered before it.

But it was contended that upon general principles of equity, and apart from any statutory enactment, the plaintiffs had lost their priority by reason of their own negligence in omitting to register the mortgage. The case states that the defendants searched the register before they advanced their money on the freight, and they were therefore really misled by the non-registration of the plaintiffs' security, and it is contended that this is one of those cases which ought to be decided according to the rule that whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of a third, the one who has enabled such third person to occasion must sustain it. This rule is a well known one both at law and in equity; but it is by no means easy of application, owing to the ambiguity of the word enabled. The plaintiffs did not enable their mortgage, but they were not a party or privy to any fraud on the defendants. The plaintiffs did not know that money obtained on the security of the freight was not the truth there is nothing save the mere omission to register which can be urged against the mortgagee, the mere omission by a person to do what which it is not his duty to do, but which would have prevented loss to another, is not sufficient to render such person liable for the loss nor to deprive him of any rights which he would otherwise have had against third parties. There are decisions to this effect both at law and in equity; one at law, Arnold v. The Bank (L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 578; 45 L. J. C. P.; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729), decided in the court during last sittings, where the same rule of law are fully considered. In equity it is settled now that the mere omission by a mortgagee to obtain the title deeds from the mortgagor is not sufficient to postpone the mortgage in favour of a subsequent mortgagee. bona fide advances his money in the belief that the property is unencumbered, and who obtains the title deeds, see Evans v. Bicknell (6 Ves. 173); Hewitt v. Loosemore (9 Hare. 449). To postpone the first mortgage in such cases there must be either fraud or such gross and wilful negligence as is equivalent to it.

In the present case but for Harrold's mortgage the plaintiffs would have had a clear legal title to the freight as against the defendants; and although if the plaintiffs had delayed their mortgage when it was made the defendants would not have been misled, the neither fraud nor such gross and wilful negligence is imputable to the plaintiffs as is sufficient to deprive them of their prior legal rights.

It remains to consider the effect of Harrold's mortgage. This although subsequent in point of date to the plaintiffs' mortgage was registered before it, and by sect. 69 of 17 and 18 Vict. c. 104, is entitled to priority over it. By reason of this priority Harrold became first mortgagee of the ship and became entitled to take possession of her and to receive her freight. Having paid the freight he would hold any surplus for the benefit of the subsequent incumbrancers according to their priorities. In point of fact Harrold was not to look to the ship only, and he laid no claim to the freight. But the plaintiffs had taken possession of the ship, and they claim the freight against second mortgagees. The priority given to Harrold cannot affect the rights of the plaintiffs as against the defendants, and Harrold, being satisfied, his mortgage may, for all practical purposes, be disregarded. The mortgage of the plaintiffs became as between them and Harrold a second mortgage instead of a first mortgage. The plaintiffs' mortgage continued to be a first mortgage always, prior in point of date to the mortgage of the defendants. Even though Harrold's mortgage became for all practical purposes a first mortgage against all persons an equitable mortgage from a legal mortgage, its priority in point of time remained unaffected. It was, indeed, unaffected by reason of Harrold's mortgage.

fs' mortgage, this last could only be an equitable mortgage, dating from the stration. But this contention is based roneous supposition that an unregis- age has no validity until it is registered. urther contended that the plaintiffs me second mortgagees had no right to ion of the ship, and that their right to , therefore, never perfected. But second mortgagee has no legal as dis- from equitable right to possession, and e cannot take possession as against a geet, yet as against all other persons ht to take possession, and can enforce f necessary by obtaining the appoint- ceiver, see Liverpool Marine Credit . Wilson, ante vol. 1, p. 323; L. Rep.

26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717, where of a second mortgagee of a ship are . In this particular case the plain- possession, and it was, therefore, to apply for a receiver; if they had en possession nor applied for a re- as the first mortgagee did take it was probably unnecessary for the do more than give him notice of their ould, after paying himself, hold all ies received by him in trust for the ecially interested in them according ities.

reasons our judgment is for the

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

for plaintiffs, Freshfield and Williams.
for the defendants, Lowndes and Co.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

y J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAINES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Nov. 6, 11, and 17, 1876.

THE VIRGO.

evitable accident—Inherent defect in machine—Costs.

of a vessel are not liable for damage another vessel in a collision occasioned dden breaking down of an apparatus there was an inherent latent defect, in e of any negligence in the user of the n Lindsay (ante, vol. 2, p. 118; L. . C. 338; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355) defence of inevitable accident is sus- e plaintiff will not be ordered to pay the ss he might have known that there was, n the merits, a good legal defence.

ause arising out of a collision which in the River Thames at 10 a.m. on 876, between the schooner Gem, which at anchor, and the screw steamship was steaming down the river. There erial difference between the parties as her, which was described as fine and Virgo struck the Gem, which was s the river, and head to wind, nearly with such violence that she sank, go of ice floated out. It was alleged ment of claim, on behalf of the Gem, lision and damage were caused by, and were wholly attributable to, the neglect, default, or mismanagement of the Virgo, or of those on board her, and that no blame in respect of the said collision or damage was attributable to the Gem, or to any of those on board her.

The General Steam Navigation Company, owners of the Virgo, in their statement of defence, alleged that the Virgo was proceeding about six knots an hour, and that the Gem was seen at a distance of half a mile, and continued:

4. As the Virgo approached the Gem, proper measures were taken in due time by starboarding the helm of the Virgo, to steer the Virgo clear of the Gem without danger of collision; but as the helm of the Virgo was being starboarded, her steering gear broke, and she could not be made to answer a starboard helm, and although her engines were promptly stopped and reversed full speed, she with her stem came into contact with the starboard side of the Gem.

5. The said breaking of the steering gear of the Virgo happened without any neglect or breach of duty on the part of the defendants, or of those on board the Virgo, and the said collision was not occasioned by any neglect, default, or mismanagement on the part of those on board the Virgo, and the said collision was the result of inevitable accident.

On the defence issue was joined, and the case came on before the Judge and Trinity Masters, on the 6th Nov. 1876.

It was proved that the Virgo had some short time previously to the accident ported to go ahead of a ketch which was working up the river, and had steadied again after doing so, and that the order was just given to "starboard" to clear the Gem, when it was reported to the master that something was wrong with the steering apparatus (a patent one), which would not move; the engines were at once stopped, and the master went aft, before he got aft it was reported to him that the wheel was all right, and thereupon the pilot started the engines on again as before. Almost immediately, when the engines had only made three revolutions, the master observed that the movement of the wheel produced no corresponding movement of the tiller and rudder, and he at once ordered the engines to be stopped, and reversed full speed, but before the way of the ship was stopped, the collision had happened.

After hearing the evidence and argument on the facts the Judge retired with the Trinity Masters and put the four following questions to them, which he afterwards stated in the course of his judgment:

(1) Was the Virgo under the circumstances bound to keep her engines stopped?

(2) Was she bound to anchor?

(3) Was she wrong in crossing the bows of the ketch?

(4) Was she going too fast?

All of which they answered in the negative. The argument of the point of law whether under these circumstances the Virgo was liable for the damage was postponed till

Nov. 13, 1876.—Milward, Q.C. and Edward Pollock, for plaintiffs.—It is for the defendants to prove inevitable accident, and they have not done so. The screw of the steering apparatus was not sufficient for its purpose, or it would not have broken with an ordinary strain. If the strain was extraordinary there was negligence on board the Virgo in putting her in a position when it became necessary to put on such a strain. There is no evidence to show how it was broken, and therefore negligence of some sort must be presumed to have broken it. After it was broken the accident might have been avoided if the Virgo had reversed her engines at once, or anchored, or even continued stopped, but notwithstanding distinct notice that something was wrong with the steering apparatus, the ship was allowed to proceed on a mere suggestion that it was all right again without any steps being taken to ascertain what had been wrong, and this in itself is negligence causing the collision. The cases where an inherent defect in a machine undiscoverable by ordinary means has been held to relieve the party using it from liability for damage done by it are cases of contract: Redhead v. Midland Railway Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 379; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 628). There the passenger carried could not make the carrier of passengers liable for anything outside of the contract, which was to use reasonable care; here there is no contract, it is a tort or trespass, and the defendant is liable for any damage he does. There is no reason why the plaintiff should suffer loss because the defendant uses a machine insufficient for its purpose. It has been laid down by the Privy Council that a plaintiff to avail himself of the defence of inevitable accident, "must take all such precautions as a man of ordinary prudence, and skill, exercising reasonable foresight, would use to avert danger:" (The William Lindsay, ante, vol. 2, p. 118; L. Rep. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355.) And in that case it was held that those conditions were satisfied; here it has not been shown that they were. Where a machine is under the management of a person, and an accident happens out of the ordinary course by means of the machine, it affords reasonable evidence of negligence in the person using it (Scott v. London and St. Katharine Docks Company, 3 H. & C. 596; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 148), and that is the present case.

ADM.]

THE VIRGO.

Butt, Q.C., Aston, Q.C., and E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants.—This case cannot be distinguished from The William Lindsay (ante, vol. 2, p. 118; L. Rep. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355). That it was done by a jerk or undue strain is a new case entirely and cannot be raised now, it was a question for Trinity Masters: (The Marpesia, ante, vol. 1, p. 263.) We have satisfied the onus of proof by showing that we took reasonable care. To anchor would have been certainly dangerous and probably useless: (The C. M. Palmer, ante, vol. 2, p. 94; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 120.) The case is stronger than that of Readhead v. Midland Railway Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 379; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 628). If a carrier of passengers has no liability in such a case to a person whom he has contracted to carry safely, a fortiori he has none to a third party. If we get judgment we are entitled to our costs; the plaintiffs knew our defence, and had every opportunity of ascertaining by inspection and otherwise its validity.

The London, B. & L. 82; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348;

The England, 5 Notes of Cases 176;

The Royal Charter, L. Rep. 2 Adm. 362; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1019; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 262.

Edward Pollock, in reply, and on subject of costs.—Should judgment be against us it will be without costs.

The Marpesia, ante, vol. 1, p. 263; L. Rep. 4 P. C. 212.

Nov. 17.—Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—In this case of collision, in which the plaintiffs are the owners of the vessel Gem, and the defendants owners of the vessel Virgo, the case for the plaintiffs is that on the morning of the 17th of the Gem, a small schooner, was riding at anchor in a proper place near the Deptford buoy on the Thames, that the Virgo, a large screw steamer, ran into her and sunk her.

The defence of the Virgo is that she was up the river with a good look out, at six knots, that she saw the Gem about a mile off, that having ported for a few bars she cleared, she then steadied and starboarded, which was the proper way to clear the Gem; that at this time there was no danger of collision, if she had kept her starboard helm, but the second mate of the Virgo told the captain that there was something wrong with the wheel, and at the same time the first mate came from the wheel and reported to the captain that there was something wrong with the wheel, the captain ascertained that the two wheels were not acting together and gave the order to stop and reverse, and it appears that very shortly before this time something wrong had been discovered, but having reported "all right," an attempt had been made to go on. That the consequence of this breaking of the steering gear of the Virgo did not answer her starboard helm with her stem into the starboard side of the Gem. In these circumstances the contention is that the collision was the result of inevitable accident.

It was argued on the part of the Gem, first, that the accident was not inevitable, and second, that inevitable the Virgo was still liable for the damage which she had inflicted on the Gem.

On the part of the Virgo evidence of a conclusive character was produced to show that the steering gear was thoroughly good in every way when it was put up in the vessel in the previous year; and that it had been surveyed from time to time and reported to be in perfect condition; that the accident had happened in consequence of the steering gear breaking off under the nut; that on examination of the piece of iron, which was produced in court, two small flaws were discovered in the iron of which it had caused the iron to break, the flaws were latent, not to be detected by any ordinary examination, probably formed in the course of use by some straining of the helm.

The grounds upon which the Gem contended that the accident was not inevitable was that it might have been avoided; first, by stopping dead in the first instance, before the first mate came from the helm; secondly, by having proceeded at a slower speed; thirdly, by having gone astern of the Gem instead of crossing their bows. All these I submitted to the Trinity Masters, and they advised me, upon a consideration of the circumstances, that with respect to none of them was the Virgo to blame. The advice was given me to be sound, and I followed it.

There then remained these questions for the court to decide. First, Whether the Virgo had discharged the onus of proof which lay upon her of showing that the accident was inevitable? I was of opinion that she had. Second, though the Virgo was negligent, and the accident was inevitable, whether she was not still liable for the damage done to the Gem? I am of opinion that on this case falls within the principle of law

[RICAN REPS.]

THE DOLPHIN.

[AMERICAN REPS.]

urt, and by the Privy Council in the case of William Lindsay (ante, vol. 2, p. 118; T. Rep. N. S. 355; L. Rep. 5 C. P. n aid of the authority of which might s be cited the decision in the case of ad v. Midland Railway (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. firmed on appeal to the Exchequer Chamber p. 4 Q. B. 379; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 628), at the defence of inevitable accident must i respect to costs I shall make no The cases referred to by the defendants' l were those in which the plaintiffs must ght certainly have known that the defend- had, apart from the merits, a good legal . I am of opinion that in this case the fs had a right to compel the defendants to the facts upon which they relied. The s dismissed from the suit, and no costs on side. itors for the plaintiffs, Harper, Broad, and k. itor for the defendants, W. Batham.

AMERICAN REPORTS.

i by JAMES P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-law.

ED STATES DISTRICT COURT,— ASTERN DISTRICT, MICHIGAN.

IN ADMIRALTY.

Saturday, Aug. 12, 1876.

THE DOLPHIN.

e insurance—Lien for premiums—United States law.

ited States law an underwriter upon ship maritime lien for the premiums due to him marine policies upon the ship underwritten n, and can enforce payment by proceeding n in Admiralty against the ship insured.

claiming payment of premiums against should set out the dates and amounts of the es, and also the name of the parties insured, he character and extent of their interest.

s an exception to a libel of the Oriental Insurance Company. The libellants, in bel, stated that they were a New York tion, that the Dolphin was a vessel of at twenty tons burden, and was used in ng the great lakes and waters connect- same, and the waters of the State of n; that on the 6th March, 1875, the and owners of the Dolphin represented to llants that the vessel stood in need of æ, and that, in pursuance of their repre- ns and request, it furnished insurance in unt of 4000 dols.; and that there was due unt for premiums the sum of 277.38 dols., h libellant claimed a lien upon the vessel. is libel, Stephen B. Grummond, who also libel against the schooner for salvage, l; for the reason, that the matters set up were not within the Admiralty jurisdiction ourt; that a claim for premiums was not on upon the schooner, such as this court enforce by proceedings in rem. Dolphin had been sold upon other claims, proceeds were in court awaiting distribu-

J. J. Atkinson for libellant.

F. H. Canfield for claimant.

BROWN, J.—The question presented by the exceptions to the libel is one of great novelty and importance; and it is believed that no direct adjudication upon the point can be found either in this country or in England. After years of doubt in the minds of the profession, and some conflict of opinion in the courts, it was finally settled by the Supreme Court, in the case of The Insurance Company v. Dunkam (11 Wall., 1) that the contract of marine insurance is maritime in its character, and that in case of loss a libel may be sustained by the insured against the underwriter. It seems to me to follow as a necessary corollary that the underwriter may maintain a suit in admiralty for the premium, as it would be at war with established principles to say that the maritime character of a contract could be invoked by one party and not by the other.

The more serious question, however, remains to be decided, namely, whether the underwriter has a lien upon the vessel for the payment of his premium. The question is not discussed in this case nor in any other where actions have been sustained in the admiralty, upon contracts of insurance. If the analogies of the contract of affreightment are to govern, as indicated by the Supreme Court in the opinion above cited (11 Wall. 30), the lien would follow as a necessary consequence. It is described in the opinion as "a contract or guaranty, on the part of the insurer, that the ship or goods shall pass safely over the sea, and through its storms and its many casualties to the port of its destination, and if they do not pass safely, but meet with disaster from any of the misadventures insured against, the insurer will pay the loss sustained. So, in the contract of affreightment, the master guarantees that the goods shall be safely transported (dangers of the sea excepted), from the port of shipment to the port of delivery and there delivered. The contract of the one guarantees against loss from the dangers of the sea, the contract of the other against loss from all other dangers. . . . The object of the two contracts is in the one case maritime service and in the other maritime casualties." If in the one case the shipper has a lien upon the vessel for a breach of the contract of affreightment, and the ship has a lien upon the cargo for the payment of the freight (though for reasons applicable to the character of this property this lien is dependent upon possession), it is difficult to see why upon principle the underwriter should not have a lien upon the ship for the payment of his premium.

It is true the general sentiment of the profession is adverse to the existence of such a lien, but no more so, perhaps, than it was to the jurisdiction of the admiralty in actions upon policies of insurance.

In the case of The Williams (Brown's Admiralty Reports, 208), perhaps the most exhaustive disquisition upon maritime liens to be found in the books, the judge remarked, page 215: "Without any very thorough examination at the time, but drawing mainly upon what we had ever assumed to be the law, we ruled that all maritime contracts, made within the scope of the master's usual authority, did per se, hypothecate the ship; and that those of affreightment, insurance, towage, the fitting out and discharge of vessels, and for aiding them in distress, were instances only of the application of the rule." I should have no hesitation in adopting the general principle there announced, that all contracts within the scope of the master's authority are binding upon the vessel, but in its application to the contract of insurance, I think the learned judge overlooked the fact that such contracts are not within the scope of the master's authority: General Interest Insurance Company v. Ruggles (12 Wheat., 408), Foster v. United States Insurance Company (11 Pick., 85).

Even a ship's husband, whose powers with regard to the fitting and equipment of a vessel are much more extensive than the master's, has no authority to bind the other part owners by a contract of insurance: Bell v. Humphries (2 Starkie, 345), Finney v. The Warren Insurance Company (1 Metcalf, 16).

The case of The Williams (ubi sup.) was that of a contract for services in the nature of salvage, made by a master whose power was unquestioned, and is a direct authority only for the proposition that all contracts, whether executed or executory, which he makes within the scope of his authority are binding upon the vessel. Obviously, however, the learned judge based his opinion upon a much broader principle. On page 217, referring to the case of The Pigs of Copper (1 Story, 314), he observes, "This judgment is referred to in this connection more particularly to illustrate the position that a denial of salvage is not a rejection of a proceeding in rem; but it quite as fully sustains the broader proposition, soon to be considered, that all authorised maritime contracts pledge the vessel for their performance." Again, on page 222, he says: "The wider principle, that every maritime agreement binds the ship as well as the owner, is that upon which we rest our decision." Although the authorities cited in support of this proposition refer to cases of salvage, or of contracts within the scope of the master's authority, and therefore do not sustain it to its fullest extent, yet I apprehend the principle is a safe one, and subject to two or three exceptions, which at an early day were imported into the maritime law of this country by the Supreme Court, following too closely the English authorities, one which may be acted upon without trenching upon the proper domain of the common law. So far as a dictum can be an authority it is certainly an authority for the lien of the underwriters.

The doctrine that the admiralty courts of this country are restricted to the jurisdiction exercised by the High Court of Admiralty in England at the time of the adoption of our constitution is now so completely overthrown that no argument can be properly deduced from it. The only exceptions believed to exist to the jurisdiction in rem of the admiralty over maritime contracts is that of supplies furnished to domestic vessels, established in the case of The Gen. Smith (4 Wheat. 434), and recently recognised in the case of The Lottawanna (21 Wall.), and that of masters' wages, held not to be the subject of a lien in the case of The Stearboat New Orleans v. Phœbus (11 Peters, 175). Contracts for the construction of vessels which are recognised as maritime by the continental codes and a lien given thereby, were also held by the Supreme Court in the case of Roach v. Chapman (22 How. 129) not to be subject to the admiralty jurisdiction in form.

In determining whether a maritime lien in favour of the underwriter, it is well to consider the source of the doctrine that courts of admiralty have jurisdiction over policies of insurance. The subject is fully discussed in the case of The Insurance Company v. Dunham (pages 31-36) the court remarks: "Perhaps the best criterion of the maritime character of a contract is the system of law from which it arises, and by which it is governed. And it is well known that the contract of insurance sprang from the law of the time, and derives all its material, rules, and incidents therefrom. . . . These facts go to demonstrate, that the contract of marine insurance is an exotic in the common law. As we know the fact historically that its first appearance in any code or system of laws was in the law of the time as promulgated by the various maritime states and cities of Europe." Mention is made of the maritime laws of the ancient Greeks, of the ordinances of Barcelona, Venice, Florence, and of Antwerp, and the court further observes: "But an additional argument is furnished on the fact that in all other countries, except England, even in Scotland, suits and controversies arising upon the contract of maritime insurance are within the jurisdiction of the admiralty or other marine courts. . . . It is also clear that originally, the English Admiralty had jurisdiction of these as well as of other maritime contracts. This last remark is corroborated not so much by positive adjudications to that effect as by the language of the commissions issued to the early Vice-Admiralty courts which authorised them to take cognisance of marine policies. Such jurisdiction would hardly have been done had such jurisdiction never been exercised by the High Court of Admiralty in England.

Tracing, then, the jurisdiction of the Admiralty over contracts of insurance to the continental codes, it is pertinent in this connection to inquire what that law gives to the underwriter a lien upon the vessel for the payment of his premiums.

Art. 16 of the marine ordinance of Louis IX. title "Of Seizure of Vessels," in enumerating persons entitled to liens upon ships, makes no mention of underwriters, but Valin, in commenting upon this ordinance, book 1, lib. 14, sect. 16, says: "If this article has not mentioned them (the underwriters), it is probably because the ordinance did not intend to grant in many articles under the title 'insurance,' that the premium is paid in advance at the time the policy is signed, while, by the custom of this place, and of many others, it is paid upon the arrival of the ship at a port of safety. However this may be, the insurer of a vessel has a lien (privilege) upon her for the payment of his premium as the insurer of a cargo has upon it. This lien ranks with that of the owner upon bottomry and with material men."

A privilege is defined by Art. 2095 of the Code as "a right which the character of the law gives to a creditor to be preferred to other creditors even mortgagees (hypothécaires)," and is analagous in all respects to our "lien." It raises the like preference in payment within its scope from the proceeds of the sale of the property.

Emerigon treats the contract of insurance as analagous to that of maritime bottomry, and observes (Emer. on Maritime B

: "In the one contract the lender bears risks; in the other, the underwriter. one, the maritime interest is the price peril, and this term corresponds with mium which is paid in the other. In ase it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to hat the condition has been fulfilled. In a suit it lies upon the lender, in order to he contract of maritime loan executory, to at the ship has arrived at her port of desti- in safety; and in an action on a policy of ce it lies upon the assured to prove the pture, or shipwreck of the vessel. The of insurance made on loose sheets of reate a lien on the property of the parties, d they are executed before sworn brokers ries; but the other contracts do not create ien unless they are recorded by a notary in lic register, in the sworn form as ordinary ts."

n, in his work upon the contract of Insu- ch. 3, sect. 9, Emergion says: "The ordi- having regarded the premium as paid in on signing the policy, the insurer, who had en paid, was not placed among creditors ranks and preferences are determined by 16 and 17. Title "Seizure of Vessels." his silence it has been often concluded that nner had no privilege, because it is said the of privilege is stricti juris (droit étroit) it is ury they be expressly bestowed (deferés) by nd it is never permitted to extend them ne case to another, because of equal or r equities. But it should be considered e premium of insurance is comprised in the e of the equipment or building; it becomes, n some measure, part of the thing insured, by this means is presumed to have an in- l value (valoir davantage). Consequently, ivilage which the ordinance accords to the r material man ought to be common to the r, a creditor to the amount of his premium." support of this doctrine the learned author several decrees of the tribunals of commerce. Also, Alauzet des Assurances, Pt. 2, Sect. 2, Ch. It is rare that maritime premiums are paid n; they are settled generally in notes called am notes (billets de prime) the maturity of varies with the length of the voyage and age of the place; the lien of the insurer is ved for the payment of the notes; they are nsidered as working a novation, provided s the discharge (quittance) be not absolute, e origin of the notes not doubtful."

also Cleisac, P. 237, 318, 323, and 363. r des Assurances, Ch. 3, Art. 3, sect. 2. y Paty, vol. 1, tit. 1, sect. 2. ny doubts, however, ever existed in the law nce, with regard to this lien, they are put to y Article 191 of the commercial code, which as follows: "Privileged debts are the follow- nd in the order in which they are classed: udicial costs and other charges incurred in ing a sale of the vessel and a distribution of rice.

The charge for pilotage, tennage, hold fees, ng, and dockage.

The wages of the keeper, and the expenses of ing the vessel from the time of her entrance t to the sale.

The storage of her rigging, tackle, and ap-

5. The expenses of repairing the vessel, rigging, and apparel since her entrance into port from her last voyage.

6. Wages and pay of the captain and crew em- ployed in the last voyage.

7. The sums loaned to the captain for the neces- sary expenses of the vessel during the last voyage, and the reimbursements of the price of goods sold by him for the same purpose.

8. The sums due to the vendor, material men, and workmen employed in her construction, if she has not yet made a voyage, and those due to creditors for furnishing work, labour, and for re- fitting, victualling, outfits, and equipments before the departure of the vessel, if she has already made a voyage.

9. The sums loaned on bottomry, on the rigging, and apparel for repairs, victualling, outfit, equip- ment before the departure of the vessel.

10. The amounts of the premiums of insurance effected on the hull, rigging apparel, outfit and equipment of the vessel for her last voyage.

11. The indemnity due to the freighters for not delivering goods laden on board or for the losses which the goods may have sustained from the de- fault of the captain or crew.

The creditors comprised in each of the numbers of the present article shall have a concurrent lien on the vessel for the amount of their demand, and in case of insufficiency, the price of the vessel shall be divided equally among them (i. e., those of the same class) in proportion to the amount due each."

In a recent work upon the commercial code of France, by Edmond Dufour, (Paris, 1859), in speak- ing of this article, sect. 215, the author observes, "We see that if the code has admitted this opinion (of Valin) as to the principle of the lien, it has largely modified the combinations. The underwriters are still paid before the shippers, but that is all. They are ranked after the material men, who are placed two degrees above them in the scale of liens. They are also distanced by tenders upon bottomry, who immediately precede them. This classifica- tion appears to me more rational than that of Valin. For, the truth is, insurance is only a private affair of the insured, it is a very proper act of prudence, it certainly merits, and it pos- sesses, all the sympathies of the law, but it is, after all, only a passive element of navigation. It rather repairs disasters than comes directly in aid of them and its efforts. It is otherwise with the material men, as well as with tenders upon bottomry. It is the labour of the one, and the goods or the money of the other, which per- mit the vessel to undertake its voyage. There is then in their favour a reason for preference, which is not wholly arbitrary, and the code has done well in recognising it." The nature of this lien is discussed at length, and is applied as well to time policies, as well as to policies, or for a single voyage.

In a recent admirable dictionary of the maritime law of France, by Aldrick Caumont, Paris, 1867, under the head of marine insurance, sect. 141, the author observes: "A lien is attached to the premium for the last voyage, if it be that made during the life of the policy upon the hull. This lien for the last voyage, resulting from Articles 191 and 192 exists wherever there is a policy executed. The insured who, asserting his right to suit, has attached the proceeds of the ship for the amount of his premium, is not permitted

AMER REFS.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE; MORICE v. ANDERSON.

[H. OF

claim a lien for the increase of premium for the time during which navigation is closed. Any number of voyages made during the time fixed for the duration of the insurance are considered as one and the same voyage. The broker has a lien upon the sum assured for the premium which he has paid. The liens for premiums of insurance upon property rank only after that accorded to contracts of bottomry. They constitute an expense made for the preservation of the res. In case where an insurance upon the hull has been made for a limited time, the underwriters have a lien upon the ship, not only for the premiums of the last voyage, but also for the entire premium due under the policy." In support of these various constructions of Article 191, the author cites opinions of the Court of Cassation of the Imperial Court of Bordeaux, and Rouen, and Aix, and of the Tribunal of Commerce of Marseilles.

From these authorities I gather the following summary of French law upon this subject:

1. That the Marine Ordinance of Louis XIV. did not expressly recognise the lien of the underwriter, but in this regard it was held not to be exclusive, and the premium was generally (perhaps not universally) held by the courts as a privileged debt.

2. That the privilege of the underwriter for payment of the premium due upon the policy for the last voyage is expressly recognised by Art. 191 of the Code of Commerce, and that such privilege is also extended to time policies.

3. That this privilege is not waived by taking premium notes, unless it is thereby intended to be discharged. Now, if the Supreme Court adopted the Continental law in respect of jurisdiction over contracts of insurance, must it not be presumed logically to have adopted it as an entirety, and not by piecemeal. It certainly seems so to me, and it goes very far to justify the language used by the circuit judge in the case of The Williams (Brown's Adm. Rep. 208). It is claimed, however, that these contracts are made exclusively upon the credit of the owner. If this were so, it might be presumed in a particular case that the lien was thereby waived, but with the exception of supplies, repairs, and materials furnished in the home port, the mere fact that the contract is made by the owner does not import a waiver of lien. There is no doubt of the existence of such lien in favour of seamen, although hired by the owner in person; nor in favour of shippers, where the contract of affreightment is made with the owner. Nor is it, I believe, any objection to the lien of a lender upon bottomry, that the bond was made by the owner.

In the nature of the contract itself I see no reason for bidding such lien to the underwriter which does not apply with equal force to the salvor or material man. Their contracts differ mainly in the fact that the services of the underwriter are rendered only upon a contingency which may never happen. That the question has never before arisen is due, as before observed, solely to the fact that the contract of marine insurance was not generally recognised as maritime until the opinion was pronounced in The Insurance Company v. Durham (11 Wallace, 1). Under the ruling in this case, I feel constrained to hold that the contract of insurance being maritime in its character, the underwriter is entitled to a lien upon the ship for the payment of his premium, although, for the reason given by Dufour, I think it should rank in lowest class of strictly maritime liens. I think, however, the libel is defective in this case failing to aver the names of the parties insured and the character and extent of their interest in the vessel. I think it should also appear the policy was a marine policy, or at least that it covered the vessel during the season of navigation. I regard it as very doubtful whether an ordinary fire policy covering a vessel while lying at wharf during the winter, would be the subject of Admiralty jurisdiction. The above quotation, Caumont, citing a judgment of the Tribunal de Commerce at Marseilles, apparently supports this opinion. The schedule annexed to the libel was intended to indicate that the policies were issued on separate moieties of the vessel. This, however, should be made distinctly to appear.

I think I see considerable difficulty in enforcing the lien of an underwriter upon an undivided interest of a part owner, especially if the process were an original one, against the vessel itself, not against its proceeds of sale. The same difficulty, however, frequently occurs in connection with the mortgages upon undivided interests, and should not regard it as insuperable; and if it should appear that each moiety of his vessel was covered by a lien of the same amount, the question could be easily solved, as the effect would be practically the same as if the entire vessel was covered by a single policy. The difficulty with the libel in this case is, that it has been attempted to employ ordinary blank libels for supplies in actions for premiums, for which they are badly adapted.

Upon this latter ground, the exceptions to libels must be sustained, with leave to amend.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 27 and 29, July 3 and 27, 1876.

(Before Lords CHELMSFORD, HATHERLEY, O'HAGAN and SELBORNE.)

ANDERSON AND OTHERS v. MORICE; MORICE v. ANDERSON AND OTHERS.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER IN ENGLAND.

Marine insurance—Insurable interest—Common law of risk—Perils of the seas—Evidence.

The appellant contracted for the purchase of rice on the following terms: "Bought for account of B. and Co., the cargo of new crop Rangoon per Sunbeam." The day after making this contract the appellant insured the rice at and from Rangoon to the United Kingdom, "as interest may appear." The ship proceeded to Rangoon, after the greater part of the cargo had been shipped, she suddenly sank at her anchor in fine weather, and the rice already shipped was wholly lost. In an action on the policy,

Held, by Lords Chelmsford and Hatherley (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the appellant had no insurable interest in the rice, it being at his risk till the cargo was shipped. By Lords O'Hagan and Selborne contra.

The evidence tended to show that the ship was in good repair on the voyage, and that she was lost, and no direct evidence was, or could be, given why she sank.

H. OF L.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE; MORICE v. ANDERSON.

[H. OF L.]

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that there was evidence of a loss by the perils insured against.

THIS was an action on a policy of insurance on a cargo of goods and merchandise, at and from Rangoon to the United Kingdom.

The plaintiffs, Anderson and Co., were merchants in London, and on 2nd Feb. 1871, they entered into a contract for the purchase of a cargo of Rangoon rice in these terms:

"Bought for account of Anderson and Co. of Borradaile and Co., the cargo of new crop Rangoon rice per Sunbeam, 707 tons register, No. 1254, in Veritas, at 9s. 1½d. per cwt. cost and freight, expected to be March shipment, but contract to be void should vessel not arrive at Rangoon before April 1871. Payment by seller's draft on purchaser at six months sight, with documents attached."

The following day they effected an insurance with the defendant Morice in these words: "At and from Rangoon to any port or place of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent, by the Sunbeam, warranted to sail from Rangoon on or before the first of April, on rice, as interest may appear. Amount of invoice to be deemed the value; average payable on every 500 bags. The said merchandises are and shall be valued at 5500l., part of 8000l."

The Sunbeam arrived at Rangoon in ballast on 2nd March 1871, and anchored at the usual place by two anchors. She began to load the rice on 8th March, and continued loading till the 30th, on which day about five-sixths of the cargo was on board, and the remainder was in lighters alongside, she then suddenly began to leak very fast, and sank at her moorings on the following day.

Evidence was given that she had been thoroughly overhauled and reclassified in 1869, and had been quite seaworthy in several long voyages, including the voyage to Rangoon, and had been examined by the captain while lying there.

After the loss the captain signed bills of lading for the cargo actually shipped, which were indorsed to the plaintiffs. The sellers drew bills of exchange for the price which the plaintiffs duly accepted and met.

The action was tried before Brett, J., at the sittings in London after Hilary Term 1873, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, leave being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a verdict on the ground that there was no evidence of a loss by the perils insured against, and that there was no insurable interest in the plaintiffs.

A rule was accordingly obtained, but it was discharged by the Court of Common Pleas (Lord Coleridge, C.J., Brett, and Denman, JJ.) as reported, ante, vol. 2, p. 424.

On appeal to the Exchequer Chamber (Bramwell, Pollock, and Amphlett, BB., Blackburn, Lush, and Quain, JJ.) the decision of the Court of Common Pleas was affirmed on the question of a loss by the perils insured against, but reversed on the question of the plaintiffs having an insurable interest in the rice before the loading was completed, Quain, J., dissenting from the majority of the court on this point (ante, vol. 3, p. 31).

Cross appeals were then brought to the House of Lords.

Sir H. James, Q.C. Watkin Williams, Q.C., and J. O. Mathew, appeared for Anderson and Co., the plaintiffs, below.

Butt, Q.C. and Cohen, Q.C., for Mr. Morice, the defendant below.

The same arguments were urged, and the same authorities relied on, as in the courts below.

July 27.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD CHURCHILL.—My Lords,—The question to be determined upon this appeal is one of some difficulty, and it has given rise to a great diversity of judicial opinion. It may be thus shortly stated: Whether the appellant, under a contract for the purchase of a cargo of rice to be shipped on board a vessel called the Sunbeam, had any property in the rice, or had incurred any risk in respect of it so as to give him an insurable interest at the time of the total loss of the vessel and cargo.

Having regard to the terms of the contract for the purchase of the rice, it is clear to my mind that if the intention of the parties is to be collected from that document alone, no interest in the rice passed to the buyers till the cargo was completed, for payment was to be made only when the loading was finished: (Appleby v. Myers, L. Rep. 2 C. P. 651; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 669.) But although the purchaser of a cargo may have no interest in it until the happening of a certain event, as, for instance, until the delivery, he may, if he please, expressly take upon himself all the risks and dangers of the voyage, as in Castle v. Playford (ante, vol. 1, p. 255; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 98; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315), although, without a stipulation to that effect, he would not be affected by anything which might happen to the cargo in its transit to him.

In the present case it is contended that either under the contract itself the buyers' risk began as soon as any rice was shipped on board the Sunbeam, or that the act of effecting an insurance on the rice by the plaintiffs was an agreement on their part to undertake the risk. Assuming that the intention of the parties can be implied from their acts, and so become a term in the contract, the acts ought to be such as to manifest that intention without any ambiguity. The acts relied upon in this case are a notice from the vendors to the purchasers to effect an insurance on the rice in the Sunbeam, and a policy of insurance effected by the purchasers accordingly, describing the adventure as "beginning upon the goods and merchandises from the loading thereof aboard the ship, and to continue and endure during her abode at Rangoon," &c. But it seems to me clear that, unless a change was produced in the rights and liabilities of the plaintiffs under the contract by their undertaking the insurance, they could have had no interest in the rice until a complete cargo had been shipped. But, although this was their position in relation to the contract itself, they had a contingent benefit which might accrue to them from the completion of the cargo on board the Sunbeam, and its safe delivery. This contingent benefit was one of expected profits, and, although it would not be protected by an insurance on the rice (Lucena v. Crauford, 2 B. & P. N. R. 269), yet the plaintiffs having that contingent interest in the safety of the cargo, might not be indisposed to take upon themselves an insurance against its loss, more especially as they would have an interest in the rice itself at Rangoon as soon as the cargo should be completed. The question is, did this insurance throw the risk of the loss of the rice upon them?

H. OF L.]

ANDERSON v. MORICE; MORICE v. ANDERSON.

[H.]

Did they, by undertaking it, impliedly agree with the vendors that, if the rice was destroyed after any part had been shipped on board the Sunbeam, the loss should be theirs? Did this act change the nature of the contract, the stipulations of which, enabling the vendors to take the bill of lading in their own name and to send it forward with the draught, were prima facie, though not conclusive, evidence of the interest and property remaining in them? What was the nature of the risk which the plaintiffs were supposed to have undertaken? In the words of Blackburn, J., in Castle v. Playford, it was, "If the property perishes by danger of the seas, I shall take the risk of having lost the property, whether it be mine or not." If this was really their undertaking, every bag of rice shipped on board the Sunbeam was at their risk, and the loss of it must have fallen upon them. But the Court of Common Pleas held that, as the plaintiffs would not, if the ship had sailed and arrived with what was on board of her when she sank, have been obliged to accept what was on board, they were not bound to pay for the rice which was on board and lost when the ship sank; from which it would seem to follow that the plaintiffs were not exposed to any risk of loss before a complete cargo had been shipped on board the Sunbeam.

There being, therefore, conflicting evidence of intention as to the interest in the rice passing to the purchasers or remaining in the vendors, the effect of the written contract being that the interest was to continue in the vendors until the completion of the cargo, and the consent of the purchasers to insure not shifting the property during the loading and before the cargo was complete, and it being at the utmost an indication of intention to assume the risk, I think your Lordships should not look out of the contract, but determine the rights and the liabilities of the parties by it alone. It was not disputed that by the terms of the contract the plaintiffs were not bound to take less than a complete cargo of rice, and that they had an option either to accept or reject a part cargo. If they had exercised this option by accepting what was on board before the Sunbeam sank as a fulfilment of the contract on the part of the vendors, they would have had an insurable interest in the rice at the time of the loss.

The Court of Common Pleas thought the property had not passed out of the vendors at this time, but they were of opinion "that there was such an appropriation of the rice on board to the contract as to prevent the sellers from withdrawing that rice without the consent of the buyer;" thus apparently fixing the buyer with the risk of the rice, from time to time, as it was put on board. Upon this, Blackburn, J., in his judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, observed, "If we could see anything to indicate an intention that as each bag was shipped it should be at the buyers' risk, we should think it indicated an intention that it should not be taken out without his consent; but we cannot find anything to this effect."

Now, an intention that each bag of rice shipped should be at the risk of the purchasers was necessary to be established as a foundation for the argument maintained by the learned counsel for the appellants, that, if part of the rice had been shipped and had been damaged while on board, the vendors might, without removing it, have gone on loading rice until a full cargo had been put on board, and have delivered it to the purchasers, who have had no option, but must have accepted a faithful performance of the contract. James went further than that, and argued even if part of the cargo shipped had been destroyed by fire, and the vendors had carried a further quantity of rice to be shipped, the master must have taken it in, and if the Sunbeam had afterwards arrived with a quantity which, together with that destroyed, would amount to a full cargo, the purchasers could have refused to accept it. This rather bold position requires for its support that it first be established that each bag of rice as shipped on board was appropriated to the purchasers and was at their risk. Assuming the rice was not the purchasers' property, nor at their risk, as Bramwell, B. thought, I cannot agree in the circumstances supposed there could be a faithful performance of the contract. The purchasers were entitled to a full cargo of merchantable rice, and were not bound to accept less than a full cargo. The learned counsel for the appellants argued after the Sunbeam sank with a deficient cargo the purchasers had a right to exercise their option to accept the rice at the bottom of the river, as a fulfilment of the contract. As between the purchasers and the vendors there was nothing to prevent the purchasers, if they chose to do so, from taking the rice at the bottom of the river, and paying the invoiced price for it. The case was between the purchasers and the vendors. The purchasers were entitled to a full cargo of rice shipped on board the Sunbeam; the vendors were entitled to exercise their option to deliver a cargo of rice on board that ship, and no more. Both vessel and cargo were utterly lost, and therefore what subject was in existence upon which the option could be exercised? After the loss the purchasers were not bound to pay for the rice, and the vendors could not insist upon payment, as there had been no insurance it could not be supposed that the purchasers would have taken the rice at the bottom of the river. The payment was entirely voluntary, and, instead of being the exercise of a bona fide option by the purchasers, was only made by them and accepted by the vendors with the view of relieving themselves and throwing the loss upon the vendors.

In these circumstances I think that the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber was rightly given, and ought to be affirmed.

LORD HATHERLEY.—Although the question in this case is one of considerable difficulty, the law itself is easy to construe. It clearly appears to have been within the contemplation of the parties that the property in the rice should pass to the buyers, at least until the vendors could attach the drafts; but I do not think the question of risk depends entirely upon the question of the passing of the property. The property appears to me to be this—what was at the vendors' risk at the time when they effected the contract of insurance? Now it is clear that nothing could be at their risk, except what they had put on board, namely, the cargo of the Sunbeam, and the property could pass until such cargo was destroyed. Their existence. They were under no obligation to accept a half cargo, or any smaller part.

is never a cargo of merchantable rice in it is difficult to understand how there any cargo at the buyer's risk. Then it is they were entitled to exercise an option acceptance of the rice which had been shipped; but I know of no authority could warrant us in holding that such an may be exercised as against the insurer e actual loss of the partial cargo. I feel an difficulty in holding that there could have o separate risks, one of the vendors and r for the vendees, in operation at the same . I therefore concur with my noble and friend who has already addressed your ps, in thinking that the judgment appealed ought to be affirmed.

O'HAGAN.—I deliver my opinion upon this th considerable diffidence, because it is to the views of the two noble and learned ho have already addressed this house; but t arrive at any other conclusion than that perty in the rice actually shipped had o the plaintiffs before the loss of the vessel. e of Appleby v. Myers (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 651) t appear to me to be in point, for the deci- n turned almost entirely upon the terms ontract. I rather prefer to base my deci- n Aldridge v. Johnson (7 E. & B. 855) and v. Higgins (4 H. & N. 402), which seem lish that each bag of rice, as soon as it was , was so far appropriated to the plaintiffs' contents became their property. Under cumstances I adopt the view of the Court mon Pleas, that the purchasers had an le interest in the rice which was lost, and I think that the whole conduct of the parties the inference that each part of the cargo ipped, was intended to be at the plaintiffs' he law on this subject was well stated by J. in Joyce v. Swann (17 C. B., N.S., 84), and to insure goods must always be strong e of a liability to the risk of their loss. the judgment appealed against ought to be l.

SELBORNE.—My Lords, it is my misfor- differ from two of your Lordships, as well t the majority of the court below, my being that the case was placed upon its ground by the dissentient judgment of J., in the Exchequer Chamber.

on all hands admitted that, if by the ; between the parties the rice was to be isk of the buyer while in course of ship- t Rangoon, the plaintiffs (the appellants) e entitled to recover. I do not consider sary that the intention should have been ed in the bought note. It was sufficient eared by evidence proper to be considered ry that the parties did in fact so agree. cannot read the terms of the bought note drawing from them the inference, which as certainly nothing in the rest of the evi- ) repel, that the intention of the parties was , goods should be insured by the buyer. jority of the judges of the Exchequer r were of opinion that, as the time when rs under the terms of the contract would led to draw upon the buyers for the price of is, and when the buyers would be bound to he goods in fulfilment of their contract, ot arrive until a full cargo had been put d, the risk, against which the buyer was intended to insure, would commence at the same time and not earlier. I am unable to agree in that opinion because the evidence satisfies me that this was not the actual understanding or intention of the parties.

On the day after the contract, when there could be no object in shifting any burden from the right to the wrong party, the buyers did actually insure in terms which covered every bag of rice put on board from the first commencement of the loading of the vessel. The fact that such an insurance had been made seemed not to have then been communicated to the sellers. But they made no insurance, and on the 6th March 1872, when the vessel was in the Rangoon river, exactly three days before she began to take in her cargo, they advised the buyers by telegram that she was there, and called their attention to "insurance." I can only understand that as meaning that the time was then close at hand at which, by the commencement of the loading of the cargo, the risk intended to be insured against by the buyer would begin. Nor does it appear to me to be reasonable, or according to the probable and ordinary course of mercantile usage, that when a cargo was to be loaded at a given place on board a particular ship for a particular adventure, and when the duty of insurance was undertaken by the buyer, the parties should be supposed to mean to divide the risk, so that the buyer should insure after the cargo was complete, and the seller (though nothing was said about it) until that time. When we have once got so far as the direct evidence leads us in this case, the presumption appears to me to be against such a distinction, and the burden of proof to lie upon those who affirmed it. Mr. Baron Bramwell, whose opinion I always hold in the highest respect, considered it a sufficient answer that there might be a risk while the goods were on their way to and not yet on board the ship, against which it would certainly not be for the buyers to insure, and that the line must always be drawn somewhere. I am not satisfied with that argument. The line in this case appears to be clearly drawn by the contract. Whatever was within the scope of the contract is on one side of that line, and whatever was not is on the other. The parties, had, of course, in their contemplation the cargo of the ship, and that only, and goods neither placed on board the ship as part of that cargo nor subject to any maritime risks of that particular ship as hired for that particular adventure would be altogether outside of this contract, and entirely unaffected by its provisions. But surely it is otherwise with regard to goods put on board as part of the cargo and subject to the maritime risks of the ship as hired for the particular adventure. The subject of the contract was "the cargo," not specific goods nor a defined quantity of goods. Nothing can be less likely than that when the buyers undertook to insure, an insurance was meant which would not cover the whole risk of the adventure from its commencement as to every part of the cargo; or that they should have thought of such a refinement as that goods put on board for the purpose of the adventure were not to be regarded as "cargo" for the purpose of insurance, until the whole lading was completed.

As I understand that the purchasers were to insure, I hold that fact is sufficient for the decision of the case. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in the case of Allison v. The Bristol Insurance Company (a

CT. OF APP.]

BARING v. STANTON.

[CT. OF A.]

p. 178; L. Rep. 1 App. Cas. 209; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 809), said, "According to my experience merchants attach very great weight to a stipulation as to who is to insure as showing who is to bear the risk of loss." I agree entirely in that remark, which is supported by several authorities. It appears to me that the case resembles Castle v. Playford (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 407; ante, vol. 1, p. 255), in that it was contemplated that the buyer should bear the risk, and that the case of Gilmour v. Supple (11 Moore, P. C. C. 557) is also an authority in point. On the other hand, the cases cited on behalf of the defendants do not appear to throw any light on the question. It appears to me that enough rice had been shipped on board at the time of the loss for the cargo to be at the purchaser's risk. I think, therefore, that it was intended that the buyer was to bear the risk of loss in this case.

In my opinion the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought to be reversed, and I confess I very much regret the decision which will pass in the name of your Lordships' house as being a failure of what seems to me to be substantial justice.

LORD CHILMSFORD.—There is a cross appeal by the defendant, and the sole question is, whether there was evidence for the jury of a loss by the perils insured against. It is needless for me to go through the facts set out in the case. I will only say that since there was evidence of seaworthiness there was evidence which justified the jury in finding that there was a loss by the perils insured against. I therefore move your Lordships that the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber upon this point be affirmed with costs.

LORDS HATHERLEY, O'HAGAN, and SELBORNE concurred.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Solicitors, Parker and Clarke; Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by H. PEAT, JAMES P. ASPINALL, and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, July 18, 1876.

(Before JAMES and MELLISH, L.JJ., and BAGGALLAY, J.A.)

BARING v. STANTON.

Principal and agent—General agent—Discount on insurances—Commission.

A shipowner had for several years employed merchants as his general agents at a remuneration, and they had effected insurances on his ships. In their accounts they charged him with the full insurance premiums, although they were allowed by the underwriters to retain out of the premiums 5 per cent. brokerage, and 10 per cent. discount for ready money, in accordance with the custom of the trade:

Held, that as these allowances were usually made, and as the shipowner had for years assented to them, he could not now object to allow them to retain these allowances on taking the accounts in a suit with regard to a mortgage on certain ships of his.

Decision of Bacon, V.C., affirmed.

Turnbull v. Garden (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218 tinguished).

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon. The hearing in the court below is reg ante, p. 246, where the facts of the case are stated.

The shipowner appealed.

Kay, Q.C. and Caldecott, for the appellant. Great Western Insurance Company v. C (ante vol. 2, pp. 219, 298; 30 L. T. N. S. 661; L. Rep. 9 Ch. 525), on which Vice-Chancellor based his judgment, do apply to this case at all. The distinction is the defendant in that case was employed insurance broker and nothing else, while the plaintiffs are general agents as merchants at simply insurance brokers. They are generally on terms of special remuneration, which do include the right to charge specially as insurance brokers. The five per cent. brokers sufficient remuneration, and they have no right to retain the ten per cent. discount. As agents should, in their accounts, have disclosed all allowances made to them, and the defendant not bound to make any inquiry. They must over the discount to their principal:

Turnbull v. Garden, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218; 331, Ch.;

Queen of Spain v. Parr, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 5 L. J. 73, Ch.;

Palmer v. Butcher, 10 B. & C. 329.

Cotton, Q.C. and J. Kaye, for the respondent were not called upon.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that the order of the Vice-Chancellor in this case ought to be affirmed.

The question is, whether this case is governed by the decisions pronounced by me as Vice-Chancellor in the Queen of Spain v. Parr, in Turnbull v. Garden, or by the case of Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe. It appears to me that that last case really governs the present case. In that case Mellish, L.J., served (ante vol. 2, p. 290; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 5; L. Rep. 9 Ch. 539): "Then it is quite obvious they must have known, and they do not deny they did know, that Messrs. Pickersgill were to be remunerated by receiving a certain allowance on discount from the underwriters with which they made the bargains. It was easy to ascertain by inquiry what was the usual and ordinary charge which agents who effect reinsurances were entitled to make. If a person employs and whom he knows carries on a large business, and certain work for him as his agent with other persons, and does not choose to ask him what charge will be, and in fact knows that he is remunerated, not by him but by the other person, which is very common in mercantile business, does not choose to take the trouble of inquiring what the amount is, he must allow the same amount which agents are in the habit of charging. That really seems to me to govern this case."

It is quite clear that it was known to every person connected with insurances that the offices were in the habit of making allowance in the way of brokerage and otherwise, of 12 per cent. the profits, or 10 per cent. discount, and 5 per cent. brokerage, so much so, that the documents produced actually contain the same printed as a common form. It is q

OF APP.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[CT. OF APP.]

his is a recognised practice of the insurance. That being so, it is very difficult to believe that Mr. Stanton did not know that Messrs. G were receiving from the insurance offices allowances as the offices were in the habit of doing. Their dealings go on for years. Mr. Stanton never takes the trouble to make inquiries, settles all the accounts, and deals with Messrs. G on that footing; and it is not unimportant for a case to observe that when he filed a bill—true, for another object, namely, to have a ratification that the conveyance of the ships was by way of mortgage only—and asked that, upon noting of that mortgage, the accounts might be paid, he actually accepted the course of business between the two firms including the very thing which is now the subject of this discussion. That, as between himself and Messrs. Baring, seems to me impossible to allow him to re-open a point which has gone on from the year 1861 to the year 1872.

It is, therefore, of opinion that the order of the Vice-Chancellor ought to be affirmed, and the application dismissed with costs.

ALLAN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that this case cannot in principle be distinguished from the case of The Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe. It appears that there are two ordinary modes in which agents act by underwriters—the cash system and the credit system. According to the credit system accounts are made out at the end of the year; the premiums which the particular merchant agent has brought to the underwriter are put on one side, and all the losses are put on the other side, and then, if there is a profit, the underwriter allows the merchant 12 per cent. on that profit. We held that the merchant or agent who brought the business was entitled to keep that profit. The cash system, which was adopted in the present case, is this: Some underwriters, particularly new insurance companies, object to a credit system, and prefer a system by which they get their premiums paid at once. They are obliged to make a sacrifice for the purpose of getting prompt payment, and on payment, instead of the 12 per cent. on the net profits, if a premium is paid within a fixed number of days the insurance is effected, they make an advance of 10 per cent., the customers being satisfied with the premiums just as before. If that is generally known and acquiesced in, I cannot give that it is a fraud upon anybody.

It may be a misfortune to Mr. Stanton that, being an American, he really did not know the custom in London. But if a person comes and trades in London, he must make himself acquainted with the usages in London, and when he employs the Messrs. Baring he must expect the Messrs. Baring to treat him in the same way as they treat all their other customers; and he cannot be entitled, after ten years' business transactions with them, to quarrel with them, to say that they should treat him in a different way from that which they treat anyone else. According to the evidence of Messrs. Baring's clerk, this is the way in which they invariably charge their customers, and if Mr. Stanton had inquired of the Messrs. Baring what their charges were, they would have told him that these were their charges. But he had confidence in them, and he thought they would charge what was right whether he asked them or not, and he cannot now be allowed to open the accounts. I think we do not at all overrule the case of Turnbull v. Garden, because, as I understand it, in that case the party from whom the discount was taken was not in the position of Messrs. Baring, but was an agent for somebody else. The real brokers were willing to allow a discount, and then the question was whether the next agent, could keep it in his own pocket, or was bound to give it to the principal, which was an entirely different question.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in this case ought to be affirmed.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—I am of opinion that this case is entirely governed by the decision in The Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe, and that there is nothing whatever in that case which was antagonistic to the principle established in the cases of Turnbull v. Garden and Queen of Spain v. Parr. It appears to me that exactly as in The Great Western Insurance Company v. Cunliffe Messrs. Pickersgill were employed, in this case Messrs. Baring were employed, to do a particular business, namely, that of insuring, and they were making certain profits incidental to the carrying on of that business. That certainly appears to have been the view of the case which was taken by Mr. Stanton when he filed his bill against Messrs. Baring, the statements in which bill he verifies by affidavit in a form which implies that that was the ordinary and usual course of business, and that he had been aware of it throughout.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Shum, Crossman, and Crossman.

Solicitors for the respondents, Markby, Tarry and Stewart.

Dec. 6 and 7, 1876.

(Before JAMES L.J., BAGGALLAY and BRETT, J.J.A.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE FRANCONIA.

Collision—Steamships—Overtaking—Crossing—Slackening speed—Regulations for preventing collisions at sea, Articles 14, 16, 17.

As a general rule wherever two steamships are on converging courses, the one abaft the beam of the other in such a position that the hinder ship cannot see the side lights of the leading ship, the former, if going at a greater speed than the latter, is to be considered as a vessel overtaking another vessel, within the meaning of Article 17 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, and bound to keep out of the way; and they are not to be treated as crossing vessels under Article 14.

Where one steamship is overtaking another within the meaning of Article 17 of the Regulations, and there is risk of collision, the leading ship is not to be considered as approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision within the meaning of Article 16, and is not bound to slacken speed, or stop and reverse.

Where two steamships are navigating open waters, such as the English Channel, some miles from land, one has no right to assume that the other will at a given time or place alter her course and take another course up or down channel, but the former must, as the other ship approaches, take such measures as are required by the regulations in reference to the course upon which such other ship actually is.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division), in cross actions of collision respectively brought by the owners of the British steamship Strathclyde against the German steamship Franconia, and by the owners of the Franconia against the owners of the Strathclyde, to recover damages in respect of a collision between the two steamships which occurred off Dover, at about 4 p.m. on the 17th Feb. 1876.

The Strathclyde was a screw steamship of 1254 tons register, and 180 horse power nominal, was manned by a crew of forty-seven hands, had a number of passengers on board, and was bound upon a voyage from London to Bombay.

The Franconia was a screw steamship of 2111 tons register, and 360 nominal horse power, had a crew of seventy-three hands, and was bound upon a voyage from Hamburg to Havre, and thence to the West Indies. The Franconia had in the course of her voyage called at Grimsby, and was proceeding from that port to Havre.

The Strathclyde having a Thames pilot on board, stopped about half a mile east south east of Dover Pier, and landed the pilot.

After some little delay she went ahead full speed, steering a S.W. true course (S.W. by S. by the ship's compass) to get a good offing before straightening down on to the usual channel course, which is W.S.W. At this time the master of the Strathclyde sighted the Franconia, which was steering a W.S.W. course (W.S.W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  S. by ship's compass) down channel, going full speed, and then bore about two points on the port quarter the Strathclyde, and distant from two to three miles. The two vessels continued on their respective courses until within a quarter of a mile of one another, when the Franconia was overlapping the quarter of the Strathclyde by about one-third of her own length. At this time the Strathclyde ported half a point, and the two vessels continued their course until the two vessels were from two to three ships' length from one another, when the Franconia stopped and reversed her engines and ported her helm, and her master hailed the Strathclyde to port. The helm of the Strathclyde was accordingly ported, and her engines were kept going full speed ahead, but the Franconia with her stern struck the Strathclyde about sixty feet from the stern, and damaged her so seriously that she shortly afterwards sank. The relative positions and speed of the two ships were in dispute between the parties; the Franconia's crew had sighted the Strathclyde before she went into Dover Bay to land her pilot, and had watched her coming out again, and they alleged that when she began to come out again she bore about six points on the starboard bow of the Franconia, and that the Strathclyde must have been going much faster than the Franconia to have brought about the collision. The alleged speed of the two vessels was about the same, viz., about  $8\frac{1}{2}$  knots an hour; but while that was the full speed of the Strathclyde, the full speed of the Franconia was from  $10\frac{1}{2}$  to 12 knots an hour, and she had been actually running her full speed up to noon on the day of the collision; it was alleged that the reduction in going to bad coals; the same had been burnt on board the Franconia during the time since she left Hamburg. On the other hand, it was alleged by the Strathclyde the positions of the two vessels as she left Dover were as given above in the account of the collision, and that the speed of the Franconia was less than that of the Strathclyde (these were found to be the facts by the judgment). There was no dispute as to the courses of the two vessels at their positions at the time of the final collision before the collision.

After the collision the Franconia rendered assistance to the passengers and crew of the Strathclyde, and a great many were drowned as a consequence, and the neglect to do so was substantive charge against the Franconia under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873, sect. 17; the defence, however, was that the Franconia was so damaged that her master believed her to be in a sinking condition, and for the shore to beach her.

The Franconia was further charged with neglecting the owner of the Strathclyde with omitting to keep out of the way of the latter vessel, as it was her duty to do, either under Art. 14 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, which provides that "if two ships under steam are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her own starboard shall keep out of the way of the other;" or under Art. 17, which provides "that every vessel taking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel."

The owners of the Franconia alleged that the Strathclyde by her conduct had deceived the officers of the Franconia, who had reason to suppose that the Strathclyde, before approaching so near the Franconia would have got on to her port channel course, viz.: W.S.W., and have then been parallel to the Franconia, and that it was the Franconia's duty to keep out of the way of the Strathclyde upon her starboard course, which she ought to have changed under the circumstances, that brought about the collision; and they charged the Strathclyde with improperly neglecting or omitting to take in due time and keep her proper course down Channel, and in steering her across the hawse of the Franconia, and also with neglecting to comply with the provisions of art. 16 of the regulations, which provides "every steamship, when approaching another vessel so as to involve risk of collision, shall slacken speed, or, if necessary, stop and reverse."

On April 27, 28, 29, and 30, and May 2 and 3, 1876, the case was heard before Sir R. Phillimore and Trinity Masters.

Butt, Q.C. (Clarkson and Webster with him) for the Strathclyde, contended that under the Merchant Shipping Act 1873, s. 16, the master of the Franconia was bound to render assistance to the Strathclyde, and having neglected to do so, the Franconia must be held to blame. Master Phillimore said that whether the vessels were crossing or the Franconia was an overtaking ship it was equally her duty to keep out of the way of the Strathclyde. The Strathclyde had kept her course as she was bound to do, and the Franconia was alone to blame.

Benjamin, Q.C. (Cohen, Q.C. and W. G. L. Moore with him), for the Franconia, admitted that the Franconia was to blame, but contended that the vessels must be treated as crossing under art. 14, and that they were both equally at fault for approaching so as to involve risk of

A.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[Ct. OF APP.]

therefore, the duty of the Strathclyde reverse, which she did not do, and that therefore, be held also to blame. Again, a well known channel course, a vessel to expect that such course will be time by another vessel going down the former is justified in holding on tation of such course being taken, she at course herself, and if the other vessel round the place where she ought to take annel course, without giving any warn-tention, she must be responsible for the s. The Merchant Shipping Act 1873, apply to a foreign ship on the high in reply.

LLIMORE.—Since the admission made sel for the Franconia that it could not ed that that vessel was not to blame, t porting at an earlier period or for rding just before the collision, the been narrowed to the consideration as he Strathclyde be not also to blame. tly express my opinion on this point, that, in the painful circumstances of unhappy case, I ought not to pass innoticed the charge alleged in the ainst the master of the Franconia of ay directly after the collision without ssistance to the perishing crew and f the Strathclyde.

n contended the statute 36 & 37 Vict. nder which this charge was brought, ply to the case of a foreign ship. It swered that, so far as the question of concerned, the statute applies to all e the punishment for a misdemeanour o officers of British vessels. It really little as to the issue now before me, e admission which has been made, statute be applicable or not. I do not ssary to pronounce an opinion on this present time.

, however, before the passing of any the subject, would have deemed it nment on the conduct of a captain m so serious a charge had been is, I think, due to the captain of the to observe that it was under the ice of an English pilot on board his indeed, actually in command at the se the ship was just out of his pilotage ho had been in command a very short it was at his urgent exhortation that ook this most unfortunate and repre-

that this pilot, after having been sent ain to ascertain the nature of the to the ship, returned and cried out, sake put the helm a port and run ; I think our ship is going to sink certainly was the consequence of a anic on the part of the pilot. The were put over the side within a few ter, were never lowered into it. The eamed away, and many lives which een saved without any danger at all to most horrible to state, unnecessarily st to state that the English pilot gave ice, which was followed; nevertheless, id that a captain of greater nerve, ice of mind, and, I must add, of more sensitive humanity, would not have heeded this counsel of panic, but would have lowered his boats and helped to save his fellow creatures. I have thought it my duty to make these remarks, and I have now to consider whether, as the Franconia contends, the Strathclyde was also to blame for this collision.

The question as to whether the Strathclyde was an approaching vessel, in the sense of the 16th article of the rules of navigation, is one of considerable importance, and it is expedient to carefully consider the proved or admitted facts as regards the navigation of both vessels.

The Franconia and Strathclyde were relatively two or three miles distant when the master of each admits having seen and noticed the other, and the direction in which she was steering. It being day-light, and clear in the channel, there was no uncertainty on the part of the masters as to the movements of either vessel. The Franconia was steering a direct course S.W. by S.  $\frac{1}{2}$  W. to pass from two to three miles off Dungeness Point. The Franconia saw the Strathclyde standing out from Dover roads on her starboard bow, and steering so as to cross the Franconia's course. The master of the Franconia stated that he believed the Strathclyde to be bound down channel, and that before she approached too close to the Franconia she would haul to the westward. The Franconia was kept steady at S.W. by W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  W., having the Strathclyde on her starboard bow, and approaching her at an angle of three points, steering S.W. by S. The relative courses were steered by the two vessels going at full speed until they came within about three ships' lengths of each other. The Franconia had drawn up with the Strathclyde until her bow was abreast of the Strathclyde's mainmast, the same angle of position being preserved.

The master of the Franconia ordered her engines to be stopped and reversed full speed. At the same time, though the Franconia had still way upon her, stated variously at from two to five or six knots, the master ordered her helm hard a port, and as a natural consequence (looking to the relative positions of the two vessels) ran stem on into the port side of the Strathclyde at nearly right angles, and sunk her. The Strathclyde, after landing her pilot at Dover, saw the Franconia about two miles off her port quarter steering a course down channel. The Strathclyde was bound down channel, but her master was desirous of getting to the southward of the track of inward-bound ships during the coming night, he, therefore, steered out S.W. by S. for that purpose.

The Strathclyde continued to steer S.W. by S. until she approached the Franconia within three ships' lengths, and going at full speed. The Strathclyde then ported half a point, and her helm was steadied with her head at S.W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  S. A few seconds after, observing that the Franconia's helm was hard a port, the master of the Strathclyde ordered her helm hard a port, also, and kept on full speed, as her only chance of escape; nevertheless, the Franconia came stem on into the port quarter of the Strathclyde.

I may observe here that I am advised that it was a prudent course in the circumstances, as stated on the part of the captain of the Strathclyde, to get a good offing. We do not think that, having regard to this statement of facts, the Strathclyde was a vessel approaching the other so as to involve a risk of collision in the sense of the 16th article and, therefore, bound to slacken her speed, because before the Franconia ported there was no reasonable ground of apprehension of collision, or, in other words, the two vessels were not so approaching as to involve the risk of collision in the ordinary meaning of the words. It was only the sudden and wrong manœuvre or the Franconia in porting that involved the risk of collision not previously existing; and after the Franconia had ported, the only chance of escaping collision, I am advised, was the execution of the manœuvre adopted by the Strathclyde, namely, going full speed putting her helm hard a port. The vessels were, in our judgment, crossing vessels in the sense of the 14th and not approaching vessels in the sense of the 16th article.

Therefore, upon the whole, I have arrived at the conclusion that the Strathclyde cannot be said to have contributed to this collision by transgressing the provisions of the 16th article, and I must pronounce the Franconia solely to blame.

From this judgment the owners of the Franconia appealed.

Dec. 6 and 7.—Benjamin, Q. C. and Phillimore (Cohen, Q.C., with them) contended the Strathclyde was bound to take the usual channel course, and to keep it, and that she ought not to deceive other vessels as to her intentions without due warning. There being a proper course, a deviation from it was a default for which she ought to be held to blame.

The Velocity, L. Rep. 3 P. C. 45; 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 686; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 308;

The Esk and The Niord, ante, vol. 1, p. 1; L. Rep. 3 P. C. 436; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 667.

At least, if the intention of the master of the Strathclyde was to do something unusual he should have given due warning.

The Bellerophon, ante, p. 58; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 412.

As the two vessels were on courses not parallel, they must be considered as approaching ships, and hence it was the duty of the Strathclyde to slacken speed as soon as there was risk of collision. This she neglected to do, and she was, therefore, guilty of a breach of the regulations which, under the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 17, renders her liable to be deemed in fault, as there were no circumstances rendering a departure from the rule necessary.

Butt, Q.C., Clarkson, and Webster, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

BRETT, J.A.—In this case the judgment of the Admiralty Court found that the Franconia was solely to blame upon these grounds. The judge and the Elder Brethren found that the vessels were crossing vessels; but, although it was said that they were crossing vessels, yet that the Strathclyde was not at all to blame for not slackening her speed as the vessels were coming together.

Now, I believe we are all of opinion that the judgment of the court below is correct, and that the Franconia was solely to blame. But we do not, I think, agree with the reasons which were given by the court below for arriving at that result.

We take it, upon the evidence as a whole, to be proved that when the two ships laid their course, the position of the ships was very much what the captain of the Strathclyde stated it to be, viz., when the ships had taken the two courses which they resolved to hold for some time. The Franconia was about two points on the quarter of the Strathclyde. It is true the vessels were then laying two courses, mathematically would at one time or other those two courses to cross; but the question whether under those circumstances, the ships crossing ships, or whether one is a ship over another.

Now, if the two ships were in that position and upon those two courses, it seems impossible that the Franconia could ever be the Strathclyde, unless she was going faster than the Strathclyde; and we all think the evidence is conclusive to show that the Franconia was going faster than the Strathclyde, and the gentlemen who advise me, I believe, of the same opinion. It is true there is evidence as to the pace or the speed of each vessel, and the evidence may look as if two vessels were going the same, or as nearly possible the same, speed. But if you once put two vessels into the position which I have stated and take the courses which it is admitted on both sides were the courses, it is impossible that the Franconia could have touched the Strathclyde unless she was going faster than the Strathclyde. Therefore I take it that the two ships were in the position as nearly as possible described by the Captain of the Strathclyde, and that the Franconia was going faster than the Strathclyde.

But the two ships were going upon courses which, mathematically, would eventually, at some point, cross each other.

Now, under those circumstances, the question seems to me to be whether two vessels in those positions can be said, within the meaning of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, to be crossing ships.

This case has been argued as if ships crossing must be crossing, unless they are going exactly parallel lines, or as nearly as possible parallel lines. I cannot think that in the meaning of these rules. The 13th rule speaks of two ships under steam meeting end on or nearly end on. The 14th rule speaks of two ships under steam crossing; but the 17th rule is, "every vessel overtaking any other vessel." Now, Mr. Benjamin argues that, although ships were crossing they might also be overtaking. I cannot think that that is the true interpretation of these rules. The rule which applies to crossing ships, in the word "crossing" is, using a sea term, a term of navigation; it is not using a mathematical term, and so in speaking of one vessel overtaking another, the 17th rule uses a mathematical term at all. Now the 14th rule of course implies that one ship is going faster than another, for unless one ship is going faster than another it is difficult to say it is overtaking another.

Then we come to this, whether we can give a definition of the difference between crossing ships and overtaking ships. Now it seems to me that this may be a very difficult definition—I will not say that it is extremely difficult that it may not on some occasion be short of comprising every case, but I think it is a very good rule—that if the ships are in those positions, and are on such courses, and at such distances that if it were night the

APP.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[CT. OF APP.]

see any part of the side lights of the lead ship, then they cannot be said to be abreast, although their courses may not be parallel to one another; if one ship is so abreast of the other, and their courses are such that it were night the one ship could not see the other, any part of the side lights of the other ship, she must be so far ahead that she could not possibly reach her before it was going very much faster than that ship. It would not do, I think, to limit the rule by saying that the crossing must not be too much, but if it is limited in that way it seems to me that that is a very impractical rule.

If that is so, these ships were in the position which I have described. If the Strathclyde was a mile or even a quarter of a mile distant from the Franconia, and had the Franconia two points ahead, the Strathclyde being ahead, it is not the opinion of the gentlemen who advise us that the Franconia could have seen any part of the lights of the Strathclyde, and that, in the opinion of the gentlemen who advise us, being so, the Strathclyde and the Franconia were not crossing vessels, and as a collision place, the Franconia must have been abreast of the Strathclyde. She was, therefore, overtaking vessel, and came within the has been argued by Mr. Benjamin that the vessels were crossing at all, they must be approaching. I do not think it is necessary to determine that point, but that my mind goes with him, and in support of my opinion certainly is that if it can properly be said, within the meaning of the 16th article or rule, to be crossing at that time, they must be approaching and if both of them are steamers the 16th rule applies, and both of them ought to be kept clear. It seems to me clear that where the vessels brings them within the 16th rule, which the one is overtaking the other, they are both steamers, you cannot apply the rule at all to the leading vessel. It is only by any fair construction of language that one that is a leading vessel, although a vessel is approaching the other; she is going abreast of the other, and it is an abuse of language to say that that vessel is an approaching vessel at all; when one steamship is overtaking another within the meaning of these rules the first one cannot be said to be abreast of the hinder vessel at all, and, therefore, the vessel is not within the 16th rule.

If that being so, the Franconia broke almost all the rules. She was the vessel overtaking the Strathclyde. Under those circumstances she ought to have kept out of the way. She was a steamship approaching another. She ought to have kept clear. She did nothing until the last moment to get out of the way or to slacken speed. If what I say is correct, the Strathclyde broke no rule, unless it can be said that she broke the 20th rule. Now, when the vessels came close to each other, it seems to me to suppose that they were, as has been said, a quarter of a mile apart at the last moment the Franconia ported. There is no doubt that she was only three ship's lengths from the Strathclyde at that time. I put down the evidence to this that she was a quarter of a mile off and overlapping the other vessel, in my opinion, and according to the opinion of the gentlemen who advise us, the collision could not have taken place as it did. What is the conclusion, then (the collision did take place), but that they were not a quarter of a mile off, but three lengths of a vessel apart at the time the Franconia ported? Now, if this be true, the Strathclyde up to that time, having broken no rule, can it be suggested that she broke a rule then? On the contrary, it was found in the court below, and it is the opinion of those who advise us here, and it is our opinion that so far from breaking any rule of navigation at the time, the Strathclyde did the very best thing she could do, she did yield half a point to the Franconia, and afterwards yielded more by putting her helm hard a-port, and it is our opinion and those who advise us, that it is the best thing she could do to avoid the wrong conduct of the Franconia. Therefore the Franconia broke the rules; the Strathclyde broke no written rule.

But, then, it has been suggested that the Strathclyde misled the Franconia. Now, I confess that that seems to me to be an untenable argument. First of all it rests upon an assumption that the Franconia had a right to keep on her course, not only as to direction but as to the place in which she was, and that because the Strathclyde was coming out of Dover Bay she ought either to have yielded to the Franconia, or that she ought to have ported her helm so as to go a course down channel which would keep her on the starboard side of the Franconia. That is so, it is said, because the Franconia was going down on her usual course; and the case was likened to The Velocity (ubi sup.), and The Esk (ubi sup.), and Mr. Phillimore invited us to say that the same rules were applicable to the usual course of the English Channel which are applicable to a river with a winding course. It is the first time such a proposition was put forth. The rules are made for the sea. The reason why, in the cases of The Velocity and The Esk, it was held that the rules did not apply was, because, as a matter of fact, the rules are held to be inapplicable to vessels meeting each other and sighting lights in a winding river. Their lights are seen overland, and it is impossible that the rules can be made applicable to these circumstances. If that is so, no regulations were ever intended to apply to circumstances where in truth and fact they cannot apply; and therefore in The Velocity (ubi sup.), and The Esk (ubi sup.), it was held that these written rules did not apply, but that some other rule did, and that other rule is the customary course of navigation in different rivers, and everyone who has known the Thames has known what the usual course of navigation in that river has been for many years. That does not apply at all to the Channel, and there is no usual course in the Channel in the sense in which it was argued. The ships are in the English Channel as if they were on the sea, and the only sailing rules which are applicable to them under those circumstances are those which have been enacted and are contained in those rules. The case of The Velocity, therefore, is not applicable.

Therefore, on the whole, taking the position of these ships to have been what we find them to be, and taking their courses to have been what is admitted, we are of opinion that the Franconia was a vessel overtaking the Strathclyde; that the vessels were not crossing vessels; that the Strathclyde was not a vessel which can be said to have been approaching the Franconia; that the Franconia was an overtaking and approaching ship, that she broke the rules, that she broke them up to the end; that the Strathclyde broke no rule either before the collision was imminent or at the moment before the collision was inevitable; she broke no rule from beginning to end. We are of opinion, therefore, that the Franconia was an overtaking ship, and that the Strathclyde was not a crossing ship. We agree with the Admiralty Court that the Franconia was to blame. We cannot, however, agree with the decision of the Admiralty Court that the two ships were crossing ships; and we hold that the Strathclyde was not bound to diminish her speed.

JAMES, L.J.—The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Stokes, Saunders, and Stokes.

Solicitors for the respondents, Gellally, Son, and Warton.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by W. APPLETON and P. B. HUTCHINS, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Dec. 1, 1876.

(Before MELLISH, L.J. BRETT and AMPHLETT, JJ.A.)
SANGUINETTI v. THE PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Charter-party—Days allowed for loading—Stiffening coal—Demurrage—Master's lien—Ceasing of charterer's liability.

Defendants chartered plaintiff's ship to carry a cargo to Callao. By the charter-party the ship was "to be loaded at the average rate of 75 tons per clear working day . . . Stiffening coal, if required, to be supplied at ship's expense at the rate of 40 tons per clear working day after written notice is given to the charterers' agent of its being required, but all days on which stiffening coal is taken on board, or the ship is detained for the same, to be excluded in the computation of the said working days allowed for loading . . . Demurrage to be paid for each day beyond the said days allowed for loading and discharging respectively at the rate of 3d. per registered ton per day. The master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage due under this agreement . . . All liability of the charterers under this agreement shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board . . . All questions, whether of short delivery, demurrage, or otherwise, are to be settled with the manager or agents of the charterers at the port of destination, which settlement is to be binding on the owner. The owner and master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage."

Defendants failed to supply stiffening coal, whereby the ship was detained forty-eight days at the port of loading. Plaintiff sued for demurrage.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division on demurrer to statement of claim), that putting stiffening coal on board was "loading" within the demurrage clause, and therefore demurrage was payable, but that this was a liability under the charter-party, which ceased when the cargo was on board, and the only remedy was by the master's lien, and therefore plaintiff not recover on the charter-party.

ACTION by the plaintiff, owner of the Seppe, against the defendants, charterers. Statement of claim set out the charter-party material parts of which are as follows:

"The said ship, now at Genoa, being staunch, and strong, and in every way fit for the voyage, shall proceed to Cardiff, with or without cargo, and there load in any dock by shippers a full and complete cargo of coal from the colliery named by the charterers' agent on the vessel's arrival at Cardiff, and so loaded shall therewith proceed to Callao near thereto as she may safely get, and thence deliver the same (all on board to be delivered by lighters, steamers, depot ships, or at any place ordered by the charterers' agent . . . The cargo shall be loaded at the average rate of 75 tons per clear working day (as tendered during night or commencing when the vessel is in berth at the tip where tips are used), wholly unballasted and ready to receive cargo, notice of which is given in writing by the master to charterers' agent. Any time lost by reason of riots, or general lock-outs, strikes or cessation of work on the part of the pitmen or other hands employed in the getting, carriage, or loading of the coals from whatever cause, or by reason of accidents in mines or to machinery, obstruction in any railway, river, canal, or dock used for the carriage of the coal, or in the loading of the ship by reason of floods, frosts, storms, or any other cause beyond the control of the charterers to be included in the computation of the said working days. Stiffening coal if required to be supplied at ship's expense at the rate of 40 tons per clear working day after written notice is given to the charterers' agents of its being required, but all days on which stiffening coal is taken on board the ship is detained for the same to be excluded in the computation of the said working days allowed for loading. The vessel to be discharged at the average rate of 40 tons per clear working day, commencing from the day after written notice is given to the charterers' agents of its being required to deliver the cargo. Demurrage to be paid for each day beyond the said days allowed for loading and discharging respectively at the rate of 3d. per registered ton per day. The master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage due under this agreement. . . . All liability of the charterers under this agreement shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board, except as to the aforesaid payment to be made on sailing. All questions, whether of short delivery, demurrage, or otherwise, are to be settled with the manager or agents of the charterers at the port of destination, which settlement is to be binding on the owner and master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage."

The statement of claim went on to say that the ship proceeded to Cardiff, and on the 18th of December, 1875, notice was given that stiffening coal was required.

Clause 5 was as follows: "The vessel to be discharged at the average rate of 40 tons per clear working day, commencing from the day after written notice is given to the charterers' agents of its being required to deliver the cargo. Demurrage to be paid for each day beyond the said days allowed for loading and discharging respectively at the rate of 3d. per registered ton per day. The master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage due under this agreement. . . . All liability of the charterers under this agreement shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board, except as to the aforesaid payment to be made on sailing. All questions, whether of short delivery, demurrage, or otherwise, are to be settled with the manager or agents of the charterers at the port of destination, which settlement is to be binding on the owner and master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage."

the purpose of keeping her upright, a small quantity of ballast is disaltaneously with the receipt of the l, whereof the defendants had notice." that the defendants failed to supply coal until the 15th April 1875, and endants detained the ship forty-eight l above the period so agreed upon for thereby became liable to pay to the 13s. for demurrage of the vessel or for the detention of the vessel, yet the ave not paid the same, and the same due and unpaid."

also allegations that the defendants' lao requested the plaintiff to deliver hout enforcing his lien, and the plaind that the defendants' agent did not estions which arose.

"to so much of the plaintiff's state-as alleges liability in respect of what England . . . on the ground that it the cargo was on board, and that all he defendants was by the charterse thereupon . . . and also on the it does not appear that the said quesen settled with the said manager or lefendants."

's Bench Division (Mellor and Quain, ignment for the defendants, and the aled.

Q.C. (L. P. Russell with him) for the e clause in the charter-party by which ' the charterers is to cease as soon as n board, does not apply to the claim at the port of loading. It only charterers from liability for breaches -party in respect of which a lien is wner :

y, ante, vol. 2, p. 593; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. Rep. 10 Q. B. 553;

. Massey, ante, vol. 2, p. 594n.; L. Rep. ; 42 L. J. 75, Ex. ;

. Falk, ante, vol. 2, p. 8; 33 L. T. Rep. L. Rep. 10 Ex. 132.

referred to French v. Gerber (L. Rep. 7, now pending in the Court of Apie present case the parties had two ttemptation when the charter-party p—demurrage, and detention as disom demurrage. The lien is only eight, dead freight, and demurrage," extend to the present claim. There-is not within the clause exempting s from liability, and the plaintiff is over. The exemption is conditional ants' agent settling according to the

(Arthur Williams with him) for the The point intended to be raised by is that the defendants are subject to ndependently of what happened at is a claim for demurrage, and as n the express words of the clause

It follows that it comes within the ting the defendants from liability arter-party. The contention on the intiff is that by making the charter-endants contracted an obligation that ould settle; if so, that is a liability arter-party, and the exemption apurt will not vary the meaning of the e the plaintiff finds his lien an insufficient security. He also referred to Bannister v. Breslau (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 418; L. Rep. 2 C. P. 497; 36 L. J. 195, C. P.). [BRETT, J.A.—That case has been doubted; see French v. Gerber (ubi sup.)]

L. P. Russell, in reply, referred to

Gray v. Carr, ante, vol. 1, p. 115; L. Rep. 6, Q. B. 522; 40 L. J. 257, Q. B.; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 215.

MELLISH, L.J.—The question in this case is whether, according to the true construction of the charter-party, the defendants are liable to pay demurrage or damages for detention of the plaintiff's ship, which was detained for forty-eight days at the port of loading, Cardiff. The demurrer only raises the question whether the defendants are liable to a claim for demurrage or detention in England. We thought that in order to settle the matter fully, it was desirable to consider the question whether the shipowner can maintain an action on the charter-party if the charterer's agent does not settle the claim at the port of destination.

The clause as to demurrage is this: "Demurrage to be paid for each day beyond the said days allowed for loading and discharging respectively at the rate of 3d. per registered ton per day." The first question which we have to consider is whether "loading" in this clause is confined to loading the ship at the rate of 75 tons per day after she is wholly unballasted and the stiffening coal has been put in, or whether it includes putting the stiffening coal on board, for which certain days are allowed, and so whether there is an agreement to pay demurrage in respect of that time.

The charter-party says: "The ship to be loaded at the average rate of 75 tons per clear working day as tendered during night or day commencing when the vessel is in berth (under the tip where tips are used) wholly unballasted and ready to receive cargo, notice of which is to be given in writing by the master to the charterers' agent." I agree that the working days mentioned in this clause do not begin until after the stiffening coal is put on board, because until then the ballast would not be entirely out. Then there is the clause: "Any time lost by reason of riots, &c., . . . to be excluded in the computation of the said working days." Then comes the following clause: "Stiffening coal if required to be supplied at ship's expense, and at the rate of 40 tons per clear working day after written notice is given to the charterers' agents of its being required, but all days on which stiffening coal is taken on board, or the ship is detained for the same, to be excluded in the computation of the said working days allowed for loading." If we look at the substance of these clauses it is plain that the parties meant that if stiffening coal were required it should be loaded at the rate of 40 tons per working day, and when the ballast was out, and the stiffening coal loaded, the cargo should be put on board at the rate of 75 tons per working day. These stipulations are only separated in the charter-party, because in the one case the rate of loading is to be 40 tons a day and in the other 75. If putting the stiffening coal on board is part of the loading within the meaning of the demurrage clause, demurrage is clearly payable in respect of delay in putting stiffening coal on board, and it is not easy to see why the owner should not be entitled to his 3d. per ton per day if there is delay beyond the days allowed for loading stiffening coal, just as much as if there is delay beyond the days allowed for loading cargo at the rate of 75 tons a day. No number of days is named in the charter-party, but whatever time is occupied beyond the time which it would take to load the stiffening coal at the rate of 40 tons per working day and to load the cargo at the rate of 75 tons per working day, is to be paid for, whether longer or shorter, and I cannot see why this provision should not apply to the time for loading stiffening coal as much as to the time for loading cargo.

Then the next clause is: "The master to have a lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage due under this agreement." We have to decide what the meaning of the word demurrage in that clause is, and I think it applies to demurrage for delay in loading stiffening coal as much as to demurrage for delay in loading cargo. I think this is the true construction, for the two clauses come immediately after each other, and to give any other meaning to demurrage in the latter clause would make them inconsistent with each other. In both I think it extends to detention in loading stiffening coal as well as in loading cargo.

Then there is the clause discharging the charterers. "All liability of the charterers under this agreement shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board." It is clear, according to the authorities, that the words in this clause cannot be confined to liability arising from breaches subsequent to the loading, but must extend to all liability under the charter-party of every description. The clause goes on: "And all questions, whether of short delivery, demurrage, or otherwise, are to be settled with the manager or agents of the charterers at the port of destination." Now, what is the meaning of the word "settle" in that clause? Is it meant to revive a liability under the charter-party which would have ceased under the previous part of the clause? If it does the charter-party is contradictory. It is shown that the master is to have a lien, and although the consignee and consignor are the same, I think there is no right of action, but the remedy is by lien on the cargo. I do not think the words "short delivery" make any difference; a claim for short delivery would be a claim by the charterers against the owners, and the charter-party means that such a claim is to be settled by the agent and the amount deducted from the freight; there is to be one settlement before the cargo is delivered. I do not think that the use of these words, or the fact that the consignee was the agent of the charterers, can afford any reason for construing the charter-party in a manner contrary to the decided cases. There may have been reasons why the charterers wanted to make a settlement with their agent at Callao compulsory; the agent might be in the habit of receiving large sums of money for them, and they might wish to compel him to settle claims against them out of the money which he so received. I think the true meaning of the clause is that in a case like the present the charterers are to be subject to no liability.

It is true that in the statement of claim it is alleged that the defendants' agent requested that the cargo might be delivered without the plaintiff's lien being enforced. If this be true, it might possibly give rise to some right of action, but it would be dehors the charter-party. Mr. Benjamin did not wish for a decision on this, so I offer no opinion as to whether may be any right of action independently charter-party.

In my opinion, according to the charter the defendants were freed from liability ship's sailing, and their liability did not afterwards revive. I think, therefore, that the judgment ought to be affirmed.

BRETT, J.A.—I am of opinion that on demurrage we are confined to the charter-party. The statement of claim on proof being given something outside the charter-party would cause of action, the demurrage is not point that, and the question will still be open. The question which we have to decide, and which the Queen's Bench Division had to decide, is whether there is a right of action on the charter-party have come to the conclusion that there is a cause of action.

In the first place, I agree that the plaintiff's claim comes within the demurrage clause. I think this is equally so whether stiffening coal is part of the cargo or not. When I asked Mr. Benjamin he admitted at the moment it was part of the cargo, but I cannot say I am sure it is so, for it is to be supplied at ship's expense. When a ship is chartered to carry goods on a voyage the time of the completion of that ship depends partly on accident, as wind and weather, partly on the conduct of the owner, and partly on the conduct of the charterer. It depends to a certain extent on the conduct of the charterer in supplying cargo, and in the way at the end of the voyage, or whether the consignee is ready to receive the cargo. It is a time at the beginning and end of the voyage which depends on the charterer, and consequently there are provided lay days, during which the shipowner is not allowed to claim anything beyond the freight made payable by the charter-party. These days are fixed at the beginning and end of the voyage in one of two ways. The number of lay days may be stated, or, as was done in this case, the other mode may be adopted, which is by the use of certain phraseology to arrive at the number of lay days. Here the lay days at the commencement of the voyage are fixed by the quantity of stiffening coal and cargo to be put on board by day. Instead of naming the lay days in the charter-party this method has been adopted. The capacity of the ship and the quantity of stiffening coal required not being known a fixed time cannot be named in the charter-party; but this is fixed out when the ship arrives, and if the ship carries a certain number of tons of cargo that number divided by 75 will give the number of lay days to be allowed in respect of the cargo, and the number of tons of stiffening coal divided by 40 will give the number of lay days in respect of the stiffening coal; the two added together will give the total number of lay days, and this number will be the same as if that number had been written in the charter-party. Then the charter-party goes on to provide that if the ship is detained, which must be understood to be the fault of the charterer, demurrage is to be paid; all days beyond the days allowed for loading and discharging are to be paid for. The effect is to bring the whole case within the demurrage clause.

As to the question whether this is a detention, generally if there is a detention ys named in the charter-party beyond and the ship is delayed by the fault of beyond the demurrage days, this is which the owner is entitled to damages; but here the number of ys is not mentioned at all, and there-entention beyond the lay days seems to urrage. Therefore, whether the stif-part of the cargo or not all the days ombined number of days to be al-ling the ship and for supplying stif-re demurrage days, and are within e clause. But if they were not rrage days I should still agree that me within the clause which gives a clause ought to be enlarged so as to tion in the nature of demurrage. e captain could have exercised his n respect of detention at the port of there was a lien in respect of the m. Therefore, whether the decision Gerber (ubi sup.) is adopted or not, olving clause, and, unless this is dis-rom the other cases, will absolve the m liability.

es the judgment to the question latter part of the clause modifies I think it does not. At the is struck with the suggestion made e of the words "short delivery," "short delivery" there would be no ms that it would be a claim by the inst the owner, which would have to t seems to me that the question of r would be determined by the agent here is another question which the gent there may be the person most nd that is the question of demurrage of discharge. The agent is given e both against the owner and in his e settlement is binding on the owner. a dispute as to whether fifteen or ten age were payable, and the agent said ys, the captain might possibly refuse cargo unless he were paid for fifteen ; e owner would be liable, and if the l for fifteen days he could get back paid for five of them, because the e agent would be binding on the ig regard to the nature of the clause, ve been primarily meant to apply to y at the port of discharge, but the plicable to demurrage for delay at ading. The effect of all the parts of ken together is that the defendants' s on the charter-party as soon as the ard, and the only remedy left is the fore, of opinion that the judgment and ought to be affirmed, expressly re do not determine whether, under nces which took place at Callao, the l have any right of action against s or their agents.

[A.—I am of the same opinion. t so much time has been taken up in e pleadings, which are very unsatis- s admitted that there are two causes e statement of claim, and to one nurrer, that is to as much of the laim as alleges liability in respect of lace in England, and if there is any cause of action in consequence of the conduct of the defendants' agent abroad this is inconsistent with an action on the charter-party. If the defend-ants' agent requested the cargo to be delivered without settling the plaintiff's claim, the question whether there is any right of action is left open.

I do not propose to go through the reasons for our decision so clearly given by Mellish, L.J., and Brett, J.A. I quite agree with the reasons given, and I think the judgment ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Ingledeu, Ince, and Green- ing, for Ingledeu, Ince, and Vachell, Cardiff.

Solicitors for defendants, Field, Roscoe and Co., for Bateson and Co., Liverpool.

June 13 and Dec. 1, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., MELLISH and JAMES, L.J.J., BAGGALLAY, J.A. and ARCHIBALD, J.)

BORROWMAN AND OTHERS v. DRAYTON.

"Cargo" of goods—Contract for sale of—Con-struction—Additional goods placed on board by sellers—Buyer's right to annul contract.

The plaintiffs, acting for principals at New York, contracted to supply the defendant with a cargo of from 2500 to 3000 barrels (seller's option) of petroleum, at 1s. 0½d. per gallon, the shipment to be made at New York, and the vessel to proceed to a port of discharge to be determined (within certain limits) by the defendants.

The plaintiff's principals in New York accordingly chartered a vessel, and agreed to provide her with a full and complete cargo of petroleum. 3000 barrels of petroleum were placed on board the vessel at New York, and a bill of lading signed making them deliverable to the order of the plain-tiffs' principals; but, as the ship would carry a further quantity, 300 additional barrels of petro- leum were placed on board, which were marked with a different mark, and a separate bill of lad- ing was signed for them.

The plaintiffs gave notice to the defendant of the shipment of the 3000 barrels, and were ready to order the ship from its port of call to any port of delivery within the contract, and there to deliver to the defendant the 3000 barrels, and to take the 300 additional barrels themselves, but the defen- dant refused to receive the 3000 barrels or any other quantity. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for such refusal.

Held (affirming the decision of the Exchequer Division), that the plaintiffs were not, at the time of the defendant's so refusing, ready and willing to deliver to him a "cargo" of from 2500 to 3000 barrels, within the terms of their contract, as they were not entitled, without the defendant's consent, to place any additional cargo on board the chartered vessel.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Ex- chequer Division, discharging a rule to enter the verdict for the plaintiffs.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Court of Appeal (post).

Morgan Howard, Q.C. and Tindal Atkinson, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant cannot reject the contract because the 300 additional barrels were placed on board. If he could show that he has suffered damage thereby, it is possible he might recover it. He should have protected himself by his contract. Supposing the plaintiffs had placed twenty barrels of sugar on board besides the 3000 barrels of petroleum, can it be supposed that the defendant could reject the whole of the petroleum? The consignees have the entire disposal of the ship, and the vendors here, under the contract, were the consignees, so that there was no question of any lien for freight as against the defendant. The cargo contracted to be sold was kept quite separated from what was put in in addition, and the defendant had entire control over the vessel when she arrived at the port of call; he cannot now reject the contract. In Kreuger v. Blanck (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 470; L. Rep. 5 Ex. 179, which will be relied on for the other side, and upon which the judgment of the court below is founded), the judgment went upon the performance of the contract being essentially different to that which the defendant contracted for. That case, therefore, is distinguishable from this, and the authority of it has been doubted in Ireland v. Livingston (ante, vol. 2, p. 389; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 79; L. Rep. 5 H. of L. Cas. Eng. & Ir. App. 395; 11 L. J. 201, Q. B.). You cannot give an absolute and technical meaning to the word "cargo." By the contract the time for shipment was limited; the parties, therefore, in view of the difficulty attending it, could not have intended that a ship of exactly the proper size to carry 3000 barrels should be obtained. They also referred to Surgut v. Reed, 2 Str. 1228.

Benjamin, Q.C. and English Harrison, for the defendant. The contract expressly provides for payment of freight by the defendant. The shipowner has a lien on all freight. Therefore, on the ship's arrival at the port of call, the defendant's 3000 barrels would be liable for the freight on the extra 300 barrels. Two things are stipulated for by the contract. First, that the vendors should send a "cargo;" secondly, that that cargo should consist of from 2500 to 3000 barrels. They have done neither. If the plaintiffs' view is correct, the contract would have been for a "shipment" not a "cargo" of from 2500 to 3000 barrels. It is a part of a cargo, not a cargo, which has been tendered to us. No equivalent performance of the contract will do. The shipper, by placing on board an extra quantity of goods, can bring them into competition with the defendant's goods, and so reduce the price in the market. The quantity of goods which the defendant agreed to buy was between the limits of 2500 and 3000 barrels. "at the seller's option." Can it be contended that the plaintiffs could have delivered 1500 barrels to the defendant, and reserved 800 barrels for themselves? Many questions might arise in relation to the rights of the different owners of the goods on board, which the defendant could not have intended should be raised.

And J. A. is replied.

On the rule.

Per J. A. The judgment of the court was delivered as follows:

Metcalf, J.—There was an agreed statement of facts, and the court discharged a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs.

This case was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant on account of the defendant having refused to accept 300 barrels of petroleum, which he had agreed to purchase under a contract, and the question to be determined is, whether according to the true construction of the contract between the parties, the defendant was entitled to refuse to buy those 3000 barrels on the ground that other barrels of petroleum formed part of the cargo of the Lindesnes so that the 3000 barrels did not constitute the entire cargo. The contract between the plaintiffs and defendant was made the 13th Dec. 1873, and was as follows: "Sold day for Borrowman, Phillips, and Co. to John Drayton and Co. a cargo of from 2500 to 3000 barrels (sellers' option) United States American refined petroleum, crown, diamond, and brand good merchantable quality without any guarantee as to test, but having American certificate standard white burning test, not under 120° Fahr.: shilling and three farthings per gallon, weight 8lb. delivered; to be shipped from New York during the last half of February next, and vessel call for orders off coast for any safe floating port in the United Kingdom, or on the coast between Havre and Hamburg, both inclusive (buyers' option). In case of vessel being ordered the continent buyers are to pay the extra freight including insurance. On arrival of vessel at port of discharge the oil is to be landed at a public wharf and weighed on landing and tared for storage, real average tare to be arrived at by weighing one in every twenty barrels as they come from ship. Buyers agree to pay landing and all other charges, including fire insurance, for which they are to be allowed five shillings per ton on gross weight. In event of vessel coming to United Kingdom payment to be made at landing weight in fourteen days from last day of landing by cash less 2½ per cent. discount, or cash against delivery order if required, allowing interest at five per cent. per annum, or bank rate if over, for unpaid portion of prompt, if to the continent the fourths of gross amount of invoice to be paid in exchange for shipping documents on arrival of vessel at port of call less interest at five per cent. per annum or bank rate, if over, for unpaid portion of prompt, and remaining fourth to be paid on the prompt, say fourteen days from last day of landing, by cash less 2½ per cent. discount. Should any dispute arise out of this contract the same to be settled by arbitration in London in the usual way. Particulars of shipment to be declared so soon as ascertained. This vessel be lost contract to be void, as also for any portion that may not arrive. Destination to be given within forty-eight hours after ship's arrival at port of call.—Roe and Wilson, brokers." On 11th Feb. 1874, the plaintiffs' principals, Messrs. Wallace, and Co. of New York, chartered the Lindesnes to convey the petroleum to the port of call, and agreed to provide the said vessel and complete cargo of refined petroleum, customary sized barrels. 3000 barrels of petroleum were placed on board the Lindesnes at New York, and a bill of lading signed making the same deliverable to the order of Sawyer, Walker, & Co. but as this generally did not constitute a cargo, 300 additional barrels of petroleum were placed on board; they were marked with the same mark and a separate bill of lading was given for them. The plaintiffs gave notice to the defendant of the shipment of the 3000 barrels, and asked him to order the ship from the port of call to call at the defendant's wharf, and deliver the 3000 barrels, and to

OF APP.]

THE MEDINA.

[CT. OF APP.]

ditional barrels themselves, or to deliver to defendant at any such port a quantity of barrels. But the defendant refused to take either the 3000 barrels, or any other quantity.

The question is, were the plaintiffs, under those circumstances, ready and willing to deliver to the defendant a cargo of from 2500 to 3000 barrels of petroleum within the contract, and we are of opinion that they were not.

The whole cargo of the Lindesnes consisted of 3300 barrels, and therefore was in excess of the quantity ordered, and the plaintiffs cannot succeed unless the defendant was willing to accept a part of a cargo. We, however, are of opinion that an agreement to sell a cargo is, according to the plain and natural meaning of the words, an agreement to sell the quantity of goods loaded on board a vessel, without regard to a particular voyage. By the terms of the contract the seller engages to deliver to the plaintiff a cargo of petroleum of from 2500 to 3000 barrels at seller's option. We think that effect must be given to the term "cargo," as distinguished from the specified quantity; as, if the plaintiffs had intended otherwise it would have been specified to specify the quantity without introducing the term "cargo" at all.

Generally speaking the term "cargo," when used in a contract, means the entire cargo of the ship which is carried, and it may be assumed that when one man undertakes to sell, and another to buy, a cargo, the entire matter of the contract is to be the entire cargo of the ship. And that such must have been the intention in which the term cargo is used in this contract is materially strengthened by the agreement that the vessel shall proceed to a port of discharge to be determined within certain limits by the plaintiffs, showing plainly that what was contemplated was that the vessel and its entire cargo were to be at his disposal. There are various reasons why a purchaser may wish to buy the entire quantity of goods loaded on board a particular vessel. Such a contract gives him the entire control of the vessel. It enables him to choose the port of discharge, to appoint the place of port at which the discharge is to take place, to be free from the inconvenience of other persons' goods being unloaded at the same time as his own, and from the competition arising from other persons' goods being ready for sale at the same place, and at the same time with his. It may be said that in this particular case the plaintiffs were ready to give the defendant the same advantages, or nearly the same advantages, as if 3000 barrels had formed the entire cargo. We think, however, that though the refusal to accept a cargo of petroleum, looking to the offers made by the plaintiffs, may, under these circumstances, have an unhandsome proceeding on the part of the defendant, the latter in point of law, was not bound to accept it, nor can we enter into whether what the plaintiffs offered was or was not a fair equivalent for what they contracted to do, or whether the defendant would or would not have suffered any substantial damage from not getting the entire cargo. It may be that the real reason why the defendant refused to receive the 3000 barrels was that the price of petroleum had fallen. Still we think he was entitled in point of law to say, "The thing which you offered me was not the thing I agreed to buy, and therefore I will not take it."

It was argued that even though an agreement to buy the cargo of a particular named ship should amount to an agreement to buy the whole cargo, yet that an agreement to buy a cargo of from 2500 to 3000 barrels of petroleum, no particular ship being named, would be satisfied by sending a quantity of from 2500 to 3000 barrels in any one ship, although the ship might be filled up with other goods. We do not agree with this. We think that the reason why the precise quantity of petroleum to be sent is not fixed, and the seller has a margin of 500 barrels is, that he may have no difficulty in chartering a ship of the requisite size, and that he was not entitled without the defendant's consent to place any additional cargo on board the ship.

Judgment for defendant. Judgment below affirmed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Mercer and Mercer.

Solicitors for the defendant, Johnson, Upton, and Budd.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAINES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, Dec. 7, 1876.

(Before JAMES, L.J., BAGGALLAY and BRETT, JJ.A.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE MEDINA.

Salvage of life—Agreement—Exorbitancy—Setting aside.

Where the master of a vessel found passengers of another vessel (550 pilgrims) wrecked on a rock in the Red Sea in fine weather, and refused to carry them to Jeddah for a less sum than 4000*l.*, and the master of the wrecked vessel was by such refusal compelled to sign an agreement for that amount, and the service was performed without difficulty or danger, the agreement was held inequitable and set aside; 1800*l.* awarded in the place thereof.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice.

The action was originally brought in the Exchequer Division, and was transferred to the Admiralty Division.

The claim, as it appeared on the indorsement of the writ, was for "4000*l.* due from the defendants to the plaintiffs under an agreement dated the 1st Oct. 1875, between Capt. J. Brown, master of the plaintiffs' ship Timor, for and on behalf of the plaintiffs and Capt. Charles Black, master of the defendants' ship Medina, for and on behalf of the defendants, for the conveyance at the defendants' request of passengers by the plaintiffs' ship Timor, from Parkin Rock, Harnish Island, to Jeddah."

The Medina was a steamship engaged in trading between Singapore and the Red Sea, and her owners, by means of that and other ships, conveyed pilgrims from various ports in the East to Jeddah, on their way to Mecca.

The Medina, in the course of a voyage to Jeddah with 550 pilgrims on board, was wrecked on Parkin Rock, in the Red Sea, and her pilgrims were landed on the rock, which is only just above the level of the sea.

The Timor, passing on her way from Singapore to Liverpool, via the Suez Canal, was assistance, and after considerable bargaining her master agreed to take the pilgrims to Jeddah for 4000*l.*, and an agreement to that effect was signed by the masters of the two vessels.

There was a considerable conflict of evidence as to what passed between the masters, especially as to who offered and who refused to refer the matter to arbitration, but in the result the master of the Timor refused to carry the pilgrims for any less sum than 4000*l.*, alleging that the risks of going to Jeddah, of being detained in quarantine, &c., were such as to justify his demand.

The master of the Medina alleged that he was compelled to agree to pay this sum by the perilous position of the pilgrims, and that he did his best to induce the master of the Timor to take a less sum, but was unable to do so. There were other steamers in the neighbourhood, and one came up before the Timor left.

The judge of the court below, assisted by nautical assessors, held that the sum demanded was excessive and exorbitant, and awarded 1800*l.* without costs.

The pleadings, facts, and judgment will be found set out in the report of the case in the court below: (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 918; 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 220.)

Myburgh (The Admiralty Advocate, Dr. Deane, Q.C. with him), for the appellants.—Besides the risk run by the Timor, the master of the Medina knew that his owners were in the habit of taking pilgrims to Jeddah, and that it would be injurious to their trade if they failed to carry out their contracts, and he considered this in agreeing to this sum, which was not unreasonable. Unless exorbitant or obtained by compulsion or fraud, the court ought not to upset the agreement:

The Helen and George, Swab. 368;

Cargo ex Woosung, ante, p. 230; L. Rep. 1 P. Div. 260; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 8.

Cohen, Q.C. and Wood Hill, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the court below was a right decision upon the balance of evidence. If the story of the defendant is the right one, the story of the plaintiff is wrong, that it was agreed to refer the case to arbitration before the agreement was made. We see no reason for coming to a different conclusion to that at which the court below arrived. Therefore we start from this, that there was no such preliminary. Then we come to whether this was an exorbitant sum which was got by compulsion, making it impracticable that the agreement could be enforced. It was stated in the court below that there were 500 pilgrims on a rock, whose lives might have been endangered at any moment. There was one ship, and one ship only, near them, and a man on that ship says, "I will take you to Suez for 3000*l.*; I will not take you for a farthing less." It involved nothing whatever but the mere taking the men on board and carrying them on to Suez. Afterwards he says, I will take them to Jeddah for 4000*l.* The defendant denies the 3000*l.*, but gives his own account as to what was asked, a sum of 4000*l.*, and says that this was a very exorbitant sum for a ship for only a few days' coming up to the rock and merely taking the pilgrims on board and carrying them on to the point defined. I agree that the conclusion of the Judge of the Admiralty Court was right, that it was exorbitant; and, having regard to the peculiar circumstances under which it was exercised, that it ought not to stand. Therefore, the court was right in giving a reasonable amount. That reasonable amount the court with the assistance of the two assessors, fixed. On one hand there was salvage to be paid, there was no tender on the other hand. It was an attempt to set up an agreement. In the whole, we think that there should be no decision on either side.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—I am of opinion that the principle of these cases was expressed correctly by Dr. Lushington, that the agreement for salvage should be upheld unless obtained by compulsion or fraud. Now, by the very fact that you find a large amount agreed to be paid in compensation for the services rendered, you are led to the conclusion that there may have been some dealing in the transaction. But that applies with particular force where persons, who are in extremity, in order to obtain assistance in extremity, have been required to pay a large sum for the assistance. That appears to have been the case here. There were 550 pilgrims on a rock in the Red Sea. Bad weather might come on, or they might have been attacked by natives, of whom there are plenty about the coast. In either case the pilgrims were in great peril from the fact that the rock was some distance from the course of vessels passing down the Red Sea. The captain of the Medina was bound to accept terms which were pressed upon him by the Timor.

BRETT, J.A.—I think the old rule of the Admiralty Court ought not to be encroached upon. It is, viz., that where there is an agreement made between competent persons, and there is no misrepresentation of facts, the agreement ought to be upheld unless there is something very strong to show that it is inequitable, but I think that this argument cannot be upheld, upon the ground that the amount claimed by the Timor was an enormous sum—not merely too large a sum, but, for the services to be rendered, a grossly exorbitant sum, and that it was forced upon the captain of the Medina by practical compulsion. Now, the sum was grossly exorbitant, I think, following this consideration—that the service was one of great difficulty at all, and under the circumstances there was no danger to the salvaging ship. She could take these people off with perfect facility; the service was not an onerous one. The pretence of a difficulty in going into a port like Jeddah is fallacious, there was no real difficulty or danger from the beginning to the end of the salvaging ship; and at the time the agreement was made there was no probability of danger to her. Therefore, for performing a service the sum of 4000*l.* was not only exorbitant but grossly exorbitant. But there is another consideration in this case. It was forced upon the captain of the Medina by practical compulsion, and his position was this—and that it is to be considered—he was the captain of the Medina which was rendered helpless; it was not at the bottom of the sea, but as far as her being a useful ship for the service she was useless, and could not be brought into use. You have these 550 beings on a rock, twelve miles from the course of ships, on a rock which is slightly over the ordinary level of the

CT. OF APP.]

THE CORINNA—THE CITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

[CT. OF APP.]

if a sea rose the people on the rock would be drowned. Therefore the captain of the vessel was responsible for them in case of weather coming on wherein their lives might be lost. Under those circumstances, it seems unfair to him to say, I will not take these people off for whom you are responsible unless you pay me a sum, which upon the assumption of the finding of the court below being correct, is a grossly exorbitant sum. If the captain had refused, he took upon himself the responsibility of allowing 500 human beings under his care to be left to the danger of being drowned. That is compulsion to the mind of any honest man. Therefore, I think there was a grossly exorbitant sum obtained on practical compulsion. Under all these circumstances, I think by the Admiralty rules of law it cannot stand.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Brooks, Jenkins and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Dawes and Sons.

Nov. 27, 28, and Dec. 1, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., JAMES, L.J., BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, JJ.A.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE CORINNA.

Damage by collision—Both vessels to blame—Costs. Where the Court of Appeal varies a decision of the Judge of the Admiralty Division, by which he has found one vessel wholly to blame for a collision, by finding that both vessels are to blame, each party will pay its own costs, both in the Court below and in the Court of Appeal.

The Agra and The Elizabeth Jenkins (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 532; L. Rep. 1 P.C. 501; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755) followed.

THIS was a cause arising out of a collision in the river Thames, between the steamship Corinna and the barque Mary Anne. The Judge of the Admiralty Division found the Corinna alone to blame for the collision; and from that decision the owners of that vessel appealed. The appeal was heard on the 27th and 28th Nov., and 1st Dec., 1876, and on the latter day the judgment of the Court was delivered by Cockburn, C.J., reversing the decision of the court below so far as concerned the Mary Anne, and finding both vessels to blame for the collision, and ordering the damages to be divided.

Baikes (with him Dr. Deane, Q.C. and Clarkson), applied for costs, admitting that the practice in the Privy Council (See The Agra and The Elizabeth Jenkins) was that each party should pay their own costs; the case is different now; a successful appellant always gets his costs: (Practice of the Court, W.N., 1875, pp. 185, 186.)

Milward, Q.C. (with him W. Phillimore), contra.

COCKBURN, C.J.—In these cases the rule of the Privy Council will be retained; though the plaintiff has partially succeeded in his appeal, he is not found to be free from blame for the collision, each party will bear his own costs both here and in the court below.

Solicitors for appellants, Gellatly, Son, and Warion.

Solicitors for respondents, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

Nov. 28 and Dec. 1 and 5, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., JAMES, L.J., BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, JJ.A.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE CITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

Damage by collision—Inevitable accident—Costs. Where the Court of Appeal varies the decision of the Judge of the Admiralty Division, by which he found one vessel wholly to blame for a collision, by finding that the collision was an inevitable accident, the practice of the Privy Council that each party should, except under very exceptional circumstances, pay their own costs, will be followed. The Marpesia (ante, vol. 1, p. 261; L. Rep. 4 P. O. 212; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 333) followed.

THIS was a cause arising out of a collision in the river Thames, between the steamship City of Cambridge and the steamship Brenda. The Judge of the Admiralty Division on the 25th March 1876 found the City of Cambridge alone to blame for the collision, and from that decision the owners of the City of Cambridge appealed. The appeal was heard on 28th Nov. and 1st and 5th Dec., and on the latter lay the judgment of the court was delivered by Cockburn, C.J. reversing the decision of the court below, so far as concerned the City of Cambridge, and finding the collision to be the result of inevitable accident.

E. C. Clarkson (with him Benjamin, Q.C.) applied for costs.—It has been the uniform practice of the Court of Appeal since the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts to give a successful appellant his costs: (Practice of the Court, W. N. 1875, pp. 185, 186.) There is no reason why the rule as to costs in appeals from the Admiralty Division should be different from that in appeals from the other divisions. The rule as to costs in such a case in the Privy Council was not invariable, it was the same as that of the High Court of Admiralty. Dr. Lushington says, "On principle costs ought to follow the event," and in that case condemned the plaintiff in costs: (The London, 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 398; Br. & L. 82; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348, and The Thornby, 7 Jur. 659.)

Milward, Q.C. and Bruce, contra.—The practice of the Privy Council and High Court of Admiralty was that no order should be made as to costs in case of inevitable accident: (The Marpesia, ante, vol. 1, p. 261; L. Rep. 4 P. O. 212; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 333.) In the cases where a plaintiff has been condemned in costs, it has been because the court considered that he ought not to have brought the action, and that reason can hardly apply to a case in which he has obtained a decision of the court below in his favour. And this court will follow the practice of the Privy Council in appeals from the Admiralty Division: (The Corinna, ante p. 307.)

Clarkson in reply.

COCKBURN, C.J.—In cases of inevitable accident this court will follow the practice of the Privy Council, and, as a rule, make no order as to costs.

The suit against the City of Cambridge was therefore dismissed, and no order made as to costs either in the court below or Court of Appeal.

Solicitors for appellants, Gellatly, Son, and Warion.

Solicitor for respondents, Thomas Cooper.

CT. OF APP.]

THE VIVAR.

[CT.

December 7 and 20, 1876.

(Before JAMES, L.J., and BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, JJ.A.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE VIVAR.

Proceedings on protest—Service of writ out of jurisdiction—Cause of action arising on the high seas—Foreign ships.The practice of the High Court of Admiralty previous to the passing of the Judicature Acts in proceedings on protest (R. G. Admiralty 1859, r. 37) is preserved by sect. 18 of Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875.

THIS was an application to dismiss an action in personam against John McAndrew, instituted under the following circumstances.

On the 3rd Sept. 1876, the American ship Sonora of Boston was proceeding to Liverpool in tow of a steam tug, and when the South Stack Light, Holyhead, bore about N.E. by E.  $\frac{1}{2}$  E. and was about ten miles distant, she and the Vivar, a registered Spanish steamer, came into collision and both sank.Under these circumstances, on the 23rd Oct. 1876, leave was given by the assistant registrar to serve a writ of summons on John McAndrew out of the jurisdiction, requiring him to enter an appearance within fourteen days after service. John McAndrew, who was alleged to be owner of the Vivar, was accordingly served with the writ in Spain, where at the time he actually was. He handed it to his solicitors in London, who wrote to the plaintiffs' solicitors the following letter:24, Carter-lane, Doctors' Commons, 14th Nov. 1876.*Owners of Sonora and others v. McAndrew; The Vivar.*Dear Sirs,—The notice, dated the 23rd Oct., last which you have caused to be served on Mr. John McAndrew, has been handed to us with instructions to act on his behalf. The Vivar was a Spanish vessel Spanish owned. Mr. John McAndrew is a British subject, and resides in England. By the law of Spain a foreigner cannot own a Spanish vessel or shares in a Spanish vessel. Mr. McAndrew was not owner and could not be owner of the Vivar, or of any share in her. Under these circumstances we presume you will withdraw the notice you have given, otherwise we are quite prepared to appear to the action, and in that case shall, of course, ask for costs. You may consider this as an undertaking on our part on behalf of Mr. McAndrew. Be good enough to let us hear from you at once.—We are, dear Sirs, yours truly,

CLARKSON, SON, AND GREENWELL.

Messrs. Stokes, Saunders, and Stokes.

Subsequently the defendant by his solicitor entered an appearance under protest, but took no further steps and before filing a preliminary act.

On the 6th Dec. 1876, the Judge of the Admiralty Division was moved to dismiss the suit.

R. E. Webster, for the defendant.

W. G. F. Phillimore, for the plaintiff.

The arguments of counsel are reported below, being the same as those used in the Court of Appeal.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—I am asked in this case to dismiss the writ as having been improperly issued. It is admitted that if the protest can be looked at the court has no jurisdiction. Unless the decisions of the court in Re Smith (ante, p. 259; L. Rep. 1 P. D. 300; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 380), and The Evangelistria (ante, p. 264; 35 L. T.

Rep. N. S. 410), are wrong, I must abide till they are set aside elsewhere.

The following order was made:

On the 6th Dec. 1876, the Judge, having been on both sides, dismissed the defendant John from this action and all further observance therein.

From this order the plaintiffs appealed the 20th Dec. the appeal was argued preliminary objection on the part of the defendants, that, under sect. 50 of The Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, there was no appeal by special leave which had not been objected to in this case, had been overruled.

W. G. F. Phillimore (with him Stubbs appellants, admitting that the registrar had power to order service in such a case of jurisdiction, the defect has been waived by appearance. The appearance spoken of in the defendant's solicitors is an appearance; it says nothing of appearing to protest to raise the question of jurisdiction ground of defence alleged is that the defendant was not the owner of the ship. [JAY referred to the conditional appearance in the Court of Chancery where a person desired to be to the jurisdiction. BRAMWELL, J.A.—Still the defendant to have been within the jurisdiction could you have served him?] Yes, we could, though this writ was one for service out of jurisdiction, there is no difference in the form of the writ except as to the time for appearance (Westmans v. Aktiebolaget Ekman's Maskinfabrik, L. Rep. 1 Ex. D. 237.) The defendant would have been perfectly satisfied far as the mere issue of a writ was concerned only went too far in allowing service abroad as to appearance under the Judicature Act (Order IX., r. 1) is the same for all courts, borrowed from the practice of the Common Law Courts before those Acts. What that practice is clearly shown by Staniforth v. Richmond (W. R. 374); Oulton v. Radcliffe (L. Rep. 189; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 22); Diamond v. L. Rep. 1 Ex. 130; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 80 they decide that when a person has attorned to the jurisdiction it is too late to protest against it. The only difference made by the Judicature Act and Rules is that under them leave has to be obtained before service: (Scott v. Royal Wax Candle Company, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 683; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 404.) The proceedings on appearance under protest were peculiar to the High Court of Admiralty and rendered necessary by its limited jurisdiction and have been abolished, if not expressly, by necessary inference, by the fusion of the High Court of Admiralty with the other Superior Courts. The Admiralty Division, then, still exists in the Admiralty Division, then it also exist in all the other Divisions of the Court of Justice.

Webster.—The letter of defendant's solicitor was not an unconditional appearance, it was an unconditional undertaking to appear on behalf of the defendant by his solicitor proper course for the plaintiffs to pursue was to attach the solicitor for contempt. The proceedings on appearance under protest are preserved by sect. 18 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875. The Admiralty Rules 1859, r. 37. "If the proctor intends to object to the jurisdiction of the court, the appearance must be entered as a protest."

CT. OF APP.]

RANKEN v. ALFARO.

[CHAN. DIV.]

protest." The letter of defendant's solicitor was only an undertaking to appear under protest; after appearance it was the practice for the defendant to move the court: (Williams and Bruce Adm. Pr. 203.) That we have done. The court then, according to the circumstances of the case, either directed a plea to the jurisdiction or petition on protest, as it is called, to be filed (The Lyes Moon, not reported), or dismissed the defendant from the suit, as in this case, or overruled the objection to the jurisdiction: (The Catterina Chiazzaro, ante p. 170; L. Rep. 1 P. D. 365; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 588; The Charkieh, ante Vol. I., p. 581; L. Rep. 4 Ad. 59; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513). Sect. 18 of Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, preserves all the existing rules of practice of the Admiralty Court, unless expressly varied by the rules under the Judicature Acts, and the rule as to appearance under protest has not been repealed or varied even by implication, still less expressly, and has been acted on: (Re Smith, ante p. 259; L. Rep. 1 P. D. 300; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 380; The Evangelistria, ante p. 264; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 410.) It was the duty of the defendant when served with a writ to appear, but under protest, in the Admiralty Division. The order of the court, dismissing the defendant, will not relieve the him from the necessity of appearing to a writ served on him properly should he return to England.

W. Phillimore, in reply.—The Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XII., rr. 6, 15, by ordering one general method of appearance in the High Court of Justice, satisfies the requirements of sect. 18 of the Act of 1875, and expressly abolishes appearance under protest.

JAMES, L.J.—The real point which was raised in the court below, and the real point laid before us, is, whether the defendant was estopped by what had taken place from objecting to the validity of the order for service abroad. I am of opinion that he is not estopped. The solicitor, writing the letter undertaking to appear, in ignorance of the fact that there might be disclosed a perfectly good objection on the ground of the cause of action having taken place out of the jurisdiction, did not bind the defendant. I am also of opinion that appearance under protest is not an idle form, but that it is the old form known to the Court of Admiralty, and is not expressly taken away by the new rules under the Judicature Act. The solicitor appeared under protest for the real purpose of raising the question whether he was properly cited, and was subject to the jurisdiction of the court by the procedure which had taken place—whether he was properly compellable to appear, and the learned judge dismissed the defendant from the action. I am of opinion that the learned judge was right.

BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, JJ.A. concurred.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Stokes, Saunders, and Stokes.

Solicitors for the respondents, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Reported by J. E. THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(Before Vice-Chancellor HALL.)

Monday, Nov. 20, 1876.

RANKEN v. ALFARO.

Bill—Cargo—Specific appropriation—Lien—Equitable assignment.

Y., a merchant, in Costa Rica, shipped coffee to M. and Co., London, "on the strength of" which he drew bills on M. and Co., requesting them to have the coffee sold for his account, and the proceeds passed to his credit. There was an agreement between Y. and E. and Co., of Panama, to share profits and losses on this transaction. The bills came into possession of the plaintiffs, who presented them for acceptance to M. and Co., but the latter refused to accept them. Y. wrote to S., asking him to honour the drafts and obtain the bills of lading of the coffee from M. and Co., by whom they were accordingly handed over to S.

S. wrote to the plaintiffs, saying that he expected soon to get the delivery warrants of the coffee, and that he could dispose of the coffee as instructed by the sender.

M. and Co. were creditors to a large extent of E. and Co., whose agent they affirmed Y. to be, and they caused an attachment to issue out of the Lord Mayor's Court against the coffee.

S. then paid the proceeds of sale into court, and the plaintiffs applied to have their bills paid thereout on the ground that the coffee had been specifically appropriated to the bills, and that S. had made an equitable assignment of a part of the coffee equal in amount to the bills.

Held, following Robey and Co.'s Perseverance Iron Works v. Ollier (ante vol. 1, p. 413; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 362; L. Rep. 7 Ch. App. 695) that there was no such appropriation, and that S. had no authority to make such equitable assignment.

Frith v. Forbes (1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 251; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 847; 4 De G. F. & J. 409) distinguished on the ground that in that case the bills showed on the face of them that they were appropriated to the cargo.

The plaintiffs, Peter Ranken, Clement John Andrew Ulloq, and John Francis Chalmers, are merchants, carrying on business under the firm of Chalmers, Guthrie, and Co., and now suing on behalf of themselves and other holders of the bills of exchange hereafter mentioned.

Between the 1st and 17th April 1874, the defendant Yldefonso Alfaro, who is a merchant carrying on business at San José, in the Republic of Costa Rica, shipped and consigned three several parcels amounting in the whole to 808 sacks of coffee, belonging to him, to the defendants, Assur Henry Moses, Moses Henry Moses, Alfred Merton, Arthur Abraham Levy, and Edward Levy, merchants, carrying on business in co-partnership, in Fenchurch-street, in the city of London, under the firm of Moses, Levy, and Co., and drew various bills of exchange thereon.

On or about the 5th April, the said Yldefonso Alfaro wrote to Moses, Levy, and Co., a letter in Spanish, of which the following is a translation:

CHAN. DIV.]

RANKEN v. ALFARO.

[CHAN.

San José, 5th April 1874.

Messrs. Moses, Levy, and Co., London.

Gentlemen,—I inclose to you a letter of recommendation of Messrs. Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., of Panama, authorising me to draw on you at the rate of 4l. per quintal of coffee, which I may ship for my account to your consignment.

On the strength of this I have drawn on you the following drafts:

200 No. 112, to the order of Mr. Miguel Cyelos, at 90 days.
600 No. 113, to the order of Mr. Adolfo Bonilla, at 90 days.
500 No. 114, to the same.

£1300

Thirteen hundred pounds sterling, which I hope you will please accept and pay at maturity, to the debit of my account.

My agent, Mr. Nicolas Peña, of Puntarenas, will remit to you a bill of lading of said coffee. Up to to-day I have advice that they have remitted you already 220 sacks coffee with 130lb. each, and by the present another parcel will go forward, of which I cannot know to-day the number of sacks that can be shipped. Said coffee I request you to have sold for my account, and its proceeds passed to my credit.

In this transaction Messrs. Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., of Panama, have a share, being interested for a half of the profit or loss. On the strength of this, I hope you will please follow the instructions which said gentlemen may give you. By the succeeding steamers I shall continue remitting you greater quantities of sacks.

I avail myself of this opportunity to offer you my services in this place, and remain, yours truly,

(Signed) YLDEFONSO ALFARO.

The bills for 600l. and 500l. respectively mentioned in the said letter were two bills of exchange both dated the 31st March 1874, and drawn by the said Yldefonso Alfaro upon Moses, Levy, and Co., in favour of a Signor Adolfo Bonilla, who on the same day sold and indorsed the same to Messrs. Blanco de Triqueros, of San Salvador, in America, who in turn indorsed and forwarded them to the plaintiffs, their correspondents in England. The plaintiffs paid full value for the bills, and now hold them.

On or about the 15th April 1874, the said Yldefonso Alfaro wrote to the said Messrs. Moses, Levy, and Co., a letter in Spanish, of which the following is a translation:

San José, 15th April 1874.

Messrs. Moses, Levy, and Co., London.

Dear Sirs,—Without any of yours, I address the present lines to you, to advise you of the drafts I have drawn on you, on the same terms as heretofore:

£ s.
500 0 No. 125, of Mr. E. Huard, at 90 days, dated 10th inst.
100 0 No. 126, do. do. do.
125 0 No. 127, of Mr. Pedro Garcia do. do.
281 14 No. 133, of Mr. Gasto Gomez do. do.
200 0 No. 134, of Messrs. Juan Fernandez & Sons do. do.
700 0 No. 135, of Messrs. B. Fernandez and Co. do. do.
600 0 No. 137, of Mr. Joaquim Cantaglio do. do.

£2216 14

Two thousand two hundred and sixteen pounds, fourteen shillings, which I trust you will accept and pay at maturity, debiting me for their respective amounts, upon the same terms as before.

Coffee.—With a fall of the price there, the quintal has gone down $2 upon its price. My agent in Puntarenas remits you, by each steamer, bill of lading of shipment of above articles consigned to you, all of which please have sold according to my previous instructions. My opinion is that, given a fall of price there, it will be better to keep it three months longer, after which time I believe it would fetch a better price.—Yours, &c.,

(Signed) YLDEFONSO ALFARO.

The said Yldefonso Alfaro drew several other bills in like manner on Moses, Levy, and Co. The total amount of the bills was 4256l. 14s. Yldefonso Alfaro also through his agent, the said Nicolas Peña, forwarded to Moses, Levy, and Co., and they on the 13th and 16th May 1874, re all the bills of lading, shipping documents warrants, relating to the said shipments.

On the 14th May, the plaintiffs presented said bills of 600l. and 500l. respectively, to Moses, Levy, and Co. for acceptance. They however, refused without cause assigned, the same day accordingly, the plaintiffs (them) to be protested for non-acceptance, and held them to await maturity—they being ninety days' sight.

In consequence of this the defendant Yldefonso Alfaro addressed the following letter to the defendant Schwarz:

Corta Rica, San José, 17th June

Mr. F. M. Schwarz, London.

Dear Sir,—At the suggestion of Messrs. J. and Co., of Panama, I take the opportunity of informing you, that having made various consignments of for my risk and account to Messrs. Moses, Levy, & Co. of your city, amounting to 808 sacks (105,030lb) drawn upon them for 4256l. 14s. sterling, as per at foot, said bills have not been accepted; they stating that my former letter, in which I gave the instructions, was never received by them.

I therefore beg of you to take charge of this account and to realise it, honouring all my drafts, & account of it I drew upon Messrs. Moses, Levy, & Co. and for which you will kindly ask them for a list of holders of the said drafts. If the proceeds of the should not be sufficient to cover the drafts, telegraph Messrs. Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., of Panama, so they may inform me of the sum wanting, which I will at once remit.

I will now explain to you how I came to enter the transactions with these gentlemen.

At the beginning of this year I wrote to Messrs. Alfaro, and Co., of Panama, requesting them to send some letters of recommendation to Europe, and at the same time authorised me to draw upon the house, which I should commence business at the rate of 4 quintal, for coffee sent to it in consignment, form and account. In reply to this, the said Messrs. Alfaro, and Co. sent me several letters such as I did and further proposed that we should do the business jointly, sharing losses and gains, which proposal I accepted, as the manager of the said house, Mr. Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., is my brother.

I inclose you copies of my letters to Messrs. J. and Co. for your guidance. I also send you the power of attorney, for you to claim the consignments of those gentlemen, or else its proceeds in case it be refused.

I do not for a moment doubt but that you will do to this affair as if it were your own, and that you will take all means in your power to prevent my regret suffering commercially or morally.

I take this opportunity of subscribing myself—most obedient servant, YLDEFONSO ALFARO

The "former letter" referred to in the paragraph of this letter was the one dated 5th April 1874, above set out. The "details at foot" referred to consisted of a list of drafts on Moses, Levy, and Co., among which were the drafts numbered 113 and 114 for 600l. and 500l. respectively.

In the said letter of the 17th June 1874, were inclosed of Yldefonso Alfaro's letters of the 5th and 15th April above set out. The plaintiffs contended that the said F. M. Schwarz was then constituted special agent of Yldefonso Alfaro, in respect to the property and matters which were the subject of the suit.

Accordingly the defendant, F. M. Schwarz, his clerk communicated to Moses, Levy, and Co. the contents of the letter of the 17th June, applied to them for a list of the holders of the bills, and also for the bills of lading, shipping documents, and warrants relating to the coffee.

CHAN. DIV.]

RANKEN v. ALFARO.

[CHAN. DIV.]

On or about 14th Aug. 1874, the said F. M. Schwarz received from Moses, Levy, and Co. the following letter:

London, 14th Aug. 1874.

Mr. F. M. Schwarz.

Dear Sir—At our request we hand you list of bills drawn on us by Señor Don Yldefonso Alfaro, and also in whose hands they are. We shall take care to refer the holders of such bills, when they become due, to yourself for payment.—We are, dear Sir, yours truly, (Signed) MOSES, LEVY, AND CO.

(A list of the bills, &c., was appended.)

On the 15th Aug. 1874, the said bills for 600*l.* and 500*l.* became due, and were presented for payment to Moses, Levy, and Co., who refused to pay either of them, and the plaintiffs had them accordingly protested for nonpayment. On the same day the plaintiffs received from the defendant, F. M. Schwarz, the following memorandum:

(Memorandum.)

14th Aug. 1874.

From F. M. Schwarz, 10, Basinghall-street,
London, E.C.,

To Messrs. Chalmers, Guthrie, and Co.,
9, Idol-lane, Tower-street.

£600*l.* Drawn by Yldefonso Alfaro, of San José £500*l.* de Costa Rica, on Moses, Levy, and Co.

Please take note that I expect to receive from Messrs. Moses, Levy, and Co., early next week, delivery of the coffee sent by drawee [a clerical error for "drawer"] against the above, and that I will then again write to you on this subject.

Paragraph 13.—Shortly afterwards—namely, on the 17th Aug. 1874—the said F. M. Schwarz received from Moses, Levy, and Co., the delivery warrants relating to the said 808 sacks of coffee, and on the 17th Aug. wrote and sent to the plaintiffs the following memorandum:

(Memorandum.)

17th Aug. 1874.

From F. M. Schwarz, 10, Basinghall-street,
London, E.C.,

To Messrs. Chalmers, Guthrie, and Co.,
9, Idol-lane, Tower-street.

Referring to my memorandum of the 14th inst., I beg to inform you that Messrs. Moses, Levy have now handed me over the warrants for the coffee sent by Mr Yldefonso Alfaro, and that I shall dispose of same as instructed by sender, and will let you have further particulars in due time.

The said F. M. Schwarz paid in exchange for the said delivery warrants the charges for freight for the said coffee and other expenses, amounting to 46*l.* 11*s.*

On the 20th Aug. 1874, the plaintiffs received from the said F. M. Schwarz another memorandum, to the effect that an attachment had been served upon him in reference to the coffee, and that he requested to be informed if they (the plaintiffs) wished to take any steps to protect their interests in this matter.

The attachment had issued on the 17th Aug. 1874 out of the Lord Mayor's Court on behalf of Moses, Levy, and Co. in an action which they had commenced against Eloy, Alfaro, and Co.

On the 20th Aug. 1874 the plaintiffs entered an action against the said Yldefonso Alfaro as holders of the said bills for 600*l.* and 500*l.* respectively.

On Aug. 21st F. M. Schwarz sold a portion of the coffee, and the plaintiffs applied to him to pay the said bills out of the proceeds of sale. But Schwarz refused to do so, on the ground of the attachment. The original bill was filed 24th Aug. 1874, and shortly afterwards the defendant, F. M. Schwarz, sold the rest of the coffee, and under an order of the court paid the proceeds of the sale into court, amounting to 369*l.* 12*s.*

The plaintiffs claimed that the coffee was specifically appropriated to meet the said bills of exchange, and that the proceeds of the sale might be paid to them and to the other holders of the bills proportionally, and that the defendants, Moses, Levy, and Co., might be restrained from prosecuting their action in the Lord Mayor's Court.

By the answer of Moses, Levy, and Co., it appeared that they had had large dealings with Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., and that the latter firm were very heavily in their debt. A long correspondence between the two firms was set out. It appeared that Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. had promised to send 2000 bags of coffee to Moses, Levy, and Co., in part payment of the balance owing.

In a letter from Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. to Moses, Levy, and Co., dated 4th April 1874, the following passage occurs: "We confirm your last of the 20th March. Mr. Yldefonso Alfaro writes advising us that he has already commenced his shipments of coffee of which we have spoken to you, and that in all the present month he will have sent you the whole of the 2000 bags promised by us. . . . With the drafts which Mr. Yldefonso Alfaro may draw on you against B/L coffee, we expect that the credit with you will be arranged (or settled) in taking care to make our remittances also in bills, so that they may arrive in time for the due dates by which our banking account with you will be terminated." And on the 15th May 1874, Moses, Levy, and Co. wrote to Yldefonso Alfaro in answer to his letter of the 15th April above set out a letter, in which they said: "We have received some B/L of small lots of coffee per the steamer just arrived, which, as per advice from the friends Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., of Panama, are part of 2000 bags which they promised you would send us for the account of themselves." Their case, therefore, was that the 808 bags of coffee were part of the 2000 bags promised by Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., and that Yldefonso Alfaro was the agent of Yldefonso Alfaro. They denied that the billholders had any lien on the proceeds of the coffee, and that even if the coffee belonged in part to Yldefonso Alfaro, it belonged in part also to Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., who were admitted to be entitled to a share in its proceeds, and they claimed to be entitled to at least an equivalent share in the proceeds of the sale thereof.

Dickinson, Q.C. and Rawlins for the plaintiffs.—The real question is this. A fund has been brought into court which the plaintiffs claim as the holders of the bills, to which the goods of which the fund in court is the proceeds was appropriated. Now the coffee was Yldefonso's coffee. He consigned it to Moses, Levy, and Co., for them to take it for him. They were to credit him with the proceeds of the coffee, and they were to debit him with the bills. There was no other transaction between them. Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. had no interest in the cargo. Yldefonso Alfaro cannot be affected by the representations of Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. This was simply a debtor and creditor account between Yldefonso Alfaro and Moses, Levy, and Co. created for the first and only time. The coffee was to cover the bills, and was specifically appropriated to the bills, a balance to be struck. It makes no difference that Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. were to share in that balance. The coffee was the sole property

CHAN. DIV.]

RANKEN v. ALFARO.

[CHAN. I.]

of Yldefonso Alfaro, and Eloy, Alfaro, and Co. had no share in it though they had in the proceeds. But they claim the actual coffee itself. Now, two facts are clear, and the deduction of law from those facts is equally clear. First, the fact, established by undisputed evidence, that the coffee never was the property of Eloy, Alfaro, and Co.; secondly, that Yldefonso Alfaro was not the agent of Eloy, Alfaro, and Co., and, thirdly, that by law an interest in the profits arising from the sale of goods is not an interest in the goods themselves. This is fully established. The most recent case is Alfaro v. De la Torre (34 L. T. Rep. N.S. 122) where it is laid down that where a person ships goods on the "half joint" account as it is called, that is, that another person is to share in half the profits, that interest in the profits gives that other person no property in the goods. We should have been paid in due course, but for the proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court, but we could only interfere with the proceeds by coming here. Besides, Schwarz had authority to appropriate the goods or to make an equitable assignment of them.

Hastings, Q.C. and Romer, for the defendants Yldefonso Alfaro, and Schwarz.

Robinson, Q.C. and A. Young for the defendants Moses, Levy, and Co.

The case is completely covered by Citizens' Bank of Louisiana v. First National Bank of New Orleans (L. Rep. 6. H. L. 353). To establish the plaintiffs' bill there must be a clear case of appropriation of the goods to meet the bills. If there was such appropriation, it was made by Schwarz, and is stated in the 12th, 13th, and 14th paragraphs of the bill. It cannot be contended that Schwarz's memorandum amounted to a specific appropriation. There is a statement that the coffee was sent against the bills drawn, but that does not constitute specific appropriation. The latest case on this subject is Robey and Co.'s Perseverance Iron Works v. Ollier (ante, vol. 1, p. 413; L. Rep. 7 Ch. Ap. 695; 27 L. T. Rep. N.S. 362) which was a case of actual bills of lading sent against bills of exchange, and it was held that there was no specific appropriation. The bill in that case was founded upon Frith v. Forbes (1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 253; 4 De G. F. & J. 409; 6 L. T. Rep. N.S. 847). Now, there was no authority given to Schwarz to make such an appropriation or an equitable assignment; Yldefonso's letter to Schwarz certainly gives no such authority. See also Thomson v. Simpson (L. Rep. 5 Ch. 659); Everett v. Williams (14 East, 582). On both grounds the plaintiffs' bill is misconceived. The plaintiffs had no claim either on the ground of specific appropriation or on this afterthought of Schwarz's authority which is not suggested in the bill.

Dickinson in reply.—In Thomson v. Simpson the question simply was, did the conversation between the two bank managers amount to an appropriation? In that case there was a mere representation, a truthful statement of what was in fact the ordinary course of business between the Liverpool and the New Orleans Bank. The element was wanting which is present in this case of a direction to apply the money to the particular bill. There was no direction to the person in whose hands the funds were to apply them to meet the particular bills. It was not the case of a direction, with the number, date, and amount of the bills given, to appropriate them to goods equally ascertained. In Robey and Co.'s Perseverance Iron Works v. Ollier it was held that there was no specific appropriation, because it amounted to this, "Out of my money, my drafts." There were two circumstances. Lord Justice James said distinguished Robey and Co. v. Ollier from Frith v. Forbes. In Frith v. Forbes the person who gave the directions was sole owner of the goods; so he was here. In Robey v. Ollier he was not. Secondly, in Frith v. Forbes, as the proceeds were to be applied to specified bills, Frith v. Forbes is still good law and covers this case.

HALL, V.C.—The argument of Mr. Robinson is supplemented by what Mr. Dickinson has said, and the references which have been made to authorities lead me to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' bill cannot be maintained. This is not being altogether identical with Frith v. Forbes must be taken to fall within the principle of Robey and Co.'s Perseverance Iron Works v. Ollier. In Frith v. Forbes there was one fact to which both the Lords Justices adverted, and which Lord Justice Turner relied, viz., that on the face of the bills (or at least of two of them) it was shown that they were expressly drawn against the proceeds of the cargo. That circumstance does not exist in the present case. In Robey and Co.'s Perseverance Iron Works v. Ollier Lord Justice James was not prepared to hold that the mere circumstance of a bill of exchange purporting to be drawn against a particular cargo makes it carry a lien on that cargo into the hands of every holder of the bill. "In Frith v. Forbes," the Lord Justice said, "there were grounds for saying that the intention was to give Frith, Sands, and Co. an equitable interest in the cargo, for the letters of the consignor to the consignees referred to bills of exchange which the consignor had drawn in favour of Frith, Sands, and Co. Here the reference is only to bills, which the consignor had drawn to his own order, not mentioning any third parties." Lord Justice Mellish does not even advert to this last circumstance. It seems that in the first letter dated the 15th April 1884, which was a letter of advice to Moses, Levy, and Co., there is mention made of bills drawn on them on the same terms as heretofore, mentioning the names of the bills as in Frith v. Forbes, but not mentioning the additional ingredient which was found in that case. Here we have not got the bill ingredients which existed in Frith v. Forbes. We have not the additional ingredient of a bill on the face of it showing that it is drawn on account of a particular cargo.

It seems to me, therefore, having regard to the absence of this feature in this case, that I cannot hold that there was an appropriation of the proceeds of the cargoes in favour of the persons in whose favour the bills were drawn either in virtue of the bills being drawn in favour or by the instructions given to the consignees or by these two circumstances taken together. The case, therefore, as regards appropriation as originally constituted seems to me to be established.

But the case does not remain here. The place: Moses, Levy, and Co. refused to do anything to do with the transaction. They were covered, and Moses, Levy, and Co. not accept. It was their business, and of God, Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, river, and steam navigation of whatever nature and kind soever during the said voyage always excepted). The freight to be paid as follows: one-third to be advanced on signing bills of lading if required, less 3 per cent. to cover all charges, and the balance in cash in London against certificates of right delivery of the cargo.

2. By the charter-party it was, amongst other things, agreed that the ship should have liberty to call at Havre to complete cargo for ports on the way, it being understood that she should not remain in Havre more than 72 hours.

3. The ship, after the date of the charter-party, arrived at Dunkirk, and there met with an accident which necessitated her being repaired, for which purpose she went to Sunderland, and this delayed her arrival at Middlesborough for some time.

4. By a second charter-party, dated the 3rd Nov. 1873, and made between the same parties, it was agreed that the Meredith should, with all convenient speed, proceed to Middlesborough-on-Tees after repairs, and there load from the agents of the defendants about 800 tons of railway iron, in addition to 900 tons as per charter-party of the 7th Oct.; and being so loaded should therewith proceed to Taganrog, or near thereto as she might safely get, and deliver the same afloat, on being paid freight at the rate of 27s. 6d. per ton of 20 cwt., in the same manner as by the first charter.

5 and 6. Both charter-parties contained the following provisions:

Ship to have an absolute lien for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage.

To address to charterer's agents, Messrs. Berthold, Smith, and Co., Taganrog, paying 2 per cent. commission.

Captain to telegraph from Constantinople and Kertch his departure and weight of cargo to the agent of the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company, Taganrog, or in default he will have no claim for demurrage.

7. The Meredith, so soon as she was repaired, proceeded to Middlesborough-on-Tees and there loaded from the agents of the defendants 900 tons of railway iron under the first charter-party, and 299½ tons of railway iron under the second charter-party.

8. The freights payable under the two charter-parties respectively are the sums sought to be recovered, as above stated.

9. The Meredith, so soon as she was so loaded, proceeded on her voyage to Taganrog, and arrived at Kertch on the 17th Dec. 1873.

10. Upon arriving at Kertch the captain of the Meredith found—and it was the fact—that the Sea of Azov was then closed by ice, that the navigation of the port of Taganrog was effectually closed, and all the buoys, lightship, and other marks for navigation had been removed for the winter.

11. The captain thereupon proposed to discharge his cargo at Kertch, and made a protest at that place, of which the following are the material parts:

Protest.

Steamer Meredith.

Arrived in Kertch on the 17th Dec. 1873, with a cargo of railway iron (bars), consigned to the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company. I found that the Sea of Azov was closed by ice, and that the navigation of the port of Taganrog, where the ship had to deliver the cargo, was officially and to all purposes closed, and all the buoys, lightships, and other marks for the navigation of its intricate gulf were removed for the winter. Raising myself upon the charter-party, and pointing to that part of it beginning with "Taganrog, or so near thereto as she may safely get," and next to the part of it with "the act of God," and ending with "all other accident, dangers of the sea, rivers, navigation of whatever nature and kind soever said voyage always excepted," I determined to take the cargo at Kertch, as the nearest port to it which the steamer could safely approach, all of closed by ice, having given proper notice of detention to the consignees of the steamer at Messrs. Berthold, Smith, and Co., by telegraph from Kertch the 18th Dec.

Acting on the aforesaid, I am discharging at this port of Kertch under protest, and at the risk of the consignees or whom it may come documents for the reception of the same have sent, consequently I hereby solemnly protest such receivers of said cargo, holding them for all detention, loss of time, extra expenses Custom House for late presentation of documents whatsoever other charges to which I may be liable.

20th Dec. 1873.

12. On the 19th Dec. 1873, Messrs. Smith, and Co., on behalf of the defendants, the following telegram, which was received by the captain before he had commenced the discharge of the cargo: "If you discharge your steamer be held responsible all consequences in charter-party."

13. Kertch was, under the circumstances near to Taganrog as the Meredith could get (thirty miles) so long as the Sea of Azov was closed by ice, which, according to the ordinary weather, would have been until the latter part of the month of April 1874.

14. As no bill of lading for the cargo was produced to the captain of the Meredith at Kertch in order to protect the ship, landed the cargo at Kertch, and gave it into the custody of the Custom House authorities there.

15. By the bills of lading, signed by the captain, the cargo was made deliverable at the port of Taganrog, "all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas and of navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted, unto the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company, freight and other conditions as per charter-party. Copy apply to Messrs. Berthold, Smith, and Co., Taganrog."

16. After a part of the cargo had been landed, one Jean Deopik, a merchant at Kertch, produced to the captain a power of attorney from the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company, authorizing him to receive the cargo.

17. When the whole cargo had been landed, the Custom authorities at Kertch, Jean Deopik, produced to them copies of the charter-party, bill of lading for the cargo and his power of attorney; and thereupon the cargo was delivered to him by the Custom House authorities, without payment of any freight, and notwithstanding the captain's claim to retain the cargo on behalf of the owner of the Meredith until the freight was paid. Jean Deopik thereupon gave to the captain the following receipt for the cargo.

On the power of the charter-party and the bills of lading passed to me by the agents of the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company, I hereby certify that I have received the cargo of the steamer Meredith, composed of 6578 bars of railway iron. This is the only one given, and all others to have been destroyed. Kertch, 15th, 27th Dec. 1873.

The Meredith sailed from Kertch on the 20th Dec. 1873.

The cargo was in due course received by the said company, but the freight for the cargo has not been paid, pursuant to the said charter-party, either of them.

[METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS COMPANY. [Q.B. DIV.]

t is to have power to draw inferences stion for the opinion of the court is, under the above circumstances, the to be entitled to be paid the chartered any and what amount for the carriage ay iron by the Meredith to Kertch. J.C. and Beresford, argued for the

Williams, J.C. and Hollams, for the de-uments sufficiently appear from the gments of the court.

Cur. adv. vult.

—COCKBURN, C.J.—This is an action recover a sum due for freight for the of a cargo of iron bars shipped under -parties on board the plaintiff's vessel h, to be carried from Middlesborough-Taganrog on the Sea of Azov, "or so o as the ship could safely get." The were the charterers of the vessel. By lading, signed by the master as well as rterers, the iron was to be delivered of Taganrog. It was consigned to the Wladikowkese Railway Company at lace. The cargo having been taken on ip started without delay on the voyage on and arrived on the 17th Dec. at ort distant from Taganrog about thirty arriving at Kertch the master learned of Azov was blocked up with ice, and ion suspended, the effect of which was rther conveyance of the cargo to its was rendered impracticable till the ing the navigation being usually closed of April.

on the terms of the charter-party as been stated, provided that the proceed to Taganrog, "or so near she could safely get," the master, he could get no nearer to Taganrog a, conceived that he was entitled to go at the latter place, and proceeded to discharge and land it. In so doing direct defiance of the opposition of f the charterers at Taganrog to whom fied what he was about to do; and thus become aware of it, gave him ice not to land the cargo at Kertch, he did so he would be held liable harter-party. There being no one to cargo the master placed it under the e Custom House authorities. From it was claimed by an agent of the Wladikowkese Railway Company, the and on the production of the charter-ills of lading possession was delivered nt by the authorities, notwithstanding he master that it should be retained ht was paid. Upon taking possession the consignees who must be presumed ad full authority for the purpose, the master, no doubt, by the direction ities, a receipt in these terms :
ower of the charter-party and the bill ssed to me by the agents of the Rostoff owkese Railway Company, I hereby I have received the cargo of the s.s. mposed of 6578 bars of railway iron. to be the only one given and all others alue. Kertch, 15th—27th Dec. 1873."

Upon these facts I entirely concur in thinking that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the full freight. The case of Schilizzi v. Derry (4 E. & B. 873) established that when a charter-party speaks of a vessel bound to a particular port discharging "as near as she can get" to such port this must be taken to mean some place "within the ambit" of the port, and Kertch certainly cannot be said to be within the ambit of the port of Taganrog.

I also concur in thinking that the receipt given by the agent of the consignees does not amount to an admission of the "right delivery" of the cargo. It amounts to no more than an admission of the delivery of the cargo at Kertch which is nct a "right delivery" of it so as to entitle the owner to the full freight.

But it appears to me that the acceptance of the cargo by the consignees and the receipt thus given by their authorised agent are very material facts in determining the further question with which we have to deal, viz., whether the plaintiff, the shipowner, is here entitled to freight pro rata itineris.

I agree that according to the terms of an ordinary charter-party or bill of lading the whole voyage for which the freight is agreed to be paid must be accomplished before any freight becomes payable, and I agree that the master cannot, by wrongfully stopping short of the place of destination, compel the owner of the goods to take them, and pay the freight even for the part of the voyage performed any more than the charterer on the other hand can insist on having the cargo delivered at an intermediate place so as to deprive the shipowner of the opportunity of earning his full freight. If he desires to have his goods short of their original destination, unless some arrangement is come to between them he must satisfy the shipowner for the entire freight as fixed by the charter-party.

But it is obvious that while such is the absolute right of each of the parties to the charter, this right may be varied or waived; and that while the shipowner may be willing to forego his right to earn the entire freight on being paid a rateable part for so much of the voyage as has been performed, the goods owner, on the other hand, may be willing to take the goods at an intermediate place and to waive the conveyance of the goods to their original destination, paying a proportionate part only of the freight, all claim to the residue being abandoned; and such an arrangement in substitution of the original contract may not only be expressed but may also be implied from the circumstances and the conduct of the parties as was done in the case of The Soblomsten (L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 293; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 436), and ought to be so implied where justice and equity require it. Where such an expressed arrangement has been come to, of course, no difficulty exists. The case in which the question whether such an arrangement is to be implied usually arises is where the ship becomes disabled by some vis major, and it becomes necessary to land the cargo at an intermediate port where there are no means of sending it on, and it is there taken possession of by the owner or sold by the master for the benefit of those concerned. Nothing could apparently be more unjust than that having had the benefit of the conveyance of the cargo so far on its way the owner if he has derived benefit so far should be released from the obligation of paying a proportionate part of the freight. No doubt under such circumstances it becomes necessary for the master if he desires to earn the freight either to repair his ship or to procure another in which to send on the cargo. But it may be that the ship cannot be repaired, and that no other ship can be procured or not without such a delay as would be fatal to the goods or to the adventure. Under these circumstances the owner of the goods is not bound to take to them if unwilling to do so. If they are not worth paying the freight upon he may refuse to accept them, but if he accept and dispose of them ought not we to imply an undertaking on his part to pay for the conveyance of them so far as it has gone?

Such was the view taken by Lord Mansfield and the Court of King's Bench in conformity with the rule laid down by the old authorities on maritime commercial law in the well-known case of Luke v. Lyde (2 Burr. 882; 1 W. Bl. 190). There a cargo of salt fish having been shipped on account of the defendant, a merchant in England, on board the plaintiff's ship to be conveyed from Newfoundland to Lisbon, the ship when within a few days' sail of Lisbon had been taken by a French privateer, but had afterwards been recaptured and brought to England, whereupon the defendant claimed and obtained possession of the cargo. An action of assumpsit having been brought by the owners of the ship to recover freight pro ratâ, Lord Mansfield in an elaborate judgment after referring to the old authorities on maritime law decided in favour of the plaintiffs; not upon any fiction of a substituted contract or of a dispensation of part of the voyage originally agreed on, but on the broad principle of maritime law, that the voyage having been interrupted without any fault of the shipowner, the merchant who has had the benefit of partial conveyance if he takes the goods must pay freight pro ratâ.

In so holding the Court of King's Bench appears to me I must say to have decided according to justice and good sense.

In the subsequent case of Baillie v. Mogdighiani (Park on Ins. c. II., 8th ed. p. 116), a ship bound from Nevis to Bristol had been taken by a French ship, and condemned in a French prize court, but the sentence of condemnation was afterwards reversed and restitution ordered. In the meantime, however, the ship and cargo had been sold. The merchants received the proceeds and paid freight to the master pro ratâ itineris; and the goods having been insured they brought an action against the insurers to recover the amount of freight so paid. It was held that they could not recover, but Lord Mansfield said: "As between the owners of the ship and cargo in case of a total loss no freight is due, but as between them no loss is total where part of the property is saved, and the owner takes it to his own use. In this case the value of the goods was restored in money, which is the same as the goods, and therefore freight was certainly due pro ratâ itineris."

The subsequent case of Cook v. Jennings (7 T. Rep. 381) might at first sight appear to conflict with the foregoing authorities inasmuch as the ship having been wrecked on the voyage, but the goods having been saved, the merchant who had taken possession of them refused to pay freight, and the action having been brought to recover it pro ratâ it was held that the action would not lie. But the decision turned on the form of the action the plaintiff having sued on the charter-party which was under seal had declared in covenant on reference to the charter-party it appeared the freight was payable on the right of the cargo at the port of destination, it was until this condition had been complied with freight became payable under the charter-party that the contract being under seal no assumpsit could be raised. Lawrence, J., gave the case on the right ground: "I agree," says, "with the plaintiffs' counsel that the contract be by parol or under seal, but the operation of the law on it is equally the same. When a ship is driven on shore it is the master either to repair his ship or to send the cargo to another; and having performed the voyage then entitled to his freight, but he is not entitled to the whole freight unless he performs the whole voyage, except in cases where the loss of the goods prevent him, nor is he entitled to freight pro ratâ unless under a new agreement. Perhaps the subsequent receipt of these goods by the defendant might have been evidence of a new contract between the parties, but here the plaintiff resorted to the original agreement under which the defendant only engaged to pay in case of the ship's arrival at Liverpool. That event did not happen, and therefore the plaintiff cannot recover in this form of action."

The case of Hunter v. Prinsep (10 East, 101) is also an authority which at first sight appears to conflict with that of Luke v. Lyde (2 Burr. 882). A vessel bound from London to Durban having been captured and recaptured and taken by the recaptors into the Cape of Good Hope, the cargo was lost. The master, acting bonâ fide for the advantage of all concerned, but without orders or authority from the owner of the cargo and without any necessity arising from inability to forward the goods, having obtained an order from the Vice-Admiralty Court of the island of Mauritius for the cargo to be made up and sent to the owner, the court had no power to make, and the cargo was lost. The plaintiff, the owner of the cargo, brought an action for money had and received against the shipowner to recover the amount of the proceeds, the defendants sought to set off the amount of freight pro ratâ. But Lord Mansfield, delivering the judgment of the Court of King's Bench, held that inasmuch as by the terms of the charter-party which was under seal freight was to be paid in particular proportions "on a right and true delivery of the cargo," no freight had become payable under the charter-party; and that as the sale of the cargo by the master, which had been made without the assent of the plaintiff and without necessity, was unlawful, and the conveyance of the goods to the destination had thus been rendered impossible, the tortious act of the master, the plaintiff freighter, could not be taken to have been substituted for the further conveyance of the goods to the terms of the original contract.

It was more difficult to deal with the case of Hunter v. Prinsep urged on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiff brought an action to recover the proceeds of the cargo, and therefore virtually the goods themselves, and consequently became liable for the price of the goods as much as if he had received the goods themselves on the any satisfactory answer given. It is enough, as it seems to me, to say that the claim of the defendants for partial tort and suing in assumpsit for the loss of the goods themselves and sold them were.

Ellenborough, it is true, puts the matter on a footing as would render it impossible to give a dispensation by a freighter of a part of a voyage. "The general rule as to the goods," he says, "is in the case where the shipowner has no right to withhold from him unless he has either earned the freight"—by which the Chief Justice means the entire freight—"or is going to earn it. If no freight be earned, and he is suing in assumpsit, the freighter has no possession." (10 East, p. 394). It is true, however, that Lord Ellenborough seems to have had present to his mind the case of a case in which partial freight could be earned.

In the case before him the ship had been out of her course as the result of her having been taken into St. Kitts by the enemy. It is difficult to see how any freight could have been earned. The case of Luke v. The Ship "The Duke" (882) does not seem to have been considered by the court.

In the case of Vlierboom v. Chapman (1851, 10 W. 230), however, the question of partial freight presented itself as the point for a similar judgment was given under striking circumstances. A cargo of rice had been shipped at Batavia to be delivered in Mauritius, and the ship having been compelled to put into the Mauritius, the rice was found to have been damaged, and to be in a state of putrefaction, and it was therefore, of necessity, sold by the master; and without the knowledge of the owner, whom he never consulted. It was, under the circumstances, an action having been brought against the shipowner by the freighters for the proceeds of the sale, the defendant, in assumpsit, was held not liable to set off the freight pro rata. I am myself wholly unable to follow the reasoning of the court. It seems to have been admitted that the goods must otherwise have perished, and that the master had authority, as agent of the shippers, to sell them. Nevertheless it was held that his thus selling the goods as agent for the freighters, might amount to an acceptance of the freight, and that the latter, did not operate on their part of the conveyance of the goods; because, as the shipowner was under a duty to carry it, it could not be supposed that the freighters would dispense with the service.

In the case of Deane v. Burr (2 Burr. 882), in which, as I have already said, Lord Mansfield and the Court of Exchequer put the right to recover freight on any dispensation by the freighters in substitution for the charter-party of lading, but on the principle of commercial law that the merchant, if he loses his goods short of their destination, when the shipowner, without any default on his part, but through the operation of a vis major is prevented from carrying them on is bound, having had the benefit of their carriage so far, to pay freight pro rata.

The argument of Lord Ellenborough, that where the shipowner is unable to forward the cargo, and so to earn the freight, the right of the shipper to the possession of it at once arises without any corresponding right in the shipowner to freight pro rata may hold where the circumstances give the master no authority to dispose of the goods. But it obviously becomes a very different thing where the ship having become disabled and the goods damaged, the duty is cast upon the master to dispose of the cargo in the interest of the owner of it.

The legal position of the master of a vessel disabled from carrying on the cargo at an intermediate port may be stated thus: If he desires to earn the entire freight he must cause the ship to be repaired or send on the cargo in another vessel. But if he chooses to forego the freight he is not bound to do either. The ship may not be worth repairing, the expense of hiring another ship may be greater than the freight to be earned. Having done his best to protect his goods he may leave them to be dealt with by the owners, the only consequence being that he forfeits the freight. But it may be that the master has no option, that the ship is incapable of being repaired, and that no other can be procured, while the circumstances are such as to render it certain that it will not be worth the while of the owner of the goods either owing to the locality or the distance at which they are found or owing to their damaged condition to send out a ship to bring them on, or it may be that the goods are perishable, and would become worthless by any delay. Under such circumstances, if the goods-owner cannot be communicated with, and his instructions taken within such time as the master can reasonably be expected to wait, the latter, as the servant and representative of the shipowner, has cast upon him the duty of acting for the goods-owner and disposing of the cargo to the best advantage. This obligation is tacitly implied in the charter-party or bill of lading, and, like every obligation to do a thing, involves an authority from the party to whose benefit the obligation enures to do the thing which is the subject-matter of the obligation. Where, therefore, the master, in disposing of the cargo acts bonâ fide and with reasonable judgment and discretion the goods-owner will be bound.

The law, as thus laid down by Lord Stowell in the case of The Gratitude (3 Rob. Adm. 240), has since been universally acquiesced in. This being so, the position of Lord Ellenborough, that where the goods are not about to be carried on, possession may be demanded by the freighter, and if the demand be not yielded to will be wrongfully withheld appears inapplicable to the case of a master so circumstanced; and that of Parke, B., that the shipowner, not being able to carry or send on the goods, it cannot be supposed that the shipper would waive the further conveyance of them seems equally so where the master is acting as the agent of both parties, and doing that which is most conducive to their common advantage. If the master under these circumstances becomes to use the words of Willes, J., in Notara v. Henderson (ante, vol. 1, p. 278; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 230), the "agent of necessity" of the shipper he becomes so as the servant of the shipowner, and by virtue of the original contract which therefore must be taken to be still subsisting, though the goods cannot be carried on. If the law thus casts on him the duty of acting as agent for the shipper, it does not take from him the character of agent for the shipowner, or the duty of looking to the interest of the latter as well as to that of the former. If he becomes clothed with the character of agent for the goods owner, he acquires authority to do what the latter if on the spot might do, viz., dispense with the further transport of the goods.

It is, moreover, clear that cases may occur in which it would be for the manifest advantage of the freighter that the goods should be sold and the freight deducted; as for instance, where the goods being at an intermediate port, are found to have become so damaged that if carried on to their destination they will be worthless when they reach it, as was the case in Notara v. Henderson (ante, vol. 1, p. 278; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 346; 7 Q. B. 225). That case is an express authority for saying that the master may not carry on a damaged cargo for the purpose of earning the freight where the necessary effect will be the destruction or deterioration of the goods. In such case, at all events, where the damage cannot be arrested at a reasonable expense of time or money, it becomes the duty of the master to sell; but it is obviously only equitable that if the master as the agent of the shipowner is prevented in the interest of the shipper from earning the entire freight at the expense of the cargo, the shipper in consideration of the benefit he thus secures, shall at least pay the freight for so much of the voyage as shall have been performed.

The cases on which I have been commenting, if in point, are of course binding on us, and can only be reviewed, as I hope they will be if the occasion should arise, in a Court of Appeal. But they do not go the length of overruling Luke v. Lyde (2 Burr. 382), all they do is to establish that where the master takes upon himself to sell the cargo without express authority from the shipper, though he may be perfectly justified in so doing as the agent of the latter by the circumstances in which he is placed, the shipowner cannot recover the pro rata freight. They do not touch the case in which the goods come to the hands of the owner short of their destination, and the owner has derived benefit from their conveyance so far, which is what has occurred in the case before us.

In deciding a question of English law foreign law is, of course, of no authority. Nevertheless, as in a matter of commercial law, it is of importance that the rules of commercial nations shall as far as possible be the same, it may not be unimportant to see what is the state of the Continental law on this subject. The law will be found in the French Code de Commerce, Article 296; in the Italian Codice di Commercio, Article 403; in the Spanish Code, Articles 777 and 778; in the Code of the Netherlands, Article 478; in the Prussian Code, Articles 1701-6; in the Russian Code, Article 747; in the German Code, Articles 632-3. The rule in all these is the same, namely, that the master of a disabled ship is bound, if his ship cannot be repaired, to procure if possible another to carry on to. If both are impossible, he may then sell the goods to the owners, and will be entitled to freight pro rata, or as it is termed in the law, the distance freight. The German law, however, this qualification, that the freight shall not exceed the value of the goods.

In the present instance, the charterers having the cargo brought from the Tees to within miles of Taganrog, nothing could be more than that the shipowner should receive for the conveyance of it so far. And the principle of the decisions in Luke v. Lyde (2 Burr. 382) appears to me distinctly applicable.

But besides this, when the facts are looked at, an acceptance of the cargo at the hands of the consignees, and a dispensation of the conveyance of it may properly be inferred.

Being prevented by the state of the navigation from taking the cargo on to its destination, the master was justified in landing the cargo at Kertch, provided he did not put the charterers to no extra expense. He was not bound to wait with his ship with the cargo on board till the navigation should be open, for four months. All that could be required would be that he should bring on or forward the cargo as soon as the navigation should be open. In the meantime he was at liberty to seek other new employment for his ship in the service of his owner. The charterers could have no claim to exact from him a useless inactivity of four months; nor, if this be so, can it make any difference that the charterers in fact objected to the landing of the cargo. Their objection might have made all the difference if the cargo could have been brought on, but as that was impossible, no injustice could result to them if not called upon to defray the extra expense. And even if put to that expense, they would always have had their claim against the shipowner on the freight.

The next important fact which occurs is that the cargo having been landed the consignees came forward and claim it. But they were not entitled to have it delivered to them; it had been brought to Taganrog, where it was abandoned by the master or the shipowner, navigation being again opened he refused to bring it on or to forward it, they could not insist upon delivery short of the port of destination without paying the entire freight except by arrangement of the shipowner or the master or his agent. Without paying the entire freight coming to such an arrangement, the consignees must have waited four months for the iron, which, being wanted for the construction of the railway, it was important to them to obtain without any delay.

When, under these circumstances, the consignees asking for the cargo, and the master being compelled to give them possession of it, I do not suppose that the master intended to deliver it on the part of his owner, his claim being on that the consignees, in accepting the cargo at Kertch, were receiving it free from the freight of freight. The master might be relieved from all further difficulty as to the iron, the consignees would be in present possession, so that they might land carriage to Taganrog, instead of waiting months to receive it by sea. The amount of freight payable, what

Q.B. Div.]

METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS COMPANY.

[Q.]

and earn his full freight, and refrained from doing so at the express request of the consignees. In the present case, on the contrary, the master discharged the cargo at Kertch without any request from the consignees, and against the express protest of the charterers, and refused to carry it further to its port of destination; and it was not till after this refusal and when the goods may be said to have been abandoned by the master, that the consignees took possession of them as holders of the bills of lading.

We think, therefore, that the cases cited have no application to the present case. It is said in paragraph 19 of the case that the cargo was "in due course" received by the railway company. But we cannot construe the language as intended to contradict or qualify the express statement in paragraph 17 describing the manner in which the cargo was received by the company.

It remains to consider the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to freight pro rata itineris having carried the goods to Kertch. Claims of this kind usually arise in cases of disabled ships unable by the accidents of the seas to complete their voyage; and we are not aware of any case like the present where the claim has arisen from the default of the master in refusing to proceed to his port of destination.

The rule on the subject was laid down by Dr. Lushington in the case of The Soblomsten (L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 297), as follows:—"To justify a claim for pro rata freight there must be a voluntary acceptance of the goods by their owner at an intermediate port in such a mode as to raise a fair inference that the further carriage was intentionally dispensed with." And the learned judge cites the case of Vlierboom v. Chapman, from the judgment in which case the rule is extracted in the words above quoted. This case is founded on the earlier case of Hunter v. Prinsep (10 East. 378).

In that case Lord Ellenborough says that the shipowner has no right to any freight unless the goods are forwarded to their destination, "unless the forwarding them be dispensed with, or unless there be some new bargain upon the subject. If the shipowner will not forward them the freighter is entitled to them without paying anything. . . . He continues, "The general property in the goods is in the freighter; the shipowner has no right to withhold possession from him unless he has either earned his freight, or is going on to earn it." Applying these principles to the facts of the case before us, we feel bound to decide that in this case the claim for freight pro rata cannot be supported. This action is against the charterers on the charter-party; and so far from their having voluntarily accepted the goods at Kertch, and dispensed with the further carriage of the goods to their port of destination, they gave the master express notice on the 10th Dec., and before he had commenced to discharge the cargo (paragraph 12), that if he discharged the cargo at Kertch, that is to say left it at Kertch without any intention of carrying it further, he would be held responsible for an infraction of the charter-party. It is impossible, therefore, as against the present defendants, to infer that they dispensed with the further carriage of the goods to Taganrog. The case, as far as the present defendants are concerned is like Liddard v. Lopes

(10 East. 526), where a similar notice was given by the owners of the cargo, and it was held that no new contract to pay freight pro rata could be presumed against the merchant.

But assuming that defendants would succeed in this action by a voluntary acceptance of the goods by the consignees at an intermediate port, a dispensation by them of the further carriage at that point about which we entertain no doubt, especially after the protest of the defendants' agents, we are of opinion that there has been no such acceptance in this case. The present case is one in which the master made an unfortunate mistake, has left the goods at an intermediate port and refused to carry them to their port of destination, and it was after such refusal that the agent of the consignees took possession of them as holders of the bills of lading. They had no other course to pursue if they wished to preserve the property. It is said, however, that the plaintiff claimed a lien on the cargo for freight, and protested against the agent of the charter-party taking possession; and that by reason of the consignees so taking possession he and his co-defendants were prevented from sending a ship and loading on the cargo at the opening of the navigation. But the master had a lien for freight, for he had neither earned his freight nor was he going to earn it; and having declared that he discharged the cargo at Kertch, and did not intend to carry it further, the parties had a right to take him at his word and act on that declaration, and treat him as a defaulter of the charter-party, and to take possession of the cargo which the master had so abandoned: on this last point the Danube Railway Company v. Xenos, 11 C. B. N. S. 152; 13 C. B. N. S. 481; Frost v. Knight, L. Rep. 7 Ex. 111, and the cases there cited.)

The case, therefore, seems to come within the third rule laid down by Dr. Lushington in the case of The Soblomsten (L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 297)—viz., that no freight is payable if the cargo is abandoned against his will is compelled to take the cargo at an intermediate port.

It seems to us that the duty of the charterers was plain in the absence of any fresh arrangement between the parties, either to wait at Kertch until the navigation was open and then proceed on their voyage, or to land and warehouse the goods at Kertch, and return and take them on by another ship when the navigation was open.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any freight in this case, and that our judgment must be given for the defendants.

We may observe in conclusion that the case before us gives no information as to what ultimately became of the cargo of the ship. We are not told if it was ever forwarded to Taganrog either by the charterers or the consignees, nor how the transaction was arranged, if it ever has been arranged, between the parties. We are, therefore, entirely unable to say whether in the result the present defendants, or the freighters, ever derived any benefit or advantage whatever from the carriage of the cargo. We cannot infer necessarily that they did so, for many cases are concerned with the leaving the cargo at an intermediate port.

Q.B. Div.]

ROBINSON v. PRICE.

[Q.B.]

morning of the 11th the ship, making a very heavy plunge, sprang a leak, and, although the pumps were diligently attended to, the water, on the morning of the 12th, was found to be gaining. During the night of the 12th the watch was kept constantly at the pumps, and at 7 a.m. on the 13th, the weather still being very bad, the crew being worn out with pumping, and the water still gaining, the master connected the donkey-engine with the pumps, and so worked the pumps by means of the donkey-engine. The pumps were kept constantly going by steam during the 13th and 14th, the weather all the time being bad, and all efforts being scarcely sufficient to keep the ship free.

8. On the 14th, there being no prospect of stopping the leak, or of getting the ship into a place of safety for some time, and it being impossible to keep her afloat without having the pumps worked by the donkey-engine, the master, seeing that the supply of coals on board would, under the circumstances, be insufficient, used some of the ship's spare spars and a portion of the cargo, together with coal, to keep up the fire of the donkey-engine in order to keep the pumps going. On the 15th, 16th, and 17th Sept. the ship encountered very severe weather, and laboured heavily all the time, and it was only by keeping the pumps going constantly by steam that the leak could be kept under, and for this purpose all the spare spars having been used up, further portions of the cargo were necessarily used for fuel. On the 18th Sept. the leak seemed to be gaining on the pumps, but by means of great efforts on the part of the master and crew of the ship she was kept afloat until the 20th Sept., when she fell in with a steamship, and procured from her a supply of coals sufficient to keep the donkey-engine working, until, on the following day, the 21st, the ship was safely docked in the Thames.

9. The course and measures adopted by the master under the above circumstances, were proper and necessary for the preservation of the ship and cargo. If he had not burned the said spars and cargo the vessel and cargo would, in all probability, have been lost.

10. The said ship was sufficiently equipped and manned for the said voyage according to the ordinary practice in equipping and manning such vessels for such a voyage, and but for the leak she would have had sufficient pumping power on board without using the donkey-engine. As it was, she had not (without using the donkey-engine) sufficient pumping power to deal with the water which she actually made, and she had not on board enough coal, or enough fuel, or other materials belonging to the ship to enable her to use the donkey-engine to the extent to which it became in fact necessary to use it.

The questions for the opinion of the court were: First, Whether the loss incurred by the burning of the ship's spare spars is a general average loss; and secondly, Whether the loss incurred by the burning of portions of the cargo under the circumstances stated is a general average loss.

Should the court answer both these questions in the affirmative, then it was agreed the judgment was to be entered for the plaintiff for the sum of 25*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, together with costs of suit. Should the court answer the first question in the affirmative and the other in the negative, judgment was to be entered for the plaintiff for 6*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*

Should the court answer the second question in the affirmative and the other in the negative, judgment was to be entered for the plaintiff for 19*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.* Should the court answer both questions in the negative, then judgment was to be entered for the defendants, with costs of suit.

Cohen, Q.C. (with him Gainsford Bruce, for the plaintiff.—The facts stated are sufficient to make this a general average loss, and this is concluded by the authority of Harrison v. T. of Australasia (ante, vol. 1, p. 198; L. Rep. 39); the facts of that case are exactly the same as this, except that here it was not as there it was a common practice to fit such vessels with donkey-engines. Baron Cleasby, at p. 51, dissenting from the judgment of the court, mainly on the ground that the loss incurred was, what it cannot be, the necessary expenses of navigating the ship. Wilson v. The Bank of Victoria (2 Mar. L. O. S. 449; L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 203) fuel working of an auxiliary screw was not considered to be within the rule as to general average, it was so put on the ground that it was an extraordinary disbursement, and it was distinguished from a case like the present. Burn, J., said at the conclusion of his judgment (p. 313): "It is not similar to the master hiring extra hands to pump when the crew are unable to keep the vessel afloat, or other expenditure which is not only extraordinary in its amount, but is incurred to procure service extraordinary in its nature." The facts go to show that there is no necessity for the loss to be sudden to constitute general average, the facts here satisfy all the conditions required.

Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220;

Arnould on Marine Insurance (1st edit.) p. 684;

2 Phillips on Insurance, 1299;

Plummer v. Wildman, 3 M. & S. 482;

Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B., N. S., 563;

Stewart v. West India and Pacific Steamship

pany, ante, vol. 1, p. 528; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 38

Brenke's Principles of Indemnity, p. 171.

French (with him Benjamin, Q.C.), argued for the defendant.—Although it is found here that it was unusual at the time to carry a donkey-engine in a ship under these circumstances, yet the facts show that a master, if he has an exception in his equipment, must supply the necessary means for it. Part of the implied contract between the shipper and the shipowner is that the owner will supply everything which may be required to enable the ship, and a donkey engine without fuel, to proceed on its voyage. The master would certainly have supplied himself with coals in this case and before the ship was on its voyage if his cargo had not been lost. Even if a sacrifice be proper, we must look to see if it might not have been prevented; it was the fault of the owner in not having supplied sufficient coal.

Parsons on Shipping, p. 411;

Daniels v. Harris, ante, vol. 2, p. 413; L. Rep. C. P. 1.

Here there was no emergency, and the ship was not finished when the spars and cargo were burned for fuel. The master might have put the ship in port for coal, and he burnt these articles to preserve his coals in case of emergency. According to Phillips' Law of Insurance, section 1, in order to constitute a basis for a contribution as an expense or sacrifice, it must be incurred in an apparently imminent peril."

Q.B. Div.]

Ex parte Minto.

[Q.B. Div.]

Cohen, Q.C., in reply.—The following paragraph (sect. 1271) of Phillips qualifies that which has just been quoted, "in this respect it is usually considered sufficient if it appeared to the master or other party having charge of the subject matter to require the sacrifice, and the same is made in good faith." It does not appear that mention was made in the bill of lading of the donkey engine, and the result might be different if the owner had held out to the skipper the fact of such an engine being on board as an inducement to the contract. [Lush, J.—There is no finding as to the sufficiency of fuel on board for ordinary pumping purposes.] That fact can be ascertained.

Cwr. adv. vult.

Nov. 21.—LUSH, J. delivered the judgment of the court (Mellor and Lush, JJ.).—The circumstances under which the ship's spars and the cargo were used as fuel for the donkey engine satisfy all the conditions of a general average claim. The peril was imminent, the sacrifice was voluntary, in the sense of being an act of will on the part of the master, it was in the emergency necessary in order to save the ship from sinking, and was, of course, made with a view to the safety of the whole adventure, ship, freight, and cargo; prima facie, therefore, the case of the plaintiff is made out.

But it was objected that as the ship was furnished with a donkey engine adapted and intended in case of need for pumping as well as for loading and discharging the cargo, the owner was bound to provide sufficient fuel for its use; that if this had been done the resort to the spars and cargo would not have been required, that it was not done, and therefore the use of the spars and cargo was not a necessity brought about by the perils of the sea, but a necessity occasioned by his own default. Although we cannot accede to the proposition in its terms, we entirely accede to the principle which underlies it. We think that a shipper of cargo is entitled in time of peril to the benefit not only of the best services of the crew in order to save his goods, but of the use of all the appliances for that purpose, with which the ship is provided. It follows that where a ship is fitted up with auxiliary steam pumping power, it is the duty of the owner to make some provision for supplying the engine with fuel. Not that he is bound to have on board enough for every possible emergency, but he is bound to have a reasonable supply, having regard to the nature of the voyage, the season of the year, the quality of the cargo, the condition of the ship, and what experience has shown to be prudent to provide against, under these conditions. If he fails to do so, he cannot call upon the owners to contribute towards that reasonable supply. That would be to make them pay for that for which he ought to have provided at his expense. If under such circumstances the opportunity occurs during a time of peril of buying coals from passing steamer, we think it clear that he would not charge their cost as an extraordinary expenditure entitling him to general average.

The statement of the case not being as explicit as it might have been upon this point, we thought it right to send it back to the learned counsel who settled it between the parties to find from the evidence, he had taken one way or the other upon this question. He has returned it to us with a statement as follows, "I find that the

John Baring when she left Quebec had on board a reasonable supply of coal for the donkey engine for pumping purposes."

This finding is conclusive against the defendants. The prima facie claim to general average contribution is not displaced by any default on the part of the owner, and our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, H. C. Coole, for Tinkly, Adamson, and Adamson, North Shields.

Solicitors for the defendants, Argles and Rawlins

Friday, Jan. 12, 1877.Ex parte MINTO.

Inquiry under Merchant Shipping Acts—Prohibition.

When an inquiry is instituted under the Merchant Shipping Acts into the conduct of a captain, the court may proceed with the inquiry, although the Board of Trade have no charge to make against the captain.

THIS was an application for a writ of prohibition to Joseph York, Esq., stipendiary magistrate of South Shields, to prohibit him from proceeding further in an inquiry regarding the stranding of the ship Brasilia on the Goodwin Sands, in the month of Dec. 1876, and the conduct of Mr. Minto the captain of the ship.

The inquiry was held under the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 and 1876, and the rules made by the Lord Chancellor under the authority of the latter Act.

By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 33, it is enacted as follows:

If it appear to such officer or person as aforesaid [appointed by the Board of Trade] that a formal investigation is requisite or expedient, or if the Board of Trade so directs, he shall apply to any two justices, or to a stipendiary magistrate, to hear the case, and such justices or magistrate shall thereupon proceed to hear and try the same, and shall for that purpose, so far as relates to the summoning of parties, compelling the attendance of witnesses, and the regulation of the proceedings have the same powers as if the same were a proceeding relating to an offence or cause of complaint upon which they or he have power to make a summary conviction, or order, or as near thereto as circumstances permit; and it shall be the duty of such officer or person as aforesaid to superintend the management of the case, and to render such assistance to the said justices or magistrate as is in his power; and, upon the conclusion of the case, the said justices or magistrate shall send a report to the Board of Trade, containing a full statement of the case, and of their or his opinion thereon, accompanied by such report or extracts from the evidence, and such observations (if any) as they or he may think fit.

By sect. 32 the Merchant Shipping Act of 1876 it is enacted as follows:

In the following cases:

(1) Whenever any ship on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, or any British ship elsewhere, has been stranded or damaged, and any witness, if found at any place in the United Kingdom; or

(2) Whenever a British ship has been lost, or is supposed to have been lost, and any evidence can be obtained in the United Kingdom as to the circumstances under which she proceeded to sea, or was last heard of.

The Board of Trade (without prejudice to any other powers) may, if they think fit, cause an enquiry to be made, or formal investigation to be held, and all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 to 1876

Q.B. Div.]

MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS.

[C.P.]

shall apply to any such inquiry or investigation as if it had been made or held under the eighth part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.

By sect. 9 of the Act of 1876 the Lord Chancellor has authority to make rules to carry into effect the provisions of the Act with respect to a court of survey, and the following rules made under that section are material.

Proceedings in court.

14. The proceedings shall commence with the examination of the master, officers, and any other person who was on board at the happening of the casualty, and who can give material evidence in regard thereto.

15. On the completion of their examination the Board of Trade shall state in writing whether they have any, and if so what, charge to make against any person, and against whom.

16. Where the person against whom a charge is made in these rules called the defendant is in court, or before the court, the Board of Trade may make him a party to the proceedings by handing to him a copy of the charge.

17. Where the defendant is not in court, or before the court, the judge may, on the application of the Board of Trade, cause a summons to be served upon him in the form No. 2 in the appendix.

18. When the defendant has become a party to the proceedings, or when the time allowed for his appearance has expired, and he has not appeared, the Board of Trade shall produce any further witnesses whom they may wish to examine.

19. The defendant shall then produce any witnesses whom he may wish to examine.

20. The judge may then allow any further witnesses to be examined before him.

21. When the evidence is concluded, the defendant and any parties who may have appeared shall first be heard, and afterwards the Board of Trade.

22. The judge may adjourn the court from time to time, and from place to place, as may be most convenient.

23. The judge may deliver the decision of the court either res voce, or in writing; and, if in writing, it may be sent or delivered to the respective parties, and it shall not be necessary to hold a court merely for the purpose of giving the decision.

The examination of the captain on behalf of the Board of Trade having been completed, the solicitor of the Board handed to the captain a written "discharge" as follows:

The Brazilian.

After a careful consideration of the evidence taken in this inquiry into the stranding of the above named vessel, I have decided not to formulate any charge against you in connection therewith.

H. HAMILL.

The captain not putting in any further appearance was recalled by the stipendiary magistrate.

Milvain for the captain applied for a prohibition to restrain the stipendiary from proceeding further, and argued that, as the official representative of the Board of Trade had formally declined to proceed, the stipendiary magistrate was functus officio.

The Couar (Mellor and Lush, J.J.) refused the application, pointing out that, upon the construction of the statute and rules suggested on behalf of the applicant, the stipendiary magistrate would be completely subordinate to the Board of Trade.

Solicitors for the applicant, Oliver and Bottrell.

Application refused.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by CHAS. DODD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Tuesday, May 9, 1876.

MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS

Judgment of foreign court—Sale of cargo by foreign court—Constructive total loss—and labouring clauses—Marine insurance.

A cargo of rye shipped on an Austrian steamer from Enos to Schiedam was insured by a policy warranted free from particular average. The ship was compelled by stress of weather to put into a French port on the 14th Jan. Part of the cargo suffered sea damage and had to be in consequence sold at once. The remainder was warehoused. Afterward the 21st Feb., the court, on the petition of the captain, ordered the sale of the remainder. Notice of abandonment was given to the insurers, the defendants, that in the opinion of experts the cargo could not be carried to Schiedam. The defendants refused to accept notice, and on the 5th March the defendants' insurers, summoned the captain before the court to have it decreed that there was no need to forward the said remainder. The court, after a full survey, reversed its former decision, and decreed that the remainder was capable of being carried to Schiedam. Notice of this decision was given to the insured, together with notice that course pursued with the cargo would be for their benefit, and on their responsibility. The remainder was not forwarded, but was warehoused until December, although it would have been possible to have forwarded it. The captain having procured considerable sums to meet expenses caused directly and indirectly by forced interruption of the voyage, was summoned before the French court, and on the 14th Sep. order was made that the ship should be sold, a statement of general and particular average of the ship and cargo drawn up, which was accordingly done. On the 21st Dec. the court ordered the sale of the remainder of the cargo, on ground that the weather was against its further preservation. On the 25th Jan. the court ordered the full amount of freight due upon the voyage from Enos to Schiedam to be charged to the proceeds of the cargo, and a statement of average was made out on this footing, adopted by the court.

The said remainder of the cargo was sold on 10th Jan. It was up to that date merchant rye, and if carried to Schiedam at any time to its sale, would have fetched a price considerably more than the extra expenses properly incurred in respect of it and consequent upon the interruption of the voyage, including the cost of its shipment to Schiedam. If the proportion of freight payable upon the said remainder under the average statement was added to the cost of the extra expenses, the amount would be more than what the remainder would have fetched at Schiedam.

Held, there was no constructive total loss of the cargo, the sale of the said remainder being rendered necessary by the delay and expense of the captain, and not by the perils of the sea against.

Held, also, that it being found upon the facts that the judgment of the French court

C.P. Div.]

MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS.

[C.P. Div.]

wrong in law, this court was not bound to treat it as correct, or give effect to it.

Castrique v. Imrie (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 48; L. Rep. 4 H. of L. 414), considered.

Held, also, that the expenses which could be recovered under the "suing and labouring" clause were the expenses necessary to avert a total loss, and that they would be the expenses of unshipping the whole cargo and conveying it to the warehouse, separating that which could be carried on from the rest, and conditioning that which could then have been carried on.

This was a special case.

The facts and arguments are fully stated in the head-note and the judgments.

Cohen, Q.C. (McLeod with him), appeared for the plaintiffs.

Benjamin, Q.C. (Norman with him), appeared for the defendants.

The following authorities were cited or referred to during the argument:

Stringer v. English, &c., Marine Insurance Company, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 802; L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 676; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 599;

Cammell v. Sewell, 3 H. & N. 617; 5 H. & N. 728; 27 L. J. 447, Ex.; 29 L. J. 350, Ex.;

Castrique v. Imrie, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 48; L. Rep. 4 H. L. 414; 39 L. J. 350, C. P.;

Farnworth v. Hyde, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 231; 18 C. B., N. S., 835; L. Rep. 2 C. P. 204; 34 L. J. 207, C. P.; 11 Jur. N. S. 349;

Rosetto v. Gurney, 11 C. B. 176; 20 L. J. 257, C. P.; Messina v. Petrocchino, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561; L. Rep. 4 P. C. 144; 41 L. J. 27, Priv. Co.;

Kidston v. The Empire Marine Insurance Company, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 12; L. Rep. C. P. 535;

Dent v. Smith, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 868; L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 414.

May 9, 1876.—The judgment of the court (Lord Coleridge, C.J., Grove and Archibald, JJ.), was delivered by ARCHIBALD, J.—This is a special case, with power to draw inferences of fact. The action is on a valued policy of insurance on 18,750 kilogrammes of rye, valued at 2731*l.*, including 150*l.* advance, on a voyage from Enos to Schiedam, in the Austrian ship Unico, warranted free of particular average unless the ship be stranded, sunk, or burnt, which was underwritten by the defendant in the sum of 2731*l.* The policy also contains the usual clause, that in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the assured, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel, for, in, and about the defence and safeguard and recovery of the said goods, merchandise, ship, &c., or any part thereof, without prejudice to the insurance, to the charges whereof the assurers will contribute.

On the 21st July 1865, the defendants had entered into a charter-party with one Faltata, of Venice, for the charter of the Unico, then lying at Smyrna, to proceed to Enos, a Turkish port, and there load a cargo of grain or corn and carry it to Amsterdam or Schiedam direct, and had on the 2nd Nov. 1865, shipped at Enos on board the vessel, of which Antonio Lucovich was the master, a cargo equal to 2343 English quarters, or 6800 hectolitres of rye, sound and in good order and well conditioned. The captain received at Enos 150*l.*, pursuant to the terms of the charter-party. He also signed a bill of lading.

On the 8th Nov. the Unico, then laden with the said cargo in bulk, left Enos on the voyage. On the 14th Nov. the plaintiffs, through their agents, Messrs. Schroder and Bonniger in London, purchased from the defendants for 2735*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, the cargo in question, including freight and insurance to Schiedam, as per charter-party; and on the 21st Nov. the defendants handed to them the policy in question.

During the months of November and December 1865, the Unico on her voyage met with very tempestuous weather, in consequence of which she was obliged to jettison a portion equal to 300 hectolitres of the insured cargo; and on the 14th Jan., after hoisting signals of distress, she was taken by a French fishing smack into the port of La Rochelle, in France. On her arrival there, the captain placed himself in the hands of Messrs. Admyrault and Seignette. Mons. Admyrault was the Austrian Consul, and his firm made all necessary advances of cash to the captain.

Certain proceedings were, as stated in the special case, taken at the instance of the captain in the Tribunal of Commerce at La Rochelle, in consequence of which, first a portion, and eventually the whole of the cargo was landed and warehoused by order of the court. On the 10th Feb. 1866, a portion of the cargo, amounting to 5552 kilogrammes, was, by order of the Tribunal of Commerce, sold, and realised 8537*fr.* 65*c.* On the 21st Feb. 1866, on the petition of the captain, the court ordered the sale of the residue of the cargo by public auction.

Immediately on receiving information of this order, on the 21st and 22nd Feb. 1866, Messrs. Schroder and Bonniger, on behalf of the plaintiffs, gave notice of abandonment to the defendants, on the ground that in the opinion of experts or surveyors, the rye could not be forwarded to its destination. This notice the defendants declined to accept.

On the 5th March 1866, the defendants in their capacity of shippers, vendors, and insurers of the cargo, summoned Captain Lucovich before the Tribunal of Commerce for the purpose of having it decreed that there was no occasion to sell the residue of the rye, and for a new survey to be ordered. The Tribunal of Commerce thereupon ordered that the sale of the rye should be provisionally suspended, and that a new inspection should be proceeded with by three surveyors, whose instructions were to say if it were possible by continuing the expedients of manipulation and ventilation to preserve it in its good condition, so as to enable it to be re-shipped without risk, and to be conveyed to Schiedam, its destination.

On the 14th March, the surveyors having examined the rye, then in certain warehouses, were unanimously of opinion that the grain might be perfectly well re-shipped and conveyed without any danger to Schiedam, recommending that, if not re-shipped very speedily, it should be subject to ventilation once a month until the moment of its being put on board for conveyance to its destination. This report was confirmed, and ordered to be executed by the said court, and notice of it was given to the plaintiffs on the 17th March, 1866, together with notice that any course pursued with the cargo or any portion of it was for their account, and on their responsibility.

On the 11th May, 1866, the Captain of the Unico applied to the Tribunal of Commerce for and obtained authority to raise a loan on the bottomry of the ship, freight, and cargo. On the 6th June

C.P. Div.]

MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS.

[C.P. Div.]

the Captain filed a petition in the Tribunal of Commerce, stating that he had been unable to effect a loan on bottomry, and asking the Tribunal to declare the ship unnavigable under Articles 369 and 389 of the French Code de Commerce, and a decree was made in conformity with the petition.

On the 21st June, 1866, Messrs. Admyrault and Seignette, who had made considerable advances to meet the several expenses caused directly and indirectly by the forced interruption of the voyage summoned the captain before the Tribunal of Commerce, to show cause why in default of payment to them of 20,000 francs within a fortnight from that date, they should not be authorised to sell for account of whom it might concern the said ship and the remainder of the cargo, the price to be paid over to them and used for the purpose of covering the advances made or to be made, and the surplus paid over to whom it might by justice be commanded; and upon the 11th July, 1866, after service of the last mentioned summons, Captain Lucovich issued a summons to the underwriters, and the then unknown holder of the bill of lading of the cargo, in order to their becoming parties to the suit commenced by the summons of the 21st of June, and submitting such conclusions and arguments as they might think proper, and to hear it declared that the judgment to be pronounced was to be common to and binding upon all the parties.

The summons of the 21st of June came on for hearing on the 14th of Sept. 1866, in the absence of the defendants or any person appearing on their behalf, when the Tribunal ordered the sale of the ship Unico, and a statement of general and particular average of the ship and her cargo to be drawn up, which was accordingly done.

On the 22nd Oct. Messrs. Michel et fils, having on behalf of the plaintiffs, made a claim for payment of 3780 francs for the advance freight paid to Captain Lucovich, and the Captain inferring from this that the plaintiffs were the holders of the bill of lading for the cargo, then served upon them a notice of the judgment of the 14th Sept. 1866, and a summons to attend on all subsequent proceedings.

The plaintiffs had not, prior to the 23rd Oct., informed the master of the Unico that they were the holders of the bill of lading, and had not been summoned to attend any of the proceedings before the Tribunal of Commerce, and had not made themselves parties to any of the proceedings.

On the 21st Dec. 1866, the Tribunal of Commerce remanded to the 25th Jan. then next the decreeing respecting the statement of average; but nevertheless, on several grounds, among others that the state of the weather was unfavourable to its preservation, ordered the sale of the remainder of the cargo of the Unico, and the purchase-money was ordered to be paid over to Messrs. Admyrault and Seignette, to cover the advances made by them, which included expenses incurred in and about the unsold portion of the rye down to the date of the decree, together with the charges required by the law—the costs to be costs of average. This last mentioned judgment was given in the absence of any person representing the defendants. On the 10th Jan., under the said order, the remainder of the cargo was sold by public sale at La Rochelle, and realised a net sum of 27,830fr. 30c.

The total agreed freight of the cargo from Enos to Schiedam was 16,695fr. 95c. Of this 3780fr. (150l. sterling) was, as already stated, advanced to Enos, leaving 12,915fr. 95c. unpaid.

On the 25th Jan. the Tribunal of Commerce, by its judgment, declared that the freight for conveyance of the cargo from Enos to Schiedam was due in its entirety (including freight on the 300 hectolitres jettisoned), and that the advance to the captain on account of freight at Enos must contribute to general average, and referred back the statement to the average stater for the purpose of modifying the calculations therein; keeping in view, first the said judgment, secondly the sum realised by the sale of the rye, thirdly the various costs in the suit. The Tribunal also said that the average staters were at the same time to establish the net amount of the freight to be received by the captain out of the sum realised by the sale of the cargo.

The plaintiffs in this action were summoned through their agents, Messrs. P. Michel et fils, to appear in these proceedings, but they made default, and the judgment of the 25th Jan. was rendered without any opposition. The defendants in this action were not summoned to appear or defend the proceedings of the Tribunal of Commerce otherwise than by a summons left at the bar of the Procureur Impérial, according to French procedure, but not received by the defendants.

On the 24th May 1867, the Tribunal of Commerce confirmed an amended statement of general and particular average which had meanwhile been made, and condemned the plaintiffs to pay the sum of 12,915fr. 95c. remaining due on account of freight, with interest from the 11th July 1866, to the time of payment, and ordered that sum, being, as stated in the judgment, secured on the cargo, should be paid to Captain Lucovich by Messrs. Admyrault and Seignette as consignees. The said sum, together with 1000 francs damages and interest thereon from the 28th June 1867, together with an additional sum for costs subsequent to that date, was paid ultimately at La Rochelle to Captain Lucovich, after divers proceedings taken by him against the plaintiffs, out of the proceeds of the cargo. Such payment was made under and in pursuance of a judgment of the Civil Tribunal of La Rochelle of the first instance, dated the 7th Aug. 1867.

It is stated in paragraph 52 of the special case that, by the law of France, the Tribunal of Commerce had jurisdiction to order the said various surveys of the ship and cargo and statements of average, and to make the said various orders, judgments, and decrees, but that it is a court of first instance of inferior jurisdiction, and its judgments, orders, and decrees are subject to appeal to the Imperial Court at Poitiers, which, if made, is usually decided in four or five weeks, and that no appeal was taken on the part of the plaintiffs.

It was admitted also in the case that the damages referred to in paragraphs 8, 11, and 13 were caused by the perils insured against. It is also found that the rye which was sold on the 10th Jan. 1867, was in March 1866 and in Jan. 1867, merchantable rye and such as, if it had been carried on to Schiedam at any time between the time of its landing at La Rochelle and the time of its sale, would have fetched at Schiedam, a price considerably more than the total of all the extra expenses properly incurred in respect of it, and consequent upon ruption of the voyage under the circumstances, adding the extra freight of forwarding it to its destination. It is also admitted by the defendants, if the proportion of freight payable upon the cargo sold on the 10th Jan., under the said average agreement is to be taken into account, and added to the extra expenses aforesaid, the amount would be more than the rye would have fetched at Schiedam, if forwarded to its destination either in March 1866 or Jan. 1867.

P. Div.]

MEYER AND OTHERS v. RALLI AND OTHERS.

[C.P. Div.]

The questions which arise in the case are: First, whether there was a constructive total loss of the cargo; Secondly, if not, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover any and what portion of the proceeds under the sue and labour clause.

For the purpose of deciding these questions, it is necessary to consider the effect of the proceedings and orders of the Tribunal of Commerce of La Rochelle. But, before doing so, it may be worth while to inquire what, under the circumstances, was the duty of the captain. Found in the case (paragraph 51) that, by the law of France, the master under the circumstances not entitled to full freight upon the cargo sold there; but that by Article 296 of the Code of Commerce, he was bound to hire another vessel to carry on the cargo to its destination, and if unable to hire a vessel, was entitled to pro rata freight only; and that the law of Austria on this subject is the same as that of France. It is further held that it would have been practicable to hire another vessel to carry on the cargo to its destination.

The case also states that the portion of the cargo that was sold by order of the Tribunal of Commerce on the 10th Jan. was merchantable, and would have fetched at Schiedam a price considerably more than the total of all the extra expenses actually incurred and consequent upon the interruption of the voyage, including the extra freight of forwarding to its destination.

It is quite clear, therefore, that if the captain had done his duty the portion of the cargo sold on 10th Jan. 1867, would have been forwarded to Schiedam, and that there would in the event have been a partial loss, the portion of the cargo forwarded being only liable to pay so much of the freight of forwarding from La Rochelle (Rosseto v. Key, 11 C. B. 176; 20 L. J. 257, C. P.), as exceeded the original rate of freight. The question is what is the effect of the proceedings in the French courts on this simple state of the case?

The view which we take, we do not consider material, for the purpose of dealing with the question, whether or not there was a constructive total loss, to discuss the effect of the various surveys and orders of the Tribunal of Commerce of La Rochelle, prior to the order of 21st Dec. 1866, by which the residue of the cargo was ordered to be sold, except in so far as the great lapse of time without any effort on the part of the captain to perform his duty bears on the case. There are portions of those orders and judgments, no doubt, which are properly judgments in rem, or in the nature of judgments in rem, and binding as against all the world, and, against others, as against both the plaintiffs and defendants. But, when we come to the order of 25th Jan. 1867, whereby it was declared that the freight for conveyance of the cargo to Schiedam due from the plaintiffs to the shipowner (or captain as his agent) in its entirety, it cannot be regarded as in the nature of a judgment in rem, and apart from the fact that the defendants were no parties to that judgment, though we draw the inference of fact that the plaintiffs had such notice of it (Reynolds v. Fenton, 3 C. B. 187), that they might have appeared and defended, there is this peculiarity in the case, which does not, so far as we are aware, seem to have occurred before, that upon the express findings in the special case, by which both parties are bound, this part of the judgment seems to be manifestly erroneous in regard to the law of France, on which it professes to proceed.

The remark that the defendants were no parties to the judgment equally applies to the judgment of the 7th Aug. 1867, of the Civil Tribunal of La Rochelle, by which the proceeds of the residue of the cargo attached in the hands of Messrs. Admyrault and Seignette was confirmed, and the entire amount of freight ordered to be paid out of it. The defendants, therefore, can hardly be bound by the declaration that the residue of the cargo which was sold on the 10th Jan. 1867 should bear its entire proportion to La Rochelle, in addition to the extra freight of conveying it to Schiedam, or by the order to pay it out of the proceeds of the goods. Moreover, even if the defendants could be considered as at all indirectly affected by such a judgment as binding the plaintiffs, the question is how far, considering the findings in the case, we should be bound to give effect to it as against the plaintiffs.

It is a matter of nicety how far a judgment of a competent foreign court in rem, or between the same parties, is examinable here. The authorities on the subject are all collected in Story's Conflict of Laws, §§ 547 et seq., and in the notes to Doe v. Oliver (2 Sm. L. C. 751 7th edit.), and need not be referred to in detail.

In the late case of Schibaby v. Westenholtz (L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 155; 24 L. T. Rep. 93), the principle on which effect is given to the judgments of foreign tribunals is stated to be, not on the ground merely of international comity, but on the ground that the judgment of a "court of competent jurisdiction over the defendant imposes a duty or obligation to pay the sum for which judgment is given, which the courts of this country are bound to enforce; and consequently anything which negatives that duty, or forms a legal excuse for not performing it is a defence to the action." (See Schibaby v. Westenholtz.) This principle is also assumed and acted on in Goddard v. Gray (24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 89; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 139), where the majority of the court held that the judgment was binding, notwithstanding that it proceeded on a mistake as to English law, which did not appear to have been knowingly or perversely acted on.

In Story's Conflict of Laws, the extent to which and the grounds on which a foreign judgment is said to be examinable or open to be impeached are thus summed up (Article 607): "It is easy to understand that the defendant may be able to impeach the original justice of the judgment by showing that the court had no jurisdiction, or that he never had any notice of the suit, or that it was procured by fraud, or that it is irregular and bad by the law fori rei judicate. To such an extent the doctrine is intelligible and practicable." In Castrique v. Imrie (23 L. T. Rep. 348; L. Rep. 4 H. of L. 414), the House of Lords upheld a decree in rem of the Tribunal of Commerce of Havre, in which a decree was made in clear violation of English law, on the ground that the foreign law being ascertained as a matter of fact in the case, the French court, with every honest endeavour to be right, was liable without any fault to go wrong either from imperfect evidence produced before it, or misapprehension of its effect. But in that case in delivering the opinion of the majority of the judges, Blackburn, J., speaking of the judgment on matters of French law, says (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348; L. Rep. 4 H. of L. 414), "we must (at least till the contrary is clearly proved) give credit to a foreign tribunal for knowing its own law and acting within the jurisdiction conferred on it by that law." And in the case Becquet v. McCarthy (2 B. & Ad., at p. 957), Lord Tenterden had said before, "we ought to see very plainly that the court has decided against the French law, before we say that their judgment is erroneous on that ground," implying that if it clearly appeared to be wrong the court would not give effect to the judgment. Here the court expressly professes to proceed on the ground of French law; and, although the presumption would be that the court in delivering judgment would be taken to know its own law, still it clearly appears that that law was not followed, and we are precluded by the findings in the case from holding that the court has rightly declared it. The contrary—to use the words of Blackburn, J.—clearly appears, and, either from inadvertence or some other reason, the foreign tribunal has gone manifestly wrong. It does not profess to declare what is the law of Austria. If it had, though equally wrong, we might have been bound by Cas-trique v. Imrie (sup.) to have given effect to it; but it is a declaration of French law which is wrong.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that there is no rule of comity, and no principle on which we are called upon to give effect to such a judgment, and that pro rata freight only was payable on the cargo at La Rochelle. If then freed from the burden of the entire freight at La Rochelle, the case finds that the portion of the rye sold on the 10th Jan. 1867, would have realised at Schiedam more than enough to have covered the extra freight from La Rochelle, and in that event, had it been forwarded, there would only have been a partial and no constructive total loss: (see Rosetto v. Gurney, 11 C. B. 176.)

We must, however, consider the effect of the order of the 21st Dec. 1866, for the sale of the residue of the goods, and whether it could under the circumstances appearing in the case, constitute a total loss.

Now, although the sale may have been valid and binding, and the plaintiff may thereby have been deprived of the goods: (see Cannell v. Sewell (2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 799; 3 H. & N. 617; 5 H. & N. 728), still, upon the facts as found, it was a sale of a portion of goods which it was the duty of the captain to have transhipped and forwarded, for which a ship might have been hired at La Rochelle, and which, if forwarded at any time between the time of its landing at La Rochelle, and the time of its sale some twelve months after, would have realised at Schiedam considerably more than the total of all the extra expenses properly incurred in respect of it, and consequent on the interruption of the voyage.

Under these circumstances, it is impossible not to see that, although the ship and cargo were originally brought within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal of Commerce of La Rochelle by perils of the seas, the sale of this portion of the cargo was not really due to any of the perils insured against, which had long ceased to operate in regard to this portion of the cargo, but was in fact made for the purpose of paying advances incurred through the captain's breach of duty. But it was strenuously argued on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the first order for sale of entire cargo conferred on them the right to notice of abandonment, and that nothing occurred afterwards had varied that right. We think, however, that the proceedings in the case with respect to the last portion of the rye sold (insurance being free of average), when taken together with the opinion we have expressed against the obligation to pay the entire freight at La Rochelle, are clearly in contradiction of supposed right; and it becomes, therefore, necessary to consider a further contention of the plaintiffs, viz., that though acceptance of the cargo had been declined, still the conduct of the undersigned writer in intervening in the Tribunal of Commerce was evidence of such acceptance, and irrevocable.

Being then of opinion that there was no constructive total loss within the meaning of the policy, remains to consider the next question—whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover anything, how much, under the sue and labour clause?

It was argued on behalf of the defendants, that at the time the rye was unshipped it was in danger of total loss, and that it was unshipped solely for the purposes and benefit of the plaintiffs. But it is only necessary to look at the reports which are referred to in the special case, and which are to be taken as correctly setting forth the state of the cargo at the time, to see that it was in a state of heat and partial fermentation from sea water, which if it had been allowed to go on would have resulted in such damage as we feel constrained to draw this inference, that all probability have resulted in such damage as to be an actual total loss. It was necessary, then, for the preservation of some substantial part of the cargo, and in order to avert a total loss, to remove or unship the whole cargo.

It cannot be contended, since the case of Kidston v. Empire Marine Assurance Company (L. Rep. 1 C. P. 535; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 468), that the warranty "free from particular average" excludes the operation of the sue and labouring clause; and that case is also an authority that the occasion upon which the expenses in this case were incurred, was such as to be within it. As to the cases of Great Indian Peninsular Company v. Saunders (1 B. & S. 266; 2 B. & S. 266; 6 L. T. Rep. 297; 31 L. J. 206, Q. B.), and Booth v. Gair (9 L. T. Rep. 33; 33 L. J. 99; 15 C. B., N. S., 291), cited by the defendants, we need only refer to the reports in which they are distinguished by Willes, J., in his learned judgment in Kidston v. Empire Marine Assurance Company (sup.).

A more difficult question is as to the amount of the expenses recoverable under this head. This depends, in our opinion, upon the amount of expense necessary to avert a total loss, for which the defendants were liable. That is a matter we think, must be reasonably treated, and not judged too strictly. The unshipping of the cargo was necessary, in order to its preservation, and to the separation of the sound part from which was irreparably damaged. But

Ex. Div.]

MOULD AND ANOTHER v. ANDREWS AND OTHERS.

[Ex. Div.]

veyed to the warehouse where the separation might take place, any subsequent care bestowed on that which could not be benefited by it sufficiently to enable it to be forwarded to its destination would have been of no use whatever to the residue, and would not in any way have contributed to its preservation. We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs will only be entitled to recover under this head the expenses of unshipping the whole and conveying it to a warehouse where the separation took place, and of the separation, and the expense of conditioning that portion of it which was sold on the 10th Jan. 1867.

As the case does not afford us the means of stating the amount of the expenses thus incurred, we think it must be referred back to the arbitrator to ascertain the amount, applying the principle we have laid down, and that for the sum so found by the arbitrator the plaintiffs are entitled to our judgment.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Matthews.

Solicitors for the defendants, Markby, Tarry, and Stewart.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, June 27, 1876.

(Before KELLY, C.B. and POLLOCK, B.)

MOULD AND ANOTHER v. ANDREWS AND OTHERS.

Ship belonging to several co-owners—Repairs to by order of the ship's husband—Cost of repairs apportioned between owners in proportion to their shares in ship—Payment by some co-owners in cash, and by some by bill—Bill of one co-owner dishonoured—Liability of other co-owners for amount of—Principal and surety.

The four defendants and one B., were the owners, in certain shares between them, of a ship to which the plaintiffs by order of W., the ship's husband, and with the authority and consent of the defendants, did certain repairs, and upon the plaintiff's account for such repairs being sent in to the owners, it was arranged between W. and the plaintiffs, that it should be paid partly in cash (subject to discount) and partly in good bills, and that the total amount of the contract should be apportioned between the said several owners according and in proportion to their interest and the number of their respective shares in the said ship. The necessary calculation having been made by W., the account was then paid to the plaintiffs through W., partly by a cheque of the defendant, Andrews, payable to W.'s order, and indorsed by him for the amount of Andrews' proportion, partly by cash payments from each of the other three defendants for the amount of their respective proportions, and partly by a bill at six months, drawn by W. on and accepted by B., for the amount of B.'s proportion of the said account. B.'s bill being dishonoured at maturity, the plaintiffs brought this action against the defendants to recover from them, as joint owners of the ship, the amount of such dishonoured bill, in answer to which the defendants contended that the plaintiffs, by taking B.'s bill, and giving him time, had placed his co-debtors, the defendants, in a worse position, and necessarily postponed their remedy against B., and had consequently discharged the defendants, but it was Held by the Exchequer Division (Kelly, C.B. and Pollock, B.), giving judgment in favour of the plaintiffs, and dismissing the defendants' motion to enter a verdict or a nonsuit, that the defendant was bound by the mode of payment adopted, and that that circumstance distinguished the case from that of principal and surety.

THIS was an action brought by the plaintiffs as executors of one Richard Hopper, deceased, to recover from the defendants, as joint owners of a vessel called the Kildare, the sum of 646l. 7s. 7d., the balance of account for work done by the deceased and by the plaintiffs, as a shipbuilder, in repairs to the said ship, under the circumstances as set forth in the statement of claim.

1 and 2. The plaintiffs are the executors of one Richard Hopper, deceased, and the defendants are joint owners of a vessel named the Kildare.

3. One Charles Weatherburn was, at the time when the repairs herein mentioned were ordered and executed, ship's husband of the said vessel Kildare, and on or about the 20th March 1875, as such ship's husband, and under the authority and with the knowledge and consent of the defendants, he instructed Richard Hopper, now deceased, to execute certain necessary repairs on the Kildare.

4. In pursuance of the instructions given as aforesaid the said Richard Hopper commenced to repair the Kildare, but died during the progress of the work, and the said repairs were completed by the plaintiffs as executors aforesaid. These repairs were completed on or about the 5th May 1875.

5. The amount charged by the plaintiffs for the said repairs was 1181l. 19s. An account showing this charge was made out and presented in or about the month of May 1875, to the said Charles Weatherburn, as such ship's husband as aforesaid, and to the defendants, and no objection was then or has since been made by the defendants, or any of them, or by the said Charles Weatherburn, or by anyone on behalf of either of them, to the quality of the work or the fairness of the charge aforesaid.

6. After the account had been presented and approved as aforesaid, the said Charles Weatherburn, acting as ship's husband as aforesaid, proposed to the plaintiffs to pay the amount of charges aforesaid, partly in cash and partly by good bills, to which the plaintiffs assented. The plaintiffs thereafter received payment of the whole amount of their charges in cash and bills, allowing discount for the amount paid in cash.

7. One of the bills so received by the plaintiffs from the ship's husband as aforesaid was a bill of exchange for 646l. 7s. 7d., drawn by the said Chas. Weatherburn, acting as aforesaid, upon John Henzell Bruce, one of the owners of the Kildare, payable six months after the 11th May 1875, and accepted by the said John Henzell Bruce. At maturity the said bill was duly presented, but was dishonoured, and though the said John Henzell Bruce and the defendants had due notice of such dishonour, they did not pay and have not paid the said bill. The said sum of 646l. 7s. 7d. remains due to the plaintiffs in respect of the repairs in paragraph 4 mentioned.

8. The defendants refuse to pay the said 646l. 7s. 7d., whereby this action has been rendered

[Ex. Div.]

MOULD AND ANOTHER v. ANDREWS AND OTHERS.

[B]

necessary, and the plaintiffs as such executors claim the 646l. 7s. 7d. and interest thereon.

In his statement of defence the defendant Andrews alleged—First, that the defendants were not joint owners of the Kildare.

Secondly, he denied the several allegations in paragraph 6 of the statement of claim, except the last thereof, which the defendant says is true.

Thirdly, that the said bill of exchange for 646l. 7s. 7d., in paragraph 7 of the clause mentioned, was received by the plaintiffs from the said Chas. Weatherburn, and given by him to them in full satisfaction and discharge of the said 646l. 7s. 7d. therein mentioned, and not merely for and on account thereof.

Fourthly, that the credit of six months mentioned in the said bill was given by the plaintiffs to the said John Henzell Bruce without the consent or authority of the defendant Andrews, and he submitted that, if even the said bill were given on account only and not in satisfaction, still that the said defendant was in the position of a surety only for the said John Henzell Bruce, and that he was discharged by such giving of time.

Fifthly, that the said Chas. Weatherburn did not instruct the said R. Hopper, deceased, to execute, nor did the said R. Hopper and the plaintiffs jointly execute the said repairs for the defendants jointly, or on their joint credit. The said repairs were executed on the terms that they should be paid for by the defendants and the said John Henzell Bruce and one Marian Sheriff severally and rateably, in proportion to their several interests in the said vessel, and that no one of them should be liable for the others or beyond the amount of such proportion as aforesaid.

Sixthly, that the defendants and the said John Henzell Bruce and Marian Sheriff paid their several proportions of the said account, or satisfied and discharged the same by giving bills in accord and satisfaction thereof respectively, and which the plaintiffs, as such executors aforesaid, received in such accord and satisfaction as aforesaid.

Seventhly, he denied that the sum of 646l. 7s. 7d., or any part part thereof, remained or was due to the plaintiffs as in the seventh paragraph of the claim mentioned.

In the event of the plaintiffs establishing an original joint liability of the defendants, which the defendant Andrews disputed, he in that event said as follows:

Eighthly, after the accruing of the plaintiffs' claim and before action, and after the death of the said R. Hopper, it was agreed by and between the defendants and the said Bruce and Sheriff, and the plaintiffs as executors as aforesaid, that each of the defendants and the said Bruce and Sheriff should pay in cash, subject to discount, or give bills in full for their several shares of the said account respectively rateably in proportion to their respective interests in the said vessel, and that in consideration thereof the plaintiffs, as executors as aforesaid, should receive such payment or bills respectively, in full satisfaction and discharge of their claim against the said defendants, and the said Bruce and Sheriff; and the defendants and the said Bruce and Sheriff accordingly then paid in cash, subject to discount, or gave bills for their said several shares as aforesaid, and the plaintiffs as such executors as aforesaid, then accepted and received the same in full satisfaction and discharge of their claim.

Ninthly, in the alternative the defendant Andrews said that, after the accruing plaintiffs' claim and before action, on the death of the said R. Hopper, it was by and between the plaintiffs, as executors as aforesaid, and the defendant Andrews in consideration that he would draw and deliver to the plaintiffs a negotiable instrument (it is to say), a cheque on certain bankers able to the order of the plaintiffs, for the sum of 140l. 7s., the plaintiffs should accept and receive the said cheque in full satisfaction and discharge of their claim against him; and he accordingly drew and delivered to the plaintiffs such cheque as aforesaid, and they then accepted and received the same in full satisfaction and discharge of their claim against him.

Tenthly, he denied that the said C. Weatherburn and the defendants respectively had done anything of dishonour of the said bill, and that the said bill was duly presented for payment as alleged.

The defendant Armstrong in his statement of defence admitted the 1st, 3rd, 4th, and 5th paragraphs of the claim, and denied the 6th and 7th paragraphs of the claim, and alleged that each of the defendants was (as the plaintiffs well knew) an owner of certain shares in, and not one of several owners of, the Kildare, and that it was action agreed between the plaintiffs and the several owners of the said shares, that the plaintiffs' account should be apportioned between the said owners in proportion to the number of shares; and each owner accordingly (even the said J. H. Bruce) paid his proportion of the said account, and the said J. H. Bruce paid his proportion by the said bill of exchange, and the defendant Andrews paid his proportion by cash, and the defendant Armstrong and the owners each paid his proportion in cash; and the said bill of exchange and cheque were respectively received by the plaintiffs in full discharge and satisfaction of all claims against the said Andrews respectively; and that the joint liability (if such ever existed) of the defendants, had been changed into a separate liability of the matters hereinbefore alleged, and the separate liability of the defendant Armstrong was discharged by the payment aforesaid; that the defendant Armstrong was discharged from all liability by reason of the before mentioned discharge of the said Bruce and Andrews respectively; and that the plaintiffs well knew of the relationship existing between the owners of the "Kildare," and that the defendant Armstrong was liable at all beyond his said proportion as a surety only, and the plaintiffs by their said bill and giving time to the said Bruce and Sheriff, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant Armstrong, thereby discharged the latter of his liability as surety.

The statements of defence of the defendants, Blenkinsopp and Clarke, were made to the same effect as those of the defendant Andrews and Armstrong hereinbefore.

The plaintiffs by their reply joined the defendants upon their several defences. At the trial before Mallor, J., at the Assizes, 1875, for Northumberland, &c., upon Tyne, the facts appeared to be as stated in the plaintiffs' statement.

he plaintiffs also stated that when he endorsed Andrews' cheque, he was not aware that the words "in full" were inserted in the body of it the words "in full" of such proportion, relieving Andrews from all further lia-was found for the plaintiffs for and the learned judge directed that could be entered for the plaintiffs for and their costs, with leave to the counsel to move to enter the verdict for the plaintiffs, or a nonsuit.

Q.C. and J. Edge, for the defendant moved to enter judgment or a nonsuit and Hugh Shield, appeared for the defendants.

for the plaintiffs, appeared in opposition.

Q.C., stated the facts of the case and relied on by the defendants at the trial, C.B.—Did it appear that the delivery of Bruce's bill being given and the plaintiffs?

for the plaintiffs.—It was admitted that the agent and ship's agent had authority to arrange all relating to the payment of the repairs of

Q.C.—It was admitted that the work of the employment of the defendants, account was in the first case properly taken. But the question is, assuming joint liability of the several defendants or not the plaintiffs, by their discharge of them. The ship's husband the total amount of the account into portions to the interest of each part of the ship, and then handed to the plaintiffs and cheques for these separate bills the proportion of the defendant the account so divided was 147l. 11s., the amount he gave to the plaintiffs his bill to the order of the plaintiffs "in Andrews's proportion of the costs of Kildare," and Andrews believed, plaintiff by accepting such cheque, him from all further liability. The defendant their manager, indorsed this cheque, and the money, but they allege that he did it and paid it into their bank using the peculiar form in which, and that they never intended nor charge the defendant Andrews from liability. At the same time that he gave his cheque, Bruce, another of the plaintiffs gave his bill at six months for his proportion of repairs, amounting to 646l. 7s. 7d., dishonoured at maturity, and the bill is now claimed from the other four defendants in this action. It was admitted that the plaintiffs, under the circumstances, have discharged the defendants, giving time to one joint debtor they the other joint debtors in a worse case and they insisted on cash, and had been unable to pay it, the defendant the owners might have paid Bruce's bill and at once have sued him; but by the act of the plaintiffs the defendant's remedy against Bruce has been necessarily postponed. The question then is, Is it competent to the plaintiffs to postpone all remedy against one part owner, and yet retain all their rights against the other? The present case may be put as one of principal and surety, where the surety is discharged by time being given to the principal debtor without the assent of the surety. There is, I am bound to say, a case of Keay v. Fenwick, decided this week in the Court of Appeal, confirming the decision of the Court of Common Pleas (not reported), which I ought to mention, though it is, I fear, very much against the contention now urged on behalf of the present defendants. [KELLY, C.B.—That is a new case. Are there any older cases in point?]

M'Clymont.—It is submitted on the part of the plaintiffs that the cases of Robinson v. Read (9 B. & C. 449; 7 L. J., O. S., 236, K. B.), Whitwell v. Perrin (4 C. B., N. S., 412), and Mitcheson v. Oliver (5 E. & B. 443; 25 L. J. 39, Q.B.) are especially in point.

Herschell, Q.C.—The cases cited can, I think, be distinguished from the present one. There is, however, more difficulty in distinguishing Keay v. Fenwick. In that case the three defendants were part owners of a ship which the managing owner had sold without the knowledge of his co-owners, who, however, subsequently ratified the sale. The managing owner thereafter without the knowledge of his co-owners, gave bills at three, six, and nine months to the plaintiffs for commission in connection with the sale, which bills were dishonoured at maturity; and the defendants being thereupon sued by the plaintiffs, urged that, by taking the bills from one co-owner without the knowledge of the others, the plaintiffs had discharged the others, to which the plaintiffs replied that it was not a case of voluntary credit for the reason that in taking these bills they had taken all they could get, and the court, both below in the Common Pleas and on appeal decided in their favour. The only substantial distinction which, as it appears to me, can be suggested is, that in the present case the plaintiffs might have had cash at first had they chosen to insist on it.

M'Clymont.—The plaintiffs were not only willing but anxious to take cash, and offered discount for it. The bills were given to the plaintiffs not by one part owner behind the back of the other, but by the ship's husband, acting as the common agent of all the owners, in the usual and ordinary course of his duty as such agent. If the present case differs at all from that of Keay v. Fenwick it is, I submit, in being a far stronger case in favour of the plaintiffs.

KELLY, C.B.—The defendants in the present case were I think clearly bound by the mode of payment adopted; and that, I think, distinguishes this case from that of principal and surety, and really takes the ground from under Mr. Herschell's feet. We are bound by the authority of the case in the Court of Appeal, which he has cited to us, and it is not necessary to go into the questions of detail. The defendants' motion to enter a verdict for them must therefore be dismissed, and the plaintiffs must have judgment with costs.

POLLOCK, B. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiffs with costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, John Tucker, agent for T. W. Stewart, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

ADM.]

THE CADIZ AND THE BOYNE.

Solicitors for the defendant Andrews, Williamson, Hill, and Co., agents for Ingledeu and Daggett, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Solicitor for the defendant Armstrong, John Scott, agent for J. A. Busk, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Solicitors for the defendant Blenkinsop, Pyke, Irving, and Pyke, agents for J. G. and J. E. Joel, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Solicitors for the defendant Clarke, Pattison, Wigg, and Co.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by J. P. ASPHALL and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Nov. 8 and 9, 1876.

THE CADIZ AND THE BOYNE.

Salvage, agreement for apportionment—Additional salvage outside agreement—Persons not actually engaged in—Costs.

When persons agree to render a salvage service and to apportion the salvage in a particular way, and further salvage services are rendered, not contemplated by the agreement, the whole body of salvors are entitled to share in the reward, and not only those actually engaged in the further salvage operations.

Costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of fund in court, except a defendant's, in consequence of his misconduct to his co-salvors.

THIS was a cause for the distribution of salvage earned by the plaintiffs and defendants in diving operations carried on for the purpose of saving cargo, &c., from the wrecks of the S.S. Cadiz and Boyne, near Brest, in France.

The Cadiz had gone on shore and sunk in May 1875, and in the same month an "Association for the Protection of Commercial Interests as respects Wrecked and Damaged Property," engaged with defendant Samuel Edwards, who signed all agreements as Edwards and Co., and who was a diver belonging to Whitstable, to save the cargo in which they were interested, at the rate of 15 per cent. for quicksilver and lead, and 5 per cent. for specie, 5 per cent. on value of a hunting knife valued at 7000*l.*, and 30 per cent. on all other cargo, and the other parties interested in the cargo made similar agreements as to their portions.

Samuel Edwards communicated with people at Whitstable, who engaged at that place the persons requisite to enable him to carry out the service.

It appeared that there three methods in which it was customary amongst Whitstable divers to apportion salvage earned by diving operations.

(1.) That allowing three shares for those who were actually diving, three shares to the owner of each smack employed, and two to the owner of each diving apparatus; the other men should each take single shares, and boys a half or three-quarter share, according to their ability.

(2.) That the shares being estimated in the same way as above, the men and boys engaged to assist should only take half of the shares, and receive from those who had engaged them 10*s.* a week and an allowance equal in amount to half their food in exchange for the other half.

(3.) That the shares being still estimated in the same way, the men engaged to assist should receive wages of 1*l.* per week and the persons who had engaged them, the whole of the shares in exchange.

At first a smack called the Romp, of six hands, was engaged to come on assist, and there was a dispute between as to whether her crew had been on first or second of the above methods.

After they had worked some time, the Ann Elizabeth, was also engaged to assist; her crew being, it was admitted by her owner on the 3rd method; the salvage operations were proceeding, on the 13th Aug. 1875, a light was seen from a vessel apparently in distress, the men went off in the boats below the smacks, and on the way met a barque into danger, which, after receiving no answer, put out to sea in safety; the boats met several boats with some passengers on board them, from the Royal Mail Steamship, and learnt that the light they had seen they had heard proceeded from that vessel, which had run on the rocks; the smack's crew towed and piloted the Boyne's boats to of Malines, off which the smacks lay, service 20*l.* was paid to and shared by the persons engaged.

In the morning the defendant, Samuel Edwards, drew up a contract on board one of the salvage specie and diamonds, of which the large amount on board the Boyne, at 10 o'clock, went on board that vessel and got it of her to accept the contract; he then, with the assistance of some of the crew of the Ann Elizabeth, and, as it was subsequently proved, the crew of the Romp, got one of the divers on board the Boyne, and began to work in a very short space of time, about succeeded in recovering 24,700*l.* worth of specie and diamonds; during that day the crews of the two smacks were employed, getting their smacks in readiness to receive passengers from Malines to La Conquête, a town on the main land, and others in the Romp to the Boyne, and keeping busy to assist in any way that might be necessary. On the next day the crews saved a large portion of the passengers, and subsequently the salvage operations were resumed.

The plaintiffs, a portion of the crew of the Ann Elizabeth, not being satisfied with the accounts rendered them, on the close of the operations commenced proceedings for an account in the High Court of Justice, and assigned the cause to the Chancery Division in the Rolls Court.

On the 13th Nov. 1876, the Master of the Rolls ordered the cause to be transferred to the Admiralty Division: (Humphrey v. Edwards, Notes 1875, p. 208.)

On the 16th Dec. 1875, a statement was delivered on behalf of William Edwards and three others of the crew of the Boyne, claiming an account on the basis of division, claiming to divide the total salvage against Samuel Edwards, the Ann Elizabeth Packet Company, who were owners, and the Association for the Protection of Commercial Interests, as respects wrecked property.

THE CADIZ AND THE BOYNE.

[ADM.]

res were made up as follows :

of the smack Romp . . . . .	3 shares
Eden (diver) . . . . .	3 "
Edwards (diver), defendant . . . . .	3 "
Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Ashby, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Humphrey . . . . .	1 "
Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Eden, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Edwards . . . . .	1 "
(boy) . . . . .	1 "
Marce . . . . .	1 "

Total . . . . . 16½ shares.

It then appeared that Joseph Day was, therefore, was entitled to a full at the diving apparatus employed under to 2 shares, so making up a res, and the statement of claim was accordingly. The plaintiffs also alch sums as had been paid or were w and owner of the Ann Elizabeth n into account.

Dec. 1875, the statement of claim o be amended by adding the five above enumerated as defendants. m had been co-adventurers with rds from the beginning, and the e persons belonging to the Romp, objection to the accounts rendered wards.

Jan. the defendant salvors delivered efence, claiming to have the amount ie Cadiz divided into 31½ shares, to , as to the Romp's crew on plan s to Ann Elizabeth on plan (No. 3), from the Boyne should only be zat those actually engaged in the ie 31½ shares were made up as of the smack Romp . . . . .	3 shares

of the Ann Elizabeth . . . . .	3 " of the two diving apparatus . . . . .	4 "
Eden (diver), defendant . . . . .	3 "
Edwards (diver), defendant . . . . .	3 "
Marce, defendant . . . . .	1 "
defendant . . . . .	1 "
Edwards, defendant . . . . .	1 "
Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Ashby, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Eden, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Humphrey, defendant . . . . .	1 " ag ½ shares to the four last persons to be taken by the adventurers . . . . .	4 "
a crew of Ann Elizabeth . . . . .	5 "
" . . . . .	1 "
pilots . . . . .	2 "

Total . . . . . 31½ shares.

March the plaintiffs replied, joining statement of defence, and denying the the French pilots except on ordinary

May 1876 the pleadings were further ining the owner, master, and crew Elizabeth as plaintiffs, and adding res in respect of a second diving ie sums of money due for salvage as parties interested in the Cadiz,

Royal Mail Steamship Co., the ie Boyne, under the agreements o court, and on 2nd and 5th May ame on for hearing. After hearing statement for the plaintiffs and the partial examination of one witness on each side, the case of the salvage of the Cadiz as distinguished from the Boyne was referred to the registrar to report "on the basis or modes of calculation adopted by the plaintiffs and by the defendants respectively, or any modification of the said respective bases or modes of calculation rendered necessary by the accounts and vouchers produced." The registrar sat on the 12th and 13th July, and on 25th July 1876, made his report, disallowing 7 per cent. out of a claim of 10 per cent. on the whole salvage for commission (as it appeared that only 3 per cent. was actually paid to other parties, the defendant, Samuel Edwards, reserving 7 per cent. for himself and his original co-adventurers, but not giving the other salvors any notice of their intention, but charging the whole 10 per cent. as Kerros, the agent's, commission), making some other deductions, and finding that the number of shares into which the amount due for salvage before the arrival of the Ann Elizabeth should be divided was nineteen, made up as follows :

The owner of the smack Romp . . . . .	3 shares
William Eden (diver), defendant . . . . .	3 "
Samuel Edwards (diver), defendant . . . . .	3 "
William Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
William Ashby, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
George Humphrey, defendant . . . . .	1 "
John Humphrey, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Ethelbert Edenden, plaintiff . . . . .	1 "
Richard Edwards, defendant . . . . .	1 "
Joseph Day, defendant . . . . .	1 "
Frederick Pearce, defendant . . . . .	1 "
Owner of diving apparatus . . . . .	2 "

A total of . . . . . 19 shares.

And after the arrival of the Ann Elizabeth , in addition to the above . . . . .	19 shares
The owner of the Ann Elizabeth . . . . .	3 "
Master of ditto . . . . .	1 "
Four men crew of ditto . . . . .	4 "
One boy crew of ditto . . . . .	1 "
Owner of second diving apparatus . . . . .	2 "

A total of . . . . . 29½ shares.

Disallowing altogether the claim for two shares in respect of the French pilots, as it appeared they had been paid by the day. He further reported as follows :

"I do not mean to say that the several persons whose names are set forth are entitled to take in their own right the amount of the shares set opposite their respective names. If any of them has assigned one of his shares to some other person that is a matter between the parties themselves, and with which I have at present nothing to do. All that I need say here is that no such assignment appears to have been made of the shares due to the master and crew of the Romp, but that some arrangement was made by the owner of the Ann Elizabeth with the master and crew that he should receive their shares in lieu of certain payments to be made to them." (a)

The report then proceeded to show the value of a share in the salvage earned before and after the arrival of the Ann Elizabeth. On the 8th Nov. 1876, the case came before the court again.

After the examination of witnesses on both sides, it appeared that both the diving apparatus had been in use from the first, and that the owners of each were entitled to two shares as well before as after the arrival of the Ann Elizabeth, and it was admitted that the value of the shares should be ascertained before making a deduction for provisions supplied to the men employed, which deduction could only be made from the shares of the men, and not from those of the smacks or apparatus, and it was agreed that whoever might be found to be the salvors of the Boyne should divide that salvage on the plan which the court should decide it had been the intention of the parties to adopt in the Cadiz, except that the owner of the Ann Elizabeth waived any claim he might have to any shares the crew of that smack might be found to have in the Boyne.

(a) The question of the validity of the assignment of a share of salvage has recently been raised and decided in the Rosario (reported on the next following page), where it is held that an assignment of shares of salvage, even for valuable consideration, is wholly void under the 122nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, in the case of services rendered by an ordinary trading vessel. The present case, however, would probably differ from that, and would come under the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, sect. 18, as dealing with seamen belonging to ships which, according to their agreements, were to be employed on salvage services.—Ed.

ADM.]

THE ROSARIO.

E. E. Webster and F. W. Raikes, for the plaintiffs, contended that they were entitled to a full share of the Cadiz salvage, and that being all engaged in a joint operation, whether of salvage or for any other purpose, they were all entitled to share in the Boyne, whether actually present or not. The fact of the diving apparatus and divers being engaged at the Boyne, delayed the work on the Cadiz, and so entitled all those engaged in that salvage operation to share. On grounds of public policy it was desirable that they should share, or else in a case where life was in danger, as well as property, there would be a strong temptation for all to try and save the latter even at the expense of the former. In this case all were really engaged, either directly or indirectly. It was the universal and recognised rule of the Admiralty Court that all should share even if not actually engaged.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and W. Phillimore, for the defendants, contended that the crew of the Romp had been engaged on the second method, and were therefore only entitled to half shares in the Cadiz salvage, and that the salvage of the Boyne was done under an engagement made by Edwards, and on behalf of himself and his original co-adventurers, and that therefore it was quite independent of the agreement with the Romp and Ann Elizabeth, and that only those actually employed by him in the operations should share at all, and that those persons were a portion of the crew of the Ann Elizabeth, and only engaged at weekly wages to do anything they were ordered by the original co-adventurers, and therefore not entitled to a share of the salvage at all.

Biron for the crew of Ann Elizabeth and owner of Romp.

E. C. Clarkson for the owner of Ann Elizabeth, who was also owner of one diving apparatus.

Webster in reply.

SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—This is a case which has been sent to this Division by the Master of the Rolls on the ground that it related to a salvage service, and that it must be decided here upon the usual principles of salvage law. The first question is one of fact, and partly also of law, namely, whether the plaintiffs were, as the registrar represents, engaged to perform the service on the principle of what must be called the share, or that in which the half share goes to the men and a certain fixed amount of money to their wives and families. Now this is a question of evidence, and I am of opinion that it is established by the evidence on both sides, and especially by the evidence relating to the case of Ashby and George Humphreys, that these plaintiffs were engaged to serve upon the whole pri they ought to receive remuneration : That is as to the Cadiz. With regard t point, whether in the matter of the plaintiffs were salvors; I have also an conclusion that they are. It is prove that nine or ten of the men who belo Romp and the Ann Elizabeth were e various ways in assisting; and it is without their assistance the work cou been satisfactorily carried out; they bringing the machinery to the vessel, a necessary to refer to the principles so in this court in respect of the rule salvage service; that not only those actually employed, but also those who are entitled to participate. Applying ciples and the principles of common la opinion that the plaintiffs are to be co salvors in the case of the Boyne; an contract for the salvage service rendere to the Cadiz has been made out. T remains the question of costs, as to whi entertained some doubt, but upon th and especially taking into consideration duct of the defendant Edwards, the ag engaged in this matter, I shall not do think, without giving the salvors the They are to receive their costs out of i in court, but the defendant Edwards is t own costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, A. R. Steele, J. Minter, Folkestone.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless and

Nov. 30 and Dec. 5, 1876.

THE ROSARIO.

Salvage — Distribution — Seaman — Assign Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 104), sect. 182—Demurrer.

An assignment by a seaman of his right to reward already acquired, is wholly void operative by the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), sect. 182, although assignment is for valuable consideration, an action for distribution of salvage & setting up such an assignment is bad murrer.

DENMURRER.

This was an action for distribution brought by William Bennett and fifteen others, formerly part of the crew of the Navarino, against Thomas Wilson, Son, the owners of that vessel, in respect of rendered to the steamship Rosario, of Glasgow.

The statement of claim set out the circumstances under which the services were rendered by the plaintiffs, and alleged that the owners of the Rosario and of her cargo, to the defendants, and the defendants paid the sum of 750*l.* for the services so rendered by the Rosario, but the defendants, though to do so, had refused to pay the plaintiffs an equitable portion of the said sum, and the plaintiffs claimed an equitable proportion of the sum.

The statement of defence admitted the facts of the statement of claim, but alleged that the service was rendered without danger to the plaintiffs, and was

Navarino herself by means of her steam l then continued :

Rosario, after the performance of the said service to Scotland, and did not come within the of this court, and the defendants, who reside not and were unable to enforce the claim of and the master and crew of the Navarino to respect of the said service.

few of the Navarino having made frequent to the defendants for the payment of their e salvage in respect of the said services, and mportuning the defendants in respect thereof, e defendants had not received any amount in such salvage, and had not agreed with the he Rosario as to the amount to be received, nts determined to purchase their respective e salvage from such of the crew as wished for te payment, and accordingly, by an indenture 11th June 1875, between the several persons sare thereunto subscribed and seals are affixed art, and the defendants of the other part, the persons parties thereto of the first part, includ- plaintiffs except George Short and Robert nsideration of the respective sums set oppo- respective names in the fourth column of the le, paid by the defendants to the said parties part, each of the said parties of the first part the defendants all and every the share, right, terest of the said parties of the first part in or salvage reward and remuneration then eafter to be due, or paid, or awarded in re- salvage services set forth in the statement of power for the defendants to sue for, receive, epts for the salvage, and to use the names parties of the first part. The defendants to refer to the said indenture.

ms so paid to the said plaintiffs respectively, George Short and Robert Burns, were as £ s.		£ s.

sett .....	1 0	Henry Brewer .....	1 0
Johnson .....	1 0	Daniel Levenson .....	1 0
.....	1 0	Henry Weatherston .....	1 0
.....	0 10	James Dews .....	1 0
.....	1 0	Charles Hope .....	1 0
.....	1 0	Francis Loosemore .....	1 0
man .....	1 0	John Evison .....	1 0 month of March 1876, the Rosario being e within the jurisdiction of this court, her d to settle with the defendants for the said paid the defendants in settlement thereof 50l. by a bill at three months' date.

lering the said service, the Navarino was er voyage, and consumed an extra quantity d her hawsers were injured, and a loss of v as thereby incurred by the defendants. The e Navarino having taken upon himself the y of rendering the service, the defendants um the sum of 125l. as his share of the fendants legally tendered to each of the eorge Short and Robert Burns, the sum of 4l., his share of the salvage, before this action , but each of them respectively refused to sums. The defendants have brought such urt ready to be paid to the said plaintiffs. endants submit that the sum of 4l. so ten- h of the said lastly named plaintiffs was and that the other plaintiffs are bound by ntire, and that the sums paid to them re- eunder were reasonable and fair.

stiffs demurred to the fourth and fifth of the statement of defence, on the t such an agreement as therein set out void and inoperative, under the provi- Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 ), sect. 182, which provides that "no ll by any agreement forfeit his lien upon r be deprived of any remedy for the his wages to which he would otherwise ntitled; and every stipulation in any inconsistent with any provision of this very stipulation by which any seaman consents to abandon his right to wages in the case of the loss of the ship, or to abandon any right which he may have or obtain in the nature of salvage, shall be wholly inoperative."

Nov. 30, 1876.—James P. Aspinall, for the plain- tiffs, in support of the demurrer.—The two para- graphs demurred to amount to a statement that the plaintiffs have assigned their right to the salvage reward recovered in consideration of a sum of money paid to them. Such an agreement is had under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 182. That section makes void any agreement by which a seaman abandons any right "he may have or obtain" in the nature of salvage, that is to say, avoids such agreements whether they relate to salvage already earned or to be earned. That this is the true construction of the section is shown by the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862, s. 18, which provides that "the 182nd section of the principal Act does not apply to the case of any stipulation made by the seamen belonging to any ship, which according to the terms of the agreement is to be employed on salvage service, with respect to the remuneration to be paid to them for salvage services to be rendered by such ship to any other ship or ships." That section applies to assign- ments or stipulations made prior to the rendering of the service and leaves untouched the provision of the 182nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, as to stipulations or assignments made after the rendering of the service. [Sir R. PHILLI- MORE.—This question was considered to some extent in The Pride of Canada, which is best reported in the first volume of the Maritime Law Cases, p. 406 (see also 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 546; B. & L. 208), and that case seems in favour of your contention.] If such an agreement is null and void, as there stated, it cannot be pleaded in bar to the plaintiffs' action, and the demurrer is good.

E. O. Clarkson, for the defendants, contra.—The statute provides only that an abandonment of salvage shall be inoperative. Here there is no abandonment, but only an assignment of a right for valuable consideration. This court has always had power to decide whether an agreement entered into under similar circumstances was equitable or not, and this is the real question in this case, and not whether the deed is wholly inoperative. The defendants were bound to plead the facts alleged in the 4th and 5th paragraphs, in order to show how they came to pay the money to the seamen, and these facts should remain on the record as showing those facts. Rejecting the demurrer will not preclude the court from going into the question of the propriety of the agreement hereafter. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Is not there not a similar provision in the Naval Agency and Prize Distribution Act 1864?] Yes, sect. 15, but that provision expressly mentions assignments.

Aspinall in reply.—The 4th and 5th paragraphs of the defence taken together must mean that the sums there mentioned were paid in satisfaction and discharge of the plaintiffs' claim. In answer to the defendant's contention that the section does not refer to assignments for valuable consideration, it is enough to say that the section covers all agreements and stipulations, and this would include an assignment; and it cannot be supposed that the Legislature would deal in a statute with agreements other than binding legal agreements, that is to say, agreements made for valuable consideration. Legislation for any other class of agreements would be useless.

ADM.]

THE ROSARIO.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 5.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This was a case of distribution of salvage, which a demurrer has been raised.

The plaintiffs are the crew, and the defendants are the owners of the salving vessel. In the fourth article of the defence it is stated as follows: "The crew of the Navarino having made frequent applications to the defendants for the payment of their share of the salvage in respect of the said services, and constantly importuning the defendants in respect thereof, although the defendants had not received any amount in respect of such salvage, and had not agreed with the owners of the Rosario as to the amount to be received, the defendants determined to purchase their respective shares of the salvage from such of the crew as wished for immediate payment; and accordingly, by an indenture dated the 11th June 1875, between the several persons whose names are hereunto subscribed, &c., of the one part, and the defendants of the other part, including all the plaintiffs, except George Short and Robert Burns, in consideration of the respective sums set opposite to their respective names, &c. Then follow these words: "Each of the said parties of the first part assigned to the defendants all and every the share, right, title, and interest of the said parties of the first part in the salvage or salvage reward and remuneration then due, or hereafter to be due or paid or awarded, in respect of the said salvage services set forth in the statement of claim." Then the next article sets out the names of the crew, and the sums opposite to their names, which they have received by way of purchase for the assignment of their right to salvage. These sums vary from 1*l.* to 10*s.*

Now, the fourth and fifth paragraphs of the defence were demurred to on the ground that the agreement mentioned in the fourth paragraph is wholly void and inoperative under the 182nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854; and that the plaintiffs have not abandoned any right to recover from the defendants their due, equitable, and reasonable proportion of salvage reward.

This demurrer has been argued before the court, and well argued on both sides.

The question for the court now to decide is whether, under the statute referred to, this ancient right to shares in salvage is or is not valid, despite any such agreement as above set out.

The words of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, sect. 182, are: "Every stipulation by which any seaman consents to abandon his right to wages in the case of the loss of the ship, or to abandon any right which he may have or obtain in the nature of salvage, shall be wholly inoperative."

It is contended by the defendants that this section is not applicable to the present case, or to this deed of assignment, because the agreement set out in the 4th paragraph of the statement of defence is not a stipulation by which the parties consented to abandon any rights they might have in the nature of salvage, but is merely an assignment for a valuable consideration. But in construing the Act, I must look not only to the words, but the general purpose of the Act, which is well stated in The Pride of Canada, by Dr. Lushington

(1 Maritime Law Cases, O. S. 406), where "The ancient law of the court in question kind was undoubted, viz., that whenever had been allotted by way of salvage, it was competent to any party dissatisfied with the action by owners or masters to apply to the court for an apportionment of that sum of money so jealous was the law that no man should be deprived of his fair share of this reward, till before the passing of the Act of Parliament which I must presently advert (The Merchant Shipping Act 1854), it was a general doctrine of this court that no seaman could enter into a stipulation of an inequitable nature; and giving salvage would so have been deemed, according to all the authorities and principles laid down by Lord Stowell, and every other judge upon the subject, until recently the Legislature altered the law, and considered it of great importance, in a case of salvage, to give a just reward for the services performed, and a reward for risk of life, provided there was no stipulation for so doing. The 182nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act is as follows: [I read the section.] Here is the principle enunciated, that if any agreement be made, it is null and void, and, I apprehend, upon the principles to which I have adverted." He then proceeds to advert to the subsequent statute, the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, sect. 18. It is not necessary that I should consider the force of that section, for it is inapplicable to the present case, being applicable only to sailors employed on board ships, and according to the terms of the agreement, they were employed for salvage service. It is not necessary ever altogether without bearing upon the case, to refer to Prize Act to show how jealous the law is to preserve seaman's rights. I refer to the 24 & 28 Vict. c. 24, s. 15, by which it is enacted that "any assignment sale or contract of or relating to any such money as aforesaid (shares of prize money), payable in respect of the services of a petty officer or seaman, non-commissioned officer, Marines, or marine, other than such as may be made or entered into under the authority of the Admiralty in conformity with any order in council, shall be void."

The Legislature in the section of the Merchant Shipping Act, which is applicable to the present case, sect. 182, to which I have already adverted, could not have intended to provide merely for the case of the abandonment of a ship to salvage reward without any valuable consideration whatever; but it must have intended looking to the general purpose of the Act, to protect seamen in the assignment of their right, whether made before or after they acquire a right to reward. The section of the statute is in aid of the general law—in support of it, and as a substitute for it.

I think the demurrer must be sustained; the plaintiffs are entitled to costs. I grant that the defendants to amend their defence.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, H. C. Cowl, & A. E. Cowl, Great Yarmouth; solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

Monday, Dec. 18, 1876.

THE INNISFAIL; THE SECRET.

by collision—Inevitable accident—Costs. Practice of the Admiralty Court in case of accidents that each party should pay costs. But if, from the circumstances of the case, it must have been obvious that the collision was an inevitable accident, the court has discretion as to dismissing the suit.

The causes of damage arising from the collision, it was alleged, given the brig's foul berth, whilst the latter vessel was anchored in the Downs on the 12th March the Innisfail subsequently dragged her into of them fouling the Secret's cable, and the latter vessel also to drag her anchors, came into close proximity with the three-masted Flirt, with which vessel the Secret collided, and after the Innisfail had got clear a change taking place in the direction of which was described as a hurricane, collision, doing considerable damage. The Innisfail herself never touched the Secret.

The Secret against the Innisfail instituted in the City of London Court, heard on the 27th April 1876, when (Mr. Commissioner Kerr) found that dragging of the anchor of the Innisfail cable of the Secret was the result of accident, and dismissed the suit with costs. On this decision the Secret appealed, appeal was heard on the 18th Dec. 1876. There is no record of the judgment of the court, nor copy of the judge's or shorthand notes of the evidence, excepting that of two witnesses who had been examined before the Registrar in the City of London Court previously to the witnesses were again examined orally before the court.

Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson for the appellant, contended that the Innisfail anchored so foully clear and good berth in a proper and usual way, and that she was driven into the Secret by the violence of the gale, and that it was not in her power to avoid the collision with the anchor.

Hall and W. Phillimore, for the respondent, contended that the Innisfail anchored so foully clear and good berth in a proper and usual way, and that she was driven into the Secret by the violence of the gale, and that it was not in her power to avoid the collision with the anchor.

MR. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of collision between two vessels at anchor, which comes before the court on appeal from the City of London Court, matter was inquired into in the presence of the assessors, and the court, with their aid, came to the conclusion that the accident was inevitable. Now, the case comes before this court in a very imperfect state. It was, at the City of London Court, a case of collision, and the evidence given was very imperfect. There is only one single question in issue, and that is whether the Innisfail gave the Secret a foul berth when she came to anchor. This depends to a great extent upon the credibility of the evidence given on her behalf. I have consulted the Elder Brethren, and they see no reason to disbelieve the statement of the witness that he believed she did not give a foul berth.

It can hardly be suggested that after the collision, she began to drive she could have done anything but what she did do with the violent gale blowing at the time. Under all the circumstances of the case, I hold that it was an inevitable accident, and I must dismiss the appeal. There remains in this case to say a few words with respect to the costs. There is no doubt at all that the costs of the appeal must be given to the respondent. The general rule in the Court of Admiralty has been where the decision is founded on the ground of inevitable accident, to leave both parties to pay their own costs. But unquestionably the court retains a discretionary power on the subject, and the principle which guides it is this—whether the inevitable accident was or was not of that character that it must be apparent, or ought to be apparent to those who brought the action against the defendant. Now in this case the charge against the respondent was the one originally taken up, and it failed. The court has no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the charge could not be maintained upon the evidence, and that the contrary fact must have been apparent to those who brought the action. I think it falls under the principle to which I have adverted, that the parties must have known that they would have no chance of succeeding. I therefore shall not disturb the finding of the court below either upon the question of costs, or upon the principal question in the case. I wish it to be clearly understood that the usual rule in the Court of Admiralty is, when it comes to the conclusion that the accident is inevitable, to leave both parties to pay their own costs.

she began to drive she could have done anything but what she did do with the violent gale blowing at the time. Under all the circumstances of the case, I hold that it was an inevitable accident, and I must dismiss the appeal. There remains in this case to say a few words with respect to the costs. There is no doubt at all that the costs of the appeal must be given to the respondent. The general rule in the Court of Admiralty has been where the decision is founded on the ground of inevitable accident, to leave both parties to pay their own costs. But unquestionably the court retains a discretionary power on the subject, and the principle which guides it is this—whether the inevitable accident was or was not of that character that it must be apparent, or ought to be apparent to those who brought the action against the defendant. Now in this case the charge against the respondent was the one originally taken up, and it failed. The court has no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the charge could not be maintained upon the evidence, and that the contrary fact must have been apparent to those who brought the action. I think it falls under the principle to which I have adverted, that the parties must have known that they would have no chance of succeeding. I therefore shall not disturb the finding of the court below either upon the question of costs, or upon the principal question in the case. I wish it to be clearly understood that the usual rule in the Court of Admiralty is, when it comes to the conclusion that the accident is inevitable, to leave both parties to pay their own costs.

Solicitor for appellants, Thomas Cooper.

Solicitors for respondents, Lowless and Co.

THE suit, originally instituted in the Admiralty Division, by the Flirt against the Secret, was then heard.

W. Phillimore and Baikes, for plaintiffs, owners of the Flirt.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for defendants, owners of the Secret.

The evidence in the previous case was admitted as evidence in this one, and fresh witnesses were examined on behalf of the Flirt.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—The defence for the collision in this case is that it was inevitable, and that the master of the colliding vessel was guilty of no negligence in his navigation. It is quite true that the Secret had been giving a foul berth for two hours or more to the Flirt, but it must be remembered, and it has been admitted that she was driven into the Flirt by a cause which she could not resist. Some questions still remain. The first relates to the alleged duty of the Secret to take a tug, it appearing that there were tugs there. The question is, would it have been prudent for her to take a tug? This is one in answering which the court is mainly guided by the advice of the Trinity Masters. They think, and I see no reason to disagree with them, that the Secret having two anchors down, and being under the control and management of them, her master was justified in holding her with both anchors, and that he would have incurred considerable danger in slipping one and endeavouring to weigh the other. When the weather or tide altered he might have been able to shift his berth further off. Had there been no change in the wind the Trinity Masters do not think that there would have been any collision. With respect to the point made as to the bracing of the yards, the Trinity Masters are of opinion that the master braced them in a proper manner, and with regard to the last point, namely, the alleged duty of the Secret to starboard her helm, the Trinity Masters are of opinion that, as there was at that time no tide, an alteration of the helm would have had no effect. I must, therefore, pronounce that the collision was the result of inevitable accident, and both parties must pay their own costs.

ADM.]

THE MAUDE.

[A]

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

Solicitor for defendants, Thomas Cooper.

May 27 and June 29, 1876.

THE MAUDE.

Salvage—Uncompleted service—Another ship engaged—Right to reward.

Where a ship is engaged to render assistance to another ship in distress, without any fixed sum being agreed upon, and does remain by ready to give assistance, she cannot be deprived of her right to reward by reason of another vessel offering and being engaged to tow for a less sum than the former ship is willing to accept, but will be entitled to recover a fair sum which will remunerate her for the services rendered, and compensate her for the loss she has sustained.

This was a cause of salvage instituted on behalf of the owner of the Walter Stanhope, a steamship of 458 tons register, against the Maude, a screw steamship of 496 tons register, belonging to the port of Hull.

The Maude was on a voyage from Huelva, in Spain, to Hull, laden with a cargo of iron ore. On the 16th March 1876, when about five miles south of the Dudgeon Light, she lost the blades of her propeller, and as the wind was then blowing hard from the N.W., she could not proceed to Hull under canvas. The master of the Maude, at about 5 p.m. on the same day, made a signal for assistance. Shortly afterwards the Walter Stanhope came up and offered to take the Maude in tow. According to the story told by the defendants, the master of the Maude asked the master of the Walter Stanhope to tow the Maude to Hull, and the master of the Walter Stanhope, after offering to tow to Yarmouth, ultimately agreed to tow the Maude to Hull. According to the story told by the plaintiffs, the master of the Walter Stanhope never was asked to tow the Maude to Hull, but only to a place of safety, and intended from the first to take the Maude to Yarmouth. The Walter Stanhope was made fast to the Maude by two ropes, but soon after she got fast the tow ropes parted; this happened, according to the plaintiff's story, by reason of the heavy sea running; according to the defendant's story, by reason of the Walter Stanhope, after towing a short time towards Hull, suddenly turning round for the purpose of taking the Maude towards Yarmouth without the knowledge or consent of the master of the Maude. The Walter Stanhope then asked for the Maude's chain, but the master of the Maude, considering the weather too bad for towing, determined to come to an anchor, and did so. The plaintiff alleged that the Walter Stanhope was asked to stand by the Maude during the ensuing night; this was denied by the defendants. The Walter Stanhope did however remain by the Maude about 5 p.m. on the following day, offering sometimes to take the Maude in tow, but the offers were always declined by the Maude. On the evening of the 17th March, the Lord Cardigan, another steamship came up and offered to tow the Maude to Hull for 250*l*. The master of the Walter Stanhope then hailed the Walter Stanhope, and mentioned the offer, asked her master if she would do service for the same sum. The master of the Walter Stanhope, however, declined, as he considered himself engaged to tow the Maude to a place of safety without any specified reward. The master of the Maude then said he should tow the Lord Cardigan when the weather moderated. The Maude remained at anchor, and at 3 p.m. on that day the Walter Stanhope left the Maude and proceeded on her voyage. At 4 p.m. on the same day, the Lord Cardigan towed the Maude in tow and set off towards Hull after towing for some hours the tow ropes parted and the two vessels lost sight of each other, the Maude was obliged to run for Yarmouth Roads, which she reached in safety under her sail, in the early morning of the 18th March, there anchored. She was afterwards taken to Hull by two steamtugs.

The value of the Maude, her cargo, and freight was about 10,500*l*.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiffs contended that the Walter Stanhope had performed a valuable service, and was entitled to a substantial reward.

Butt, Q.C. and James P. Aspinall, for the defendants contended that the services having been inoperative there could be no reward. The agreement was to tow the Maude to Hull, and this had not been performed. It was the fault of the Walter Stanhope in not performing her agreement which compelled the Maude to employ the Lord Cardigan. There can be no salvage reward without success.

Milward, Q.C., in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of salvage in which it is alleged on the part of the plaintiffs, that is, the owners of the Walter Stanhope, that their vessel would have completed the service if the vessel to whom she rendered assistance kept faith with her. On the other side it is contended by the vessel which was salvaged, the Maude, that no salvage service was rendered, inasmuch as none was completed, because the alleged salvor would not perform the agreement which had been entered into.

There is a conflict of evidence as to when the vessel was actually passed when the plaintiff's vessel came up. No doubt the weather was extremely bad on the 16th and 17th March of this year. The vessel salvaged, the Maude, had lost her propeller and two of her three boats, and had been stove in, and she had a signal of distress flying. There is no question that she was in need of service of salvors. The Walter Stanhope came to her when in this condition, and there is no question as to what really was said by the captain of the Walter Stanhope to the captain of the Maude. On the whole, I am inclined to think that the plaintiff is pretty much right: that the Maude was to be towed to Hull, where she was captain of the Walter Stanhope said it was impossible to go there on account of the state of the wind and the weather, and he would go to Yarmouth. In a further conversation he said he would try what he could do to go to Hull, and he undertook to try to take her to Hull. He made the attempt, and failed; the rope broke and the consequence was that the vessel had to anchor, as the captain of the Mauds thought it dangerous to proceed in the then state of the wind and weather, and he made up his mind to anchor for that night. I believe the evidence of the captain of the Walter Stanhope. He was asked to stay by her that night, which he did. I think it extremely probable in the state of the ship and the weather, that he should do so, and I believe the evidence he gave. Before the next morning, another steamer came up, which is called the Lord Cardigan. A negotiation takes place between the captains of the Mauds and the Lord Cardigan, the result of which is that he undertakes to tow the Mauds to Hull or 250l.

ADM.]

THE GLANNIBANTA.

[ADM.]

The result of all the evidence on this part of the case is this, that the captain of the Mauds tells the captain of the Walter Stanhope that he has heard this offer made, and shall close with it unless he is willing to do what he requires. The reply of the captain of the Walter Stanhope is, that it could not be done in that wind and weather, and also, as his services had been engaged without any stipulation, he was ready to perform his engagement. The captain of the Mauds refuses the services of the Walter Stanhope and accepts the proffered services of the Lord Cardigan, and the result is such as, in my opinion, to justify the conduct and advice of the Walter Stanhope, because what happened then was that he took the vessel in tow and towed her for eight miles in nine hours. The rope broke, and the Mauds found herself compelled to go to Yarmouth, which she did.

It is true that it has been held in this court as a general proposition that a service however well intended, but not rendered, should not be rewarded. But that is a proposition which, in the circumstances of the case, induces the court to consider the reason why the service is not rendered.

The fair result of the evidence is that the Walter Stanhope was ready to do her best to the vessel in distress, and would have done so if the other engagement had not been made. The Walter Stanhope is not entitled to be rewarded on the scale which would have been her due had she towed the Mauds to Yarmouth or Hull. She was there the whole night, and she ought not to have been discarded, and is entitled to be rewarded for the services rendered and to some compensation for the loss she has sustained by not being able to complete the service agreed upon.

Looking to all the circumstances of the case, I shall give to the Walter Stanhope 100l. As there was a point of law involved in the case beyond the facts, I think it was a fit case to bring into this court.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Thomas Cooper.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

Wednesday, Dec. 13, 1876.

THE GLANNIBANTA.

Salvage—Distribution—County Court jurisdiction—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868—31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, sect. 3, sub-s. 1.

Where a sum of money under 300l. has been paid for salvage services rendered, a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction has jurisdiction in an action for distribution in case of dispute between the salvors, to apportion such sum among the salvors, although such sum has been recovered by agreement with the owners of the salvaged property, and without action brought in the County Court.

A County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, has jurisdiction under sect. 3, in claims for salvage wherein the property salvaged does not exceed 1000l., or in the alternative where the amount claimed does not exceed 300l.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the County Court of Durham, holden at Sunderland, in an action brought in that court by William Elemore, of Sunderland, pilot, and Thomas Donkin, waterman, against Robert Trim and others, the owners of the steaming Scottish Maid, for distribution of salvage earned by services rendered by the plaintiffs as part of the crew of the Scottish Maid to the steamship Glannibanta. From a petition annexed to the summons it appeared that on the 19th Dec. 1875, the Glannibanta, a screw steamship of 534 tons register, struck the bar of Sunderland harbour, and went behind the north pier, and, owing to the bad weather then prevailing, got into great danger; that the plaintiffs went on board the Scottish Maid and offered their services to the defendants to go to the assistance of the Glannibanta, and that their services were accepted; that Donkin, at the request of the owner, or those acting for him, took command of the Scottish Maid, and, with four others, including Elemore, went to the assistance of the Glannibanta; that, after great exertions, the Glannibanta was rescued from her perilous position, and brought into safety; that the defendants, the owners of the Scottish Maid, had received 250l. from the Glannibanta for the said services, and had paid the plaintiffs out of such sum the sum of 7l. 13s. 4d. each; that the plaintiffs, considering the latter sum wholly insufficient, had applied to the defendants for a more equitable division of the 250l., but the defendants had refused to pay any greater sum. The petition prayed the judge to order an equitable proportion of such sum of 250l. to be paid to the plaintiffs, and to condemn the defendants in costs.

When the case came on for hearing in the County Court, the defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, in giving jurisdiction to the County Courts in certain matters, gave no jurisdiction over claims for distribution of salvage, and further objected that even if there was jurisdiction, the plaintiffs could not proceed until they had brought into court the money they had already received, and had compelled the defendants by monition to bring in the rest of the amount named, in accordance with the alleged former practice of the High Court of Admiralty. The County Court judge dismissed the action with costs, on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

July 5, 1876.—W. G. F. Phillimore, for the plaintiffs, obtained a rule in the Admiralty Division, under 38 & 39 Vict., c. 50, s. 6, calling upon the defendants to show cause before the proper court why the above ruling of the County Court judge should not be set aside, and the action proceeded with. This rule, by some accident, was entered in the Registry and served upon the defendant as an order that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to proceed with their appeal.

Dec. 13, 1876.—On this date the defendants appeared to show cause. They at first objected to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Division to hear the appeal on various grounds, viz., that no copy of the County Court judge's notes had been obtained (there were none taken); that the rule had been obtained when a divisional court was sitting, and on other grounds. But the defendants, on the court pointing out that it could and would, if necessary, extend the plaintiffs' time for appealing, by way of special case, consented to show cause against the rule, as if it properly raised the question whether the County Court had jurisdiction over claims for distribution of salvage. It was then admitted by the plaintiffs and defendants that the value of the Glannibanta when salvaged exceeded 1000*l*.

Bruce for the defendants showed cause accordingly.—The words of the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71) s. 3, governing the case, are, "Any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction, &c., to try and determine . . . the following causes . . . as to any claim for salvage—any cause in which the value of the property saved does not exceed 1000*l*., or in which the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l*. . . ." Those words can relate only to actions to recover salvage from the owners of the property valued, and not to actions for distribution of salvage. The value of the property salvaged is over 1000*l*., and in an original suit for salvage the County Court would have had no jurisdiction. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Do you contend that the section quoted requires that the value shall be under 1000*l*., as well as the claim being under 300*l*., or has the County Court jurisdiction in either event? The section appears to me to give alternate jurisdiction.] There has been no decision on that point, but I submit that if the value exceeds 1000*l*., or the amount claimed, 300*l*., in neither case is there jurisdiction. But I say that, in any case, the property here being over 1000*l*., it is only under the second part of the section that any jurisdiction could be established, and that it cannot be under that part, because the words "amount claimed" there used must refer to an amount claimed in a salvage cause proper, and do not refer to an action for distribution. By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 460, jurisdiction is given to the justices over "disputes with respect to salvage," "if the sum claimed does not exceed 200*l*.," but these words, although wide enough to do so, do not give any jurisdiction as to apportionment of salvage, for, by sects. 466, 467, it is expressly provided that where the amount awarded by justices does not exceed 200*l*., and any dispute arises as to its apportionment, the receiver of wreck shall have power to apportion such sum. This Act was in force when the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act was passed, and clearly contemplates the awarding of salvage the apportionment thereof being wholly done by The Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862, sect. 49, extended the jurisdiction of justices to cases where the value did not exceed 1000*l*., again made no alteration as to apportionment [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Have you looked at sect. 49 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854?] That section no doubt gives power to "any court having Admiralty jurisdiction," to apportion salvage earned and exceeding 200*l*.; but I submit that section does not apply to courts which were not existent when it was passed, and which, by the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, section, would acquire unlimited jurisdiction as to apportionment. There must be some words to give the jurisdiction: (The John Bull, ante, vol. 2, p. 234; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1011.) If the County Court has such jurisdiction, a member of the crew might proceed for distribution, although the whole amount recovered far exceeded 300*l*.

W. G. F. Phillimore in support of the rule.—The 3rd section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 was clearly intended to give jurisdiction to the County Courts in two distinct cases—first, where the value of the property saved did not exceed 1000*l*.; secondly, where the amount of the claim did exceed 300*l*. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I am entirely with you on that point, as you need not argue it further.] That section gives jurisdiction over salvage, damage by collision, damage to cargo, and other things in general words only, and these words include anything that is within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court up to certain limits of value. Moreover, The Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 493, expressly provides that where the amount awarded exceeds 200*l*., "Any court having Admiralty jurisdiction may cause the same to be apportioned;" and by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, sects. 2 and 3, the words "any court having Admiralty jurisdiction" are used as to jurisdiction are, "Any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction." These provisions clearly bring such County Courts within the scope of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. [He was stopped by the court.]

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The question before the court in this case is, by consent of counsel, this: Whether a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction has that jurisdiction in the case of distribution of salvage where there has been no original suit for salvage. I am of opinion that it has jurisdiction.

I am of opinion, first of all, on the meaning, as it appears to me, of the words "any court having Admiralty jurisdiction" used in the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 3. A County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction, and all powers of authority relating thereto, to try and determine any subject and according to the provisions of the Act, the following causes: As to any claim for salvage—Any cause in which the value of the property saved does not exceed 1000*l*. or in which the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l*.

Now, first of all, "as to any claim for salvage"—it is admitted that these words are only used in a broad, and taken in their common sense, would include suits for distribution, of every kind of claim for salvage. It is admitted that it could not indeed have been denied that the County Court must have jurisdiction in the case of distribution of salvage where the

ADM.]

THE JOHN BOYNE—THE ST. OLAF.

[ADM.]

has been for salvage reward, and the subsequent proceedings have introduced the question of distribution. It was not intended by the Legislature to exclude suits for distribution in those instances, nor do I consider it was so where there had been no previous suit for salvage services. That appears to me to be the fair construction of the words "as to any claim for salvage."

And, without relying upon it as necessary for the support of my opinion, I also think 498th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, confirms my judgment in this matter. That section is "whenever the aggregate amount of salvage payable in respect of salvage services rendered in the United Kingdom has been finally ascertained, and exceeds 200*l.*, and whenever the aggregate amount of salvage payable in respect of salvage services rendered elsewhere has been finally ascertained, whatever such amount may be, then if any delay or dispute arises as to the apportionment thereof, any court having admiralty jurisdiction may cause the same to be apportioned amongst the persons entitled thereto in such manner as it thinks just." These are exactly the words used by the Legislature in the subsequent statute, 31 & 32 Vict., c. 71. The words are, "Any court having admiralty jurisdiction."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the court has jurisdiction in an original suit for distribution of salvage.

Upon the second point, it being admitted that the value of the property exceeds 1000*l.*, but that the claim is one for 250*l.* or under 300*l.*, I am of opinion that it comes within the category mentioned in the first paragraph of the 3rd section. I read those in the alternative that either when the property saved does not exceed 1000*l.*, or when the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l.*, there is jurisdiction. It was fairly admitted that there was some corroboration of that opinion in the language of the subsequent Merchant Shipping Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 49), which has these words. Such provision shall extend to all cases in which the value of the property saved does not exceed 1000*l.* as well as the case provided for by the previous Act; but independently of any corroboration it may receive from the section of this Act just cited, I am of opinion that this must be read in the alternative; that the word "or" must be read as indicating the alternative, and it would not be a correct interpretation of the statute to substitute the word "and" for the word "or" in these cases.

Upon both grounds, therefore, I am of opinion that the County Court has jurisdiction in this suit for distribution of salvage, and I must pronounce accordingly. I reverse the sentence of the court below, and make no order as to costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Southgate.

Solicitor for the defendants, G. J. Brownlow.

Tuesday, Jan. 16, 1877.

THE JOHN BOYNE.

Collision between vessels—Damage to cargo—Preliminary acts—Practice—Rule of Supreme Court. Order XIX, rule 30.

In an action for damage to cargo sustained in a collision between two ships where the action is brought against the ship carrying the cargo, the parties are not bound to file preliminary acts under the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XIX, rule 30.

THIS was an action brought by the owners of cargo of a ship called the John Boyne against that vessel for the damage sustained through a collision between the John Boyne and another ship, alleged to have occurred through the negligence of the John Boyne.

The plaintiffs before delivering pleadings took out a summons calling upon the defendants to show cause why an order should not be made with reference to the filing of preliminary acts in the action.

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, citing the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XIX, rule 30, contended that in all actions for damage by collision between vessels preliminary acts must be filed. This was a case of collision.

W. G. F. Phillimore, for the defendants.—What preliminary act are plaintiffs to file? Not one in relation to the defendant's ship. They cannot make statements as to the other ship, because they can have no knowledge of the circumstances; there is consequently no mutuality.

Bruce, as amicus curiæ.—In a similar case in the Queen's Bench Division in an action against a pilot, a Master at Chambers ruled that Order XIX, rule 30, did not apply.

Sir B. PHILLIMORE.—I think the objection taken by Mr. Phillimore—that even if the defendant did deliver a preliminary act, the plaintiff, from the nature of the action, could not do so, so that it being impossible to apply Order XIX, rule 30, to both parties in the action, there could be no mutuality—is an objection which cannot be got over. I think there should be no preliminary acts delivered in this action.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Pritchard and Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, Thomas Cooper.

Tuesday, Jan. 16, 1877.

THE ST. OLAF.

Practice—Costs—Discontinuance—Rules of Supreme Court, Order XXIII.

Where a plaintiff in an action, after succeeding in an interlocutory application, the costs of which are made costs in the cause, gives notice of discontinuance of the action, under Order XXIII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the defendant is entitled to his costs, including the costs of such application.

THIS was an action of possession instituted on behalf of James Brammer and others, part owners of the schooner St. Olaf, against James Cormach, part owner and late master. The writ claimed possession of the schooner and also possession of her certificate registry, as against the defendant. The defendant had been dismissed from the schooner and left her, taking away the certificate, keys, and papers. The plaintiffs thereupon took possession of the schooner, and in May 12th 1876, after the commencement of this action, applied to the court by motion for the delivering up of the certificate, &c.; and the defendant was ordered to deliver them up, costs of the motion to be costs in the cause (see ante, p. 268). On the de-

ADM.]

WILLIAMS AND OTHERS v. THE NORTH CHINA INSURANCE COMPANY.

[Ct. of A.]

defendant complying with the order thus made, the plaintiffs, on 9th June 1876, gave the defendant notice in writing that they discontinued the action. The defendant then proceeded to sign judgment for the costs of the action, under Order XXIII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, but the registrar refused to allow him to do so without an order of the court, upon the ground that the plaintiffs had partly succeeded in their claim, as they had recovered the certificate.

E. C. Clarkson, on behalf of the defendants, now moved the court to condemn the plaintiffs in all costs of the action. By Order XXIII. rule 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, a defendant is absolutely entitled to his costs on a plaintiff discontinuing his action. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—But here the discontinuance took place after the plaintiffs had succeeded in part of their action.] The plaintiffs' notice is that they wholly discontinue; the course by which he obtained possession of the certificate of registry, was merely incidental, a motion made in the action under the Merchant Shipping Act. Besides, the plaintiffs have taken away any discretion the court have, by giving the notice to discontinue, and they have also by so doing prevented the defendant from setting up a counter claim for damages for wrongful dismissal; if such counter-claim had been tried there would no doubt have been a discretion as to costs, but this is gone by the plaintiffs' own acts.

W. G. F. Phillimore for the plaintiffs.—By Order LV. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the court has an absolute discretion over the costs; and by sect. 49 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, there can be no appeal as to costs. At any rate, the defendants are not entitled to the costs of the motion in which we were successful.

E. C. Clarkson in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I think Mr. Clarkson is entitled to succeed. There is no doubt, that according to the practice prevailing in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty, before the Judicature Acts came into operation the defendant would have been entitled to all the costs of the action, other than those relating to the motion to obtain possession of the certificate of registry of the vessel. The court, however, must now be guided in the first place by the provisions as to costs contained in the rules of the Supreme Court, so far as they are applicable to the case. The only two rules of court to which I have been referred, are Order XXIII. rule 1, and Order LV. rule 1, of these two rules the former, Order XXIII. rule 1, is a distinct order in a particular case, whilst the subsequent rule is a provision as to costs generally. I am therefore of opinion that Order XXIII. rule 1, is not over-riden by the general provision as to costs contained in Order LV. rule 1. The defendant is under the rules entitled to all the costs of the action.

Solicitor for plaintiff, Harper.

Solicitors for defendants, Lowless and Co.

Supreme Court of Judicature COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by W. APPELTON, JAMES P. ARNFIELD, and F. BAKER, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

May 30, 31, and June 1, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., JESSEL, M.R., MAULDER, L.J., and POLLOCK, B.)

WILLIAMS AND OTHERS v. THE NORTH CHINA INSURANCE COMPANY.

Marine insurance—Insurance on freight—Freight advances—Construction of charter-party—Valued policy—What is valued—Opening to show interest in—Ratification after knowledge of loss—Double insurance.

A charter-party contained the following clause: "Sufficient cash, not exceeding 60% to be advanced against freight, if required, at per loading, subject to insurance and 2½ per commission." The charterers submitted to the captain, as agent for the owners, and he accepted disbursement account made up of (1) the cash actually advanced; (2) commission due to the charterers under the charter-party; (3) premium on a policy of insurance on freight and owners' behalf.

Held, that such sums, though not all represent actual advances, were nevertheless "freight advances" within the meaning of the charter-party and were, therefore, rightly insured by the charterers on their own account.

A policy of insurance on freight, valued at a certain sum, was made by charterers on behalf of themselves and those interested, in the usual manner, came to the knowledge of the shipowners, but till after they had heard of the loss, they then claimed the benefit under it.

Held that, there being satisfactory evidence of a policy having been made on the owners' account, it was open to them to ratify it, even though they had knowledge of the loss.

Routh v. Thompson (13 East, 274) and Hughes v. Oliverson (2 M. & S. 485) followed.

Under a valued policy it may be shown that it was intended to be valued, with a view to disputing interest in the whole subject of freight, though the amount of the valuation was limited only on the ground of fraud.

There was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Pleas Division.

The material facts of the case were as follows:

The plaintiffs were the owners of a ship called the Queen of the Colonies. They chartered her on a voyage from Batavia to the United Kingdom to a firm who then assigned the charter to Lorrain and Co., of Batavia. The firm of Lorrain and Co. have a house at Glasgow, under the name of Lorrain and Gillespie, and another in London under the name of Gillespie.

The charter-party contained this clause: "Sufficient cash, not exceeding 60% to be advanced against freight if required, at per loading, subject to insurance and 2½ per commission." Plaintiffs effected a freight, valued at 5500*l.*, in several London insurance houses.

Ct. OF APP.] WILLIAMS AND OTHERS v. THE NORTH CHINA INSURANCE COMPANY. [Ct. OF APP.]

The ship was loaded at Paseroean, in Batavia, by Abraas and Co., the agents there of Lorrain and Co.; and subsequently the following disbursement account was submitted by them to the captain of the Queen of the Colonies.

Note of disbursements of the British Queen of the Colonies. Captain R. Jones.

	£	s.	d.
To cash per Receipt .....	165	11	4
2½ per cent. commission on £5796 3 s. 2 d. ..	144	18	0
3 per cent. Insurance on £5941 1 s. 2 d. ..	178	4	7

Total.....£188 13 11

which was signed as "correct" by the Captain.

Abraas and Co. notified what they had done, and enclosed the above accepted account to their principals, Lorrain and Co., who then effected two policies of insurance (hereinafter called the China Policies) with the defendant company, (1) for 5941*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* for themselves and all who might be interested (in the usual terms), "on estimated amount of freight valued at 5941*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*" at a premium of 1½ per cent.; and (2) (on the same day and in the same office), an "advance against freight valued at 512*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.*" This sum, it appeared, they arrived at by adding to the account of 488*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* above mentioned a commission of 2½ per cent. on 343*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.* (being the sums of 165*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* and 178*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* in that account)—which they were entitled to do by the charter-party, but which Abraas and Co. had omitted to include in their account—and the premium on this policy to the whole sum so arrived at.

Both the China policies were then sent by post to their house of Lorrain and Gillespie at Glasgow, arriving about the 10th or 15th Dec. 1874.

The Queen of the Colonies was totally lost on the 25th Jan. 1875.

The plaintiffs having been apprised of the loss, obtained settlement, but not payment, of the English policies on the 4th Feb. 1875.

On the 5th Feb. the China policy on freight came to the knowledge of the English underwriters, who thereupon delayed payment on their own policies.

A little later it came to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and was subsequently given up to them; and they, on receipt from the various English underwriters of the sums for which they were respectively liable, purported to assign to them their (the plaintiffs') own interest in the said China policy.

Lorrain and Co. were paid the full amount on the other China policy for 512*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.*, the valuation of their advances against freight.

Plaintiffs brought their action for 441*l.*, the excess of the China policy on freight over the English policies, admitting, and showing by the receipts, that they had been paid the full amount of 5500*l.* due on those policies. They were awarded such excess by the Court of Common Pleas below.

At the trial a nominal verdict was taken; and it was agreed that the judge (Denman, J.) should enter all the material facts on his notes, which should then be treated as a statement of a special case before the Court of Appeal.

The present appeal was made by the defendant against that decision.

The court to draw inferences fact.

Benjamin, Q.C. (with him Cohen, Q.C., and Langdon), for defendants (appellants).—I have two points. (1) As to the excess of 441*l.* that this China policy was a policy on an interest which did not wholly belong to plaintiff, and the fact of its being a "valued" policy does not prevent that being shown. (2) As to the whole sum, that plaintiff could take no advantage under it, since it was made by a stranger (though for his benefit), and not ratified till after loss. A decision in my favour on the first point will make it unnecessary to argue the second. As to the first point: From the facts it is clear that this policy was made by Lorrain and Co. on the whole freight, and that the shipowners were not interested to that amount, and the fact of the policy being a valued one does not debar me from showing that. That is well established by authority (Duer, II. 79.) It is not opening a valued policy to show over-valuation. I simply ask what it is that was intended to be valued, and does it all belong to you? There is nothing to prevent me doing that. Now, here I say it is clear that what was intended by Lorrain and Co. to be valued was the whole freight. Plaintiffs were not interested in the whole freight; but in the whole freight less the sum advanced. That is fully covered by 5500*l.*, and that sum they have already recovered from the English underwriters. They are the only people who have any right to sue us. They can sue us for contributions, and they are about to do so. [The Court intimated that they would now hear the other side on this first point.]

Bull, Q.C. and J. C. Matthew, for plaintiffs (respondents).—Freight does not necessarily mean all freight. Whatever be the actual interests in the freight it is usually insured simply as "freight." [JESSEL, M.R.—Primâ facie "freight" means all freight. It must be shown that it means something less in the particular case.] It is clear how Lorrain and Co. came to effect a policy at all. They had charged the shipowners with premiums for insurance, and felt therefore that if they were not already insured, or if their underwriters should turn out to be insolvent, they would have a right to call on them (Lorrain and Co.), for the policy, the premium on which had been charged against the owners in the account given to and accepted by the captain. Lorrain and Co. therefore insured, and insured the shipowners' interest and nothing else. That is clear by his making another policy, on the very same day, on his own account, to cover his advances. It is all a question of intention.

Barker v. Janson, 17 L. T. Rep. N.S. 473; L. Rep. 3 C. P. 303; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 28.

Lidgett v. Secretan, ante, vol. 1, p. 95; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 942; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 616.

The sum of 5941*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*, it is true, is somewhere about the actual amount of gross freight; but I say that the intention was not to insure the gross freight, but only shipowners' interest. It may be that they thought his interest extended to the whole freight; but it does not matter by what calculation they arrive at the sum, so long as it is the shipowner's interest alone which they intend to insure. The shipowners' interest was the gross freight, plus the premiums less the advances. This sum of 5941*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* was arrived at, we say, by a rough calculation on that basis. These calculations are never supposed to be strictly accurate. They are always made on a liberal scale

In the case of valued policies insurance is no longer a contract of indemnity; it is a contract of indemnity subject to mercantile usage. In the smaller policy, made on his own account, Gillespie included items in which he had no interest. Underwriters like over-valuation. The English policy was not large enough to cover the premiums. Probably Gillespie added the address commissions as well, which were, as a fact, included in the freight; but he added everything in which the owners could, by any possibility, be interested, meaning to cover their interest, and that is done every day in a valued policy, and is no ground for impeaching it.

Benjamin, Q.C., in reply.—It must be observed that this policy was made after the accounts had been made up, and therefore with full and exact knowledge of all the facts. The sum was arrived at by adding the address commission to the gross freight. The whole of the 512*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* was in the nature of an advance against freight under this charter-party. The wording of the advance clause is peculiar, and has that effect. Therefore the interest of the owners in this policy was 512*l.* short of the whole. Moreover, the owners have been paid 5500*l.*, and the charterers 512*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* 6012*l.* odd in all has, therefore, been paid on freight, considerably beyond its value. [After some time the court intimated that they would like to hear Mr. Benjamin on the second point before coming to any decision.] The second point is whether an insurance made by strangers, and not known till after loss, can then be adopted by the person on whose behalf it was intended to be made. A man cannot ratify at a time when he could not make the contract he seeks to ratify. The question can scarcely, from its nature, arise in other but contracts of insurance. At the time of the loss, and for some time afterwards, there was no contract in existence at all. Gillespie did not contract for himself, and he had no sort of authority to contract for the owners. They first hear of it after loss; they could not then have made the contract, and how could they transform what was then but a piece of paper into a contract? [JESSEL, M.R.—That is the rule in equity, and no doubt it is the true rule; but the contract of insurance differs somewhat from an ordinary contract—say of sale—for you may insure what was at that moment actually gone to the bottom, if no one is aware of the fact.] The contract is against risk; it cannot be made after risk has ceased to exist, either directly or retroactively. If it were a question of the amount of knowledge, here there was, one may say, absolute knowledge; for the captain had returned from the wreck. In France the law is as I say it should be in this country. It is a fair argument against me that the rule has been now a considerable time in existence, but such a case must always be very rare. The rule is based on the authority of only two cases, which are in some measure distinguishable from this case; and there are cases, on the other hand, in my favour. The first case against me is that of Routh v. Thompson (13 East. 274), decided in 1811. That was the case of ratification by the Crown, by an order in council, of the insurance of a prize effected by the captors, the vessel being lost at the time of the ratification. But the judgment proceeded on the ground that the Crown was in constructive possession of the prize at the time of insurance, since the captors were officers of the Crown on board a ship of war, and before its servants and agents. The captors, L. Ellenborough said, "could not have insured themselves." This case, then, does not support the proposition I am contending against. The case was not argued or decided as a question of adoption, though it is on that point that it is cited as an authority in the text books. There is nothing in the case to show it was not adopted before loss. The second case is Hagedorn v. Oliverson (2 M. & Sel. 485), in 1814. There is not a trace of such a doctrine in the books before Routh v. Thompson. As to the general question of ratification, Jardine v. Leathley (7 L. T. R. N. S. 783; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 128; 3 B. & S. 7) is an authority for the proposition that a man cannot ratify at a time when he cannot contract so is Bird v. Brown (4 Exch. 796). [MILLER, L.J.—Both those cases were ratifications of acts and not of contracts.]

Butt, Q.C. was not called on to reply on this point.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that decision of the court below must be reversed.

The first question is, was this policy of insurance made by Lorrain and Co. on their own behalf on that of the shipowners? I come to the conclusion, looking at all the circumstances, that it was on behalf of the shipowners. They had charged the shipowners with the premium and advances, and the policy was intended to cover the whole of those items. Having charged the shipowners with the premiums, they deemed it able to insure on their account.

The efficiency of the insurance, therefore, depended on that of the ratification. That was not made till after the loss. The cases on this point lay down that such a ratification is good. Mr. Benjamin's contention may be good in itself, but the cases are of too great historical authority to be now overruled; they have been long accepted and acted upon.

But, further, I think this exception is a good one on its own merits. The loss is very likely to happen before ratification, and that is a circumstance which is in the minds of the underwriters at the time they subscribe the policy.

Ratification, then, as a fact, having taken place, can the whole amount be recovered on the policy? Now you cannot open the policy to inquire into the question whether there has or has not been over-valuation, but you can do so to see if the claim of the assured is co-extensive with the subject matter of the insurance. Here it is clear that it is not, for if it were, the assured would be paid twice over.

JESSEL, M.R.—The first question is, was the insurance on behalf of the shipowners? I have no doubt at all that it was.

Then, what did they insure? In a valued policy you cannot open the policy; but it does not touch the question of what was insured that was valued. Here the wording of the policy may cover either the whole or the part due only of the freight still remaining due to the owners. We must look at the words. Now, 594*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* is got by adding together the gross freight, the advances, the address commission, and the commission on the sum insured. Thus the address commission has in reality been twice included, but we cannot look to that as to the question of intention, the sum insured is for themselves.

OF APP.] THE SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN FOX AND CO. [CT. OF APP.]

7, has it been ratified? I agree with the Chief Justice; the decisions on that point are too old and have been too long acted to be now upset. They have also long been incorporated in the text books, which it makes them law it is true, but causes the agents to act upon them. It is an exception to a general rule no doubt, but there are other exceptions, and this is a convenient one.

What has happened since? The shipowners received 5500*l.* There is a question whether or not 4*l.* has also been paid. Defendants say it belonged to Lorrain and Co., they say, at to you, and more, they have been paid it their other policy. That policy was for 13*s.* 5*d.* in three items: (1) 23*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*, commission and premium on advances; (2) 15*s.* 11*d.*, premium and advances; (3) 18*s.*, address commission. This address commission was also an advance under the charter for Lorrain and Co. might have asked for it, or the captain might ask it to be lent which was actually done in this case, as it included in the account accepted by him. More the whole sum was advanced against. But it would have been so as to this commission quite independently of the third party, for it is not set off but retained. It is to be paid less that which the charterers a right to retain by mercantile usage. It, therefore, has been already paid, and it be again recovered.

LISU, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I with the Common Pleas on all the points of they took notice. Our decision turns on a which they did not notice.

question is, what was included in the 1*s.* 2*d.*? Was it the whole freight, or whole freight less the advances? Now the ice was for the benefit and on account shipowners. They were interested in eight less advances, not in the advances.

The words may mean only freight less commission; and, therefore, I should have felt it to conclude that they did mean what they taken prima facie to mean. But the sum is not only the residue of the freight, but whole freight including the advances. There is question comes, what did they estimate? The facts I draw the inference that the whole was insured, and not only that but some sums that were added to it. There is no rule preventing us, on those facts, from looking at a valued policy. The sum the shipowner is to recover is that proportion of 5941*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* his interest in freight is of the whole freight. Amount of the advances, therefore, becomes part in this calculation. The premium they right to charge is not three per cent. but three-quarters per cent., but that leaves division the same.

OCK, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is my opinion, that the policy was for the net, and that the insurance was on the freight. We are not debarred from looking what was the subject-matter of the insurance. We therefore arrive at the same conclusion whether we regard it as an insurance without commission, or as an insurance already paid. As to analogy, I think there is no strict analogy between an insurance contract and another; and I also am of opinion that the present rule should be upheld on grounds of policy.

Attorneys for appellants, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Attorneys for respondents, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

Wednesday, May 24, 1876.

THE SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN FOX AND COMPANY.

Practice—The Judicature Act 1875—Order XVI., rr. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21—Order XI., rr. 1 to 4—Defendants' power to cite third party—Service of notices out of the jurisdiction.

The court, on the application of defendant in an action, will order service of a notice citing a third party to appear in the action under rr. 17 and 18 of Order XVI., where it is satisfied that there is a material question to be tried in the action, common both to the plaintiff and the defendant, and the defendant and the third party, although the whole question to be tried is not precisely identical in both cases, and that the plaintiff will not be prejudiced by so calling in the third party.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of a charter-party, and claimed a sum for demurrage at the rate of 12*l.* a day by reason of the defendants, who were the charterers, having failed to discharge the cargo "as fast as the custom of the port of discharge would allow" according to their contract. Whilst the ship was on her voyage the defendants sold the cargo to arrive to third parties in Scotland, who, by the contract of sale, were to name the port of discharge and pay lighterage, if any. The third parties named Leith as the port of discharge, and by the usage of trade there purchasers of a cargo to arrive were bound to discharge according to the custom of the port of Leith.

Held (reversing the decision of the Queen's Bench Division below), that the defendants might issue a notice under rr. 17 and 18 of Order XVI., citing the third parties to appear in the action.

Held also that such notices might properly be served on the third parties in Scotland, as rr. 1 and 4 of Order XI. apply to service of notices under rr. 17 and 18 of Order XVI.

This was an appeal from an order of the Queen's Bench Division discharging an order made by Master Unthank.

The plaintiffs, by their statement of claim, alleged that by a charter party of the 18th Feb. 1875, the plaintiffs' ship Helen Burns being then at Valparaiso, it was agreed that the ship should proceed to Iquique and Pisagua, and the defendants should there load a full cargo of nitrate of soda in bags, which the plaintiffs agreed to convey to Queenstown or Falmouth for orders, and thence to a specified port of discharge as ordered, and there deliver the whole of her cargo, which the defendants agreed to discharge as fast as the custom of the port would allow, with 12*l.* a day demurrage. That the ship arrived at Leith, her specified port of discharge; but the defendants did not discharge the cargo as fast as the custom of the port allowed, but kept the cargo undischarged for thirty-one days beyond that period. The plaintiffs' claim was for thirty-one days demurrage at 12*l.* per day.

On the application of the defendants an order

CT. OF APP.] THE SWANSEA SHIPPING COMPANY (LIMITED) v. DUNCAN FOX AND CO. [CT. OF A

was made by Master Unthank on the British Agricultural Association (Limited), under Ord. XVI, r. 17, requiring the British Agricultural Association to appear within ten days, and allowing the defendants to serve a notice on the British Agricultural Association accompanied by a copy of the plaintiffs' statement of claim under Ord. XVI, r. 18.

The defendants made an affidavit in support of their application for this order. In the affidavit it was stated that after the loading of the cargo, and before the arrival of the ship at Queenstown or Falmouth, the cargo was purchased from the defendants to arrive (through brokers at Liverpool acting for buyers and sellers) by the British Agricultural Association, Limited, a company carrying on business at Leith, in Scotland, that on the arrival of the ship at Falmouth, the Association ordered her to discharge at Leith, and, on the ship's arrival, the Association took discharge of the cargo over her side, the defendants taking no part in such discharge, and that, by the terms of the agreement of purchase, and according to the custom of the trade, the Association are bound to indemnify the defendants, and repay them any sum due to the plaintiffs for the detention of the ship at her port of discharge.

The notice served by the defendants in pursuance of this order upon the Association set out the nature of the plaintiffs' claim against the defendants, and then stated "The defendants' claim to be indemnified by you against liability in respect of the alleged breach of charter-party, on the ground that, as buyers of the cargo and holders of the bill of lading, you neglected to unload the vessel at Leith, to which port she was ordered, with due dispatch."

The order of Master Unthank, together with the above notice and a copy of the plaintiffs' statement of claim, was served upon the Association at Leith.

The Association applied to Archibald, J., at chambers, to rescind the order of Master Unthank. Archibald, J., referred the matter to the court.

The secretary of the Association made an affidavit in support of the application to rescind, in which it was stated that the Association were only purchasers of the cargo, and not, as alleged in the notice, holders of bills of lading or shipping documents, and were not parties in any way under the contract of charter party. That the claim of the defendants against the Association arose, if at all, wholly in Scotland, and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and must, if it exist, all depend upon the custom of the port of Leith.

The contract, contained in the "sold note," between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association, was as follows:

British Agricultural Association (Limited).

We have this day bought for you 1100 tons, more or less, being the entire cargo of nitrate of soda expected to arrive per Helen Burns, at 11s. 6d. per cwt., delivered at a safe port in U.K., or 11s. 9d. in a safe port between Havre and Hamburg. If ordered to U.K., sellers to pay usual charges, according to the custom of the port of discharge. Lighterage, if any, to be paid by buyers. Payment in cash in fourteen days from last day of weighing. Payment before delivery if required.

The Queen's Bench division made an order discharging the order of Master Unthank, and the defendants now appealed against this decision. The case in the Queen's Bench Division will be found fully reported, ante, p. 166.

J. C. Mathew for the appellant.—The order for the sale of the cargo between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association (Limited) is silent as to how the cargo is to be discharged, but the terms of the charter-party between plaintiffs and two defendants are "to deliver cargo as fast as the custom of the port allows." The question is whether the two contracts are ad idem. Where there is a contract which, by calling in the third party, can be once for all, and you do not embarrass the plaintiff, you can cite the third party in order to have common issue tried. No questions are pre-identical, but the British Agricultural Association contract is substantially the same as that between the plaintiffs and the defendants, viz., to deliver within the time limited by the custom of the port of discharge. The measure of damages, not would be different in each case on breach of contract, but that does not make any difference there being an issue common to both contracts. The defendants are entitled to cite the third party in order to have it settled once for all. See there is nothing to prevent the British Agricultural Association, residing in Scotland, from served with an order under rules 17 and Order XVI. This contract was entered within the jurisdiction, and service of notice be "according to the rules relating to writs of summons," which may be served within the jurisdiction, under Order XI.

Thesiger, Q.C. and Castle, for the British Agricultural Association.—As to the second under rule 20 of Order XVI, if a person as mentioned in rule 18, desires to dispute plaintiff's claim in the action as against the defendant, on whose behalf the notice has been given, he must enter an appearance in the action eight days after the notice has been given. It would in most cases be impossible to do so within the time, when the third party is outside the jurisdiction, and it was not intended by rules that he should. [JESSEL, M.R.—Rule of Order XVI must be read with rule 4 of Order XI, in which service of a notice out of the jurisdiction is provided for.] As to the first point, contract between the plaintiff and the defendant is on the charter-party alone. The action is for damages, and there is nothing to show the charter-party was brought to the notice of the British Agricultural Association. The contracts differ in this, that the purchaser is not bound to find a place for the discharge of the cargo, the charterer is.

J. C. Mathew replied.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from an order made by the Queen's Bench Division, discharging an order made by Master Unthank, allowing defendants in the action to serve a notice on persons, who are a company, and not parties to the action. The question is to be decided on the construction of various rules of Order XVI, and the effect of those rules is this. By rule 17, "When the defendant claims contribution, indemnity, or any other remedy or relief from any other person, or where, from any cause, it appears to the court or a judge that a question in the action should be determined between the plaintiff and the defendant, or between the plaintiff, defendant, and any other person, or between any or either of them, the court or judge may, upon notice to the should appear desirable so to do, give the on so served liberty to defend the action upon terms as shall seems just, and may direct pleadings to be delivered, or such amendments in any pleadings to be made, and generally direct such proceeding to be taken, and give directions as to the court or a judge shall be proper for having the question most conveniently determined, and as to the mode or put in or to which the person so served shall be bound or made liable by the decision of the court." So that a third party can by the aid of the court or a judge under this rule, limit the effect of the decision by which he is bound, and the judge may give directions as to the portion of the costs to be borne by the third party, and make the directions distributive.

to the service of a notice out of the jurisdiction, Rule 1 of Order XI. provides that leave of the court or a judge, service of a writ may be made, or notice of a writ of summons may be served out of the jurisdiction whenever the contract was made, as was the case here, within the jurisdiction. Rule 4 of Order XI. provides that "any order giving leave to effect such service or give such notice, shall limit a time after such service or notice, in which such defendant is to enter an appearance, such time to depend on the place or try where or within which the writ is to be served or the notice given.

e first objection on the part of the British cultural Association is that as the association resides in Scotland, the rule as to the ce of notice to third parties does not apply to persons or corporations out of the jurisdic-

The answer to that is that Order XVI., 17, provides that service of the notice be "according to the rules relating to the service of writs of summons," and therefore Rule 20 of Order XI. applies. But it is said that by Order XVI., the time in which a third party served with a notice under Rule 17 may appear is an appearance to be entered is within eight days, which is insufficient when the party served resides out of the jurisdiction and in a distant country, and the proviso, as to getting the time extended, would be inapplicable to the case of a person abroad, and, not intended to apply to persons out of the jurisdiction. No doubt when rule 20 was drawn this case of third person out of the jurisdiction was not in the mind of the draftsman. The answer is to be found in Rule 4 of Order XI., where it is provided that the order giving leave to serve a notice out of the jurisdiction on the third parties, is to name a time within which a defendant living out of the jurisdiction is to enter an appearance, depending on the place or country where the writ is to be served; and if the number of days allowed for appearance is more than eight, then rule 20 of Order XVI. must be taken to be so far modified that an appearance within the time limited, though more than eight days, would be sufficient.

On the other ground, upon which the Queen's Bench Division seem to have mainly decided, it is said that the whole cause of action between the plaintiffs and defendants, and the defendant and third party must be identical in order to allow the defendants the advantage of rule 17. I do not think that is so; no doubt the question between them must be a substantial "question" in the action, and it is not every fringe of the subject which will do. The court can consider whether the plaintiff, if he objects to the introduction of the third party, would be prejudiced or delayed in his action. The plaintiffs do not object here.

The object of these enactments was to prevent the same question being tried twice over, where there is any substantial question common as between the plaintiff and defendant in the action, and as between the defendant and a third person; and in such a case the third person is to be cited to take part in the original litigation, and so to be bound by the decision on that question once for all. And the point really is whether there is such a "question" in the present case, which can advantageously be tried and decided, not only as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, but as between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association.

The action was brought on a charter-party, and the alleged breach is that the defendants failed to discharge the cargo as fast as the custom of the port of Leith would allow according to the terms of the charter-party, and the claim is for 12*l*. a day demurrage during thirty-one days. The defendants say that they sold the cargo to arrive to the British Agricultural Association, and that a sale of cargo to arrive casts upon the purchaser the same obligations as to discharge as the vendor was under, and that that is the usage of trade. There is an affidavit filed which states this, and it is uncontradicted. (a) On the other hand it is said that whilst the defendants were bound to discharge the vessel and find a berth for her, the buyer of the cargo "to arrive" has to take delivery only, and that the question might be complicated by having to consider how far the default was the defendants', or how far the default of the defendants' vendees. But by the contract between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association

(a) His Lordship referred to an affidavit filed for the defendants since the hearing in the Queen's Bench Division, and which after some hesitation, was allowed by the court to be used on appeal.

[Ct. of App.]

THE BELGIC.

[Ct. of App.]

tion, the latter are to name the port of discharge, and that being so, it seems to me unreasonable, as they might name a place where the defendants had no agent, that they should not find a berth or discharge the ship. This view is strengthened by the fact that the buyers are to pay for lighterage. It appears to me to be the fair construction of the contract that the purchasers were to provide for the discharge, and, I think, therefore, that there is a substantial question common both between the plaintiffs and defendants, and the defendants and the British Agricultural Association as to whether the ship was discharged as fast as the custom of the Port of Leith would allow, and that the defendants may properly cite the third parties in order to have it decided.

KELLY, C.B.—The substantial question to be tried between the plaintiffs and the defendants is whether the cargo of the plaintiffs' ship, the Helen Burns, was discharged as fast as the custom of the port of Leith would allow, and there is another question as to whether a berth was found for the ship. If a berth was not found the defendants would be liable. Then the question arises as between the defendants and third persons, whether the British Agricultural Association, in Scotland, is liable on the same ground and to the same extent to the defendants, as the defendants are alleged to be to the plaintiffs. It seems to me that they are. They purchased the cargo to arrive, and by their contract would be liable to discharge it according to the custom of the port. Here then there is a question to be determined between the defendants and the British Agricultural Association, which is really the same as the question between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and the defendants are entitled under the rules which have been referred to under Order XVI, to have the question determined once for all between themselves and the British Agricultural Association. I am of opinion, therefore, that our judgments should be for the defendants, and that the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division should be reversed.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. There is no doubt in this case as to the position of the defendants, who as charterers are sued for not having discharged the cargo as fast as the custom of the port of Leith would allow, and who claim to be indemnified by third persons—the British Agricultural Association, who, the defendants say, ought to have discharged the cargo in the same way as the defendants themselves were bound to do. I think if the defendants make out a prima facie case that the substantial question between themselves and the plaintiffs is the same as between themselves and the third persons, the defendants are entitled to bring in those third persons, so as not to have the same question determined twice over. I do not think that can now come to any final decision, even on the point whether there is the same obligation as to discharging between the plaintiffs and the defendants and between the defendants and the association; because to settle that question might involve trying the whole case between the defendant and their vendees. If the questions in dispute between the defendants and the third persons were made to appear to us really different, that of course would be ground upon which the third persons might object to be brought in, and upon which we ought to refuse the order; but the Act, I think, gives choice in the matter, where, as in this case, it is a clear, prima facie case made out by the defendants of the identity of a material question to be determined between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and the latter and the British Agricultural Association, and the plaintiff will not be prejudiced. In the contract between the defendants and the third persons I think it is implied that by the custom of the trade the vendees should discharge the cargo as fast as the custom of the port of discharge would allow, and the vendees are to pay the lighterage (if any), to name the port of discharge, which shows that far as regards their contract with the defendants they and not the defendants were to take the discharge of the cargo. The affidavit being so states, and is not contradicted. Moreover upon the terms of the contract the buyers name the port of discharge and pay lighterage any, which goes to show that as between the defendants and the third persons they were the persons to the berth and conduct the unloading and the defendants.

It is said that there may be a difference of measure of damages between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and between the latter and third persons, because the British Agricultural Association are not bound by the demurrage clause in the charter-party, which is not mentioned or referred to in their contract of sale, and of which they had no knowledge; the third persons would only be bound to the extent ordered by the judge under rule 2 of Order XVI, and the common question being only whether or not the cargo was discharged as fast as the custom of the port of Leith would allow, the British Agricultural Association cannot be injured by any other decision in the case.

I am of opinion, too, with the Master of Rolls, that the notice may be served out of jurisdiction.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is that the order of Master Unthank was not made under the 17th and 18th rules of Order XVI. As to the service I agree with the Master of Rolls. I think that no injustice can be done when we look at rules 18 and 21 together, the first being given under those rules to limit the effect of the notice on a third party, by directing upon the decision of what question in the action the third party is to be bound so as not to prejudice him.

Order of Queen's Bench Division reversed.
Order for service of notice affirmed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Williamson and Co., for H. Field, Swansea.

Solicitors for the defendants, Field, Esdaile and Co., for Bateson and Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for the British Agricultural Association, Simpson and Co.

Monday, Feb. 28, 1876.

THE BELGIC.

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.
Damage—Collision leaving dock—Docks—Authority—Pilot—Negligence of person in charge of ship—Insufficiency of equipment.
A vessel leaving dock with a pilot on board within the space over which the

[APP.]

THE BELGIC.

[CT. OF APP.]

city extends by statute, is responsible for the result of the use of a tug of insufficient power by her master, even when such is in the general employment of the Dock Company, there being no obligation on the Dock Company to supply a tug.

As a cause of damage instituted in the City of London Court by the Thames Iron Works and Docking Company (Limited), the owners of the barge or lighter Kertch against the screw ship Belgic (belonging to the port of Liverpool and the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company (Limited)) the owners of that vessel for the negligence of those on board the Belgic that vessel was coming out of the Victoria Dock into the Thames on the 25th Nov. 1874. The case was heard by Mr. Serjeant Petersdorff, judge, on the 23rd July 1875, when it was found that the Belgic, a vessel 370ft. long, was out of the Victoria Docks stern first into the Thames, that there was a pilot on board, and he was not in charge, but was in readiness to take charge when the vessel got into the dock, that the dock master was on the quay giving directions, that the wind was blowing strong from the S.W. and up the river across the dock, and that it was about an hour before the tides being spring. There was a deposition of testimony as to the person by whom the orders were given to regulate the movements of the ship, but at a time when the ropes were cast off from the quay, and a barge of about 50-horse power belonging to the Dock Company had a hawser made fast to the stern of the Belgic, and was towing her down stream, the force of the wind and tide on the Belgic's quarter overpowered the tug, and caused her to come into contact with the barge lying at the upper pier head waiting to go into dock, crushing and sinking two of them, the Kertch, whose owners brought this action, and the Lustre, whose owners brought a separate action, which it was agreed should be decided by a jury of this one. There were a great number of witnesses lying at the same place, and it was proved that it was not uncommon for barges to lie there waiting to go into dock, and that the Dock Company's servants were aware that the Kertch lay there and had assisted to make her fast in her then position after moving her a little from the dock gates than she originally occupied herself. On the quay wall and within the red yards of the place where the barges lay a board and painted on the board:

NOTICE TO LIGHTERMEN AND OTHERS.

No vessel of any kind is allowed to lie at the quay, or within one hundred yards of the pier head of the docks, except with the permission of the dock master. Lightermen or other persons obstructing the free access to the landing place by the barge boat, or allowing any barge or other vessel to lie within the above limit without such permission, or to remove such craft or vessel as being required to do so by the dock master, are liable to a fine of five pounds, and a further sum of twenty pounds for every hour the said craft or other vessel is so remain in such position (10 Vict. c. 27, s. 63); and the dock master is empowered to remove such craft, and hold the same until the cost of such removal is paid by the owner (10 Vict. c. 27, s. 58).

(Signed) CHARLES NORMAN, Superintendent. for the Thames and St. Katherine Docks Company.
August 1870.

After the collision the Belgic anchored for a few minutes outside the dock gates, and then proceeded on her voyage to New York. She had a cargo, but no passengers on board. The defendants had given notice of the defence of compulsory pilotage in accordance with Order XLIX. of the General Orders (Admiralty Jurisdiction) County Courts 1869, but had given no notice of any other special defence, and the following agreement had been made between plaintiffs and defendants:

In the City of London Court, the Belgic.

All the orders of the pilot were properly carried out by the crew of the Belgic. No order was given by the master or officers of the Belgic to the helmsman or engineer of the vessel, or step taken by them, except by the direction of the pilot or dock master.

Dated this 30th day of June 1875.

(Signed) R. E. WEBSTER, for plaintiffs.

GAINSFORD BRUCE, for defendants.

The learned Deputy Judge, after hearing Raikes with him Webster, for the plaintiffs, and Bruce, with him Malden, for the defendants, and consultation with the Nautical Assessors, gave judgment in the following terms: "Having had the very efficient and great assistance of the gentlemen assisting me in this inquiry, I have come to a conclusion, and so far as facts are concerned they agree with me, and we find that in fact the vessel was not under his (i.e., the pilot's) control either immediately before the collision or at the time of the collision or subsequent to it. I do not decide any point of law. I decide upon the evidence, and that evidence is recognised by the two assessors, who think that at the time of the collision the pilot was not the official in control or management of the vessel. With regard to the other point, as to whether there was negligence on the part of the master of the Belgic, these gentlemen, who are far more competent than I am to form any opinion upon the subject, have come to the conclusion, as a matter of fact on which they entertain no doubt, that, looking to the time, looking to the state of the tide, and looking to the condition of the wind, the necessary and proper precautions were not taken by the master of the Belgic, and that the accident which did happen—the collision which had led to this inquiry—was the result of his fault. We decide no point of law: we simply decide those facts as a matter of fact, without reference to any question that could be discussed of a technical character. Our judgment, therefore, is in favour of the plaintiff."

From this judgment the defendants appealed to the High Court of Admiralty, and on the 16th Nov. 1875 the appeal came on for hearing.

The statutes on which the argument turned as to compulsory pilotage were 'The Victoria (London Docks) Act 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi.)

Sect. 49. That the docks shall be deemed and held to be situate within and part of the Port of London.

The Pilotage Act (6 Geo. 4, c. 125), repealed by the Merchant Shipping Repeal Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 120), was as follows:

Sect. 63. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that when any ship or vessel shall have been brought into any port or ports in England by any pilot duly licensed, nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to subject to any penalty the master or mate, or other person belonging to such ship or vessel, and having the command thereof, or, if in ballast, any person or persons appointed by any owner, or master, or agent of the owner thereof, for afterwards removing such ship or vessel in such port or ports for the purpose of entering into or going out of any dock, or for charging the mounds of such ship or vessel.

Sect. 72. That any licensed pilot who shall, without lawful excuse, refuse to take charge of any ship wanting a pilot, upon being required so to do by the master, or any person having the command thereof, or being entrusted therewith shall, for every offence, forfeit 100l.

The Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104).

Sect. 353 continues all exemptions from compulsory pilotage existing at the passing of the Act.

Sect. 365. If any qualified pilot commits any of the following offences: that is to say . . . (8) refuses or wilfully delays, when not prevented by illness or other reasonable cause, to take charge of any ship within the limits of his licence upon the signal for a pilot being made by such, or upon being required to do so by the master, owner, agent, or consignee thereof, or by any officer of the pilotage authority by whom such pilot is licensed, or by any principal officer of Customs . . . He shall, for each such offence, in addition to any liability for damages at the suit of the party aggrieved, incur a penalty not exceeding 100l. and be liable to suspension or dismissal, &c., &c.

And those on which the argument as to the authority of the dockmaster were: The Harbour Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27).

Sect. 2. The expression, "The Special Act," used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed, authorising the construction or improving of any harbour, dock, or pier, and with which this Act shall be incorporated; . . . and the expression "the prescribed limits," used with reference to the harbour, dock, or pier, shall mean the distance measured from the harbour, dock, or pier, or other local limits (if any), beyond the harbour, dock, or pier, within which the powers of the harbour master, dockmaster, or pier-master, for the regulation of the harbour, dock, or pier, shall by the Special Act be authorised to be exercised . . . The expression "the harbour master," shall mean with reference to any such harbour, the harbour master, and with reference to any such dock, the dockmaster . . . respectively appointed by virtue of this or the Special Act, and with respect to all acts authorised or required to be done by such harbour master, dockmaster, or pier-master, shall include the assistants of every such harbour master, dock master, or pier-master.

Sect. 52. The harbour master may give directions for all or any of the following purposes (that is to say), for regulating the time at which and the manner in which any vessel shall enter into, go out of, or lie in or at the harbour, dock, or pier, and within the prescribed limits, if any, and its position, moving or unmoving, placing and removing, whilst therein, &c.

Sect. 53. The master of every vessel within the harbour or dock, or at or near the pier, or within the prescribed limits, if any, shall regulate such vessel according to the directions of the harbour master, made in conformity with this and the Special Act; and any master of a vessel, who, after notice of any such direction by the harbour master served upon him, shall not forthwith regulate such vessel according to such direction shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20l.

Sect. 58. If the master of any vessel in or at the harbour, dock, or pier, or within the prescribed limits, if any, shall not moor, unmoor, place or remove the same according to the directions of the harbour master, or if there be no person on board of any such vessel to attend to such directions, the harbour master may cause such vessel to be moored, unmoored, placed, or removed, as he shall think fit, within or at the harbour, dock, or pier, or within the prescribed limits, and for that purpose the harbour master may cast off, unloose or cut the rope, or unshackle or break the chain by which any such vessel is moored or fastened; and all expenses attending the mooring, unmooring, placing, or removing of such vessel shall be paid to the undertakers by the master of such vessel: Provided always, that before the harbour master shall unloose or cut any rope, or unshackle or break any chain, by which any vessel, without any person on board to protect the same, shall be moored or fastened, he shall cause a sufficient number of persons to be put on board such vessel for the protection of the same.

Sect. 63. As soon as the harbour or dock shall be so far completed as to admit vessels to enter therein no vessel, except with the permission of the harbour master, shall lie or be moored in the entrance of the harbour or within the prescribed limits, and if the master of the vessel either place it or suffer it to remain in the entrance of the harbour or dock, or within the prescribed limits, without such permission, and do not, on being so to do by the harbour master, forthwith remove such vessel, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5l., and a further sum of 20s. for every day that such vessel shall remain within the limits after a reasonable time for removing the same shall have expired after such requisition.

The Victoria (London) Docks Act 1853 (17 & 18 Vict. c. cxxxi.)

Sect. 46. That the limits within which the powers of the superintendent and dock master for the regulation of the dock shall be exercised, shall be the dock premises of the company, and a distance of 1 mile into the river Thames from the entrance gate of the said docks, such distance to be computed from the line of the outer lockgates of the said dock: Provided that the power of the Lord Mayor, as Conservator of the River Thames, and of the Harbour Masters of the Port of London, within the aforesaid limits, shall not be prejudiced, lessened, or interfered with by this Act.

London and St. Katherine Docks Act 1853 (17 & 18 Vict. c. clxxviii).

Sect. 3 incorporates the Harbour, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), with the exception of certain sections other than those set out above.

Sect. 58 vests the Victoria Docks in the London Dock Company.

Sect. 61 repeals Victoria (London) Docks Act 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi.).

Sect. 62 saves certain sections set out in schedule 3, from the general repeal of sect. 61, among which are, inter alia, Victoria (London) Docks Act 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi.). Sect. 46 set out above.

Bruce (with him Butt, Q.C.) for appellants. The Belgic was by law bound to carry a pilot when she was navigating the waters of the Port of London (The Victoria (London) Docks Act 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi., s. 49.) which was her own port, for she is registered at Liverpool and she had a pilot on board, who was there for her charge: (Lucey v. Ingram 6 M. & W. 392.) comes within none of the exemptions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 379, or of the Pilot Act (6 Geo. 4. c. 59). All the orders of the pilot were obeyed. The captain gave no order himself; he carried out those given by the proper authorities. Moreover, the order to go astern and to stop were given by the dock master at the time when the Belgic was within the space over which his authority extends (the Victoria (London) Docks Act 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi., s. 44) therefore we were bound to obey the orders of the dockmaster under a penalty, and we did so (the Harbour, Dock, and Pier Clauses Act 1847, 10 Vict. c. 27, ss. 52, 53). The relation of master and servant never existed between the dockmaster and ourselves, and therefore we were not liable for the consequences of his acts (Bilboa, Lush. 149). If anyone is liable for damage it is the dock company, the dockmaster, or the pilot. The Kertch was lying in an open place in defiance of the Dock Companies Regulations (the Harbour, Dock, and Piers Clauses Act 1847, 16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi., s. 63), and consequently was there at her own peril, and was entitled to recover, as she brought the damage on herself by lying there. It was necessary for the Belgic to go out of dock that tide, as she was not to be other vessels from going in and coming out, she would have gone out in safety had it not been for the unforeseen circumstance of a

OF APP.]

THE BELGIC.

[CT. OF APP.]

ing just at the time outside the dock entrance, which rendered it impossible for her to go the way proposed. When that incident placed the course pursued was the best and prudent one open to the Belgic, and the result which ensued was under the circumstances inevitable.

Master and Raikes for the respondents.—The case was not compulsory. It has been held that a vessel coming out of dock is within the provision of The Pilot Act (6 Geo. 4, c. 125), s. 63: v. Ingram, 6 M. & W. 302.) In that case, the pilot had been required to take charge under sect. 72 of the same statute, and, in fact, was in charge. The whole of 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, was repealed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120. The exemption of sect. 63 is continued by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 4), s. 353: (General Steam Navigation Company v. British and Colonial Steam Navigation Company, L. Rep. 4 Ex. 238; 20 L. T. N. S. 581; The Earl of Auckland, Lush and on appeal, ib. 387.) The corresponding enactment to 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 72, is 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 365(8), but here he had never required to take charge, and, as he has him- self, was on board merely in readiness to take charge when the vessel got into the dock.

Under the circumstances he was not in breach of the order he gave to go ahead as given by him as the mouthpiece of the owners, to a collision with the vessels outside. That, however, did not cause the collision with the Kertch, but, on the contrary, brought her back again to a position of safety. The immediate cause of the collision was the subsequent employment of a tug of insufficient power. It is the duty of the dock master to supply a tug. The respondents had a more powerful tug of their own attendance, and had they used her, in all probability the collision would not have occurred. The dock master did not order the Belgic to use the company's tug, but suggested that a tug might be used, and offered the assistance of a tug.

That offer was accepted by the Belgic, and a prudent man should have foreseen the danger of employing so weak a tug by itself to perform such a service in such weather. The Belgic's acceptance of the assistance of a tug, the tug became a portion of her (Belgic's) appliances for going out of dock, and the Belgic is responsible for the inadequacy of the tug as much as she would be for the inadequacy of her own engines, or for a collision occasioned by the carrying away of a rope of inadequately insufficient strength for the purpose for which it was used. The Kertch was lying in a perfectly proper place; she was known to be there by the servants of the dock company, and indeed she was assisted by them to make fast in that place, and therefore, whether within or without the limit of the district over which the dockmaster's control extends (the Victoria (London) Act 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. cxxxi., s. 46), she was perfectly right to be there. The notice to the dock company themselves, and appears to be ultra vires, as it seems to apply to a place in the river over which the dockmaster's authority does not extend, as it professes to be 100 yards from the pier head, which is further out than the centre of the outer dock gates. There was no necessity for the Belgic to move at all out of the dock; she could remain as long as she liked on payment of her dues, and it was negligence on the part of her master to allow her to be sent out of dock at all at such a time. Looking to the state of the weather and the tide, this act of negligence was the original causa causans of the accident.

Bruce in reply.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from the City of London Court in a cause of collision.

The Belgic, a screw steamer 370 feet long, and of between 2000 and 3000 tons, on the 25th of Nov. last, in the daytime, came stern foremost out of the Victoria Dock and ran into a dumb barge or lighter called the Kertch, and sank her, doing also damage to another barge. The Kertch brought her action against the Belgic in the court below, and obtained the judgment of the court in her favour. The learned judge, assisted by nautical assessors, said that he did not decide any point of law, but that he found as a fact that the pilot was not exercising control over the steamer, and that the master did not take proper precautions in coming out into the river, and therefore was to blame for the collision.

The appellant contends that this judgment ought to be reversed upon three grounds, viz.: First, that the Kertch was to blame for lying where she did; secondly, that the Belgic was not responsible because she was under the orders of the dockmaster or the pilot; thirdly, that the collision was inevitable.

This last ground may be at once disposed of. The collision was clearly evitable.

Then as to the first ground, the Kertch was a dumb barge, laden with wood and iron for a ship in the Victoria Docks. The barge arrived at dead low water near the dock entrance, and brought up outside. There were fifty or sixty barges also lying alongside. Two hours before high water the barge was ordered by the dock company's servants to shift higher up, which order she obeyed, and one of them handed a rope for making her fast after having been on board her, saying, "that will do, Bob; here is something that will hold you." Looking to these and other circumstances, I am of opinion that the barge was not to blame for lying where she did.

The remaining ground of objection is now to be considered. I agree with the opinion of counsel that the learned judge of the court below had not only a question of fact, but also, to some extent, of law to consider: because, if the master was to blame for this collision, it must be on the ground that neither the authority of the dockmaster nor of the pilot had superseded at the time of the collision the authority of the master. The dockmaster was naturally anxious to get rid of this long steamer in order to admit other vessels waiting to come in. The principal facts appear to be that the gates were opened about an hour and a half before high water. The dockmaster ordered the Belgic to go out astern. About this time a schooner dropped her anchor near the mouth of the entrance. The pilot, who says he was not at this time in charge, seeing that a collision with the schooner on the one side or the barge on the other would be inevitable if the Belgic went out, took upon himself to order the Belgic to go ahead, thereby stopping her way. Upon this the dockmaster said, "What are you going to do? You can't stop here; you are stopping our work." The pilot said, "We are going to do nothing;" and, after a pause, the dockmaster said, "Well, will you let our tug take hold of you and pull you out?" The pilot said, "As you like." The vessel was pulled out. The tug proved too weak to hold the steamer off, and she ran into the barge. It has been pressed upon me that either the dockmaster or the pilot was in command; the pilot expressly says that he had not as yet taken charge, but I also think that the dockmaster was still exercising his authority.

I do not think it necessary to consider whether a captain would be obliged by the dockmaster to execute an order which manifestly brings about a collision. I think he would not be so obliged, but I need not decide that point, because I am of opinion that no command was given to the captain by the dockmaster. A proposal was made which was accepted on behalf of the captain. The dockmaster is not bound to find a tug for ships, at least no such obligation has been shown to me. The captain chose to adopt the tug as his own motive power for the occasion; it proved too weak, and the captain is as much responsible to the third parties for the consequence as if it had been his own tug.

I decline to reverse the decision of the court below, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

From this judgment the owners of the Belgie again appealed, and the further appeal came on for hearing in the Court of Appeal before Cockburn, C.J., James, L.J., and Baggallay, J.A., on the 28th Feb. 1876.

Butt, Q.C. and Myburgh, for the appellants.

Webster and Raikes for respondents.

The COURT, without calling on the respondents, dismissed the appeal with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Wood and Tinkler.
Solicitor for respondents, J. A. Farnfield.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 19 and 20, 1877.

LEASK v. SCOTT.

Stoppage in transitu—Consideration for transfer of bill of lading—Receipt and delivery after advance made—Vendor's lien.

On the 1st Jan., Geen and Co. obtained from the plaintiff, to whom they were largely indebted, a further advance of 2000*l.* on condition that they should deliver to plaintiff securities sufficient to cover the whole amount which would then be due from them. On the 3rd Jan. some securities were delivered, but they were not sufficient; and on the 5th Jan., Geen and Co., having that day unexpectedly received a bill of lading of a cargo consigned to them from the defendant abroad, and endorsed in blank (in return for which they accepted a bill of exchange payable in three months for the value), delivered the bill of lading, together with other securities, to the amount agreed to the plaintiff. On the 8th Jan., Geen and Co. became insolvent; and afterwards, but before the arrival of the cargo, the defendant claimed his right of stoppage in transitu in respect thereof.

Held, per Field, J., on motion to enter judgment that under the circumstances the defendant was entitled to the cargo, the plaintiff's order of 2000*l.* not having been made on the faith of delivery of this bill of lading.

This was an interpleader issue, tried at Guildford before Field, J., and a special jury. The learned judge adjourned the case for further consideration upon the findings of the jury, under rule 3 of Rules of the Supreme Court, December (Order XXXVI., rule 22 a).

Plaintiff was a fruit broker in London, defendant a merchant at Naples. Defendant consigned a cargo of nuts to Geen, Stutchbury, and fruit merchants, in London, a firm indebted to the plaintiff. The question raised by the findings of the jury was whether the plaintiff, as bonâ fide receiver of the bill of lading of this cargo, was entitled to the value thereof against defendant's right of stoppage in transitu, in the following circumstances:

On Saturday, 1st Jan. 1876, Geen and Co. applied to plaintiff for a further advance of 2000*l.* and plaintiff made the advance on condition that Geen and Co. would cover their existing liabilities to him, together with the new debt, by sufficient securities.

On Monday, 3rd Jan. Geen and Co. brought certain securities to plaintiff, but they were found to be insufficient, and Geen and Co. undertook to provide others to be added to those already delivered.

On Wednesday, 5th Jan., Geen and Co. received from the defendant's correspondent in London the bill of lading of this cargo indorsed in blank and accepted a bill of exchange at three months for the price of the nuts, the amount being something considerably over 2000*l.* No mention was made in this particular bill of lading that it had been made plaintiff when he made his further advance to Geen and Co.

On the same day, Wednesday the 5th, Geen and Co. delivered this bill of lading together with other securities to the plaintiff, and thus covered their advances from him according to their agreement of the previous Saturday, in their further undertaking of the Monday.

On Saturday, the 8th Jan., Geen and Co. became insolvent.

At some later period, but before the arrival in London, the defendant claimed to exercise his right of stoppage in transitu in respect of the cargo.

Jan. 19.—Murphy, Q.C. and Webster, for the defendant, moved to-day to enter judgment for the defendant. —Although all the plaintiff's proceedings were bonâ fide, there is no evidence of any consideration to the indorsee for this particular bill of lading; and further, even if there was any valuable consideration at all for the bill delivered, it amounted only to the sum of 2000*l.* The principle is laid down in the notes in Barrow v. Mason (1 Sm. L. Cas. 7th ed. 104) that "the right to stop in transitu is defeated by negotiating the bill of lading bonâ fide indorsee." It is not suggested that the advance was made on the faith of the bill of lading, and at the time of the advance Geen and Co. were not indorsees at all. It was

Div.]

LEASK v. SCOTT.

[Q.B. Div.]

Council in Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (3 Mar. Law Cas. O.S. 271; L. Rep. 393), that the forbearance or release of an lent claim is not a good consideration for orsement of a bill of lading, so as to defeat aid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu.

also there held that an assignee of any y, except a bill of exchange, stands in the position as the assignor, as to the equities upon it. Authority for the second point so be found in Re Westzinthus (5 B. & Ad. Spalding v. Ruding (6 Beav. 376), and re Alston, re Holland (L. Rep. 4 Ch. App. In the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, hina v. Henderson (L. Rep. 5 P. C. 501), the Council followed the principles laid down Iger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris so Lutscher v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 709).

Matthew, for the plaintiff.—The findings of y preclude any further contention on the ant's part. The facts in Rodger v. The r d'Escompte de Paris materially differ those found here, the decision in that ing based mainly on the ground that the who received the bill of lading knew that ncy was impending over the transferor. ase is really the only authority which, in ay, throws doubt upon the application of ncept of stoppage in transitu to the facts and it is not really in point.

ster was heard in reply. Cur adv. vult.

29.—FIELD, J.—This was an interpleader in which the plaintiff, Mr. Leask, affirmed nst the defendant, Mr. Scott, that he was d to certain goods which were the subject of f lading, dated 29th Dec. 1875, and the facts case shortly were these:—

plaintiff, Leask, was a fruit broker in the id he had as what we may call one of his con- ts, a firm of Geen, Stutchbury, and Co., who uit merchants in the city, and for many years or five—I forget precisely the exact number, ask acted as fruit broker for that firm in their s transactions for buying and selling fruit.

course of that time, the firm had become rably indebted to him, and I think it may en that at Christmas, 1875, there was ing certainly like 10,000*l.* or 11,000*l.* due to m the firm of Geen, Stutchbury, and Co. he firm did not improve in their pecuniary n during 1875, and very early in the follow- ar they were in such difficulties that on i Jan., which was the prompt day—the day ch they were bound to meet their prompts were unable to do so, and were short by a 2000*l.* of the sum required for that purpose. lingly, on the morning of Saturday, the 1st he prompt day, according to the evidence Leask, confirmed by Mr. Geen, Mr. Geen upon Mr. Leask (at that time they owed ),700*l.*), and what passed is described pren the same manner by Mr. Leask and by Mr. Mr. Geen said, "I want 2000*l.*," whereupon, Leask said, "I said you may have it, but ust first cover up your account." Upon en said that he would, and he proceeded s to Mr. Leask's cashier, and there he d a cheque for 2000*l.* Now, that was on arday. There was a little doubt as to the ate on which the bill of lading was deposited, ould not have been before the Wednesday, . III., N. S.

because I believe I am right in saying that Geen himself did not obtain the bill until the 5th; at all events he did not obtain the bill later on. On one day, in the early part of the week, Mr. Geen, who had previously entered into a contract with the defendant, Mr. Scott, who was a merchant at Naples, for an unascertained quantity of nuts, in pursuance of that contract, received from Scott's correspondent in London the bill of lading in question, and it was indorsed to him in pursuance of the previous contract, and he accepted in exchange for that endorsement a bill at three months for the price of the goods. On the following day, in pursuance of the promise which had been made on the Saturday to cover up the account, Mr. Geen took this bill, endorsed in blank, to Mr. Leask, and deposited with him, along with a great many other securities similar in character, for the purpose, as the jury have found, of covering up the account—that is, securing the whole balance due.

Now, at the trial there was no evidence given against the plaintiff, but the learned counsel for Mr. Scott went very fairly and properly into dates. I ought to add, on the 8th, the following Saturday, Geen, Stutchbury and Co. stopped payment, and were insolvent. The securities that were handed to Mr. Leask were said to be worth something like 5000*l.*

Now, that being so, at the trial, it was denied that it was competent to Mr. Scott, the unpaid vendor, to stop the goods at the time that he did, that is to say, there was no question raised about the transitus being at an end. There was no question about Geen, Stutchbury and Co. being insolvent, and it was conceded that he had a right to stop the goods as against Geen, Stutchbury and Co., but Mr. Leask said: "You have no right to stop the goods as against me because I come within the protection of the law, which says that the indorsee or transferee of the bill of lading for valuable consideration taking it without notice, taking it fairly and honestly, is entitled to the property as against the original vendor." That was contested hotly at the trial.

I left questions to the jury in order to raise the facts of the case, and the jury in answer to my questions gave these answers: "We first of all find that the plaintiff received the bill of lading honestly and fairly. We find that valuable consideration was given on the understanding of security being given, and we also find that the security given was to secure 2000*l.* and also the old account."

Now upon these findings, Mr. Murphy, with Mr. Webster, moved before me to enter the judgment for them. They did not contest the findings of the jury, but they said that the point that they disputed was this: They alleged that although it might be, and after the verdict of the jury must be taken to be, that the plaintiff did receive the bill of lading honestly and fairly, and that he received it in pursuance of that promise that security should be given, yet they said he was not such a transferee or indorsee of the bill for such valuable consideration as entitled him to hold it as against Mr. Scott.

Now in support of that position, they relied upon two cases: One of them is the well-known case of Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 393; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 271). In that case there was a firm of Lyall and Still, and they were in the anticipation of receiving certain bills of lading for certain goods which were about, as they expected, to arrive. They were very much pressed for money, and they obtained an advance from the person out at Hong Kong, upon the promise of which he got large advances upon the undertaking to furnish shipping documents for silk cargoes to be ready for the mail of the 15th December from Hong Kong. Now it seems to me, therefore, that case went one step further than this case. That case pointed to a particular class of documents which he was in anticipation of receiving, and he undertook therefore to furnish the cargo on certain shipping documents which he expected to receive. Now in this case it is quite certain that no specific cargo of any kind whatever was in the consideration of Mr. Leask. We do not know whether Mr. Geen on that Saturday expected that bill of lading to come as it did the following week. It may be that he did not. It may be that the documents were so far in advance that he might possibly have expected to get the bill of lading the following week, but he made no specific mention of the bill of lading—he made no specific condition with Mr. Leask that any particular security should be lodged. All he said was, “If you will give me 2000*l.* now, I will cover up the account.” Now, that being so, in this case of Rodger v. The Comptoir d’Escompte de Paris, Lyall and Still were unable or unwilling to complete their promise, whereupon the manager of the bank insisted, in a very strong letter, that they should give him that security which they promised, holding out a threat of criminal proceedings if they did not do so. There was another banker pressing them also, and the result was that Lyall and Still executed a deed of assignment, by which, after reciting the agreement referred to, and reciting that certain advances had been made on the faith of certain documents, it then proceeded to make over to the bank “the whole of the property, premises, and chattels specified in the schedule at the foot, with all the estate right, title, interest, claim, or demand of Lyall, Still, and Co., therein, or thereto, or arising thereout or therefrom.” The schedule included amongst other things “all goods and bills of lading or other documents for all goods now on the way hither to arrive in December, 1866, or January, 1867,” being the class of goods which had been referred to when they first made their promise to the banks to find security. Now, after that date the bill of lading which was in question in the case of Rodger v. The Comptoir d’Escompte de Paris arrived: “The documents arrived on the 27th Dec. 1866, and the 1st Jan. 1867, including the bills of lading for the goods.” “These were then indorsed and handed over by Maclean (together with the policies on the goods) to Mr. Kaiser in performance of the agreement.” After that the vendor stops the goods, and so the question arose between the indorsee of the bill of lading and the vendor, and the indorsee failed in that he was not assignee for valuable consideration. Now, it is worth while for a minute or two to advert to the important parts of the judgment. After setting out all the facts as I have stated them, it goes on in this way (p. 405): “The general rule so clearly stated and explained by Lord St. Leonards in the case of Mangles v. Dixon (3 H. J. Cas. 702) is that the assignee of any security stands in the same position as the assignor as to the equity arising upon it. This, as a general rule, was disputed, but it was contended that the case bill of lading is exceptional, and must be held with on special grounds. Doubtless the bill of an indorsed bill of lading may in the commercial dealing transfer a greater right than he himself has; the exception is founded on negotiable quality of the document. It is confined to the case where the person who transfers the right is himself in actual and authorized possession of the document, and the transferee gives value on the faith of it, without his notice of any circumstance which would render the transaction neither fair nor honest. In a case, if the vendor is unpaid, one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of a third; and reasonable that he who by misplaced confidence has enabled such third person to occasion the loss should sustain it”—and refers to the well-known case of Lickbarrow v. Mason as to that. Then the court go on to say why in their judgment that principle applies to such a case, but they say, “But in this case, at the time of the assignment, Maclean had not possession of the documents. Nothing was advanced on the faith of them. There is merely a general description of documents expected to arrive, without knowing their contents, or how far they might be limited or qualified. The property of the firm in the goods expected was only subject to special stipulations in the contract of sale in the case of two of the three parcels, was also subject in all the three to the lien of unpaid vendors”—as it is in this case—and it is contended that before Maclean got possession of the documents, when his firm was in a condition of undoubted insolvency, and the terms of the documents were not disclosed, there was conveyed to the respondents by this assignment the basis of a prospective breach of trust and violation of contract?” And then, proceeding upon the general rule that you must give an honest interpretation and a fair interpretation to the words of any assignment, the court go on to say that it must read the words “all goods and bills of lading or other documents for all goods” to mean “such a security as I can fairly and honestly give.” That is, not any actual property I may have, but subject to the equities between me and anyone else. Then the following observation is made, which I adopt in this case:—“Doubtless a vendor's claim cannot prevail against the claim of a transferee for value given on the faith of negotiable security fairly and honestly taken; the extent to which he has so given value is a prior claim. But the rule is founded on the reason of it as already explained; cessante causa cessat ipsa lex. Where there is no advance of value given upon the faith of the document, where the object is simply by a sweeping declaration to gather in whatever may be got to repay a creditor of a debtor who had become insolvent, an improvident advance made upon the basis of a totally different security; where, upon the construction of the assignment, no interest is shown that would place the assignee in a better position than the assignor, and the bills of lading subsequently came to hand were transferred expressly in performance of the agreement of assignment, and without other consideration whatever, it appears to their Lordships

Q.B. Div.]

BRESLAUER v. BARWICK.

[C.P. Div.]

transfer so made, and under such circumstances, cannot be held sufficient to defeat the vendor's claim."

Now, that case and that principle came into discussion a little later on before the same tribunal, in the case of the Chartered Bank of India v. Henderson (L. Rep. 5 P. C. 501), and that case is valuable for this. As regards Lyall, Still, and Company, there was a similar promise to furnish shipping documents, a similar failure, and then there was a transfer by endorsement, but on the occasion of the transfer by endorsement of the bill of lading, the vendees, the transferors of the bill, had the bill in their custody, that is, in their possession, and although they had broken their previous promise the court said that the previous promise would not have been enough, but there was a sufficient bargain and agreement on the part of the bank not to proceed—to delay, give time, and to forbear upon the faith of the transfer of the bill of lading. Upon that ground the court, although distinguishing it from Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, in every way upheld the principle of that case. Now, that that is the case is very clear from the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock. I will not go through the case, but he says this (p. 510):—"It appears, then, that the bank purchased bills of exchange to the extent of 15,000*l.* from Messrs. Lyall, Still, and Company, and that they paid them the amount upon the stipulation that Messrs. Lyall, Still, and Co. were to hand them over shipping documents to the extent of the bills." Then they failed to do so. "They were urgently pressed to do so by the defendants; and the said firm, having been threatened by the defendants with immediate legal proceedings in the event of their failing to fulfil their said contract without further delay, promised the defendants that if they would abstain from commencing legal proceedings against them, and would consent to release them from their engagement to furnish the said shipping documents for silk and other China produce, and allow the said sum of 15,000*l.* sterling, which had been paid to them in advance for the said bills upon the faith of their undertaking, to deliver the said shipping documents as aforesaid to constitute an ordinary debt for money lent, they would deposit with the defendants other security for the repayment of the said sum; and they offered to deposit with the defendants at once in part fulfilment of such proposed substituted arrangement a bill of lading for goods of the value of 10,000*dols.* or thereabouts," the bill of lading in question in that case. Now, says the judge, "It appears that the bill of lading was indorsed and handed over by Messrs. Lyall, Still, and Co. to the bank in consideration of the bank's releasing them from the obligation which they had come under, to hand over shipping documents of the value of 15,000*l.*, and of their undertaking not to take the legal proceedings, criminal or civil, which they had threatened. It appears, therefore, to their Lordships that there was a sufficient consideration for the indorsement of the bill of lading to Messrs. Lyall, Still, and Co. to the bank." Then the attention of the court was naturally drawn to this case of Rodger, and the principles are laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock, in the passages I have already read; but then they say further that this case differs entirely from Rodger's case, because the bill of lading in Rodger's case was not handed over at the time, but was handed over in pursuance of the agreement generally to hand over all the documents.

Now those being the two cases, and the law having been thus clearly and explicitly laid down, the only question is whether this case falls within the principle of those two cases. I think it does, and in my opinion, the defendant in this case is entitled to my judgment.

Let us compare and see what the thing is. In the present case, as in Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, at the time of the promise made to cover up, which was on the 1st Jan., this bill of lading was not in the authorised possession of Geen, Stutchbury and Company. As I said before, I do not even know that they expected it, but I should think they did. That was the only occasion on which the plaintiff had made any advance. He had made the advance of 2000*l.* How could Mr. Scott be said to enable Geen, Stutchbury and Company to make the advance, when at the very time the advance was made the bill of lading referred to would not have been in the possession of Geen, Stutchbury and Company? How could it be said that Mr. Leask parted with his 2000*l.* on the faith of that endorsement, when in point of fact he knew nothing at all about it? It seems to me, therefore, that the whole consideration in this case came into effect, and had its full legal operation on the 1st Jan. At that time according to the finding of the jury there was a binding bargain between Geen, Stutchbury and Company and Mr. Leask, that further security should be given: and the facts of the case do not show that Mr. Scott has by any act of his enabled Geen, Stutchbury and Company to commit a fraud on Mr. Leask, which undoubtedly has been committed upon him.

Again, it must be observed that the position of the transferee or indorsee of a bill of lading is very different from that of the indorsee of a bill of exchange. The indorsee of a bill of exchange takes the bill freely, fully, and fairly, subject to any equities of the indorser. The indorsee of the bill of lading occupies, on the contrary, a mean position as between the indorsee of a bill of exchange and that of the transferor or indorser of a bill of lading; and as in Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, the indorsee has no better title than the indorser can give.

For these reasons I come to the conclusion that the defendant is entitled to my judgment.

Judgment for defendant with costs.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Hollams, Son and Coward.

Solicitors for defendant, Lowless, Nelson, Jones, and Thomas.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, and S. HARR, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Monday, June 19, 1876.

BRESLAUER v. BARWICK.

Charter-party—Mistake—Pleading.

Action by charterer on a charter-party. Defence, that the charter-party was made between defendant and the T. Co., and not plaintiff. Reply, that the agreement was between plaintiff and defendant; that in drawing up the charter-party one of the T. Co.'s printed forms was used, on which the name of the T. Co. appeared as

C.P. Div.]

BRESLAUER v. BARWICK.

[C.P. I.]

charterers; that by the mistake of plaintiff and defendant the T. Co.'s name was omitted to be struck out, and remained instead of plaintiff's name; that the charter-party was signed by plaintiff and defendant, and it was intended and agreed that plaintiff should be liable and entitled under it.

Held on demurrer that it was unnecessary that the charter-party should be rectified, and that the reply was good.

THIS was an action on a charter-party by the charterer against the owner of the steamer German Emperor. The plaintiff alleged in the statement of claim that the defendant's steamer, through the defendant's fault, did not proceed to the port named and load a cargo of ore according to the terms of the charter-party.

Statement of defence, paragraph 2: The said supposed charter-party, if made, which the defendant does not admit, was made by Messrs. Barnett Brothers, assuming to act as agents for the defendant in that behalf, and was between the defendant and a company called the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company (Limited), and not the plaintiff. The defendant says that the said Messieurs Barnett Brothers, were not authorised to make the supposed charter-party for the defendant.

Reply, paragraph 2: And as to the allegation in the 2nd paragraph of the statement of defence, that the charter-party was between the defendant and the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company (Limited), the plaintiff says, that it was agreed between defendant as the owner of the German Emperor (through his duly authorised agents, Barnett Brothers), and the plaintiff as charterer, that the German Emperor should be chartered to the plaintiff on the terms and conditions afterwards set out in the said charter-party. And for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement the said charter-party was drawn up. In drawing it up one of the printed forms belonging to the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company (Limited), in which their name was printed as charterer, was through the inadvertence of plaintiff and defendant made use of, and by the mistake and oversight of the plaintiff and the defendant the name so printed as charterer was omitted to be struck out, and remained in the charter-party as and instead of plaintiff's name. Plaintiff was not agent for the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company in effecting the charter. The company was not intended to be, and was not, the charterer, or in any way concerned in the business, and their name appears only in consequence of the before-mentioned mistake and as representing plaintiff's name. The charter-party as drawn up was signed by the plaintiff in his own name as charterer, and by the defendants (through their agents) as owners of the German Emperor, and it was intended by and agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that the plaintiff should be liable on and entitled to the benefit of the charter-party drawn up as aforesaid.

Demurrer on the ground that the reply admits that the written charter-party sued on was not in fact made by the plaintiff, and could not be made binding on him unless reformed, which was not done.

Bray, for the defendant.

French, for the plaintiff.

The following authorities were referred to:

Story on Equity Jurisprudence, sect. 152;
Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 (36 & 37 c. 66), s. 24, sub-sect. 7;
Mostyn v. The West Mostyn Coal and Iron Co.
34 L. T. Rep. N.S. 325; L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div.
45 L. J. 40, C. P.;
Wake v. Harrop, 1 H. & C. 202;
Truman v. Loder, 11 A. & E. 589.

BRETT, J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the plaintiff.

The statement of claim asserts that a charter-party was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the breach alleges that the defendant's steamer, through the defendant's default, did not proceed to the port named and load a cargo according to the terms of the charter-party. The statement of defence says that the charter-party was not entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, between the defendant and the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company; it really amounts to an argumentative traverse of what the statement of claim has asserted. Then the reply explains that there was an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that it was intended to bind the plaintiff and defendant, but a printed form was used, and the name of the company by mutual mistake left in, although the charter-party was really intended to bind both the plaintiff and the defendant.

The reply explains and leaves consistent the statements of claim and of defence. It supports the statement of claim, because it admits that the charter-party was intended to bind both parties; and it explains the defence, because it states that the name of the company was left in, and therefore it admits that the defence is colourably true, but it alleges mutual mistake. The defendant demurs, and for the purposes of the demurrer admits the reply to be true; that is, he admits an agreement that the charter-party should be made between himself and the plaintiff, and he admits that it was meant to bind him only as the owner, and that the company's name was left in by mistake. But he says the reply is bad because the plaintiff has not asked for the pen run through the name of the company in the charter-party. Then it is said that the plaintiff ought to have stated the whole facts in his statement of claim.

Now, I agree that proper pleadings under the Judicature Acts ought to state all the facts, and here, if there had been merely a traverse of the allegation in the statement of claim as to the making of the charter-party, the plaintiff would have been in a difficulty, and must have amended; but this is a colourable defence, and the plaintiff replies so as to explain the facts.

It is also said that this is a departure, for when there is a second pleading it must support the first. The second pleading may add a fact, but must not contradict the first, and in that view I think this reply is not a departure.

It is further said that the reply ought to ask that the charter-party be reformed, and that for this purpose the case be transferred to the Chancery Division; but the decision in Mostyn v. The West Mostyn Coal and Iron Company (ubi sup.) shows that in such a case as this it is not necessary to go through the manual labour of reforming the agreement, but that if such facts are shown as would entitle the Chancery Division to reform it, we must

C.P. Div.]

THRIFT v. YOULE.

[C.P. Div.]

reformed, and give judgment accordingly. It is true that the Chancery Division would require particular evidence of the facts alleged, and would want it proved that the instrument was drawn in error, and that what happened was caused by mutual mistake. But evidence need not be pleaded, and for the purpose of deciding on this demurrer the document is to be treated as if it were amended.

Mr. French has gone further than this, for he says that the document would not require amendment, and that a replication stating these facts could have been supported before the Judicature Acts. I am not prepared to say how this might be; I express no opinion. I think the circumstances are such as would make the Chancery Division reform the charter-party, that there is no departure, and that the reply is good.

GROVE, J.—I am of the same opinion, but I have had some hesitation. The Judicature Act requires the use of the new form of pleading, and statement of the facts, but not of the evidence. It is desirable fully to state the facts, and this is required so that the party may not get the benefit of the old form of pleading; under the new system he cannot avoid showing what his case is. I should have been inclined not to allow an amendment to get the plaintiff out of the difficulty into which he might have fallen from not fully stating the facts in his statement of claim, at least if it had appeared that this was done intentionally. As it is, I think the replication is not a departure, the whole of the facts are now out, and we ought to give judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Argles and Rawlins.

Solicitors for the defendant, Oliver and Botterell.

Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1876.

THRIFT v. YOULE.

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Shipping—Bill of lading—"Not accountable for leakage."

The common form in a bill of lading "not accountable for leakage" exempts the shipowner only from loss to the leaky package, and not from damage done to other packages by a liquid escaping.

APPEAL from the City of London Court.

The plaintiff was a shipowner; the defendant an owner of cargo on board the plaintiff's ship.

The action was brought for balance of freight due under a bill of lading under which the plaintiff carried in his ship from Villa Real in Portugal to London 1100 barrels of sardine oil and 106 bundles of palms, undertaking to deliver the same in London on payment of 200*l.* freight. The bill of lading also contained the exception, "Not accountable for rust, leakage, or breakage." The ship duly arrived in London, when it was found that by the leakage of one of the oil casks the palms had been injured, and that the cargo was otherwise damaged. The defendant paid the freight less an amount sufficient to cover the damage sustained. The plaintiff proceeded in the City of London Court for the balance of freight, and the defendant thereupon gave notice under the County Court Orders 1875, Order 10, rule 1, of a counter claim for the damage sustained by bad stowage and the leakage to the amount of 23*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

At the hearing before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, that learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiff for 6*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, finding that the plaintiff was entitled to 12*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* for balance of freight, but that the defendant was entitled to 5*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* for the bad stowage, but he held that the damage to the palms by leakage was covered by the bill of lading, and that the plaintiff was not responsible for it, at the same time giving leave to the defendant to move to set aside the verdict and enter judgment for the defendant for 10*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* The defendant having obtained a rule at chambers accordingly,

Charles Hall, for the plaintiff, showed cause.—The words "leakage and breakage" are not limited to what takes place within the package or cask. Taken in their natural sense they exempt the ship from all liability resulting from leakage or breakage.

The Hélène, 1 Bro. & L. 429; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 390;

The Nepoter, L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 375; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 355.

McLeod, for the defendant.—This is the first time it has been contended that this common form of a bill of lading could cover damage done by leakage of other goods. The cases cited are not applicable.

GROVE, J.—I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute. By the bill of lading the shipowner is "not accountable for rust, leakage, or breakage." That means to say that if casks or packages break or leak the shipowner is not responsible for the damage to those casks or packages or their contents. But there is nothing in the words to release a shipowner from other consequences of that leakage. In the case of "rust" that would be very unlikely to damage anything but the thing itself, and we may fairly conclude that the other words are intended to cover only damage to the package broken, leaking, or rusty, and not the consequences of that damage. The shipowner says he will not undertake that the goods will not rust, break, or leak, but nothing further. To allow a shipowner to avoid the consequences of a leakage from one package to the rest of his cargo would be a very formidable affair, and we are not warranted in doing so upon the authority of the cases cited to us. In The Hélène (ubi sup.) it was only decided that the loss of oil by leakage, however great, so long as it happened without negligence, was covered by the word "leakage" in the bill of lading. In The Nepoter (ubi sup.), Sir R. Phillimore held that the words would not cover damage by leakage if it was caused by neglect of proper precautions on the part of the shipowner.

DENMAN, J.—The natural interpretation to be put upon the word "leakage," in the connection in which it appears before us, is the diminution in quantity of the article itself. The word is merely intended to protect shipowners from the liability for damage to packages containing liquids. It is not intended to protect the shipowner from injury to other parts of the cargo resulting from the leakage. The decision of Sir R. Phillimore is in accordance with our views, because he declined to extend the meaning of "leakage," and confined it to damage to the thing itself. We decline to extend the meaning of the word.

PRIV. CO.]

KLEINWORT AND OTHERS v. THE CASSA MARITIMA OF GENOA.

[PRIV. C.]

Rule absolute with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Henderson and Buckle.

Solicitors for the defendant, Parker and Clarke.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, J. P. ASPINALL, and F. W. BAILEY, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Jan. 18, 1877.

(Present: The Right Hons. Lord BLACKBURN, Sir JAMES COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir M. SMITH, and Sir R. P. COLLIER.)

KLEINWORT AND OTHERS v. THE CASSA MARITIMA OF GENOA.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CEYLON.

Ship — Bottomry bond — Communication with owners of cargo.

A statement by the master of the injuries sustained by his ship and of the repairs necessary is not a sufficient communication with the owners to justify him in giving a bottomry bond upon the ship and cargo, if unaccompanied by a statement that such bond is necessary.

The mere receipt by the owners of the cargo of general information that the ship is damaged and in need of repairs, does not impose upon them the duty of supplying money for such repairs without further information.

The Onward (ante vol. 1, p. 540; 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 206; L. Rep. 4 A. & E. 38) affirmed and followed.

Judgment of the court below reversed.

THIS was an appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of the Island of Ceylon, dated 15th June 1875, reversing a decree of the district court of Galle, dated 23rd Oct. 1874.

The respondents were the holders of a bottomry bond, dated 12th March 1873, on a ship called the Maria Luisa, and her freight and cargo, and given under the following circumstances:

The Maria Luisa, an Italian ship of 703 tons register, was, by a charter-party dated at London the 19th May 1870, chartered by Messrs. J. D. Findlay and Company, of Glasgow, to load a cargo of rice at Rangoon, for carriage to Queenstown or other ports, for orders to discharge in the United Kingdom, or on the Continent between Havre and Hamburgh.

Under such charter-party the Maria Luisa loaded a cargo of rice, shipped by Gerber, Chrestien, and Company, to whom the master delivered a bill of lading, dated 28th June 1872, by which the cargo was made deliverable to their order.

The Maria Luisa sailed from Rangoon on the 9th July 1872, on her said voyage, with the said cargo on board her, but on or about the 7th Sept. 1872, put into the port of Trincomalee, in distress.

At Trincomalee, Emanuele Schiaffino, the master of the Maria Luisa, executed a bottomry bond, dated the 12th March 1873, on the Maria Luisa and her freight, and the said cargo of rice, whereby he bound himself and the Maria Luisa, her freight and cargo, to pay the respondents the sum of rs. 42,235 46 c., subject to the condition that if the Maria Luisa should sail from Trincomalee on her intended voyage to Cork or Falmouth, for or and that without deviation, and if the said m or the owner of the Maria Luisa should, w thirty days after her arrival at the port of charge, pay the said amount, the bond shoul void.

The Maria Luisa subsequently, on the April 1873, sailed from Trincomalee on her voyage with the said cargo, but on the 1st following she put into the port of Point de ( with her said cargo, and there remained. The master there sold, or caused to be sold, the cargo.

On the 10th Feb. 1874, the respondents commenced an action, No. 35,916, class 6, in District Court of Galle, upon the said bottomry bond against the said Emanuele Schiaffino to recover the sum of rs. 42,235 46c. from him, to obtain a mandate of sequestration to seize sequester pendente lite the proceeds of the cargo of rice, and to obtain payment to the respondent of the said proceeds. The cause of the alleged was that the Maria Luisa had improperly deviated from her voyage, and that the master abandoned the voyage, and the bond had become payable. The said Emanuele Schiaffino appeared in the said action, and the proceeds of the cargo of rice were, by mandate of the said court duly sequestered.

The said action came on for trial, and on the July 1874, judgment was given therein for respondents, against the said Emanuele Schiaffino for rs. 42,235 46c., with costs of suit; but it was ordered that the proceeds of the sale of the cargo should remain under sequestration until the rights of all parties interested therein should have been determined.

The appellants, who were consignees of the cargo and plaintiffs in an action, No. 35,916, depending in the said court, intervened in the said action, No. 35,916, and proceedings were taken between the appellants, as such consignees, and the respondents, as holders of the said bottomry bond, to determine their respective claims in preference in respect of the proceeds of the cargo.

The appellants contested the validity of the bond as regarded the cargo, mainly upon the ground that the said Emanuele Schiaffino had executed the said bond without communicating or attempting to communicate with them in any way before executing the same, and without communicating or attempting to communicate to the Messrs. Gerber, Chrestien, and Co., the shipowners thereof, and who remained interested therein that he had any intention to bottomry the cargo, although he could and ought to have made such respective communications.

It appeared by the evidence of the said appellants that after his arrival with the ship at Trincomalee he had telegraphed and written to the said Messrs. Gerber, Chrestien, and Co., telling them of the ship's mishap, and that they communicated to him, asking for all particulars as to what was to be done with the cargo, and for all particulars which might interest them as shippers. He had executed the bond in question without informing them of there being any necessity for his intention, to bottomry the cargo.

The learned judge of the said District Court of Galle held that the said bond was valid against the said cargo, on the ground

V. Co.]

KLEINWORT AND OTHERS v. THE CASSA MARITIMA OF GENOA.

[Priv. Co.]

unication to the owners of cargo of the r's intention to bottomry the cargo, and on 3rd Oct. 1874, delivered his judgment, by he repelled the claim of the respondents pheld the claim of the appellants to the said eds of the cargo, and directed the respon-to pay the costs of the proceedings between pellants and respondents.

respondents appealed from the said judgof the 23rd Oct. 1874, of the District Court ille to the Supreme Court of the Island of n, which court, by its decree or judgment the 15th June 1875 (the judgment appealed , adjudged that the said judgment of the ct Court of Galle be set aside and the claim appellants be dismissed with costs, upon the d that under the particular circumstances case communication with the owners of the was not necessary.

the 31st Aug. 1875, the case having been ht and considered in review before the said me Court, the judgment of the said Supreme of the 15th June was confirmed.

appellants thereupon, pursuant to leave , appealed to Her Majesty in Council against aid judgment or decree of the Supreme Court Island of Ceylon of the 15th June 1875.

remaining facts of the case are sufficiently at in the judgment of the court.

en, Q.C. and Clarkson appeared for the lants, and maintained that the bond was in-because the master had not communicated the owners of the cargo. See The Ham- (Br. & Lush. 253; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S.
Onward (ante, vol. 1, p. 540; 28 L. T. Rep.
L. Rep. 4 A. & E. 38), and the cases there

The cases show clearly that the master communicate to the owners of the cargo his tion to hypothecate it, or show cause why he not do so. The burden of proof lies on the rs of the bond. In this case there was no sity to hypothecate the cargo, but it was comy sacrificed to the ship.

ster (Milward, Q.C. with him) for the relent, argued that sufficient communication een made, and that, therefore, the master mple authority to execute the bond.

en, Q.C. was not called upon to reply.
a judgment of their Lordships was delivered

M. SMITH.—The question in this case is er a bottomry bond given by the master of Maria Luisa upon the ship and cargo to the ndents, who are a company at Genoa, is a hypothecation as regards the cargo.

way in which the case came before the court for decision was this :

action was brought upon the bottomry bond
e respondents against the master of the ship, udgment was given in favour of the respon-in that action. A second action was brought e lower court by the present appellants, the rs of the cargo, against the master for what contended was an unauthorised sale of the . In that action judgment was also given for laintiffs, the present appellants, but an order nade that the proceeds of the cargo should questrated until the question as to the ty of the bottomry bond could be decided, and ghts of the plaintiffs, as owners of the cargo, f the respondents, as the lenders upon ottomry bond, could be ascertained. It is unnecessary to detail at any length what the proceedings were, but in this latter proceeding the question which has been already stated arose.

It is admitted that the law is now settled, that a master cannot bottomry a ship without communication with his owner, if communication be practicable, and, à fortiori, cannot hypothecate the cargo without communicating with the owner of it, if communication with such owner be practicable.
The law has been thus laid down in several cases which have been referred to at the Bar, and it is only necessary to notice one or two of them.
One of those cases was The Bonaparte (3 W. Rob.
298; 8 Moo. P.C. 459), in which the judgment was delivered by Lord Justice Knight Bruce. In that judgment, according to the corrected report of it in the subsequent case of The Hamburg (B.
& L. 253; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 1), it was said:—"That it is an universal rule that the master, if in a state of distress or pressure, before hypothecating the cargo, must communicate or even endeavour to communicate with the owner of the cargo, has not been alleged, and is a position that could not be maintained;
but it may safely, both on authority and on principle, be said, that in general it is his duty to do so, or it is his duty in general to attempt to do so." Then follows the sentence which was not correctly reported in the original report of The Bonaparte. The passage is this: "If according to the circumstances in which he is placed it be reasonable that he should—if it be rational to expect that he may obtain an answer within a time not inconvenient with reference to the circumstances of the case, then it must be taken upon authority and principle that it is the duty of the master to do so, or at least to make the attempt." This duty was affirmed, and the cases referred to, in a recent decision of this committee in the case of The Australasian Steam Navigation Company v. Morse (ante, vol. 1, p. 407; L. Rep. 4 P.C. 222; 27 L. T. Rep. N.S. 357). The latest case on the subject, The Onward (ante, vol. 1, p. 540; L. Rep. 4 A. & E. 38; 28 L. T. Rep. N.S. 206), is in its facts extremely like the present, and there the law was stated by Sir Robert Phillimore. He cites the language of this tribunal in a judgment delivered by Sir John Jervis in the case of The Oriental (7 Moo. P. C. 389), to this effect: "There was not only the power of communication, but an absolute communication made. It was made, and properly made, at the moment of the accident, communicated and received within a few hours, and by a means of communication in existence which must be taken to be the proper mode or channel of communication, not to send money, as suggested, because the electric telegraph will not carry money, but to send a communication on the one hand and receive an answer on the other. Why, here being the means of communication, and the authority of the master being founded on the impossibility of a communication, their lordships are of opinion that there was no authority in the master to raise money on bottomry." Sir Robert Phillimore's observations following that citation are: "In the opinion, therefore, of this Appellate Court, whose decisions are binding upon me, a mere statement of injuries done to the ship and of the consequent necessity of repairs which would entail considerable expense, unaccompanied by a statement that a bottomry bond must be had recourse to, was not a sufficient communication to

PRIV. CO.]

KLEINWORT AND OTHERS v. THE CASSA MARITIMA OF GENOA.

[PRIV. CO.]

the owners." In this view of the law their lordships entirely agree.

It is not necessary to go at any great length into the facts of the case, but those which are material to be considered are as follow: The cargo, which was of rice, was shipped on board the Maria Luisa at Rangoon. The bill of lading stated that it was shipped by Gerber, Chrestien, and Company, who carry on business at Rangoon. The cargo is stated to be "10,700 bags new Rangoon cargo rice, and the destination of the ship was 'Queenstown, Plymouth, Falmouth, or Cowes'" for orders, and the rice was made deliverable to order, that is, to the order of the shippers. It seems that the Maria Luisa sailed from Rangoon in July 1872, and it may be taken that in the course of her voyage she met with bad weather and received considerable damage. On 7th Sept. 1872 she put into Trincomalee, and there, according to the evidence of the master—and he is supported to some extent by other witnesses—the vessel required very considerable repair, she wanted re-coppering, new sails, and other things. For the purposes of the present decision—although their lordships do not intend to affirm the facts—it may be assumed that the ship was in a state of distress requiring considerable repairs, that it was not possible to raise the money upon the personal credit of the owners of the ship or of the master, and that the security of the ship alone was not sufficient for the advances which were required to repair the ship. It seems to have been thought by the learned judges in the court below, that the cargo was in a damaged state, and that money was wanted either for the purpose of carrying the cargo on speedily, or for some necessary expenditure for the purpose of putting the cargo into better condition by drying it, or otherwise. Upon looking at the evidence that appears to be a mistaken view of the facts. According to the master's evidence the cargo was landed at Trincomalee, and remained there for a considerable time until he re-shipped it; but when he did re-ship it the rice was in good condition, and for anything that appears nothing had been done to it except that, of course, when taken out of the ship it had been stored. A small quantity was thrown overboard, which appears to have been at the bottom of the ship, and damaged; but there is no evidence that the bulk of the cargo was in any way damaged so as to require its being carried on speedily, or any expenditure incurred for its preservation. The master being at Trincomalee and under the necessity of raising money—which has been, for the purposes of this decision, assumed—it appears that he communicated with the agents of the present respondents, the Cassa Marittima, and agreed with them, on the 10th Dec. 1872, to hypothecate the ship, cargo, and freight. The bottomry bond, which was executed in pursuance of that agreement, is dated the 12th March, 1873. Taking the earlier of these dates, the 10th Dec. their Lordships are of opinion that there was before that time a reasonable possibility of communicating to the owners of the cargo or those who represented the owners what was intended to be done, and that that communication not having been made there was a want of authority on the part of the master to execute the bond on the 12th March, or indeed to enter into the agreement on the previous 10th Dec. It may be stated that the ship sailed from Trincomalee on the 11th April, 1873, having re-shipped the rice; that she put into Point de Galle in May, 1873; and that in August of that year the cargo, being then, according to surveys made at Galle, in a perishable condition and unfit to be carried on, was sold.

In the present appeal their Lordships find nothing to do with the question whether this was a justifiable one or not. The only question before them for determination is whether there was sufficient authority to execute the bottomry bond? The duty of the master to communicate with the owners, or those who may be fairly taken to represent the owners, before taking this extraordinary step, being plain, let us see what he did.

It appears that he considered Gerber, Chrestien, and Company as the owners of the cargo, and had reason to do so. He knew no other owners. They were the shippers of the cargo, and had taken the bill of lading from him, making the cargo deliverable to their order, and throughout appears to treat them as the owners of it at least at a later period, when probably the difficulty made apparent, he says that he did not know the real owners were, and therefore could not communicate with them. Mr. Webster, who appears for the respondents, has very properly admitted that if communication were necessary, Gerber, Chrestien, and Company were the persons to whom it should have been made; and he has not denied that the case resolves itself into the question whether, they being the persons to whom the communication ought to have been made, that what was in fact made to them was sufficient or not?

The master telegraphed to them shortly after his arrival at Trincomalee, he says two days after the ship had put into that port, that she was leaking and in want of repair. It appears that Gerber, Chrestien, and Company telegraphed back to him requesting information with more particularity as to the state of the ship and cargo. That telegram is dated the 19th Sept., and no answer appears to have been given by the master to it. An important letter was put in evidence from Gerber, Chrestien, and Company to the master, complaining of his neglect in not giving them further particulars. The letter, dated 1st Nov. 1872, is as follows: "Our telegram of the 19th Sept. requesting you to be so good as to give us particulars of the damage suffered by your cargo, having remained unnoticed, we now beg to request you will be so good as to tell us when you intend to sail from Trincomalee after completing the repairs of your ship; if you are taking on all the cargo shipped by us here; or, if any has been sold, how much, and all other particulars which may be of interest to us as shippers of the cargo."

Now what was the duty of the master when he received this letter? If his duty was not clear before there was now a distinct request by the shippers of the cargo to know what the state of the cargo was; whether it would be taken on; if any had been sold, how much had been sold; and all other particulars which might be of interest to the shippers of the cargo. The master at the time he received this letter, or shortly after, must have contemplated hypothecating the cargo, and in doing so of communicating to those whom he knew to be the shippers of the cargo that he was hypothecating it, he maintains an absolute right. This letter is dated the 1st Nov. The duty of the master to hypothecate is not made until the s receipt. The rice was, upon the receiving no damage, yet the master hypothecated it to the Cassa Maritima bottomry bond without giving the information to the shippers that he was so. This appears to their lordships to be a case of dereliction of duty on the part of the master, when about to take the extreme measure of hypothecating the cargo for the needs of Gerber and Company had been committed. They might have said, "We will raise money rather than you should raise bottomry interest;" or they might have given other directions which it might have been in their interest that he should have done, but he has taken this unauthorised step. The shippers cannot but observe that the master who decided this case on appeal by the district judge seems to have given his decision on some mistake as to the facts. In his judgment he says: "The shippers therefore knew at a very early period that the cargo had suffered damage, and that the ship required repairs. The telegram was sent, and the master swore, as soon as he arrived at Trincomalee, that the rice was rapidly going on from bad to worse. Mr. [?] of the surveyors, says that the rice was damaged and discoloured, and the stench gave evidence of rapid decay going on."

It turns out that the rice was not damaged at Trincomalee, although it was in that condition at Galle; and as the surveyor was not at Trincomalee.

Thus the learned judge appears to be in error as to the state of things which existed at Trincomalee.

He then says: "The master himself swears that as he knew, the shippers were informed of the cargo, and this evidence is sufficient."

The learned judge, in that passage, properly to have taken the view that Gerber and Company were the right persons to be communicated with. Then he says: "But, when he sent his telegram to Chrestien, and Company, till August the rice was sold, he received no offer of funds from them or from anyone who now claim the rice as consignees." The shippers cannot but observe that this passage is an assumption which is erroneous. The judgment of the learned judge amounts to this: That Gerber, Chrestien, and Company were the proper persons to be communicated with, but that the communication was sufficient, and that it became sufficient on the slight information they had, to offer money to the master for the repairs of the ship. Their lordships think that duty was imposed upon Gerber, Chrestien, and Company, and that they did what they might reasonably be expected to do in giving the general information that the cargo had received damage and wanted repairs, but that the master might also be damaged, they were not to know the particulars, and, therefore, received no answer to that circumstances their Lordships will advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court, and to affirm the decree of the district judge of Galle. The respondents must pay to the appellants their costs of the proceedings in the Supreme Court, and of the appeal to Her Majesty.

Solicitors for the appellants, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

Solicitor for the respondents, Thomas Cooper.

Feb. 12 and 13, 1877.

(Present: The Right Hons. Sir JAMES W. COLVILLE, Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, Sir MONTAGUE E. SMITH, and Sir ROBERT P. COLLIER.)

THE LAKE ST. CLAIR v. THE UNDERWRITER.

Collision—Rule of the road—Ship in stays.

When a vessel in tacking misses stays, she is bound to manœuvre in such a way as to come under command again as soon as possible, so as not to embarrass an approaching vessel by remaining in an unmanageable condition.

A vessel on the starboard tack close hauled approaching another, apparently on the port tack, is, nevertheless, bound to keep out of the way, so soon as she ascertains that the other vessel is unmanageable and unable to obey the ordinary rule of the road at sea.

Seemingly, when a vessel is in stays or unmanageable, it is her duty to apprise an approaching vessel of the fact.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Quebec, by the owner of the ship Underwriter, by which that vessel had been held alone to blame for a collision which took place between her and the ship Lake St. Clair, soon after midnight on the 26th July 1875, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The circumstances under which the collision occurred appear sufficiently from the reasons and judgment of the court below.

The witnesses, as in the case of The Norma (ante p. 272), had been examined on interrogatories before the registrar of the court previous to the hearing, and the preliminary act on behalf of the Underwriter was in the form objected to by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in that case, whilst that on behalf of the Lake St. Clair contained all the questions and answers of the form in use in the High Court of Justice.

There were cross causes in the court below, which came on for hearing on the 8th Oct. 1875, before the judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Quebec, assisted by nautical assessors, and after hearing counsel on both sides, the learned judge reserved judgment.

Nov. 12, 1875.—STUART, J. (stating the reasons assigned by the court for deciding that where there were two sailing ships, one on the starboard and the other on the port tack, and the former had by a rule of navigation the right to keep her course, yet in a case of imminent danger, she was bound to give way, and for not doing so was condemned in damages and costs.) Two ships, the Lake St. Clair, an iron ship of 1061 tons, with a general cargo and a crew of thirty-one persons, bound for Montreal, and the Underwriter, a ship of 1439 tons in ballast, with a crew of twenty-three persons, bound for Quebec, on the 26th July last, half an hour after midnight, were off Cape Rozier, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The light at the Cape bore about N.W.

PRIV. CO.]

THE LAKE ST. CLAIR v. THE UNDERWRITER.

[

distant about ten miles. The wind was N. of W., and the night clear. While the Underwriter was on the starboard tack and the Lake St. Clair on the port tack, as contended for by the former, but when she was in stays, as asserted by the latter, the collision happened which has given rise to cross actions, in each of which the question is who was in fault?

The Lake St. Clair was struck at about right angles 60ft. from the stern on the starboard side abaft the main rigging by the bow of the Underwriter, which passed between her backstays, doing serious damage, in which is included the bulging in of seven plates, the breaking of twelve rivets, and the breaking of two plates in the bulwarks.

The Underwriter also sustained considerable damage, in which is comprised the facing piece in front of the stem torn off, the breaking of the bowsprit short off at the knight heads, and the topgallant mast sprung.

The libel for the Lake St. Clair states an occurrence which took place an hour before the collision, from which a malicious intent to do her injury has been laid to the charge of the persons on board the Underwriter. The Lake St. Clair, it is said, had then the starboard tack, and the Underwriter was approaching on the port tack, but did not give way, which compelled the Lake St. Clair, to avoid a collision, to put her helm down to go about, and missing stays she hailed the Underwriter to keep away, and the answer she received from her while passing close under the port quarter was "Look out, I will do for you next time."

The same libel then continues to assert the facts attending the collision. About a quarter of an hour after midnight, the wind having fallen quite light, the Lake St. Clair put her helm down and went round on the port tack, and had not gathered headway when a flaw of wind took her almost aback, and then the red light of the Underwriter was about three points on the starboard bow, about half a mile off.

That then having her helm up (port) she immediately ordered it "hard a port." That this was done all hands being on deck, that her afteryards were squared and the spanker braild in, but that she had no headway, was motionless, and would not pay off.

Seeing this she hailed the Underwriter, as she was approaching her, to put her helm up and keep away, as she, the Lake St. Clair, had no way, and would not steer. At the same time the helm of the Lake St. Clair was put down (starboard), her afteryards braced up, and her spanker set. To the warning thus given, and while the Lake St. Clair remained motionless, the Underwriter, as she approached, answered "Not a damned inch," and when on the lee beam of the Lake St. Clair she was heard to order the helm down (port), which caused her to luff and strike the Lake St. Clair stem on.

The Underwriter has met this charge by alleging that about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour after being on the starboard tack close hauled the green light of the Lake St. Clair, distant between two and three miles, was seen on the lee bow. That as the vessels approached the Underwriter was kept steady on her course by the wind, and on the green light nearing, the Lake St. Clair was hailed to port her helm, to which no attention was paid, that the Lake St. Clair by course close hauled on the port tack as the Underwriter's bows, and that when was imminent, the helm of the Underwriter put hard a port to bring her up in the while her sails were shaking she col the Lake St. Clair, which was struck o board side abaft the mainmast by the b Underwriter.

These pleadings suggest the following tions:

1. Was the Lake St. Clair in stays Underwriter was approaching on the tack, or under such command on the p to obey her helm? and if she were not

2. Did the Underwriter receive such to make it imperative on that vessel her?

The rule of navigation which applies on different tacks admits of no question. on the port tack must give way to anotl starboard tack, and if this case be as re by the Underwriter, that while she w starboard tack the Lake St. Clair, th way on the port tack, was attempting her bows, and thus came into collision, St. Clair is alone to blame, but, on t hand, if the Lake St. Clair had been bore the situation of a vessel when she is st going about from one tack to another, st or not as yet able to make progress on course, the case is quite altered, and if not willingly place herself in danger by into stays, she is exempt from censure.

The Underwriter had the starboard tack mate has stated that five minutes before mi she was put about on that tack, that it took a quarter of an hour to bring her round, and the Lake St. Clair was from two to three ahead, that as the vessels approached the Lake St. Clair was on the port tack under full sail, her sails were not shaking, and that it was in the act of crossing the bows of the Underwriter that the collision occurred. There are witnesses who give similar testimony, persons on board the Underwriter, the master, the mate, and two seamen.

On the other hand, the officers of the Lake St. Clair, followed by eleven other persons on board of her, swear that she was attempting to round on the port tack, that while in the doing so the red light of the Underwriter was immediately seen about half a mile or three quarters distant on the starboard bow, that the helm of the Lake St. Clair was immediately put "hard a port" in order to keep her away and pass the bow of the Underwriter, that she also squared the afteryards and braild in her spanker, but had no steerage way, and would not pay off.

In the meantime the Underwriter was close up under the lee of the Lake St. Clair, the helm of the latter was put down (starboard), and she was forced to luff to the wind if she got head way.

In weighing this testimony it is to be observed that the persons on board the Lake St. Clair were in a better position to see what the Underwriter was doing than persons on another vessel at some distance. Then, in point of weight of testimony is with the Lake St. Clair, and, with this testimony before me, I am of no other conclusion, subject, however, to the influence as the opinion of nautic

This testimony is to be found in the depositions of the officers and eleven other persons on board of the Lake St. Clair. Their testimony is concordant, varying only in the exact words attributed to the Underwriter, and uniform. It further appears from it that three minutes after the hailing would have sufficed for the starboarding of her helm, and that there was double that time to do it before she struck, and that then the Underwriter would have gone clear. Again, it is said that if, instead of luffing at the last moment, she had starboarded,

PRIV. CO.]

THE LAKE ST. CLAIR v. THE UNDERWRITER.

[PRIV.]

she would have gone clear, and some of these witnesses swear that if she had even kept her course she would either have cleared the Lake St. Clair or done comparatively but little damage.

This testimony has thus shown that repeated warning was given to the Underwriter to avoid a collision, and within time sufficient to do it which was treated not only with neglect but contempt.

To counteract the effect of this evidence there are but four witnesses, from among three-and-twenty persons on board of the Underwriter, produced. The master has been examined, in addition to the four, but having come on deck but a moment before the collision he could not have known what took place. The four were, the second mate, in charge at the time, the chief mate, Sullivan, a seaman at the wheel, and Olsen, the look-out. The two first and the last have said that they did not hear the hailing from the Lake St. Clair except the call to starboard after the order to port was given by the first and second mate, but this negative testimony meets with a contradiction from the remaining one of the four—Sullivan, the man at the wheel, whose testimony does not accord with that of the second mate. According to his statement, the second mate, while in charge, not only heard the call to starboard from the Lake St. Clair, but had made up his mind not to comply with it as the following questions and answers show when put to and answered by Sullivan:—

Question. You have stated that the second mate told you to keep the ship on the course you had got, by the wind, and not to mind what anyone else said. What did anyone else say?

Answer. They were singing out on board the other ship for us to put our helm to starboard. They were singing out forward, but I cannot say whether it was on board the other ship or not.

Question. About eight or ten minutes previous to the collision did you hear much hailing from the Lake St. Clair, or forward of you?

Answer. Yes; I heard someone shouting out to put the helm to starboard.

This man, before giving these answers, had stated that he received orders from the second mate to keep the ship by the wind. The first mate has said that when he had given up his watch to the second mate he enjoined him to do so, and this after the light of the Lake St. Clair was visible. So determined was the second mate to comply with this order that he went aft and repeated it, while the call to starboard was coming from the Lake St. Clair, and he had time not only to do this, but to go forward and return to the wheel before her helm was ported. It is needless to say that the hailing to starboard was not from the Underwriter, as her two mates and her look-out ignore having heard the call at all until after the helm of the Underwriter was put hard a-port, and therefore must have come from the Lake St. Clair, and, as the man at the wheel heard it eight or ten minutes before the collision, there can be no doubt of both the first and second mates having heard it also. Then there is other evidence quite convincing that the hailing from the Lake St. Clair was heard by the second mate, to be found in his answer to a question put to him by persons on board the Lake St. Clair, when he went on board of her after the collision. He then said, not that he did not hear the call to starboard, but that it was too late, and that he was afraid of striking the Lake St. Clair further forward, and, on his cross-examination as a witness, when asked if he heard shouting from Lake St. Clair he admitted that he had; and he did not answer it? his reply was, "Probably did, but I don't remember," an answer that bears but one construction.

The evidence of these five witnesses is negative that they did not hear or do not remember. Opposed to it is the testimony of several who heard the hailing and the answers to it already stated. If this evidence were untrue, it is scarcely credible that out of the twenty-three persons on board the Underwriter no one of them could be found who so by declaring that during the eight or ten minutes before the collision he was in a position to hear, and that no such warning, as has been stated, was given to the Underwriter.

The following questions, with the answers thereto, put to, and given by the nautical assessor with whose advice I am aided, apply to the suits now under consideration.

1. Was the Lake St. Clair in stays, helpless, unmanageable, at and before the time of collision, and, if so, how long? Answer. She was; according to the evidence, from ten to fifteen minutes before the collision.

2. Was the Underwriter notified in sufficient time of the Lake St. Clair being in stays, helpless, unmanageable; and, if so, could she have taken any and what steps whereby the collision might have been prevented? Answer. Yes; and there are two steps that she could have done, she could have put her helm astarboard, or have everything aback. Either of these courses would have prevented the collision.

3. Was either or which of the above-named vessels to blame for the collision? Answer. I entertain no doubt of its being owing solely to the negligence and unseamanlike conduct of the Underwriter, in charge of the Underwriter, immediately previous to the collision, that it occurred, and that the persons in charge of the Lake St. Clair were in no way to blame for it.

E. D. ASHE, Commander R.N.

P. GOURDEAU, Harbour Master.

A decree must therefore go for the damages and costs sustained by the Lake St. Clair, and also a decree dismissing the suit of the Underwriter for costs.

In rendering these judgments I wish to be distinctly understood that due regard has been had to the rule of navigation which has been evoked. It is not the use or the exercise of it that has been prevented, but the abuse of it to the prejudice of another which is disallowed, and the wrong which has been done must have its remedy. The very old but useful maxim, "Utere tuo alienum non lidas" admits of application at sea as on land, and the persons who have caused it and thereby caused this collision will be recompensed to their advantage. While I make these remarks I do not think that I can properly discharge the unpleasant duty I am upon to perform if I did not characterize the conduct as the language of the persons on board the Underwriter as they deserve. The first was negligent and the last disgracefully intemperate I am compelled to say, and to add that if on the occasion of this collision the wind had been perhaps but a breath stronger the blow more severe, a heavily laden vessel would have been sunk instantaneously.

[No.]

THE LAKE ST. CLAIR v. THE UNDERWRITER.

[Priv. Co.]

, and, in the latter case, after the language; and following such a disaster, it might be difficult for those using it to resist such a charge of another description.

this judgment the owner of the Underwriter, his proctor, on the 26th Nov. 1875, decried that he asserted an appeal to Her Majesty in Her Privy Council, and on 20th April petition of appeal was transmitted to the Privy Council. The case for the Underwriter submitted that the decree of the court was erroneous, and that it ought to be reversed the following, among other, reasons:

1. The learned judge erroneously held that the Underwriter proved that the collision was purposely and maliciously occasioned by those on board the Underwriter.

2. The evidence proved that the Lake St. Clair was at the time before the collision sailing on the port tack.

3. It was the duty of the Lake St. Clair, being on the port tack, to take in due time proper measures to avoid the way of the Underwriter which was then being sailed by the wind on the starboard tack, and the Lake St. Clair failed to perform such duty. 4. Even if the Lake St. Clair had not sufficient time to enable her to pay off under a port helm, nothing to indicate such inability to the Underwriter, the evidence proved that the Lake St. Clair ought to have taken the proper measures for avoiding the said vessel.

5. The evidence proved that the Underwriter was in no way to blame with respect to the said collision.

6. The judgment and decree of the court below was in favour of the respondents, whereas upon the facts the judgment ought to have been in favour of the appellants.

7. That for the respondent submitted that the collision was correct, and ought to be affirmed, for, on the other hand, the following reasons:

1. It was proved that the Lake St. Clair was at the time of the collision, and that the Underwriter was aware of this in time to have avoided the collision.

2. The collision was solely due to the negligence, and unseamanlike conduct of the officers of the Underwriter.

3. Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson for appellant. The story told by the Lake St. Clair, and the judgment of the court below, is correct, the collision was wilful, intentional, and wrongful act of those on board the Underwriter, and not an act of negligence for which the owners of that vessel are liable; therefore the owners must succeed in their appeal, and the suit against them be dismissed. But we were on the starboard tack, and it was our duty to hold our course. The Lake St. Clair appeared to us to be on the port tack, and we had a right to expect her to get out of our way. She says that she was in stays to get out of our way, and missed stays and got sternway. So it was improper conduct on her part, and we were on the same tack it was our duty to hold our course. The Lake St. Clair had no right to go into stays under such circumstances. The Agra and The Elizabeth 11 Rep. 1 P. C. 501; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 11. Law Cas., O. S., 532. When the Underwriter discovered the condition of the Lake St. Clair it was right to put the helm down, and would have the effect of stopping her. The fact was the Lake St. Clair did not stop soon enough, in consequence of keeping a port helm, and so did not take steps to apprise us of her condition. She ought to have seen us before she hauled her foreyard, and if she had done so and let it remain abox, we should have seen her condition, and been able to get out of the way, and she would have paid off, probably have gathered sternway, and the collision would not have happened. If it was true that she had come round on her new tack but was not full, if, when the afteryards were squared and the spanker brailled up, the head yards had been braced aback, she would have paid off, and the collision would have been avoided. On the previous occasion of passing, the Lake St. Clair violated the rule of the road by coming up to the wind and losing her headway, and so occasioned risk of a collision, and that is an excuse for the strong language used. There is no evidence that it was used by an officer of the Underwriter. The meaning of it was only, "I have had to give way this tack, it will be your duty to do so next tack."

Butt, Q.C. and Bompas, Q.C.—The rule as to a starboard tacked vessel keeping her course does not apply when she is approaching a vessel in stays. In fact, she was an overtaking vessel within rule 17, and, therefore, bound to keep out of our way. We gave warning of our position as soon as it was possible to do so, and in time for the Underwriter to have avoided the collision. The rule that a port tacked ship should give way, cannot apply till she has got way on the port tack. The conduct of those on board the Underwriter was negligent in perversely keeping on their course so long when they might have seen the condition we were in, but does not amount to an actual wilful intent to run us down. It is a case like that of The Franconia (ante, p. 295; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 721); R. v. Keyn (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. D. 90; 1. Rep. 2 Ex. Div. 63), where the act which occasioned the loss of life was the result of negligence in the navigation of the ship, and not a premeditated crime.

Clarkson, in reply.—The Underwriter was not an overtaking ship; considering the state of the weather, a dark night, and the embarrassing circumstances in which we were placed there was no negligence in acting as we did. We put the helm down, which was right, and as soon as we were aware that anything was really amiss with the Lake St. Clair.

Feb. 13.—The judgment of the court was delivered by Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from the Vice-Admiralty Court of Quebec, in a case of collision which took place between twelve and one o'clock in the morning of the 26th July, in the year 1875.

The place of the collision seems to have been off Cape Rosier, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The ships that collided were two large vessels, the Lake St. Clair, an iron ship of 1031 tons, with a general cargo and crew of thirty-one hands, bound for Montreal, and the Underwriter, a full-rigged ship of 1431 tons, in ballast, with a crew of twenty-eight hands, bound for Quebec. The nature of the damage inflicted was this: the Lake St. Clair was struck at about right angles, sixty feet from the stern on the starboard side, about the main rigging, the bow of the Underwriter passing between her main topmast backstays, and mainmast stays. Both these vessels were on tacks beating up the river St. Lawrence, and the learned judge of the court below, after consulting his nautical assessor, in a judgment which bears the marks of great pains and care, came to the conclusion that the Underwriter was alone to blame for this collision.

PRIV. CO.]

THE LAKE ST. CLAIR v. THE UNDERWRITER.

[P

With that judgment their Lordships are unable wholly to concur.

In the judgment which their Lordships are about to deliver, they are disposed to assume generally the facts stated on behalf of the Lake St. Clair as the foundation for that judgment; that is to say, they are of opinion that she had not any way upon her at the time of the collision, though they are also of opinion that the Underwriter could not see the state of her canvas, or so discover that she was in that condition. It is unnecessary to go into an earlier part of the history of this case, upon which, though much discussed in the court below, the determination of this appeal it is now admitted, does not depend. The vessels had tacked shortly before the occurrence which led to the collision. At that time the Lake St. Clair had come round upon the port tack, and the other vessel, the Underwriter, was upon the starboard tack, seeing the green light of the St. Clair.

Now there is no doubt that, according to the general rule of navigation, it is the duty of the port tacked ship to get out of the way of the starboard tacked ship; but her defence in this case was that she had thrown herself into stays, and that she was helpless and unmanageable at the time of the collision; and therefore, that the other vessel, though, according to the general law, it was her duty to keep her course, seeing, as she ought to have seen, and knowing, as she ought to have known, the helpless state of the Lake St. Clair, ought to have executed some manœuvre herself—the nature of which will presently be adverted to—which would have prevented the collision.

In this case some nautical questions of considerable difficulty and nicety are raised, and their Lordships have thought it proper to consult very carefully with their nautical assessors and to put to them certain questions, the results of which I am about to state, so far as they have been adopted by their Lordships.

The first question which requires to be decided appears to be the following: Was the Lake St. Clair, in the circumstances of the case, and having regard to her position relatively to the Underwriter, justified in tacking at all in the face of that vessel? After consultation with the nautical assessors, this question must be answered, their Lordships think, in the affirmative. They think there was, then, no reason to apprehend that anything would prevent her safely executing that manœuvre at that time. The next question is whether, if the Lake St. Clair had come round so as to be fairly on the port tack, and had seen the red light on the Underwriter, which is admitted to have been the proper light, and which, according to her own statement, was seen by her at the distance of half to three quarters of a mile, she was right in the manœuvre which she adopted, or whether she might not have taken steps which would have enabled her to get out of the way of the starboard tacked vessel. Their Lordships, after consultation with their nautical assessors, are of opinion that the Lake St. Clair ought to have braced her head yards abox, and not to have hauled her foreyard, as it is admitted she and thus she would have been enabled to give herself sternway; and, moreover, wo allowed the Underwriter to go safely ah

For these reasons their Lordships thin
Lake St. Clair is to blame.

In these circumstances their Lordships to consider whether the Underwriter was apprised of the condition in which the Clair was, and whether, on being so fairly there were no manœuvres which she could cuted which would have, on her part, the collision; it being perfectly c though the port tacked vessel is to of the way of the starboard tacked vesse starboard tacked vessel is to keep her co rule of navigation does not mean, and been construed to mean, that the starboa vessel is to obstinately continue on b when she sees that, in the particular circu by a variation from it she can avoi sion.

It has been already mentioned that th ships are of opinion that the Lake St. not apprise the Underwriter of her inci take the proper manœuvres incident tacked ship by the state of her canvas fair result of the evidence appears to be state of her canvas was not visible on Underwriter. But it seems to be a fact in which is well established, that those on Lake St. Clair did hail to those on b Underwriter at a sufficient distance to them of the condition which they were hailing took place when the vessels were Lordships' judgment, so far apart as to sufficient interval of time to warn the Und if she had attended to the hailing which her. It has been suggested that the Und ought to have starboarded her helm, and e have avoided the collision. Their Lordshi consultation with their nautical assessors, opinion that that would not have been a manœuvre, but that the Underwriter ou have executed another manœuvre, namely, to put her helm down at an earlier period she did, that is, at the moment when the hailing reached her, which it is clear she did not do which if she had done would have avoided collision. She would have brought her head the wind, and there would have been no collision.

Their Lordships are, therefore, compelled to that the Underwriter was also to blame for collision; and the decree which they will advise Her Majesty to make will be as follows: To reverse both the decrees of the Court there being cross suits in this case, and to give in both suits that both ships are to blame; the damages be assessed according to the ordinary rule; and that each party must bear its own costs in the court below and of this appeal.

Solicitor for appellant, Thomas Cooper.

Solicitors for respondent, Bischoff, Bannister & Co.

APP.]

SHAND AND OTHERS v. BOWES AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

eme Court of Judicature.

TTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

ted by W. APPLETON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1876.

KELLY, C.B., MELLISH, L.J., BRETT and AMPHLETT, JJ.A.)

D AND OTHERS v. BOWES AND OTHERS.

ent to be shipped in one or both of two —A small fraction only shipped in the given —Refusal to accept—Meaning of "to be l"—Effect of date of bill of lading.
t bought of plaintiff 600 tons of rice, "to oped during the months of March—per Rajah of Cokhin." The 600 tons were bags, only fifty of which were put on March, the rest being shipped in February, pon defendants refused to accept:
ersing the decision of the Court of Queen's , that this case was undistinguishable from der v. Vanderzee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), it there had been no breach of the contract the goods.

an appeal of the plaintiffs against a deci-he Queen's Bench Division (Blackburn, nd Lush, JJ.), ordering judgment to be for the defendants, pursuant to leave at the trial, when the jury found a ver-be plaintiffs.

nisi for a new trial for verdict against had also been obtained, and was now aintiff sought damages for the breach of t to buy 600 tons of rice, "to be shipped e months of March and April, per Rajah

i." There were, in fact, two contracts, 400 tons, but nothing turned on that fact, ase was argued and judgment proceeded e had been but one for 600 tons.
co was shipped in 8200 bags, in four a bill of lading being given for each parcel omplete as follows:

ary 23	.....	1780	bags.
24	.....	1780	"
28	.....	3560	"
..... 3	.....	1080	"

8200 bags.

fty bags were put on board actually in The ship sailed on the 10th March, and d defendant refused to accept, on the at the shipment had not been within the ired by the contract.

se in the court below is reported ante p.
Rep. 1 Q. B. D. 470; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S.

Q. C. and J. C. Matthew, for plaintiffs.—
t below treat this contract as if the 600 d be broken up into parcels for the pur-shipment. That cannot be done, there can one shipment, and that is not complete et bill of lading is signed. That must be so when the ship is named, as it is here.
ntract there is no mention of the bill of It was otherwise in Alexander v. Vander- tep. 7 C. P. 530). The judgment below this length, if there is a contract for 300 nothing said about the bill of lading, and if 100 be shipped in the previous month, and a bill of lading happen to be signed, the rest shipped and a bill of lading as to them signed in the proper months, the contract is broken. [BRETT, J.A.—Is not the real point that the judgment below makes the bill of lading a part of the shipment?] It does, but there is no mention of the bill of lading in the contract. The only shipment the purchaser was bound to take was one for 600 tons. [BRETT, J.A.—Even if there had been mention of the bill of lading in the contract, would it have made any difference? If three bills had been offered, and not the fourth, he would not have been obliged to have taken them.] The judgment below would admit that if only one bill of lading had been given, and that when all had been shipped, i.e., in March, the shipment would have been good, and yet there was nothing here to prevent the first three bills being withdrawn, and only one given which should cover the whole shipment. That is of frequent occurrence in practice. If this contract is for the court, it must arrive at the same conclusion as did the jury. But it was properly for the jury, for there was ambiguity on the face of the contract, i.e., the phrase was clearly a business phrase:

Smith v. Thompson, 8 C. B. 44.

Gainsford Bruce (Benjamin, Q.C., with him), for defendants.—If it was for the jury, the evidence was practically all in my favour, and the judge should have directed a verdict for defendants.
What is the meaning of a March or April shipment? You are asked to say March means February. A substantial quantity at least should have been shipped in March or April, which was clearly not the case here. In Alexander v. Vanderzee, (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), the contract was substantially for a cargo, and a cargo cannot be said to be shipped till the whole cargo has been put on board.
Moreover, in that case, the bulk was put on board within the contract months. There must be something to fix the date of shipment if the time when the goods are put on board does not do so, and the bill of lading does that more conveniently than anything else, for the time when the ship sails is too uncertain. [BRETT, J.A.—But the shipment is of 600 tons. It comes to this; is there any shipment of a special amount till the whole is shipped?]

Cohen, Q.C., in reply.—The witnesses had no usage to speak to; each had merely his own opinion on the subject to give. That is the case over and over again. The President of the Rice Association was called, and he said he never knew of such a question, and had never heard of Alexander v. Vanderzee.

Cur adv. vult.

Jan. 22.—The judgment of the court was delivered by

MELLISH, L.J.—The question we have to determine is whether the Queen's Bench Division have properly held as a matter of law contrary to the finding of the jury, that the defendants were justified in refusing to accept the 600 tons of rice upon the ground that they were not shipped in March and April, within the meaning of the two contracts between the parties.

The court below came to the conclusion that they were, upon the ground that each parcel of rice must be deemed to have been completely shipped at the time wh

CT. OF APP.]

TULLY v. HOWLING.

[CT. OF A

lading for that parcel was signed, and that, therefore, nine-tenths of the whole quantity were shipped in February, and it is obvious that if the whole 600 tons had been shipped under one bill of lading instead of being shipped in four parcels under four different bills of lading, the court below would have come to a different conclusion, and would have held the case to have been governed by Alexander v. Vanderzee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530) because they admit that the 1080 bags included in the last bill of lading ought to be held to have been shipped in March, because the last fifty bags of that parcel were put on board in March.

We have, therefore, to consider whether, having regard to the terms of the two contracts, the circumstances of several bills of lading having been signed for different parcels of the rice, instead of the whole being shipped under one bill of lading makes any difference; and we are of opinion that it does not. A bill of lading is no part of the shipping or shipment of the cargo. It is only a declaration that the cargo mentioned has been shipped, and is to be delivered on certain conditions. The contracts contain no reference whatever to bills of lading. They were contracts to deliver rice ex-quay or ex-warehouse. The first contract might have been fulfilled by the delivery of any 300 tons out of the 600 tons of rice shipped under all the bills of lading, and the second contract by the delivery of the remaining quantity, and we think that the question we have to determine is practically the same (and the parties themselves have treated it so), as if there had been only one contract to sell 600 tons; and that, as the bills of lading were not to be transferred by the vendor to the purchaser, it could not matter whether the goods were shipped by the vendor under one, or under several bills of lading.

The real question is whether, in order to fulfil a contract that the 600 tons should be shipped in March or April, it is necessary that the whole 600 tons should have been put on board in March or April, or whether it is sufficient that the shipment should have been completed in March or April; and this seems to me to be substantially the same question as that which was decided by the Court and jury in Alexander v. Vanderzee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530). The word "shipped" is, we think, capable of both constructions, and if it be admitted that its literal meaning would imply that the whole quantity must be put on board during the specified time, that is a construction which seems to put a great additional burden on the seller without any corresponding benefit to the purchaser, and the consequence of adopting it would, we think, be that purchasers would, without any real reason, frequently obtain an excuse for rejecting contracts when prices had dropped. The sole object of the purchasers of such produce as that in question in this case in confining the sellers to a particular time, within which the goods must have been shipped is, as far as appears, that he may know when the goods are likely to arrive. That object seems as effectually obtained by knowing when the shipment will be or has been completed as by knowing when each part of the goods was put on board. We therefore should entirely agree with the decision in Alexander v. Vanderzee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), even if that decision was not binding on me. We are of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division to enter the verdict the defendants ought to be reversed.

We have next to consider whether the granted by the Court of Appeal for a new upon the ground that the verdict was against weight of evidence ought to be made and on this part of the case we have considerable doubt. Several witnesses, amongst others the plaintiff himself have posed that they understood the word "ship" to mean put on board, and that the quantity sold must be put on board at the specified time; and no witness says the word in mercantile usage has any other meaning and the jury appear to have based their verdict upon a distinction which, though made by two witnesses, we do not think satisfactory between contracts in which the ship is mentioned and contracts which may be fulfilled by delivering goods out of any ship. On the other hand we think it is obvious, on reading through the evidence that each witness was not speaking to any mercantile meaning which the word "ship" or "shipment" bears, but was putting his own construction on the word; and as persons are not lawyers are apt to do, interpret the word literally. No witness stated that he knew instances of goods rejected, and rejection acquiesced in, although the shipments been completed within the appointed time, but the whole of the goods were not put on board during that time; and this is the sort of error which, in my opinion, ought to be given before a rule established by the case of Alexander v. Vanderzee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), is departed from. I do not believe that if a new trial was ordered, evidence could be obtained.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the rule for a new trial should be discharged.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Stevens, Williams and Harries.

Solicitors for the defendants, Latley and Hall.

Nov. 15, 1876; Jan. 22, 1877.

(Before KELLY, C.B., MELLISH, L.J., BRETT and AMPHLETT, JJ.A.)

TULLY v. HOWLING.

Vessel chartered for a stated time—Detention by order of Board of Trade—Refusal of charterer to accept.

The charterer of a vessel chartered for a specified time, commencing on a named day who cannot have the vessel on the day agreed on, is entitled to cancel the charter.

The plaintiff chartered a vessel of the defendant for twelve months from a named day; the vessel was detained by the Board of Trade for repairs and was not ready for the plaintiff until several months after date.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that time was the essence of the contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to repudiate the charter.

This was an appeal by the defendant from the decision of the Queen's Bench Division, affirming judgment for the plaintiff on a claim for demurrage advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant in account of a ship which he had chartered.

d which he had refused to load, as not ready at the time agreed on. r-party, so far as material, was as mutually agreed between L. W. Howling, the ship or vessel called the Conquest, of burden of 187 tons register admeasurements, whereof William Sarson is master, rland, bound to London, and Messrs. nd Co., merchants and freighters of the twelve months, for as many consecutive ship can enter upon after the completion voyage at and from Sunderland to Lon- ship being tight, staunch, and strong, and ted for the voyage, the said master, with hall, with the first opportunity, load a full argo of coals in river or dock, at an ap- rope, or staiths, and being so laden shall ed to London, or so near thereto as she and deliver the same to the order of the or their assigns, he or they paying freight the rate of 7s. per ton.

pletion of the first voyage, and when were ready to load the ship, she was tained by the Board of Trade as un- The plaintiffs thereupon declined to charter-party, and brought an action efendant to recover 30l. for advances efendant, whilst admitting the plain- et up a counter claim for damages in plaintiff's refusal to take the ship. of the case are set out fully in the the Court of Appeal.

aving been entered at the trial for t for 122l. damages, from which the by the plaintiff was to be deducted, 2, pursuant to leave reserved, moved Bench Division to set aside the judg- defendant and enter judgment for the 0l.

75.—Waddy, Q.C. and Crompton, for the defendant.

C.J.—This case seems to my mind r. The cases cited by Mr. Webster cation; they were not cases in which was one that had reference to a given e use of the ship for a given time, the essence of the present contract.

says: "I want a vessel for twelve a given date;" or, if you please, rmination of a given voyage." I think of doubt which of those two is the ction of the contract, but, taking it hat it comes to is this: the bargain aintiff is to have the use of the ship onths, but the defendant is not in a give him the ship for twelve months from which it was agreed the term, whether it was a given date or the of a given voyage. He is not in a ive him the use of the vessel, because h a state that neither the owner nor ould be justified in sending her to defendant admits that to be the case, upon himself to repair the vessel. By is taking the vessel back on his own air he makes it impossible for him to part of the contract, which is that the all have the use of the vessel for hs from a given period. Therefore, that, if the charterer is to take the, he must take her not for twelve for twelve months less two months. cannot be said that there was not a substantial deviation from the contract. I am of opinion that under the circumstances the plaintiff was perfectly justified in saying, "What I bargained for was the use of the ship for a consecutive series of voyages; you cannot give me that, and I am not bound to go into the market to get some other ship and make some other bargain, which may be advantageous or disadvantageous to me." I think these facts distinguish the case from those cited by Mr. Webster, in none of which was time of the essence of the contract.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think there is nothing in the contract to show that the time might be divided into months. The contract which was contemplated was a contract for twelve months. During a substantial part of the twelve months, quite sufficient to frustrate the object of the contract, there was an inability to comply with the bargain which had been come to between the plaintiff and the defendant. Under these circumstances I cannot entertain any doubt that it was such a failure as entitled the plaintiff to say, "I will end the contract and find some other means of carrying out my object."

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The bargain was a bargain for the use of a ship for twelve months, and the owner was not, at the time when the contract began to run, enabled to give the charterer that use, and was unable to give it for two months afterwards. In my opinion, under these circumstances, the charterer may, if he pleases, repudiate the contract, because he contracts for twelve months' service, and he is not bound to take ten months' service. The cases cited by Mr. Webster stand on an entirely different footing. All those were cases of voyage charters. Where a ship is chartered for a voyage without any definite period for the commencement of the voyage, and a delay takes place, the question is, whether that delay is so great as to frustrate the object for which the charterer entered into the charter-party. Here it is not so. The plaintiff cannot have the services of the ship he contracted for during twelve months, and the question is to be determined upon the construction of the contract itself. Here he bargained to have the services of the ship for twelve months from the time when she should return from the voyage from Sunderland to London, which she was about to commence, and she had returned from the voyage on the 23rd March. Then the time began to run for which he stipulated to have the services of the ship. It is then discovered that the ship is in such a state that the owner is not able to take her to sea. Then the order came from the Board of Trade, and it takes two months to repair her. After that time the shipowner says: "You are bound to take her for the rest of the time." But I apprehend that on no principle could he say that. This is entirely different from a case of a voyage charter, where the only question is whether the delay is so great as to make it useless to prosecute the voyage to its intended end. I cannot say that I have the slightest doubt upon the point; therefore the judgment must be set aside, and the judgment entered for the plaintiff.

From this judgment the defendant appealed.

Nov. 15, 1876.—Philbrick, Q.C. and Webster for the appellant.—The question here is whether time is of the essence of the contract; the contention for the defendant is that there was no contract for

[Ct. of App.]

TULLY v. HOWLING.

[Ct. of twelve months, beginning at a fixed date. The condition as to the staunchness of the ship is not a condition precedent, and the delay was not such as to completely frustrate the object of the contract, so as to justify the plaintiff's refusal to load. If the judgment of the court below is right even a day's delay would have avoided this contract, and that is in contradiction to the current of authority. If the plaintiff has any claim, it is by a cross action, and even then he cannot show that he has done all in his power to mitigate the damages by hiring a vessel for two months during which the ship was delayed. They cited

Boone v. Eyre, 2 W. Bl. 1312;
Hare v. Remis, 5 H. & N. 19;
Tarabochia v. Hicks, 1 H. & N. 183;
Havelock v. Geddes, 10 East, 555;
Dimach v. Corlett, 19 Moo. P. C. 199;
Behn v. Burness, 3 B. & S. 751;
Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Company, ante, vol. 2, p. 435; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 572;
Potter v. Rankin, ante, vol. 2, p. 65; L. Rep. 6 H. of L. 83;
McAndrew v. Chapple, L. Rep. 1 C. P. 643; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 239.

Orompton (Waddy, Q.C. with him) for the plaintiff.—The defendant contracted to supply a named vessel in a specified condition on a fixed date, he has failed to do this, and the plaintiff is consequently free to throw up the charter. The plaintiff was not bound to commit himself to fresh risks by hiring another vessel. This breach goes to the root of the contract, and frustrates the plaintiff's object in hiring the vessel.

Bradford v. Williams, L. Rep. 7 Ex. 250.

Webster in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 22, 1877.—The judgment of Kelly, C.B., Mellish, L.J., and Amphlett, J.A., was delivered by MELLISH, L.J.—This was an appeal from a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division ordering a verdict which at the trial had been entered for the defendant on a counter-claim for 92*l.* to be entered for the plaintiff for 30*l.* pursuant to leave reserved.

The defendant admitted that he owed the plaintiff the 30*l.*, and the only question in the cause was, whether the defendant under the circumstances proved at the trial was entitled to succeed on a counter-claim by which he sought to recover damages from the plaintiff on account of the plaintiff having refused to perform a charter-party he had entered into with the defendant.

By this charter-party it was agreed that the defendant's vessel, the Conquest, then in the port of Sunderland, and bound for London, should be chartered to the plaintiff for twelve months, for as many consecutive voyages between Sunderland and London as the said ship could enter upon after the completion of the then present voyage. The Conquest duly completed her then present voyage, and returned to Sunderland in March 1875. On the 8th April the defendant gave notice to the plaintiff that on the 9th April the Conquest would be ready to receive her cargo, and it was admitted in the argument before us that the year for which the Conquest was chartered began to run on the 9th April. The plaintiff endeavoured to procure a cargo for the Conquest, but for some time he was unable to procure one. He then determined to load the Conquest on his own account, and on the 20th

April gave notice to the master that he was to load. Before, however, any cargo was loaded, the officer of the Board of Trade to the vessel taking any cargo on b account of her being unseaworthy, and 7th May a formal order was issued d the Conquest until she was repaired. Th the plaintiff, on the 9th May, not being ab the vessel, gave notice to the defendant recinded the charter. The defendant p without delay to repair the Conquest, and 17th June she was repaired and ready to cargo, but the plaintiff refused to load her.

These being the circumstances of the case been decided by the Queen's Bench Division the plaintiff was justified in rescinding the and in refusing to load the Conquest, and w opinion that their judgment ought to be a

It was admitted in the argument before the year for which the Conquest was ch commenced on the 9th April, and th Conquest was not really ready to receive a that the plaintiff could have had the use until the 17th June, and therefore the q simply is: Is a person who has agreed to a vessel for twelve months, commencing fr 9th April, bound to wait until the 17th before he obtains possession of the vessel, he then bound to take her for a period than ten months? In other words, in a for a stipulated time, is the time of the co the contract, or is the charterer bound to w vessel for a substantially different time fr time specified in the charter? We are of t that as in a charter for a voyage, the sp voyage would be of the essence of the co and the charterer, if he could not have the the vessel for the specified voyage, would b bound to take her for any other voyage, a charter for time, if the charterer cannot ha vessel for the specified time, he is not bo take the vessel for a shorter time, or a tially different time, but that if he cannot g vessel for the specified time he may thw the charter.

In all contracts which are to be m performed, the party who claims perform must be ready to perform his part of contract, and cannot compel the opposi to take something substantially different that which he contracted to give him there is an agreement to sell a hundred of wheat, the purchaser is not bound to ninety quarters, though the price of wha fallen, and it is for his advantage to ha smaller quantity. He can say, "I never to buy a quantity of ninety quarters, and fore, I will not take them." So, in the case, the plaintiff can say, "I never a charter the Conquest from the 17th Jun the 9th April 1876, and therefore I will her for that period."

Several cases were referred to, but one of them which related to time was the case of Havelock v. Geddes (c). In that case, however, it was adm the pleadings, as is repeatedly point Lord Ellenborough in his judgment, the charterer had had the use of the sh the action was brought to recover fr earned, and therefore the court no it was no defence that the ship

[APP.]

THE SWALLOW.

[CT. OF APP.]

d at the commencement of the charter in ne; but it was not held that a charterer d chartered a vessel for twelve months is to accept the use of the vessel for a itially different period, nor is any opinion sed to that effect. The other cases which ted seem to us to have no bearing on the rt, J.A.—I agree, not on the ground that s in such a charter a warranty that a ship be seaworthy on the day when the charter mmence, with a right to reject the ship if warranty is not complied with, nor on the le that time was the essence of the con- but on the ground that, under the circum- proved at the trial, the jury might, and should, in reason, have found that the ship it fit for the purpose for which she was ed, and could not be made fit within any hich would not have frustrated the object adventure. Judgment affirmed.

sitors for appellant, Lowless and Co.
sitor for respondent, Hickin.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

orted by J. P. AUSTIN and F. W. RAINE, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Monday, March 12, 1877.

efore JAMES and MELLISH, L.JJ., and BAGGALLAY, J.A.)

APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

THE SWALLOW.

on—Dumb barge—Lights—Inevitable acci-—Practice—Materials for appeal—Judgment ourt below—Costs.

a collision occurs between a dumb barge out lights and a steamer on a dark night in river Thames, there is no presumption of law the steamer is to blame. It is in all cases eary for those who allege negligence, causing ilision, on the part of another vessel, to e it.

easons for judgment of the County Court je, as well as for that of the High Court, ld be before the Court of Appeal when a her appeal is allowed to that Court.

not allowed when the Court of Appeal re- d the decision of the court below, in an al for which permission was necessary.

vas an action for damage sustained by the barge Rhine in a collision which took place okwall Reach, in the river Thames, on the an. 1876, between that barge and the steam- Swallow, belonging to the General Steam ation Company. It appeared that the barge out 3 a.m., going down with the tide, deeply with a cargo of copper ore; she had no lights oyed. The Swallow was coming up the river oyage from Ostend, the weather was thick, ose on board the Swallow did not see the until close to her, owing, it was alleged, to et that there was another barge, light, and ore higher out of the water than the , coming down behind her, which, in arkness, rendered the Rhine invisible it was too late to avoid a collision. on as the light barge was observed, right the helm of the Swallow was ported, and rge hailed, and on the Rhine being distinguished the engines of the Swallow were reversed full speed; nevertheless the Swallow struck the barge and sunk her.

The cause was originally instituted in the City of London Court, and on the 4th July 1876, came on for hearing before Mr. Commissioner Kerr and nautical assessors, when, after examination of witnesses, and after consultation with the nautical assessors, the learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs, on the ground that he was advised by the nautical assessors that the Swallow was to blame, adding, however, that "Possibly, if he had had to decide the matter he might have come to a different conclusion."

From this judgment the defendants appealed, and on the 2nd Dec. 1876, the appeal came on for hearing before the judge of the High Court of Admiralty, assisted by Trinity Masters.

Butt, Q.C. and Phillimore, for the appellants.

Cohen, Q.C. and Hall, for the respondents.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Commissioner Kerr, in the City of London Court. The facts are very short and simple. The collision took place between the steamship Swallow, belonging to the General Steam Navigation Company, and a barge called the Rhine, on the 20th Jan., at night, when off Blackwall Point, the steamer ran down the barge. The papers laid before the court show that the learned judge himself was of opinion that the steamer was not to blame, but as the nautical assessors, who are admitted to be competent to discharge their duty, came to the conclusion that she was, he thought it right to obey their directions.

Now, unfortunately, there are no reasons stated why the nautical assessors came to this conclusion, and, in this most unsatisfactory state of things, as far as I can gather from the arguments of counsel and from the evidence before us, it appears to be conceded that the barge was in no way to blame.

I have ruled that it was not her duty to carry lights (The Owen Wallis, ante, vol. 2, p. 206; L. Rep. 4 Ad. & Eco. 175; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 41), and, with that exception, there are no facts which show that she was in any way to blame. It is admitted that the weather was not such as to justify a collision, that both the barge and the steamer were justified in navigating the river, and there was no fog that prevented their seeing each other at such a distance as to have enabled them to take proper precautions. There is no dispute as to the law that it was the duty of the steamer to keep clear of the barge; and, if the barge was not to blame, it seems difficult to avoid the conclusion that the author of the collision, the vessel inflicting the blow, must be the one in fault.

Under these circumstances, I do not think that I can reverse the sentence of the court below. I say this because I have looked, and with some anxious consideration, with the assistance of the Elder Brethren, at the question whether the law with respect to the navigation of the Thames by barges should not undergo some alteration, which is a matter well worthy of consideration; because it may well be that some regulations might be made with regard to carrying lights, and with regard to the weather when they should carry lights. But, looking to the existing law, I do not think I should be justified in reversing the sentence of the court below, and, therefore, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

CT. OF APP.]

THE SWALLOW.

[CT. OF AP.]

I will give permission to appeal. It is very desirable that there should be a further hearing.

From this judgment the defendants, owners of the Swallow, in accordance with the permission granted, again appealed.

March 12.—Butt, Q.C. and Clarkson for appellants. —The tide was running down four knots, and the steamer was only coming up two or three knots an hour over the ground. She could not have come up more carefully; if she had gone slower she would not have been under command. She had a good look out, but was prevented from seeing the Rhine in consequence of another barge higher out of the water, behind and in a line with her. Under the circumstances it was the duty of the barge, for the safe navigation of the river by other vessels, to make her position known by some means. It is true that it has been decided that the rules as to lights to be carried by ships do not apply to these dumb barges; but that does not relieve the barge from the duty of informing other vessels by some means or another of her position, e.g., by waiving a light or otherwise. The first intimation we had of her position was a hail from her to port our helm, and immediately the order was given or board the Swallow "hard a port," but it was already too late to avoid a collision. The learned Judge of the City of London Court did not himself consider that any blame attached to the Swallow, but allowed himself to be guided by his nautical assessors, and the learned Judge of the High Court of Admiralty based his judgment in part on a supposed concession that the barge was not to blame, but no such concession was made. It was argued that although the barge need not carry side lights, yet that she was bound to show a light of some sort under such circumstances. [JAMES, L.J.—The fact of a collision taking place does not necessarily involve negligence.] That is true; but here there was nothing to prevent the barge showing a light, and if she had done so no collision would have happened. [JAMES, L.J.—I do not know of any express statute that obliges a carriage using an ordinary highway at night to carry lights.] No; but if a carriage not carrying lights came into collision with one having lights, it would be strong evidence of negligence on the part of the one without lights. At all events, there is no evidence of negligence on the part of the steamer, and if a barge chooses to navigate the river under such conditions without a light, she does so at her own risk.

Cohen, Q.C. (with him Hall and Hannen), for respondents.—The law does not absolutely, and in all cases, require a steamer to get out of the way of other vessels, but when a collision takes place, the onus of proof is on her to show that she could not have avoided the collision, and she has not satisfied it. [MELLISH, L.J.—Do you contend that it is not necessary for the plaintiffs in such a case to prove negligence on the part of the defendant?] The negligence is necessarily inferred from the facts. If there had been a proper lookout the barge would have been seen sooner. A witness on shore says he saw it 250 or 300 yards off. If the Swallow had exercised proper vigilance the collision would not have occurred: those on board her were well aware that the tide was running down four knots, and if they were only stemming it, as they say, two knots, yet they knew that they must be approaching barges drifting at the rate of six knots and that is a state of things requiring an amount of caution not exercised in this case. I nautical assessor in both courts below consider that the facts proved showed negligence, and the Court of Appeal will hesitate to reverse decision depending upon technical nautical knowledge. There is no duty or obligation on a barge to show a light, and by doing so she would be more likely to embarrass approaching vessels than not doing so. Those on board the Rhine did everything that they ought to do; they hailed the steamer to get out of the way, and the fact of not doing so establishes a prima facie case of negligence against her. [JAMES, L.J.—The learned judge of the High Court of Admiralty seems to think that there is some question of law in this case.] That is as to the duty of a barge to show a light under any circumstances, with reference to his own decision that they need not do so (Owen Wallis, ante, vol. 1, p. 206; L. Rep. 4 Ad. Ecc. 175; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 41.) [BAGGALL J.A.—It is proved that the look-outs were properly stationed on board the Swallow, and, in the absence of contradiction, it must be assumed that they did their duty.]

Clarkson, in reply, was stopped.

JAMES, L.J.—Do the appellants ask for costs?

Clarkson.—The appeal has been prosecuted by the General Steam Navigation Company as a question of principle; if we succeed we are, I think, entitled to our costs, but I will not press the claim.

JAMES, L.J.—This case has come before us in a way which I think might deserve some reprehension. There is, no doubt, a question of principle in this case so far as the General Steam Navigation Company is concerned. It is desirable in cases of this kind, upon a question of fact, to state the reasons for the decision of the County Court judge, as well as for that of the judge of the Admiralty Court, on coming to us, should sufficiently appear. We cannot help saying that the decision of the County Court was not in accordance with the opinion of the judge who tried the case, because he thought himself obliged to decide it otherwise than he would have done if he had had to decide it in a case of common law as an ordinary case, under the circumstances he would have nonsuited the plaintiff. One does not know to what extent the nautical assessors gave their opinion to him as to the collision, according to the materials furnished to us, but it is clear that the learned judge of the Court of Admiralty entertained considerable doubts about the matter, and we have got to deal with it in this way, not to overrule the decision of the Admiralty Court, but to review the decision of each court.

Now, our assessors think that, under the circumstances, having regard to the conditions of the night and the position of the vessels, really was a case of inevitable accident. In such cases the burthen of proof is on the person who alleges the negligence on the part of the defendant, or the result of whose acts he complains. In the evidence here, and with the assistance of the nautical assessors, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs have not discharged the onus of proof on the question of proving negligence on the part of the defendants; and there is very strong evidence

Div.]

SCRUTTON v. CHILDS.

[Q.B. Div.]

on board the Swallow, that they were using due caution, going at a moderate speed, in a little way, and having a proper look out; they gave further evidence that this particular barge was not seen, while another barge that was off was seen by those on board the Swallow. This does not help coming to the conclusion that the defendants have exonerated themselves, and that they ought to have had the judgment of the County regard to the costs of the hearing of the appeals, the latter one of which has been decided here—as it really has been a matter of fact for the General Steam Navigation Company to bring them a second appeal at all—we think that justice of the case will be met by allowing the costs, while relieving the barge from any further order for payment of costs will be dismissed.

ISH, L.J. and BAGGALLAY, J.A. concurred.
Attorneys for appellants, Batham and Co.
Attorney for respondents, Farnfield.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

by J. M. LELY, Esq., and M. W. McKELLAR, Esq.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Jan. 19, 1877.

SCRUTTON v. CHILDS.

Charter-party—Custom—Whether excluded by terms of charter-party—West India ports—Payment of lighterage, whether by shipowner or charterer. Plaintiffs agreed with the defendant by charter-party that the defendant's ship should load at Barbadoes, St. Kitts, or Trinidad, a full cargo of West India produce, "to be brought to and taken alongside at merchant's risk and expense." The charter-party also contained the words "cargo at Trinidad as customary." These words, with others, were in writing. The defendant's ship loaded at Trinidad in the customary manner, but the captain refused to pay the lighterage, whereupon the plaintiffs had to bear the expense of it: that the stipulation, "cargo at Trinidad as customary," worked an exception to the stipulation as to loading at merchant's risk, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the lighterage from the defendant.

As a special case stated after joinder of issue under the Judicature Act 1875, Order V., rule 2, pursuant to the order of the Court, J.

On or about the 26th Feb. 1875, a charter-party was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, being a document partly in writing and partly in print, and, save as mentioned in the paragraph of the case, as follows:

[The written part is printed in italics.]

Memorandum of charter.

London, 26th Feb. 1875.

This day mutually agreed between G. Childs, Esq., shipowner, and Scrutton, Sons, and Co., charterers, that the ship or vessel called the Elizabeth Childs, of the measurement of 390 tons or thereabouts, now at the port of Greenock, and Messrs. Scrutton, Sons, and Co., of London, merchants, that the said ship, being tight, staunch, and strong, and every way fitted for the voyage, shall with all convenient speed proceed to Barbadoes direct, for owners' benefit, to load there or at St. Kitts or Trinidad. Orders to be given at Barbadoes on arrival. Time occupied in shifting ports not to count as lay days, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and shall then and there load from the factors of the said merchants, at the customary places, a full and complete cargo of West India produce, to be brought to and taken from alongside at merchants' risk and expense, with 150 barrels, or equal thereto, for small stowage in tierces and barrels. Small stowage shipped in excess of the stipulated quantity, at master's written request, to be at current rate, unless exceeding rate per charter-party.

Charterers have liberty to ship up to 500 bags sugar at 30s. per ton, which said merchants hereby bind themselves to ship not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry as aforesaid, and being so loaded shall therewith proceed to Queenstown, or any convenient port of call, for orders to discharge at one safe port in United Kingdom. Three clear days to be allowed for transmission of orders, or lay days to count, and discharge in such docks as charterers may appoint, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and deliver the same on being paid freight.

If loaded at Barbadoes, 42s. 6d. per ton of 20cwt. net delivery for sugar or molasses, if ordered direct on signing bill of lading. 45s. if calling for orders. Other goods in proportion. Five guineas gratuity.

In full of primage or pierage, and all port charges and pilotage, the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigations, of whatever nature and kind soever during the said voyage always excepted. The freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at two months date from report.

Thirty running days (Sundays excepted) to be allowed the said merchants for loading at loading port and receiving orders at port of call homewards, to date from 25th May 1875, if ready and required, days on demurrage (Sundays excepted) over and above the said laying days, at fourpence per register ton per day.

If not arrived at loading port and ready to load on or before the 25th July 1875, charterers' agents have liberty to cancel this charter.

Sufficient money to be advanced the master for ordinary disbursements at loading port, at the current rate of exchange and free of commission, but subject to insurance, to be deducted from the ship's freight on settlement.

The master to give notice to charterers' agents of the vessel being ready to receive cargo, and to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight required, without prejudice to this charter.

The charterers' responsibility on this charter-party to cease as soon as the cargo is on board, except for such differences as may exist between the freight payable by bills of lading at the port of discharge and the freight due to the vessel by virtue of this charter-party. Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, estimated freight. The ship to be addressed to and reported at the custom house by C. J. Brightman and Co., London, or to their agents at the port of discharge, who are to receive a commission of five per cent. on this charter, which is due on signing this agreement, also on dead freight and demurrage, if any, with 2½ per cent. for transacting ship's business at loading port, and 2½ per cent. for reporting inwards at port of discharge.

The vessel to be consigned to charterers' agents, free of commission. Should the vessel return without a full cargo, the charterers are to have the benefit of any reduction in the ordinary dock dues.

Should vessel load at St. Kitts, freight in that case to be 43/9, if ordered direct, on signing bill of lading; 2/6 extra if calling for orders, and if vessel loads at Trinidad freight to be 47/6, if to United Kingdom orders or direct, 10 per cent. extra, if to Continent between Havre and Hamburg, and a further 2/6 per ton if to St. Nazaire. Cargo to be loaded at Trinidad as customary.

Signed Scrutton, Sons, and Co. By authority.

27/ 2/75, per pro. C. J. Brightman and Co.

Witness,

Sd.

Charles E. Brightman.

Signed Charles E. Brightman.

Q.B. Div.]

COHN v. DAVIDSON.

[Q.B. D.]

2. The parties are not agreed as to whether the words "to be loaded," in the last clause, were or were not part of the charter-party, and that question is one of those to be tried after the decision of the special case.

3. The plaintiffs allege that the custom at the port of Trinidad, referred to in the last paragraph of the charter-party, whether the words "to be loaded" were in or not, is a custom that the ship pays for the lighterage of the cargo from the shore to the ship, and that the shipowner pays or allows to the charterers the reasonable expenses of all such lighterage, and that if the charterer first pays the same, the shipowner repays to the charterer the amount so disbursed, and the cost and expenses of insuring the same, or to the like purport and effect, and that in consequence of such custom the rate of freight between Trinidad and England is higher than between England and other West India Islands, where, but for such custom, it would be the same. The defendant denies the existence of any such custom, and he also denies that such custom, even if it existed, was meant to be referred to by the charter-party, and the existence of such custom is a question of fact to be tried, but for the purposes only of this special case it is to be taken that the said custom, or a custom to the like effect, existed.

4. The said ship sailed for Barbadoes, in accordance with the said charter-party, and loaded the agreed cargo at Trinidad, and delivered the same at Bristol.

5. The said cargo was brought to the ship at Trinidad in flats or lighters, and was loaded therefrom in the customary manner; and if the alleged custom existed, it is submitted that what was done was in accordance therewith.

6. The plaintiffs were put to expenses for such lighterage amounting to 69*l.* 1*s.*

7. The agents of the plaintiffs at Trinidad applied to the captain of the said ship for payment of the said sum of 69*l.* 1*s.*

8. The captain of the said ship refused to pay the said sum or any part thereof, and thereupon the agents of the plaintiffs paid the said sum of 69*l.* 1*s.*, and insured the ship's disbursements, including the said sum of 69*l.* 1*s.*, at a cost of 2*l.* 2*s.*

9. The plaintiffs in this action seek to recover the said sums of 69*l.* 1*s.* and 2*l.* 2*s.*

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether, upon the facts above stated, and assuming that the custom is as set out in paragraph 3, or to the like effect, the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover the said sums from the defendant? First, if the words "to be loaded" were included in the charter-party? secondly, if the said words were not so included? and, thirdly, if in either case the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover. The question of the existence of the custom, and what were the words of the charter-party (if there is a material difference between the two cases), are to be tried; if not, judgment is to be entered for the defendant for his costs.

Arbutnot (W. G. Harrison with him), for the plaintiffs, argued that the custom at the port of Trinidad did not necessarily contradict the terms of the charter-party, and that if it did, the written clause importing the custom ought to prevail. He referred to

Hutchinson v. Tatham, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 103; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 432; 42 L. J. 260, C. P.

He was stopped by the court.]

A. L. Smith, for the defendant, argued that custom mentioned in paragraph 3 of the charter-party was not necessarily incorporated in document, and that if the charter-party were as had been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff that would be equivalent to striking out the "merchant's risk" altogether. Written word not override printed words.

McGee v. Lovell, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 169; L. 9 C. P. 107; 43 L. J. 131, C. P.

MELLOR, J.—The case of McGee v. Lovell not bear upon this point. In that case there was a falsa demonstratio. Here the parties appear to have forgotten to strike out the printed words which contradicted the written ones, and the question for us to decide is, which is to prevail? two contradictories? I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the plaintiffs.

LUSH, J., concurred.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Nash and Field.
Solicitors for the defendant, Ingledeu, Ince, Greening.

Jan. 11, 18, and Feb. 9, 1877.

COHN v. DAVIDSON.

Charter-party—Implied warranty—Seaworthiness—Time at which it attaches—Commencement of voyage.

The warranty of seaworthiness implied in a charter-party attaches at the time of the ship's sailing and is not exhausted on the ship's arrival at a seaworthy condition to her loading berth. By a charter-party, defendant's ship was to go to a good and safe place in the river or elsewhere as ordered, and there take on board a cargo of cement for the plaintiff, and proceed therefrom to the port of discharge. She loaded according to plaintiff's orders at the usual wharf for cargo, where, however, she of necessity grounded at low water. From the time of sailing she was in water, and although she proceeded on her voyage, the wind being fair, she foundered before reaching her destination. The ship was seaworthy when she commenced taking in cargo but not when she set sail, and she must therefore have received damage in the course of loading. The jury found the master innocent of negligence. Held, that the implied warranty of seaworthiness was not exhausted on the ship's proceeding to the wharf under the agreement, but attached at the time of sailing, when the underwriters' liability commenced.

THIS was an action upon a charter-party, tried at Liverpool before Lush J. Leave was given to the plaintiff to move for judgment on the facts of the jury. The facts are sufficiently stated in the written judgment of the court.

Jan. 11 and 18.—Herschell, Q.C. and Croft for the plaintiff, moved for judgment on the facts reserved, and also moved for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence.

Russell, Q.C. and Gully showed cause for the defendants against the motion and rule.

The arguments on both sides are fully stated in the following judgment.

Feb. 9.—The judgment of the court (Lush, and Field, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J.—In this case there was a part of the plaintiff, one for judgment Order XL., r. 2, and the other for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

[Div.]

COHN v. DAVIDSON.

[Q.B. Div.]

action was tried before Lush, J., at the pool Winter Assize of 1875. It was brought over the sum of 500*l.*, being the value of 50 tons of cement shipped by the plaintiff on the Iola, of which the defendants were owners, and which foundered with the cargo and in St. Andrew's Bay, on the 21st May.

The cement was shipped under a charter-dated the 14th May 1875, and made between plaintiff and the master of the ship (which was at the port of Sunderland), and by the terms the ship was to "proceed to a good and safe port or places in the river or south dock as desired, and there take on board" the cargo in question and proceed therewith to Dundee or Argyre.

It appeared at the trial, that at the time of execution of the charter-party, the plaintiff ordered the ship to load at a wharf in the river which was part of the port of Sunderland) at a wharf where cement is often loaded, but where vessels of necessity ground on the mud at low tide. The ship having proceeded to that wharf in obedience to her orders, took the cargo on board on the 19th and 20th May; in the afternoon of which latter day (the master having signed a bill of lading of that date in the form in pursuance of the ordinary clause in the charter-party requiring him so to do without liability to the charter) she was towed out to sea to sail on her voyage.

Four pumps were sounded on starting, and it was found to have made about 18 in. of water; she was then pumped out, but in about an hour she was found to have made 24 ft. of water, and in consequence of this a consultation was held between the master and the crew as to the proper course to be adopted, and it was agreed that it was better to proceed to her destination, as the wind was fair and voyage very long, rather than return to port with a full cargo.

Accordingly she proceeded on her voyage, the cargo being kept at work, and had reached St. Andrew's Bay, within six miles of her place of destination, when the water having overpowered the pumps, she foundered about a mile and a half from the shore.

Under these circumstances it was contended that the loss of the cargo on the part of the plaintiff that the loss of the cement was caused by the ship not being tight, in breach of warranty on the part of the shipowner that she should be so, which the plaintiff alleged was necessarily to be implied in the charter.

It was clear that the ship was not in fact seaworthy at the time she set sail; and that as she was found to be seaworthy when she commenced her voyage in cargo, she must have received damage in the course of loading. The defendant contended that the implied warranty was thereupon satisfied, and that the whole duty of the shipowner thenceforth was to take due and reasonable care, and that under these circumstances of the case the master, by not ascertaining the cause of the defect which rendered her unseaworthy, was therefore not guilty of any want of diligence in setting sail in her then condition.

These propositions were denied by the plaintiff, who further set up that, even if they were true, the master was further guilty of negligence in proceeding on his voyage instead of returning to port, after he had discovered the unseaworthiness of his ship.

Evidence was given at the trial on both sides in support and contradiction of these propositions, and at the close of the evidence Lush, J. left the following questions to the jury:

1. Was the Iola seaworthy at the time she commenced taking in cargo?

2. Were the defendants guilty of negligence in sending her to sea in the condition in which she was?

3. Was the captain guilty of negligence in not returning to port?

In answer to these questions the jury found,

First, that she was seaworthy at the time she commenced taking in the cargo;

Secondly, that the defendants were not guilty of negligence in sending her to sea in the condition in which she was;

Thirdly, that the captain was not guilty of negligence in not returning to port.

Upon these findings the learned judge gave the plaintiff leave to move to enter judgment for 500*l.* if such a warranty as was alleged was to be implied, and if it applied under the circumstances of the case, and the plaintiff's motion for judgment was made under this leave.

Upon the argument before us, Mr. Herschell, in support of it, relied upon the rule of law laid down by this Division in the case of Kopitoff v. Wilson (ante, p. 163; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 380; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 677), decided since the trial of this cause, "that in whatever way a contract for the conveyance of merchandize be made, where there is no agreement to the contrary, the shipowner is by the nature of the contract impliedly and necessarily held to warrant that the ship is good, and is in a condition to perform the voyage then about to be undertaken, or in ordinary language is seaworthy, that is, fit to meet and undergo the perils of the sea and other incidental risks to which she must of necessity be exposed in the course of the voyage;" and he contended that, although the jury had found that the Iola was seaworthy at the time of her proceeding to the wharf in question, her admitted unseaworthiness at the time of her sailing from the wharf was a breach of this warranty which entitled him to recover. He also contended that a similar warranty was to be implied from the bill of lading, which was made on the 20th May, just before she sailed. Mr. Russell, on the part of the defendants, did not dispute the principle laid down in Kopitoff v. Wilson, but relying upon the finding of the jury that the ship was seaworthy for the voyage when she proceeded to the wharf, he said that warranty attached, and was exhausted at that time; the proceeding from the spot in the port of Sunderland at which she lay at the time of the execution of the charter to the loading berth being, he said, an act done under the charter which formed the commencement of the period at which the warranty attached; and he then argued, in accordance with the English rule of law on that head, that if the warranty was thence once complied with, subsequent unseaworthiness, not caused by the negligence of the master, did not give the shipper any right of action. He was unable to cite any authority directly applicable to the case of a contract of carriage for fixing the application of the warranty within the above rule at this particular stage; the cases he referred to in support of his contention being in truth (as was observed during the argument) cases in which the court, in construing a particular instrument, put a particular construction upon the meaning of the word "voyage," as used with regard to the excepted perils, under the particular circumstances of the case: (Barker v. McAndrew 18 C. B., N. S., 759; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 305; Bruce v. Nicopolis, 11 Ex. 129); or decided that upon the construction of the instrument then under discussion, the warranty of class was limited to a warranty or representation at the time of using the words, viz., the execution of the charter-party, and did not continue throughout the voyage.

Q.B. Div.]

BARWICK v. BURNYEAT, BROWN, AND COMPANY.

[C.P. Div.]

He contended, however, upon principle, that the warranty should be held to attach at that period, because the proceeding from where the ship lay at the time of the execution of the charter-party to the loading berth as ordered was the first act done under the charter, and was equivalent to the commencement of the risk which in cases where an analogous warranty is implied between the underwriter and the assured is the point of time at which the warranty is to be complied with.

But we think a reference to the principles laid down in those cases, and regarding mercantile convenience, which in construing mercantile matters is a thing always to be regarded, that this contention cannot be supported.

Let us first consider what is the nature and object of the warranty of seaworthiness, and under what circumstances it is implied.

The merchant has goods which he considers he can dispose of at a profit at a distant port, and having selected his home port from which to despatch them, he engages or delivers his goods to a ship upon which he may with reasonable safety effect their transport to their place of destination.

Having made his contract of carriage, and the law having implied for him the warranty of the shipowner that the ship is fit to meet the ordinary perils of the voyage, the merchant then insures himself against those perils by the ordinary marine policy.

Now nothing can be clearer than that upon such a policy the warranty of seaworthiness for the voyage, which he, as the assured, comes under in like manner by implication to the underwriter, is a warranty that the ship is or shall be seaworthy at the time of sailing on it. That is the point at which the risk commences, and at which the warranty attaches, and is by the law of England exhausted. No degree of seaworthiness for the voyage at any time anterior to the commencement of the risk will be of any avail to the assured, unless that seaworthiness existed at the time of sailing from the home port of loading. As therefore the merchant in a case like the present would not be entitled to recover against his underwriter, by reason of the breach of warranty in sailing in an unseaworthy ship, it would follow that if the warranty to be implied on the part of the shipowner is to be exhausted by his having the ship seaworthy at an anterior period, the merchant would lose that complete indemnity by means of the two contracts taken together, which it is the universal habit and practice of mercantile men endeavour to secure. Seaworthiness is well understood to mean that measure of fitness which a particular voyage or particular stage of the voyage requires. A vessel, seaworthy for port and for loading in port, may be, without any breach of warranty whilst in port, unseaworthy for the voyage (Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299); but if she put to sea in that state the warranty is broken.

Now the degree of seaworthiness which a merchant requires is seaworthiness for the voyage and surely the most natural period at which the warranty is to attach is that at which the perils are to be encountered which the ship is to be worthy to meet.

The ship is during her stay in port, and whilst loading, and when she sets sail on her voyage, the custody and possession and under the control of the master and crew, and it is most reasonable and convenient to impose upon those who have the best means of knowing the duty of ascertaining her condition, at that critical time when she is about to meet the perils which it is the object of all parties that she should be prepared to meet.

This being our view of the case, it is not necessary for us to express any opinion upon the subsidiary questions raised by Mr. Herschell; but with reference to the motion made by him for a new trial on the ground of misdirection in regard to the question of the alleged negligence of the master in not returning to port on the discovery of the vessel's leaking, we think it right to add that we have read carefully the evidence, the summing up of the learned judge, and the comments of counsel by which the evidence was pointed out, shaped, and we see no reason whatever, looking at the conduct and course of the trial, to doubt that the learned judge quite sufficiently explained to the jury, and that the jury fully understood what was the question they had to decide. The result therefore will be that under Mr. Herschell's motion we enter judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of 500*l.*, and discharge his rule for a new trial.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Maples, Teesdale, and Co.
Solicitor for defendant, J. W. Hickin.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by S. HARR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 31 and Feb. 14, 1877.

BARWICK v. BURNYEAT, BROWN, AND COMPANY.
Shipping—Charter-party—Bill of lading—Instruction—Cesser of charterer's liability on lading—Freight.

A charter-party provided for the cesser of liability of B. and Co., the charterers of a ship, on the payment of advance freight at port of destination. B. and Co. were consignees of the cargo and the bills of lading made the cargo deliverable "unto order or assigns, he or they, freight and other conditions as per charter-party." The cargo was duly loaded and the advance freight paid. In an action for balance of freight against B. and Co.

Held, that they were not liable, their liability ceasing on the charter-party ceasing on the

C.P. Div.]

BARWICK v. BURNYEAT, BROWN, AND COMPANY.

[C.P. Div.]

the loading, and no new liability being created by the bill of lading. (a)

DEMURRER to reply.

This action was brought to recover 24l. 15s. 3d., a balance of freight due for the carriage of a cargo of coal from Cardiff to Romen. The defendants were charterers and also consignees of cargo. The statement of defence alleged that the liability of the charterer had, under the charter-party, ceased when the ship sailed.

The material part of the charter-party set out in the statement of defence was as follows:

Freight to be paid at the rate of 8s. per ton of 20cwt. as weighed out at port of discharge, payable as follows: One-third (if required) in cash on signing shippers' bills of lading, less 2½ per cent for all charges, and the remaining in cash at current rates of exchange, less 2 per cent discount on the completion of right delivery of the cargo.

Burnyeat, Brown and Co.'s liability to cease when the ship is loaded, and advance of freight with demurrage at Cardiff paid. The captain to sign shipper's bills of lading for the cargo within twenty-four hours after the ship is loaded, &c. Ship to have lien on cargo for freight, &c.

The statement of defence then alleged that the vessel was duly loaded in accordance with the charter-party, and that all advance, freight, and demurrage, &c., had been duly paid at Cardiff, and that all conditions had been fulfilled necessary to entitle the defendants to be freed from their liabilities under the charter-party.

To this defence the plaintiff replied, admitting the charter-party as set out, and the due performance of the various stipulations thereof by the defendants, but alleging liability to pay the freight claimed under the bill of lading signed by the master under the charter-party, and which, so far as material, was as follows:

Shipped in good order and well conditioned by J. B. [unclear], in and upon the good ship called The German Emperor s.s., whereof is master for the present voyage [unclear] 1093 tons . . . coal . . . which are to be delivered . . . unto order or to assigns, he or they pay freight for the same and other conditions, as per charter-party, &c.

To this reply the defendant demurred.

Wood Hill, for the demurrer.—When there is a difference between the charter-party and the bill of lading, it is the former which is to stand—Wegener v. Smith (15 C. B. 285). There an indorsee of a bill of lading was held liable to pay the demurrage by the terms of the charter-party, the bill of lading making the goods deliverable to order "against payment of the agreed freight, and other conditions of the charter-party," one of which was that demurrage (any), should be paid. Here the charterer's liability ceased with the sailing of the ship. When there is a charter-party, and a subsequent bill of lading in pursuance of that charter-party, the rights of the parties are governed by the charter-party, and not by the bill of lading. Take the case of a ship chartered at a fixed rate, and the charterer afterwards finds that he cannot fill his ship at that rate, but gives bills of lading at a lower rate, there the bills of lading do not form a new contract between the charterer and ship-owner.

MacIschlan on Shipping, p. 460;

Faith v. East India Company, 4 B. & Ald. 630;

McLean v. Fleming, ante, vol. 1, p. 160; L. Rep. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 128.

Lanyon, for the plaintiff.—My contention is that there are here two contracts, one between the ship-owner and the charterer, and the other between the ship-owner and the consignee. The charter-party says the defendants' liability is to cease with the loading of the ship: the bills of lading say it is to continue until the freight is paid, for the cargo is to be delivered to them, their order or assigns. And it has been held that, where the charter-party stipulates that the charterer's liability is to cease upon the loading of the ship, but the lien is to remain, the charterer is discharged but the consignee continues liable.

Kush v. Cory, ante, vol. 2, p. 543; 33 L. T. Rep.

N. S. 670; L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 559;

French v. Gerber, L. Rep. 1 C. P. D. 737. (See post.)

The words "or other conditions" mean "performing all other conditions," that is, the charterer is to perform all conditions against himself.

Gray v. Carr, ante, vol. 1, p. 115; 25 L. T. Rep.

N. S. 315; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 523, 555;

McLean v. Fleming, ante, vol. 1, p. 160.

Wood Hill, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 14, 1876.—DENMAN J.—The plaintiff contended that the bill of lading was a different contract from that contained in the charter-party, that it imposed upon the defendants a greater liability than did the charter-party, and that from the liability upon it they are not absolved by the charter-party. Having looked at all the cases cited by the counsel on both sides, it appears to me that none of them bear exactly upon the present case. They all turned upon the liability of a charterer in respect of dead freight, and therefore throw little light upon the present case.

Here, the charter-party does not say that the charterer's, but Burnyeat, Brown, and Co.'s, liability is to cease. Those words are stronger to release the defendants than the words used in the former cases, for here the very names of the persons to be released are made use of.

I do not, however, decide upon that ground; but upon the effect of the two documents taken together. The bill of lading refers to the charter-party in these words, "paying freight for the same and other conditions as per charter-party." Reference must, therefore, be had to the charter-party for all conditions as to payment of freight, &c. The charter-party tells us when there is to be a cesser of liability of the defendants, when the cargo is loaded and the advances of freight paid and the bills of lading are ready to be signed, and provides for everything being ready for a settlement of freight on the landing of the cargo. The meaning of all these conditions is to prevent the liability of the defendants continuing after the loading is complete and all advance freight and demurrage have been paid. All these things were

(a) If this decision were to be carried to its logical conclusion, no charterer under such a charter party, so held bills of lading and was consignee of the cargo shipped, would be liable for freight, and the only person a master would have of enforcing payment would be by keeping the cargo until he had received payment. Does not seem to have been suggested by or to the court that the existence of the right of lien under the charter-party and the bill of lading, the act of the master in delivering without enforcing his lien, and the acceptance of delivery by the consignee, taken together created an implied contract by the consignee to pay the freight on their getting the cargo. The fact of the consignee also charterers could scarcely affect their liability under such an implied contract, which arose at a subsequent period.—Ed.

ADM.]

THE CYNTHIA.

[ADM.]

done, and all other conditions precedent were performed by the defendants, and I am therefore of opinion that this demurrer is good.

As to the cases cited, French v. Gerber (L. Rep. 1 C. P. D. 737; and see post) appears to me to be the nearest to this; and there it was held that documents of this sort must be construed according to their plain meaning. The dicta in former cases as to the charterer's liability under the bill of lading and charter-party, are shaken by the recent case of Sanguinetti v. Pacific Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 300; 46 L. J. 105, Q. B.; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 658). The two documents are to be read together, and the condition "as per charter-party" refers to the conditions as to payment of freight, one of which is the cesser of liability of the defendants. Hence the defendants are entitled to judgment on the demurrer.

Demurrer allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Oliver and Botterell.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by JAMES P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Nov. 25 and 28, 1876.

THE CYNTHIA.

Damage—Collision entering dock—Dock-master's authority—Negligence of person in charge of ship—The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), ss. 52, 53, 63—The London and St. Katharine's Dock Act 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii.) s. 122—The St. Katharine's Dock Act 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. cv.), ss. 100, 101.

When a vessel enters docks with the permission and under the general directions of the dock-master, and within the space over which his authority by statute extends, those on board of her are bound to use diligence and care to carry out the directions of the dockmaster in such a manner as to avoid doing damage to other vessels.

THIS was a cause of damage instituted in the City of London Court, by the owner of the skiff Emily, against the Mersey Steamship Company (Limited), the owners of the steamship Cynthia, for injuries sustained by the Emily, through the alleged negligence of those on board the Cynthia, whilst the latter vessel was going from the river into the St. Katharine's Dock on the 25th Nov. 1875. The case was heard by Mr. Commissioner Kerr on the 20th April 1876, when, after the examination of the witnesses, and the dockmaster, in cross-examination, having stated that if a rope had been made fast to a buoy to ease the vessel in it would have been of no use, and he would have ordered it to be let go, the learned judge gave judgment for the defendants with costs, on the ground that the dock company were liable for the damages, and not the owners of the Cynthia, that vessel being at the time and place of the accident within the district over which the authority of the dockmaster extends: but finding that the skiff was lying in a proper place, that neither the dockmaster nor the pilot knew that she was lying there, but that they might have known it if they had looked, that had they been aware of it they could and would have given orders, which would have avoided the collision. From this judgment the owner of the Emily appealed, and on the 25th Nov. 1876 the appeal came on for hearing.

The statutes on which the argument as to the control of the dockmaster turned were The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27.)

Sect. 2. The expression "The Special Act," and this Act, shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed authorising the construction, improving of an harbour, dock, or pier, and with which this Act shall be incorporated . . . and the expression "the prescribed limits," used with reference to an harbour, dock, or pier, shall mean the distance measured from the harbour, dock, or pier, or other local limits (any) beyond the harbour, dock, or pier, within which the powers of the harbour master, dock master, or pier master, for the regulation of the harbour, dock, or pier shall by the special Act be authorised to be exercised . . . The expression "the harbour master," shall mean . . . with reference to any such dock, the dockmaster.

Sect. 52. The harbour master may give directions for all or any of the following purposes (that is to say) "For regulating the time at which and the manner in which any vessel shall enter into, go out of, or lie at the harbour, dock, or pier, and within the prescribed limits (if any), and its position, mooring, unmooring, placing, and removing, whilst therein: For regulating the position in which any vessels shall lie in or discharge its cargo or any part thereof, or shall take in or land its passengers, or shall take in or discharge ballast within or on the harbour, dock, or pier: &c., &c."

Sect. 53. The master of every vessel within an harbour or dock, or at or near the pier, or within the prescribed limits (if any), shall regulate such vessel according to the directions of the harbour master, and in conformity with this and the special Act: and the master of a vessel who, after notice of any such direction by the harbour master served upon him, shall forthwith regulate such vessel according to such direction, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 25s.

Sect. 63. As soon as the harbour or dock shall be far completed as to admit vessels to enter therein, a vessel, except with the permission of the harbour master, shall lie or be moored in the entrance of the harbour or dock, or within the prescribed limits, and the master of any vessel either place it or suffer it to remain in the entrance of the harbour or dock, or within the prescribed limits, without such permission, and not, on being required so to do by the harbour master, forthwith proceed to remove such vessel, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5l., and a further sum of 10s. for every hour that such vessel shall remain within the limits aforesaid, after a reasonable time for removal the same has expired after such requisition.

The London and St. Katharine's Dock Act 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii.)

Sect. 3. Incorporates The Harbour, Dock, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), except certain sections.

Sect. 10. Repeals, inter alia, The St. Katharine's Dock Act 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. cv.)

Sect. 11. Saves, inter alia, certain sections of the St. Katharine's Dock Act 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. cv.), and Sch. 4, part 2, from the general repeal of sect. 10.

Sect. 122. No ship or vessel shall lie at any buoy, or make fast to any of the dolphins, mooring posts or mooring craft of the amalgamated company on the river Thames, save only such as are intended to be used for the purpose of receiving or discharging cargo, or which within one hour last past came out of the docks, basins, locks, or cuts, except with the permission of one of the dockmasters of the amalgamated company; and every master, pilot, or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel lying or moored, or having made fast to any buoy, dolphins, or mooring posts or craft, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20s. for every hour after being required so to do by the dockmaster or his assistants, or failing therein shall be liable to an offence forfeit not exceeding 20s. for every ship or vessel remains at any of the buoys, dolphins, or mooring posts, or craft after the required

M.]

THE CYNTHIA.

[ADM.]

4, part 2 (inter alia) (6 Geo. 4, c. cv.) St. rine Docks Act, 1835. Sect. 100. And he it further noted, that as soon as the said intended dock or basin, and locks are so far completed as to admit vessels, or craft to enter therein, no ship, lighter, craft, boat, or other vessel shall lie within one hundred yards of the entrances of the said docks unless for the purpose of coming in or going out of the said docks, so that at all times the entrances may be kept clear and without obstruction, and over such space the dockmaster shall have control so far as to the placing or transporting, removing or stopping, barges, lighters, craft, boats, and other vessels, by law, statute, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any ship or vessel, lighter or craft lying in the river Thames alongside of any wharf or within the said distance of one hundred yards for the purpose of loading or discharging, so nevertheless as to impede or obstruct the entrances into or departure from the said docks, basins, locks, or cuts.

101. And for the better making and preserving of clear passage and entrance from the river into and out of the said docks, for all ships, vessels, barges, craft, and boats of every description it is further enacted, that if any master or other person having the charge or command of any ship, lighter, craft, boat, or vessel of any description whatsoever shall place or permit or suffer the same to remain within the river Thames within one hundred yards of any entrance to the said docks, basins, or cuts, or any of them, as aforesaid, and shall not immediately on being so required by the said dockmaster or dockwarden remove such ship, lighter, barge, craft, boat, or vessel, every such master and other person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and also any sum not exceeding 5*l.* every hour that such obstruction shall remain in force; and in case the master or other person in command of such ship, lighter, barge, craft, boat, or vessel, shall not remove such ship, lighter, craft, boat, or vessel immediately upon being so required to do, it shall be lawful for the said dockmaster and his or their assistants to remove the been in any degree conducive to the damage:" (The Iona, L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426, 432; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 156; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479.)

Milward, Q.C. and Bruce for respondents.—The collision took place within the space over which the dockmaster's control by the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act (10 Vict. c. 27), s. 52, and the London and St. Katharine's Dock Act 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii.), schedule 4, part 2 (6 Geo. 4, c. cv., ss. 100, 101) extends; those on board the Cynthia were, therefore, obliged to obey his orders, and did so; had they done anything he did not order, they would have been subject to a penalty: (The Bilbao Lush, 149; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 5; The Excelsior, L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 268; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 87; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 151, The Broder Tross, 17 Jur. 94.) Those on board the Cynthia could not see the Emily as they were coming into dock, and those in charge of the Emily must have been aware of the fact, and should have made their presence known. The Belgie (ante, p. 348, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 929) is not in point; there the dockmaster gave no order, but the master of the ship, acting on his own responsibility, accepted a suggestion which he ought to have seen would result in a collision. The damage is altogether too remote. The Cynthia could not have foreseen by any possibility that damage would result from the way she came into dock. If they had got out a warp, without the dockmaster's orders, they would have blocked the dock's entrance, and caused themselves and other vessels to lose a tide, and might have been liable for demurrage to them.

Webster, in reply, referred to Scott v. Shepherd (Smith's Lead. Cas. 6th edit. p. 417) to show that the damage was not too remote.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 28, 1876. — Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from the City of London Court.

A small skiff, the Emily, was lying underneath a crane on the St. Katharine's wharf in the river Thames, taking on goods, and outside of her lay a steamer called the Vigilant. Outside the Vigilant lay two barges. A steamer called the Cynthia, coming into the St. Katharine's dock, fell with her port side against the barges, drove the barges into the Vigilant, breaking her bobstay and her figure head, and also driving the Vigilant into the skiff, to which she did considerable damage. The learned judge found as a fact that the skiff was in no way to blame, and had a right to recover against the dock company, but not against the Cynthia, against whom the action was brought. In his opinion the Cynthia was bound by the statutes to which I will presently refer, strictly to obey orders of the dockmaster, and to take no measures except those which he prescribed; that those orders brought about the collision, and therefore the Cynthia was not to blame, and he dismissed her from the suit.

There are two points raised for my consideration: first, was the Cynthia guilty of negligence which caused this collision with the skiff; secondly, was she relieved from responsibility by being under the control of the dock company, whose orders she obeyed.

As to the first point, I have conferred with the Trinity Masters, and will state their opinion, in which I agree. It is to this effect. The Cynthia ought to have had a rope passed to the middle buoy, to have been used if necessary. If she was bound ster, with him W. Phillimore, for appellants. And that the Cynthia was within the limits in which those on board are bound to obey the commands of the dockmaster, does not exempt them from the obligation of taking ordinary proper precautions for the safety of other vessels. The dockmaster gives an order which is to be obeyed, but the method in which they carry it out is on their own responsibility; there was negligence in the method of carrying out; had they got a warp out to ease the Cynthia in, the accident would not have happened. They ought to have foreseen the consequences of coming in in the way they did, and are responsible for damage arising from their negligence in so coming in: (The Belgic, ante, p. 348; L. Rep. N. S. 929.) The case of The Bilbao (149; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 5) is not in point; there the question was, whether the damage was occasioned solely by the fault of the master. The true rule is that laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with reference to the duties of the crew of a vessel in the case of a pilot employed by compulsion of law: that in order to entitle the owners to the benefit of exemption from liability, they must prove that the damage was occasioned exclusively by the default of the pilot. It is not enough for them to prove that there was fault or negligence in the pilot—they must prove, to the satisfaction of the court which tries the question, that there was no default on the part of the officers and crew of the vessel, or any of them, which might have to be swinging on the barges, the rope would have enabled her to keep her quarter off the barges. She was dropping up with the tide, and swinging alongside of the barges. The pilot saw that he would come into collision with the barges, and pointed it out to the dockmaster. The pilot had no right to calculate on touching the barges so lightly as not to cause damage to them or to vessels on the other side of them. With respect to the position of the skiff, we think that she was not in an improper place, but in the exercise of her clear right in lying where she was. As to a contention that if a rope had been there the Cynthia could not have got in that tide, in the first place that would not justify her in doing damage to another vessel; in the second place, the Trinity Masters are of a wholly different opinion, thinking, on the contrary, that the rope would have assisted the Cynthia to go in without squeezing or damaging any other vessel.

ADM.]

THE JULIA FISHER.

[Am.]

As to the second point the 10 Vict. c. 27, s. 52, and the local Act of the London and St. Katherine Dock (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii), Sch. 4, part II, are relied upon by the respondents. The latter Act extends the distance within which the harbour master's authority can be exercised to a hundred yards. The former statute provides that the harbour master may give directions for regulating the time at which, and the manner in which, any vessel shall enter into, go out of, or lie in or at the harbour, dock, or pier, and within the prescribed limits; that is to say, the harbour master's authority extends to the manner in which the vessel is to enter the dock, and her position when therein, and for a disobedience to his directions, the 53rd section imposes a penalty of 20*l.*, but the Act did not, in my judgment, intend to exempt the pilot or captain of the vessel from the duty of navigating her with proper caution, so far as other vessels are concerned; in other words, the orders of the harbour master are to be executed with care, and not negligently, as in the present case.

In the analogous case of exemption from liability by reason of having a pilot on board, it has been held by the Privy Council that in construing the Pilotage Acts it is not enough for the owners to prove that there was fault or negligence in the pilot, they must prove to the satisfaction of the court which has to try the question that there was no default whatever on the part of the officers and crew of their vessel, or any of them, which might have been in any degree conducive to the damage: (The Iona, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158; L. Rep. 1 P. C. 432.; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479.)

The authority of the Bilboa was cited by the respondents (Lush. 149; 1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 5), but that was a case decided on demurrer. I have looked at the papers and find that the defence was as follows: "And the defendants' proctor says, that before and at the time of the damage complained of, those on board the Bilboa were acting under the directions given by the dockmaster of the said Victoria Docks for the said vessel to enter the said docks, and within the aforesaid limits of the authority of the said dockmaster, and that the said damage, if occasioned by any mismanagement of the Bilboa, was solely occasioned by the default of the said dock master, and that the owners of the said vessel are not responsible in law for the same." It was a datum in that case that the damage was occasioned solely by the dockmaster whereas in this case it appears that the damage was not caused solely by the orders of the dockmaster, but by carelessness in their execution.

I must reverse the sentence of the court below and pronounce the Cynthia to blame for this collision. Costs for appellant.

Solicitor for plaintiff, J. A. Farnfield.

Solicitors for respondents, Fluz and Co.

[NOTE.—The recent case in the House of Lords on compulsory pilotage (Clyde Navigation Company v. Barclay, L. Rep. 1 App. Cas. 790; see also in which the judgment in The Iona (16 L. T. N. S. 158; L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426), quoted in the above judgment, is commented on, was not this time reported. The effect of that judgment where the defence of compulsory pilotage is raised is to throw the onus of proving contributory negligence on the part of the shipowner on the plaintiff, instead of requiring the shipowner to prove that he acted entirely in obedience to the pilot's orders.]

Feb. 14 and 15, 1877.

THE JULIA FISHER.

Collision—Counter claim—Security for costs by defendant—Practice.

A defendant in a collision cause making a counter claim for the damage sustained by his own vessel, must, if he be resident out of the jurisdiction, give security for the costs, not merely of his counter claim, but of the whole action.

If he make default in giving security for costs pursuant to order, he will have his counter claim dismissed.

This was an action of collision brought on behalf of the owners of the Norwegian barque Velox against the barque Julia Fisher for the recovery of damages caused by a collision between the two vessels on 2nd Aug. 1875.

The owners of both vessels were resident out of the jurisdiction. The Julia Fisher was arrested, and her owners appeared and gave security in the sum of 2950*l.*, which was the full value of the vessel. The owners of the Julia Fisher required the plaintiffs to give security for the costs of the action, which was given to the amount of 300*l.* The plaintiffs then delivered their statement of claim alleging that the collision occurred through the negligence of the Julia Fisher, and claimed damages. The owners of the Julia Fisher then upon delivered a statement of defence and counterclaim, denying the negligence of the Julia Fisher, and alleging the negligence to be that of the Velox, and claiming damages against the Velox in respect of the collision. The owners of the Velox were then required to, and did give security in the sum of 500*l.* to answer the damage claimed by the Julia Fisher. A summons was then put out on behalf of the plaintiffs (the owners of the Velox), calling upon the defendants (the owners of the Julia Fisher) to show cause why the defendants should not give security for costs in the sum of 300*l.* This summons being referred to the Registrar to the court, the judge, after taking counsel on both sides, directed the defendants to give bail in the sum of 150*l.* to answer the plaintiffs' costs. The defendants then gave security in the sum of 150*l.* to answer judgment in the sum of 150*l.* in respect of their counterclaim, and on 12th Feb. 1877, that such security had been given.

4.—The action came on for hearing.

Ward, Q.C. and W. G. F. Phillimore for the plaintiffs contended that as the defendants had only given security for the costs of the counterclaim, and had not complied with the order, and their claim must be dismissed.

Clarkson and Myburgh for the defendants contended that there was no obligation upon the plaintiffs to do more than give security for the counterclaim, and the order did not go further. Under the old practice, before the Statute Acts 1873 and 1875, a defendant was only bound to give security for the costs of the action, which was the same as the counterclaim, and he could not have been called upon to give security for the costs of the principal action. Nothing in the above Acts which alters this practice.

The court directed that the action should proceed for hearing, but intimated that if the defendants were not prepared before judgment to give security for all the plaintiffs' costs, the counterclaim would be dismissed.

5.—The action was further heard, and the plaintiffs' case being ended.

Ward, Q.C., for the defendants, stated that the plaintiffs did not propose to give security for more than for their counterclaim.

B. PHILLIMORE.—In this case—one of the questions is by collision—a question has been raised as to the extent to which one of the parties to the collision should give security for costs.

Julia Fisher having been arrested at the time the Velox, bail was given in the action, not only in the full amount claimed, but only to the extent of the value of the ship.

The owners of the Velox, the plaintiffs, being arrested, were then called upon to give, and did give security for costs, and subsequently, when a counterclaim was set up by the defendants, they were then called upon to give bail for the full amount of that claim. By thus setting up a counterclaim the Julia Fisher becomes as much a plaintiff as the party who originated the suit. The evidence delivered, the evidence to be given, and the arguments of counsel, will all be common to the plaintiffs and counterclaim, and in principle it is as easy to distinguish between the costs of the one or the other. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs contend that as the owners of the Julia Fisher are foreigners like the plaintiffs, they are entitled to security, and that the security must be for the whole of the action generally. The adverse contention, however, is that the Julia Fisher should only give security for costs occasioned by the counterclaim, not for the whole costs of the action. If this contention prevailed, it is manifestly to the advantage of the plaintiffs; the position of the Julia Fisher would be better of the two, because if the Julia Fisher wins, she will have security for damages and costs; whereas, if the Velox wins, she will have security for damages, and only a small amount for her costs. This would clearly be inequitable with equity.

It is perhaps to be said that to require security for the whole costs of the action is requiring the defendant, quid defendant, to give security for the whole of the action, but it must be remembered that although security in personam security is not required of a defendant, in actions in rem a different practice has always prevailed.

The action is brought, and bail is given as a rule in a sum to cover damages and costs, and both damages and costs are constantly recovered from bail so given by a defendant.

After some consideration, therefore, I arrive at the conclusion that as all the issues now constitute, so to speak, one cause, the party liable to costs is liable to the costs of the whole suit, and the party liable to give security for costs is liable to give security for the whole costs of suit, subject to any special order which the court may in any particular case think proper to make.

In the present case the order already made must be adhered to.

The party being a foreigner, who has set up a counterclaim, and asked for a decree for damages in his own favour, must give security for costs generally, or his counterclaim must be struck out.

As the defendants in the present case now before the court are not prepared to give security for the whole of the plaintiffs' costs, their counterclaim must be dismissed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Waddilove and Nutt.

Solicitor for defendants, Cooper.

Monday, Feb. 19, 1877.

THE EXPERT.

Limitation of liability—Collision—Reference—Costs—Practice.

In a collision cause, although the defendant is entitled, upon admission of liability and payment into court of the amount of his liability under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, s. 54, to a stay of proceedings as against himself, plaintiffs having separate interests may, at the defendant's cost, proceed to a reference to settle the respective amounts due to them, and may tax their costs.

This was an action of collision brought by the owners and the master and crew (proceeding for their personal effects), of the Mary, the owners of the cargo, against the Expert. After service of the writ, the owners of the Expert appeared, and before any pleadings were delivered applied to the court to stay all further proceedings against the defendants (except for the purpose of taxing costs) upon their admitting liability and paying into court a sum sufficient to cover the amount to which they were entitled to limit their liability under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, viz., 8*l.* per registered ton, and a sum to cover interest.

The plaintiffs had given particulars of their names and the nature of their several claims. An affidavit of the defendants in support of the application admitted liability, but alleged that the collision occurred without the actual fault or privity of the owners of the Expert, and that there was no loss of life.

J. P. Aspinall, in support of the application, stated that the defendants were willing to take the risk of other claims being made, as they believed the particulars furnished gave all the persons entitled to claim, and contended that as the course proposed would be a great saving of expense, and the plaintiffs could not recover more than the amount offered, the order should be made.

ADM.]

THE LAKE MEGANTIC.

[A

E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiffs, contended that the order should not be made in the form asked, and the proceedings should not be stayed so as to preclude the amounts of the plaintiffs' several claims being ascertained at a reference. If the defendants paid into court the whole amount of the plaintiffs' claim, the defendants might ask for a stay without a reference; but the defendants are asking, as a favour, to pay a less amount whereby each plaintiff will get less than he is entitled to. Hence it becomes the interest of each plaintiff to reduce the amount of the other plaintiffs' claims to as small an amount as possible, and this must be done by the court, or rather in a reference; and the cost of ascertaining the proper amount ought to be paid by the defendants, whose act in seeking relief from payment of the larger amount makes the reference necessary. If the court makes the order it ought to be a condition that the defendants pay into court a sufficient sum to cover the costs of the reference, and that the plaintiffs' claims be referred to the registrar, and that the action proceed for the purposes of the reference and taxation of costs. If the action of damage proceeded, and the defendants claimed limitation of liability in their pleadings, they would pay the costs of the reference as a matter of course.

J. P. Aspinall, in reply.—The defendants are entitled by law to limit their liability, and they claim limitation as of right not as a favour. The plaintiffs are all represented by one solicitor, and there should be no difficulty in their agreeing as to the amounts of their respective claims, and dividing the money paid in between them. To compel the defendants to pay the costs of the reference is putting them to unnecessary expense.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE directed that upon payment into court of the amount of the defendants' statutory liability at the rate of 8*l.* per ton on the gross tonnage of the Expert, and upon the defendants' solicitor giving an undertaking for the payment of costs of action and reference, all further proceedings in the action should be stayed, save as regarded the reference, which was to proceed for the purpose of ascertaining the respective amounts due to the plaintiff, and the taxation of costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ingledeu, Ince, and Greening.

Solicitor for the defendants, Thomas Cooper.

Tuesday, March 6, 1877.

THE LAKE MEGANTIC.

Security for costs—Insolvency of plaintiff.

Where a plaintiff has recently executed a deed of assignment of all his property to an assignee, he will be required to give security for the costs of suit, unless he satisfies the court that he is solvent. The fact that he is carrying on business is not sufficient proof of his solvency.

This was a motion by the defendants, owners of the Lake Megantic, requiring the plaintiff, John Athaya, to give security for costs. No pleadings had been delivered, but the writ was indorsed with a claim for 1000*l.* for damage to cargo.

The plaintiff was the owner of a cargo of grain laden on board the Lake Megantic, and alleged to have been damaged by a collision between that vessel and the Lake Superior, belonging to same owners, on the 5th March 1876, in harbour of Baltimore, in the United States of America. The cargo had ultimately been sent to Liverpool and there discharged.

In support of the application, an affidavit made by H. J. Selkirk, the manager of the C. Shipping Company (Limited), the owners of the vessels, which, so far as is material, was as follows:

4. The said John Athaya, the plaintiff in this action, and in the writ described as residing at Liverpool, resides in or near Glasgow, and till shortly previous to the commencement of this action, carried on business as a commission merchant in Liverpool, under the name of John Athaya and Co., and in Glasgow under the same style or firm.

5. I am informed and verily believe that the said Athaya, being insolvent on the 28th Aug. last, executed a deed of assignment of his estate and effects, in favour of James Wylie Gould, of Glasgow, accountant, for the benefit of his creditors. A true copy of such deed produced and shown to me at the time of making this affidavit, marked A., and I verily believe from the contents of such deed having been executed that the said Athaya is insolvent, and that this action is not brought for his own benefit.

In answer to this affidavit another was made by Wilmer Hollingworth, a clerk to Ernest Wendt, underwriters' representative, as follows:

1. The said Ernest Emil Wendt is the agent for the purposes of this action.

2. I have read the affidavit of Henry James Selkirk sworn on the 17th Feb. 1877, and filed in this action referring to the 4th paragraph of such affidavit, and I am informed and verily believe that John Athaya, the plaintiff, now carries on business as a merchant in partnership with his son, both in Liverpool and Glasgow, under the title of John Athaya and Son.

The motion came before the court on Feb. 1877, and was ordered to stand over till the next motion day, with leave to the parties to file further affidavits; no further affidavits were however filed, and the motion came on again on March 6.

E. C. Clarkson for defendants.—The affidavit of Selkirk plainly shows that the plaintiff recently been insolvent, and the affidavit in answer in no way shows that he is now solvent. The presumption is that he is still insolvent, and that he is only carrying on the action for the benefit of his assignee, who is, moreover, out of the jurisdiction. The plaintiff assigned all this case together with all his other property by deed on the 28th Aug. 1876, and in such case the court will order security for costs to be given (Perkins v. Adcock, 14 M. & W. 808.) In the case Pollock, C.B. says: "Where the plaintiff is bankrupt or insolvent, or has assigned the debt, and is suing for the benefit of his assignee, he ought to give security for costs."

W. Phillimore for plaintiff.—The affidavit of Hollingworth shows that the plaintiff is not insolvent; he is carrying on business in partnership with his son, and has set up that subsequently to the execution of the deed he destroys any presumption that he still remains in insolvent circumstances. It is not enough that the plaintiff should have been bankrupt, or insolvent, or have assigned the debt, or executed a deed. The head note of Perkins v. Adcock, 14 M. & W. 808, and the observations of Pollock, C.B. must be interpreted. It is plain that he must have been in the circumstances of plaintiff's insolvency at the time of the assignment of the debt must be shown to the court to compel him to give security for costs.

[ADM.]

THE ANNANDALE.

[ADM.]

here they do not concur, as the plaintiff is not now insolvent.

Clarkson in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I shall make the order for the plaintiff to give security for costs to the amount of 300*l*. Under the circumstances of the case it lies on the plaintiff to show that he is now solvent, and I do not consider that the affidavit of Hollingworth is sufficient to show it. Costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Stokes, Saunders, and Stokes.

Solicitors for the defendant, Gregory, Rowcliffe, and Co.

March 20 and 21, 1877.

THE ANNANDALE.

Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103—Concealing British character—Assuming foreign character—Forfeiture—Bond fide purchaser—When forfeiture attaches.

Where an offence is committed by a shipowner or master against sect. 103 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the ship becomes forfeited to Her Majesty, and the forfeiture attaches, and the property in the ship is devested out of the owners, and vested in the Crown from the date of the committing of the offence, and a person purchasing such ship bond fide and without knowledge of the offence, committed after such date, but before seizure and condemnation, cannot acquire a title which will override the right of the Crown.

Be an action brought by the plaintiff as collector of customs on behalf of the Crown against a British ship for breaches of the 103rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the plaintiff in his statement of claim alleged offences committed in 1874 and up to July 1876, and claimed the ship as forfeited to Her Majesty. The defendant, a foreigner, in his statement of defence, alleged that he became bond fide purchaser of the ship on the 6th July 1876, without notice of any of the acts done by the former owners of the ship, and that the ship was not seized in the action until the 9th July 1876.

Held, upon demurrer to the statement of defence, that the defence set up was no answer to the action, as the forfeiture took place on the committing of the offence, and the defendant had acquired no title as against the Crown.

THIS was an action (in rem) brought by William Pugh Gardner, collector of customs at the port of Liverpool, on behalf of himself and on behalf of Her Majesty against the barque Annandale, to obtain adjudication upon and forfeiture to Her Majesty of the barque for a breach of the provisions of sub-sect. 2 of sect. 103 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and an award of such portion of the proceeds of the sale of the barque to the plaintiff as the court might think right. The vessel was duly arrested on the 9th July 1876, under a warrant issued out of the Admiralty Division, and remained under arrest. An appearance was entered on the 28th July by one Hans Lows, claiming to be the owner of the vessel.

The plaintiffs' statement of claim was, so far as material, as follows:

1. The plaintiff was, on and before the 18th July 1874, and has ever since been, and still is a British officer of the customs within the intent and meaning of the 103rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.

2. Before and on the 18th July 1874, the barque or vessel Annandale, proceeded against in this action, was within the true intent and meaning of the said Act a British ship, and was registered at the Custom House at Newcastle-upon-Tyne as a British ship, in the names of William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, as owners thereof.

3. The said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, who respectively are natural-born British subjects, were, before and on the said 18th July, owners of the said barque.

4. On the 18th July 1874, the said William Perlee Livingston, acting for and on behalf of himself and his said co-owners, and with their authority, and in order that the register of the said barque might be closed as upon a sale of the said barque to foreigners, represented to the registrar of British ships at the Custom House, Newcastle-aforesaid, each registrar being a person entitled by British law, to inquire into the character of the said barque, that the said barque had been sold to foreigners, and that the said barque was at sea, but that her register (meaning thereby her certificate of registry) would be handed to the said registrar on her arrival.

5. The said registrar, in pursuance and consequence of such representations as in the last paragraph mentioned, on or about the 28th July 1874, closed the said register, and such register became and was thereby closed, and the said barque ceased to be registered as a British ship.

6. The said barque had not, on or before the 18th July 1874, been sold to any foreigners or foreigner, and the representation so made, as aforesaid, by the said William Perlee Livingston, was false. The said barque, before and on the said 18th July 1874, was and subsequently continued to be owned by the said owners hereinbefore named, and on such day and subsequently thereto she was and continued to be a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the 103rd section of the said Act.

7. On or subsequently to the said 18th July 1874, the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple procured or caused or permitted to be procured, and carried or caused or permitted to be carried on board the said barque a document or foreign certificate of registry or foreign provisional certificate of registry known as a Lettre de mer Provisoire, by which it was stated and represented that the said barque had been bought by one Henry Thomas Watson, of Antwerp, and that she was then a Belgian ship.

8. The said statements and representations in the said document lastly mentioned were untrue. The said barque had not, as therein stated and represented, been bought by the said Henry Thomas Watson, nor was she then a Belgian ship, but she was then, and long after such document was procured or caused or permitted to be procured as aforesaid, she continued to be, a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the 103rd section of the said Act, and owned by the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or some or one of them.

9. On or about the 19th Sept. 1874, the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, although the said barque continued to be and then was a British ship, within the true intent and meaning of the said Act, procured or caused or permitted to be procured at Newcastle-aforesaid a certificate of British tonnage, for the said barque as for a foreign vessel, belonging to Antwerp, in the Kingdom of Belgium.

10. On the 6th July 1876, one John Stevens, the then master of the said barque, by and with the knowledge and permission of the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, and of the other persons or person, if any, then being owners or owner of the said barque, made a report to the plaintiff at Liverpool, or to his deputy or representative, the plaintiff, and such deputy and representative respectively being persons entitled by British law to inquire into the character of the said barque, by which report the said John Stephens, as such master, stated and represented that the country to which the said barque belonged was Antwerp, meaning thereby Belgium. Such statement and representation was untrue. The said barque was, and continued to be, a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the said Act, and owned by the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or some or one of them.

11. The said barque subsequently to the said 18th July 1874, and whilst she still continued to be a British ship within the true intent and meaning of the 103rd section, and owned by the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or some or one of them or by some or one of them conjointly with some other person or persons whose names are not known to the plaintiff, was sailed by or with the permission of the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, and such other persons or person, or by and with the permission of such of them the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, and such other person or persons as aforesaid as were then her owners under a foreign flag, to wit the Belgian flag.

12. The several matters and things hereinbefore alleged to have been done by the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or by them or some or one of them, or by them or some or one of them conjointly with such other person or persons as aforesaid, or by the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or some or one of them, or by them or some or one of them conjointly as aforesaid, caused or permitted to be done, or some or one of such matters and things were respectively matters or things, or a matter or thing done or permitted to be done by the owners or owner of the said British barque Annandale, with intent to conceal the British character of the said barque from the plaintiff and from the said registrar at Newcastle, and from others the collectors and officers of customs at divers British Ports, and from the officials of the Board of Trade defined by the said Act, or from some or one of such Acts, persons, all such persons being persons entitled by British law to inquire into the character of the said barque, or with intent to assume a foreign character, or with intent to deceive such persons as aforesaid or some or one of them, and whereby the said barque became and is forfeited to Her Majesty.

13. The plaintiff, as a British officer of customs, has seized and detained the said barque as having become subject to forfeiture to Her Majesty, and has brought her for adjudication before this court pursuant to the said section.

The plaintiff in his statement then claimed (1) a declaration and judgment that the said barque Annandale had become and was forfeited to Her Majesty; (2) a sale of the said barque Annandale by the marshal of the court; (3) an award to the plaintiff out of the proceeds of the sale of such portion thereof as the court might think right; (4) and the condemnation of the defendant in the costs of the action.

The defendant delivered a statement of defence which, so far as material, was as follows:

1. The defendant in this action is Hans Lows, a Norwegian, and is the owner of the barque Annandale.

2. The defendant does not admit the allegations in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the statement of claim contained, and says, that on or about and after the 18th July 1874, the barque Annandale, proceeded against in this action, was not owned by William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Henry Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple. And that on or about the said 18th July 1874, the said barque was transferred to foreigners, and ceased to be a British ship, with the true intent and meaning of the 103rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.

3. The defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 7 and 8 of the statement of claims contained, and that the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple did not procure or to be procured, and carry or cause or permit to be carried on board the same barque a document or a certificate of registry, known as a Lettre de mer Provisoire by which it was represented that the said barque been bought by one, Henry Thomas Watson, of Antwerp, and that she was then a Belgian ship, or, in the alternative, if such certificate of registry, was by them procured and permitted to be carried on board the vessel, they had reasonable grounds to believe that was therein contained was true.

4. The defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 9 of the statement of claim contained, and says the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple did not on the 19th Sept. 1874 cause or cause or permit to be procured at Newcastle a certificate of British tonnage for the said barque as a foreign vessel belonging to Antwerp, in the Kingdom of Belgium, or, in the alternative, if such certificate of British tonnage was by them obtained as aforesaid had good and reasonable grounds to believe that the vessel was a foreign vessel belonging to Antwerp, in the Kingdom of Belgium.

5. As to the allegations in paragraph 10 of the statement of claim contained, the defendant denies that Stevens was on the 6th July 1876, master of the vessel by and with the knowledge of the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple. And the defendant denies that the said John Stephens, with the knowledge or permission of any son or persons, then owner or owners of the said vessel made a report to the plaintiff, or to his deputy or representative at Liverpool, representing that the said vessel belonged to Antwerp in the Kingdom of Belgium, or the alternative, if the said John Stevens so reports said barque, he had good and reasonable grounds to believe that the said barque belonged to Antwerp in the Kingdom of Belgium.

6. The defendant denies the allegations in paragraph 11 of the statement of claim contained, and says that subsequently to the 18th July 1874, the said barque was sailed by or with the permission of the said William Perlee Livingston, William Pearson, Henry James Livingston, Thomas Watson, William Harrison, and William Hepple, or by any one of them conjointly with or under a foreign flag, to wit the Belgian flag.

7. And as to the said several matters in the statement of claim contained and alleged to have been done by the persons, and in the ways and with the intents respectively alleged in the statement of claim contained, and defendant says that on the 6th July 1876, he was the bona fide purchaser of the Annandale for valuable consideration, and that at the time he became such bona fide purchaser he had no notice or knowledge whatsoever of the said statement of claim contained, or any one of the said matters having been done by the said persons in the way and with the intents in the said statement of claim mentioned or of the said matters having been done at all.

And by way of counter-claim the defendant says: That the barque Annandale was seized by the plaintiff on the 9th July 1876, and from that date is still detained without reasonable grounds for such seizure and detention. From the 9th July 1876, the defendant has been and still is deprived of the use of the said vessel and of the advantages and profits which would otherwise have accrued from the sailing and use of the said vessel.

And the defendant claimed: (1.) Damages for the seizure and detention of the said barque Annandale; (2.) The condemnation of the plaintiff in the costs of the action.

To the above statement of defence the plaintiff replied and demurred as follows:

1. The plaintiff joins issue with the defendant Lows, on his statement of defence.

2. The plaintiff further says that if the said barque became such purchaser for valuable consideration the statement of defence alleged, yet that such purchaser for valuable consideration had knowledge of the matters in the statement of notice or some of them, and of the said matters of them having been done by the persons and by and with the intents in the said statement of notice, the plaintiff admits that the Annandale was sold by him on the 9th July 1876, by warrant of the Court, and that she has since been detained, and he admits that there was and is reasonable ground for such detention. It is not the fact that the defendant or still is deprived of the use of the or the profits or profits which would otherwise have been from the sailing or use of the said vessel.

The plaintiff demurs to the 7th paragraph of the statement of defence, and says that the same is bad in law on the ground that a purchase for valuable consideration after the commission of the offence cannot incur a forfeiture under the 103rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and upon other grounds in law to sustain the demurrer.

The demurrer now came on for argument.

20.—The Attorney General (Sir J. Holker, et al. E. C. Clarkson for the plaintiff in support of the demurrer.—In the statement of claim, the defendant is charged with divers breaches of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. sect. 103, sub-sect. 2), which provides that the master or owner of any British ship does, or permits to be done, any matter or thing, or permits to be carried, any papers or documents, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from any person entitled by law to inquire into the same, or to give it a foreign character, or with intent to defraud any such person as lastly hereinbefore defined, such ship shall be forfeited to Her Majesty. The vessel was seized for these breaches on the 9th, 1876. The defendant, in his statement of defence, pleads, that on July 6th, 1876, he sold the vessel bonâ fide purchaser for value of the vessel without notice or knowledge of the commission of the breaches. To this defence the plaintiff demurs, and we submit that such a defence is not good, because, assuming everything to be as alleged, the property in the vessel passed to the Crown, and she became forfeited at the time when the acts alleged were committed, and not merely upon seizure. The title of the vessel became vested in the Crown when, as stated in the statement of claim, the then owners of the vessel, in 1874, represented the ship as sold to the Crown. The process of the Court is only to perfect the forfeiture and give legality to the proceedings. The act in itself is enough to vest the property in the Crown.

Is v. Withered, 1 Salk. 323;

Is v. Despard, 5 T.R. 112.

Two decisions were both under a statute (2, c. 18), by which it was provided that no goods could be imported into or exported out of the Kingdom of Great Britain, or any of His Majesty's possessions in Asia, Africa, or America, by any ship or ships, but in such ship as belonged to British subjects, under the penalty of the forfeiture of all the goods and commodities imported on board, and of the ship, one-third part thereof to the Majesty, one-third to the governor of the colony where the default was committed, and one-third to the person seizing, suing, or informing.

Is v. Despard (5 T.R. 112), the governor of a colony sued in trespass for taking the plaintiff's goods on board a ship, whereupon the defendant pleaded that the ship was seized under the statute as to the use of His Majesty and the defendant the plaintiff replied that the defendant had sold without bringing ship and cargo into a competent court for condemnation, and to this replication the defendant demurred; the court—following the former case in Salkeld—held that the property ceased to be in the plaintiff on committing the act occasioning forfeiture, and that condemnation was not necessary. In the United States the exact point has been decided in cases which clearly point out that the forfeiture takes place at the moment of the commission of the offence, and that a subsequent purchaser without notice cannot acquire a title overruling the forfeiture.

Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheaton U.S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; The United States v. 1960 Bags of Coffee, 8 Cranch U.S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

If this were not the rule the Merchant Shipping Act could always be infringed with impunity, as the owners who had committed the offence could always evade punishment by selling before seizure. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The principle laid down in those cases seems to me to be that the taint of the offence travels with the vessel, as in cases of collision the liability goes with the vessel—even if she changes hands twenty times over, and that the forfeiture occurs when the offence is committed.]

Murphy, Q.C. and Milvain, for the defendant.—

The construction contended for by the plaintiff would make it practically impossible for anyone to buy a share in a British ship, in consequence of risk of some question arising between the purchaser and the Crown, which would result in forfeiture. However many hands the vessel passed through, she would still remain liable to forfeiture. Such a construction would be a great hardship upon shipowners. Before the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, no such contention could have been maintained by the Crown. Until that Act the rule of law was, as we submit, that forfeiture did not take place until condemnation, or at any rate until seizure. In Reg. v. McCleverty, The Telegrafo (ante, vol. 1, p. 63; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748; L. Rep. 3 C. P. 673), it was held that the taint of piracy does not travel with a ship like a maritime lien through her transfers to different owners, and that a bonâ fide purchaser without notice had a good title as against the Crown, and the court there say, "There is no authority, their Lordships think, to be derived from principle or precedent for the position that a ship duly sold before any proceeding taken on the part of the Crown against her, by public auction to a bonâ fide and innocent purchaser, can afterwards be arrested and condemned, on account of former piratical acts, to the Crown. The consequences flowing from an opposite doctrine are very alarming. In this case, six months have elapsed between the sale and the arrest, but upon the principle contended for, six or any number of years, and any number of bonâ fide sales and purchases, would leave the vessel liable to condemnation on account of her original sin. Their Lordships are of opinion that the taint of piracy does not, in the absence of conviction or condemnation, continue like a maritime lien to travel with the ship through her transfers to various owners." Then has the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 altered the rule of law? Has the Legislature used apt words to work a forfeiture of vessels tainted with the original sin of an offence against that Act? By sect. 103 it is first of all provided that the offence committed against that section shall be "punishable" as therein provided; the word there used implies that something more is to be done to complete the forfeiture than the mere commission of the offence. Again, at the end of the same section provision is made for the seizing and detaining by government officers of "any ship which has become subject to forfeiture." Why "subject" to forfeiture, if the forfeiture has already operated? These words show that the intention was that some proceeding should be taken by the Government before the forfeiture takes place. Seizure at least is necessary. If the reading of the Act is right, then the operative words in the sub-sect. 2 of that section, viz., "shall be forfeited" must be read as "shall be subject to forfeiture," and there is no forfeiture on the commission of the offence. If the Legislature had intended to so enact, the Act would have expressly provided that the forfeiture should take place at the time of the offence committed, and then the sentence of condemnation would have had relation back to the committing of the offence. Provisions and language of that nature are well known in one statute, as in bankruptcy the title of the trustee relates back to the committing of the act of bankruptcy (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 11). Again, in sect. 106, a British ship even where not entitled to British privileges is made "liable to pains and penalties" as if a recognised British ship, and this also points to proceedings for enforcing those pains and penalties. Both the American cases cited are upon the words of the same act of Congress, which materially differ from this Act and the later case (Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 311) follows the earlier case (U. S. v. 1960 Bags of coffee, 8 Cranch 398). The words in the American statute are given in Cranch's Reps. p. 399, and are as follows: "That whenever any articles, the importation of which is prohibited by this Act shall, after the 20th of May next, be imported into the United States," . . . "all such articles" . . . "shall be forfeited." That Act, by the word "whenever," fixes a time for the forfeiture, namely, on the importation; but the Merchant Shipping Act only says "if" certain things are done, the forfeiture shall take place, but fixes no date on which it shall happen. In U. S. v. 1960 Bags of coffee (8 Cranch 398), Johnson, J. bases the judgment of the court wholly upon the statute, saying, that "it is expressly declared that the forfeiture shall take place upon the commission of the offence." There being no express declaration to that effect, except in the word "whenever," the decision must turn upon the construction of that word, which is absent from the English statute. In Wilkins v. Despard (5 T. R. 112) and the other English cases cited, there was a seizure by the Crown or its officers, and the actions only decided the right of the seisor to detain the property from the date of the seizure. These cases do not decide any right to exist in the Crown to seize after the property has passed to a bona fide purchaser; in effect, they go no further than showing that the title of the Crown relates to the date of seizure; they show no title relating back to the time of the act committed. To give such relation back, the Act should contain stronger words. If the argument on the part of the Crown be right, then even a seizure and sale by this court in an action in rem would not avail against the forfeiture under the Merchant Shipping Act.

Mar. 21.—The Attorney-General in reply.—In

Reg v. McCleverty, The Telegrafo, there is a distinction drawn between the forfeiture for piracy which is a common law forfeiture taking place only on conviction or condemnation, and other forfeitures. In that case the forfeiture took place for an offence against the jus gentium, and consequently, if forfeiture attached to the ship in the time of the committing of the act of piracy the ship, when forfeited, would pass, not to a particular nation, but to all nations, and become common property; hence in piracy there must be seizure and condemnation to procure forfeiture on one nation. Mere seizure will not operate to perfect a forfeiture if the wrongful act itself does not cause it; condemnation must follow until the act itself is sufficient. Where there is inquisition of escheat, and a jury finds that property is escheated, the Crown may convey unless the finding is reversed, because the jury finds that the property has become vested in the Crown by the act done; the right of the Crown to convey does not depend upon any act of the court vesting the property. Here the statute itself is clear. Sect. 103, sub-sect. 1 provides any ship improperly using the British flag, "shall be forfeited to Her Majesty," and enacts that, "in any proceeding for enforcing any such forfeiture," the burden of proof of the right to use the flag shall lie upon the person using the flag, thus assuming that the forfeiture takes place at the time of using the flag. Sub-sect. 2 also uses the same words, "shall be forfeited to her Majesty," and these words also imply forfeiture on committing the offence. Again, the words in the section quoted for the defendant, viz., "has become subject to forfeiture" clearly imply that the ship has become forfeited before the seizure prescribed by the section [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Your contention is that the property in the ship is devested at the time of the wrongful act done, and on this, I think Wilkins v. Despard is almost conclusive. The American decisions continue to enforce the same rule (Henderson v. Distilled Spirits, 40 Wall. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 44). It has been expressly decided that the Crown cannot claim forfeiture of a ship after a sale by the Admiralty Court, because such a sale is notice to all the world: (The Attorney General v. Norstedt, 3 Phil 97.)

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a proceeding on behalf of the Crown against a barque called the Annandale, in order to obtain a decree or sentence of forfeiture under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104)

The 103rd section, sub-sect. 1, enacts, "If any person uses the British flag and assumes the British national character on board any ship owned in whole or in part by any person not entitled by law to own British ships, for the purpose of making such ship appear to be a British ship, such ship shall be forfeited to her Majesty"; then other provisions follow in sub-section, which it is unnecessary to quote. The second sub-section provides, "If the master or owner of any British ship does or permits to be done any matter or thing, or carries or permits to be carried any papers or documents, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from any person entitled by British law to the same, or to assume a foreign character with intent to deceive, and such person

ADM.]

Ex parte BARROW; Re WORSDELL.

[BANK.]

hereinbefore mentioned, such ship shall be forfeited to her Majesty."

Now, it must be taken to be admitted for the purposes of this demurrer that on July 18, 1874, the barque Annandale was fraudulently represented by the owners at the Custom House to have been sold to foreigners, and that in fact she never was sold to foreigners, and therefore she falls under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, which I have just read. The defence sets up, amongst other grounds, the following in the seventh paragraph: "And as to the said several matters in the statement of claim contained and alleged to have been done by the persons, and in the ways and with the intents respectively alleged in the statement of claim, the defendant says that on the 6th July, 1876, he became bonâ fide purchaser of the barque Annandale for valuable consideration, and that at the time he became such bonâ fide purchaser he had no notice or knowledge whatsoever of the said matters in the statement of claim contained, or any of them, or of the said matters having been done by the said persons in the ways and with the intents in the said statement of claim mentioned, or of the said matters having been done at all." And then he goes on to state "that the barque Annandale was seized by the plaintiff on the 9th July, 1876, and from that date is still detained."

The plaintiff only demurs to the seventh paragraph in the statement of defence, and it is contended on behalf of the Crown that the property in this case was devested at the time when the owners committed the fraudulent act to which I have adverted. On the other hand, it has been contended on behalf of the owners that the property was not devested until the seizure. It is admitted that it is not necessary to have a sentence of condemnation, but it is contended that seizure was necessary in order to devest the owners of the property.

The court has been referred to various cases in the courts of this country, but it is not, in my judgment, necessary to do more than state the substance of the decisions come to by these courts. The case that is principally relied on is Wilkins v. Despard (5 T. Rep. 112), which appears to have followed an earlier decision, which are referred to Robert v. Withered (12 Mod. 92; Salk. 223; 5 Mod. 195; Comb. 361). The principle laid down in this case, and adopted in Wilkins v. Despard (5 T. Rep. 112), is, that, before seizure and before any suit, the forfeiture accrued at the time when the illegal and fraudulent act was done, and that act devested out of the owners the property which they had in it, and that the seizure related back to the act which was the cause of the forfeiture.

I am of opinion that this position is a sound one in law, looking to the cases that I have adverted to, and the demurrer must be sustained in this case on the ground that the forfeiture accrued at the time when the illegal act was done, and that the seizure relates back to the time of the commission of the offence. It will, therefore, be for the defendants to consider whether they will amend their defence.

Judgment for the plaintiff on the demurrer.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, G. O. Toller for Murton, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Solicitors for the defendant: Oliver and Botterell.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Reported by A. A. DORIA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, March 12, 1877.

Ex parte BARROW; Re WORSDELL.

Unpaid vendor—Arrival of goods at destination—
Stoppage in transitu.

B. sold and shipped goods to W. at F. per steamship company. The goods were in due course delivered at F. to C., who acted in the double capacity of agent for the company to collect freights, and of wharfinger and carrier for consignees of all goods landed at F. by the company. C.'s course of business was to advise consignees of the arrival of their goods, and to hold the same to their order and at their risk, and until the freight was paid. Before the goods arrived at F., B. committed an act of bankruptcy upon which he was adjudicated bankrupt. W. claimed the goods as an unpaid vendor before they were claimed by the trustee in bankruptcy.

Held that, as B. had claimed the goods before notice of their arrival had been communicated to W., and before they had been claimed by the trustee, his right of stoppage in transitu was not lost, although the goods had arrived at the place of their destination.

This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court of Cornwall, holden at Falmouth.

In the month of October 1876, Barrow and Son, leather merchants, in London, sold to Jonathan Worsdell the younger, a shoemaker at Falmouth, leathers to the value of 20*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* In part payment of the money J. Worsdell gave Barrow and Son a post-dated cheque of the 10th Nov. 1876 for 50*l.*, and promised to accept a bill for the remainder.

On the 27th Oct. Barrow and Son sent an invoice of the goods to J. Worsdell, jun., and not having received any directions as to how they were to be forwarded, delivered them to Wright and Jackson, wharfingers, in London, addressed to "Worsdell, Killigrew-street, Falmouth," and on the same day handed to Wright and Jackson a forwarding note in these terms:

Spa Road, Bermondsey, S.E.,

West Kent Wharf, Oct. 27th, 1871.

Please receive for Jonathan Worsdell jun., Killigrew-street, Falmouth, 9 bales and 2 trusses fully addressed.

On the 29th Oct. Wright and Jackson shipped the goods per the British and Irish Steam Packet Company's steamer The Countess of Dublin, which sailed the same day and arrived at Falmouth on the 31st Oct., where the goods were discharged at the wharf of Messrs. Carne and Co, the agents of the company, who placed them in their warehouse.

The ship's "manifest" of the goods was sent off by Wright and Jackson on the 31st Oct. and reached Carne and Co. the same evening, and was as follows:

West Kent Wharf, London.

Manifest of the Countess of Dublin from London to Falmouth 1876. Voyage sailed the 29th Oct. No. 3, 9 bales leather, and No. 5, 2 trusses leather. Consignees, Worsdell. Amount to pay, £18*s.* 9*d.* Place, Falmouth.

On the 30th Oct. J. Worsdell, jun. absconded, and on the 2nd Nov. a bankruptcy petition was presented against him, the act of bankruptcy being "departing from his dwelling house or otherwise absenting himself," whereupon he was adjudicated bankrupt on the 4th Nov. On the same day Messrs. Barrow and Son having heard that Worsdell had absconded telegraphed to Carne and Co. to stop the goods, and not to deliver them to anybody, as they claimed them as unpaid vendors. Later on the same day the bailiff of the County Court claimed the goods on behalf of the trustee in bankruptcy, but Carne and Co. declined to give them up.

[BANK.]

Ex parte BARROW; Re WORSDELL.

[BANK.]

On the 6th Nov. Carne and Co. wrote Barrow and Son that the goods were still in their possession, and would be retained by them until they were quite sure that they should fall into the right hands.

On the 16th Feb. 1877, the County Court judge, upon the application of the trustee, made an order declaring that the goods belonged to the trustee.

Against this order Barrow and Son appealed.

Carne and Co. deposed that they were the shipping agents at Falmouth of the steamship company for the purposes respectively of procuring and collecting freights for them, and as such agents they also had the exclusive right of delivering goods from their warehouses, and this they invariably did upon receipt of an order from the consignee; in this respect they acted solely on their own account as carriers for the consignee, and quite independently and apart from their agency for the company; that if goods were consigned to strangers not resident at Falmouth, they sent to them a freight note to the effect that the goods had arrived and were at the consignee's risk after landing, and if not immediately removed would be stored at the owner's risk and expense; that if the consignee resided at Falmouth they, as a matter of convenience, sent a verbal message instead of a freight note, and throughout acted as agents for the consignee; that the "manifest" of the goods in question was sent to them by Wright and Jackson, and reached them the same evening, and was in the usual form, and stated that 11. 8s. 9d. was the freight to be paid by the consignee, and that they knew nothing of the consignors until they received the telegram on the 4th Nov.

The other material facts sufficiently appear in the arguments, and in the judgment.

Horne Payne appeared for the appellant.—It is clear from the authorities that it is immaterial who pays the freight and charges, and that an unpaid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu overrides a carrier's lien for a general balance, though not the special charges on the goods sold.

Benjamin on Sales, p. 695;

Oppenheim v. Russell, 3 Bos. & Pul. 42;

Lickbarrow v. Mason, 6 East, 21.

The respondents might rely upon the fact that his clients had received part payment, but the bill of exchange, which was sent to the bankrupt for acceptance, was never accepted, and the cheque was worthless, there being no assets; but even if they had received part payment, it had been decided that a vendor's right of stoppage in transitu was not lost either by part payment or a conditional payment.

Hodson v. Ley, 7 Term Rep. 445;

Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 39;

Edwards v. Brewer, 2 M. & W. 375.

Lastly, the real question was, whether the goods had reached the hands of a person in Falmouth, who ceased to hold them as wharfinger and carrier, and held them by agreement between himself and the consignee no longer as carrier, but as agent for and on behalf of the consignee, retaining them on a bill of deposit. He contended that the evidence failed to prove any such agreement, the arrival of the goods never having been communicated to the bankrupt, who had, in fact, absconded before they arrived, and that Carne and Co. held them only as warehousemen in the ordinary course. He referred to

Benjamin on Sales, p. 707;

James v. Griffin, 2 M. & W. 623.

De Gez, Q.C. and Northmore Lawrence, for the trustee, contended that the transitus was ended when the steam packet company brought the goods to Falmouth, that being the destination named in the invoice sent to Worsdell by Barrow and Sons. The steam packet company were the only carriers employed. Their practice was not to deliver the goods, but to leave them on the wharf at Falmouth, where they remained until some new destination was communicated to them at the instance of the consignee. The transitus named in the invoice, therefore, was determined by their arrival at Falmouth. They cited

Wentworth v. Outhwaite, 10 M. & W. 436;

Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 534.

Carne and Co. never were carriers for Worsdell. They were merely candidates for being his carriers. He might have sent his own carts and taken them away. [THE CHIEF JUDGE.—Suppose there had been no Carne and Co. in existence and no warehouse, nothing but the open sky above, and that the goods had been shot out upon the wharf, and before any one could come and lay a hand upon them and say "They are mine," the unpaid vendor claimed them.] Then we say that is too late, because they are delivered at their destination, and the transitus is at an end. The steamship company undertook to carry them no further than the wharf at Falmouth, and the transitus was completely at an end when the goods arrived at the agent's warehouse, who is to keep them until he receives the further orders of the consignee.

Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175;

Ex parte Gibbs; Re Whitworth, L. Rep. 1 Ch. D. 101; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 479.

THE CHIEF JUDGE.—All these cases are extremely nice no doubt; but, notwithstanding the multitude of the cases upon the subject, there is a very clear precedent to be deduced.

The facts of this case unquestionably are these:

The goods are sold and shipped in London to be delivered to Worsdell at Falmouth; the vessel goes to Falmouth; the goods are transferred from the ship to the shore, and that operation is performed by Carne and Co., who are so far the agents of the shipping company. They are not to part with the possession of the goods until they are paid the freight charges. That is clear. The goods are lying on the quay, and they take them into their warehouse. I do not think that has very much to do with it. If the weather would destroy them, or injure them, it would be a very business-like mode of proceeding that they should take them into the warehouse; but whether on the quay or in the warehouse, that is the place to which, I think, the goods had so far been carried. Whether the transitus ended then, so that an unpaid vendor cannot claim his right of stoppage in transitu is what I have to decide.

Now the shipping brokers say that they have two characters. First, they are agents for the shipping company, and then having pos-

H. OF L.]

CLYDE NAVIGATION COMPANY v. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by G. F. MALDEN and A. H. POTTER, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law.

May 22, 23, and 30, 1876.

(Before Lords CHELMSFORD, HATHERLEY, and SELBORNE.)

CLYDE NAVIGATION COMPANY v. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SECOND DIVISION OF THE COURT OF SESSION.

Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 388—Compulsory pilotage—Collision—Contributory negligence—Burden of proof—Trial trip—Bye laws.

In cases of collision, if it be proved on the part of the defendants that the accident occurred through the fault of a pilot compulsorily employed, the burden of proving that the defendants have been guilty of contributory negligence lies on the plaintiffs, and they must show such negligence either by direct proof adduced by themselves or from facts proved in the defendants' evidence. (a)

The Iona (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158; L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479) explained.

The sending a new steamer, not yet out of the builders' hands, on a trial trip, manned by a sufficient number of men to work the ship, and in charge of a duly licensed pilot, but without regularly constituted officers and crew, does not amount to contributory negligence.

A bye-law of a local pilot board enacted that all steamers navigating the river should be manned by an "experienced captain or sailing master, and a sufficient number of able bodied and experienced men."

Held, that a pilot compulsorily employed might be considered a sailing master within the meaning of the bye-law.

Quare, how far such bye-law was applicable to a vessel on a trial trip.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the second division of the court of session in Scotland, delivered on 18th June 1875, by the Lord Justice Clerk (Lord Moncrieff), and Lord Neaves (Lord Ormisdale dissenting), affirming a judgment of the Lord Ordinary (Lord Mackenzie), in an action brought by the appellants against the respondents.

The case is reported in 2 Court of Session Cases (4th series), 842.

The action arose out of a collision which occurred in the Clyde, on 19th Feb. 1873, between the Colina, a large steamer of 2000 tons, the property of the respondents, and a dredger, the property of the appellants, by which the latter was sunk.

The Colina was a new ship, and was on her trial trip when the accident occurred, and she was manned by a crew of twenty-five hands, including the persons who were afterwards, when she was completed, respectively her master and first and second mates; and these persons were acting as officers on board the ship, which was in charge of a duly licensed pilot. By the Clyde

(a) This decision will have the effect of considerably varying the practice in collision cases where compulsory pilotage is pleaded as it will be no longer necessary for a defendant to show more than that the negligent act complained of resulted from the act of the pilot in charge. See The Cynthia, ante p. 878.—Ed.

Navigation Consolidation Act 1858, sect. 128, &c. pilotage is made compulsory upon all vessels over 80 tons register navigating the Clyde. The defence raised by the respondents was under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 388, that she was under the compulsory charge of a licensed pilot, and that the accident occurred by his default, without any contributory negligence on their part; and on the evidence the Lord Ordinary decided in their favour, and his judgment was affirmed as above mentioned.

Cotton, Q.C. and Benjamin, Q.C., appeared for the appellants.

Butt, Q.C. and Herschell, Q.C., for the respondents.

The facts and arguments appear sufficiently from the judgments of their Lordships.

Lord CHELMSFORD.—My Lords, the only question upon which there is any dispute in this case is whether the owners of the Colina have done, or omitted to do, any Act which contributed to the collision for which they are sought to be made answerable. Their defence is founded on the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) which enacts (sect. 388) that "No owner or master of any ship shall be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage sustained by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of such ship within any district where the employment of such pilot is compulsory by law."

But although an accident may have been attributable originally to a pilot, yet, if any part of the owner or master of the vessel has contributed to it, his responsibility still remains.

There has been some little confusion in the case as to the onus probandi. In the case of the Iona (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479) which was relied upon in the judgments of the court below, and mentioned in the arguments at the bar, Kindersley, V.C. is reported to have said "It is not enough for the owners to prove that there was fault or negligence in the pilot; they must prove to the satisfaction of the court which has to try the question that there was no default whatever on the part of the officers and crew of their vessel, or any of them, which might have been in any degree conducive to the damage."

The learned Vice-Chancellor imposes on the owners a species of negative proof which it is impossible for them to give. If, instead of saying "They must prove that there was no default," he had said, "It must be proved that there was no fault on the part of the officers and crew," he would have been perfectly correct.

The condition of exemption that the owner should prove that the accident arose entirely from the fault of the pilot, is one which may be fairly and reasonably interpreted. The owner having proved fault on the part of the pilot sufficient to cause, and in fact causing, the calamity, must, therefore, in absence of proof of contributory fault of the crew, be held to have satisfied the condition on which exemption depends, and are not to be called on to introduce proof of a negative character, to rebut the mere possibility of contributory default. It may be that in the course of the evidence the owners to fix the responsibility solely on the pilot, certain acts or omissions on the part of the crew may come out; and it will be incumbent on the owners to show such

H. OF L.]

CLYDE NAVIGATION COMPANY v. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

that those acts or omissions in no degree contributed to the accident.

There are certain facts which are clear in this case. The Colina was under the compulsory charge of a licensed pilot, and he was the main cause of the damage which occurred, which is attributable to his improper steering of the vessel at the critical time when danger was imminent, when he appears not to have had complete command of himself. The original cause of the accident is beyond a doubt. Is the pilot then alone responsible, or were there any acts or omissions which contributed to the accident attributable to the owners or the crew of the Colina? This vessel had just been built, and had not been delivered by the shipbuilders to the owners, but was on her trial trip on the Clyde, having on board three persons who afterwards became the master and the first and second mates, and a crew employed for the occasion consisting of twenty-five men. The first act of contributory negligence imputed to the owners is the having a crew of this description, and the bye laws of the Clyde Pilot Board and the evidence of the pilot are referred to.

The bye laws require that "All steam vessels must be supplied with a captain or sailing master who shall be an experienced seaman; and must also be manned with a sufficient number of able bodied and experienced seamen for the safe navigation of the vessel."

The judges who were in favour of the defenders spoke disparagingly of the state of things on board the Colina. The Lord Justice Clerk says, "The vessel was still the property of Barclay, Curle, and Co. (the builders), and she was manned on this her trial trip by officers and men who had no regular commission, but were there for the purpose of the trial trip. It is said that this is not sufficient compliance with the bye law. I think it was a slovenly state of matters, and not one to be commended."

And Lord Ormisdale says, "The evidence shows that the Colina was, as regards her officers and crew, in a very deplorable condition; so much so that it is not in the least surprising that an accident occurred."

With respect to the bye law one can only observe that it was totally inapplicable to the present case. The Colina was still in the shipbuilders' hands, and therefore could not have any captain, or sailing master, or established crew of seamen, and this may account for what was observed in the course of the argument that no charge is made by the trustees of the Clyde navigation of any fault by the non-observance of it. With respect to the constitution of the crew, it was necessarily one collected for the occasion, and could not include a master and officers strictly so called. There is no doubt that upon the trial trip of a vessel, although she cannot be officered and manned like a ship on a voyage, every provision must be made to navigate safely, and every precaution taken to avoid danger to other vessels. All that was necessary was that the pilot should be assisted by a sufficient crew to obey his orders, and carry them out promptly and efficiently; and certainly so far as number was concerned there was a sufficient crew, for it appears that the Colina would, if properly manned have a complement of sixteen men, whereas on the occasion of this trial trip there was no less a number than twenty-five.

But assuming any objection to arise from the constitution of the crew, the point to be established against the owner is that the accident was occasioned in some degree by this circumstance.

It was said that the accident was partly owing to the want of proper assistance given to the pilot. It is said that the master ought to have been on the bridge to advise him. There was, as I have said, no master strictly so called; but there is no magic in the word "master," and it appears that a man who was to be one of the officers of the Colina was on the bridge, and did what was necessary. It is further objected that the chief officer was not at the bow to repeat the pilot's orders; and it is said that if he had been there the hawser of the tug would have been sooner cast off. But the pilot says expressly that he did not want assistance for hauling the tug, and, in another part of his evidence, that all his orders were obeyed.

Lord Ormisdale sums up his objections to the conduct of the owners as contributing to the accident in these terms: "I am of opinion that in respect of want of promptitude in seeing that the order of the pilot to throw off the tug was carried into effect, and failure to keep a proper look out, the defenders have failed to exonerate themselves."

Now, with regard to the "failure to keep a proper look out," there is not the slightest evidence that there was not a proper look out kept; and with respect to the "want of promptitude in seeing that the order of the pilot was carried into effect," it is already answered by the pilot's evidence to which I have directed your Lordships' attention.

Under these circumstances I think your Lordships will be clearly of opinion that there is no ground for this appeal, and that the interlocutors appealed from ought to be affirmed.

LORD HATHERLEY.—My Lords, I am entirely of the same opinion.

The law has been laid down with perhaps a little want of his usual carefulness by Kindersley, V.C. in the case of the Iona (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479). I apprehend that the true rule is that the mode of proof will be this: In order to exempt yourself, by virtue of the provisions of the statute, from that which is a general common law liability, you who desire the exemption must bring yourself within the provisions of the statute; and the burden is, therefore, thrown upon you of proving that the mischief was occasioned by the pilot. But the other side may prove that although the mischief was occasioned in one sense by the bad management of the pilot, yet there was a default on the part of the owners of the ship, which default conduced to the accident.

The pilot seems evidently to have been assisted in every way. He says that every order he gave was attended to, there is no doubt about that; so that nothing whatever could be attributed to any defect on the part of those who were on board to assist him. Any danger or difficulty that did arise must have arisen from the unfortunately erroneous orders of the pilot. It seems to me, therefore that, under the circumstances, there is no pretence for saying that the defenders contributed to the injury complained of.

LORD SALMON.—My Lords, I see no reason for inferring the existence of any special or peculiar principle applicable to the burden of proof in this class of cases.

Your Lordships will observe that there are three things necessary to be proved; first, that a qualified pilot was acting in charge of the ship; secondly, that that charge was compulsory; and thirdly, that it was his fault or incapacity which occasioned the damage.

I apprehend that if a defender proves all these three propositions, and proves nothing more, then the burden is upon the pursuer, not upon the defender, to lay some foundation, at all events, for alleging that notwithstanding the proof given that there was a qualified pilot in charge, and that compulsorily, and that he committed some fault or showed some incapacity, by which loss or damage were occasioned, yet there was also contributing to the loss or damage other causes for which the owners of the ship were responsible. Some foundation for such a case of contributory negligence must be laid, and the question is upon whom it lies to show that. I apprehend it is clear that the burden of laying that foundation rests upon the pursuer, and not upon the defender, on general principles. The defender, if he has simply proved what he was obliged to prove to exonerate himself, and proved nothing more, is not obliged to travel into the indefinite region of negatives, or to anticipate by denial that for which no foundation is laid to call upon him to deal with it. No doubt the pursuer may discharge the onus lying upon him in that respect either by direct proof tendered by himself, or by showing that in the proofs brought forward on the part of the defenders, there are matters appearing from which fault or negligence which may have contributed to the mischief is legitimately and reasonably to be inferred. Unless he does that he does nothing. When that is done no doubt a further onus probandi is thrown upon the defender to rebut the prima facie evidence which has been given of contributory negligence on his part.

Whatever may be the precise expressions to be found in any of the judgments, I see no reason whatever, referring them, as they ought to be referred, to the facts of the particular cases in which the expressions were used, for supposing that an arbitrary rule was meant to be laid down, inverting the general principles of onus probandi as applied to this particular class of cases. The Lord Justice Clerk seems to me to have expressed the matter very properly, with the exception of perhaps one single word, when he says: "I should prefer to state the law to be that it is not enough for the owners to show that the damage arose through the fault of the pilot, if there is reasonable room for saying that there was contributory fault on the part of the master or crew." I confess I should not have used the word "room," I should have used the word "ground." The proof of circumstances which prima facie show such reasonable ground for saying that there was contributory fault on the part of the master or crew no doubt would throw upon the defender the burden of explaining those circumstances so as to satisfy the court that in point of fact the prima facie conclusion from those circumstances is not correct. If he fails to do that, he fails altogether. When the principles of law are correctly understood, there is no difficulty in applying them to the facts of this case.

The question has ultimately turned upon the want of proper officers on board the ship the first instance the argument took, per a wider range, and it was said that the was not properly manned and officered ultimately it was reduced, and reference made to the byelaws issued for the navigators of the Clyde. After having studied those byelaws I must say that even if it were clear that they applied to trial trips, as well as to other occasions in all respects, I am by no means satisfied there is any proof whatever given in this case that they were not strictly complied with, substantially complied with, at all events.

These byelaws are two. The first is: "Every vessel shall during the daytime have one person, and from sunset to sunrise, or in case of fogs, two persons, properly qualified, stationed at the bow as a look-out, to give notice in due time of any obstruction or danger, and shall be furnished with a trumpet, or bell, or whistle, to be used when there is reason to believe another vessel is near." I do not know whether the words, "stationed at the bow," point to anything different from being stationed on the bridge, but in this case the evidence makes it quite clear that the proper person for the look-out was the bridge; and as a matter of fact the evidence is that this accident occurred during the daytime, when, according to that byelaw, one person alone would be sufficient for the look-out, for there was plenty of light, and no fog. The pilot and another person, who practically acted as an officer, were on the bridge the whole of the time, to say nothing of a third person, whom I will mention presently, who was there too, but who may not perhaps have been properly qualified. But that the pilot and the other person were properly qualified for this purpose is perfectly clear; they were there in the proper place during the whole time, and there was a trumpet to give proper notice. Therefore it seems to me that the byelaw, at all events, was duly complied with in this case.

The second byelaw is: "Every steamer navigating the river shall be manned by an experienced captain or sailing master, and a sufficient number of able bodied and experienced men, and shall in all cases have a person or persons stationed as a look out, in terms of article 2." There was a person, in fact there were two persons, stationed as a look out. It is now admitted that no case can be made out of a want of a proper crew of seamen. The sole question, therefore, upon that byelaw would be reduced to this: Was the requirement that every steamer should be manned by an experienced captain or sailing master duly complied with?

My Lords, I venture to say that the answer was the sailing master in this case; and if that be nothing more than the mere language of the byelaw, considered as applicable at all events to a trial trip, I cannot conceive any ground for saying that a pilot might not be a sufficient sailing master within the meaning of the byelaw. So much with regard to the byelaws.

Now I come to the pleadings, and it seems to me that if ever there was a case in which the pursuers were to be exonerated by the inferences to be drawn from the pleadings this is a case of that kind. For who are these pursuers? They have made these byelaws, a body charged with the care of the navigation of the Clyde. It is not alleged that they did after those pleadings were put in, any thing they did not know before. They refore, both what was usual in the case of ships, and what was reasonably to be expected, whether under their own or otherwise, in respect of the efficiency of the vessel. And knowing all they distinctly put upon the pleadings, that the accident was due to two or one or other of those causes, not any other cause besides. Those two were, first, "negligence, or want of proper skill on the part of those navigating or on the vessel." That is one, and the other gross and culpable defects in her command and apparelling, and in the hull, masting, steering gear, or other appliances." They distinctly alleged two causes, one of steering and navigation at the time; the other improper construction and fitting of the vessel itself. But there is a total allegation either that the ship was overmanned, or not properly officered, or want of proper manning or proper management had anything to do with the accident.

.]

DUDGEON v. PEMROKE.

[H. OF L.

It is possible for me to doubt that they would have had a want of proper manning and proper management, when the pleadings were put in, they had that view of the subject which, in default of any other, else to rely upon, has been pressed upon at the bar. And when I look at the bearing in mind that such is the pleading on their themselves, I cannot but come to the conclusion that if there were any doubtful points, any ambiguous points, any room for suggestion, or possible inferences leading to a conclusion that the ship was improperly manned, all doubt and all ambiguity upon that ought to be removed, when we bear in mind those who best understood the matter, the interest it was to suggest these objections, there were any ground for them, they themselves made no such suggestion, and that they did not rely upon that view

It would be most unreasonable to suppose that you should for a trial trip put on board and officers engaged and committed the same way as when the ship is to sea; and this at a time when she is in the hands of the builders, when a purpose is in view, and when she is delivered over to those whose business it will be to employ the officers and crew.

Ships have this evidence, that the pilot was in charge; and I apprehend, in order to secure the benefit of the exemption statute, it was necessary that he should be; he was in sole charge, but he had, pointed out, the assistance, not only of a crew, and of four men at the wheel, a "quartermaster," but also of two others who were in substance acting as officers, having the engagements of officers at Did they or did they not do all that was required, and were they or were they not in a position as to make it a right and reasonable conclusion that the pilot had all the assistance which he could possibly require? The pilot, whose interest it was, as has been pointed out, rather to exonerate himself than otherwise, says as the result of his evidence, that he had no reason whatever to doubt that all his orders were properly obeyed and attended to, and that he needed no assistance with which he was not provided.

Therefore I entirely agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Interlocutors appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellants, W. A. Loch, agent for Webster and Will, Edinburgh.

Solicitors for the respondents, Grahames and Wardlaw, agents for Frasers, Stoddart, and Mackenzie, Edinburgh.

Friday, March 23, 1877.

(Present the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), LORD PENZANCE, LORD O'HAGAN, LORD BLACKBURN, and LORD GORDON.)

DUDGEON v. PEMROKE.

Marine insurance—Time policy—Implied warranty of seaworthiness—Perils insured against.

In an ordinary time policy there is no implied warranty that the vessel should be seaworthy at any period of the risk.

In ascertaining whether a ship was lost by perils of the sea, causa proxima non remota, spectatur, therefore any loss caused by the perils of the sea is within the policy, although it would not have occurred but for the concurrent action of some other cause which is not within it.

Plaintiffs insured their steamer which was then in dock by a time policy for a year, which was underwritten by the defendant; she crossed the North Sea in fine weather but made water; and on her return, being waterlogged in bad weather, she stranded, and became a total loss.

At the trial the jury could not agree whether she was seaworthy at the beginning of the first voyage, nor whether unseaworthiness was the cause of her loss. They found, however, that the plaintiffs did not know she was unseaworthy, and it was admitted that the loss was due immediately to perils of the sea. The verdict was entered for the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decision of the majority of the Exchequer Chamber, and affirming the original judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench), that the verdict was rightly entered for the plaintiff, as the ship was lost by perils insured against, and that as this was a time policy there was no implied warranty of seaworthiness at any period of the risk.

Gibson v. Small (4 H. of L. Cas. 353), followed.

THE action was brought to recover a total loss upon a time policy of insurance for twelve months effected by the plaintiffs on the steamship Frances, in the sum of 5800*l.* on a ship valued at 8000*l.* and machinery at 4000*l.*, the particulars of which action and the facts relating thereto are fully set forth in the reports of the case in the courts below (ante, vol. 2, p. 323; ante, p. 101).

The case was heard before Blackburn, J. and a special jury at Guildhall in Oct. 1873, and the verdict entered for the plaintiffs.

H. OF L.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[H. L.]

A rule nisi for a new trial was obtained, and upon argument was discharged by the Court of Queen's Bench (Blackburn and Quain, J.J.). On appeal to the Exchequer Chamber this judgment was reversed by Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Cleasby and Pollock, B.B., Brett, J., and Amphlett, B. dissenting.

The case was then brought up on error to the House of Lords.

Milward, Q.C., Watkin Williams, Q.C., and A. L. Smith for the appellants.

Butt, Q.C. and Cohen, Q.C. for the respondents. —During the argument the judgments in the courts below were discussed, and the following cases were referred to:

Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353; 21 L. T. Rep., O. S., 240;

Thompson v. Hopper, 6 E. & B. 172, 937; 28 L. T. Rep., O. S., 142;

Fawcus v. Sarsfield, 6 El. & Bl. 192;

Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, 4 A. & E. 646;

Douglas v. Scougall, 4 Dow's App. Cas. 276;

Wilkie v. Geddes, 3 Dow's App. Cas. 60.

LORD PENZANCE.—In this case, my Lords, the action was brought by the appellant upon a policy of insurance by which the steamship Frances was insured for a year for the sum of 5800*l.*, the ship being valued at 8000*l.* and the machinery at 4000*l.* Several pleas were pleaded by the underwriters, the present respondents. The cause was tried, and several questions were eventually put to the jury by the learned judge, who, upon the answers of the jury, directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiffs. A rule was obtained to set aside this verdict, for a new trial, or to enter the verdict for the defendants upon the third plea. This rule was discharged after argument by the Court of Queen's Bench, and an appeal was then made to the Court of Exchequer Chamber upon a special case stated by the parties. The result of this appeal was, that the judgment of the Queen's Bench was reversed, and a new trial granted. It is against this judgment that the appellants have appealed to your Lordships' house; and the questions raised in the house, though not numerous, are of extreme importance in the administration of the law of marine insurance.

My Lords, the policy in this case is a time and not a voyage policy, and not only so, but an ordinary time policy. There can, I apprehend, be no doubt upon that point. It has been suggested that by reason of the policy having been drawn up on a printed form, the printed terms of which are applicable to a voyage and also to goods, as well as to the ship, the policy is something less or something more than a time policy. But the practice of mercantile men of writing into their printed forms the particular terms by which they intend to describe and limit the risk intended to be insured against without striking out the printed words, which may be applicable to a larger or different contract, is too well known, and has been too constantly recognised in courts of law to permit of any such conclusion.

The policy then, being a time policy, the first question raised for your Lordships' determination is whether the law implies in such a contract any warranty that the vessel should be seaworthy at any period of the risk, and if so at what period or periods.

My Lords, this is no new question. It is raised in the case of Gibson v. Small (4 H. L. Cas. 415), which was determined by your Lordships' House in the year 1854, and has been subject of more than one subsequent decision. I do not propose to trouble your Lordships reviewing the arguments on this question, but I consider that the case of Gibson v. Small supplemented as it was by the two cases of Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 172, 937), and Fawcus v. Sarsfield (6 E. & B. 192), must be considered to have set at rest the controversies on this subject, and to have finally decided that the law is not, in the absence of special stipulations in the contract, infer in the case of a time policy a warranty that the vessel at any particular time shall have been seaworthy.

In pronouncing the judgment of the majority of the court in the latter case Lord Campbell said: "For the reason which I gave in the case of Gibson v. Small, and which I have given in the case of Thompson v. Hopper, I think there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness in any time policy."

From that time, upwards of twenty years ago the present, these decisions have been acted upon and submitted to, and millions probably of policies have been effected, and losses adjusted under them, and whatever may be argued as to the soundness of the conclusions then arrived at, however, desirable it may be, as a matter of policy and concern that some such obligation of keeping his vessel, as far as it is within his power, seaworthy, should be cast on a shipowner, the law must, I submit to your Lordships, be considered as settled by these decisions, and any change made in it must be by legislative enactment alone.

It was next contended that the vessel in this case was not lost by perils of the sea, and that some question ought to have been put to the jury by the learned judge upon this subject. The circumstances of the vessel's loss are detailed in the special case. It is only necessary to state a few sentences of it. "The Frances was heavily laden, and began to make water to such extent, that in sixteen hours the fires were extinguished. A portion of the deals which formed the deck cargo was used for relighting the fires, the rest was thrown or washed overboard. About twelve hours pumping the pumps were choked with the oats, and all hands had to be employed in baling the ship. There was evidence given by the defendant that had the pumps been in proper order the pumps might not have got choked as they did. On the night of the 14th Feb., those on board the Frances having sighted the Spurn Light, endeavoured to get her into Hull, the ship being water logged, did not readily answer her helm. Partly from this and partly from the thickness of the weather, which at the time was very dense, on the following morning, at 5 a.m., the ship having been in a state of distress since the morning of the 12th Feb., was ashore under Didlington Heights upon the coast of Yorkshire. One of the boats was saved, but the crew were all saved by a small boat. The cargo was afterwards saved, but could not be got off, and subsequently was broken up into two and finally, after some months, was sold in pieces."

These facts require no argument.

OF L.]

DUDGEON v. PEMBROKE.

[H. OF L.]

was lost "by perils of the sea," understanding those words in the sense which the courts of this country have uniformly ascribed to them, the vessel undoubtedly was so, and the real question intended to be raised therefore is, whether a vessel not strong enough to resist the perils of the sea (in other words unseaworthy) can be pronounced to be lost by perils of the sea, because of the force of the winds and waves that met ashore, and finally broke up and went to the bottom.

The question, therefore, is one of law and fact, and the learned judge was quite right in entering the verdict as he did without the jury any further question as to the loss which there was no fact in dispute, subject to the determination of the question of law raised. Discussing such a question it must be assumed, as admitted by the appellant that it should be for the sake of argument, that the vessel was unseaworthy, and that her want of seaworthiness rendered her to be unable to encounter successfully the perils of the sea and so to perish. The question therefore is in substance the same as that raised by the sixth plea, or rather so much of it as is found to be proved, namely that the vessel sailed from London in a wholly unseaworthy condition on the voyage on which she was lost and that the ship "was lost as alleged by reason of such unseaworthiness." For this plea is understood to mean not that the vessel did perish immediately by the action of the winds and waves (if it did it was certainly not sustained facts), but that the loss by these perils of the sea was brought about by the vessel's unseaworthiness. It will at once occur to your Lordships upon the raising of such a question that in respect of a voyage policy as to a time policy, if a loss is caused by the sea, but more remotely substantially brought about by the condition of the ship, is a loss for which the underwriters are liable, then quite independent of the warranty of seaworthiness which applies only to the contract of the risk ("in its several gradations" Justice Erle, in Thompson v. Hopper (6 E. & B. 1) called them) the underwriters would be liable in every case of a voyage policy to raise and the question whether at the time the loss happened the vessel was by reason of any insufficiency of time of her last leaving a port where she had been repaired, unable to meet the perils of the sea, and was lost by reason of that insufficiency. If such be the law, my Lords, the underwriters have been signally supine in availing themselves of it, for there is no case that I am aware of except those to which I have referred, in anything like such a defence as this has been set up. The materials for such a defence have existed in countless instances, and yet no trace of it in any case which has been brought to your Lordships' notice, still less any case upholding such a doctrine.

In the case of Fawcus v. Sarsfield (6 E. & B. 1) the vessel was lost by the bar, but that was a case of partial loss in which the question was whether the underwriters were liable for repairs, and the court held that the arbitrator had found that the necessity for repairs arose from any peril insured against, but not from the subject of insurance. In the total absence then of all authority, and in the face of that this defence is a new one, I find no reason for advising your Lordships, not now for the first time to sanction a doctrine which would entirely alter the hitherto accepted obligations between underwriter and assured.

It was said by one of the learned judges in the Exchequer Chamber that the unseaworthiness of the ship at the commencement of the voyage which really causes the loss is a fact the consequences of which are imputed to the assured and were to be borne by him and not the underwriters. But the question as it seems to me is not what losses ought in the abstract to be borne by the assured as being imputable to him or his agents on the one hand, or by the underwriters as being caused by the elements on the other hand, but what losses they have mutually agreed should be borne by the underwriters in return for the premium they have received. These losses are in the contract of the insurance amongst others declared to be all losses by perils of the sea. A long course of decisions in the courts of this country have established that causa proxima non remota spectatur is the maxim by which these contracts of insurance are to be construed, and that any loss caused immediately by the perils of the sea is within the policy, though it would not have occurred but for the concurrent actions of some other cause which is not within it. It is I conceive far too late for your Lordships now to question this construction of the underwriter's obligations, if indeed you were disposed to do so. The only exception which has hitherto been established to the underwriter's liability thus construed, is to be found in the case of Thompson v. Hopper, where it was alleged that the shipowner himself knowingly and wilfully sent the ship to sea in an unseaworthy state, and that she was lost in consequence. It is only necessary to observe upon that case that the knowledge and wilful misconduct of the assured himself was an essential element in the decision arrived at. There is no case that warrants your Lordships in going further, and on the other hand it is easy to see that the arguments employed in this case, if sanctioned by judicial decision, would result in relieving the underwriters from many other losses to which they have hitherto been liable. For instance, the assured has always been held protected from loss from the perils insured against, though that loss was brought about through the negligence of his captain or crew. Now, the captain has the entire control of the vessel in respect of repair in foreign ports as of everything else, and if the 6th plea in this case were held to be sufficient, without proof of the shipowner's knowledge and wilfulness, the result would be that whenever the captain failed in his duty in fitly repairing the vessel in a foreign port, and the loss, though caused by perils of the sea, could be traced to the ship's defective condition, the assured would lose the benefit of his policy. Such a doctrine once established would extend equally to the negligent conduct of the ship in the course sailed by her, or her careless management in emergency, or the absence of reasonable and proper exertion on the part of the captain or crew.

For these reasons, my Lords, I submit to the house that the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought to be reversed. My Lords, I may state that my noble and learned friend, the Lord Chancellor has been aware of the judgment I was about to deliver in this case, and that he desires me to say that he entirely agrees with it, and does not wish to add anything to it.

H. OF L.]

Ex parte WATSON; Re LOVE.

[Ct. of Ap.]

Lord O'HAGAN.—My Lords, having had the advantage of perusing the opinion delivered by my noble and learned friend who has just addressed your Lordships, and adopting it after sufficient consideration without any reserve, I do not propose to go over again the reasons on which it is grounded.

I would only say a word with reference to one of the judgments we are reviewing, with which I am unable to concur. Notwithstanding the suggestion of that judgment, I think that the policy in this case was a time policy, and nothing else, and I would urge upon your Lordships the importance of abiding by the well considered decision in Gibson v. Small (4 H. of L. Cas. 353), followed by subsequent cases of high authority, and accepted as the rule of mercantile action for so many years, which determined that in such a policy framed in the usual terms, there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness. That decision was wise, convenient, and safe. It was in accordance with the sound principle which forbids the importation into a written contract, save in exceptional cases which are familiar to us, of material terms which the parties to it have not thought fit to insert. It was convenient as furnishing one of those plain rules without qualification or exception which Lord Campbell has there described most desirable in commercial transactions, avoiding extreme refinements or the superfluous raising of difficult questions from special circumstances; and it was safe because express stipulation can always be introduced when needful. The want of implied warranty does not protect the insured against the consequences of his own fraud for wilful concealment in nullifying the insurance, or deprive the insurer of his protection against such malversation of the security as he may derive from the inspection which he has the opportunity of making for himself. The only case to which Lord St. Leonards referred (in Gibson v. Small, 4 H. of L. Cas. 417), as possibly justifying the implication of a warranty in a time policy, was when it is effected on a vessel about to sail on a particular voyage.

In the case before the House, the jury have expressly negatived all knowledge of the alleged unseaworthiness on the part of the insurers, and there is no proof of fraud of any kind. The principle so long established cannot be disturbed merely upon the suggestion of one of the learned judges that it is desirable to put difficulties in the way of those who either criminally or negligently send unworthy ships on dangerous voyages. If the public interest, for that or any other reason, requires a change in a law so well established it should be made by the authority of the Legislature. As to the loss of the vessel by the perils of the sea, I can add nothing to the observations of my noble and learned friend.

Lord BLACKBURN.—My Lords, I also had an opportunity of perusing the opinion of the noble and learned Lord who moved the judgment of the House in this case, and I perfectly and thoroughly concur in it. I will say no more than that I agree both in the reasoning and in the conclusion.

Lord GORDON.—My Lords, I am of the same opinion. I think the case of Gibson v. Small is decisive of the question in this case. There may be questions as to the propriety of the principle thus affirmed, but if a change is desirable it can only be made by the action of the Legislature; if any proposition to that effect were laid forward it would probably give rise to considerable discussion.

Judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chancery reversed.—Appellant to be entitled to costs of this appeal.

Solicitors for appellant, Cattarus, John, & Hughes.

Solicitors for respondent, Hollams, Saml, & Coward.

Supreme Court of Judicature

COURT OF APPEAL

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by H. PRAT, E. STEWART ROCHER, JAMES P. M. and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, Feb. 15, 1877.

(Before JAMES, L.J. and BAGGALLAY and WELL, J.J.A.)

Ex parte WATSON; Re LOVE.

Vendor and purchaser—Stoppage in transitu of transitus—Constructive delivery—Apportionment of goods—Destination of goods—Bankruptcy—Rights of vendor and trustee in bankruptcy—By an agreement under seal, W., a merchant at Bradford, agreed from time to time to send goods to L., so that he might, during the continuance of the agreement, have a credit to the amount, for which W. was to draw bills of exchange which L. should accept from time to time for the invoice price of the goods; L. should ship all goods purchased under this agreement to R. and Co., of Shanghai, for his account, the bills of lading to be sent by L. directly on receipt, by post, to R. and Co. and order the bills of lading were to be sent so that W. should have a lien on the bills of lading and each shipment of goods, in transit, and such lien to extend only to the particular shipment, &c.

Under this agreement, L. purchased of W. goods which W. sent in the ordinary way to the packer at Bradford to be packed and sent to L. for shipment. In accordance with the conditions received from L. the packer sent the goods by rail, carriage paid, to a London agent, and the goods were shipped on board the Gordon Castle, for Shanghai. The railway company gave notice of the arrival of the goods in London, and that they would forward them to the agents, who accordingly did. L. accepted the goods for the price of the goods. The bills of lading were made out by L.'s direct order of himself or assigns, and the goods were shipped, who retained them because they had not paid the freight. L. stopped payment on the ship sailed with the goods, and afterwards W. telegraphed to R. and Co. that the goods to his agents at Shanghai. On the following day, L. filed a liquidation order, and he was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt. The goods arrived at Shanghai.

Ex parte Watson; Re Love.

[Ct. of App.]

ie bills of lading, which were also trustees in L.'s bankruptcy: treatment did not deprive W. of the or's right to stop in transitu, and as the transitus had not ended rival of the goods at Shanghai ie Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, N. S. 33; L. Rep. 2 P. C. 393) and a effectual notice of stoppage before transitus, W. was entitled to the proceeds of their sale.

the agreement was not a bill of 1st section of the Bills of Sale Act appeal from a decision of Mr. t, sitting as Chief Judge in Bank-ie case were as follows:

ent under seal made on the 10th sen Robert Efford Love, of Park- ty of London, merchant and ship- e part, and William Watson, of county of York, manufacturer, of ter reciting that Love had for some ased from Watson from time to ll purchasing Manchester goods China, Watson drawing upon Love cepting bills of exchange for the uch goods; and that Watson had and the latter had agreed to give the due payment of the bills of turity and for all sums which to time become due from him to ount current not exceeding the and that in pursuance of such ' had, by three several mort- sale bearing even date with the at, transferred to Watson by way irty-two sixty-fourth shares of rty-two sixty-fourths of the ship irty-two sixty-fourths of the ship 1 vessels Love was the owner in aforesaid, in consideration of the ties agreed as follows: (1.) That rom time to time supply to Love to his selection, so that he might, nance of the agreement, have a nt of 5000*l.*, for which Watson n and Love should accept bills of me to time for the invoice price ) that Love should ship all goods ' clause 1 to Messrs. Rothwell, Shanghai, China, for sale on his e bills of lading of all such goods y Love immediately on receipt by Rothwell, Love, and Co., to whose ls of lading should be made out; old have a lien upon the bills of shipment of such goods in transit ie hands of the consignees or any nd also upon the proceeds or sed with the proceeds of each the hands of the consignees or s, or in transit homewards; that er, should not be a general one, d only to the particular shipment, when the bills of exchange which y Love for such particular ship- ve been paid; (3) that Love m time to time to the full value neft of Watson primarily as such ledge as aforesaid, and subject thereto for his own benefit, all the goods to be shipped as before mentioned and also the mort- gaged ships, &c.

No notice of this agreement was given to Roth- well, Love, and Co.

On the 1st March 1876, Love ordered of Watson, under the above mentioned agreement, ten bales of lastings of the value of 44*3*l. 10*s.*, which goods Watson forwarded in the ordinary course to James Copperthwaite, of Bradford, a packer, to be packed and forwarded to Love.

On the 20th March Copperthwaite wrote to Love, saying, "I beg to hand you particulars of ten bales waiting your forwarding instructions," and appending the particulars of the goods.

On the 22nd March Watson invoiced the goods to Love, and the following day Love wrote to Copperthwaite: "Please send the ten bales last- ings to the Gordon Castle, loading in the South West India Dock for Shanghai. I enclose card of of the vessel. I should have sent forwarding instructions before, but there was no vessel ready."

On the 24th March the goods were forwarded by Copperthwaite from Bradford (carriage paid) by the great Northern Railway to their Poplar Dock Station, for shipment on board the Gordon Castle, for Shanghai, and, on the 25th March, Love received from the Great Northern Railway Company, the following "advice of goods": "The undermentioned goods consigned to you have arrived at this (Poplar Dock) station. I will thank you for instructions as to their removal hence as soon as possible, as they remain here to your order, and are now held by the company, not as common carriers, but as warehousemen at owner's sole risk of loss or damage, by deterioration or fire, and subject to the usual warehouse charges in addition to the charges now advised." Then followed a description of the goods, under which was written, "Will be sent to the Gordon Castle, S. W. I. Docks."

On the 24th March Watson drew upon Love for 44*3*l. 10*s.*, the price of the goods, at six months date.

On the 28th March the goods were shipped on board the Gordon Castle, and on the same day Love sent to Messrs. Skinner, and Co., the owners of the ship, the bills of lading of the goods in three parts, exclusive of the master's copy, for signature, and Skinner and Co., on the 29th March, signed them to the order of Love, but they were never delivered over to him, inasmuch as he failed to pay the freight.

On the 4th April, Love, through his solicitors, sent notice to his creditors that he must suspend payment.

On the the 6th April H. F. Jörns, of Man- chester, wrote to W. Pustan at Hamburg as follows, in German: "I request you to telegraph immediately to your Shanghai house to attach the following goods sent by Wm. Watson and Co. to Rothwell and Co., and in any case to get delivery of the bills of lading of the still afloat lots. The goods are"—(inter alia) the ten bales shipped in the Gordon Castle—"and then sell the goods for account of Wm. Watson and Co. at the best pos- sible prices."

On the 8th April the Gordon Castle sailed with the goods on board.

On the 11th April Watson telegraphed to Roth-

Ct. of App.]

Ex parte WATSON; Re LOVE.

[Ct.

well, Love, and Co. to deliver the goods to his agents at Shanghai.

On the 12th April, Love filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement.

On the 30th May, Love was adjudicated a bankrupt, and on the 21st June a trustee was appointed.

The bills of lading of the goods still remained in the hands of Skinner and Co., of whom Watson demanded them before the goods arrived at Shanghai. A counter-claim was set up by the trustee in Love's bankruptcy. Ultimately it was arranged that the goods should be sold by the agents of Skinner and Co. at Shanghai, and the proceeds paid to the person who should be held entitled thereto.

The Registrar having held that the trustee in Love's bankruptcy was entitled to the proceeds of sale, Watson appealed from his decision.

Horne Payne, for the appellant.—The agreement made between the vendor and purchaser in Feb. 1876, was not a bill of sale within the meaning of the 1st section of the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36). But even if it was a bill of sale, the goods were not in the apparent possession of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy:

Williams on Bankruptcy, p. 103;
Load v. Green, 15 M. & W. 216;
Smith v. Hudson, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 377;
Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 336;
Ex parte Montagus; Re O'Brien, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 197; L. Rep. 1 Ch. D. 554;
Townley v. Crump, 4 Ad. & Ell. 58;
Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. of L. Cas. 191;
Edwards v. Edwards, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 472;
L. Rep. 2 Ch. D. 201.

[BRAMWELL, J.A., referred to Belcher v. Bellamy (2 Ex. 303).] At all events, the agreement did not deprive us of our ordinary vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, and we duly exercised that right before the goods reached Shanghai, for the case in the Privy Council of Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 33; L. Rep. 2 P. C. 393) shows clearly that the transitus continued till the goods reached Shanghai. We are, therefore, entitled to the proceeds of sale of the goods.

Everitt and R. T. Reid, for the trustee.—Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris is distinguishable from this case, for there the bills of lading were made out to agents abroad, while here they were made out to the bankrupt. As Mr. Benjamin in his work on sales says (at p. 703): "The question, and the sole question, for determining whether the transitus is ended, is, In what capacity the goods are held by him who has the custody? Is he the buyer's agent to keep the goods, or the buyer's agent to forward them to the destination intended at the time the goods were put in transit?" In the present case, when the goods arrived at the railway station in London, there was nothing to prevent the purchaser from taking possession of them. The transitus was broken there: (Valpy v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 837; Dixon v. Baldwin, 15 East, 175.) They also cited:

Menz v. Jacobs, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 171; L. Rep. 7 E. & L. 481;
Ancona v. Rogers, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115; L. Rep. 1 Ex. D. 285;
Ex parte Bunner; Re Tappenbeck, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199; L. Rep. 2 Ch. C. 273.

Horne Payne, in reply.

JAMES, L.J.—Notwithstanding the length of time

this case has occupied, and the great number of nice points which have been raised, I am of opinion that the case ought to be determined at the last point. Independently of any question as to the vendor's right of stoppage, the original right of a vendor to stoppage is when his purchaser failed; and there was nothing in the agreement, there was nothing in the gain between the parties, at all events, to diminish the vendor's right to stop transitu.

Then the question is, has he stopped transitu? I am of opinion that he did, in truth and in fact, continue, as intended, in truth and in fact, to continue way from the railway station in the through the docks in London, and on board ship to Shanghai. It is quite clear that the gain between the vendor and the purchaser was essential to the interests of the vendor, and that that should be the transit, and that the transit that actually was made from London to the other. That is, it was to send Bradford to Shanghai, by railway and ship. The goods have by this time, subject of course to the perils of the sea, reached Shanghai. It is not that there was some break in the transit, but that the transit was interrupted, and that some right had been taken to the stoppage, and that that rendered the purchaser some different character in fact or other. That did not, I think, affect the goods when they reached the packer's hands. The packer was the man employed by the vendor to pack; and when the goods reached the ship, when they reached London, no doubt the company, being both warehousemen and carriers, said: "We hold them at your disposal; they had the goods marked, and sent to the purpose of being forwarded to the Gordon Castle, and in that very note in which they were for orders and say, "We hold them at your disposal, and so on, it is said that they "will be sent to the Gordon Castle." Therefore it is said that they must have received notice at that time that the Gordon Castle was the proper destination for the goods; and the goods themselves were marked with the word "Shanghai" marked upon them. Therefore that was the rightful course of action, and nothing ought to have taken.

We are of opinion that we must determine that that which was the rightful course of action intended to be taken, and was intended to be taken, is to say, to send them on to Shanghai. This I am quite certain, that if the vendor had found out that the goods were to be sent anywhere else than to Shanghai, and by any other means than that intended, they could have applied to the Chancery Division of the High Court, and they would have been entitled to an injunction to prevent the goods from being sent in any other place. Therefore they would be entitled to require that to be done which was done.

That having been done, has the case been stopped? It so happens, gentlemen, that the documents of title left the shippers' possession; owing to a mistake about a charge of three goods, nobody has ever acquired the goods out of the ship.

.]

THE PARANA.

[Ct. of App.]

are on board the ship, with no valid body to take them out of the shippers' he vendor comes to the shippers and deliver those goods to me," and the vendor undertakes to sell the goods he proceeds to the real owner.

union that the goods have been effected in transitu, because the shippers rected to sell them according to the stable rights of the parties; and if the gone out in time they could have goods in transitu before they were of the ship at Shanghai, but they from that trouble by the fact of the ing here and saying: "I will sell the e rightful owner." I am of opinion as a right to stoppage in transitu, re has been de facto a stoppage in h completes the title of the owner of ho sold them to a person who has rupt before they were delivered.

nk, is sufficient to dispose of the real ase. There is really nothing in the

We are all of opinion that this is a case within the Bills of Sale Act. as been very much argued, and we t to say, having regard to the words the Bills of Sale Act, that a contract is not "a bill of sale or other assurance battels whereby the grantee or holder seize or take possession of" them meaning of that Act. It is a right ith the vendor's lien, or of that than anything else; but certainly ll of sale of personal chattels within of that Act. Then the other point be reputed ownership. If the case on that, it is quite clear that the the true owner of the goods, subject le charge, and certainly that equit- ould, in my opinion, have been im- d impeached by reason of there being tever to show that the owner of the ot absolutely free from any incum- he person entitled to the equitable l have to show that the real possessor was in some way prevented from self out to the world as being the goods, free from trust, incumbrance it seems to me that if the vendors' ended upon that point it would have it is sufficient to say that they have on the point of stoppage in transitu. , J.A.—I am of the same opinion. So ation of the duration of the transitus I am quite unable to distinguish the case from the facts of the case of e Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (ubi l by the Privy Council. In that case at the transitus continued so long as re in the charge of a third party who d with the carrier for the purpose of hem. Applying the decision in that resent case, it would follow that these have remained in transitu until they had arrived at Shanghai, and d over by the shipowner, or other acted as the carriers. It has so this case that, by reason of the bills ver having been sent from England, person in Shanghai to whom the goods could have been delivered by the carriers, and consequently they remained in the possession of the carriers and the transitus was, therefore, not completed. Before that transitus was completed, if ever indeed it has been completed in the present case, an arrangement was come to by all parties, that is to say, the trustee of the bankrupt, Mr. Watson the claimant, and the ship-owners, that the goods should be sold and the proceeds disposed of according to the rights of the parties as they existed at the time the agreement was entered into. I think, therefore, that in this case the goods have been effectually stopped in transitu.

BRAMWELL, J.A.—I am entirely of the same opinion and for the same reasons. The only observation I wish to make is upon the stoppage in transitu question, if the transitus lasted until the goods got to Shanghai. Now, what are the facts? The goods are in the possession of Copperthwaite, an agent of Watson, the seller, and by the direction of the bankrupt they set out on a journey which was to begin at Bradford and end at Shanghai, where the goods were to be delivered to people who would have been under an obligation to Watson if he had thought fit to give notice to them of his rights. They set out on that journey, and no further instructions are required, nor is anything necessary from the beginning to the end of the journey, except the receipts, getting the bills of lading, and so forth. It seems to me, so far as there is any reason in the doctrine of stoppage in transitu, the transitus in this case would be from Bradford to Shanghai; and, as Sir Richard Baggallay has said, I cannot distinguish this case from the case in the Privy Council.

JAMES, L.J.—The appeal will be allowed with costs both here and below.

Solicitor for the appellant, Walter Webb, agent for George Robinson, Skipton.

Solicitors for the respondents, Murray, Hutchins, and Co.

March 9 and 27, 1877.

(Before JAMES, MELLISH, and BAGGALLAY, L.JJ.)

ON APPEAL FROM THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY).

THE PARANA.

Damages and cargo—24 Vict. c. 10—Measure of damages—Fall in price—Loss of market.

Where, through the negligence of a carrier by sea, goods carried by him are not delivered in a reasonable time, the owner of the goods or assignee of the bill of lading for the goods is not entitled to recover, as damages from the shipowner, the difference between the market value of the goods when they ought to have been delivered and the market value when they actually were delivered.

Decision of the court below reversed.

Semble, the measure of damages recoverable in such a case is interest at the ordinary commercial rate on the value of the goods for the period of the delay in delivery.

This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the Admiralty Division, in which he sustained an objection to the report of the registrar of that court, assisted by merchants, and held that when undue delay in the prosecution of a voyage has taken place, the shipowner is liable

[Ct. of App.]

THE PARANA.

[Ct. of App.]

to the consignee of goods for a fall in price of the goods between the time at which they ought to have arrived and the time at which they actually did arrive. The facts, arguments, and judgment in the court below are fully reported, ante, p. 220.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Cohen, Q.C. (with them G. Bruce), for appellants.—To enable the plaintiffs to recover they must show that the loss was sustained by the fall in the price of hemp was either a matter which at the time of making the contract the defendants knew, or that they had notice of some other contract contingent on the fulfilment of this one by a certain date. They are entitled to recover, as found by the registrar, the interest on the value of the cargo during the time they were kept out of possession of it, but nothing more; that represents the reasonable profit they might be expected to make, and which might be supposed to be in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made: (Smeed v. Foord, 1 El. & El. 602.) There, although there were special circumstances which might possibly have led the defendant to contemplate a fall in the market price, it was held that a fall which actually did occur could not be recovered, and the rule laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale (9 Ex. 341) is approved. If the fall of the market was the actual consequence of the delay, as, for example, in the case of a cargo of ice to arrive in the summer season and delayed beyond, such a fall might, perhaps, be recovered; but it is not alleged that there is any regular fluctuation in the price of hemp. The time of arrival from a long voyage like this must be, in any case, a matter of uncertainty, and the margin of uncertainty was at least equal to the thirty-seven days' delay which actually took place. In Fletcher v. Tayleur (17 C. B. 21, 29), Willes, J. says: "No matter what the amount of inconvenience sustained by the plaintiffs in the case of nonpayment of money, the measure of damages is the interest of the money only, and it might be a convenient rule if, as suggested by my Lord, the measure of damages in such a case as this was held by analogy to be the average profit made;" that is, the usual commercial rate of interest on the value of the hemp, which the Registrar allowed. In Cory v. Thames Ironworks and Ship Building Company (Limited) (L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 181; 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 495), a sort of rough estimated rental value for the chattel, a ship of peculiar construction, was allowed, and not the actual loss sustained by the purchaser through the non-delivery of her; and in British Columbia Saw Mill Company v. Nettlefish (L. Rep. 3 C. P. 499, 507; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 291, 604; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 65) it was held that special damages [sustained by the non-delivery of a chattel could not be recovered. Bovill, C.J., says: "It is difficult to see the proper way of compensating the plaintiffs for the damage they have suffered except by applying the rule which obtains in the case of non-payment of money, viz., by allowing interest on the value of the goods." [MELLISU, L.J.—Has any case been found in which a loss of market, purely speculative, has been allowed?] In Wilson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (9 C. B. N. S. 632), the plaintiffs recovered for a fall in price where there was a delay in delivery; but that was a consignment of caps to a seaside place, and it must have been known by the defendants that the market for caps would cease with the termination of the seaside season. Es Trent and Humber Company, Es par Brian Steam Packet Company (L. Rep. 4 App. 112, 117; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 465, 3 Law Cas. O. S. 119) which was an actual delay in delivering a ship, Lord Cairns said that, in estimating the damages, he proceeded on the principle that "the mean damages is, prima facie, the sum which would have been earned in the ordinary course of the employment of the chattel in the time." There is, however, a great distinction between the contract land and water carriage. When goods are sent by train, the object is manifestly to secure a prompt delivery by a certain date; but in a long voyage, there is of necessity a great uncertainty as to the date of arrival, and this is recognised by American case, The Lively (1 Gall. 315; Story, J. says: "Upon the whole, I am satisfied that the profits, upon the supposition of a prosperous termination of the voyage, ought in any case to constitute an item of damages.") also referred to

Sedgwick on Damages, 6th edit., §1, 420;
Massé Droit Commercial, 2nd edit., vol. 2, §1, tit. 1, Ch. 3, sect. 4, §1, p. 240;
Code Napoleon, Art. 1149, 1151;
Ward v. New York Central Railroad Company, N. Y. 39.

Clarkson (with him Butt, Q.C. and Davis for respondents.—The loss of market was held to be in contemplation of the parties in instance in case of delay. Why should the plaintiff select a steamer at a higher freight instead of sailing ship, unless he wishes to insure dispatch and punctuality? He calculates that his goods will be sold at a certain date, he will sell for a certain price, and if they do not arrive at that date he is entitled to recover for the loss sustained: (Sedgwick on Damages, 6th edit., p. 430.) The measure of damages for delay in delivery is always the difference in price between the time when the goods ought to be delivered and the time when they actually are delivered, and this is shown by the fact that where there is no fall of market the plaintiffs can recover nothing: (Great Eastern Railway Company v. Radmayne, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 329) Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company (7 H. & N. 79; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 60) directly in point, there the contract was to deliver by railway on a certain day, on which the plaintiffs might anticipate a sale at a certain price. Here the plaintiff employs a steamship with a view of having his goods delivered at an early and reasonable time, and at which time also, from his knowledge of the state of the market and the reports of cargoes afloat, he could estimate the sale of his goods at a particular price, and by breach of the contract of carriage by the defendants he has not been able to realise that price. This question is quite independent of the interest; he is entitled to interest as well. He is to be put in the same position as he would have been had the cargo been delivered at the proper time, that is, to have the money for which it was sold at that time, and because he did not get it then, but has been kept out of it, and cannot use it profitably, he is entitled to interest whilst he is so deprived of it. They also

Horne v. Midland Railway Company, 8 C. P. 131; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321;
O'Hanlon v. Great Western Railway, 6 B. & S. 464; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 40.

[Ct. of App.]

THE PARANA.

[Ct. of App.]

Berrie v. Hutchinson, 18 C. B., N. S., 445; 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 771.

W. Williams, Q.C., in reply.—The plaintiff was neither shipper nor consignee. The action is founded on a bill of lading, and the property in the goods only passed to the plaintiff when the bill of lading was handed to him. He knew nothing about the ship or her date of arrival, he did not even know when she sailed. In addition to the former authorities, Bice v. Banendale (7 El. & N. 97) was cited.

Our. adv. vult.

March 27, 1877.—The judgment of the court was read by MELLISH, L.J.—This is an appeal from the Admiralty Division, which is brought by the assignee of some bills of lading, under the Admiralty Court Act, for the purpose of recovering damages against the shipowner for breach of contract of carriage contained in, I think, two bills of lading of certain quantities of sugar and certain quantities of hemp from Manila to London. The breach alleged was, that the boilers of the Parana were in a bad condition, and that by reason thereof a very undue delay took place during the voyage. The breach was admitted, and an inquiry was ordered before the registrar and merchants to assess the amount of damages, and they came to the conclusion that a delay of thirty-six days might be imputed to the shipowner, and that he was liable for the damage occasioned by that delay. They then proceeded to assess the damages, and gave a certain sum for the additional leakage of the sugar that had taken place in consequence of the length of the voyage; and also interest at 5 per cent. on the value of the hemp and sugar.

But the further question arose whether in addition the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages in respect of a fall in the price of the hemp, which he alleged had taken place between the time when the cargo ought to have arrived and the time when it did arrive; the registrar and merchants had to find what the total amount of damages would be, including the fall of price, if the plaintiff was entitled to it, and they came to the conclusion that damages for the fall of price ought not to be recovered, and reported accordingly. Their report was objected to before the Judge of the Admiralty Division, and he sustained the objection, and allowed the damages claimed for the fall in price. From that decision there is an appeal to us, and therefore the question we have to decide is, whether, if there is undue delay in the carriage of goods on a long voyage by sea, it follows as a matter of course that if there has been a fall in the price of these goods between the time when they ought to have arrived and the time when they do arrive, damages can be recovered.

Now there really is no difficulty as to the general principles upon which the courts assess damages. They are accurately stated in two or three places in the judgment of Sir Robert Phillimore, as where he cites the last case on the subject, Simpson v. London and North-Western Railway Company (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 274; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 805): "The principle is now settled that, whenever either the object of the sender is specially brought to the notice of the carrier, or circumstances are known to the carrier from which the object ought in reason to be inferred, so that the object may be taken to have been within the contemplation of both parties, damages may be recovered for the natural consequences of the failure of that object." He also cites the judgment of the Lord Chief Baron in Horne v. Midland Railway Company (L. Rep. 8 C. P. 131, 137; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 312): "Damages for a breach of contract must be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as arising naturally—i.e., according to the usual course of things—from such breach of contract itself, or such as may be reasonably supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it." The difficulty, of course, arises in the application of these principles.

We took time to consider our judgment, because a great many authorities were cited, both in the court below and before us; but the result of them is, that there is no decision which can at all be said to be directly in point. There is no case, I believe, in which it has ever been held that damages can be recovered for delay in the carriage of goods on a long voyage by sea, where there has been what may be called a merely accidental fall in price between the time when the goods ought to have arrived and the time when they did arrive—no case that I can discover where such damages have been recovered; and the question is, whether we ought to hold that they ought to be recovered? If goods are sent by a railway for sale at that day's market in Smithfield or Billingsgate, and by reason of a breach of contract on the part of the carrier they have not arrived in time for that market, no doubt damages for the loss of market may be recovered. So, again, if goods are sent for the purpose of being sold at a higher price than they are at other times, and if by reason of breach of contract they do not arrive in time, damages for loss of market may be recovered; or if the facts are known to both parties; or where it is known a priori that they will sell at a better price than if they arrived later. But there is no evidence in this case of anything of that kind, as far as I can discover from the facts; it is only said, when they arrived in November they were likely to sell for less than if they had arrived in October, that the market was lower. But besides the case of consignments of goods to be sold at a particular market, cases were cited, and it was upon them the court below proceeded, of the carriage of goods by a railway, where damages for loss sustained on account of the fall in price of the goods have been recovered, and it was said there could be no difference between the carriage of goods by railway and the carriage of goods by sea. But it appears to us that there may be a material difference between the two cases; when goods are conveyed by railway, if they are known to be conveyed for the purpose of sale at all, they are usually conveyed for the purpose of immediate sale, and if the cases are examined, I think it will be found that in all of them the courts treated the question as if the goods were consigned for the purpose of immediate sale. No doubt, if goods are consigned to a railway company under such circumstances, the railway company may be reasonably supposed to know that they are consigned for the purpose of immediate sale; and, if by breach of contract on the part of the carrier, they do not arrive in time to be sold when the owner intends them to be sold, that may be a ground for giving damages for what is called "loss of market." The strongest case in favour of the opinion of the court below is that about the hops: (Collard v. S. E. Ry. Co., 7 H. & N. 79; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 710.) The goods in that case were actually consigned to a hop merchant in the Borough, I think, to fulfil a particular contract. The damages arising from the non-fulfilment of that particular contract could not be recovered, because the railway company would know nothing about it; but the judge came to the conclusion, I think, that it might be treated as if the goods were being consigned for the purpose of immediate sale; there were, apparently, violent fluctuations going on in the hop market at that time, and that it might be taken that the owner had selected his own time for selling his hops, when he thought the price was at its best, and by reason of a breach of contract on the part of the railway company, which consisted, it is to be observed, not in delay in delivering the hops, but in actual damage to the hops, the hops were damaged and had to be dried, and that it might be considered there was a loss of market. The words used in the judgment (Collard v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 H. & N. 86) are: "It is said the defendants had no notice of the purpose for which the hops were sent to London; but I think they must have known they were sent for one of two purposes, either for consumption by the person to whom they were sent, or, as was more likely to be the case, to be sold for profit. It seems to me that Hadley v. Baxendale (9 Ex. 343) has no bearing in this case, and I think that Sneed v. Ford (1 El. & El. 602) is correctly decided. In my judgment the plaintiff is entitled to recover for this damage, because it is a direct and immediate loss consequent on the defendants' breach of duty." Then it proceeded, "If this case should be taken to the court of error"—showing a doubt about the principle it was laying down—"I hope that the court will be able to put the rule on an intelligible footing; but at present we must do the best we can with each particular case, and decide it upon principles of reason and good sense." The other case on which the learned judge of the court below more particularly relied was an American one (Ward v. New York Central Railway Company, 47 N. Y. 79), which appears to have been a consignment of some pigs, and damages were allowed to be recovered for loss of market. The precise circumstances it is not very easy to gather, but I should certainly conjecture that they were pigs sent for the purpose of being sold at once.

The difference between cases of that kind and cases of the import of goods from a long distance by sea seems to me to be very obvious. In order that damages may be recovered we must come, I think, to the conclusion, first, that it was reasonably certain that the goods would not be sold until they arrived; or, secondly, that it was reasonably certain that they would be sold immediately after they arrived, and that that was known to the carrier when the bills of lading were signed. It appears to me that nothing could be more uncertain than either of those two assumptions. Goods imported by sea may be, and are, every day sold whilst they are at sea. If the man who is importing the goods finds the market high, and is afraid that the price may fall, he is not prevented, as an ordinary rule, from selling his goods because they are at sea. The sale of goods "to arrive" on transfer of bills of lading, with costs bills, and insurances, is a common mercantile contract made every day. It may be that he is not having samples of the goods, or from not knowing what particular quality his goods are, he may have a difficulty in selling them before arrival but the carrier would not necessarily know that.

The plaintiff in this case is not himself the original consignee, but a man who had acquired the goods, apparently by the consignment of the bills of lading, whilst the goods were at sea. We were told that he was a person that advanced money on the security of the bills of lading. That possibly may be the case; but whether he has done that, or the purchaser, would make no difference. It was said that, if the goods were sold, the person who sells them does not suffer the damage, but that the purchaser would. But this is pure speculation. If a man purchases goods while they are at sea, a person can say for what purpose he purchases them. He may purchase them because he thinks if he keeps them for six months they will sell for a better sum; or he may want to use them in his trade. It is pure speculation to enter into the question for what purpose he purchases them. In this particular case the plaintiff did not sell the goods as they arrived; he sold them some months afterwards, when a further fall had taken place in the market. Of course, he does not seek to recover from the defendant that additional loss, but it serves to illustrate how uncertain it is whether he would have sold them had they arrived in proper time, if he did not sell them when they did arrive but kept them because he thought the market would rise. How can we tell he would not have done exactly the same thing if the goods had arrived in time?

Therefore, it seems to me that to give the damages would be to give speculative damage—to give damages when we cannot be certain that the plaintiff would not just as much have suffered if the goods had arrived in time; and I think, according to the principles on which the courts have acted in all speculative and uncertain cases of this kind, that damages ought not to be recovered. Therefore, upon the whole, we come to the conclusion that the report of the registrar and merchants—which, besides quoting the common law authorities, says that though constantly happened, of course, that by collision goods were delayed in their arrival, yet it was not had been the custom in the Court of Admiralty to include in damages the loss of market—was not correct.

The consequence therefore must be, that the judgment of the court below must be reversed. As to costs, the registrar and merchants reported that each party ought to pay his own costs of the inquiry before them, and we think that ought to be retained, and the appellant should have the costs of the arguments in the court below.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The very expression "loss of a market" is a good illustration of the principle laid down.

BAGGALLAY, L.J. concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for appellants, Parker and Glyn.

Solicitors for respondents, Stibbard and they.

OF APP.]

FRANCO AND ANOTHER v. GERBER AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

reported by F. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1877.

s MELLISH, L.J., and BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, J.J.A.).

FRANCO AND ANOTHER v. GERBER AND OTHERS.

Charter-party—Clauses as to cesser of charterer's liability.

Plaintiffs chartered plaintiff's ship to carry a cargo from Akyab. By the charter-party the ship was to call at Queenstown or Falmouth for orders, and was to be forwarded within forty-eight hours after notice to defendants' agents of her arrival, or lay-days to count, and to discharge at an odd and safe port.

Charter-party contained this clause: "The liability of the charterers shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board, provided the same is worth the freight at port of discharge, but the owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage which they shall be bound to exercise." Defendants sold the cargo before the ship's arrival. Plaintiffs sued on charter-party for not giving orders as to port of discharge, and for giving orders to proceed to an odd safe port.

On affirming the judgment of the Common Pleas (see supra), that the above clause exempted defendants from all liability, irrespective of plaintiffs' liability from the judgment of the Common Pleas on demurrer in an action by shipowners against charterers.

Plaintiffs declared that the plaintiffs by the charter of the Theresa and the defendants by Burot, Gerber, and Co., their agents at Akyab, entered into a charter-party, of which the following are material parts: "It is this day mutually agreed between Mr. R. C. Downie, in command of the ship or vessel called the Theresa . . . now at Akyab, and Messrs. Burot, Gerber, and Co., of London, merchants and freighters, that the said ship . . . shall with all convenient speed sail and proceed to a loading berth in the port of Akyab or thereunto as she may safely get always and there . . . load from the agents of the charterers who may direct the ship to the most convenient safe anchorage a full and complete cargo of rice in bags as usual . . . and being loaded shall therewith proceed with all dispatch to Queenstown or Falmouth (at the option of the master) for orders, to be forwarded within forty-eight hours after notice of the said arrival, or lay-days to count, to discharge at an odd and safe port in the United Kingdom, the Continent between Bordeaux and Hamburg, both inclusive, or so near thereunto as she may safely get, and deliver the same in any dock or wharf where she may appoint always afloat, agreeably to the lading on being paid freight in full of all charges, pilotage, and primage, at and after the rate of 60s. per ton of 20 cwt. net delivered, except of God, &c. . . . always excepted. The cargo to be paid on right delivery of the cargo.

Twelve working laying days (Sundays excepted) are to be allowed the freighters for loading and discharging at port of loading, and waiting for orders at port of call in Europe, to commence and to terminate twenty-four hours after the master has given notice in writing to charterers' agents that the ship is ready to receive cargo, and fifteen days on demurrage are allowed over and above the said laying days at 4d. per register ton per day. The homeward cargo to be received when the vessel is at her port of discharge with all possible dispatch, and according to the custom of the port. All goods to be brought to and taken from alongside at the expense and risk of the freighters. The captain to sign bills of lading for his cargo at no lower rate of freight than stipulated in this charter-party; failing which charterers shall not be responsible for such difference. The vessel to be consigned at ports of loading and discharge to charterers' agents free of commission under this charter-party. All questions of general average to be settled according to the custom of the London underwriters at Lloyd's. Freighters to have the power of underletting the whole or part of the vessel. Freighters to have the option of cancelling this charter-party if the vessel be not arrived at port of loading, and be ready to take in cargo, at or before noon of the 15th April next ensuing, retaining consignment; such option to be availed of within twenty-four hours after ship's arrival. It is further agreed that the liability of the charterers shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board, provided the same is worth the freight at port of discharge, but the owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage, which they shall be bound to exercise, sufficient cash for ship's ordinary disbursements to be advanced the master by freighters' agents at port of loading, at the current rate of exchange, to the extent of 600l., for the due appropriation of which freighters shall not be responsible; such advance to be on account of chartered freight, and to be indorsed on bills of lading, including cost of assurance and 2½ per cent. commission, and deducted from freight on settlement thereof. . . . Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, estimated amount of chartered freight." . . .

The declaration went on to allege that the Theresa was loaded with a cargo of rice and sailed to Falmouth, and on her arrival there due notice of her arrival was given to and received by the defendants and their agents, and all conditions were fulfilled, &c., to entitle the plaintiffs to have orders for the Theresa to proceed to a port of discharge given by the defendants or their agents in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, yet the defendants or their agents did not give, and refused to give, any orders as to the Theresa's port of discharge in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, whereby the plaintiffs were delayed, prevented, and hindered from earning the freight on the Theresa's cargo payable under the charter-party, and incurred divers expenses in and about the unloading of the said cargo, and in endeavouring to obtain and in obtaining payment of the said freight.

In the second count it was alleged that the defendants or their agents did not give orders for the Theresa's port of discharge in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, and gave orders that the Theresa should proceed to and discharge at a port which was not a good and safe port within the meaning of the said charter-party, and where and as near whereunto she could not deliver the said cargo, always afloat, or in any dock always afloat, according to the terms of the said charter-party (same special damage as in the first count).

Fifth plea, that the charter-party was made subject to the condition therein contained, that the liability of the defendants should cease as soon as the cargo was on board, provided the same was worth the freight at port of discharge, but the owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, and demurrage which they should be bound to exercise; that the cargo was shipped on board the said vessel, and before the arrival of the same was sold by the defendants, that the same was worth the freight at the port of discharge, and that by reason of the premises the defendants' liability upon and under the charter-party ceased.

The sixth plea was similar to the fifth, with the additional allegation that the alleged breaches were caused by the acts of the buyers of the cargo and not by the acts of the defendants.

Demurrer to the fifth and sixth pleas on the ground that the facts stated did not affect the defendants' liability under the charter-party.

Feb. 17, 1876.—The demurrers came on for argument in the Common Pleas Division.

French for the plaintiff.

W. Williams, Q.C. (J. C. Matthew with him) for the defendants.

The arguments were the same as in the Court of Appeal. Cur. adv. vult.

June 14, 1876.—The judgment of that court (Brett, Archibald, and Lindley, JJ.) was delivered by BRETT, J.—In this case the judgment of the court is to be given upon a record on which there are demurrers to two pleas, the fifth and sixth. We cannot doubt that, if the declaration is good, the pleas are bad. If the stipulation in the charter-party does not of itself upon the loading of the cargo absolve the defendants in respect of the breaches relied on in the declaration, the other facts set forth in the pleas respectively cannot absolve them. The defendants are bound by the contract unless they are absolved by the contract. The real question, therefore, in this case is whether the declaration is sufficient.

The material points to be noticed seem to be, that the defendants must be assumed to be the real freighters, that there is an implied contract by them that orders shall be forwarded to Queens-town or Falmouth, that time for the waiting of the ship for such orders is expressly allowed in the lay days, and that beyond the lay days, which include such waiting and the period of loading at the port of loading, fifteen days or demurrage are allowed at 4d. per register ton per day. The home-ward cargo is to be received when the vessel is at her place of discharge with all possible dispatch, and according to the custom of the port.

The breach in the first count is, for not giving any orders as to the port of discharge, whereby and in consequence whereof the plaintiffs were delayed, prevented, and hindered from earning the freight on the cargo payable under the charter-party, and incurred divers expenses in and about the unloading of the said cargo, and in endeavouring to obtain, and in obtaining payment of the said freight. The breach in the second count is, that the orders given were not in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, but were orders that the Theresa should proceed to and discharge at a port which was not a good and safe port within the meaning of the said charter-party, whereby, &c. (the same consequences as in the first count).

The real grievance then complained of is, that the plaintiffs did not earn the freight, that they were delayed and put to expense earning it by reason of two alleged breaches the charter-party occurring at Falmouth. If though the mere delay of the ship by not giving orders at Falmouth might be treated as subject to the demurrage rate, and, therefore, in said charter-party as the present subject to the lien demurrage, as suggested by some of the judges in Kish v. Cory (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 593), yet other damages sued for cannot, we think, be brought within such a rule. A part of damages sued for are obviously unascertained unliquidated damages. For such part there is lien, such part is not the freight, dead freight, demurrage, for which a lien is given in the charter-party.

The question, therefore, is, whether in the case of a charterer who is himself the real principal the clause under discussion absolves from breach occurring after the loading of the ship in respect of which no remedy is given against the consignees; or, in other words, whether, upon said charter-party, the shipowner must be held to be agreed to make no claim for damages for breach occurring after the loading of the vessel, which, if for the clause, would give him a right to damages. If the latter be the true construction, the result is that upon such charter-parties as the present, the shipowner, in order to secure freight as on a cargo, and compensation for delay, strictly so called demurrage delay, and perhaps for freight delay, giving damages in the nature of demurrage delay occurring before or during the loading of his ship, undertakes the risk of all defaults of the charterer or his agents happening after the cargo is loaded.

So far as the damages which are claimed as covered by the lien, we think there can be no doubt that the charterers are absolved. The question as to the part of the damages which is not covered. The rule must be deduced from, or, at least, events, cannot properly be declared without considering the decided cases. The question has always been whether the liability sued for was those which was to cease as soon as the cargo was on board: see Oglesby v. Yglesias (27 L. J. Q. B.); and in Milvain v. Perez (3 L. T. Rep. 736; 3 L. J. 90, Q. B.), the liability sued for occurred before or during the loading, but the clause was in terms applicable to "all matters and things as well before as after the shipping of the cargo." It was, therefore, held that the charterers were by express terms absolved upon the loading in respect of all liabilities, whether they occurred before or after the loading, and this with reference to whether the liability was or was not transferred to the consignees by the medium of the right of lien given to the shipowner, for, in the first case, the claim was for demurrage, but in the second was for damages for not loading in a turn or in a reasonable time.

In Bannister v. Breslau (L. Rep. 2 C. 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 490) the claim was for loading with all dispatch or within a reasonable time. The clause was: "The charterers to cease when the cargo is shipped, provided the same is worth the freight, on arrival at the port of discharge, the captain having an absolute lien for freight, dead freight, and demurrage." The defendants were not said to be

[CT. OF APP.]

FRENCH AND ANOTHER v. GERBER AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

court held that the clause absolved the defendants. But it cannot be denied that the decision has been since doubted, on the ground that apparently no lien was given for the damages sued for. In Pedersen v. Lotinga (28 L. T. Rep. O. S. 267) the claim was for delay in loading. The clause was, that 'the charter being concluded by the charterer on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all liability of the former shall cease as soon as he has shipped the cargo, the owners and master agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo or freight and demurrage.' The court held that the defendants were not absolved in respect of the liability for delay in loading, and that the clause absolved only from future liabilities.

In Gray v. Carr (L. Rep. 6 Q. B.; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 115) in error, the second part of the clause was in question. The action was against the consignee as upon a lien for dead freight and demurrage and detention at the port of lading. It was held that a lien was given for demurrage, but that no lien was given for the damages occasioned by the detention at the port of lading beyond the demurrage days. The clause, therefore, as to the absolution of the charterer, must be construed subject to such decision as to the limits of the lien against the consignee. In Christoffersen v. Hansen (L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 509; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 305), the clause was for delay in loading. It was assumed that no lien was given for such delay. It was held that consequently the true construction was that the charterer, though in fact an agent, was only absolved from liability which might accrue after the loading, and was not absolved from liability for delay in loading. In Francesco v. Massey (L. Rep. 8 Ex. 101; 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 594n), the claim was against the charterers, as principals in fact, for five days' demurrage, and damages for fourteen days' further detention at the port of loading. The liability for the detention was admitted, but it was argued that because there was a lien for the demurrage against the consignee, the true construction was that the charterer was absolved in respect of it, although it was antecedent to the loading. And the court held for the defendants. In Lister v. Van Haamsbergen (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 269), the claim was for delay in loading. It was held that the claim did not absolve the charterers. In Kish v. Cory (L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 553; 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 593) in error, the claim was for demurrage at the port of loading. It was held that the clause absolved the charterer, though principal in fact. The court approved of the decision in Francesco v. Massey (ubi sup.), and held that the absolution applied to past liabilities, where a lien was given in respect of them. The inclination of many of the judges in face of the increasing number of such charter-parties made in ordinary course of business, seemed to be to extend the lien rather than to diminish the absolution. In all the cases, then, it will be seen the dispute has been as to the extent of the absolution in respect of liabilities accruing before the loading; in every case it has been assumed, or expressly declared, that it is complete as to liabilities which might otherwise accrue after the loading. The words of the clause must necessarily absolve from all future liability, or mean nothing. The rule, therefore, seems to be that where the words of the absolving part of the clause plainly show that all liability is to cease on loading, it is so to cease both as to antecedent and future liabilities, and without regard to any lien, but, where the words of the absolving part are open to either interpretation, then without regard to lien, liability as to future transactions is not to accrue, but liability as to antecedent breaches is to cease only so far as an equivalent lien is given.

It follows that, in the present case, the defendants are absolved by the clause in respect of all the damages sued for, whether a lien be or be not given as to part of them. Judgment on the whole record must, therefore, be given for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Feb. 6, 1877.—French, for the plaintiffs.—Looking at the whole of the charter-party, the words "the liability of the charterers shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board," &c., mean that the liability shall cease so far as relates to freight, dead freight and demurrage, which are expressly referred to in the same clause in the charter-party, and as to which a lien is given to the shipowners. The true meaning is, that the cessation of the charterers' liability is to be co-extensive with the lien given to the owners. The form of the clause in Sanguinetti v. The Pacific Steam Navigation Company (ante, p. 300; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 658) was very different from that of the clause here. If the other clauses of the charter-party are examined they show that it cannot have been the intention of the parties that the cesser of the charterers' liability should be absolute. He also cited

Francesco v. Massey, ante vol. 2, p. 594n; L. Rep. 8 Ex. 101; 42 L. J. 75, Ex.;

Gray v. Carr, ante vol. 1, p. 115; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 215; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 522; 40 L. J. 257, Q. B.;

Kish v. Cory, ante vol. 2, p. 593; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 670; L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 553;

Milvain v. Peres, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 3 E. & E. 495; 30 L. J. 90, Q. B.;

Christoffersen v. Hansen, ante, vol. 1, p. 305; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 547; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 509.

J. C. Mathew for the defendants.—The meaning of the words "the liability of the charterers is to cease," &c. is perfectly clear and unambiguous, and there is nothing in any of the other clauses of the charter-party to restrict the natural meaning of the words. The tendency of the decisions has been gradually to extend the meaning of such words as these, and they are now held to apply alike to past and future liability.

French in reply.

MELLISH, L.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment in this case ought to be affirmed.

The action is brought by the shipowners against the charterers on a charter-party, and two breaches are alleged, first that the defendants or their agents did not give, and refused to give, any orders as to the ship's port of discharge in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, in consequence of which the plaintiffs suffered certain special damage, and secondly, that the defendants, or their agents, ordered the ship to proceed to a port which was not safe, and this second breach is also followed by an allegation of special damage. The defendants set up a clause in the charter-party, which is as follows: "It is further agreed that the liability of the charterers shall cease as soon as the cargo is on board, provided the same is worth the freight at port of discharge, but the owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage, which they shall be bound to exercise." The pleas then go on to allege that the vessel arrived after the cargo which had been shipped on board her had been sold by the defendants, and that the cargo was worth the freight at the port of discharge. The question is, does this make a defence?

There are a number of cases relating to clauses of this description, in some of which it has been thrown out that the limitation of liability is not to be extended beyond the breaches for which a lien is given so far as relates to what takes place before the loading. The court ought to give the charter-party a reasonable construction, using the words in their natural sense, and see how far the lien may be extended, so as to give the shipowner a proper remedy.

In the present case the breaches exclusively relate to the charterers not giving proper orders at the port of call. As to this the charter-party does provide a remedy, independently of an action for breach of the contract, in the clause by which the ship is to "proceed with all dispatch to Queenstown or Falmouth for orders to be forwarded within forty-eight hours after notice of said arrival has been given to and received by charterers' agents in London, or lay-days to count." This clause provides a remedy, for if the charterers do not give orders within forty-eight hours, then the lay days begin to count; but it does not stop there, for further on in the charter-party it is provided that "Twelve working laying days (Sundays excepted) are to be allowed the freighters for loading the said ship at port of loading and waiting for orders at port of call in Europe, to commence and to be computed twenty-four hours after the master has given notice in writing to charterers' agents, that the ship is ready to receive cargo, and fifteen days on demurrage are allowed over and above the said laying days at 4d. per registered ton per day." May not the parties have reasonably supposed that this would provide a sufficient remedy? Probably it was in their contemplation that the charterers might sell the cargo on the passage, for that appears to be the ordinary course of business in transactions of this nature. The object may have been to free the charterers from liability when the cargo was sold, and that the owners should look to their remedy against the buyer. If there would have been no remedy according to this interpretation of the charter-party, I should have struggled to make it bear a meaning which would not have taken away the remedy; but if we look at the breaches alleged here we find it provided for in such a way that there may be a remedy, by saying that the days during which orders are not given after the expiration of forty-eight hours after notice of the ship's arrival shall count as lay days. I think this clause was purposely inserted in order to provide a remedy for the owners, and I think it would be wrong to hold the charterers still liable.

Mr. French, who has argued the case with great ability, went through the various clauses of the charter-party for the purpose of showing that the defendants were not discharged from liability, but I cannot find that the charter-party in substance contains any clause which is not covered by the lien, so that we can say the charterers were not exonerated for future breach.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the defendants are entitled to judgment on these demurrers, that the decision of the court below should be affirmed.

BAGGALLAY, J.A.—Both my learned colleagues concur that the judgment ought to be affirmed, and, therefore, it is immaterial whether my doubts are well founded or not; still I do entertain a doubt in this case. I think the strength of argument which has been addressed to us by French on behalf of the plaintiffs rests principally on the exoneration clause itself, and not so much on the other clauses in the charter-party. The effect of the decisions in cases of this kind appears to be that the exoneration is co-extensive with the lien, but I do not feel satisfied that there is any intimation in this respect between liability for breach before or after loading. No case has been cited showing that any such distinction in reality exists, and I am not prepared to assent to the principle on which the alleged distinction is founded. I entertain a further doubt whether, assuming the exemption is limited to breaches for which the lien is given, the damage in the present case is not covered by the lien. As to these questions I do not feel clear.

BRAMWELL, J.A.—If I had known of the doubt entertained by Sir Richard Baggallay, I should have wished to take time to consider before giving judgment, but, as it is, having formed an opinion on the case I am bound to express it.

I think there was a contract to give notice within a reasonable time (or rather what would have been the contract had it not been for the clause providing for cessation of liability), and then the question whether, supposing there would have been a contract but for the clause in question, that the defendants' liability has ceased under the circumstances of the present case. Mr. French wants us to insert further words in the clause, to make the effect of it that liability is to cease as to matters as to which a lien is given, but I think it ought not to be done unless it can be shown that it is absolutely necessary to adopt that construction. Mr. French further relies on other matters which he says are not provided for in the charter-party, but the Lord Justice has already dealt with that argument.

Then it is said that the authorities show that the cessation of liability in such cases as this extends only to things for which a lien is given, but I think this is not so. It is contended that it is reasonable to say that a clause like this cannot relieve the charterer from a right of action which has once vested. It is said that it is not stand to reason that this must be so, unless otherwise either what has already been done by contract is prevented from continuing to be done, or else although it is a contract the effect of the clause is that there is no remedy. I think it is not unreasonable to suppose that the question may have been discussed between the parties, and, practically, as Mr. Mathew says in his very satisfactory address, in ninety-nine out of a hundred no question could arise as to lay days would generally give ample protection from all reasonable risks which fall upon the shipowners. In all previous cases the parties had this in their contemplation when they entered into the charter-party.

[AFF.] ROBINSON v. PRICE AND OTHERS—METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS CO. [CT. OF APP.]

satisfied that the view we take gives the construction, and therefore I think the act ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

itors for plaintiffs, Visard, Crowder, and Yates, Son and Co., Liverpool.

itors for defendants, Hollams, Son, and Wednesday, April 11, 1877.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., and BRANWELL and BRETT, JJ.A.)

ROBINSON v. PRICE AND OTHERS.

average—Donkey engine—Spars and cargo.

plaintiff's ship sailed from Quebec to London a cargo of timber, of which the defendants had a pari. There was on board, although it is not the common practice to have such a thing on such a cargo, a donkey engine for loading and discharging, which might be used for moving the ship; and there was sufficient coal on board, not only for the ordinary purposes of the ship, but also for pumping under ordinary circumstances.

The ship sprang a leak, and the crew having become out by pumping, the master was obliged to use the engine for that purpose in order to preserve the ship and cargo. The coals were insufficient to continue the working of the engine, and the master used for fuel some of the spars of the ship and part of the cargo, until he procured a quantity of coal from a passing steamship. The master did what was proper and necessary for the preservation of ship and cargo, and if he had not done so the spars and cargo the ship would probably have been lost.

Holding the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, that these circumstances constituted a total average loss, and that the plaintiff was entitled to contribution from the defendants in respect thereof.

By the defendants from the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Mellor and Lush, J.), in favour of the plaintiff on a special case in an action brought to recover money to be payable by the defendants to the plaintiff for general average. The special case is in the report in the court below (ante p. 406).

A (Sett Smith with him), for the defendants.

Robinson v. Warren, 6 Q. B. 515; Robinson v. The Bank of Australasia, ante vol. 1, p. 198; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 944; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 39; L. J. 26, Ex.

for the plaintiff, was not in.

The court unanimously affirmed the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division.

Judgment affirmed.

for the plaintiff, H. O. Ootes, for Adamson, and Adamson, North Shields.

for the defendants, Argles and Raw-

Friday, April 27, 1877.

(Before LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., BRANWELL and BRETT, L.JJ.)

METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS COMPANY.

Charter-party—Delivery short of destination—Freight pro rata itineris.

By charter-party between plaintiff, shipowner, and defendants, charterers, plaintiff agreed that his steamship should load a cargo of iron rails at an English port and proceed to Taganrog in the Sea of Azov, or as near thereto as she might safely get, and deliver the same. The captain on arrival in December found the Sea of Azov closed by ice, and, notwithstanding defendants' protest, landed the cargo at Kertch and left it at the Custom House there, where it was subsequently taken possession of by the consignees named in the bills of lading. Kertch is 220 miles by sea and 700 by land from Taganrog, and is as near as the ship could have got before April.

In an action for freight,

Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that plaintiff was not entitled to freight either under the charter-party or pro rata itineris.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division in favour of the defendants on a special case stated in an action brought by a shipowner against charterers for freight. The plaintiff's ship loaded a cargo of railway iron under two charter parties, by which the cargo was to be delivered at Taganrog, or as near thereto as she could safely get. On arriving at Kertch, at the mouth of the Sea of Azov, the captain found the navigation stopped by ice, and the buoys, &c., removed for the winter. The defendants' agents telegraphed to the captain, "If you discharge, your steamer will be held responsible for all consequences infraction charter-party;" but the captain landed the cargo at Kertch, and left it in the custody of the Custom-house authorities there. It was taken possession of by an agent for the railway company, who were named as consignees in the bills of lading.

The question for the opinion of the court, who had power to draw inferences of fact, was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to be paid the chartered freight, or any and what amount, for the carriage of the railway iron to Kertch.

The Divisional Court unanimously held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the chartered freight, and Mellor and Quain, JJ. held that he was not entitled to recover anything, Cockburn, C.J. being of opinion that he was entitled to freight pro rata itineris. Judgment was accordingly entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The judgments in the court below are reported ante, p. 313, where the special case is set out in full.

The distance between the ports of Kertch and Taganrog was not stated in the special case, but on the argument in the court below it was agreed that they were about thirty miles apart, and the argument and judgment proceeded on that assumption. When the case came before the Court of Appeal a chart was produced from which it appeared that the distance between the two ports across the Sea of Azov was about 220 miles, while the journey from Kertch to Taganrog round the sea of Azov by land would probably be at least 700 miles.

The case came on during the Michaelmas Sittings 1876, but owing to the illness of some of the judges the arguments could not be concluded, and the Court directed it to be re-argued.

Cohen, Q.C. (Beresford with him) for the plaintiff.—The judgment of the court below was wrong, and the plaintiff was entitled to full freight under the charter-parties. The true effect of the clause giving a lien is, that the master had a right to retain the cargo until he received the certificate which is set out in paragraph 17 of the special case, and when he had received that certificate the owner was entitled to full freight. The fact that the Rostoff and Wladikowske Railway Company were the consignees named in the bill of lading makes full freight due if the goods are accepted by them anywhere short of the port of destination. The duty of the carrier is completely performed when the goods are delivered to the consignee: (London and North-Western Railway Company v. Bartlett 7 H. & N. 400, 31 L. J. 92, Ex.; Cork Distillery Company v. Great Southern and Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 7 H. of L. 269.) If the goods are delivered anywhere, and the consignee takes them under the charter-party, full freight is payable. The judgment of Lord Campbell, C.J. in Schilizai v. Derry (4 E. & B. 873; 24 L. J. 193, Q. B.) is not good law, for it goes to the extent of holding that as near to the port as the ship can safely get means the same as into the port. All that was necessary for the decision of that case was, that the master ought under the circumstances to have waited until the obstacle was removed. The master may do whatever is reasonable under the circumstances, and in the present case he could not be expected to keep the iron on board all the winter or to take it back to England. If he had landed the goods with the intention of communicating with the owner in order that a ship might be sent out in the spring to take on the cargo, he would not have committed any breach of the charter-party. The consignees took the goods voluntarily under the charter-party, and gave a certificate of delivery, and the consignor did not object to the goods being landed at Kertch. [BRETT, L.J.—The telegram set out in paragraph 12 amounts to an objection, and the certificate is not a certificate of right delivery.] Right delivery does not mean delivery at the right place; it means delivery in good order and condition, and of the proper quantity: (The Norway, 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 17, 168, 254; 3 Moore's P. C. Cas. N. S. 245; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 50.) Secondly, if the plaintiff is not entitled to full freight for the voyage, he is entitled to pro rata freight for the carriage of the cargo as far as Kertch. In Sjöblomsten (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 436; L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 297; 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 394) it is laid down by Dr. Lushington, "that to justify a claim for pro rata freight there must be a voluntary acceptance of the goods by their owner at an intermediate port in such a mode as to raise a fair inference that the further carriage of the goods was intentionally dispensed with;" and for this proposition Vlieboom v. Chapman (13 M. & W. 230) is cited. The facts of the present case bring it within the rule laid down by Dr. Lushington.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. (Hollams with him) for the defendants.—[Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—Consider the last passage of the judgment of Mellor and Quain, JJ., in the court below.] The case depends on a proper appreciation of the facts. The cargo might have laid up the ship at Kertch, and completed the voyage when the ice broke up; but he had determined to put an end to the voyage at Kertch, which he had no right to do, and he did so in spite of the defendants' remonstrance contained in the telegram. There was not a right delivery of the cargo. The certificate given by Deepik is not inconsistent with the defendants' views of the effect of what was done. Even if the landing of the cargo was with the consent of the consignee, that gives no right as against the consignor. The consignee cannot alter the contract so as to bind the consignor. The case in the court below was argued and decided on the mistaken assumption that the distance between Kertch and Taganrog is only thirty miles; but the distance is in fact so great that iron delivered at Kertch would be no use to the railway company at Taganrog.

Cohen, Q.C., in reply.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—In this case there was a difference of opinion among the judges in the court below as to whether, on the facts stated in this special case, the plaintiff was entitled to a freight pro rata itineris for so much of the voyage as had been performed, i.e., from Middlesbrough-on-Tees to Kertch. I do not gather that there was any difference of opinion on the question whether the voyage had been performed so as to make the whole freight due to the plaintiff. Mr. Cohen, for the plaintiff, now contends that the whole freight is due, and, further, that if the whole is not due, then freight pro rata is payable.

The circumstances under which these two questions arise are short and simple. The ship started for Taganrog with a cargo of railway iron shipped under two charter-parties, and on 17th Dec. 1875 she arrived at Kertch. As we now learn, it is 200 miles by sea from Kertch to Taganrog, and the journey by land round the Sea of Azov would probably be about 800 or 900 miles. It is admitted that under the circumstances the captain had a right to stop at Kertch. It is found in the case that the Sea of Azov was then closed by ice, the navigation of the port of Taganrog was effectively closed, and all the buoys, lightships, and other marks for navigation had been removed for the winter. Therefore probably there was an absolute physical obstruction which would have rendered it literally impossible for the vessel to continue her voyage as far as Taganrog; but however that may be, there was such a practical obstruction as to render it extremely difficult and dangerous to attempt the further prosecution of the voyage, and this was quite sufficient to justify the captain in remaining at Kertch. So far, therefore, the captain was right in what he did; but then he proceeded to discharge the cargo at Kertch, and in his protest, the material parts of which are set out in paragraph 11 of the case, he states the circumstances under which he did so. Now, I apprehend on the statement contained in that protest, that the captain thought the voyage was done, and the discharge of the cargo was within the terms of the charter-party, considering, no doubt, that Kertch was the nearest point to Taganrog to which he could safely get within the meaning of the charter-party. The discharge of the cargo was an absolute and final discharge, for, as I understand that he thinks he is discharging it

[CT. OF APP.]

METCALFE v. BRITANNIA IRONWORKS COMPANY.

[CT. OF APP.]

iance with the contract contained in the charter-party. He goes on with the discharge of the cargo after he had received from the defendants' agents the telegram of 19th Dec., set out in paragraph 12 of the case; when expanded it means that the defendants' agents considered the discharge of the cargo at Kertch to be an extension of the charter-party, and intended, if the captain insisted on discharging, to claim against the shipowner for any loss which the charterers might be put to in consequence of his doing so. The cargo was then discharged, and was put into the hands of the Russian Government officials, and remained under their protection. When the iron was in the custody and under the authority of the Russian Custom-house officials, a person named Deopik, acting under a power of attorney from the Rostoff and Wladikowskese Railway Company, calls on the authorities to give the iron to him. The authorities do so, although the captain claims to retain it for the plaintiff until the freight is paid, and Deopik gives a receipt on which some stress is laid by the Lord Chief Justice in delivering judgment in the court below.

It is contended, secondly, that these circumstances, though they do not justify the contention that the ship had fulfilled the contract entered into with the charter-party and that therefore the whole freight is payable, yet are sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to freight pro rata.

As to the first point, all the judges in the court below were of opinion that the view taken by the captain had fulfilled the terms of the charter-party, and the whole freight was due, and could not be sustained, and without hesitation decided against the plaintiff on that question. I am clearly of opinion that their decision was correct. According to the facts stated in the case, there was merely a temporary obstruction to the prosecution of the voyage, and one which could not necessarily be incidental to every autumn contract for a voyage to a part of the world where the sea is frozen in the winter. The word "there,"

"at the time of the ship's arrival," or some other expression to the like effect, cannot be incorporated into the charter-party to qualify the words "so near thereto as she can safely get," which a construction would be astonishing to all mercantile minds. I am of opinion, therefore, that the contract was not performed, and the plaintiff is not entitled to freight for the entire voyage.

Then it is said that, at any rate, the plaintiff is entitled to freight pro rata, the vessel having proceeded on the voyage as far as Kertch. The case as to payment of freight pro rata is thus laid down by Parke, B., in delivering the judgment in the Court of Exchequer in Vlierboom v. Chapman (13 M. & W. 238): "The true principle on which this description of freight is due is that a new contract may be implied to pay from the acceptance by the consignee of his goods delivered at an intermediate port instead of the destined port of delivery." That is, there must either be a real practical fulfilment of the contract, or a new contract between the same parties, for a new contract between different parties cannot bind one who does not consent to it. I add a little further on he adds: "To justify a claim for pro rata freight there must be a voluntary acceptance of the goods at an intermediate port in such a mode as to raise a fair inference that the further carriage of the goods was intentionally dispensed with,"—that is, by some one who has power to represent the original contractor. In that case, circumstances existed which warranted the language used in the judgment, for the consignee and consignor were the same person, and therefore the general language used, when applied to the facts of the particular case, is correct. Then at page 240 he says: "The shipowner was not ready to carry forward to the port of destination in his own or another ship, and consequently no inference could arise that the shippers were willing to dispense with the further carriage, and accept the delivery at the intermediate instead of the destined port." The last passage which I have quoted shows that the idea in the mind of Parke, B., was, that the new contract under which pro rata freight would be payable must be made between the same parties as the old contract.

Those are the principles of law as to the liability to pay freight pro rata, and how do the facts of the present case suit them? As I read the facts, there was no voluntary acceptance of the cargo short of its original destination. The discharge was made once for all at Kertch against the protest of the defendants' agents. The consignees had to consider what was best to be done under the circumstances—whether they should leave the iron alone and refuse to have anything to do with it, or should take it and do the best they could with it, and they elected to take it. The captain did not in any way qualify his absolute discharge of the cargo; he only said that as he had kept his contract for the carriage (as he thought he had), therefore he was entitled to hold the iron until the freight was paid. The fact of taking the iron under the circumstances stated did not amount to a voluntary acceptance short of its destination, and a dispensation with a complete performance of the contract. There never was a voluntary acceptance or such an intention to dispense with a complete performance as must exist as a condition precedent to liability to pay pro rata freight; therefore the facts do not come within the admitted principles on which alone such freight can be claimed.

It is said that the Lord Chief Justice, in his learned and elaborate judgment in the court below, has gone beyond the facts, and has held on the general principles of maritime law, and on the authority of the decision in Luke v. Lyde (2 Burr. 882), that there was a valid claim for freight pro rata here. If it were necessary to discuss the point, I should differ from the conclusions of law at which he has arrived; but it is not necessary to go into this question, because I do not so read the facts as to bring the case within the principles on which alone pro rata freight is payable. There was not a dispensation with performance of the contract, and therefore the conclusion in fact at which I arrive is, that the case does not come within the principles to which I have referred. I differ from the conclusions arrived at by the Lord Chief Justice in the court below.

Then there is the argument as to the general equity of the case, that it is only fair that the charterer should pay freight pro rata. The Lord Chief Justice states that it would be inequitable that, where the charterer had the benefit of the conveyance for nearly the whole of the voyage agreed on, the shipowner should receive nothing; but this view of the matter appears to be founded on the concession that Kertch was so near to Taganrog as to bring it within that class of cases in which delivery at one station on a railway has been substituted for delivery at another. It seems to have been assumed that Kertch was near Taganrog, but we find the contrary to be the case. So far as the reasoning on that assumed fact goes, we find that the fact was too hastily conceded.

On these grounds, therefore, I am of opinion that the view taken by the majority of the court below was correct, and the judgment ought to be affirmed.

BRAMWELL, L. J.—I am of the same opinion.

The plaintiff cannot show that he has performed a condition precedent to his right to recover freight on the charter-party, and therefore, in order to recover he must either show a new contract or a dispensation with performance of the terms of the original contract. I am inclined to think that the law is, as Mr. Cohen said it is, that the consignee can dispense with the performance of the contract under the charter-party, and might say to the shipowner, "Land the cargo at Kertch," and by so saying might waive all claim to have it carried on further. I do not wish to give a final opinion as to this point; but if this is so, the shipowner must make it out in fact that the further carriage was dispensed with. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff, and he must make out that the consignees dispensed with the carriage of the iron on to Taganrog. To my mind there is no evidence at all of this.

The facts are that the captain, under a mistaken notion that he has done what is required of him by the charter-party, lands the cargo at Kertch, at the risk and leaves it at the cost of the consignees, and indicates no intention of taking it on to Taganrog. I agree that by putting into Kertch he did not act wrongly, and he did not break his contract at that time, for he was prevented by the ice in the Sea of Azov from proceeding further on his voyage; but by landing the cargo under the circumstances under which it was landed I think he did commit a breach of the contract. We need not go to Hochster v. Delatour (2 E. & B. 678) and that class of cases, to show this, for when the captain unshipped the goods, and said, "There are the goods for the consignees," he gave the consignees a right to take them, and indeed he almost necessitated their taking them. It might be that the consignees had paid for the goods beforehand, but at any rate the consignees would have a right to take the goods, and I do not care whether or not the captain had authority to come back later and offer to carry on the goods to Taganrog, for that would not affect the right of the consignees to take possession.

The argument on behalf of the plaintiff is, that the consignees were doing a voluntary act in taking the iron when it was landed; but it is something like the case of a man who is turned out of a cab in the middle of a journey for which he has hired it, and walks on instead of remaining where he is. In one sense it may be said to have been a voluntary act, for perhaps there was no law to compel them to take away the iron; but practically it was impossible to help it. The telegram sent to the captain was no consent so far as the charterers were concerned, nor was the certificate given by Deopik. A complete silence as to any agreement to do with performance of the condition contains the charter-party, and to pay freight strikes me especially is this; why should charterers be willing to pay the freight Cohen says because they wanted the goods once; but the answer to that is, that they get them at once. There is not a word as to paying freight, and it seems manifest that there was no dispensation with performance terms of the charter party.

Then, as to pro rata freight, my opinion that it is only payable under a new contract and here if there was a new contract a contract by the consignees, and they have authority to bind the charterers; but I am of opinion that there was no new contract, former observations on the other question case show how I come to this conclusion are asked to infer that because the captain signed the old contract, therefore there was a new contract but there is no evidence of the existence of a contract, nor that the charterers would be bound if there were one.

On these grounds I am of opinion that the judgment of the majority of the court below ought to be affirmed: but I think it is due to the Chief Justice to show why I do not agree with his judgment which he delivered.

He goes on two grounds. First, he says that a new contract ought to be implied, but he does not advert to the difficulty that the contract cannot bind the charterers; he cites cases where pro rata freight has been held to be payable, but they are cases where there was no breach of contract on the part of the shipowner, and that is not the present case. In some instances where a contract to pay pro rata freight ought to be implied, but it would be on a different state of facts from this. His second ground is this. He says, "But beside this, when the facts are closely looked at, an acceptance of the cargo at Kertch by the consignees, and a dispensation of the further carriage of it may properly be inferred." I have said so much as to this point that I will not repeat it. I cannot say that these facts would warrant such an inference. The consignees do not ask for the cargo, and the master is not compelled to deliver possession of it to them. Towards the conclusion of his judgment the Lord Chief Justice says that the plaintiff was deprived of a tempus perit during which he might have made arrangements for bringing on the cargo, by the act of the consignees in obtaining possession of the iron. I suppose that instead of iron this had been a perishable commodity, what would the consequence have to do so as to give a tempus perit for these reasons I cannot agree with the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice in the court below on the question of pro rata freight.

Then it is said that these cases are against the shipowner. Mr. Cohen says there is no hardship, and therefore the courts ought not to imply a contract to pay freight pro rata; but I do not much sympathise with that line of argument for if people mean freight to be paid for it in the agreement; but I should like to see such a charter-party as would imply a contract proposed to be implied, and if the master breaks his contract, the cargo short of its destination.

CHAM. DIV.]

ORIGINAL HARTLEPOOL COLLIERIES COMPANY (LIMITED) v. GIBB.

[CHAM. DIV.]

a week for the purpose of unloading coals there, and at such times the vessel necessarily projected over the defendant's wharf. For some time prior to the 10th of Oct. 1875, the plaintiffs moored the collier opposite their own wharf, but about 25ft. from it, under a written agreement with the defendant for that purpose, which expired on that day, and was not renewed, nevertheless the vessel was at intervals moored as before, and occupied from sixteen to twenty hours in unloading. The defendant kept a raft of timber for use in his business on the river in front of his wharf, and after the expiration of the agreement, in order to prevent the vessel from overlapping his wharf, he moored his raft in such a way as to prevent the Ludicorth from coming to her berth, and this action was then brought to restrain him from so doing.

The defendant put in a counterclaim asking for an injunction, and for damages sustained by the defendant on account of the vessel interfering with the access to the dock both before and after the date of the issue of the writ.

Roeburgh, Q.C., Caldecott, and Edward Ford, for the plaintiffs, contended that the defendant's raft was an illegal obstruction of the river. They referred to

Lyon v. The Fishmongers' Company, 35 L. T. Rep., N.S. 569; L. Rep. 1 App. Cas. 603;
Reg. v. Leech, 6 Mod. 145;
Rex v. Russell, 6 East, 427;
Rex v. Cross, 3 Camp. 224;
Ross v. Groves, 5 M. & G. 613;
Webber v. Sparkes, 10 Moo. & W. 425.

Chitty, Q.C., Laing, and R. E. Webster, for the defendant, argued that the plaintiffs were not entitled to moor a vessel of this length opposite their wharf which must necessarily project over the defendant's wharf, and that the raft was fixed to the defendant's wharf simply to protect him against the wrongful act of the plaintiffs.

The evidence having been taken it was proposed to give evidence of damage having been sustained by the defendant since the date of the writ in the action, and the question arose whether this evidence was admissible.

Jessell, M.R.—My present impression is that it is confined to the writ. I will give the reasons why I think it is so in order that if this goes elsewhere, the court above may decide what the rule properly means. A counter claim, as I understand it, is to entitle the defendant who has a claim against the plaintiff, either sounding in debt or damages, to set it off against the plaintiff's claim so as to destroy it or to get in a surplus, if a surplus is coming to him in one action, so that he may not be compelled to bring a second action. Of course where it relates to the same matter it is very convenient to try it, as here, but where it does not relate to the same matter, it may be inconvenient to try it, and the court may refuse permission to the defendant to avail himself of the action under Order XIX., r. 3. The counter claim should have the same effect as a statement of claim in a cross-action. Now, in what cross-action? It obviously means in the original action. Where a plaintiff issues a writ for damages, he claims damages up to the time of issuing his writ, and where a defendant brings a counter-claim for damages, it is his statement of claim in the same action, and that is up to the issuing of the writ, and as far as I can see, it being a cross claim and not a defence to the original claim, there is no reason why, if he adopts the plaintiff's writ, he should go beyond the issuing of the writ for damages, because that would not be justice. If the defendant can get damages in respect of another matter up to the date of his counter claim, the plaintiff ought to have the same right, so as to increase his damages. If it is a continuous act, injuring the plaintiff, as the plaintiff says, "I am entitled to 500*l.* damages up to the issuing of the writ, and 500*l.* more to the time of your putting in counter claim," and the defendant says, "I am entitled to 800*l.* damages subsequently to the issuing of the writ," he will get a verdict for 100*l.*; although the plaintiff is entitled to 400*l.* damages, the plaintiff is wrong, and the defendant is not. That does not seem to be consistent with justice. When I look at Order XX., I find it headed—"Pleading matters arising pending the action." Now, if it had been intended that the counter claim should include matters pending the action, it would have said so, but I find it is carefully restricted to this—"Any ground of defence arising after action brought, and before the defendant has delivered his statement of defence, and before the time limited for so doing so has expired, may be pleaded by the defendant in his statement of defence, either alone or together with other grounds of defence, and after a statement of defence has been delivered any ground of defence arises to any set-off or counter claim alleged therein by the defendant, and may be pleaded by the plaintiff in his reply, either alone or together with any other ground of reply." So that it is carefully restricted to defence to an action or to a counter claim. The only way in which you could allege that a counter claim was within the rule would be by saying that the counter claim was a defence, but that is not the way it is treated throughout the rule. It is always treated as a cross action, not as a defence, the rule being that you must set off the damages in the cross action against the damages in the action. It seems to me, therefore, that the defendant cannot bring his counter claim for damages which accrued after the writ, more than the plaintiff can get damages which accrued after the writ. By the leave of the court you can do anything, but that is another matter, because the court can give leave to amend on both sides, and can easily amend the writ. That is my opinion upon the general rule, I think it is a strictness that no action for damages or a cross action for damages can be maintained by the defendant after the date of the writ. But I will let the evidence go in so that if the defendant is desirous of taking another opinion upon the subject he may do so, and therefore I will let him give evidence of damage up to the date of his counter claim.

Chitty, Q.C., for the defendant, then desired not to put in evidence of damage to the defendant between the date of the writ and the delivery of the counter claim, and the Master of the Rolls proceeded to give judgment on the whole case.

Jessell, M.R.—I will consider in the first place what the law is as regards obstructions.

The plaintiffs say the Thames is a public highway, navigable by all Her Majesty's subjects in a reasonable manner and for reasonable purposes; and that they navigate it in a reasonable manner and for reasonable purposes, and the defendant has no right to dant does not use his wharf for any other purpose; and even on these 100 days he does not use it all day. According to his account, he wants it for two and a half or three hours before the flood tide only. Therefore, the steamer has a right to be there, as far as the defendant is concerned, for all the other hours of the day. But supposing it is lying opposite the defendant's dock gates when he wants to dock or undock, when it is asked to go out of the way it should do so; and even without asking, when it appears that a vessel is coming up to be docked or undocked. But, still, it has a right to be there, moving out of the way when it is impeding access to the dock. It is merely lying in the river—a public highway—for a lawful purpose, for discharging its cargo; and, therefore, it has a right to be there. That being so, it follows that the defendant had no right to stop the access of the vessel to its berth. The steam collier had a right to go to her berth—a right to navigate the river and to lie in the river, and she had a clear right to do so two-thirds of the days in the year, and for nine-tenths of every day of the remaining days.

Now what the defendant has done is this: he has stopped her getting to her berth at all; he has put an obstruction in the river which prevents her getting there any day of the year or at any time, which clearly is wrong. As to the way the obstruction is fastened, that does not matter. The defendant himself said it was fastened to the wharf in such a way, and purposely so fastened, that the plaintiff's vessel could not get up at all to her berth. It was intended to be so. That was clearly an illegal obstruction in the public highway. I need not discuss the exact nature of the obstruction or how it was fastened, because it was admitted that it was fastened in such a way as to prevent and did prevent the collier getting up. Therefore that obstruction was unlawful.

Now I will notice the two justifications, or attempted justifications, which were made for putting it there.

First of all it was said that it was in fact a raft of timber logs which were used by the defendant in his business as a repairer of ships, and that he had a right to put his logs there. Now that, in my opinion, is no defence at all. You have no right to obstruct a public highway; whether it is useful to yourself or not is quite immaterial. It is no answer to say that you use it for carrying on your business. The answer is that the Thames is not a timber pond. You have no right to make that use of the Thames, which is a navigable highway. No doubt it may be done where it does not interfere with the access of the public—it may happen on other parts of the river where it does not interfere with the vessels going or returning, passing or repassing, because the conservators may not interfere and may allow you to moor timber. But it is quite plain that that is not the proper mode of using the highway. It is not a reasonable use of the highway to keep your timber logs there for a longer time than is necessary to take them to your dock. You must not keep them there as a reserve to be used in the same manner as a timber dock. Then if you do you must not fix them in such a way that vessels cannot get up; because the real point in the case and the gravamen of the charge against the defendant is that he prevents the access of the plaintiff's vessel.

The other ground of defence, which struck me as a very odd one, was this, that the defendant's vessel would stay there time, and therefore he had a right to ob- The answer is, he could not know beforehand would stay there so as to interfere with because, as I have said before, the ax have been obstructed for two-thirds of the year, and it would have been no injury if she did not stay an unreasonable time even on other days, how could he tell that she was going to stay an unreasonable time? She might have been there fourteen or fifteen hours, twenty hours, or twenty-four; she might go away more than three hours before the flood, and, therefore, it is impossible to tell beforehand that she was going to stay an unreasonable time and interfere with her. It seems to me to be no defence whatever against the action, which in my view of it is purely undefended action.

Now I come to the counter claim. I have already ruled that the counter claim for damages, must be confined to the time prior to the date of the writ; but it could be extended to the date of the claim, it is admitted that there is only one defence, and they did not think that worth anything. Now the counter claim is founded, as I have said, upon nuisance. If even less than in the counter claim were proved, the defendant would be entitled to succeed on it. I do not think that it is necessary to prove a case of dangerous interference with reasonable access to his property is, in my opinion, such a nuisance as to maintain an action by the defendant. A good deal of evidence has been gone into on the point of danger, I must say that in my opinion, although I think there was some slight risk, there was really nothing of any importance as regards danger, and I think the defendant's own conduct shows it. He is a reasonable man in business, and if there had been any serious danger he would not have allowed the vessels to be at the dock and undocked whilst the collier was there. I think more of men's conduct than of men's property. But, as regards expense, there was clearly no additional expense. The plaintiffs have no right to impose even an additional expense of two or three hours on the defendant, if it is such an additional expense; and they have no right to say as I said before, to interfere with his reasonable access, and if this had been proved, I should have given the defendant damages, although, as I have said, very small damages, because the wages of the additional men must have been something small. I should not have granted an injunction for this reason, that the plaintiffs do not have a right to obstruct. They deny the obstruction, and do not claim the right to keep a vessel there to obstruct, nor do they claim the right to prevent a vessel there so as to obstruct the use of the wharf if the defendant ever uses the wharf. There is no question of right to be tried, but the question between the parties to be tried, the defence had been adduced, would have been a simple question of fact as to whether or not on any given day when the collier was at the dock it was not more out of the way, and therefore the defendant in the reasonable use of the wharf side premises; a question of fact which I have believed from going into by the defendant declining to offer any further evidence.

ing the state of the matter, although I defendant's contention reasonable to—that he has a right to say that the ball not deprive him of a valuable rich belongs to him by keeping their site his wharf for an unreasonable or an unreasonable purpose; still, as t made out that case at present— ture use he may make of his wharf I w—it appears to me that he has no n which I can give him judgment on claim.

: Harcourt and Macarthur; Markby, Stewart.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

JAMES P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAIKES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

March 24 and April 17, 1877.

THE FRANCONIA.

Lord Campbell's Act—Action in rem—Jurisdiction.

Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) liction to entertain an action in rem y the personal representatives of a de- son killed by the negligence of those on reign ship in a collision between that 1 British ship on the high seas below r mark.

in action brought by Ann Jeffrey, and administratrix of John Jeffrey, de- a mariner on board the steamship against the Franconia to recover r loss of his clothes and effects and n for the injury sustained by the reason of his death, resulting from a tween the two vessels. As appeared its filed on behalf of the defendants, took place in the Straits of Dover, miles and a half from the English over, and consequently below high on that coast. The full facts of the l be found reported in The Franconia ; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360), Reg. v. p. 2 Ex. Div. 63). The writ was issued nst the Franconia claiming damages mentioned. An action had previously nt and decided in this division against ia in respect of the loss of the Strath- r cargo (see ante p. 295; 35 L. T. Rep. id the Franconia was then released upon rms that 8l. per ton of the registered he Franconia should be paid into court amages for loss of cargo; that bail given in two other actions then nd, thirdly, that the solicitors for of the Franconia should give an ; to appear and give bail in any action r loss of life or personal injury which stituted by the then plaintiff's solici- into court 7l. per ton in addition to in as aforesaid, but without prejudice action which might be taken to the of the court or claims for loss of life injury. It was consequently admitted ndants that, although the vessel had ested in this action, the present pro- ist be treated as if the ship was under he action was regularly in rem, and the defendants in the course of the argument agreed to give bail in the action in pursuance of the undertaking.

After the writ had been issued and served upon the defendants' solicitor, and before any pleadings, the case came before the court upon motion by the defendants to set aside so much of the writ as claimed damages for loss of life.

Phillimore (Lenjamin, Q.C. with him) in support of the defendants' motion.—The High Court of Justice has no jurisdiction to enforce proceedings in rem, which could not have been enforced by some court existing prior to the Judicature Acts 1873 and 1875, and by these Acts amalgamated with the High Court. The Judicature Acts give no greater jurisdiction than existed before except in a few instances not material here. No court ever exercised jurisdiction in rem prior to the Judicature Acts except the High Court of Admiralty, and that court never could have exercised jurisdiction, or have been supposed to exercise it, in actions for loss of life and personal injury before the passing of the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), which by sect. 7 gave "jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship" to be exercised (sect. 35) either in personam or in rem. The jurisdiction of all English courts in such claims was created by Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) in 1846, and it did not at that time exist in the Admiralty Court; and as Lord Campbell's Act expressly provides the mode in which damages are to be recoverable, and that mode is inconsistent with the then existing Admiralty practice, it may be fairly assumed that Lord Campbell's Act gave the Admiralty no such jurisdiction. Then do the words "damage done by any ship" include loss of life and personal injury? Even if they do, it is submitted that the jurisdiction should not be exercised in rem, but in personam; but the class of damage is not within the section. According to the decisions of the High Court of Admiralty, the word "damage" no doubt includes personal injury:

The Sylph, L. Rep. 2 Ad. & Eco. 24; 17 L. T. Rep.

N. S. 519; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 37;

The Beta, L. Rep. 2 P. C. 447; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 988; and even for loss of life:

The Guldase, L. Rep. 2 Ad. & Eco. 325; 19 L. T. Rep.

N. S. 748; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 201;

The Explorer, L. Rep. 3 Ad. 359; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 405; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 507.

There is a distinction between the two classes of case, because in claims for loss of life the jurisdiction is purely statutory, whilst the claims for personal injury are common law rights. The Explorer (ubi sup.) went up to the Privy Council, but that court, upon the question of jurisdiction being raised, intimated that the proper course in such a case was for the defendants to move for a prohibition, and directed the case to stand over for that purpose. The plaintiffs then withdrew their claims for loss of life. On the other hand, this question has been expressly raised and decided by the Court of Queen's Bench; and the Court of Admiralty was prohibited from entertaining a claim for loss of life (Smith v. Brown, L. R. 11 Q.B. 729; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 808; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. O.S. 56); and although that exact question has not been again raised, that decision has been approved in the following cases:

James v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 7 Ex. 195; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 187; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 228;
Simpson v. Blues, L. Rep. 7 C. P. 290; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 360;
Gunnestad v. Price, L. Rep. 10 Ex. 65; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 499; 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 545; and has been disapproved in one only, viz., Cargo v. Argos (L. Rep. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 519) in the Privy Council. The result of the authorities is, that The Guldaxe (ubi sup.) is the only case in support of the jurisdiction asked for, and that was dissented from by the Queen's Bench, in Smith v. Brown (ubi sup.). The court ought to follow the latter decision.

Butt, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff, contra.—The question has already been expressly decided by the High Court of Admiralty in The Guldaxe (ubi sup.), and the real point here is whether the court will consider that that authority is overruled by Smith v. Brown (ubi sup.). The latter case turned entirely on the meaning of the word "damage" in the Admiralty Court Act 1861, sect. 7, which the Court of Queen's Bench held to mean damage to property only, and not damage to person; and this being the ratio decidendi, the Queen's Bench held that they, sitting in prohibition, must overrule the decision of the Privy Council in The Beta (ubi sup.), where it was decided that "damage" included personal injury. Which decision is to be followed? It is clear that if "damage," as used in that section, can be shown to mean damage to person, the Queen's Bench were wrong. Now, in ordinary speech, "damage" clearly includes damage to person, and in the dictionaries it is given as synonymous with "injury," "hurt," "detriment," and "loss." Again, in Smith v. Brown (ubi sup.), it is said that "damage" does not include injury to the person, because "the Legislature in two recent acts in pari materid, both having reference to the liability of shipowners in respect of injury or damage, namely, the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), and the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), has, in a series of sections, carefully observed this distinctive phraseology, speaking in distinct terms in the same section of loss of life and personal injury on the one hand, and loss or damage done to ships' goods or other property on the other; and in these Acts the term "damage" is nowhere used as applicable to injuries done to the person—it is applied only to property and inanimate things. Now this is not an accurate representation of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts. No doubt it is so in sect. 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and in sect. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862; but in sect. 505 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the words "loss or damage" are used as including loss of life and personal injury as well as damage to goods; by sect. 515 "all sums of money paid for or on account of any loss or damage in respect whereof the liability of the owners of any ship is limited" are to be accounted for between the owners; here the word "loss" clearly does not include personal injury, and as the sections equally clearly cover all the classes of injury referred to in the previously mentioned sections, hence the word "damage" must, in sects. 505, 515, be taken to include personal injury. Again, it must assumed that the Legislature in passing the Admiralty Court Act 1861, an Act dealing exclusively with the Admiralty Court, intentionally used words in the sense in which they were ordinarily used in the High Court of Admiralty, and that the word "damage," having a special meaning in that court, the Legislature used it with that special meaning. Now in the Admiralty Court, the word "damage" included not only damage to property, but also personal injury. The Buckers (4 C. Rob. 73) was a suit instituted by a passenger against the master of the ship for assault on the high seas, and in giving judgment Lord Stowell said, "In this case the person bringing the action is described as a passenger, and the action is in a cause of damage," clearly showing that "damage" included personal injury. The Admiralty Court Act 1861 was passed for the express purpose of enlarging the jurisdiction of giving remedies where none existed previously; hence, as a matter of public policy, it is a safe inference that it was intended to give this jurisdiction. Moreover, unless it is held that the court has jurisdiction in rem in this case, the plaintiff will be absolutely deprived of all remedy; because the owners of the ship, being a foreign company domiciled abroad, no writ can be served upon them out of the jurisdiction, and the rules of the Supreme Court, Order XL, nisi, unless the act . . . for which damages are sought to be recovered was . . . done . . . within the jurisdiction;" and it has been held that a plaintiff on the high seas below high water mark is not within the jurisdiction: (Reg. v. Keys, L. Rep. Ex. Div. 63), and this decision has been followed by the Court of Common Pleas, who set aside an order made for the service or notice of a writ personam out of the jurisdiction in a similar suit brought against the owners of the Franconia, who are now moving to set aside the writ in this action. The court, as we submit, should follow the Privy Council rather than the Queen's Bench in case of a conflict of decisions; and as The Beta (ubi sup.) lays down that there is a right of action in rem, or case of personal injury, there must be the right in case of loss of life. If there is any difficulty about the case not being tried by jury in this division, there is now power to send any case for trial by jury under the Judicature Acts and rules thereunder. It is moreover clear that the Legislature deemed the High Court of Admiralty a proper tribunal to exercise such jurisdiction in many cases, because by sect. 13 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, it is provided that "Whenever any ship or vessel, or the crew thereof, are under arrest of the High Court of Admiralty, the court shall have the same powers as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in England by the ninth part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854;" that is to say, that the court acquired jurisdiction under the Merchant Shipping Acts to limit the liability of shipowners, and where necessary (under sect. 514 of the Act of 1854) to ascertain the amount of damages payable in respect of loss of life or personal injury, and to distribute the same among the several claimants. So that if the defendants had come to this division when the ship was under arrest in the former action, they had sought to limit their liability, the court would have had to assess the amount of damage sustained by the defendants, in sent from this judgment, or even to make me to require further time for consideration." The Lord Chief Justice and Hannen, J., considered the question one of considerable difficulty, but decided in favour of the prohibition. It appears to me that the main ground—I will not say the ratio decidendi—of the Lord Chief Justice's judgment was that the word "damage" was used with reference to mischief done to property, and not to injuries done to the person; and his Lordship said "that the distinction is not a matter of mere verbal criticism, but is of a substantial character, and necessary to be attended to, is apparent from the fact that the Legislature in two recent Acts in pari materio, both having reference to the liability of shipowners in respect of injury or damage, namely, the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, part ix.), the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1861 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, sect. 54), has, in a series of sections, carefully observed this distinctive phraseology, speaking in distinct terms in the same section of loss of life and personal injury on the one hand, and loss and damage done to ship, goods, or other property, on the other. In these Acts the term 'damage' is nowhere used as applicable to injuries done to the person; it is applied only to property and inanimate things. We see no reason to suppose that the Legislature, in using the term in the enactment we are considering, had lost sight of the distinction uniformly observed in the preceding statutes." The Merchant Shipping Act contains no less than 548 sections; and I venture to think that a close inspection of the language of the various clauses will show that this sharp distinction between "damage" and "injury" can hardly be maintained; but, as was admitted by the counsel for the defendant, "damage" and "injury" are sometimes interchangeably used; certainly, in the 527th section "injury to property" is spoken of, and in sects. 505 and 515 the words "loss or damage" must apply to all the cases mentioned in sect. 504, among which are loss of life and personal injury.

It is also to be observed that the Court of Queen's Bench seem to distinguish, in fine, between the difference of respect due to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as an appellate tribunal and that due to it in a question of prohibition. It is in the former character that I have to consider it.

It is not improper, perhaps, to remark in this place that the High Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction in a matter of personal assault committed on the high seas by a master upon a passenger. The action in such a suit was always described as in a "cause of damage." The decision of Lord Stowell on this subject will be found in the case of The Buckers (4 Rob. 76).

Lastly, I think it worthy of consideration that the 7th and 13th sections of the Admiralty Court Jurisdiction Act must be read together, and then the result is that the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship, and that, wherever any ship or the proceeds are under arrest in that court, it has the same jurisdiction that the court of Chancery has by the Merchant Shipping Act, to which I have already adverted in the beginning of this judgment.

Upon the whole, I think it my duty to adhere to the decision of the Privy Council, and to so motion.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Gellatly, & Wharton. Solicitors for the defendant Swanders, and Stokes.

April 10 and 17, 1877.

THE AFRICAN.

Material man—Equipment—British ship—Purchaser with notice—Damages.

A material man, who supplies stores and for the equipment of a British ship, is maritime lien, cannot enforce his claim the ship in the hands of a subsequent purchaser thereof, even though such purchaser gives notice at the time of purchase that the bill is unpaid.

THIS was an action brought by Daniel, merchant, of Swansea, in rem against the vessel Aneroid to recover, as appeared by endorsement on the writ, "£211. 16s. 3d. for equipment and repair of the vessel Aneroid port of Swansea between the 24th Oct. 1874 the 3rd Dec. 1874." Appearance was made and bail given on behalf of Abraham Hopkins, part owner, and T. R. Davison, as sole owner.

The plaintiff's statement of claim was, in material as follows:

1. The Aneroid was and is a brigantine built the port of Swansea, and the writ in this case issued whilst she was under arrest of this court.

2. In the month of October, November, and Dec. 1874, the plaintiff was employed by Thomas P. Richards and Samuel Browning Power, or one of them, to supply certain stores and materials necessary for the equipment of the said brigantine. The said stores and materials were accordingly supplied to the said brigantine part of her equipment, and all things so done happened to entitle the plaintiff to be paid by the said Thomas P. Richards and Samuel Browning Power, or one of them £211. 16s. 3d. for the equipment of the brigantine as aforesaid, the said Thomas P. Richards and Samuel Browning Power, or one of them, being the owner or owners of sixty-four 64th shares in the brigantine.

3. On the 22nd March 1875, John Roberts, Mr. Evans, David Rose, and Robert Williams, trading in the style of the Tyrlandwr Company, became the owners of twelve of the said 64th shares in the said brigantine, the time the said Tyrlandwr Company became owners of the said twelve 64th shares the said sum of £211. 16s. 3d. was still due and unpaid to the plaintiff.

4. On the 21st Sept. 1876, the said Thomas P. Richards and Samuel Browning Power transferred three of the said 64th shares in the said brigantine to Abraham Hopkins, who has appeared as defendant in this action. The said Abraham Hopkins the same day mortgaged the said forty-three 64th shares to the said Thomas P. Richards and Samuel Browning Power. At the time of the last-mentioned mortgage, and at the time of the said mortgage, the said £211. 16s. 3d. was still due and unpaid to the plaintiff, and the said Abraham Hopkins had received notice of the same, and that the plaintiff claimed the same, and the said Abraham Hopkins became owner of the said forty-three 64th shares to the said claim of the plaintiff.

5. The remaining nine 64th shares in the said brigantine, on the 21st Sept. 1876, transferred to Rammohan Roy Davison, manager of the said Tyrlandwr Company (Limited), and were acquired by the said Rammohan Roy Davison with the knowledge and notice of the plaintiff's claim, and the plaintiff does not further prosecute his claim against the said Thomas Rammohan Roy Davison, his interest in the said brigantine.

6. The said sum of £211. 16s. 3d. is once clear of maritime liens, is not different from any other chattel, and may be sold without the purchaser taking over any of the vendor's liabilities in respect thereof. Take the instance of a carriage sent by the owner to a carriage builder's for repairs repaired, and left with him; if the owner chooses to sell the carriage to a third person to whom the carriage builder delivers it, informing the purchaser that the carriage has been repaired and the repairs are not paid for, the purchaser does not incur any liability in respect of the repairs; and as the builder has parted with possession, he loses all claim against the carriage or its purchaser. I submit that the Admiralty Court Act gives no right of action against the ship when it has passed out of the hands of the owners ordering the repairs, and that no such right arises in any other way.

G. Bruce, for the plaintiff.—The fallacy running through the defendant's contention is that he says that there is no equitable right to be paid out of the res unless it is founded on a lien. I admit the authority of The Two Ellens (ubi sup.), and that there is no maritime lien. If there were a maritime lien, the question of notice or no notice would be wholly immaterial, there being no lien, the question of notice is important. My whole contention is based upon what I say is the equitable right of a person having a claim or burden attaching to a thing to claim payment from a purchaser who takes with notice of the claim and takes the benefit of the supplies made by the person having the claim. There can be no doubt that the ship would be liable in the hands of her former owners; and I submit that the defendant having taking the ship with the knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, and having derived the benefit of the supplies, is bound in equity to discharge the debt due in respect thereof. Where a person receives a benefit he must bear the burden attached thereto. If the purchase-money can be said to include the value of the supplies, then I submit that the purchaser was bound to see that the value of the supplies was paid to the material man out of the purchase-money. The liability of purchasers with notice is indicated by Dr. Lushington in The Alexander (1 W. Rob. 288, 294) where, speaking of the earlier Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6) giving jurisdiction over necessities supplied to a foreign ship, he says, "Secondly, the court having this jurisdiction conceded to it, would be bound to exercise that jurisdiction equitably, and in so doing it would protect the interests of all persons having a bond fide lien upon the property, as for instance, subsequent purchasers without notice;" this indicating that purchasers with notice took subject to the claim. Again, the Judicial Committee in The Pieve Superiore (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 319; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 887; L. Rep. 5 P. C. 432), speaking of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, say, "The arrest, however, there being no maritime lien, could not avail against any valid charges on the ship, nor against a bond fide purchaser," that is to say against a purchaser taking without notice; because, as I submit, a purchaser who takes with notice is not bond fide in the true sense of those words. In Hooper v. Gumm (L. Rep. 2 Ch. App. 282), it was held that a purchaser of a ship is bound to enquire into the vendor's title, and that if he fails to do so and there is any burden on the ship he is taken to be affected with notice and must bear the burden. Here there was distinct notice of the burden, and there was no better established rule that he who obtains the benefit of a contract bears its burden.

Bristow v. Whitmore, 46 L. J. 467, Ch.; 2 White and Tudor's Leading Cases in
p. 38, 2nd edit.

I submit that I have a claim to be paid, & this court has jurisdiction to enforce the claim. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Your claim originally against the owners of the ship the supplies were ordered, and now you say with the ship, and that the defendant is liable; you not go the length of contending that the defendant is personally liable? How can the defendant be liable unless he is also liable?] I do not think that I might proceed in personam against the defendant and that he is personally liable. Attachment of the res is not necessary to enable me to payment by the defendant. I have a legal right which may be enforced in personam or in rem.

J. P. Aspinall in reply.—The whole of the plaintiff's argument assumes that there is a debt or liability attaching to and going with the ship. This is erroneous, as the plaintiff never has any right to be paid out of the res. A person cannot acquire an equitable right to be paid out of the res by a person with whom he never has a contract, express or implied. In this particular case the defendant took no benefit from the materials supplied, as they were two years old when he purchased his shares.

Our. adm.

April 17.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a murrer to the statement of claim. The statement of claim alleges that the plaintiff supplied certain stores and materials as part of her equipment to the brigantine Aneroïd; that Richards and Power were then the owners, and they transferred forty-three sixty-fourth shares of the ship to Abraham Hopkins, the defendant, the other shares being otherwise disposed of; and that at the time of the transfer the vendee had notice that the plaintiff's account was still unpaid. It is alleged that the vessel was under arrest, and that some other action when this action was brought. The writ is in rem, and is endorsed 2211. 16s. 2d., and the claim is for the contribution of the defendant and his suit in such manner as the court may direct, with costs.

The question is whether a person supplying materials for the equipment of a ship is entitled to payment out of the res, when that has been paid for by a purchaser who has knowledge that the material man's claim is unpaid, but who purchases without any arrest of the ship. If this question be answered in the affirmative, it must be upon the ground that a tradesman has a lien which travels with the res after it has become the property of others. Now it was admitted that The Two Ellens (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 208), was decisive of this, there being no maritime lien. There is no question of an ordinary possessory lien. It is said there is an equitable lien, and certain authorities were cited in support of this position. In my judgment they do not support it. It will be difficult to see what principle of law can render the purchaser—who, it must be assumed, had paid the full value of the repaired ship for the debt of the vendee to the material man, with whom the vendee had no claim. I do not think that the fact of a ien which is neither maritime nor ource for the demurrer with costs.

 or the plaintiffs, Nelson, Son, and the defendant, H. C. Coots.

May 5, 15, and 29, 1877.

THE HORLOCK.

Fraud — Demurrer — Merchant Ship-54, sect. 43 — Merchant Shipping Act — Injunction to restrain dealing in hips pendente lite — Supreme Court e Act 1873, sect. 25 — Supreme Court e Act 1875, schedule 1, Order LII.,

wner of shares in a ship cannot enle to those shares against a regis-who has purchased them bonâ fide om a person whose name was on the owner, even though such person had red through fraud on the original of defence alleging fraudulent regis-he plaintiff's predecessor in title was

 , and the demurrer sustained, on the a fraudulent registration on the intermediate transferee is no defence for possession by a bonâ fide pur-alue, without notice of the fraud.
 granted ex parte, on application of to prevent defendant dealing, and to registrar of shipping from registering s, in shares of a ship the subject of hip action pendente lite.

emurrer by the plaintiff to the de-ement of defence, in an action of

The plaintiff, in his statement of as follows :

! sale duly registered on the 11th June dent, John Horlock, who was the sole ove-named ship Horlock transferred to orraker, of Malden, in the county of o 64th parts or shares of the ship for the quent bill of sale duly registered on the the said Thomas Worraker transferred two 64th shares of the ship to George intiff, for the sum of 175*l*.

ceeding to allege that the defendant ntire management of the ship, and red proper accounts, claimed :
 ourt may direct the sale of the said ship ccount may be taken of the earnings of nd that the defendant may be condemned hich shall be found due to the plaintiff of, and in the costs of this suit.

 her and other relief as the nature of the e.

tement of claim the defendant de-ce pleading, inter alia :

lant further says that he never, at any y bill of sale transferring any shares e said ship Horlock to the said Thomas further says that if any such bill of sale as alleged, on June 11, 1867, in the said h (which the defendant denies), the same registered fraudulently, and without the sent, or authority of the defendant.
 ant does not admit the allegations con-rd paragraph of the statement of claim, t the said Thomas Worraker transferred he said ship to the plaintiff, as alleged (which the defendant does not admit), he did so wrongfully and unlawfully, and that he had not any possession of, or right to, or in respect of or concerning the said shares :

and proceeded to traverse the remainder of the statement of claim. On this defence the plaintiff joined issue simply.

May 5, 1877.—The cause came on for hearing.

On the bills of sale and a copy of the register being offered as evidence of the plaintiff's title, and proof being required of the signatures to them, and the circumstances under which they were given,

G. Bruce (with him Poyser), for the plaintiff, objected that sect. 43 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), made the register the only evidence of title necessary, and that it was not competent to the court to go behind the register to inquire into the circumstances under which an intermediate transferee got on the register. Even on the supposition that a previous transferee got on the register fraudulently, it is not alleged that the plaintiff had notice of the fraud, and he is a bonâ fide purchaser for value, and being registered owner, has a good title against all the world.

Hall (with him Willis, Q. C. and F. W. Raites) for the defendant.—The statement of defence alleges fraud explicitly, and the plaintiff has merely joined issue on the charge of fraud, and that is the issue now to be tried. Sect. 43 of the Merchant Shipping Act refers only to the right of a "registered owner" to dispose absolutely of the shares in a ship; but we allege that the intermediate transferee of these shares, though registered, was never a bonâ fide owner of the shares, and could not therefore give a title under that section.

G. Bruce in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The question turns upon the construction of sect. 43 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1874 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), which has been referred to. I shall not decide this case upon the present pleadings, but it must be argued on demurrer to the statement of defence, so that the court may have the question fully discussed.
 I direct the question to be argued on demurrer, and adjourn the cross-examination of the witness.
 I make no order as to costs.

On the application of the defendants both the bills of sale were ordered to be kept in the custody of the court.

The plaintiff entered a demurrer as follows :

The plaintiff demurs to so much of the defendant's statement of defence as alleges that the bill of sale registered on the 11th June 1867 was made and registered fraudulently and without the knowledge, consent, or authority of the defendant, and says that the same is bad in law on the ground that, as it is not alleged that the plaintiff was party to or had notice of the said matters alleged, the said matters alleged afford no defence to the action, and on the ground that the plaintiff having purchased from the registered owner the shares claimed for a valuable consideration, and without any notice of fraud, has a good and equitable title, and is entitled, notwithstanding the said matters alleged, to the relief sought for in this action, and on other grounds sufficient in law to sustain the demurrer.

It was admitted subsequently that the date assigned for the registration of the bill of sale was a mistake ; that the date there given was that on which the bill of sale was alleged to have been executed, and that it was not registered till some time afterwards.

ADM.]

THE HORLOCK.

[AM

May 15, 1877.—G. Bruce and Poyser in support of the demurrer.—The plaintiff claims through Worraker, who had been on the register of the ship as owner of 32-64ths for years. Supposing the court has power to look behind the register in case of the alleged fraud of a person claiming title by it, it is at all events not competent to the court to inquire into the title of a person from whom the plaintiff purchased bonâ fide and without notice of any fraud or irregularity. Sect. 43 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) is express and gives a good title to a purchaser from a registered owner who has power "absolutely to dispose" of any ship, or share of a ship, of which he is a registered owner. Sect. 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63) makes no difference in this respect; it allows equities to be taken into consideration by the court in examining the titles of a registered owner, but the claim here is one which a court of equity would not have sanctioned. Primâ facie the register gives a good legal title, and a bonâ fide purchaser is not bound to make further inquiries when he sees that the vendor is registered owner. Fraud on the part of a person so registered does not make the transaction of registration void, but only voidable against him, and does not affect the position of a bonâ fide purchaser from him: (White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919; 15 Jur. 630; 20 L. J., 166 C. P.) Where a person has acquired a legal title through a transaction which is only voidable, a court of equity will not interfere to avoid the contract when to do so would injure a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, that is, if there has been some consideration, in itself legal, moving from him: (Scholefield v. Templer, 4 De G. & J. 429; Heath v. Crealock, L. Rep. 10. Ch. App. 22; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650.) It is quite true that a title defective in itself cannot be strengthened by any fraudulent proceeding on the part of the vendee; but here the title is in itself good, and there is no allegation of fraud or a knowledge of any defect in it on the part of the plaintiff: (Pilcher v. Rawlings, L. Rep. 7 Ch. App. 259, 269, 274; 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 721.) Supposing the sale from Worraker to the plaintiff to have been in itself invalid, that is, if the purchaser had been a party to any fraud, the mere fact of his registering himself as owner would not make the sale a valid one, nor give a good title to the ship: (Orr v. Dickenson (28 L. J. 516, Ch.; 5 Jur. N. S. 672), but that is not the case here. In The Empress (Swa. 160) Dr. Lushington set aside the sale of a ship to a bonâ fide purchaser, but then there was forgery on the part of the vendor, who, as a matter of fact, was never on the register at all. Another person of the same name was, and the vendor personated him, but was not in truth ever the registered owner of the ship, and so was not able to give an absolute title. The cases are all consistent with the result that when a person has acquired a legal title, the court will not interfere. In no single case has the court in examining the title to ships looked further than the names actually on the register, and the bona fides of the manner in which they came to be registered.

Willis, Q.C. and F. W. Raikes (with them C. Hall), for the defendant, in opposition to the demurrer.—The defence of fraud on the part of an intermediate transferee, is a perfectly good one. Cases which have been cited previous to the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, are no authority. The tendency of the navigation laws and registration previous to 1854, were to restrict or protect commerce in British ships; and as incident to that end, the dealings in British ships for that purpose the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 32, and which the earlier cases were decided under; since the passing of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, a different principle has governed the transactions. The Registration Acts were repealed by the Merchant Shipping Repeal Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 120), and the question solely turns on the proper construction of the Merchant Shipping Acts at present in force. The effect of sect. 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 is to modify and explain the provisions of sect. 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. The judgment delivered by Pollock, C.B., in Staples Hayman (12 W. R. 317), expressly lays down the principle, and disposes of the cases cited in authorities by the plaintiff antecedent to 1854. Before the amending Act of 1862, there was a doubt as to the power of the court to look behind the register, but that Act was passed expressly to set at rest that doubt. It preserved the form of the register given by the Act of 1854, but enacts that notwithstanding no notice shall appear on the register of trusts, yet that the court shall take cognizance of all equities arising. Can the courts take cognizance of equities which do not appear on the face of the register, and by going behind it? The case of The Empress (Swa. 160) was decided by Dr. Lushington under the Act of 1854, and is a case directly in point. It cannot be distinguished on the ground urged by the plaintiff, that it was an absolute fraud; it was a fraud of the grossest description, but it was one of which the purchaser was absolutely ignorant, and yet he was declared to have acquired no title by registration after a bonâ fide purchase from a person whose name appeared on the register, and was disposed of in favour of the father of the person from whom he had innocently purchased. [Sir ROBERT FOLLETT referred to Follett v. Delany (2 De G. & J. 235.)] That case was decided in 1848, under the repealed statutes. The fact that the plaintiff was no party to the fraud, assuming it to be true, does not confer a good title on him; he made proper inquiries he might have ascertained the circumstances under which his predecessor's title was on the register, the length of time which the alleged first bill of sale remained unregistered was in itself so suspicious a circumstance as to put him on his guard. The case referred to:

Donaldson v. Gillet, L. Rep. 3 Eq. 374;
Eyre v. Burmaster, 10 H. of L. Cas. 90; 13 L. J. 1019; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 107;
White and Tudor, L. G. vol. 2, 6th ed.

In addition to the cases cited above the following were referred to in the course of the argument:

The Margaret Mitchell, Swa. 383;
Holderness v. Rankin, 28 Beav. 180;
Holderness v. Lamport, 29 Beav. 160, 30 L. J. 163;
The Innisfallen, L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 73;
653; 35 L. J. 110, Ad.;
The Rose, 1 Asp. Mar. Law. Cas. 289;
A. & E. 6; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 221;
The Spirit of the Ocean, 34 L. J. 74;
Rep. N. S. 239; 2 Mar. Law. Cas. 289;
Hooper v. Gumme, L. Rep. 2 Ch. App. 107; 2 Mar. Law. Cas. O. 1

ADM.]

THE HORLOCK.

[ADM.]

Bell v. Blythe, L. Rep. 4 Ch. Ap. 136; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 662; 3 Mar. Law. Cas. O. S. 182.
Ward v. Beck, 13 C. B., N. S., 668.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—This is a case on demurrer, and it is necessary to make a short statement of the facts which were before the court on the former occasion.

It appears from the statement of claim that the Horlock was a sailing ship, trading between London and Ipswich; and by a bill of sale, duly registered on the 11th June, 1867, the defendant, John Horlock, who was then sole owner of the Horlock, transferred to Thomas Worraker 32-64th shares of the ship for the sum of 320*l*. It appears by the plaintiff's statement that by a subsequent bill of sale Thomas Worraker transferred his 32-64th shares in the Horlock to George Wright, the plaintiff, for the sum of 175*l*. Now the defendant states, amongst other things conveying a general denial of the allegation of the plaintiff, that he never at any time signed any bill of sale, transferring any shares whatever in the ship Horlock; that he never sold any shares to Thomas Worraker; and, if any such bill of sale was registered, or authorised to be registered, it was fraudulently so registered, and without his knowledge, consent, or authority. Some evidence was taken before the court on the former occasion, when these averments underwent discussion, and the court suggested that the more expedient course would be to raise the question of law which appeared to result from the evidence on demurrer; and that suggestion being adopted by the counsel on both sides, a demurrer has been put upon the file of the court, and the question which I have now to decide is whether it be valid, or whether it should be rejected.

The demurrer is "to so much of the defendant's statement of defence as alleges that the bill of sale registered on the 11th June 1867, was made and registered fraudulently, and without the knowledge, consent, or authority of the defendant," and says that the same is bad in law, on the ground that as it is not alleged that the plaintiff was party to or had knowledge or notice of the said matters alleged, the said matters alleged afford no defence to the motion on the ground that the plaintiff having purchased from the registered owner the shares claimed for a valuable consideration, and without any notice of fraud, has a good, legal, and equitable title, and is entitled, notwithstanding the said matters alleged to the relief sought for in his action, and on other grounds, sufficient in law to sustain the demurrer." It is to be assumed, therefore, for the purpose of discussing the validity of this demurrer, that the bill of sale was fraudulently entered without the knowledge of the defendant, and the question arises whether the plaintiff, who is to be assumed also to have purchased from the registered owner certain shares for a valuable consideration, and without notice of fraud, has a good legal and equitable title?

Now the section, the construction of which governs this case, is sect. 43 of the first Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), which was passed in 1854. The words of that section are: "No notice of any trust, expressed, implied, or constructive, shall be entered in the register book, nor receivable by the registrar; and, subject to any rights and powers appearing by the register book to be vested in any other party, the registered owner of any ship, or share therein, shall have power absolutely to dispose, in manner herein mentioned, of such ship or share, and to give effectual receipts for any money paid or advanced by way of consideration."

Now, a great number of cases which the ingenuity and industry of counsel have furnished to the court have been cited, bearing upon the general question of fraud in analogous cases, but I hope it will not be considered any disrespect to the learning and industry of the counsel, to whom I am greatly indebted for their research, if I decline to enter into a consideration of those cases, because the material point in the case must turn upon the plain meaning of the section of the Act of Parliament to which I have referred; and in spite of all that has been said on the more colourable part of it, there is not much difficulty in its construction. I know of no case which has been cited to me to the contrary; at all events I am satisfied that the predominance of authority in the cases cited before me would sustain this proposition, that the person purchasing from an owner of registered property, for a valuable consideration, without any notice of fraud, and combining, therefore, a legal and equitable title, could not be divested by any court of that title on the ground of fraud to which he was no party, but between the person who appeared on the register as owner and another person. I should observe that the bill of sale is here upon the register.

Now, the law appears to be concisely laid down in the case of Heath v. Crealock (L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 22) in 1874, by the Appellate Court. The passage to which I am about to refer is what was said by James, L.J., upon the general question. He says: "with regard to the purchasers, it appears to me that there are two cardinal principles and rules of this court involved both on one side and the other. The first I take to be this—which in my opinion is a rule without an exception—that from a purchaser for value without notice this court takes away nothing which that purchaser has honestly acquired." That term in the judgment appears to govern this case. Here is a purchaser for value, without notice, honestly acquiring some interest in these shares. His Lordship goes on to say, "If the purchaser has got possession of a piece of parchment, or of property, or of anything else which he thought he was getting honestly, this court, in my opinion, has no right to interfere with him, and it would be, in my judgment, interfering with him if, by a form of decree directing a sale instead of a foreclosure or anything of that kind, it merely did indirectly that which it could not do directly, deprive him of possession of land or deeds in favour of the plaintiff." I do not know what words can more exactly apply to the present case, and I assume that to be a correct enunciation of the law; and if that be, generally speaking, a correct statement of the law, it is, if I may say so, à fortiori applicable to a case arising under the 43rd section of the Act in question, because the object of the Act, as it appears to me, was to give evidence of title by the name appearing upon the register.

It is not necessary that I should say that in no case would the court inquire into whether a bill of sale, as is alleged in this case, transferring shares had been registered in fraud. It is not necessary that I should decide that question; but the question which I have to decide, and which I desire to be understood alone to decide, is that, assuming the purchaser in this case buying without notice of fraud, for a valuable consideration under this bill of sale, has become possessed of these shares, and also—which is a point that should not be omitted, but which I mentioned early in the course of the discussion—has put his name upon the register, in such case it is not competent to the court (and I use the phrase ordinarily used in this discussion) to look behind the register for the purpose of dispossessing an innocent purchaser, whose name is on the register. He combines, in my judgment, both a legal and equitable title which it is not competent for this court to dispossess him of.

CT. OF APP.]

Re THE RIO GRANDE DO SUL STEAMSHIP COMPANY (LIMITED).

[Ct.]

I must, therefore, sustain the demurrer. The costs of the demurrer will be costs in the cause. Time allowed for appeal ten days.

May 29. — Poyser, for the plaintiff, moved ex parte. under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 25 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66) and the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), sch. 1, Order LII., rule 4, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from dealing with the shares in the ship pending the trial of the action, and also to restrain the Registrar of Shipping of the port of London from entering any transfers or making any alterations in the register of the said ship, pointing out in support of his application that a bond fide purchaser of the shares of the defendant in the ship would on getting registered as owner have a good title, and possibly create prejudice to the plaintiff's right to enforce his claim, should he be held on the trial of the cause to be entitled to it. The plaintiff wished to sell the ship, so as to recover his claim from the proceeds; but he might not, even if the sale of the ship was ordered, be able to recover from the proceeds, should the ship or shares in her have been in the meantime transferred to a third party.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—I grant the application, the injunction to last for three months, subject, as the motion is ex parte and without notice, to any application that may be made by the defendant.

Solicitor for plaintiff, F. B. Jennings.

Solicitor for defendant, J. T. Moss.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by H. PRAT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, Feb. 2, 1877.

(Before JAMES, L.J., and BRETT and AMPHLETT, JJ.A.)

Re THE RIO GRANDE DO SUL STEAMSHIP COMPANY (LIMITED).

Company—Winding-up—Maritime lien—Disbursements by master of ship—Ship owned by company in winding-up—Mortgagee in possession of ship—Leave to proceed in Court of Admiralty—Costs.

The master of a ship which belonged to a company, requiring certain necessaries for the ship's use, drew a bill of exchange upon the company in favour of the material men, and gave the same to them in payment for such necessaries. It was accepted by the company, but was dishonoured at maturity, and was paid by the master. An action had been commenced against the holder of the bill.

The company was subsequently ordered to pay up, and possession was taken of the mortgaged ship.

An order was made in chambers on the 8th of the master giving him leave to proceed in the Court of Admiralty to enforce his mortgage, but that order was varied at the instance of the liquidator, and the Vice-Chancellor of the Court of Admiralty should pay 150*l.* into answer the master's claim, the master was not to proceed in the Court of Admiralty without prejudice to any application by him to increase that amount, if it should be found due.

Held, that as the court had no jurisdiction in winding-up over the mortgagees of the ship, an order made in chambers giving the master leave to proceed in the Court of Admiralty was right.

Re THE AUSTRALIAN DIRECT STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (L. Rep. 20 Eq. 325), distinguished.

Held, also, that the master was entitled, not to be repaid the amount paid by him on the exchange with interest, but also to be paid costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the winding-up, and that the fund in court be increased to an amount sufficient to cover costs, charges, and expenses; but that he was not entitled to the costs of consulting his solicitor, whether he had any defence to the action brought against him on the bill of exchange.

Order of Bacon, V.C. varied.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor.

The facts of the case were as follow:

The Rio Grande do Sul Steamship Company (Limited) were the owners of the British ship Conde d'Eu, of which Captain B. B. Turner was the master, and which was mortgaged to Messrs. W. Hamilton and Co., of Glasgow, to secure 8000*l.*, and also a current account.

In July 1875, the ship being on a voyage to South America to London, touched at the port of Santa Cruz, in the Island of Teneriffe, and the master requiring coals and other necessaries for the ship's service, obtained them from Messrs. Bruce, Hamilton, and Co. of that port, at a cost of 126*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, and, in order to pay for them, drew a bill of exchange for that sum upon the company in favour of Messrs. Bruce, Hamilton, and Co., and delivered it to them.

This bill of exchange was endorsed by Messrs. Bruce, Hamilton, and Co. to the order of the company, and on the 4th Aug. 1875, was cashed by the company.

The bill fell due on the 6th Sept. 1875, and was presented for payment, but was dishonoured by the company.

On the 8th Sept. George Bruce applied to the Court of Admiralty for an order compelling the company to pay the bill. He at first refused to pay, but thereupon commenced an action against the company on the 17th Sept. however, he paid Bruce for the amount of the bill, with interest, having consulted his solicitor in the matter, and been advised that he had no defence to the action.

On the 16th Sept. the mortgage

[CT. OF APP.]

Re THE RIO GRANDE DO SUL STEAMSHIP COMPANY (LIMITED).

[CT. OF APP.]

on of the ship, and their solicitor wrote to Captain Turner, informing him of that fact, and stating that he might consider himself from that time in their employment as master of the ship, and from that time he received his pay as master on the mortgagees.

His solicitors afterwards applied to the mortgagees for repayment of the 129*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, and not receiving the amount, they threatened to take immediate proceedings in the Court of Admiralty to arrest the ship.

On the 21st Sept. an order was made by Bacon, C., for the winding-up of the company.

On the 23rd Sept. the solicitor of the mortgagees wrote to Captain Turner's solicitor, and called his attention to the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Re The Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company (L. Rep. 20 Eq. 325), as an authority that the proper course for Capt. Turner to adopt was to proceed in the winding-up, and not in the Court of Admiralty.

Accordingly, on the 28th Sept., Capt. Turner took out a summons in the winding-up, asking for the 126*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, and the amount of his costs of and incidental to the action, and of and incidental to the summons, might be forthwith paid in full out of the company's assets, or a sufficient security given by the liquidator for payment in full, or that the ship might be sold and the amount of his disbursements and costs paid to him out of the proceeds of sale, or that he might have liberty to proceed in the Court of Admiralty to arrest the ship, and, so far as might be necessary, against the company, and the liquidator and mortgagees, or to take and pursue such other remedies in the Admiralty Court as he was entitled to.

On the 1st Oct. an order was made in chambers by the Chief Clerk that Capt. Turner should be at liberty to institute a suit in the Court of Admiralty against the ship, and so far as might be necessary, against the company and the liquidator, to recover the 126*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, and his costs of and incidental to the action and the summons, and of and incidental to the suit in the Court of Admiralty.

On the 5th Oct., on a motion made in the winding-up by the provisional liquidator to vary the order, Bacon, V.C., made an order that Capt. Turner undertaking not to institute a suit in the Court of Admiralty, the provisional liquidator or the official liquidator for the time being should, out of the first moneys that should come to hand, pay the sum of 150*l.* into court to the credit of a separate account to answer Capt. Turner's claim, but that this payment should be without prejudice to any application Capt. Turner might make to increase the amount in case it should be insufficient to satisfy his claim. In compliance with this order the 150*l.* was paid into court.

On the 4th Aug. 1876, Capt. Turner took out a summons in the winding-up to increase the 150*l.* to a sum sufficient to meet the taxed costs incurred by him in defending the action against him on the bill of exchange, and the costs of and incidental to the summons of the 28th Sept. 1875, and the proceedings subsequent thereto, and of and incidental to the motion of the 5th Oct. 1875.

This summons was adjourned into court, and came on for hearing on the 28th Nov. 1876, when Bacon, V.C., refused to allow Capt. Turner any costs of defending the action or of the summonses and other proceedings in the winding-up, but ordered that out of the 150*l.* standing in court, the sum of 123*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum to the 31st Dec. 1876, should be paid to him, and that the residue of the 150*l.* should be paid to the official liquidator.

From that part of the order which refused to give him any costs, Capt. Turner appealed.

Fischer Q.C. and Stirling, for the appellant.—The case of Re The Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company (L. Rep. 20 Eq. 325), upon which the Vice-Chancellor founded his decision, is in many respects distinguishable from the present case. Here the appellant had a valid lien before the commencement of the winding-up, and he obtained the leave of the court to institute a suit in the Court of Admiralty, while in that case the master of the ship proceeded without the leave of the court, and there were no mortgagees, but all the parties were before the court in the winding-up. The appellant was justified in taking the proceedings which he did in the winding-up, and therefore he is entitled to the costs of all those proceedings. He is also entitled to his costs of defending the action on the bill of exchange, and also the cost of consulting his solicitor whether he could successfully defend that action: (Smith v. Howell, 6 Ex. 730-6.) It is well settled that a master of a ship is entitled to a lien on the ship for his disbursements for necessities supplied to the ship, and that his lien is paramount to everything but the lien of the seamen for their wages:

The Mary Anne, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 884; L. Rep. 1 Ad. & E. 13; 2 Mar. Law. Cas. O. S. 294;
The Bold Buccleugh, 7 Moore P. C. 267;
The Feronia, L. Rep. 2 Ad. & E. 65; 3 Mar. Law. Cas. O. S. 54.

It may be objected that this is a mere appeal for costs, but it involves a question of principle:

Cottrell v. Stratton, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218; L. Rep. 8 Ch. 295.

They also referred to Addison on Contracts, 1085.

Kay, Q.C. and Speed, for the respondent.—Except as regards the costs of the action on the bill of exchange, this is a mere appeal for costs in a matter which was within the discretion of the Vice-Chancellor. As to the action, the appellant, as drawer of the bill, was clearly liable, and was not justified in incurring any costs. And the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Re The Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company is a direct authority that costs should not be given to the appellant.

No reply was called for.

JAMES, L.J.—Though it has been argued that this is merely an appeal for costs, it really involves an important question of law and principle.

The appellant drew a bill of exchange upon the company for expenses which, it was not disputed, were properly incurred by him on behalf of the ship. Beyond all question he had a lien on the ship for the amount of those expenses, and his lien was paramount to the claim of the mortgagees. The bill was dishonoured at maturity, and the appellant paid it, as he was bound to do. Thereupon he was minded to take proceedings against the ship in the Court of Admiralty, as he lawfully might do as against both the mortgagees and the company, who were the owners of the equity of redemption. In this state of things

[Ct. of App.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[Ct. of App.]

he received a letter from the solicitors of the mortgagees, directing his attention to the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Re The Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company (L. Rep. 20 Eq. 325), where it was held that the proper mode of enforcing a maritime lien on a vessel belonging to a company which has been ordered to be wound-up, is by a proceeding in the winding-up, and not by a proceeding in rem in the Admiralty Court. The appellant acted upon the information thus given to him, and, in accordance with that decision, he took out a summons in the winding-up, varied as the circumstances of the case required, because the mortgagees were not parties to the proceedings in the winding-up. The court had no jurisdiction in the winding-up to summon the mortgagees before it, or to decide any question as between the appellant and them. Therefore he took out a summons, asking for an alternative order, either that his claim and costs might be paid or secured in the winding-up, or that he might be at liberty to institute proceedings in the Court of Admiralty. An order was accordingly made in chambers, on the 1st Oct., giving him leave to institute proceedings in the Court of Admiralty, and I feel bound to say that, in my opinion, notwithstanding everything that has been said to the contrary, that order was precisely the right order to make, unless the liquidator had then been able and willing to give the appellant sufficient security for the satisfaction of his claim, and his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred as an incumbrancer of the ship. It appears to me that that order was a right order, and that the appellant's costs of obtaining that order were costs properly incurred by him as an incumbrancer. Afterwards the liquidator took out a summons to have that order discharged, but the order has never been in fact discharged, and there has been no adjudication that it was not a right order. With all deference to the opinion of the learned Vice-Chancellor, it seems to me that the order of the 5th Oct. could only have been made with the consent of the parties, and that the effect of it was only to provide that the appellant's claim should be secured in another way. The Vice-Chancellor thereby ordered that 150*l.* should be brought into court by the liquidator to answer the appellant's claim, and the order was expressly made without prejudice to any application by him to increase the amount. So far from the Vice-Chancellor's order of the 5th Oct. being a judicial decision that the order made in chambers on the 1st Oct. was incorrect, it proceeded on the footing that it was correct, for the proceedings under it were stayed only upon the terms of the liquidator giving the appellant all that which he would have got in the Court of Admiralty. In that court his lien on the ship would have been held to include all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in enforcing it. It seems to me that the object of the order of the 5th Oct. was to bring into court a sufficient sum as a security for that which he would have been entitled to as against the ship.

The appellant is, therefore, entitled to be repaid the money paid by him on the bill of exchange, and to be paid his costs in the winding-up proceedings, that is to say, his costs beginning with the order made in chambers on the first summons, and his costs of all subsequent proceedings, down to and including his costs of the present appeal.

As to the costs of the action against him on the bill of exchange, the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that he could not be entitled to the cost of ascertaining whether he could succeed in defending the action. The utmost he can have properly expended in that way would be 6*s.* 6*d.* asking his solicitor whether he had any defence. There will, therefore, be no order with respect to the costs of that action, but the Vice-Chancellor's order must be varied by giving the appellant costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the proceedings in the winding-up, and if necessary the amount paid into court must be increased.

BRETT, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

The only reasonable costs of defending the action on the bill of exchange would have been 6*s.* 6*d.* asking a question which any solicitor's clerk have answered at once. As for the costs in the winding-up proceedings, when the master of the ship had paid the bill of exchange he was in the same position as if he had actually paid the necessary disbursement for which the bill was given. The fact that here the mortgagees' possession makes an important difference, is sufficient to distinguish this case from the case before the Master of the Rolls: (Re the Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company, L. Rep. 20 Eq. 325.) That decision would seem to show that in a case like this it would be necessary to obtain leave of the Court of Chancery to institute proceedings in the Court of Admiralty. Then, as the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction in the winding-up over the mortgagees, the master of the ship could not obtain all that he was entitled to unless he proceeded in the Court of Admiralty. He was, therefore, as a matter of law, entitled to have leave to proceed in that court. As a favour to the liquidator, the order giving him that leave was afterwards altered by the order of the 5th Oct., which, in my opinion, was practically a correct order, though in form it was not so.

The appellant is, therefore, entitled to be repaid not only what he has paid on the bill of exchange, but also his costs, charges, and expenses in the mortgagee in the usual way.

AMPHLETT, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

Order of Bacon, V.C., accordingly varied.

Solicitors for the appellant, Barnes and Bonser.

Solicitors for the respondent, Nicol, Smith, & Jones.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, F. W. BAKER, and L. HUTCHINS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Feb. 5 and 6, 1877.

(Before MELLISH, L.J. and BAGGALLAY, J., BRAMWELL, J.J.A.)

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.
Mortgage of ship—Rights of mortgagee.
The mortgages of a ship is only entitled to freight as is accruing due by a contract when he takes possession.

M. mortgaged his ship to plaintiffs. M. then bought a cargo in California on account of bills of lading to P.'s order were drawn at nominal freight of 1*s.* per ton. M. on voyage defendants, without notice of the mortgage, which was not registered, lent money to M. on the security of the cargo and M. sold the cargo to

[CT. OF APP.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[CT. OF APP.]

containing the following clause, "As cargo is coming on ship's account freight is to be computed at 55s. per ton, and invoice to be rendered accordingly." Defendants made further advances to M., who paid for the cargo, received the bills of lading, and handed them to defendants with an assignment indorsed of M.'s interest in "the within freight," expressed to be "at the rate of 55s. per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1s. per ton." Plaintiffs registered their mortgage. The ship arrived, and plaintiffs took possession and claimed 55s. per ton freight. Defendants by arrangement acquired J.'s rights.

held (reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that the 55s. per ton was not really freight, but part of the price of the cargo, that there was no freight beyond 1s. per ton accruing when plaintiffs took possession, and therefore plaintiffs were not entitled to freight beyond 1s. per ton.

APPEAL from the judgment of the Common Pleas Division in favour of the plaintiffs on the following special case:

1. The plaintiffs are merchants carrying on business under the style or firm of James Wyllie and Co., in London. The defendants are corn-stores and brokers carrying on business under the style or firm of Burrows and Perks, in London. The action is brought by the plaintiffs who claim as mortgagees in possession of the ship Stonehouse to recover moneys alleged to have become due and payable in respect of freight from the defendants under the circumstances hereinafter appearing.

2. Mr. John Morison, of Billiter-street, trading under the style or firm of John Morison and Co., during the period covered by this case, the registered owner of sixty sixty-fourths of the Stonehouse, Mr. Bley, the captain, being the registered owner of the remaining four sixty-fourths.

3. On the 1st Dec. 1874, Morison executed a mortgage of his sixty sixty-fourths of the ship in favour of the plaintiffs to secure 7500*l.* and interest in account current, and any further sum which might become due.

4. The Stonehouse was at this time at San Francisco seeking employment, and the freight market being disorganised owing to a recent commercial failure, her captain, Bley, determined, rather than accept the low offers of freight which were being made in the thick of the crisis, to load cargo of wheat "on account of the ship" hoping its sale in England to realise a better margin than what was available as freight at the port of loading.

5. Accordingly a cargo of 23,644 sacks of wheat among the cargo in respect of which the present claim arises) was obtained through Messrs. Parrott and Co., merchants at San Francisco, and shipped on board the Stonehouse. The invoice, dated the 1st Dec. 1874, stated that the wheat was shipped Parrott and Co. on board the Stonehouse bound Falmouth or Downs for orders, consigned to Parrott and Co. that is to the order of Parrott and Co. (they, however, keeping control over the cargo until the day found by them for the purchase thereof could be paid) by order of John Morison and Co. account and risk of whom it might concern.

6. Bills of lading were made out for the wheat deliverable to the order of and were handed to Parrott and Co., stating the freight payable on delivery to be 1s. per ton. Parrott and Co. simultaneously drew bills of exchange on Morison at sixty days' sight against the wheat, to recoup themselves for the price of the wheat and their commission, and sold the bills of exchange with three bills of lading indorsed by Parrott and Co., attached thereto to the Bank of British North America.

7. It is a common practice in many places for foreign shippers, when a cargo is to be shipped "for the account of the ship," to draw bills of lading for a nominal instead of a blank freight, there being an opinion among merchants that a blank freight is not a desirable thing.

8. On or about the 3rd Dec. 1874, the Stonehouse sailed from San Francisco. The rate of freight general at this date at San Francisco was only 55s. per ton; but the plaintiffs were informed by Morison that they would receive 5000*l.* to 6000*l.* for the freight of the Stonehouse. The defendants, however, did not know that Morison had given the plaintiffs any information on the subject or that they had any interest in the ship.

9. On the 21st Dec. 1874, Morison accepted the bills of exchange payable at the London and County Bank on the 22nd Feb. 1875.

10. On the 1st Jan. 1875, Morison effected two policies of insurance in respect of the Stonehouse on freight valued at 4000*l.* and 1000*l.* respectively.

11. The sum necessary to meet the bills of exchange at maturity was 10,864*l.* 19s. 4d.; and at some time in December or the beginning of January it had been arranged between Morison and the defendants, that the defendants should advance to Morison the money necessary for the purpose, that the defendants in turn should be at liberty to sell the cargo, and receive the proceeds of sale on Morison's account, and that the bills of lading and policies of insurance should be deposited with the defendants as security for their advances.

12. Before making and carrying out this arrangement with Morison, the defendants searched the ship's register at the Custom House, and found that sixty sixty-fourths were registered in Morison's name, and that there was no incumbrance whatever on the register. The defendants had no notice in any way that Morison had mortgaged his shares in the Stonehouse.

13. On the 4th Jan. 1875, the defendants advanced to Morison 3000*l.*, and shortly afterwards, in pursuance of the arrangements then made, received from him the former of the two policies, being the policy on freight valued at 4000*l.*

14. On the 2nd Feb. 1875, Morison executed another mortgage in similar terms of his interest in the ship to the plaintiffs to secure 4000*l.* and further advances. Morison, subsequently on the 2nd March 1875, further mortgaged his interest in the Stonehouse to Joseph Harrold, who registered his mortgage on the 3rd March 1875, and thus became the first mortgagee, the plaintiffs not having registered their mortgages until the 6th March 1875, as hereinafter mentioned.

15. On or about the 16th Feb. 1875, the defendants offered the cargo of wheat for sale to divers persons on cost freight and insurance terms, but did not succeed in obtaining a purchaser until on the 19th Feb., they effected a sale of the cargo on the terms hereinafter appearing.

16. On the 19th Feb. 1875, the defendants, on behalf of Morison and on their own account to the extent of their advances, sold the cargo to Henry Jump and Sons, of Liverpool. The following is a copy of the contract signed by Harris Brothers and Co., brokers, on behalf of the buyers :

CT. OF APP.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[CT. OF AP.]

London, 19th Feb. 1875.

Bought of Messrs. John Morison and Co., through Messrs. Burrows and Perks, for Messrs. Henry Jump and Sons, Liverpool, a cargo of Californian wheat of fair average quality, of the season's shipment when shipped.

Shipped per Stonehouse, first class, from San Francisco, bill of lading dated about 2nd Dec. 1874, say 23,644 bags, containing 3,089,775lb., at the price of 43s. 6d. per qr. of 500lb. shipped; bags weighed and paid for as wheat, including freight and insurance to any safe port in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, calling at Falmouth or the Downs for orders. Vessel to discharge afloat. No charge for dunnage or bags. Payment cash in London within seven days, less discount for unexpired portion of two months from this date at 5 per cent. per annum in exchange for bill of lading and policies of insurance (free of war risk) effected with approved underwriter's, but for whose solvency sellers are not responsible. Damage by sea water or otherwise. (if any) to be taken as sound.

Invoice quantity is to be final; sellers to pay our brokerage of  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., contract cancelled or not cancelled. Any average incurred before this date to be for account of and settled by sellers; sellers to give policies of insurance for 2 per cent. over the invoice, amount including the  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., and any amount over this to be for sellers' account; three days for waiting orders at port of call; to discharge according to the custom of the port. Should any dispute arise, it is agreed by buyer and seller to leave the same to be settled by two London cornfactors respectively chosen, with power to call in an umpire, whose decision is to be final.

As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55s. per ton of 2240lb., and invoice to be rendered accordingly.

HARRIS BROTHERS AND CO., Brokers.

17. The defendant would have had a difficulty in disposing of the cargo without allowing an amount equivalent to freight to remain unpaid until the vessels' arrival, and would not have obtained so large a price for it.

18. In accordance with the above contract an invoice was subsequently made out by Morison, of which the following is a copy :

Invoice of cargo wheat per Stonehouse at San Francisco sold to Messrs. Henry Jump and Sons, Liverpool, as per contract of 19th Feb. 1875 :

23,644 sacks wheat, weighing 3,089,775lb. £ s. d.
= 6179 $\frac{1}{2}$ qrs., at 43s. 6d. per 500lb. ....	13,440 10 5
Freight on tons 1397 $\frac{1}{2}$ : 7 : 1 : 3, 55s. per 2240lb. ....	3,793 5 0
	9,647 5 5
Brokerage, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. ....	67 4 0
	9,580 1 5
Interest from 26th Feb. to 19th April, fifty-two days at 5 % .....	68 4 10
	£9,511 16 7

BURROWS AND PERKS.

London, 22nd Feb. 1875.

19. On the 22nd Feb. 1875 Morison obtained a further advance from the defendants of 9000*l.*, making, with the sum of 3000*l.* previously advanced, the sum of 12,000*l.* With such advance he paid the said bills of exchange at maturity, and received the bills of exchange and the bills of lading thereto attached from the London and County Bank, as arranged with the defendants.

20. On the 23rd Feb. 1875, in pursuance of such last mentioned arrangement, Morison handed the bills of exchange, with the three bills of lading attached, to the defendants, and the last memorandum was endorsed on the bills of lading and signed by Morison :

We assign our interest in the within freight to Burrows and Perks, London, whose receipt, or their appointed agent, will be sufficient discharge freight assigned is at the rate of 55s. per ton, the nominal amount of 1s. per ton.

24th Feb. 1875.

J. MORISON

Such endorsement, although dated the Feb. 1875, was not really made and signed about the 26th Feb.

21. At the same time Morison handed defendants the aforesaid invoice, made out in pursuance of the contract with Messrs. H. Jump and Sons for transmission to the buyers, together a letter to the defendants themselves, dated 25th Feb. 1875, and enclosing the policies referred to, which letter was as follows :

21, Billiter-street, 25th Feb. 1875.

Messrs. Burrows and Perks.

Dear Sirs,—We further give you in security policy insurance on wheat 1500*l.* and on freights 1000*l.*, both the Stonehouse. Should this vessel be lost, we will give you the collection on them as well as our former policies.

J. MORISON AND CO.

Both of the above policies are in the Marine Insurance Company.

22. The invoice was duly forwarded by the defendants to H. Jump and Sons, who thereupon paid the balance thereon appearing of 9511*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.* in pursuance of their contract. The cargo was subsequently resold by Jump and Sons to Messrs. T. Smythe and Co., of Liverpool.

23. On the 6th of March, 1875, the plaintiffs duly registered their mortgages.

24. On the 13th of April, 1875, the Stonehouse arrived at Falmouth for orders. She was taken possession of by Mr. Harrold and the plaintiffs, as first and second mortgagees respectively. Mr. Harrold's debt being more than secured on the ship, he laid no claim to the freight. The Stonehouse proceeded in the possession of Harrold and the plaintiffs, to Liverpool, where she arrived on 19th April 1875, on which day Messrs. Lowless and Co., on behalf of the defendants, wrote a letter to the plaintiffs' attorneys, Messrs. Freshfields and Williams, as follows :

Dear Sirs,—We have a telegram that the Stonehouse is now off the port, and that the cargo is a falling one. Should there, therefore, be any delay in obtaining delivery, the purchasers may regret their bargain, and a loss of 1000*l.* might be sustained, in addition to the charges for landing and warehousing—will you, therefore, please let us have your determination instantly. We are obliged to you notice that our clients will seek to recover damages sustained from Messrs. Wyllie and Co., have given you special notice of the circumstances under which our clients may be entitled to recover, however, that there will be no necessity for any further action.

LOWLESS AND CO.

25. The plaintiffs refused to allow Messrs. T. Smythe and Co., to take delivery of the cargo except on payment of freight at 55s. per ton, and were prepared to protect themselves in the manner indicated in the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1862, but to avoid such expenses which would have been the result of the following agreement was made between the plaintiffs and the defendants, through their respective attorneys :

It is hereby agreed between Messrs.

APP.]

KRITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[Ct. of App.]

same, as representing Messrs. James Wyllie and Messrs. Lowless and Co., and representing Mr. Burrows and Perks, that 3500*l.*, being the net of freight on the cargo of the ship Stonehouse, sold by Messrs. James Wyllie and Co., as second mortgage in possession of the Stonehouse, shall be into the London and Westminster Bank, in the names of Messrs. Freshfields and Williams, and Mr. Lowless and Co., to abide the result of an action brought by Messrs. James Wyllie and Co., against Mr. Burrows and Perks, who hereby admit for the sums of the action, that they are the owners of the cargo under the bill of lading thereof, and liable to pay lower freight may be due thereon. The action to be commenced within thirty days from this date, and duly entered. In the event of no action being brought in the time aforesaid, or of Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. not obtaining a verdict in the said action, the sum so deposited with any interest thereon is to be paid Messrs. Burrows and Perks, or order; and in the event Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. recovering a verdict for said sum of 3500*l.*, or any part thereof, the amount such verdict is to be paid to them or order out of sum deposited, and the balance (if any) to Messrs. Burrows and Perks, or order. It is admitted, for the sake of the said action, that the amount of freight paid in the bill or bills of lading has been tendered Mr. James Wyllie and Co. to withdraw any stop they may have put upon the goods on the money deposited. Messrs. Burrows and Perks to have same right of recovering interest on the sum to be paid as if the money had been paid at the proper time to a wharfinger's hands under the provisions of Merchant Shipping Amendment Act.

On not obtaining a verdict in the said action, the sum so deposited with any interest thereon is to be paid Messrs. Burrows and Perks, or order; and in the event Messrs. James Wyllie and Co. recovering a verdict for said sum of 3500*l.*, or any part thereof, the amount such verdict is to be paid to them or order out of sum deposited, and the balance (if any) to Messrs. Burrows and Perks, or order. It is admitted, for the sake of the said action, that the amount of freight paid in the bill or bills of lading has been tendered Mr. James Wyllie and Co. to withdraw any stop they may have put upon the goods on the money deposited. Messrs. Burrows and Perks to have same right of recovering interest on the sum to be paid as if the money had been paid at the proper time to a wharfinger's hands under the provisions of Merchant Shipping Amendment Act.

FRESHFIELDS AND WILLIAMS,
LOWLESS AND CO.

and 19th April, 1878.

It was subsequently found that freight at per ton amounted to 3577*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, and upon execution of the agreement and the payment of 3577*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, as subsequently agreed, and of 3500*l.* into the London and Westminster Bank, the plaintiffs gave delivery of the cargo. The question for the opinion of the court (who had liberty to draw all inferences of fact) whether the plaintiffs were entitled to refuse to pay except on payment of freight at the rate of per ton, or whether any freight was due on said cargo beyond freight at the rate of 1*l.* per ton. If the opinion of the court on either should be in the affirmative, judgment was entered for the plaintiffs for 3577*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, costs; if in the negative, for the defendants.

Common Pleas Division (Brett, Archibald, Lindley, JJ.) gave judgment for the plaintiffs, the defendants appealed.

Judgment of the court below is reported p. 380.

E. Webster for the defendants (Theiger, with him).—There is no freight payable on the mortgagee can claim. He is not entitled to freight as shipowner until he takes possession. Suppose freight payable in advance, the mortgagee could then have no lien on the cargo. Brown v. Tanner (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 624; Rep. 3 Ch. 597) the mortgagee had taken possession of the ship before the freight became due. A document creating freight of which mortgagee can claim the benefit must be a freight note or shipping document, or kind of contract in respect of the carrying of goods:

Overton v. Exchange Bank v. Gladstone, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 288; 3 Mer. Law Cas. O. S., 59;
Edward v. Taylor, 1 B. & Ad. 712;
Thomas v. Tyrie, 33 L. J. 97, Q. B.; 34 L. J. 126, Q. B.; 4 B. & C. 608, and 6 B. & C. 298.

In the judgment of the court below the fact is not noticed that Morrison received the cargo, and dealt with it. [He was stopped by the court.]

Herschell, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.—As between mortgagor and mortgagee, upon the latter's taking possession, a contract to pay a reasonable freight arises. The law regards the enhanced value of the cargo as freight, because the ship, although carrying the owner's goods, is really earning freight by enhancing the value of the cargo. That value can be insured as freight: (Plant v. Fleming, 1 B. & Ad. 45.) Supposing that, in fact, during the voyage, the ownership of the goods becomes different from the ownership of the ship, why should not the freight follow the ordinary rule, and go with the ship. When the owner of the ship ceases to be the owner of the cargo, you must deal with the question of freight as if the ownership had all along been distinct.

E. E. Webster in reply.

MILLER, L.J.—As we have not heard any argument on the second point, we are bound to assume that the plaintiffs have all the rights of a mortgagee of a ship who has taken possession of the ship; and those rights are, as is well settled, these; he has a right to all the accruing freight which he finds accruing at the time he takes possession; and if he finds any cargo on board in respect of which freight has accrued, and on which the mortgagor has a lien, the mortgagee succeeds to that lien, and can enforce it in a court of law. And the question to be determined in this case is whether there was any accruing freight to which the mortgagees were so entitled.

It was argued by Mr. Herschell as the foundation of this case, that the mortgagee has a greater right than that, and that if the mortgagor had carried a cargo on his own account, which cargo the mortgagee found on board when he came to take possession, the mortgagee would be entitled to a lien on it for the freight as against the mortgagor, although it is obvious that in that case there is no contract of any kind, because the mortgagor would have carried the goods on his own account. Now I am clearly of opinion that the mortgagee has no such right. The mortgagee does not become the owner of the ship until he takes possession, and there is a clause in the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, sect. 70) to that effect. Mr. Herschell seemed to argue that he ought to have that right; but, assuming this was true as far as this particular case was concerned, that the mortgagee was mortgagee before the voyage commenced, he seemed to argue that the goods had, in fact, been carried in the mortgagee's ship. But that was an entirely accidental circumstance; the rights of the mortgagee would be exactly the same whether the mortgage happened to have been created prior to the commencement of the voyage or the very day before he took possession of the ship. Therefore it is not true that the goods have been carried in the mortgagee's ship; the ship was the mortgagor's until the mortgagee took possession, and the mortgagee has in my opinion no farther rights than the purchaser of a ship has, the difference being that the purchaser takes a right to all accruing freight and to all profits of the ship from the time of the assignment and the transfer of the ship to him, whereas the mortgagee only has such right from the time he takes possession. Now, if the mortgagor were carrying goods in his own ship, and nothing remained to be done with the goods except to land them, and he were to sell the ship and transfer it by bill of sale to a purchaser, can it be contended that there would be any freight to be paid to the purchaser in respect of the voyage that had been already performed? Therefore I am clear that the mortgagee has no right to the accruing freight, unless he can find a contract in existence at the time when he takes possession, by which freight was to be paid to the mortgagor.

Now we must examine the facts of this particular case. The goods were shipped in California on owner's account, but Messrs. Parrott did not part with the property of their goods in California, because they were to be paid by bills drawn by the master on London, but they took a bill of lading making the goods deliverable to their own order; and, therefore, it is quite clear that the property in the goods would never pass to Morison until the bills of exchange were paid. In the meantime there was a perfectly good contract to carry between Morison and Parrott, which was witnessed in the ordinary way by the bill of lading, making the goods deliverable on payment of a nominal freight. Now it is obvious why this was so, because otherwise Parrott would have had no good security for his goods; if he had inserted in the bill of lading the ordinary freight from California to England, he would have run the entire risk of any fall in price during the voyage; therefore he inserted a merely nominal freight, so that unless the fall in the price of wheat was so great that the price in England actually fell below what was its price in California, he would be secured. Now it was admitted by Mr. Herschell, and he could not but admit it, that as far as that contract was concerned, it was perfectly valid, and the security of Parrott never could be interfered with by the alleged rights of the mortgagee taking possession of the freight; and that if these bills had been dishonoured and never taken up, Parrott would have been entitled to have obtained the goods on payment of the nominal freight for his security, in order to obtain his purchase-money. That being the state of things while the goods were in the course of the voyage, Morison entered into a contract for the purpose of providing the money to take up these bills of exchange, and the nature of that contract is stated in the 11th paragraph of the case. The contract in substance is this, that in consideration of the defendants advancing the money necessary to pay off Parrott, they were to receive Parrott's security, and the bills of lading were to be assigned to them. Now there is not a question, as it appears to me, that it was perfectly competent to Morison to make that contract, and that the mortgagees of the ship could not interfere with it at all; when he came to borrow money for taking up the bills it was perfectly competent to him to put the persons who advanced it in the same position as Parrott was, namely, that they should have a security upon the entire price of the goods, subject only to the nominal freight.

But then we find that the defendants not only advanced the sum necessary to take up the bills, but they advanced a further sum upon the same security. And the whole case for the plaintiffs depends upon this, that it is said, by the blundering mode in which Morison and the defendants carried out that contract, they failed in giving the defendants the full security of the whole value of the goods; but, without this necessity, made a new contract for the sale of the goods for freight, so as to enable the mortgagees when they took possession of the goods to say "that freight belongs to us, it is an advance on the freight, we are entitled to it." Now this depends entirely on the construction to be put on the document of 19th Feb. 1875. It was an arrangement that the defendants were to take the goods; and accordingly they sold them in the ordinary way in which goods at sea are sold, and made a contract for cost freight and insurance, and there can be no question that this document is in substance a contract of sale by Morison made through the agency of Burrows and the defendants, to Henry Jump and Sons, and begins "Bought of Messrs. John Morison & Co. through Messrs. Burrows and Sons, Messrs. Henry Jump and Sons, Liverpool, as agents of Californian wheat," &c., which is as plain as anything can be, a contract for sale and delivery, "Shipped per Stonehouse . . . for order." Now if it had stopped there it is perfectly plain that it would be a contract for the sale of the whole of this quantity of wheat at the rate of 43s. 6d. a quarter, which was to include cost freight, and insurance, that is to say the purchase-money the purchaser was to be entitled to have the goods delivered to him, and was entitled to have policies of insurance, securing him against the risk of the goods being lost at sea, and the whole of that 43s. 6d. per quarter was to be purchase-money. But then it goes on "Vessel to discharge afloat," &c., "and the quantity . . . whose decision is to be final." Now if the contract had stopped there it would be simply a contract in the ordinary way of sale for cost, freight, and insurance, and the only thing to be paid would have been the nominal freight, and the purchaser would have had to pay the whole of the rest of the price, except the nominal freight on transfer of the bill of lading and policies of insurance. But there is an objection to this, for when a man buys for cost, freight, and insurance, he expects that there will be a considerable portion of the purchase-money to be devoted to the payment of the freight, and that it will be necessary for him to pay that portion of the purchase-money until the goods actually arrive. Of course in the ordinary case of a contract for cost, freight, and insurance, it is all paid for by the money as between the vendor and the purchaser, but a part of the purchase-money has to be applied in paying the freight which is allowed to be due from the vendor to the shipowner, and the charge on the goods which is necessary to be paid in respect of the same. Then, inasmuch as the purchaser would expect the ordinary amount of freight not to be paid until the ship's arrival, and only to be paid on the delivery of the goods, this clause has been inserted (and the whole case in my opinion turns on the construction to be put upon this clause): "As cargo is consigned to ship's account freight is to be computed at 22s. 4d. per ton of 2240lb., and invoice to be paid accordingly." What does this mean? It is perfectly plain; it is explained by paragraph (17). The object was that the purchaser might have the usual advantage of a sum equal to the amount of the freight.

arrival of the ship and delivery of that is the sole object which the accomplish.

question is, is it freight although reight? In my opinion it is not s it involves a contract to carry. o contract for the carrying of the gh you may call the sum to be in my opinion it is not in point it within the rule that the mortgled to the accruing freight. Now, l argued with great ingenuity and t was a contract for freight for this d the goods are shipped on owner's e is no contract for carriage there- it whilst the goods are at sea if the es to sell there is nothing to prevent e shipowner as well as the owner of hen he sells the goods that passes and he enters into a contract for the e goods for freight; and it is said s a new contract for carriage from i the contract of sale was executed. opinion that is not the true effect of it for this reason: the argument her to overlook the fact that it is t to say that in this case there was contract of carriage. There was a d contract of carriage contained in ng, and, as I have already shown, it re sham, as if the goods had been owner's own goods at the time he

A bill of lading under those cir- often executed, but still in point of be a sham, and would not be any my real contract whatever. If it contract it would only operate as a ay of estoppel. But that was not

There was a perfectly good con- Morison and Parrott as witnessed of lading, and the purchasers of the and Sons, were, according to the ion of this contract, to have the bills sferred to them as soon as the bills were taken up. Until the bills of e taken up the goods remained in e property of Parrott. The moment change were taken up the bills of o be transferred to Jump and Sons, s, and they obtained the bills of ey admitted the contract to carry, become necessary for them to main- on the ground of the goods having by some fault of the shipowner at id not deliver them in the like good dition in which he received them, t having been caused by any of the s, they could have maintained an i bills of lading under the Bills of 8 & 19 Vict. c. 111.) And what could i a new contract to carry, the effect of e that there would be two contracts e assignable, contained in the bill of ump and Sons could and did transfer g the bill of lading; and the other an e contract of carriage, because, not ed in the bill of lading or in a ument, it could not be transferred? ; would be a contract of carriage t necessity, and the only reason for t describe this sum, which is really y, as freight. I am of opinion that the court must look at what it really is, and what it really is is purchase-money. The real effect of the contract is simply this, that the purchase-money being 43s. 6d. per quarter, a certain sum is to be paid at once, and the remainder, namely, a sum amounting to 55s. per ton, is only to be paid on the arrival of the ship. That was the only object they had to effect, and the mere fact that they called the money freight ought not to prevent the carrying out of their object, particularly as the effect of not construing the contract in that way would be to deprive the defendants of the security which Morison was perfectly entitled to give them, and which they have got. That being the true construction, Morison, no doubt for the purpose of securing the defendants, executes the instrument set out in paragraph 20 of the case. There, again, the money is called freight, but its being called freight cannot alter the real nature of the thing; it still was part of the purchase-money, and nothing else; it was part of the value of the goods which, by previous arrangement with the defendants, Morison had agreed should be assigned to them in consideration of their lending him the full amount of the purchase-money, and enabling him to take up the bills. Then the defendants had advanced the rest of the money to pay the bills, and some sum beyond, and to secure them they were to receive the rest of the purchase-money, and this assignment, though they call it freight, is for that purpose, as is shown by this, that it expressly authorises Jump and Sons to pay this sum, which they call freight, to Burrows and Perks. Therefore, though it is perfectly true that there was a cargo on board, and that Morison had a lien on that cargo in respect of the sum of money to be paid on its delivery, in my opinion he had that lien, not as shipowner in respect of freight due to him on the contract of carriage, but as being the unpaid vendor for that portion of the purchase-money.

That being so, I am of opinion that there was no freight except the nominal freight on the bills of lading; there was no accruing freight in respect of the cargo at the time when the mortgagees took possession. Therefore, I am of opinion that as there was no accruing freight the court was not bound to construe this as being a contract for freight for the purpose of giving the mortgagees of the ship a better security to the prejudice of the defendants.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion, for the same reasons.

BRAMWELL, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

A mortgagee or shipowner taking possession of a ship before the voyage is ended, and finding goods on board which have been carried on the terms that freight should be paid, and on which there is a lien, is entitled to that freight, and so the plaintiffs were here. The question is whether they were entitled to 1s. per ton or 55s.; in my judgment they were entitled to 1s. only. Now, freight supposes a contract, and two parties to it, a debtor and a creditor; the one who is to carry the goods, and the other who is to pay freight for them. Is that the case here? Mr. Herschell says, "Yes, it is; there has been a contract of carriage entered into between these two parties, Morison, the shipowner, and Jump and Sons the buyers of the goods, and it was this contract, "that whereas my ship and the cargo on board are now in mid-ocean,

I will undertake to carry the goods from wherever they are in that ship, and deliver them to you, Jump, at a freight of 55s., putting myself in the situation of a carrier, the voyage commencing wherever the ship may be at the time the contract of sale is entered into, and putting you in the situation of the freighter?" That is a very ingenious argument, but it is wholly unfounded in fact, and it results from looking at a word instead of looking at the substance of the thing. There really is no pretence for saying that in reality there was a contract for carriage between these two parties, so that Jump would be entitled to say, "I gave you 55s. a ton; you have not performed your contract of carriage duly because something has been done wrong by the captain and the sailors, which has damaged my goods, not within the excepted perils." There was no such intention in their minds, but they have used the word "freight," for a reason which is obvious, because when a person buys a floating cargo, as a rule, if it is not the cargo of the shipowner, he does not pay the freight unless the cargo arrives, and does not pay it until the cargo arrives. Therefore, Jump and Sons desired to purchase the cargo upon the same terms as they would have done if Morison had not been the shipowner. That is why this is put in, and it is so stated. Suppose, instead of putting in the word "freight" they had put in "a sum to be in the light of 'freight,' or some such expression (that is to say, the sum not to be payable unless the ship arrives, and only when the ship does arrive), "shall be taken at 55s.," what then? The word "freight," which is the very word that has given rise to this controversy, would not have existed, but they use the word, as is commonly done, by people not foreseeing the mischievous consequences which may arise from want of precision in their expressions. The truth is that this is a contract for the sale of goods. If, as Lord Justice Mellish says, Jump and Sons had resold the cargo (which they did), the same expression would be used; and yet would it be pretended that the purchaser of the cargo intended to enter into any contract of affreightment, or for paying freight as such? And what difference is there that in this case the purchase is from Morison? And why should we put a different interpretation upon this contract to what we should upon any other contract for the purchase of goods from a shipper who was not a shipowner?

Now any lien that the defendants or Morison would have had in this case would, in my opinion, have been a lien for freight to the extent of 1s. per ton only, and as to the rest, a lien as an unpaid vendor of the goods. And it should be remembered, in considering this case as to the interpretation of this contract, to which the plaintiffs are no party, that the defendants' title had accrued. The sale was on the 19th Feb., and the bills were not paid until the 22nd, but the agreement between Morison and the defendants, under which the title accrues, was some time in December or the beginning of January, as is seen in paragraph 11, and accordingly, on the 4th Jan. the defendants advanced to Morison 3000l., and shortly afterwards, in pursuance of the arrangement then made, received the policies, so that the defendants' title accrued certainly as early as the 4th Jan.; and at that time, of course, they would have been entitled to say to Morison, "You shall not sell upon any terms to make a larger sum than 1s. per ton payable for freight." They would be entitled to say obviously, or they would have lost their security. If that be so, the suggestion is that the defendants nevertheless have flung away security to the amount of upwards of 3000l. I am of opinion that is not sound that there was no contract of freight here except to the 1s. per ton. And it is a convenient thing that we should hold this to be so, because, although I doubt it may be very useful that people should be encouraged to lend money on mortgage of ships yet, if they choose to leave the mortgagors in possession, it is also very desirable that the mortgagors should have the power to deal with the ships in the most advantageous way; and there can be no doubt that occasionally it is very advantageous that shipowners who cannot get a freight should themselves have a mercantile venture, as in this case. Now Parrott in this case would not have shipped unless there had been this margin, for the reasons given, and the defendants would not have taken up these bills unless they knew there was a safe margin. They knew they could get Calcutta wheat here freight free, which was a guarantee against any loss, unless there was a very extraordinary fall indeed. Now, suppose these bills had been dishonoured, what freight would have been payable then? Suppose the defendants had not advanced the money to take them up, though the contract of sale had taken place, the shipowner agent in that case would have been only liable for 1s. per ton; and then why should the defendants be liable for more?

Upon those grounds I am of opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

But there is another point to which I should like to call attention. (It is respectful to the court below to say that this matter in that judgment was almost assumed, and as it seems to me without adequate reason being given for it.) The cases show that freight cannot be assigned against the mortgagee of the ship, that is to say, Morison had been minded to raise money upon the right to the 1s. freight, he could not have done so to the injury of the mortgagees. But this is not an assignment of freight. I think, as I have said already, that it is not a creation of freight at all, but, assuming that freight was created, we must take it that it was created by a contract between Morison and Jump and Sons, by which Jump and Sons are to pay freight not to Morison but to the defendants. It is not the case therefore of assigning freight and giving an equity, but it is a contract making a sort of trilateral bargain, by which, in my mind, the defendants would be entitled to the freight from Jump and Sons. It seems to me that although if the 55s. freight had previously been brought into existence it could not have been assigned to the detriment of the mortgagees, it might be brought into existence upon the ground that Morison should never have it, but the defendants should. I am of opinion that there was no contract of carriage except for 1s. per ton, and in any point of view it can be said there was no freight brought into existence to be paid to the shipowner but to the defendants.

Judgment reversed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Freshfield and Warrington
Solicitors for defendants, Lowless and Co.

[OF APP.]

TURNBULL AND OTHERS v. JANSON.

[OF APP.]

Before JAMES, BACCALLAY, BRAMWELL, and BRETT, L.JJ.)

April 30 and May 1, 1877.

TURNBULL AND OTHERS v. JANSON.

ins insurance—Warranty of seaworthiness—vessel built for inland navigation—Insurance for ocean voyage.

we a vessel built for inland navigation is insured for an ocean voyage there is an implied warranty that she shall be made as seaworthy for the voyage as such a vessel can be made by ordinary available means.

steamer of light construction, built for inland navigation in Trinidad, was insured for the voyage out. On the voyage she broke in two at a, and went down. In an action on the policy a jury found that the vessel was not seaworthy as an ocean going vessel, and was not made as seaworthy as she might have been by ordinary available means.

2, affirming the judgment of Cleasby, B., that these findings the defendant was entitled to judgment.

REAL from the judgment of Cleasby, B. at the L. The action was brought on a valued policy insurance, "at and from Clyde to Trinidad, and in port for thirty days after arrival thereat, ending risks of trial trips," on the steamer Mary, to recover for a total loss. The defendant admitted unseaworthiness, that the ship was not made by the perils insured against, and misrepresentation and concealment. The vessel was described as follows in a letter written on the 22nd
Oct. 1874 by the plaintiffs' firm to the brokers employed to effect the insurance, and shown by them to the defendant; "This is a new passenger steamer of light draught such as Arthur, Alice, dimensions 210ft. long, 25ft. broad, and 16ft. deep. . . . She is strong with iron hull and deck, and will be made snug in every respect."
The brokers also, in consequence of another letter received from the plaintiffs, told the defendant that she was very strong in scantling. The Mary was built for navigation in shallow water, being designed to carry mails and passengers in the Gulf of Paria, which is an almost land locked gulf between the Island of Trinidad. Her draught of water was only 2ft. 3in., and this fact was not expressly communicated to the defendant. The Arthur and Alice were vessels which had been previously employed for similar employment to that for which the Mary was intended, and had been sent out to Trinidad. The Arthur drew 3ft. 6in. of water and Alice 2ft. 7in. The premium charged by the defendant was 40s. per cent.; for a large sea going steamer the premium would not have been more than 20s. per cent. for the same voyage. By the terms of the policy the vessel was warranted to be on or before the 15th Oct. 1874. The Mary departed from the Clyde on the 14th Oct.; owing to bad weather she put into Belfast Lough, and proceeded into Kingstown Harbour. She left Kingstown on the morning of the 19th Oct., and continued on her voyage, until about 4 p.m. on the 20th, when she suddenly broke in two in the open sea, and immediately went down. The weather was fine at the time, and there was not a great deal of wind, but rather a heavy sea. At the trial, which took place in December 1876, at Guildhall, before Cleasby B. and a special jury, a number of witnesses were called on both sides who gave evidence as to the strength of the vessel and as to the means which were adopted to strengthen her for the ocean voyage, and as to what other means might have been adopted for that purpose.

The following are the questions which the learned judge left to the jury, and the answers which the jury gave to them:

1. Was the vessel proposed for insurance correctly described as very strong in scantling, having regard to the particulars given in the letter of 22nd Sept.? Yes.

2. Was the draught of the vessel, 2ft. 3in., a fact material to the risk in this case, in addition to the facts communicated to the underwriters?
No.

3. Were the facts stated to the underwriters equivalent to the statement that the vessel had a draught of 27in.? Yes.

4. Was the vessel seaworthy as an ordinary ocean-going sea vessel? No.

5. Was she made as seaworthy as she might have been by ordinary available means? No.

6. Was the loss of the vessel caused by the unseaworthiness of the ship, or by any perils of the sea? Perils of the sea.

On these findings the verdict was entered for the defendant.

Sir Henry James, Q.C., and Watkins Williams,
Q.C. (J. O. Mathew with them) for the plaintiffs.—
The warranty of seaworthiness for an ocean voyage is not to be implied in a case like this where everything is known and disclosed. It was brought to the knowledge of the underwriters that this was a vessel intended for inland navigation, and they were content to take the risk with that knowledge. The reason why a warranty of seaworthiness is implied in a voyage policy is explained by Maule, J., in Gibson v. Small (4 H. L. C., at p. 388), where he says: "It appears to me that the foundation of the admitted rule that in a policy on a voyage there is an implied condition or warranty that the ship was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage is that the parties to the policy are to be considered as contracting with reference to what is usual and of course in the transaction which is the subject of the policy; and that it is usual and a matter of course to make a ship seaworthy before the commencement of a voyage."
This reasoning does not apply to an exceptional case like the present. In Burgess v. Wickham
(1 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 303; 3 B. & S. 669; 33
L. J. 17, Q. B.), which was a case of a vessel very similar to this, the plaintiffs were held entitled to recover, although she was not seaworthy as an ocean going vessel. The expression used by Cockburn in that case (3 B. & S., at p. 680) that the "underwriter is entitled to expect that the ship would be as seaworthy as it could be," is only an obiter dictum. There is no implied warranty that the owner is bound to use all possible means to strengthen the ship. The reasons given in the House of Lords in Dudgeon v. Pembroke (ante, p. 393; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 382; L. Rep. 2, App. Cas. 284) to show why there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness on a time policy apply also to a case like the present. [JAMES, L.J.—Can you say that there is no implied warranty of sea-worthiness at all?] They also referred to Arnould on Marine Insurance, vol. 2, part 2, c. 4.

2 Deer on Marine Insurance, 566.

Clepham v. Langton, 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 51; 5 B. &
S. 729; 34 L. J. 46, Q. B.; 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 875.

2 F

[BRETT, L.J., referred to Biccard v. Shepherd (14 Moore P. C. Cas. 471; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 504).]

Butt, Q.C., Cohen, Q.C., and Macleod for the defendant, were not called on.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of opinion that the point in this case is settled by the decision in Burgess v. Wickham (ubi sup.), and it is settled according to common sense and sound principle. The facts there were nearly the same as the facts in this case. It must be held that there is in every voyage policy an implied warranty of seaworthiness, but in that case a distinction was made in favour of the shipowner, for the court said that it was not an inflexible warranty, but must be considered with regard to the subject matter of the insurance, and, looking at the nature of the ship, or of the voyage, it might be limited to a certain extent. As Blackburn, J. said, it is a warranty secundum quid. That exception was introduced in favour of the shipowner, and here it is tried on behalf of the shipowner to extend the limitation so as to make it amount to an absolute exclusion of the warranty of seaworthiness in the present case. I put the question in the course of the argument whether the contention on the part of the plaintiffs was meant to go as far as that, but I could get no direct answer. According to the true meaning of the argument it is said that there was no warranty, but we cannot carry the limitation of the general doctrine to that extent. The proper qualification, which is expressed in Burgess v. Wickham, and on which the question put by Cleasby, B. to the jury is founded, is that the ship need only be as seaworthy as such a ship ought to be made for such a voyage. It is true she was meant to pass her life in a gulf when she got to Trinidad, but she had to get there, and she ought to have been made as seaworthy as she reasonably could be made for the voyage out there, which was the voyage for which she was insured. I am of opinion that the question put to the jury was right, and their finding excludes the plaintiff's contention.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion for the same reasons.

BRAMWELL, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons certainly, but I wish to add a few observations with regard to the difficulty that has been raised as to the introduction of parol evidence. (a) This is an insurance of a particular vessel, and I think the policy may be read as if the vessel were described in it as well as named, and if that were done why should there be no warranty of seaworthiness? What would there be in the terms of the policy inconsistent with a modified warranty of seaworthiness, and why must not that vessel which is named or described in the policy be made as seaworthy as such a vessel can be made for the voyage for which she is insured? I think the expression used by Cleasby, B. in leaving the case to the jury was a happy one, and where is the contradiction between the words which he used and the terms of the policy? It is true that the vessel need not be made as seaworthy as an ocean-going vessel ought to be for such a voyage, but if the argument for the plaintiffs were correct the consequences which would follow would be absurd, for the vessel might go to sea without a compass, if a compass would not be required in the gulf where it was intended that she should be used when she got to Trinidad, or with a crew which would be enough for what she had to do out there, but would be too few for the ocean voyage. These are unreasonable consequences, and there is no reason why they should exist, and there is nothing to exclude the warranty of seaworthiness, which is an ordinary incident of a voyage policy. If the question were whether her permanent build she had to be built as strongly, because she was built in this country than she would have been if she had been built in Trinidad, I should have some misgiving no doubt, but that is not the objection taken here. The defendant here says that the plaintiffs did not make the vessel stronger by temporary practicable means, that is by putting in temporary strengthening for the voyage, which could be removed afterwards. I am of opinion that there is a warranty of seaworthiness here just as much as there is a warranty to take out a sufficient crew for the voyage, and both on reason and authority the defendant is entitled to judgment.

BRETT, L.J.—If this had been the first time the present question had been raised, I should have wished for the assistance of Mr. Butt and Mr. Cohen to enable me to arrive at a right conclusion, but the point has already been discussed in Burgess v. Wickham, in Clapham v. Langton, and in Dudgeon v. Pembroke. I am of opinion that in every voyage policy, unless the contrary is expressed, there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness. There is not such a warranty in a time policy, unless it is expressly so stated. If voyage policies are in the same general terms but the warranty is probably implied from custom because it is held that all reasonable shipowners and underwriters would contract on such an understanding. But however it arose, now, as a matter of law, every voyage policy contains a warranty of seaworthiness, unless it is otherwise expressed. The warranty is to be applied to the subject-matter of the particular policy, and there are different degrees of seaworthiness: it varies according to the place, according to the voyage, according to the time of year, according to the nature of the cargo, and of the ship herself, and it must be fulfilled so far as a ship of the kind insured in the particular policy can be made to fulfil it. If a ship of twenty-four tons is insured for a voyage from Liverpool to New York, she cannot be made seaworthy in the same degree as a ship of 400 tons sailing on the same voyage would be, but she must be made as seaworthy for the voyage as a ship of twenty-four tons could be made, and the same would apply to vessels of the class of the vessel in the present case. The plaintiffs were not asked to make her another vessel, but only to alter her for the voyage. There are means of strengthening her for the voyage so as to leave her the same kind of vessel, and the evidence shows how easily this could have been done. It was done in Burgess v. Wickham, and in Clapham v. Langton, and the jury here found that it could easily have been done here but the plaintiffs did not do it, and therefore did not fulfil the warranty. Blackburn, J., in Burgess v. Wickham, states the law upon this question, and that judgment is affirmed by the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Clapham v. Langton. We could not decide in favour of the plaintiffs here without overruling both the

(a) See Clapham v. Langton (ubi sup.).

[CT. OF APP.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[CT. OF APP.]

and therefore, I am of opinion that the defendant is entitled to judgment, and the decision of Measby, B., ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Parker and Clarke.

Solicitors for defendant, Waltons, Bubb, and Valkon.

May 2 and June 2, 1877.

(Before JAMES, BAGGALLAY, BRAMWELL, and BRETT, L.JJ.)

THE FRANCONIA.

ON APPEAL FROM THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY).

Collision—Lord Campbell's Act—Admiralty Court Act 1861—Action in rem—Jurisdiction.

In appeal from the decision of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty) refusing a motion to set aside so much of a writ of summons in rem as claimed compensation for the loss sustained by the plaintiff, in consequence of the death of a person of whom she was administratrix, and who, whilst serving on board a British ship, had lost his life through a collision between his vessel and a foreign ship on the high seas, caused by the negligence of those on board the foreign ship.

Teld, per James and Baggallay, L.JJ. (approving the decision of the court below), that the judge of the Admiralty Division has jurisdiction to entertain a suit in rem under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93).

per Bramwell and Brett, L.JJ. (disapproving the decision of the court below) that the jurisdiction given by the Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 7 does not include claims under Lord Campbell's Act.

The court being equally divided the decision of the court below remains, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty) in which, following the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in The Beta (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 447; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 988), the learned judge decided that he had jurisdiction to try a cause instituted in rem against a foreign vessel by the representatives of a person on board a British ship killed by a collision on the high seas occasioned by the negligence of those on board the foreign vessel, and refused a motion to set aside so much of a writ of summons in rem as claimed damages for loss of life. The arguments and judgments in the court below will be found fully reported ante, p. 415. On the 2nd May 1877 the appeal came on for argument.

Benjamin, Q.C. and Cohen, Q.C. (with them Williamson) for the appellants, defendants below.—This is an action under the special statute, usually called Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), that Act gave no jurisdiction to the Admiralty Court in such a case and certainly none to extend its peculiar jurisdiction in rem. The statute can only apply to British subjects, and to those within the jurisdiction of the Crown of Great Britain at the time the cause of action arose, and therefore owing an allegiance permanent or temporary to its laws. It has already been decided that in this case those on board the Franconia were not within the jurisdiction: (Reg. v. Keyn, L. Rep. 2 Ex. Div. 63;

L. Rep. 2 Q. B. D. 90.) The Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction over a cause of damage to property the result of a collision on the high seas even between two foreign vessels in the event of the res coming within the territorial limits of Great Britain; but that was in consequence of the consent of nations that courts of admiralty should exercise such jurisdiction, but such consent has never been given to extend the operation of a British municipal law to foreign vessels. Suppose both vessels had been foreign and one had after the collision come into a British port it could be said in such a case that Lord Campbell's Act applied. [BRAMWELL, L.J.—You say it would be as if two carriages had come into collision through negligence in France, and someone had been killed and the owner of the carriage causing to death had subsequently come into England, and was proceeded against under Lord Campbell's Act.] But apart altogether from the question of the nationality of the ships there is no jurisdiction to proceed in rem under Lord Campbell's Act. The case in which the Privy Council has held that the Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction was one of personal damage (The Beta, L. Rep. 2 P. C. 447; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 988), and the claim was for the injuria done to the plaintiff and not for the damnum suffered by his estate. The Common Law Courts have always held that the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in rem in any case of personal damage, and have prohibited it from proceeding in such cases: (Smith v. Brown, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 729; 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 808; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 56; James v. London and South-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 7 Ex. 195; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 187; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 228.) But there is no conflict of opinion between the Judicial Committee and the Common Law Courts, when the question was one of damage to the estate of the deceased under this Act, as no such case has come before the Privy Council. The Ruckers (4 Rob. 76) is not in point. That was a purely personal cause of damage arising on board a British ship on the high seas, and therefore within the admiralty jurisdiction, and was not a cause in rem at all. The only cases in which the Court of Admiralty ever exercised the jurisdiction (The Guldfaxe, L. Rep. 2 Ad. & Ecc. 325; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 201; The Explorer, L. Rep. 3 Ad. & Ecc. 357; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 405; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 507) were before the prohibition of the Queen's Bench in Smith v. Brown (ubi sup.) and in the Explorer (ubi sup.) when the question was raised in the Privy Council the claim was withdrawn. The Courts of Common Law have also held that statutes giving admiralty jurisdiction, as e.g., to the County Courts over claims for damage to cargo, and granting an appeal to the Court of Admiralty do not, for want of express words extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty to matters over which, before the passing of those statutes (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51) it would not have had jurisdiction: (Simpson v. Blues, L. Rep. 7 C. P. 290; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 647; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 360; Gunstead v. Price, L. Rep. 10 Ex. 65; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 499; 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 545.) To hold the defendants liable in the case is to say that a municipal law is extended without express words to a foreigner in his own country, that is on board of a foreign ship on the high seas. By the civil law, which is the law administered by the

[Ct. of App.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[Ct. of App.]

Court of Admiralty apart from express statutes, all causes of personal action fall with the death of the person, and there is nothing to show that by the law of Germany to which the defendant owes allegiance there is any provision for such a claim as this, and therefore neither by the civil law as administered by the Admiralty, sitting as a court of international law, nor by the lex loci, i.e., the German law, can this claim be supported.

Butt, Q.C. and Clarkson for respondents.—There is high authority for saying that this damage could be recovered by the law of Germany as also under the Code Napoleon. The cases before the passing of the Judicature Acts are not in point, the ratio decidendi of those cases was that the Admiralty Court Acts (3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, and 24 Vict. c. 10), and County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), did not give the Court of Admiralty any new jurisdiction, but there is no doubt that under the Judicature Acts it is open to a plaintiff to choose in what division he will bring his action, and that division will use its ordinary machinery to do justice between the parties. An action was instituted in one of the cases arising out of this collision in the Common Pleas Division, but leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction was refused on the ground that the cause of action also arose out of the jurisdiction. In the Court of Admiralty an action lies for causes of action arising on the high seas, by the mutual consent of nations, and is prosecuted, not by serving the writ out of the jurisdiction, but by the detention of the property within the jurisdiction, to answer the claim, and that has been done here, the property was under arrest, and was only released on an undertaking to answer any claim to which it would have been liable if still under arrest. If this appeal is granted it will amount to an absolute denial of justice to the plaintiff, as there is no other process by which compensation can be obtained open to her in this country. It is admitted that the court has jurisdiction so far as the loss of the personal property of the deceased is concerned; why, then, should it not have jurisdiction in a case of much more strictly personal damage? (Brett, L.J.—Could a ship be arrested in any other country for such a claim as this?) I don't profess to know what the law of other countries may be on the point, but so far as the method of proceeding is concerned it is clearly governed by the lex fori, and that in the admiralty division is by an action in rem if the res is within the jurisdiction. The distinction drawn by the Lord Chief Justice Cockburn between damage and injury in Smith v. Brown (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 56) cannot be sustained when other sections of the Acts in which the expressions are used are considered: (Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sects. 299, 504, 505, 515, 527; Merchant Shipping Act 1862, sects. 28, 54.) The word "damage" cannot be confined to damage to property (Ashby v. White, Smith's Leading Cases, 7th edit., vol. i., at p. 296; Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th edit., 365 et seq.; Acts of the Apostles, ch. xxvii., v. 10, where the word "damago" expressly applies to the lives of those on board the ship.) (Brett, L.J.—Was not the reason of the prohibition by the courts of common law in the cases cited that Lord Campbell's Act requires the assessment of damages by a jury, and there was no jury in the admiralty division?) That could not be the reason, because the Court of Chancery assesses damages and apportions claims as to limitation of liability, and that jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was extended to the Court of Admiralty, when the ship was under arrest, by sect. 13 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861. Brett, L.J.—Suppose in the Court of Admiralty the vessels were found to blame, and therefore the damages were divided, could a claim of this description be recovered, and against whom? The case might occasion some difficulty, but it does not arise here. In this case there is no doubt who is liable for all the damage which is done, as the claim constitutes a part of that damage.

Benjamin, Q.C., in reply.

Cur adv. vult.

June 2.—Brett, L.J., read the judgment of JAMES, L.J.—Both in the Admiralty Division and upon the hearing of the appeal, the case of the appellant was based upon the contention that the Admiralty Division had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damages in respect of loss of life; and the substantial question for decision is, whether the Court of Admiralty, previously to the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts, had jurisdiction to entertain any such claim, for, notwithstanding the general transfer of jurisdiction to the High Court of Justice, it is provided by sect. 11, sub-sect. 1 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 (39 Vict. c. 77), that no person shall assign any cause or matter to the Admiralty Division unless he would have been entitled to commence the same in the Court of Admiralty if that Act had not passed. It is admitted that if the Court of Admiralty had any such jurisdiction, it was transferred upon it by the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act of 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), the 7th section of which enacts that "the High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship."

The question whether the term "damage" as used in that section, is applicable to injury to the person as well as to injury to property, has been the subject of frequent discussion, and of conflicting decisions. The Court of Admiralty, in the case of The Sylph (L. Rep. 1 Jan. 24; 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 519; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 37), held that it had jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damages in respect of personal injury not resulting in death, and this view was adopted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of The Beta (L. Rep. 2 P. C. 447; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 988; 38 L. J. 50, Adm.); and in the case of The Guldaze (L. Rep. 2 Adm. 325; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 21) the Court of Admiralty held that it had a like jurisdiction in respect of loss of life occasioned by a collision. On the other hand, the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of Smith v. Brown (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 56, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 24; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 808) expressly derived from the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of The Beta (ubi sup.), and held that personal injury occasioned by the collision of two ships was not included in the term "damage" as used in the 7th section of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, and that the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damages in respect of personal injury resulting in death, and a result of concurrence in this decision of the Court of Queen's Bench has been expressed by the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Stimpson v. Stimpson (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 360; L. Rep. 78

.]

THE FRANCONIA.

[Ct. of App.]

. N. S. 697), and by the Court of and on appeal by the Exchequer in the case of James v. London and Southway Company (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 7 Ex. 187, 287; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. Rep. N. S. 382). But in neither of cases did the question turn upon the of this section.

ble to concur in the construction of ty Jurisdiction Act which has been by the Queen's Bench, and ap- eurred in by the other courts to just referred. It appears to me that n by the Court of Admiralty and the nmittee is the more correct. The 7th section are perfectly general; mselves they would appear to confer n upon the Court of Admiralty to claims in respect of damage done by ver may be the nature of the damage, rson or to property. There is nothing t of the section to suggest that the ge" should be limited in its meaning, ute, being remedial of a grievance, ve a liberal rather than a narrow con- This principle was acted upon by Dr.

in the case of The Bahia (Bro. & and by the Judicial Committee in The Pieve Superiore (L. Rep. 5 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 702; 30 L. T. 887; 43 L. J. 1, 20, Adm.) We look at the sections of the Act which h to see that it was the intention of re to give to the Court of Admiralty 1 to enable it to do complete justice in ich might come under its consid- ie 13th section in particular confers n under which, in many cases, it ecessary that the Court of Admiralty s the amount of damages in respect of 'personal injury, and the nature of the conferred by this section (to which I occasion to refer again presently) ie to negative any construction of the would limit the jurisdiction thereby e the subject matters that were pre- er its cognisance—a view of the case een suggested in the course of the It is further to be observed, that if on is to receive the limited construc- has been suggested, it is difficult to why it was introduced into the Act, in such a case the extension of juris- ld have been of a very trifling s the Court of Admiralty already had jurisdiction in respect of damage to asioned by collision.

wever, been urged, on the part of the at, notwithstanding the general terms e 7th section is expressed, the word ough, for reasons which will be re- ioned, to be limited in construction to e to property, or, at any rate, that it e be construed so as to include loss of ilar arguments found favour with the een's Bench in the case of Smith v. sup.), and as two of my colleagues ur decision in the present appeal in favour of the appellant, I proceed y opinion upon the point so pressed d I do it with more diffidence, differing n does from the opinion of those for whose knowledge and experience I entertain the most profound respect, and in differing from whom I cannot but entertain doubt as to the correctness of my own conclusions.

In support of the view that the word "damage," as used in the 7th section of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, should be limited in construction to damage to property, it is contended that not only is there no legislative sanction for the use of the word as denoting injury to the person, but that the Legislature has, in other recent Acts, in pari materia adopted the use of the word "damage" as applicable exclusively to injury to property, and that it must be assumed that the Legislature, in passing the Act in question, did not lose sight of the distinction we have recognised in its other enactments. If it were so, I should feel strongly the force of the arguments based upon them; but I do not so read the Merchant Shipping Acts of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), and 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), which are the Statutes to which reference has been made. The latter Statute, it will be observed, was passed after the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1861. It is quite true that in the sections of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, which have reference to the limitation of the liability of shipowners, the expressions "loss of life" and "personal injury" are used with reference to injury to the person, whilst the word "damage" is used with reference to injury to property; but under the provisions of these sections a different scale of liability was fixed in respect of injuries to the person from that in respect of injury to property, and it was convenient (though I admit not necessary) to use different forms of expression to distinguish one kind of injury from the other; but if the 7th section of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act was intended to apply to injury to the person as well as injury to property, there was neither necessity for using, nor any convenience in using, more than one expression to denote both kinds of injury. But this limited use of the word damage is not observed throughout the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. In the 515th section, the words "loss or damage" are used in reference to three classes of injury, and as the word "loss" would be wholly inapplicable to personal injury not resulting in death, the word "damage" in the 7th section must have reference to personal injury as well as injury to property. Again, if we turn to the 290th section of the same statute, which is the last of a series of sections enacting various rules for the prevention of accidents, we find that it commences with the words, "In case any damage to person or property arises from the non-observance of any ship of any of the said rules." Here we have a clear unquestionable use of the word "damage" in the sense applicable to injury to the person as well as to property. In the 527th section we find the expression "injury to property," which is suggestive, at least, of the words "damage" and "injury" being to some extent interchangeably used. And so, again, in the other Act referred to (the Merchant Shipping Act 1862), whilst, on the one hand, we find the expressions "loss of life," "personal injury," and "damage to property" used in the sections modifying the provisions of the Act of 1854 as to the liability of shipowners, we, on the other hand, find in the 20th section the expression "damage to person or property" applied to injuries occasioned by breaches of regulations therein referred to. So far, then, from there being no legislative sanction for the use of the word "damage" as denoting injury to the person, and from the Legislature having adopted the use of the word as exclusively applicable to property, it appears to me that the very statutes referred to as supporting this provision afford extensive evidence to the contrary. And here I would refer to a statement made by Sir R. Phillimore in the course of his judgment in this case in the Admiralty Division, which appears to be borne out by the report of the case of The Ruckers (4 C. Rob. 73), before Lord Stowell, to the effect that an action commenced in the Court of Admiralty in respect of a personal assault committed on the high seas by the master of a ship on a passenger was, previously to the Act of 1861, always described as a "cause of damage."

But the further argument remains to be considered, namely, that, assuming it cannot be maintained that such a limited meaning as suggested ought to be given to the word "damage," by reason of the legislative use of the word in the Merchant Shipping Acts, the meaning of the word ought not to be so extended as to include loss of life. This argument is based upon the provisions of Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), and it is contended that, inasmuch as the right of action created by this Act is extended or modified by the subsequent statute (27 & 28 Vict. c. 95), where obtaining compensation for the families of persons killed by accident was confined to actions brought in the courts of common law, and that great practical inconvenience and possible injustice might arise from an exercise by the Court of Admiralty of jurisdiction in such matters, it is impossible to suppose that the Legislature intended under a general statute, such as that we are now considering, to effect so great a change in the rights and relative positions of the parties to such actions. In support of this view it has been urged that the transfer of jurisdiction to the Court of Admiralty would not only deprive the parties of the Common Law procedure and the mode of trial pointed out by the Act, but might also materially affect their relative rights, having regard to the fact that the Court of Admiralty, in dealing with claims for damage arising from collision, acts upon principles unknown to the Common Law—as, for instance, in dividing the loss where both parties are to blame. It is quite possible that some such inconveniences as those suggested might have arisen from an exercise by the Court of Admiralty of the jurisdiction in question, or may arise from an exercise of the like jurisdiction by the Admiralty Division; though, having regard to sect. 25, sub-sect. 9 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), I much doubt whether any such conflict between the civil and the Common Law, as was suggested by Lord Blackburn, in Smith v. Brown (ubi sup.), could arise after that Act came into operation; but, however this may be, the Legislature has thought fit to enact that under certain circumstances of a similar character, at least as likely to occur similar inconveniences must be submitted to. The right of action given by Lord Campbell's Act is in certain cases modified and restricted by the sections of the Merchant Shipping Act already referred to, and the jurisdiction for assessing the amount of damages in such cases, as regards injury to the person as well as injury to property, has been conferred on the Court of Chancery, and by the 13th section of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, the jurisdiction which, by the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, was conferred upon the Court of Chancery has been extended to the Court of Admiralty whenever the ship, or the person thereof, are under arrest. In this very case, though the ship was not arrested in this action, she had been arrested in other actions, and, to understand the facts, it was agreed that the case should be treated and dealt with as if she were under arrest and the proceedings were in rem; but, however this may be, she might have been under arrest, and, if she had been the Admiralty Division would have been bound, under the 13th section, to entertain an action at the instance of the owners of the ship for the distribution of the amount of their liability amongst the claimants, and in such case to assess the amount of damages payable to the plaintiffs, and to ascertain the proportions thereof payable to the different members of Jeffery's family. Every inconvenience and every injustice which has been suggested as likely or possible to occur if the present action had been brought in the Court of Admiralty, would, it might, equally arise in such an action as has been suggested. It appears to me that the argument based upon the probability or possibility of such possible inconvenience or injustice cannot be maintained.

Upon the whole I am of opinion that the judgment of the Admiralty Court should be affirmed.

BAGGALLAY, L.J. concurred with the judgment of James. L.J.

The judgment of Brett and Bramwell, L.JJ. was read by BRAMWELL, L.J.—I will now deliver the judgment of my brother Brett and myself.

We are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and that the Admiralty Division has no jurisdiction in rem in a case in which the right of action is under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93). We offer no opinion as to whether it would have jurisdiction in a case of personal hurt where there was no death and the person hurt was the plaintiff. We proceed upon the ground that the action given (by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) is not within the words and meaning of sect. 7 of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10). The Legislature, it is true, has given power to the Admiralty Court to assess and apportion the damages in such cases under certain circumstances, under the Merchant Shipping Acts; and in such case it necessarily follows that the machinery for assessing was compensated with. It is true that a jury can now be had in the Admiralty Court; and, as Mr. Baggallay pointed out, that the word "damage" in sect. 7 of 24 Vict., c. 10, includes the damage done to goods. It is also true that, under the Jurisdiction Acts, any action in personam may, as matter of jurisdiction, be brought in the Admiralty Division as well as in any other; yet, looking to the words of Lord Campbell's Act, and sect. 7 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, and construing them as at the time the latter was passed, we are of opinion that sect. 7 of the latter Act was intended to give jurisdiction in rem, which is the question now under discussion. Lord Campbell's Act is expressed to say: "The jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury, &c."

[OT. OF APP.]

CARGO ex SCHILLER.

[OT. OF APP.]

amount shall be divided in such shares as the jury, by their verdict, shall find and direct." As to the words "the jury may give," &c., that might possibly be held to mean "jury" where there was a jury, and "court" where there was not. We do not say it could be; but, whether or no, we are of opinion that under that section it must be a jury who are to find and direct the division in shares. (a) The words are express. Suppose Lord Campbell's Act had said such actions should only be brought in a court where there was a jury, would sect. 7 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, have repealed that? But it does say so in effect, and the argument is that it is repealed. Suppose that the relatives had assigned their right of action, would the assignees have maintained a suit in Equity?—Would an action lie in a County Court without a jury? No; the jury is essential. But it is remarkable that no jurisdiction is given in a case of bodily hurt to a passenger, or trespass to his goods or injury done in a ship. We think there is great weight in the argument that the words of sect. 7 of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, are not apt words to include a case under Lord Campbell's Act. Such a claim as this is neither properly or strictly speaking a claim for damages done by a ship. It is a claim for compensation for loss sustained partly by a death caused by a ship, and partly by something else which may or may not happen, as well as the death, but which must also happen in order to substantiate a claim or relief. It is a claim not proportioned to the act alone. Of course, though we have thought it right to make the above remarks, we avail ourselves of the judgment and reasons in Brown v. Smith (ubi sup.), especially on account of the difficulty arising from the difference between the Admiralty and Common Law. As to contributory negligence, would the Court of Admiralty have to give up its view or grant an action when Lord Campbell's Act did not? We are of opinion that the appeal should be allowed.

The court being equally divided, the appeal was dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for appellants, Stokes, Saunders, and Coles.

Solicitors for respondents, Gellatly and Warton.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. BAIKES, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Dec. 7 and 11, 1876; and April 21, 1877.

Before JAMES, L.J., BAGGALLAY and BRETT, J.J.A.)

CARGO EX SCHILLER.

Salvage of life — Liability of cargo — Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) sects. 458, 459.

Where life salvage is performed, cargo, subsequently

(a) It does not seem to have been pointed out to the court that the Court of Admiralty had, and the Admiralty Division still has, the power under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, sect. 11, to direct a trial by jury of any issue or issues before a judge of a superior court of common law sitting in London or Middlesex, or a judge of assize, and that his power is still further extended by the Judicature Act 1875, sect. 70, and the Supreme Court Rules, Order XXXVI., rule 29. These enactments would empower the Admiralty judge to direct an issue to be tried whether he is entitled to any, and, if so, what sum under Lord Campbell's Act, or some such issue.—Ed.

salved from the same vessel as the lives, but by persons employed by the owners for the purpose and wholly distinct from the life salvors, is liable to contribute towards the reward due to the life salvors under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sects. 458, 459.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) in a cause of salvage instituted against the cargo of the German steamship Schiller by the owners, masters, and crews of some pilot cutters and boats, to recover reward for services rendered in saving the lives of some of the passengers in that vessel. The Schiller was wrecked on the Retarrier Reef among the Scilly Islands. The plaintiffs saved only the lives, and rendered no service to the vessel or the cargo; no part of the cargo was saved at the time of the plaintiffs' services, but some time afterwards, when the owners of part of the cargo (bullion) engaged a staff of divers and workmen, and with their assistance succeeded in getting up a considerable quantity of specie. This cargo the plaintiffs now proceeded against. The court below held that the cargo was liable to pay salvage reward in respect of the services in saving life. From this judgment the defendants, the owners of the specie, appealed.

The facts, and the judgment of the court below, will be found fully reported, ante, p. 226.

Dec. 7, 1876. — Butt, Q.C. and Lodge for the appellants.—Here the lives and the cargo were saved at different times and by different persons. In The Fusilier (B. & L. 341; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 186; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177) it was held by the Privy Council, that where cargo and lives are saved at the same time, the cargo is liable for the salvage of life. That case is so far against the appellants, unless it can be argued that the decision is wrong and this court is not bound by it. [JAMES, L.J.—We are sitting here in the place of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on appeal from an Admiralty decision, and are exercising the jurisdiction formerly exercised by them. I think we must consider ourselves bound by their decisions in Admiralty matters. Good reasons may be given why we should not be so bound, and the question may be raised, but my present opinion is that we are bound.] We submit that the court is not bound by that decision; but even if it is, the present case is distinguishable. The first question is, What was the Admiralty jurisdiction to award salvage of life before the Merchant Shipping 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104)? Unless ship or cargo, or both, were saved there was no salvage reward payable for merely saving life; where life was saved together with ship and cargo, it was customary to give a larger reward than if property only had been saved. Then the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (sects. 458, 459) deals with the question by enacting that the salvage in respect of life shall be payable by the ship from which the lives are taken; it is not payable by the cargo, but by the ship; even if these salvors had saved the cargo at the same time as the lives, they could not recover against the cargo. [BRETT, J.A.—Sect. 459, in making the salvage of life "payable by the owners of the ship or boat," seems to assume that the shipowner is to pay for the lives even though the ship is not saved.] The Legislature did not mean to fix personal liability upon any person unless the ship or cargo is saved. The intention

[Ct. of App.]

CARBOON SCHILLER.

[Ct. of App.]

was, that on the ship being saved life salvage should be paid out of the ship, but not otherwise. The sections, on the face of them, no doubt, give the right to proceed even if everything is lost and never recovered; but if that section gives such right, then the salvors might sue in a common law action as soon as they had saved life. This would be an absurdity, as some property must be saved before any claim can be made for life salvage; and if anything must be saved, then the claim can only be against the ship under sect. 459. Here no property of any sort has been "saved" in the sense in which that word is used in the Merchant Shipping Act 1854; the work of the recovery of the cargo was done by the owners of the cargo themselves, and consequently there were no salvors and no salvage of cargo. This distinguishes the case from The Fusilier (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177) where there was a salvage of ship and cargo at the same time as a salvage of life. The cargo has nothing in common with the passengers, and before its owner should be condemned in salvage for lives the words of the Act making him liable ought to be so strong that the court is coerced so to decide; whereas the effect of the Merchant Shipping Act is merely to give a direct right to salvage where no right existed before, and salvors only obtained their award indirectly. Salvors are not without their means of reward in the case of the ship being of no value, because they can, under sect. 459, claim reward out of the Mercantile Marine Fund, and by this section this is the remedy to be taken on the loss of the ship; there is no mention of the cargo.

Dec. 11, 1876.—The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and W. G. F. Phillimore for the respondent.—By sect. 44 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, all cargo washed ashore from any ship, or lost or taken from such ship, must be delivered to the receiver of wreck, and any person, whether he be owner or not, secreting or keeping possession of and not delivering such cargo to the receiver is liable to a penalty. The receiver has the right to the possession of all wreck, and to hold the same until security be given for payment of salvage (sect. 468); and "wreck" covers flotsam, jetsam, lagan, derelict, and everything else taken out of the sea or from the shore (sect. 2). Hence, even where owners save their own property, the receiver is entitled to possession if there are any claims of salvage against it, and that for the purpose of obtaining security for salvage. But here there was actual salvage of the species, because the owners did not do the work themselves, but they entered into agreement with or hired divers to recover the property, and these divers might, if they had not been paid, have proceeded in Admiralty to recover their stipulated reward. The owners are in the position of subsequent salvors. The Merchant Shipping Act (sect. 459) does not leave the right to life salvage dependent upon the saving of the ship, but such salvage is recoverable in any case, whether the ship be lost or not; if any other construction is put upon the Act, then on the loss of the ship life salvage is recoverable only against the Mercantile Marine Fund, and this would place life salvors in a worse position than they were before that Act. [JAMES, L.J.—Under the old law the ship and cargo were liable only where they were saved with the lives. Did not the Privy Council, in The Fusilier (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177) hold that the Merchant Shipping Act gave power to enforce claims for salvage of life when there would have been a right to such cargo prior to the Act, and that the right to sue on or cargo for life salvage was under the Act an absolute right, but only in cases where a court would previously have had power to sue against ship and cargo in their hands? I submit that the Act gives much greater than existed before the Act, life salvors a right to salvage as against ship and cargo, in this right exists under the Act, so as to be enforceable independently of the salvage of ship or cargo. In The Cairo (L. Rep. 4 Adm. & Ecc. 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 535; 2 Asp. Mar. Law 257), it was held that a ship was liable for salvage of the lives of part of her crew who left her in boats in consequence of a collision, and afterwards got into danger. [BARR, L.J.—There was decided after The Fusilier (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177) But how can it be that salvage of life is payable out of cargo when saved by its own owner? It is not sect. 458 make each separate thing liable for its own salvage except life, the payment for life being provided for by sect. 459? JAMES, L.J.—Sect. 458 seems to make salvage for ship, cargo, and life payable by the owners of ship and cargo indiscriminately.] The question has been determined so long that it can scarcely now be reopened. In 1857 Dr. Lushington, in The Commodore, decided that salvors of life were entitled to be paid salvage in priority to all other claims, even in a case where they had not contributed to the saving of the property. Before the Act the cargo alone contributed to life salvage, as it paid its proportion of the increased reward: (The Fusilier, 5 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177). The same principle was applied in The William III. (25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 467; 3 Adm. & Ecc. 467, 1 Asp. Mar. Law 257) [BARR, L.J.—The foundation of the right to salvage is, according to Dr. Lushington, the preceding in rem: (The Fusilier). What does the statute say that property saved by themselves may be seized by the Admiralty for life salvage only where it could not have been seized under the old law? By sect. 44 the receiver has power to seize and detain the cargo until payment is made or security is given for salvage due, whether for ship, cargo, or life.]

But, Q.C. in reply.—If the respondents' interpretation of sect. 458 is right, an owner of cargo is liable for services rendered to ship, and a ship for services rendered to cargo, the duty to avoid difficulty is to read sect. 458 singula singulis, and to make each thing pay its own salvage. [BACALLAY, L.J.—I apply that principle, who, under sect. 458 alone, would be liable to pay for life salvage? Either no one, or the persons whose lives were saved; but reading the section with sect. 459, liability rests upon the owners of ship. In the cases cited was the cargo saved separately apart from the lives, and they are therefore distinguishable.]

April 21, 1877.—BARR, L.J.—In this case whilst ship and cargo were in danger, the crew saved the lives of fifteen persons, some of whom were the crew of the ship, and others passengers on board her; but after such lives had been saved, the ship and cargo sank in the water, and all who had at any time salved; and this statement of the law shows clearly that, independently of the statute, no claim could be substantiated in the present case, because no property has been salved by anyone. There is no property which, irrespective of the statute, could be seized by way of lien, so as to give the Admiralty Court any jurisdiction to enforce any lien against it, or to deal with it at all. The question is whether the statute has given any right to the Court of Admiralty to deal with any property with which it could not have dealt at all before the statute, which it had no jurisdiction to seize or detain before the statute.

The former statute (9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, ss. 1-5) enacts that "every person who shall act or be employed in any way whatsoever on the saving or preserving of any ship, or any part of the cargo thereof, or of the life of any person on board the same, shall be paid a reasonable reward of compensation by way of salvage for such service by the commander or owner of the said ship, or by the merchant whose ship, vessel, or cargo shall be so saved as aforesaid." If the reward to be paid had been simply a money reward, it would have been unnecessary to use the phrase "by way of salvage;" that phrase, introduces the law of salvage. The enactment that the reward shall be by way of salvage gives jurisdiction to the Admiralty. But that jurisdiction is founded on the possibility of a proceeding in rem. Moreover, among the classes to pay are the owners of a ship saved, the owner of ship or cargo saved; so that the whole section is founded on the assumption that property has been saved. It cannot, as it seems to me, be doubted that "saved" is used for "salved by salvors" when the compensation is to be "by way of salvage." The enactment does not give a new subject-matter on which the Admiralty may enforce a lien, but gives a new cause or service in respect of which the Admiralty may enforce a lien upon the same subject-matter as before. The sections 458 and 459 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, seem to me to use the same technical phraseology in dealing with the doctrine of salvage as has been invariably used in every case, treatise, and statute on salvage. The word "saved," in such phraseology, is used for "salved," i.e., "saved by salvors." This is shown in sect. 458 by the statement that "there shall be payable to the person by whom such services, or any of them, are rendered a reasonable amount of salvage." It is not said "a reasonable compensation," but "a reasonable amount of salvage." So in sect. 459, it is salvage which is payable, not compensation, and the mode of enforcing the claim in the last resort is by sale under sect. 469; the whole remedy is evidently founded on the Admiralty remedy, which, though it does not absolutely shut out a remedy by suit in personam, either in the Admiralty Court, or it may be perhaps in some other division of the High Court, yet shows that it is a remedy for a salvage claim which imports, as is stated in The Zephyrus (1 W. Rob. 329) and in The Fusilier (2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177) the possibility of a suit in rem. The case of The Fusilier is in its facts consistent with this view of the statute. In it cargo was salved. It is not, therefore, as to its facts, an authority against the defence in this cause; neither, as it seems to me, is any of the reasoning adverse to the contention of the defendants in the present case. The decision in The Fusilier is in reality founded on the view that the statute was dealing with the causes or services for which salvage reward might be awarded not with the subject-matter on which the reward was to take effect. That is the reason why a strong decision is arrived at that the omission of the word "cargo" in sect. 459 does not alter the law that cargo was one subject-matter of the law of salvage reward. If it did not alter the law, what was the subject-matter of a salvage reward in that case, it does not in this court. The facts stated in the judgment, goes no further than The Fusilier. The ship had received salvage for saving of life, where the ship itself had rendered no salvage service and had been in no danger, entitled the salvors of life to seize the ship and cargo, it must result in this, that whenever cargo is lost overboard, whether by his own neglect or otherwise, the ship and cargo can be saved. That seems to be a result so destructive of the time adventure that no such construction can be put upon the statute if it can be avoided. "The construction," says Dr. Lushington in Fusilier (B. & L. 346), "that cargo should contribute to life salvage would work a great change in the law and go beyond the ground which existed." "The Legislature," says Lord Chelmsford (The Fusilier, B. & L. 351), "in dealing with the subject of life salvage, must be taken to have been aware of this practice, and to have intended to confer upon the Court of Admiralty power of doing that directly which they had been so long in the habit of doing indirectly." "What the Admiralty had been in the habit of doing indirectly was to give reward for life salvage which it could be paid out of or borne by any of the property which had itself been saved in the course of having been salved by salvors. The Admiralty had never assumed jurisdiction to deal with property which had never been salved by any salvors. The doctrine, therefore, does not include the present case. There is ample scope for the application of the statute within the doctrine, without holding that it includes the present case. It seems to me contrary to the ordinary principles of construction to say that, without words more express than are used in this statute, property, which before the statute was not the subject-matter of any suit, which was not capable of being brought within any jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court, should now be swept into such jurisdiction and be made the subject of such a suit. If that colour is given to a contrary view by Dr. Lushington in the Coromandel (Swab. 206) apprehend," he says, "the Legislature, in that place, was well aware that there were many cases in which life was saved and property was lost, and that consequently there was no doubt which could, as a matter of right, be claimed by those who, perhaps at the risk of their own lives, had saved the lives of others, and they provided for that contingency in the first section. My belief is that Dr. Lushington, in alluding to the power given to the Admiralty to award a sum of money where there was or an insufficient amount of property saved, if not, the facts of the case did not require for the ship was salved. In such view I could not agree with it.

Upon that which I apprehend the construction of the statute and

[OF APP.]

CARGO vs SCHILLER.

[CT. OF APP.]

deration stated above, I am of opinion that salvage claim could be legally enforced against specie or its owners in this case, and therefore the judgment appealed against should be reversed.

REGALLAY, L.J.—The state of the law affecting salvage as it existed or was recognised prior to passing of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 was ribbed by Dr. Lushington in the passages of his ment in the case of The Fusilier (2 Mar. Law O.S. 177) to which Sir Baliol Brett has referred, it is unnecessary for me to add to the description given; nor do I propose to refer further to circumstances of the present case than to reveal that the claim of the plaintiffs is resisted by the defendants upon the grounds, first, that, as regards the provisions of the Act of 1854, claims of life salvors can, in no case, be enforced against the owners of cargo, but only against the owners of the ship, or failing that, against the Mercantile Marine Fund; and secondly, that, if such claims can, to any extent, be enforced against the owners of cargo, life salvors are not by law entitled to any remuneration against cargo which has not been salvaged, in the ordinary acceptance of the expression, either by themselves on any other persons, but has been subsequently recovered by agents employed by the owners for that purpose. As regards the first of these points, it was admitted that adverse decisions have been given both in the Court of Admiralty and in the Privy Council; but it was urged upon me that it had been upon the judgment of the Admiralty, and that these decisions should be reviewed. The judgment of the Admiralty Court gave judgment in favour of the plaintiffs, and I am of opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

Substantial questions for our consideration arise to the effect of the provisions of the Act of 1854, and to that I propose to at once address myself. Now, omitting the references to the saving of the ship, which do not appear to me to have any bearing upon the questions now under consideration, the 458th section enacts that "whenever any ship or boat is stranded or otherwise in distress, and services are rendered by any person, (1) in saving such ship or boat; (2) in saving the persons belonging to such ship or boat; (3) in saving the cargo or apparel of such ship or any portion thereof . . . there shall be payable by the owners of such ship or boat, cargo, or wreck, to the person by whom such services, or any of them, are rendered . . . a reasonable amount of salvage . . ." Now, these provisions are very wide. If any of the three classes of service is rendered—for instance, if the saving of the ship is the only service—the owners of the several classes of property—ship, cargo, and apparel—are made liable to pay a reasonable amount of salvage to the person rendering the service. This is the grammatical meaning of the words used in the 458th section. I am unable to follow the argument that has been addressed to us, that the words "and apparel" or "declaring the liability are to be read ad singula singulis. If the service of saving the ship had been omitted, there might have been some force in the argument that the owners of ship, cargo, and apparel were to be respectively liable to the salvors of the property of which they were respectively the owners; but upon whom, if this principle is to be adopted, is the liability to be imposed in cases of the salvage being confined to life? It is clear, from the terms of the section, that the burden is to fall somewhere; and why, so far as the provisions of this section are concerned, should it be imposed upon the owners of the ship any more than upon the owners of the cargo? If the solution of the question depended upon the proper effect to be given to sect. 458, and upon that alone, I think there could be no question as to the liability being imposed upon the owners of cargo as well as upon the owners of the ship.

But what is the nature and extent of the liability imposed? In the terms of the section, it is a liability to pay "a reasonable amount of salvage;" but is this to be construed as a general personal liability to be enforced against the owners under any circumstances, whether the ship and cargo are lost or not, or as a liability capable of being enforced against, and therefore limited to the value of, the property, whether ship or cargo be saved from destruction? and if the latter be the true construction, is the liability limited to the value of the ship or cargo "saved by salvors," as the expression is ordinarily understood; or does it extend to ship or cargo saved from destruction by other means, as by reason of the ship riding out the storm, or of the cargo being recovered through the exertions of the owners, or of persons specially employed by the owners for that purpose?

The subsequent sections of the Act, when taken in connection with the 458th, throw much light upon these questions. In sect. 459 we find a provision which at first sight gives rise to a doubt, whether it was or not the intention of the Legislature to provide that the liability to the payment of life salvage should be confined to the owners of the ship, and should not extend to the owners of the cargo; and this view, as I have already said, has been pressed upon us by the counsel for the appellants. The provision in question is to the effect that life salvage "shall be payable by the owners of the ship in priority to all other claims of salvage, and in cases where such ship or boat is destroyed, or where the value thereof is insufficient to pay the amount of salvage in respect of any life or lives, the Board of Trade may, in its discretion, award to the salvors, out of the Mercantile Marine Fund, such sum as it deems fit, in whole or in part satisfaction of any amount of salvage so left unpaid in respect of such life or lives." Now it is, in the first place, to be remarked that, if it had been the intention of the Legislature that liability in respect of life salvage should be confined to the owners of the ship, it is somewhat strange that it has not said so in plain terms, but has left it to be inferred from the terms of two sections which, in this view of the case, would be conflicting. Again, if the 459th section is to have the effect contended for by the appellants, it would follow that, in cases in which ship, cargo, and life are all saved by the same salvors (for the section is not confined to cases in which life alone is saved), the owners of cargo would be relieved from the liability to which, under the old law, they would have been subject; a result which would be contrary to the whole scope and scheme of the enactment, which was to increase, and not to diminish, the rewards for life salvage. But some reliance has been placed by the appellants upon that portion of sect. 459 which provides that where the ship is destroyed, or where the value thereof is insufficient to meet the amount of life salvage, the Board of Trade may award to the salvors, out of the Mercantile Marine Fund, such sums as it may deem fit, in whole or in part satisfaction of the amount of salvage payable. Now the words taken per se do not, in my opinion, carry the argument that the owners of the ship are alone liable, any further than the earlier words in the section, to which I have already adverted; but they appear to me to negative any general personal liability of the owners of the ship; for, if it had been intended by the Legislature that there should be any such general liability of the owners, it is difficult to understand why, in the event of the ship being wholly or partially destroyed, they should be relieved from a liability primarily cast upon them, and that it should be imposed upon the Mercantile Marine Fund. Upon the whole, it appears to me that the true effect of sect. 459 is merely to give as against the ship a priority to claims in respect of life salvage over all other salvage claims whatever, and to leave as well to life salvors as to salvors of property all such other rights and remedies as they might be entitled to either under the old law or under the Merchant Shipping Act; and if it be the case that upon the true construction of sects. 458 and 459, the liability of the owners of the ship is not a general liability, but is limited to the value of the property saved, it must follow that the same construction will hold good as regards the liability of the owners of the cargo, for in 458th section, which created the liability, no distinction is drawn between the nature of the liability of the owners of the ship and the owners of the cargo. But any doubts to which the words of the 459th section may give rise as regards the liability of the owners of the cargo are, in my opinion, removed by the language of the 468th section, which provides for the detention of the ship and the cargo, and apparel belonging thereto, whenever any salvage is due in respect of services rendered in assisting such ship or saving the lives of the persons belonging to the same, or in saving the cargo or apparel thereof; thus following the three several services enumerated in sect. 458. Why should the cargo be detained in cases in which there has been life salvage only, if the owners of such cargo are under no liability to pay or contribute to the amount due in respect of such life salvage?

The 469th section also has the same bearing, for it provides for the sale of any ship, cargo, or apparel which has been so detained, and for the payment of the amount due.

Upon a consideration of these several sections of the Act, I am of opinion that the liability to pay a reasonable amount of salvage to life salvors is imposed upon owners of cargo as well as upon owners of the ship, and that such liability is not a general personal liability to be enforced under any circumstances, whether the ship and cargo are lost or not; but a liability limited to the value of the property saved from destruction. The question remains is to be considered, what is to be included in "property saved from destruction?" And I am of opinion that, as regards the right of life salvors to claim a reasonable amount of salvage, it is immaterial whether the property saved from destruction has been saved by salvors, as the expression is ordinarily understood, or by other means. The words of the 458th section of the Act, which creates the liability, appear to me to apply equally to the one class of property as to the other. Reliance has been placed upon the use of the word "salvage," indicating that the claim must be in respect of property saved by salvors as recognised by the law, and that no right was conferred by the law upon the life salvors against or in respect of property which would not have been subject to claims for salvage under the old law; but regard to the provisions and scope of the Act of 1854, and the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, which amended it, I do not think that the word was in the 458th section in the limited sense suggested. Indeed, the section appears to me to contain no clear indication of the contrary; for the owners of the ship and cargo are made liable when any of the three services is rendered, and consequently when life has been saved, and there has been no salvage, in the limited acceptance of the term, of either ship or cargo; and in the 459th section the word "salvage" is clearly used to measure the reward or compensation to which a life salvor is entitled in cases in which by reason of the total loss of the ship no claim for salvage could have been enforced under the old law. The result, I am of opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature, in passing the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, not only to give a legislative sanction to the existing practice of directly rewarding salvors of life when they save property also, but to remedy the injustice of the existing law and practice, so far as they failed to provide reward for saving of property when unaccompanied by a saving of property, and that under the provisions of the Act the owners of all property saved, whether ship, cargo, or apparel, and however saved, are rendered liable, to the extent of the value of the property saved, for a reasonable amount of salvage in respect of life saved, even though the life salvors have in no respect assisted in the salvage of either ship or cargo. If the construction which I have expressed of the changes effected by the Merchant Shipping Act in the law of salvage are correct, it would follow that, in the present case, the plaintiffs' claim for salvage is well founded, and that the decision of the Admiralty Court should be affirmed.

It has been suggested in the course of the argument that the property recovered in the present case was "wreck." I do not think that it was within the meaning of the statute; but it is to me to be immaterial to consider whether it was so or not. It was a portion of the property saved from destruction. If it was "wreck" a question might arise whether the life salvors' claim against more than the owners' interest in "wreck;" that is, whether it was not payable to the fees of the receiver of wreck, and payable to other payments under the wreck clause of the Act. The value of the recovered portion of the cargo is, however, much more than sufficient to meet all those claims and demands, and it is immaterial to consider their respective payments.

Several cases have been cited in the course of the argument, but I do not think it necessary to mention them further than to say that, in none of them do they do not support any views opposed to which I have expressed. The case of Levi (ubi sup.) is the one which has been most discussed. In that case assistance was rendered by a life boat, by two life boats, and by a steam tug. The services rendered were distinct, and were different in ned in respect of assistance rendered argo, and made no claim for saving boat service was in saving life alone; ug claimed both for saving life, and rendered to ship and cargo. It was n behalf of owners of cargo that, as uch of the claim of the tug as was in iving life, and as regards the entire life boat, the liability to pay salvage y the Merchant Shipping Act to the e ship; but the Court of Admiralty instance, and the Judicial Committee ecided adversely to this contention, was awarded against the owners of ll as against the owners of the ship. nt the same questions were raised in The Fusilier as have been raised in case, and were decided adversely to of cargo. In the views expressed in r Dr. Lushington in the Court of nd by Lord Chelmsford in the Privy tirely concur.

—I am also of opinion that the judge of the Admiralty Court ought d. The Act of Parliament in plain hat a life salvor is to be paid salvage, b salvage is to be paid by the ship and nly fund from which it could be paid. it of Dr. Lushington, affirmed by the cil, has established this, that (not; some apparent difficulty raised by ng sections) such salvage is not to be aively on the ship, but is to be borne he ship and cargo. There is nothing f Parliament which says, and nothing n my opinion it is reasonably to be ; the right of the life salvors is sub- dition precedent that some salvage ld be rendered by some one to the go or either. No doubt the language Council is "ship and cargo saved," ot say, and in my judgment could not o say the ship and cargo saved by the or. The word "saved" there means, o my view of the language, that the go has escaped from the peril in which s come to shore whether as wreck or There is nothing unreasonable in owners of the ship and cargo pay for of the lives on board, any more than e anything unreasonable in a man useholder pay for the salvage of the mates from a fire; but it would be most e to make the right of the life salvors pend on the fortuitous circumstance her salvor unconnected with him suc- ending to ship or cargo salvage onected with the life salvage. romandel (Swab. 205) the life salvage l to a boat load of men who had escaped ip; the other salvage was rendered and hours afterwards by a totally dis- of salvors. In The Fusilier (2 Mar. O. S., 177) some of the life salvors ad something to do with the salvage and cargo, but that was a mere acci- ter part of their services was of the nd; and, moreover, the owners of a had nothing whatever to do with the hip or cargo were decreed to partici- ife salvage paid by the ship and cargo. ns to me quite in accordance with reason and principle. If a ship is in distress, and the persons who go to its rescue busy themselves in the first instance, as they ought to do, exclusively with the salvage of lives, and while they are doing this, by a change of weather, a rising tide and a favourable breeze lift the ship and waft her into a safe cove, surely it is quite as reasonable and right that the ship and cargo saved by the aid of God and without further expense, should pay the life salvors as if they had been saved by a steam tug coming up at the critical moment, or by some other salvage services for which they would have further to pay. In this case the ship was not saved, but cargo was saved; that is to say, it remained in a place to which the owners had access, and from which they were able to get it. It appears to me to make no difference that the bullion has been brought to the surface by the divers paid by the owners.

Doubtless, in estimating the value of the wreck, a large deduction might have to be made—a very liberal allowance—for the fact that the owners had to pay for somewhat special and speculative services in realising it. But then there can be no doubt in this case, that with the largest possible allowance on this head, the value of the cargo was very large, indeed so large that the amount of salvage awarded would appear to be a moderate percentage.

I base my decision on the words of the statute as they would be understood by plain men who know nothing of the technical rule of the Court of Admiralty, or of flotsam, jetsam, or lagan. The Legislature tells mariners that, if they exert themselves personally to save life, they shall receive a reward on the principles of salvage; and to put a technical meaning on the words, so as to limit the operation of the enactment, would be "to keep the word of promise to the ear, and break it to the hope."

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Walton, Bubb, and Walton.

Solicitors for the respondent, Lowless and Co.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, and J. M. LEBLY, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

June 12, 15, and 25.

LOHRE v. AITCHISON AND ANOTHER.

Marine insurance—Policy on ship—Partial loss—Repairs—Amount recoverable.

An underwriter's liability under a policy on ship when the ship has sustained damage which the assured, although entitled to abandon elects to repair, must be measured by the cost of the repairs necessitated by the perils insured against, less one-third new for old, notwithstanding the underwriter is thereby made liable for more than the assured could have claimed for a total loss with benefit of salvage, and the assured obtains more than an indemnity for his loss.

*A ship worth 3000*l.*, and valued at 2600*l.*, was insured for 1200*l.* Having sustained sea damage, she was repaired at a cost of 441*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.

Q.B. Div.]

LOHRE v. AITCHISON AND ANOTHER.

[Q.B.]

Adding certain other particular average charges, and deducting one-third new for old material the amount of underwriter's liability on ship was 3178l. 11s. 7d. The ship was new metalled, and had other new work done to her, and as fully repaired was worth 7000l. Salvage expenses were paid by the plaintiff, amounting to 519l. 0. 1d., which added to 3178l. 11s. 7d., made 3697l. 11s. 8d. The plaintiff claimed to be paid 1707l., as a proportion of that amount. The defendants paid into court 1080l. as a proportion of 2340l., the amount of a total loss with benefit of salvage.

Held, first, that the amount paid for salvage could not be taken into the estimate; but as the amount of the proportion on the estimate of the repairs exceeded 1200l.,

Held, secondly, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the 1200l.

THIS was an action upon a policy of marine insurance upon the ship Crimea, afterwards called the Alf. The declaration contained a count on the policy, stating the interest to be in the plaintiff, and alleging a total loss of the subject matter of the insurance by the perils insured against, and further alleging that the plaintiff necessarily incurred certain charges and expenses under the suing and labouring clause in the policy; and there were also common money counts. The plaintiff, by his particulars, showed that he claimed the sum of 1707l., being the defendants' proportion of a total sum or claim of 3697l. 11s. 8d. The defendants pleaded to the whole declaration, bringing into court the sum of 1080l., being the defendants' proportion of a total sum of 2340l., and saying that it was enough to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff, by his replication, denied that it was enough.

By consent of the parties, and by an order of Brett, J., made the 27th Feb., 1875, the facts were stated for the opinion of the court in the form of the following

CASE.

1. The plaintiff was throughout the whole period hereinafter referred to, and is, the sole owner of the above mentioned Crimea, afterwards Alf.

2. On the 25th Sept., 1872, Messrs. Potter and Co., being the agents of the plaintiff for that purpose, effected the policy on which this action is brought for 1200l. upon the said ship valued at 2600l. against the usual sea risks on an out and home voyage from the Clyde to Quebec or St. John's, whilst there and thence to any port or ports, place or places of call and (or) discharge in the United Kingdom. The policy contains the usual suing and labouring clause. The policy was duly signed by the defendants, who are two of the directors of the Marine Insurance Company, on behalf of the said company; and the policy was effected for the purpose of covering the interest of the plaintiff in the said ship on the said voyage. The ship was fully insured up to the agreed value, the balance of the sum of 2600l. being covered by other policies.

3. The ship safely performed the outward voyage, and duly arrived at St. John's. While there, she was, on the 7th Nov., 1872, chartered by the master to Messrs. Guy, Stewart, and Co., merchants of that place, to load a cargo of deals and battens, and therewith proceed to Dublin and there deliver the same.

4. On the 1st Jan. 1873, the said ship, being in every respect in seaworthy condition, and efficiently found and manned, sailed from S. J. on her homeward voyage under the charter, her cargo of deals and battens on board. On 3rd and 5th Jan. the ship met with heavy seas, and during the 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st Jan. encountered most violent storms and gale wind, with tremendous seas, by which her keels were stove or carried away, and many of her ribs were blown away and great damage was done, so she was reduced to a leaky and waterlogged condition.

5. On the 30th Jan. the ship, being then in great danger of being completely lost, and being without fresh water or provisions, and in a high position, and not capable of being navigated, she on board of her sighted the steamship Texas, who ultimately took her in tow, without any agreement being come to as to remuneration for the service, and took her into Queenstown, and on or about the 11th March she was placed in safety near the wharf of the Victoria Dry Dock Company.

6. For the above mentioned services the crew of the steamship Texas subsequently demanded a sum of 3000l., and they caused the ship Crimea or Alf, her cargo and freight, to be arrested under a warrant of the High Court of Admiralty, Ireland in a salvage suit, instituted in rem against the ship, cargo, and freight.

7. By the plaintiff's instructions, the said suit was defended on behalf of the plaintiff and the parties interested in the cargo, and an answer was duly entered on behalf of the plaintiff and the owners of cargo. A sum of 500l. was the answer, tendered in satisfaction of the claim of the owners of the Texas, which sum was accepted, and the suit accordingly came on for hearing. In the result, the court awarded to the owners of the Texas a sum of 800l. in respect of the services rendered, and condemned the defendants in the suit in costs.

8. In the course of the Admiralty suit as to the value of the ship and cargo were valued on behalf of the now plaintiff, and by those who valued the value of the ship as she then lay was shown to be 998l., and the value of the cargo, without deducting freight, 3780l.

9. The ship was surveyed and examined as she could be examined in her then condition, she lay at Queenstown, where the Texas had been by a competent surveyor, who, on the 11th of Feb. 1873, made a report of his survey, in which he described the condition of the ship so far as he could then ascertain, and recommended that the ship should be placed on a mud bank, and that she should then be pumped out, if possible, so that she could be discharged and placed in dock for further examination and repairs, to bring her into a seaworthy state.

10. The ship was placed on the mud bank, and the water pumped out of her, and a portion of the cargo discharged. A further survey was made on the 30th April, made by the same surveyor as before, of which he reported the result. In his report, he further described the state of the ship, and recommended the bottom to be caulked and secured, so as to enable the vessel to be taken out of dock, that the cargo might all be discharged, and then docked if required, to enable the full extent of the damage to be sustained, by further examination.

11. The recommendations of the carried out, and the ship was then by the same surveyor as before, and sent surveyor from the 6th to the 12th he 12th June those surveyors re-surveyed of their survey what they necessary for the repair of the ship. The plaintiff thereupon applied for estimate of doing the work so specified. Estimate obtained was that of the the Royal Victoria Dockyard, be-

Cork Harbour Docks and Warehouse, who on the 16th of June estimated repairing the ship at 2982*l.*, not rigging, or equipment, or certain mentioned in the survey. On the 9th the plaintiff accepted that estimate, and a for the work specified therein at 2982*l.* was signed between the plaintiff company. The plaintiff at the same estimates for the necessary rigging, to 988*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*

It was accordingly repaired under contract. Besides the work included in the contract for 2982*l.*, the ship's rigging, equipment were made good, as specified and other work therein described was done. She was at the time metalled (not metalled before the loss) and, in addition, other work was done to her, as mentioned in the survey nor in the contract, the cost of which amounted to about 500*l.* (exception of this last mentioned metalling above mentioned, all the work on the ship was specified in the survey, the contract for 2982*l.* Of the work described, it is admitted that the cost of which was 695*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, and the cost of which amounted to about 500*l.* were new work, and not properly claim is made in respect of them. The works mentioned in the last paragraph metalling and the works covered by the purpose of making the ship strong, and seaworthy, which she was by reason of the sea damage she was as hereinbefore described, and obviously necessary for that purpose. Those works was to make the ship a stronger and better ship, and of very value than she had been before she was damaged.

General average charges were incurred by the ship was liable to contribute, covered by the policy, and divers other average charges were incurred other repairs which were covered by the

at the time of the loss was fifteen years old. Her value in her undamaged condition was 3000*l.* Her value in her damaged condition was 998*l.* The salvage and general average charges by the ship was 519*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.* The value of the ship (exclusive of the 519*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.* for metalling, and of about 500*l.* for work admitted not done on new work) was 4414*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* The net amount (after deducting therefrom new for old in all matters to which the principle is properly applicable) added to the other particular average charges on ship amounted to 3178*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* The value of the ship after repairs was 7000*l.*

17. The plaintiff contends that upon the facts hereinbefore stated he is entitled to recover 1707*l.*, a sum arrived at in the following manner. The said sum of 519*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*, being the ship's proportion of salvage and general average charges, and the said sum of 3178*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*, made up of the costs of repairs after deducting the one-third new for old as above stated, and of the other particular average charges upon the ship added together, made the aggregate sum of 3697*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, and 1707*l.* bears the same proportion to 3697*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, which 1200*l.*, the amount insured, does to 2600*l.*, the valuation in the policy. If this contention be right the amount paid into court is deficient.

18. The defendants contend that the above repairs cannot be allowed in particular average or as a measure of the depreciation of the vessel, and that in any event the underwriters are not liable for more than a total loss with benefit of salvage, deducting from such salvage the ship's proportion of all salvage and general average charges.

The court may draw inferences of fact, and may refer to any documents hereinbefore mentioned.

The question for the opinion of the court is whether the plaintiff's contention or the defendants' contention is correct, or upon what principle the defendants' liability is to be estimated.

After the decision of the court upon the above special case it is agreed that the matter shall be remitted to the arbitrator to settle the figures upon the footing laid down by the court.

Cohen, Q.C. (Hollams with him), for the plaintiff, relied on the principle that a contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity. He cited

Arnould on Marine Insurance, 4th edit., vol. 2, p. 934;

Peele v. Merchant Insurance Company, 3 Mason's Reports, 27.

Benjamin, Q.C. (Crofton with him), for the defendants, argued that the contention of the plaintiff was inconsistent with the first principles of insurance law, as involving the underwriter in a greater liability for a partial than for a total loss. He cited

Lidgett v. Secretan, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 95; L. Rep. 6 C. P. at p. 600;

North of England Iron Steamship Company v. Armstrong, L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 244;

Stewart v. Steele, 5 Scott, N. E. 927;

Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649;

Phillips on Insurance, vol. 2, para. 1742, 1743.

Cohen, Q.C., was heard in reply.

Our. adv. vult.

June 25.—The written judgment of the court, Mellor and Lush, J.J., was delivered as follows by

LUSH, J.—This case raises the following questions for our decision: 1. Whether the liability of the underwriter on a ship, which has been repaired by the assured, is to be measured by the cost of the repairs, or by the depreciation of the vessel as a saleable chattel; 2, whether, in the case of a partial loss, the assured can be liable for more than a total loss with benefit of salvage. [The learned judge then stated the facts, and proceeded]:

If the loss is to be estimated by the depreciation of the ship as a saleable chattel, the defendants have paid more than enough into court. For deducting from the value of the hull the cost of bringing her to port, and supposing this to be 519*l.*, the balance, 479*l.*, represents the salvage: and, deducting that sum from the 3000*l.*

Q.B. Div.]

LOMBE v. ATTECHISON AND ANOTHER.

[Q.B. Div.]

her value when she sailed, the depreciation by sea damage would be 2521l., or about 84 per cent.; which, upon 1200l., would be 1006l. This is the principle on which damage to cargo is estimated, and this, the defendants contend, is all that they are liable to pay. And what lends additional force to the defendants' contention is that, even with this percentage, the plaintiff will be more than indemnified. He has paid altogether, in order to get the ship up to her present value of 7000l., sums for repairs amounting to 4414l. 18s. 11d., for metalling 695l. 17s. 10d., for other new work 500l., and for salvage and average charges 519l., making altogether 6129l. If he recovers 84 per cent. on 2600l. he will realize 2184l., which, deducted from 6129l., leaves 3945l. as the total outlay to be borne by him. Adding to this the original value of the ship (3000l.), the aggregate falls short of what the ship is now worth by 55l.; and if he recovers from the underwriters the full amount of his insurance he will be about 500l. in pocket. This is certainly a startling result, and one which gives great moral force to the defendants' argument. But although it happens in this particular case that the plaintiff will not only be indemnified, but will be a considerable gainer, the contract cannot receive a different construction from that which it could have received if the result had been loss instead of gain to him. For the indemnity intended by the contract of insurance is the making good to the owner the loss he sustained by sea damage during the voyage insured. Whether the owner will ultimately be a gainer or a loser by the transaction is a matter beyond the scope of the contract, and one with which the underwriter has no concern. The circumstance that in this case the owner happens to be, in the result, in a better position than he would have been if the accident had not happened cannot, therefore, be taken into account. We must, consequently, return to the only question we have to consider: What is the measure of damage which the underwriter on a ship engages to pay in the case of a partial loss? Is the ship, for the purpose of this computation, to be viewed in its damaged, or in its repaired, condition? If ships were kept merely for sale, it might reasonably be contended that the same principle ought to be applied which is applied to damaged goods. But a ship is intended to be used for profit. The owner is in many contingencies bound to repair. He has always the right to repair, and it is in the contemplation of both parties that if damage happens the ship will be repaired if it is worth the expense. If, instead of repairing, the owner chooses to sell the ship in her damaged condition, he fixes his loss at the difference between what she was worth and what she is sold for; but if he elects to repair, the loss is ascertained by the cost of the repairs less a proper deduction on account of having new timber for old. There is no authority for the position that where the repairs have been done their cost (with the qualification mentioned) is not the proper measure for damage.

The anomaly in this case is really caused by the arbitrary rule which has been established of estimating the benefit which the owner receives from having new timbers in the place of old at one-third of their cost. If it were allowable to enter into what, in the present case, should be the proportion, a much larger allowance—perhaps two-thirds—would be nearer to the reality, and that would have reduced the claim on the underwriters to dimensions of the ordinary partial loss. But we think cannot be done. To prevent disputes and difficulties, which such an inquiry in each particular case would cause, an average of allowance has been adopted, and the rule has been so long established and so uniform that it has become practically incorporated in the contract. (See Da Costa v. Novatus, 1 Rep. 407; Poingdestre v. Royal Exchange Insurance Company, Ry. & Merc. 378, Francis v. Robinson, 3 C. & P. 324). For repairs to a ship which in the language of marine insurance is termed "new"—that is, ships on their first voyage or which are less than a year old (for it does not seem to be settled what the precise test of novelty is)—no allowance is made, for they are not the better for the repairs. But, in the case of other ships the rule applies, whatever may be their age or the state of their timbers. If a ship is, like the Crimea, an old ship the rule operates greatly in favour of the owner: if the ship is sound, newly built ships the underwriter has great advantage. It is clearly for the benefit of all parties that some fixed rule of allowance should be established, and as this has prevailed a long time it may be presumed that, on the whole, and after a long run, justice is done. At all events, being established, and being by implication part of the contract, it cannot be varied to meet the exigencies of a particular case. The contention that the underwriters are not liable for more than a key with benefit of salvage is founded on a misinterpretation of the contract, which is a contract of indemnity. When the assured abandons the ship for a total loss, the underwriter is entitled to salvage. But the owner is not bound to do so. He may always repair if he pleases, and claim for a partial loss; and when he does so the salvage belongs to him. The contract is to pay 1200l. in the event of a total loss, or a smaller sum if the loss is only a partial one. If this had been the intention, it should have been expressed. What the underwriter engages to pay any loss which the assured may incur by the perils insured against, not exceeding the specified amount.

The claim for a proportion of the expenses, over and above the 1200l., is one which cannot be allowed. It is true the party retains the usual suing and labouring clause, which is a separate contract, and by which the underwriter engages to contribute towards the expenses of "labour and travel" or, in, or about, defence, safeguard, and recovery of the ship. But these salvage services were not employed with any view to the benefit of the underwriter, nor did they ensure to his benefit. The expense done was so great as already to exhaust the policy, and the underwriter could gain nothing from the effort used to save the ship from sinking, and the plaintiff abandoned. If he had abandoned the defendants would have had the benefit of the services in having the hull, which was preserved by them, and then he must have paid for it. But as the assured refused to abandon, he was to appropriate those services to his own use, and having done so, he cannot charge them against the underwriter.

Judgment for the plaintiff.
Solicitors: for the plaintiff, Hollins, Sturt & Co.
Counsel: for the defendants, Wallace, Wilson & Walton.

] ALLKINS AND ANOTHER v. JUPE, PEMBROKE, OFFENHEIM, AND CHOISY.

[O.P. Div.]

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

by S. HARR, and A. H. BUTTERSTON, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, April 19, 1877.

AND ANOTHER v. JUPE, PEMBROKE, OFFENHEIM, AND CHOISY.

insurance—Wagering policy—Open policy and commission—Without benefit of "but to pay loss on such part as shall arrive"—Illegality—19 Geo. 2, c. 37—Return made.

under open policies of marine insurance and commission on goods to be shipped the clauses "warranted free from all and "without benefit of salvage," "but to pay upon such part as shall not arrive," upon a number of British ships, one of which was lost.

the policies were within 19 Geo. 2, c. 27,
Return of premium refused.

action was brought by the plaintiffs against defendants.

action was on two policies of insurance,
the first the 12th Jan. 1874, and the 8th
Feb. 1874, and underwritten by Jupe for the sum of £1000 and action was on the said policy of the 8th Feb. 1874, against Pembroke, for the sum underwritten by him.

the second action was on a policy dated the 16th
Jan. 1874, and underwritten for the sum of £1250.
The first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

the first action was on a policy of the 12th
Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.
The second action was on the said policy of the 16th Jan. 1874, underwritten by Choisy for £500.

months from final day of landing. Discount. Deposit 20 per cent. on presentation of weight notes.

The names of the principals on either side were not disclosed by the plaintiffs. They effected for the benefit of the buyers insurance on the profits expected on the shellac bought, and they also insured their own commission as brokers.

On the 12th Jan. the plaintiffs instructed their insurance brokers to procure an open policy on commission and profits for 1000*l.* by ships or steamers from Calcutta to London, and the policy of that date declared on was accordingly effected.
In like manner, the policies declared on of the 16th
Feb. and the 8th March 1874, for 500*l.* and 1000*l.*
respectively, were effected. The premiums paid were 10*l.* 1*8s.* 1*d.*, 7*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, and 15*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* respectively.

On the 8th Jan. the plaintiffs sold to a Mr.
Watkins 200 cases of orange shellac for Messrs.
Schultze and Mohr, at 11*l.* per cwt., and on the 16th Jan. resold 150 to Messrs. O. J. Peall and Company for 11*l.* 15*s.* per cwt.

On the 2nd Feb. Schultze and Mohr declared to the plaintiffs that 75 cases out of the 200 would arrive by the Woorung, and on the 12th Feb. the plaintiffs declared to Watkins and to Peall and Co.
to the same effect.

The commission on the sale of the 75 cases sold on the 8th Jan. amounted to 15*l.*, and on the 16th Jan. to 15*l.* 15*s.* The profit of 15*s.* per cwt. on the resale amounted to 67*l.* 10*s.*

The news of the loss of the Woorung reached London about the 4th March. She had been expected to arrive on the 25th March, by which time the price had risen to over 13*l.* per cwt.

On the 12th Jan. the plaintiffs sold 50 cases of garnet shellac for Schultze and Mohr to Palmer and Co. at 9*l.* 15*s.* per cwt., and on the 19th Jan.
resold the same to Farratt, Lodge, and Co. for 10*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per cwt.

On the 2nd Feb. the Woorung was declared to each purchaser as the ship by which the 50 cases would arrive.

The plaintiffs' commissions on those sales were 10*l.* 10*s.* and 11*l.* 4*s.* Palmer and Co.'s profit was 27*l.* On the 25th March the price of garnet shellac was above 11*l.*

On the 12th Feb. the plaintiffs declared an interest on the policy of the 12th Jan. to the extent of 120*l.* on the Woorung to cover the said profits and commissions. After receiving the news of her loss, they declared on the policy of the 16th Feb. an interest on the ship of 180*l.* to cover any profits and commissions not covered by the 120*l.*, and profits and commissions by intended resales by Peall and Co. and Farratt, Lodge, and Co.

The Woorung was a British vessel. Some portion of the shellac shipped in her reached London so damaged as to be incapable of identification, and subject to a heavy claim for salvage. The vendors gave notice that their contracts were void, and the shellac salvaged was sold for the benefit of the underwriters on cargo.

A similar case arose with respect to shellac on board the Queen Elizabeth.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:
First, whether the policies declared on were null and void under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, or whether they were good on commission or profits, or both; secondly, whether, if the policies were null and void, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the premiums paid, or any part thereof.

Ex. Div.]

ALKINS AND ANOTHER v. JUPE, PEMBER, OFFENHEIM, AND CHANNELL.

[Ex. Div.]

Other questions were submitted, but they depended upon the foregoing ones.

Benjamin, Q.C., Watkins Williams, Q.C. and Channell, for the plaintiffs.—We admit that the cases of

Smith v. Reynolds, 1 H. & N. 231;
De Mattos v. North, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 141; 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 797; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 185;
Mortimer v. Broadwood, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 229; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 398;

are against us to a certain extent; but in all of them the ratio decidendi was that the words "without benefit of salvage" vitiated the policy. And in all of them a particular ship was named, whilst here the policy is an open one. Thelasson v. Fletcher (1 Doug. 315) and André v. Fletcher (2 T. R. 161) decide that the statute in question is not applicable to other than British ships. This policy was not necessarily on a British ship, though the ship turned out eventually to be so. The policy also contains a statement with regard to a return for interest, which takes it out of the statute. [GROVE, J.—Is not the real meaning of the expression this, that there being less risk in a steamer than in a sailing vessel, the underwriters will take less premium?] On the face of the policy itself there is a declaration that it was not a wager policy, but on things in which the assured had an interest. The words "without benefit of salvage" are a mere stereotyped form. Besides, here they are overridden by the clause "to pay loss on such part as shall not arrive." Therefore, there is a benefit of salvage upon such parts as do arrive, and it is obvious there can be none on goods which do not arrive. The preamble of the statute refers to secret and concealed assurances: there is no such thing in this case, and the raison d'être of the statute does not apply. The leading case upon the subject is Lucena v. Crawford (2 Bos. & P. N. R. 269). At p. 310 the judges give their answer to the 7th question put to them by the House of Lords, which was to this effect, whether the plaintiffs had any interest capable of abandonment? and if not, whether that fact affected the validity of the assurance? The majority of the judges answered that the want of power to abandon was not a certain criterion of insurable interest. Here, the assured are not the owners of the goods, and could not insure them; but they have an interest, which is, that the goods shall arrive. The same view is taken in Phillips on Insurance, sect. 1503, where it is said that "a policy on expected profits does not seem to offer anything upon which an abandonment can operate, and it does not appear . . . that an abandonment of this interest can be of any importance to the underwriters, otherwise than as a notice that a total loss is claimed; and, if this is its only effect, an abandonment is not necessary." In Mortimer v. Broadwood (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 229) Montague Smith, J. said: "If you can show that no circumstances could possibly occur under which the underwriters would obtain salvage on an insurance of profits, you might be entitled to strike these words out." And Bovill, C.J. was of the same opinion. The policies are double: on profits, and on commission too. There can be no salvage of commission. Phillips on Insurance, sect. 1504: "The right of abandonment depends upon the same principles as in the case of freight.

. . . The assured may, by an abandonment, transfer to the insurers the right of receiving commissions in the event of the cargo arriving, but he cannot abandon the right of any commission." No notice of abandonment to the underwriters on freight is necessary (Emmott v. Potter, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 65, L. Rep. H. L. 83.) The insurance on commission is not within the words of the statute, for on profits is, because profits are part of the goods themselves. They also referred to Phillips on Insurance, 1 vol. pp. 193, 195, and 64; and 2 vol. pp. 170, 171, and 311. Upon the question of the return of the premiums paid, André v. Fletcher decided that they could not be recovered when the policy was illegal; but in this case the policy is not illegal upon the face of it, and only became so subsequently.

Cohen, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce for the defendants.—Suppose an owner of goods insures the goods with one and the profits with another and part of the goods are lost, but part arrive and are sold at a profit, that is a salvage of profits. There can, therefore, be a salvage on profits, and it belongs to the underwriters on profits. The case of De Mattos v. North (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 141) decided that an insurance of profits without benefit of salvage is illegal. The clause "to pay loss on such part as shall not arrive" is no more than a modification of the clause "without benefit of salvage." If this policy were on goods without the words "to pay loss," &c., if some of the goods did not arrive the underwriters would not be liable. The effect of the clause is that the underwriters are liable, not for damage, but for non-arrival. A salvage on commission is also possible. In this instance: goods, profits, and commission are insured; the ship is captured, a claim is made for a total loss, which is paid; then occurs a recovery and sale in England, or the ship is abandoned but the derelict is afterwards saved, in either case there is a salvage of profits and commission. The policy is illegal. The statute intended that certain forms of policy should presume a wager interest, and that such a presumption should be irrebuttable—the forms being those usually inserted in wagering policies: (Arnould on Marine Insurance, 11.) The clause "warranted free from average" means that the underwriters are not to be liable if no goods arrive. The words "to pay loss," &c., mean that the underwriters are to be liable if any part arrive. They do not create a benefit upon the underwriters, but increase their liability. There is to be no benefit of salvage at all. They cited also

Lucena v. Crawford, 2 E. & E. 170;

Phillips on Marine Insurance, sect. 1657.

The return of the premium cannot be recovered. If the policy was not illegal at its inception, it was made so by the declarations.

Channell, in reply.

GROVE, J.—In this case I am of opinion that the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the court.

The policy in question was a policy by which Alkins (one policy is clearly enough a wager as an example) "in their own names and every other person or persons to whom it may doth, may, or shall appertain, in part or in whole doth make assurance, and cause the same to be made, and every of them to be insured, but not lost, as and from Calcutta to London, and from

O.P. Div.]

ALLKINS AND ANOTHER V. JUPES, PEMBROKE, OPPENHEIM, AND CHESIST.

[O.P. Div.]

means, get more than an indemnity. No doubt it is also intended to obliterate a clause which had been found injurious and inequitable in its operation; and, for that purpose, it enacts that no policy shall contain such a clause. We cannot get out of that unambiguous enactment, because we think that in a particular case hardship would arise. As to the words of the policy themselves: "warranted free from all average" means that the underwriters have only to pay where there is either a total loss, or a constructive total loss. Where there is a constructive total loss, and there is salvage, the salvage goes to the underwriters. They pay upon the whole loss, and they take whatever is saved. Where the words are "warranted free from all average, and without benefit of salvage"—that is, as I read it, to the insurer—there the underwriters would have to pay for a total loss, and would not get the salvage, which would go to the assured, who would therefore get something more than an indemnity, a case clearly within the statute. The words "but to pay loss upon such part as shall not arrive" present some difficulty. It is clear that the underwriters would have to pay upon such goods as never arrive at all. But take the case of certain goods arriving by the vessels in which they are expected to arrive in specie, and in a saleable state, they would not have to pay upon them. Then suppose part of the goods are apparently lost, so that the underwriters pay upon them, but they afterwards get into the hands of the persons to whom they belong, two questions would arise: First, would the underwriters be entitled to recover back the money paid upon those goods? and then, what would be the effect of the words used in this policy? Would the underwriters have a right to recover their money only upon such goods as arrived in specie, or upon such goods and damaged goods also? Would they have a right to recover pro tanto upon all? Supposing they might recover on all, there might be a somewhat difficult question, because, if they are to recover on all (taking away the words "without benefit of salvage"), how can the words "warranted free from all average" be construed consistently with the words "to pay loss upon such part as shall not arrive?"

The interpretation I put upon the whole is this: the underwriters are to pay, not a total loss upon the whole, but only upon such goods as shall not arrive in the condition in which they are expected to arrive; and then the words "warranted free from all average" would apply to such goods as did not arrive in a damaged state. I should be inclined to go further, and to say that the words "to pay loss upon such part as shall not arrive" mean, to pay not on such goods as shall never arrive in any sense at any time, but upon such goods as shall appear to have been lost in the ordinary way in which persons would contemplate such a loss, and do not mean that the underwriters are to be recouped because at some subsequent period some goods turned up whether damaged or not. That construction seems to me to give effect to all the words. If it is right the statute clearly applies, because the assured may get, not merely an indemnity from the underwriters, but a considerable profit if the goods themselves turn up. He might get the whole value of his goods, and the goods themselves. If this construction is not right, and the underwriters can recover their money at some time period, it can only be by process of law, and the assured be practically insolvent, the underwriters will get very little good by such law. The statute may have been intended to prevent this, and to enact that, where the underwriters have fully paid, they are to get whatever may arise at once, instead of in a circuitous way. What I have said hitherto has related to insurance on goods.

Mr. Benjamin argued that there is something as a salvage on profit; but that seems inconsistent with the case of Mortimer v. Broadwood (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 229). The words are not "without salvage," that is, applying only salvage in specie, but "without benefit of salvage." No doubt parties may get the benefit of salvage in a case of this sort, for, if goods to arrive are sold at a profit, and are lost, but afterwards come into whose hands they come, though of course they might arrive in such a state that there would be no profit. The object of the statute and applies to an insurance on profits. The case Mortimer v. Broadwood decided that point. In being so, the policy is clearly within the statute, and I should have been inclined to have based my decision upon that ground alone. It is difficult to exhaust the subject. Other contingencies may arise; Mr. Cohen has mentioned several. In the case of Losano v. Janson (2 E. & E. 170), which was a case of recapture, the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench was overruled by the Privy Council. It was there decided that the underwriters were not bound to pay, because the goods had not been a lawful capture. It does not seem to me that that case supports the argument of the underwriters, who have paid as for a total loss, can at all times recover fragments of the goods and payments on fragments of the goods arriving at different times.

Everything I have said with regard to insurance on profits applies equally to an insurance on commission, only perhaps in a less degree.

There is only one other point as to the return of the premium. I do not like to lay down general principles, which might in some cases be applicable; therefore I do not say that no case may arise where the premium might be returned. But here the premium is paid upon the contract which I hold to be null and void. Where there was no blame on either party the premium may have to be returned; but in this case both parties are equally to blame, and, in my opinion, the assured are not entitled to repayment.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion, and state briefly my reasons.

What we have to do is, first, to construe the policy and the statute, and then to apply the one to the other. If we construe the policy we shall see that it is on "ships," which expression obviously includes, at least, an English ship, though no nation is specified. It is then on either English or foreign ships. It seems to me, therefore, that there is nothing in Mr. Benjamin's first point.

Then, as to the question of profits on goods, the reasons given by my brother Grove, and for those given by Mr. Cohen, which I follow at this point, I do not think the policy can be divided into two, namely, one on profits and

Div.]

BAYLEY AND OTHERS v. CHADWICK.

[O.P. Div.]

sion. By so doing neither party would ything. It is true that there is no actual ; that this statute applies to policies on sion; but, if we could split the policy into ould hold that a policy on commission ave to follow the fate of a policy on profits. we have the words upon which everything 'warranted free from all average, and with- eft of salvage, but to pay loss upon such ; does not arrive." What do those words

Three points are made: "Warranted free ll average," means that the underwriter to pay for an average loss—that one and perfectly well; "without benefit of " means (if it means anything) that if n be any salvage the underwriter is not it. Then the other words "but to pay n such part as does not arrive," are sub- an observation clearly intelligible, though ; an element which is left in doubt, and to ; will allude hereafter. Let us see what we deal with. We have a policy of insurance ing the words "without benefit of salvage." asked to strike them out because they is said, no particular meaning. But upon rinciple can we do that? Here is a con- hich, upon the face of it, is illegal, and one arties to it asks us to strike out the words ng it so. If they had no meaning at all, ght be done. If it could be proved that ds were inserted by mistake that might be But I am not satisfied that either case is of proof, and I think I can show that the were inserted for a purpose. I agree with annell that the mere fact that you find in y the words "without benefit of salvage" ufficient to render it void. But here the all meant, if they meant anything, what ve said. We have, therefore, a policy on without benefit of salvage, which is a case by authority, for the cases cited pre-sup- at the statute applies to policies on profits, it there may be salvage of profits.

it is sought to distinguish this case from hich have been cited, because it contains ds "but to pay loss upon such part as does ive." Leaving out, for the moment, the 'without benefit of salvage," what is the nstruction of the policy? Or, in other what are the underwriters to pay upon? it means that they are to pay only in re- f profits on goods which do not arrive. en is this payment to be made? We are answer that question upon general prin- Looking at the policy from that point of apprehend that the payments must be made time at which such payments are usually r transactions of this kind. The question of r non-arrival must be determined with refer- that time, and not to some subsequent time. oods have arrived at that time payment is e made; if they have not arrived at the usual s time, then payment must be made for hich have not arrived, and those only. uppose payment to have been so made, can tended that, if goods subsequently arrive, the money is to be returned? I see no equitable principle for such a contention. t a question of mistake. The payment is de upon the supposition that the goods ver arrive. There is not a mutual mis- the parties, nor, as in Losano v. Janson

(2 E. & E. 170), a mistake of the court, for there the court proceeded upon the mistake that an actual condemnation had passed. If there is salvage the policy says it is not to go to the underwriters, and so the statute applies. I should be very slow to believe that business men like underwriters, and persons effecting policies, deliberately put in words of this kind which had no meaning. I think I see the meaning plainly enough, though perhaps I do not see everything. This is an open policy, and if the ship declared on were foreign, the words "without benefit of salvage" might have some effect; and it strikes me both parties knew this. There is, at all events, a combination of circumstances under which these words would have a meaning and render the policy illegal if the court should take the view that its legality or otherwise depended on the declaration, in which latter event the court might be applied to to strike them out. That view is, to say the least, a possible one. However that may be, according to the principles laid down in the case of Murphy v. Bell (4 Bing. 567), where the policy was one of "interest or no interest," I come to the conclusion that this policy is null and void within the meaning of the statute.

Lastly, can the premiums be recovered back? If I am right that the policy is an illegal one, there is no doubt whatever about it. And if the true construction of the policy is that it may be legal or illegal according to the use made of it, then it became illegal by the act of the plaintiffs, and not by that of the underwriters. I doubt whether the latter is the true view. I prefer the first one.

I think the first two questions ought to be answered in favour of the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, J. Bae.

Solicitors for the defendants, Fluss and Co.

Monday, June 11, 1877.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., and DENMAN, J.)

BAYLEY AND OTHERS v. CHADWICK.

Earning of commission—Proximate cause—"In consequence of."

A. employed B. to sell a ship, and agreed that if a sale was effected to any person "led to make such offer in consequence of" B.'s mention or publication of it, B. should be paid a commission:

Held that B. was entitled to his commission, although neither the purchaser nor his agent had seen B.'s publication, as he had been led to make an offer by hearing of it.

THE plaintiffs in this case were ship auctioneers, and the defendant employed them to sell by public auction or otherwise the steamship Bessemer. It was agreed that if the ship was not sold by auction, but a sale was subsequently effected "to any person or firm introduced by" the plaintiffs, "or led to make such offer in consequence of" plaintiffs' "mention or publication of the ship for auction purposes," the plaintiffs should be paid a commission of one per cent. on the purchase-money. At the trial, Lord Coleridge, C.J., ruled that these words included a sale which was the indirect consequence of advertisements published by the plaintiffs for auction purposes. The evidence showed that, though the purchaser must have made his offer through hearing of the advertisement, neither he nor his agent had themselves seen it. The jury found for the plaintiffs.

C.P. Div.] GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. LONDON AND EDINBURGH SHIPPING CO. [Ex. Ch.]

A rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection having been obtained, Edwyn Jones now showed cause.

Reid, in support of the rule. The Lord Chief Justice was wrong in directing the jury that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, although the purchase was only an indirect consequence of the advertisements. Causa proxima, non remota, spectatur is a maxim that the court will apply in construing all contracts. He cited

Gibson v. Crick, 31 L. J. 304, Ex.;

Ionides v. Universal Marine Assurance Company, 14 C. B., N. S., 259; 32 L. J. 170, C. P.

DENMAN, J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged. The words of the contract are peculiar and do not enable the court to ascertain very accurately what the parties contemplated. The question is whether the Lord Chief Justice was wrong in ruling that there was evidence to go to the jury on the question whether the purchaser of the ship was led to make the offer that he did make in consequence of the publication of advertisements by the plaintiff. It appears to me that the very able argument of Mr. Reid failed to show any legal necessity for construing the words in the manner he suggested. The words "in consequence of" are very large words, and I think are amply sufficient to include indirect as well as direct consequence. The person who made the offer could not have done so unless he had in some way become aware that the ship was for sale; and if he became aware of it through this advertisement having been seen by someone else, it would be far too narrow a construction to hold that the offer was not made in consequence of the publication of the advertisement. Mr. Reid argued that the word "led" required that the person making the offer should be actually seized with personal knowledge. But that also appears to me to be putting too narrow a construction on the words of this agreement. I think it is unnecessary that the publication should have been actually seen by the purchaser or his agent; and that if the jury could reasonably find that the offer would never have been made but for the publication for auction purposes, that is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover under this agreement. The cases cited by Mr. Reid do not assist us in this case. The first turns on quite different words, and the other is a marine insurance case, and also quite different. A case more like the present than either of those cited is Mansell v. Clements (L. Rep. 9 C. P. 139). Cases, however, do not help us in this question. All that we have to say is whether there was evidence to go to the jury that the purchaser was induced to make his offer by the publication for auction purposes. I think this was purely a case for the jury, and that the rule should be discharged.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—Two points are raised by the argument. First, as to the construction of the contract in this case; secondly, as to whether there was evidence to go to the jury that the sale was even the indirect consequence of the advertisement. On the first point, I held at the trial that "any person led to make such offer in consequence of publication," was not limited to a person making an offer in consequence of his, personally or by his agent, seeing the publication, but included the case of an offer in consequence of the person offering or his agent hearing of the publication. Upon consideration, I am unable to see that I am wrong. Looked at fairly, "in consequence of" must include indirect as well as direct consequence. That may make the contract an indiscreet one, but that does not affect the question. By the very collocation of the words in this contract it seems to be reasonably clear that the parties did intend very indirect consequence indeed. The narrow construction of the words would not in this paragraph provide for the payment of commission at a time when, in ordinary cases, claim to it would have ceased. I agree with my brother Denman that the cases cited are not to the point. The other question is whether there is any evidence to go to the jury that this advertisement for auction purposes did indirectly lead to the offer that resulted in a purchase. I am of opinion that there was, and that this rule should be discharged.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lowless and Co.
Solicitor for the defendant, Chambers.

EXCHEQUER DIVISION.

Reported by H. F. DICKENS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wednesday, June 13, 1877.

GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. LONDON AND EDINBURGH SHIPPING COMPANY.

Practice—Costs—Collision—Defence of compulsory pilotage—Order LV.

In an action by the plaintiffs for damages sustained by their ship in a collision with the defendant ship, the defendants set up the defence, and others, that their ship at the time of the collision was by compulsion of law under the charge of a pilot. Upon this defence they succeeded in obtaining judgment. No application as to costs was made at the trial, but the plaintiffs afterwards applied to the court under Order LV. for an order to deprive the defendants of costs on the ground that formerly in the High Court of Admiralty and in the present Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division the practice was and is uniform to disallow the defendant costs in cases where he succeeds in the defence of compulsory pilotage alone, if besides that he has raised other defences.

Held, without deciding whether the court had power under Order LV. to make an order as to costs at all, that the practice of the Admiralty Division applied to cases in that Division alone, and did not upset the general and well-established practice that the successful party is entitled to his costs.
Per Huddleston, B.—The court has power to make such an order.

Action by the plaintiffs who were owners of the ship Florence, against the defendants, the owners of the Marmion, to recover damages for loss sustained by the Florence through being run down while at anchor by the defendants' ship. The Marmion at the time of the collision was in charge of a pilot by compulsion of law. The defendants denied the alleged negligence, pleaded an accident, and also set up the defence of compulsory pilotage. The cause was heard before the court at the sittings in London, on the 2nd and 3rd June, when the jury found that the collision was due to the negligence of the pilot.

EX. DIV.] GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. LONDON AND EDINBURGH SHIPPING CO. [EX. DIV.]

as thereupon entered for the plaintiffs, with costs to the defendants to move to enter it for them; and a rule was afterwards made absolute to enter the verdict for the defendants on the ground that the pilot by whose negligence the collision was caused was compulsorily employed.

Butt, Q.C. and Webster, now moved for an order that the defendants should have no costs of the cause.—The application is made under Order LV. No application as to costs was made at the trial, but this court has power to make such an order under the words "or the court." That this is the interpretation of the order is clear. In the case of Maker v. Oakes (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. Div. 171; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 671, 832), Cockburn, C.J., said, "If the application had been to the court itself, I think there can be no doubt it would have had power to deal with the costs." If it does not bear the interpretation we put upon it, viz., that the court has a substantive and independent power to make an order as to costs, then we are driven to the interpretation that it means, "The Court on Appeal." But that cannot be the interpretation, as the Act says there is to be no appeal upon a question of costs only which is a matter of discretion. The words "or the court" must either be wholly unmeaning therefore, or must bear the interpretation we put upon them. Assuming, therefore, that the court has power to make such an order, the circumstances of the case are such as to justify the court in doing so. In the Court of Admiralty it has been the uniform practice to disallow the defendant his costs where he succeeds solely on the defence of compulsory pilotage, if besides that he raises other defences. When the Court of Admiralty was a separate court that practice existed; that court has now become a Division of the High Court, and the appeal is the same in that as in other divisions. The Court of Appeal has decided that in Admiralty cases, where the defendant succeeds on such a plea, it will follow the practice of the Admiralty court: (The Daois, Weekly Notes, April 28, 1877, p. 93; and see post). That, no doubt, only decides as to proceedings in Admiralty the Court of Appeal will follow the Admiralty practice in this respect; but it would be a great inconvenience that there should be two distinct practices in the divisions of the High Court.

Murphy, Q.C. for the defendants, was not called upon.

Kelly, C.B.—This is an application under Order LV., by which the court is asked to make an order depriving the defendants of their costs on a issue or plea in an action for collision on which they succeeded, in which the defence set up was that of compulsory pilotage under the Merchant Shipping Act. The case was tried some time ago, and at the trial I entered the verdict for the plaintiffs on that defence, with leave to the defendants to move to enter it for them. That rule has been argued and has been made absolute, so that the verdict now stands for the defendants.

Now Order LV. is in these terms: "Subject to the provisions of the Act, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the High Court shall be in the discretion of the court: . . . provided that where any action or issue is tried by a jury, the costs shall follow the event, unless upon application made at the trial for some cause shown, the judge before whom such action or issue is tried, or the court, shall otherwise order." No application was made to me at the trial to make this order depriving the defendants of costs in this issue, nor has any been made, for the reason that none could be made with any effect since the trial. But it is contended that the latter words give this court a substantive and independent power to make this order, notwithstanding anything that may or may not have taken place at the trial. That is undoubtedly a question of great importance, and as far as I know, it is one which has not yet been determined. But as I do not think I am bound in this case to decide that question, and as I think it unnecessary to do so, I forbear to enter further into the question. For the purpose of this case I assume that the court has power to make such an order. Assuming that to be so, then, what are the grounds on which we are asked to make this order.

The law for centuries has been that where a plaintiff or defendant succeeds in an action and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to costs as a matter of course, unless he is deprived of them by some Act of Parliament. That is still the law, and that must prevail in this case, unless the defendants can be deprived of costs under this rule. Now we ought not to, nor can we make an order depriving the defendants of their costs without good cause shown. What is the cause shown in this case? It is simply this: that it was a practice of the Admiralty Court while it existed as a separate court, and is now a practice of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division in cases of collision in which the collision has been occasioned by a ship under the command of a compulsory pilot, where that defence is set up with other defences and successfully established by the defendant, to disallow the defendant his costs of such defence. It is urged upon us that the Court of Appeal have affirmed that practice and have held that it is to prevail, and that we are, therefore, bound by that decision to make this order. We are, in fact, called upon to accept that decision as a decision of the law and practice not only of the Probate, Admiralty, and Divorce Division, but as also deciding that the practice and the law of that division is to be the law and practice of every other division of the High Court. That would be to say that, because the practice has prevailed in the Admiralty Court, whether that practice be good or bad, it is for the future to be the practice of every division. That, however, is not so. It has nothing to do with the practice or law of other courts at Westminster. It may be desirable that the Legislature should assimilate the practice and law in the several courts in Westminster Hall, and that the practice of one should be made conformable to the practice in the others, but it is only by the Legislature that that can be effected. That has been done by the Legislature in relation to cases of collision in any of the divisions, where it appears that both ships are in fault, the Legislature enacting that in such a case the damage should be divided, which was the old Admiralty practice, but in the practice now under consideration the Legislature have done no such thing. We come back, then, to the question whether there is any ground for our making this order. Nothing has been urged as a reason for our doing so, except that such is the practice of the Admiralty Court, and is the decision of the Court of Appeal. I repeat that was an appeal from the Court of Admiralty, or rather the Pro-

EX. DIV.]

THE BARQUE CARLOTTA; BLISS v. GOMEZ.

[AMERICAN RE

bate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and that is no sufficient reason. The only other cause shown was that put by Mr. Webster, viz., that other pleas and defences were raised, viz., a denial of the alleged negligence, &c. If that be so the question whether the defendants are entitled to costs on these issues, on which the plaintiffs have succeeded, it would be premature to pronounce any opinion, because, when the case goes before the master for taxation, if he refused to allow the plaintiffs the costs on these issues, a motion could be made to review the taxation.

For these reasons I think this application should be refused.

HUDDLESTON, B.—I am of the same opinion.

The application is one under Order LV. that the defendant should have no costs. One point raised before us was that the court had no power to enter into the question at all. I do not entertain any doubt on that subject, not only from the words of the order, but from decisions upon it. There are two tribunals who may make an order to take the case out of the ordinary rule as to costs, the judge at the trial and the court; and where there has been no order by the judge, it is not the court upon appeal, but the court to whom the application may be made, and which may decide it on the merits. On that I can entertain no doubt when I read the case of Baker v. Oakes (L. Rep. 2 Q. B. Div. 171), in which the judges construed the order in that way. In the course of the argument Brett, J.A., said, "The omission of 'or a judge' was designedly intended to confine the jurisdiction to the court, who alone should have power, if the judge at the trial made no order, to deprive a successful party of what was otherwise his absolute right to costs." And Cockburn, C.J., in his judgment, said, "If the application had been to the court itself, I think there can be no doubt it would have had power to deal with the costs."

We then come to the question whether Mr. Butt has shown sufficient ground to influence this court in its discretion to depart from the general rule. He does not go on the merits of the case. He says there is a rule invariably adopted by the Admiralty Court that the defendant, under such circumstances as those of the present case, would, though successful, be deprived of costs. That is a rule prevailing in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, and as Mr. Webster put it, the Court of Appeal is a Court of Appeal from all five divisions, and that Court has decided that the practice is in future to be that in all cases of collision in whatever division it may be this practice is to prevail. If I thought that that was really the decision, much as I should feel disinclined to deviate from the practice of this and the other divisions, I should follow it. But I do not think that is the result. I understand the decision to be this. The Master of the Rolls said, as we understand, that the universal practice in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division is that which it was before the Judicature Act, that costs should not be given, it is convenient in such cases that on appeal from that division that that practice should prevail, but he never laid it down that in appeal from other divisions that was to be so. The Master of the Rolls said, as we gather from the Weekly Notes for April 28, 1877, "The rule acted on in the Admiralty Court in cases like the present was, that when the owners of a ship were relieved from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage, no costs were given on either side and the same rule ought to apply in the Court of Appeal." That decision, then, is not binding upon us; there is no reason why we should depart from the rule of practice that the successful party is entitled to his costs, and this application must therefore be refused.

Application refused. Leave to appeal refused.

Solicitor for plaintiff, W. Batham.
Solicitor for defendant, T. Cooper.

AMERICAN REPORTS.

UNITED STATES SOUTHERN DISTRICT COURT OF NEW YORK.

Reported by R. D. BENEDICT, Proctor and Advocate in Admiralty.

THE BARQUE CARLOTTA; BLISS v. GOMEZ. Charter-party and bill of lading—Damage to cargo—Rats—Petroleum—Sale of cargo to arrive—Parties—Rebate of duties—Recoupment.

The barque G. was chartered in New York by G. and A. to bring a cargo of fruit from Mediterranean ports to New York. The charter contained this clause: "It is understood that this vessel is now bound to Barcelona with a cargo of refined petroleum in barrels. Thence she shall proceed, immediately after discharge of said cargo, to enter upon this charter. Vessel to be cleared as customary previous to loading her outward cargo." The vessel made the outward voyage, and, having discharged her outward cargo, was cleansed and fumigated for the purpose of removing the scent of petroleum, and also of killing any rats. After this she took on board a cargo of almonds and other fruits, and made the voyage under the charter. After being at sea some days, rats were noticed on board, and on discharge of the cargo at New York some of the bags of almonds were found to have been gnawed by rats. The vessel had on board on the voyage a cat, and also a rat terrier. Other portions of the cargo on discharge were found to have been damaged by contact with petroleum, and other portions were scented with petroleum. The owners of the vessel, B., filed a libel against G. and A., charterers, to recover charter money, and G. and A. filed a libel against the barque to recover the damage to the almonds. It appeared that previous to the filing of their libel, G. and A. had sold the almonds for a sound price, which had been paid them in full. It also appeared that they had made an application to the Government for a rebate of duties on the almonds by reason of their damaged condition, and had received such rebate. In the suit against them to recover charter money, G. and A. set up the failure of the barque to perform the charter, in that it was the cargo that was delivered damaged, and that some was not delivered. The charter contained no provision for the giving of bills of lading, but bills of lading for the almonds were given by the master to the shippers, who were the agents of the charterers, by which the almonds were to be delivered to G. and A., and G. and A. against the barque was

REPS.]

THE BARQUE CARLOTTA; BLISS v. GOMEZ.

[AMERICAN REPS.]

ing. There was no exception of damage in the bills of lading.

The bills of lading must be taken to be correct between the parties as far as the rats was concerned.

Damage by rats was not a peril of the cargo, but it was not made to appear that damage to the almonds by rats was a thing which it was impossible to guard.

Damage by petroleum provisions in the cargo must govern, and that the effect of the bills of lading was that if the vessel was damaged in the customary manner the barque would be liable for any damage resulting from petroleum cargo which she carried out; it appeared that vessels were cleansing petroleum cargoes, so that the cargo by carrying showed no indication of being damaged by petroleum, the fact that these showed such injury was evidence that it was not cleansed as customary.

1. were entitled to sue for the damage to the cargo, notwithstanding their sale of them.

2. must give credit, as against any claim for the cargo, for any rebate of duties on account of such damage.

3. If the vessel was entitled to a decree for the money, less the value of any cargo damaged; and that G. and A. were entitled to a decree against the vessel for any damage to the cargo, less the rebate of duty.

J.—William Bliss, as owner of the Carlotta, filed a libel on the 13th Feb., 1875; Raphael M. Gomez and Daniel V. Bliss to recover the amount due on a charter of the barque Carlotta to the re-alleges that the vessel performed the charter in all respects and became entitled to the charter money therein specified, 2000 dollars, or thereabouts, still remaining. The charter-party, which was signed at New York on the 8th August, 1874, by the agents of the owner of the vessel, the Carlotta, New York, and the said respondents, in partnership name of Gomez and Bliss, charterers the vessel to the respondents from two ports in Spain, between Malaga, both inclusive, and in, and to New York—charterers have privity in taking part cargo at Barcelona, and to ports to load if required—on the 13th Aug. Among those terms are the payment of charter-money, of 2500 dollars, in United States currency; and that "it is agreed that said vessel is now bound to Barcelona with cargo of refined petroleum in barrels, half procured immediately after discharging cargo to enter upon this charter and to be cleaned as customary previous to discharging cargo."

The libel of Gomez and Arguimban to the respondents was filed on the 26th March, 1875. The execution and contents of the charter-party, as set forth in the libel, and under said charter-party the respondents to the master of the vessel and the cargo in barrels, bales, and bags, shipped to the port of New York, and that such merchandise was shipped on board of said vessel under certain bills of lading, which recited that said merchandise was received in good order, and by which the master and owners of the vessel promised to deliver the same to the respondents at the port of New York in the like good order and condition as received, on payment of freight as therein provided; and that the masters and employees of said vessel took so little and such bad care in putting said cargo on board and in storing it and in attending to it while on board and while landing it, that a large part of said cargo was badly stained by petroleum or other such substance, and also impregnated by the smell arising therefrom, and thus rendered unmerchantable, and many of the bags and packages containing said merchandise, and the contents thereof, were badly eaten by rats, or other vermin, and in other ways the said cargo was so badly damaged by the negligence of said master and owners that part of said cargo was wholly lost and other parts damaged to the amount altogether of at least 2000 dollars.

On the 17th Feb. 1874, Gomez and Arguimban filed a libel against the barque Carlotta.

It alleges that in Nov. 1873, the said barque then lying in the port of Tarragona, in Spain, and in other ports, various parties shipped on board of her various quantities of almonds, for which the master signed bills of lading, which admitted the receipt of the goods on board in good order and well conditioned, and by which he agreed to carry the goods to New York and there deliver them to Gomez and Arguimban, with certain exceptions in the bills of lading specified; that the said barque arrived in the port of New York and the libellants demanded the delivery of said merchandise to them, but the employers of said bark took so little and such bad care, not only in attention to said vessel, but in putting said cargo on board, and in stowing it and in the care of it while on board, and in landing it in the port of New York and in the care of it after it was landed, that a large part of it was badly stained by petroleum or some other such substance, and also impregnated by the smell arising therefrom, and the bags and contents in which said cargo was delivered were damaged by being eaten by rats, and a large part of said cargo was wholly lost to the libellants or only delivered in a damaged condition, whereby the libellants were damaged to the amount of 2000 dollars and upwards, and that the libellants are ready to pay said freight upon the proper delivery of said cargo. The libel prays a decree against said barque for said damages.

The answer of the owner of the barque to the last named libel denies all its allegations as to negligence and damage except the allegation that some of the bags were eaten and damaged by rats, and alleges that the libellants were the charterers of the barque under the written charter before mentioned, and that all of the said goods were put on board under said charter, and that the provisions of said charter and of the bills of lading were in all things complied with on behalf of said barque, and any loss or damage or injury to said cargo was caused by perils excepted and without any negligence or fault on the part of said bark.

It is set up in the answer in the in personam suit that many of the bags and packages containing the merchandise and the contents thereof were badly eaten by rats or other vermin, and that such injury was the result of want of care on the part of the master and employers of the vessel.

AMERICAN REFS.]

THE BARQUE CARLOTTA; BLISS v. GOMEZ.

[AMERICAN]

In the libel against the vessel the allegation is only of damage by rats to bags and contents of bags through want of care on the part of the employés of the vessel.

On the evidence a claim is made for loss by rat damage, by the gnawing by rats of holes in some of the bags containing almonds in the shell, and by the eating of some of such almonds by rats, and by the loss of others of such almonds through holes gnawed in such bags by rats.

It is contended on the part of the consignees that the vessel is liable for the damage by rats, because there is no exception in the charter-party or the bill of lading which can relieve the vessel from liability for such damage occurring during the voyage, that such damage is not the act of God nor a peril of the sea, and that the vessel is liable in the absence of an excepting clause in the contract.

For the vessel it is contended that a carrier is not responsible for damage from natural causes against which he is unable to guard, that it is the natural tendency of rats to gnaw, that the vessel was fumigated before taking in cargo, and had on board a cat and a rat terrier, that nothing more could have been done, and that the rats were probably brought on board in the cargo.

The charter-party provides that the vessel shall be in every way fitted for the voyage, and specified fruit as a contemplated cargo. It contains no other provisions which refer to damage to cargo, and no provision as to the giving of bills of lading. It is signed by both of the parties to it. Three of the four bills of lading cover almonds in the shell in bags. One of them specifies 750 bags of soft almonds in the shell as received on board in good condition, and the master by it promises and undertakes, "God taking me in safety with the said vessel to the said port, to deliver in the same terms." The second specifies 425 bags and 850 half bags of soft shell almonds as shipped in good order and well conditioned in and upon the vessel, and states that they are to be delivered in the like good order and well conditioned, "the acts of God, the king's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever, excepted." The third specifies 157 bags of almonds as shipped in good order and well conditioned on board the vessel, and states that they are to be delivered in like good order and well conditioned, "the dangers of the sea only excepted."

In the case of Aymar v. Astor (6 Cowen, 267) the owners of a vessel were sued for damages sustained by the owner of goods shipped on board of it through the destruction of them by rats. The bill of lading signed by the master stated that the goods were to be delivered in good order and well conditioned, "the dangers of the seas" excepted. At the trial evidence was given on the question whether the vessel was prudently managed for the avoiding of rats, or whether the master had been negligent in that respect; but the court charged the jurors that the defendants were common carriers and liable as such for damage done, unless by the act of God or the perils of the sea, excepted in the bill of lading, and that damage by rats was not a peril of the sea. On a writ of error the Supreme Court held that the master of a vessel is not responsible, like a common carrier, for all losses, except happen by the act of God, or the enemies of the country; and that it ought to have been committed to the jury, whether the master had used ordinary care and diligence in carrying the goods in question. This exception in favour of a carrier by water is repudiated by the same court in McArthur v. Sears (21 Wendell, 190), and the meaning of the exception in Aymar v. Astor is a dictum. See also Allen v. Sewell (2 Wend. 3) Laveroni v. Drury (8 Ex. 166; 22 L. J. 2) in 1853 cheese was shipped in a general ship, bills of lading, whereby the master bound himself to deliver the cheese free from damage, "from the acts of God, the Queen's enemies, fire and every other danger and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation," &c., "excepted" cheese was eaten and damaged by rats during the voyage. The master had two cats on board, and was contended by the owners of the vessel that the cats relieved the defendants from the liability of negligence. The court, at the trial, held the question was not one for the jury, and instructed the jury that damage by rats was within the exception contained in the bill of lading, and that if the cheese had been eaten and damaged by rats in the course of the voyage the defendants were liable. On a motion by the defendants for a new trial the Court of King's Bench said: "We are of opinion that this direction is right. By the law of England, the master and owner of a general ship are common carriers, and hire and responsible as such. This, according to the well-known rule, renders them liable for damage which occurs during the voyage, and that caused by the act of God and the Queen's enemies. They, however, almost universally receive goods under bills of lading signed by the master; and, in such case, the liability devolves upon and is governed by the terms of the bill of lading, it being the express contract between the parties, the owner of the goods on the one hand, and the master and owner of the ship on the other." As to the exception in the bills of lading the court said: "The true question is, whether damage by rats falls within this exception. We are clearly of opinion that it does not. The part of the exception under which it possibly may be contended to fall, is as a danger or accident of the sea and navigation; but this, we think, includes only a danger or accident of the navigation properly so-called, namely, one caused by the violence of the winds and waves (the major) acting upon a seaworthy and substantial ship, and does not cover damage by rats, which is a kind of destruction not peculiar to the sea, navigation, or arising directly from it, but which such a commodity as cheese is equally liable to in a warehouse on land as in a ship at sea." The court further said, that the only true rule for ascertaining with accuracy and certainty the liability of the master and owner of a general ship is, prima facie he is a common carrier, but his responsibility may be either enlarged or diminished by the terms of the bill of lading, if any, and that the question whether the vessel is liable or not is to be ascertained by the terms of this document, when it exists." In The Fame, in this court, in 1861, the cargo was libelled to recover for the damage done to the loss of part of a cargo of terrier could have been of but little service in catching rats which were down in the hold among the cargo. As to the fumigation, the presence of rats after fumigation must be accepted as evidence that the fumigation was not so thorough and effective as to destroy all rats. The fact that no rats were seen, after the fumigation, until after the vessel left Malaga, and that they were known to be on board after she left Malaga, is not sufficient evidence that they were not on board before the fumigation, or that the fumigation was effective, or that the rats were not on board from Barcelona to Malaga, or that they came on board at Malaga. There is evidence that there were rats on board on the voyage from New York to Barcelona, and there is no evidence that the rats came on board in the cargo of fruit. The fact that the vessel was in the stream when she received her cargo at Barcelona and at Iviza, does not go to show that she was free from rats at Barcelona. In a word, it is not shown that the vessel could not, by any amount of care and skill, have been rid of the rats. As to perils of the sea, the eating of almonds by rats, or the gnawing of holes in bags by rats, is not a thing peculiar to the sea or to navigation, or arising directly from navigation, for rats do those things on land as well as in a vessel at sea. I think there is satisfactory evidence that the rats did damage by gnawing holes in the bags. What was the extent of the loss and damage to bags and almonds by such gnawing is another question.

It is claimed that there was damage to the cargo by its contact with petroleum, and by its being impregnated with the odour of petroleum. Full notice is given in the charter-party that the vessel was, at the time of the making of the charter-party, bound on a voyage from New York to Barcelona, with a cargo of refined petroleum in barrels, and it is provided in the charter-party that the homeward cargo may be fruit, and that the vessel is "to be cleansed as customary previous to loading homeward cargo." It is not to be presumed that Gomez and Arguimban, persons experienced in the trade in question, would have arranged to bring home a cargo of fruit in a vessel which had carried out a cargo of petroleum in barrels, unless they had understood that a cleansing of the vessel in the customary manner, after the discharge of the cargo of petroleum, would have enabled the vessel to bring home the cargo of fruit in good order, free from the stains of or the odour of petroleum. The evidence is very distinct that the almonds, more or less of them, were found, on their arrival here, to be impregnated with the taste and smell of petroleum, so as to lessen their value, and that such taste and smell came from the petroleum which was in the vessel. There is not in any of the bills of lading any exception as to petroleum damage; but the rights of the parties, so far as petroleum damage is concerned, must be governed by the provisions of the charter-party as to petroleum. The effect of the provisions of the charter-party is, that the vessel being about to carry out petroleum in barrels, she shall, if "cleansed as customary" before loading the return cargo of fruit, not be liable for damage by petroleum to such return cargo; and that Gomez and Arguimban, having notice of such carriage of petroleum, take the risk of damage to such return cargo from the petroleum, if the vessel be cleansed in the customary manner before loading such return cargo. Much testimony has been taken in manner in which the vessel was cleansed; the evidence is very clear that vessels which carried out petroleum in packages do, as cleansed in a proper manner, bring back of such fruit as this vessel had without being damaged by having the taste or petroleum. The fact of such damage in the present case must be accepted as evidence that the vessel was not cleansed in the customary manner. The master of this vessel had carried a cargo of petroleum before, and had seen a ship cleansed that had carried petroleum and made inquiries of another master as to the mode of cleansing. It does not alter the fact that some or all of the damage may have arisen from the sweat of the hold dropping upon the cargo. The complaint is not that the cargo was damaged by being wet, or that it became musty, but that, whether the water of the sweat of the hold was conveyed to and left with the cargo, that would not have happened if the vessel had been properly cleansed. The sweat and the odour thereof would have produced no damage if the cargo had not been conveyors of petroleum taste and odour, and they would not have conveyed taste and odour if the vessel had been thoroughly cleansed in the proper and customary manner.

In Clark v. Barnwell (12 Howard, 272) the damage was mould and mildew caused by the sweat of the hold, a peril of the sea. The libellants in that case failed to show that the damage could have been prevented by the use of proper precautionary measures, or that there had been a neglect of the customary methods of prevention. But, in the present case, it is established, I think, that the petroleum damage would not have occurred if the customary proper mode of cleansing the vessel had been thoroughly used, whether the damage arose from dunnage saturated or impregnated with petroleum or from the presence of petroleum in the hold water, or from the conveyance of petroleum ingredients by the water of the sweat of the hold.

As to all the merchandise that is alleged to have been damaged by rats or petroleum, and the almonds not in the shell, it appears that the merchandise was sold by Gomez and Arguimban to arrive, for a price based on undamaged goods, and that the purchasers have paid that price full to Gomez and Arguimban. The damage alleged in the libel filed by Gomez and Arguimban is a damage to themselves. It is contended that the vessel, that they cannot recover any damage in respect to the merchandise for which they were so paid a sound price, for that they have sustained no damage. While it is true that prima facie the consignee of goods on a bill of lading has the legal title to, and a special interest in, the goods, and may sue for the non-delivery thereof (Lawrence v. Morris, 17 Howard, 100; McKinley v. Morris, 21 Howard, 100), yet such prima facie right of action is displaced: (Grove v. Brien, 8 Howard, 100; Lawrence v. Minturn (sup.)). In the present case the goods were the property of Gomez and Arguimban when shipped. They were not in the goods when they arrived, it is true, but it is not a right of property and the right of action were not in them when the breach of contract of the master in the iez and Arguimban, or their assignees, not shown that the bills of lading were ally assigned or indorsed by Gomez and in. I am of opinion, therefore, that id Arguimban can maintain the action.

[.] BOWES AND OTHERS v. SHAND AND OTHERS. [H. OF L.]

sum of money has been received Gomez and Arguimban, or by any from them, from the Government, as a duties for loss or damage in respect of as to which an allowance shall be found oss or damage in the suit brought by id Arguimban, they must be charged sum.

re on the part of the vessel to de e of the cargo is admitted, the cause ailure not being due to either rats eum. In the suit brought by the the vessel, there will be a reference to what cargo was not delivered, and its the reference will cover such goods, if ere not delivered because of the action petroleum, as well as those which for reason were not delivered. Such value, ertained, will be deducted from the emaining due on the charter-party, and be a decree for the remainder.

suit brought by Gomez and Arguimban, be a reference to ascertain the amount nage by rats or the taste or odour of to such of the cargo as was delivered. ction as to the costs in both suits is

Vilcoz, and Hobbs, for Gomez and Ar*t, Taft, and Benedict*, for Bliss, and the

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ed by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 7 and 8, 1877.

he LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lords EY, O'HAGAN, BLACKBURN, and GORDON.)
AND OTHERS v. SHAND AND OTHERS.

FROM HER MAJESTY'S COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

3 contract — Construction — "Shipped March <sup>and</sup> April" — Evidence of mercan-
70.

lants, by contracts dated London, March 74, bought of the respondents "about 600 Madras rice, to be shipped during the of March <sup>and</sup> April, per Rajah of Cochin."

or tons only of the rice was shipped in the remainder having been shipped in y. The appellants refused to accept it, as plying with the contract, rsing the judgment of the court below), words of the contract being clear, and ing no evidence of any mercantile usage case, the appellants were justified in not g the rice, it not being a March or April it.

v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530) id and distinguished.

an action for not accepting a cargo of ordance with two contracts dated Lon- h 17th and 24th, 1874, by each of which lants, Shand and Co., bought of the respondents, Bowes and Co., about "300 tons of Madras rice, to be shipped at Madras, or coast for this port during the months of March <sup>and</sup> or April 1874, per Rajah of Cochin, at 11s. 10½d. per cwt. for fair pinky."

The rice was shipped in 8200 bags, in four parcels, a separate bill of lading being given for each parcel, as follows: For 1780 bags on Feb. 23rd; for 1780 bags on Feb. 24th; for 3560 bags on Feb. 28th; for 1080 bags on March 3rd. But of this last parcel all but fifty bags were put on board before the end of February.

The action was tried before Brett, J., and a special jury, at the Michaelmas sittings in London in 1875. Evidence was given that rice shipped in February would be of as good quality as rice shipped in March or April, and the learned judge left the question to the jury whether it was a shipment in March <sup>and</sup> or April in the ordinary business sense of the words, the loading being completed in these months. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs (the present respondents) for the agreed sum of 1636½. 18s.

The defendants moved to enter judgment for them pursuant to leave reserved, and the Court (Blackburn, Mellor, and Lush, JJ.) acceded to the motion (ante, p. 208; 1 Q. B. Div. 470; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 795). The plaintiffs appealed, and the decision of the Queen's Bench Division was reversed by the Court of Appeal (Kelly, C.B., Mellish, Brett, and Amphlett, L.JJ.) on the authority of the case of Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530), as reported ante, p. 367; 2 Q. B. Div. 112; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 161. This appeal was then brought to the House of Lords.

Benjamin, Q.C. and Gainsford Bruce for the appellants, argued that the case of Alexander v. Vandersee was distinguishable, being for whole cargoes. In this case the rice was not a March or April shipment within the meaning of the contract. The stipulation in the contract was a condition precedent:

Graves v. Legg, 9 Exch. 709;

Bush v. Spence, 4 Camp. 329.

Cohen, Q.C. and J. O. Mathew for the respondents contended that the case was governed by Alexander v. Vandersee. The ship being named, the whole must be one shipment. The date of the shipment was not a condition precedent, as it did not go to the root of the matter: (Bettini v. Gye, 1 Q. B. Div. 183; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 246.) The jury were right in the view they took of the words used in a business sense.

At the conclusion of the arguments, their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, I have to propose to your Lordships to dissent from the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal in this case; and if I entertained any doubt, or if I had found that your Lordships entertained any doubt as to the conclusion at which you should arrive, I certainly should have suggested that time should be taken for further consideration of the case. But I think your Lordships have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion which I shall ask you to arrive at. The case appears to me, when properly considered, to be an extremely simple one.

The action is brought upon two contracts for the sale of rice, which differ only in respect of the date, and, therefore, it will be sufficient that I should refer to one of them. The first of the two contracts is dated the 17th March 1874, and the sold note which is written to the respondents, Shand and Co., runs in these words: "We have this day sold for your account to Bowen, Martin, and Kent, the following Madras rice, to be shipped at Madras or coast, for this port, during the months of March and April 1874, about 300 (three hundred) tons, per Rajah of Cochin, 11s. 10½d. per cwt., for fair pinky." That sentence includes all that for the present purpose it is material that I should refer to.

H. OF L.]

BOWEN AND OTHERS v. SHAND AND OTHERS.

Now, so far as the construction of the contract expressed in these words is concerned, unless there be something peculiar to the words by reason of the custom of the trade to which the contract relates, the construction of the contract is for the court. That has been said so often that I need not refer your Lordships to any authority upon the subject. I shall assume, in the first place, that there is no word in this contract which is proved by the custom of the trade to have any particular meaning. I shall afterwards consider whether it has been proved that there is any custom attaching a particular meaning to the words used. Looking at the construction of these words, I put aside in the first place some which, to anyone unaccustomed to a contract of this kind might appear peculiar, the words "and" or "inasmuch as no question has been raised on those words, and it is agreed upon both sides that they simply are a mercantile way of expressing that something is to be done in the months of March and April, or either of them. Putting that aside, and looking still at what would be the ordinary and grammatical meaning of the words, it will, I think, occur to your Lordships that it is possible that the words which I have read may mean one of two things. It might be held that they mean that the rice which is spoken of is to be put on board the ship which is mentioned during some part of the two months specified, the months of March and April 1874, and that is the meaning of the words "to be shipped" during those months, or it might be held that they mean that the shipment is to be made continuously, and in such a way as that it is to come to a conclusion in one of the months in question, and that a bill of lading representing the shipment and the contract made on the shipment is to be given inside one of these months, for the whole of the rice in question. If that is the natural meaning of the words, it does not appear to me to be a question for your Lordships, or for any court, to consider whether that is a contract which has upon the face of it some reason, some explanation, why it was made in that form, and why the stipulation is made that the shipment should be made during these particular months. It is a mercantile contract, and merchants are not in the habit of placing upon their contracts stipulations to which they do not attach some value and some importance, and that alone might be a sufficient answer.

But, if necessary, a further answer is obtained from some other considerations. It is quite obvious that merchants making contracts for the purchase of rice, contracts which oblige them to pay in a certain manner for the rice purchased, and to be ready with the funds for making that payment, may well be desirous both that the rice should be forthcoming to them at a certain time, and also that the rice should be forthcoming to them at a time earlier than that they be ready with funds for its purchase. Therefore, it may well be that a merchant who enters a number of rice contracts ranging over months of the year, will be desirous of it that the rice shall come forward at such intervals of time as that it will be convenient for him to make the payments, as well as that a merchant will consider that he has attained that and if he provides for the rice during a particular month, or particular months, and that he will be provided he has made that stipulation that the rice shall be forthcoming at a time when it is convenient for him to provide the money for the payment.

There is still another explanation, sufficient appears upon the evidence that these contracts were made for the purpose of satisfying and fulfilling other contracts which Bowen and Co. had made with other persons; it is at least doubtful whether, if they had made the contract in any other form than that which is in your Lordships, a contract made without this stipulation as to the shipment during these months would have been a fulfilment of those other contracts which they desired to be in a position to fulfil.

Therefore, still dwelling merely upon the natural meaning of these words, and without any evidence as to their having any particular or customary meaning, I should say without hesitation, that the meaning of this contract must be one of two things. First, it should mean that the shipment was to be made, that the rice must be put on board, during the two specified months, and neither before nor after those months. But if the contract should mean that, the only other meaning which it could have is (and as to that, I think no evidence would be required to show that it had obtained that meaning), that the shipment should be made in a manner which would be described as continuous, and that it should be to a consummation or completion in one of the months which are here mentioned, and that the bill of lading should be given for the complete shipment at that time. If these meanings be the only possible and natural meanings of the contract, then, according to neither of them was the rice in this case put on board in the way that it could be tendered in fulfilment of the contract, because the whole of the rice was not actually on board, not merely at the time this contract was made, but during the month of February, with the exception of fifty bags which were put on board on 2nd March, and a bill of lading had been given during the month of February for all the parcel of rice with the exception of 1090 of the bags, in respect of which no bill of lading was given on March 3rd. According to neither of those constructions was the rice put on board in such a way as to make it a tender in fulfilment of the contract.

Still dwelling upon the case, without reference to what took place at the trial, or to any custom, with regard to any custom, I submit that this construction, which I submit is the natural and only possible construction, literally of the words, to the effect

OF L.]

BOWES AND OTHERS v. SHAND AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

contract has received in the Court of Appeal. The Lord Justice, L.J. on this subject speaks in this way. He says, "The real question is whether in order to fulfil a contract that 600 tons of rice should be put on board in March or April, it is necessary that the 600 tons should have been put on board in March or April, or whether it is sufficient that the shipment should have been completed in March or April." He then refers to a case which I shall not now refer to, and continues, "The word 'shipped' is one which is capable of both meanings, and even if it be admitted that its literal meaning would imply that the whole quantity must be put on board during the specified time, that is a construction which seems to put an additional burden on the seller, without a corresponding benefit to the purchaser, and the consequence of adopting it would, we think, be that purchasers would without any real reason, presently obtain an excuse for rejecting contracts at prices had dropped." (ante, p. 368; 36 L. T. N.S. 163.; 2 Q. B. Div. 115.) I must submit to your Lordships that if it be admitted, as the Lord Justice is willing to admit, that the literal meaning of 'shipped' implies that the whole quantity must be put on board during a specified time, it is no answer to the literal meaning, it is no observation which disposes of, or gets rid of, or displaces that meaning to say that it puts an additional burden on the seller without a corresponding benefit to the purchaser; that is a matter of which the seller and the purchaser are the best judges.

It is any reason for saying that it would be a burden by which purchasers, without any real reason, would frequently obtain an excuse for rejecting contracts when prices had dropped. The fulfilment of any term in any contract is a burden by which a purchaser is able to get rid of the contract when prices have dropped; but that is not the reason why a term which is found in a contract should not be fulfilled. The Lord Justice says, "The sole object of the purchaser of rice is to produce as this in confining the seller to a particular time within which the goods must be shipped is, as far as appears, that he may know when the goods are likely to arrive." The Lord Justice takes no notice whatever of other reasons to which I have referred, namely, that the merchant may not desire to be bound before a certain time to pay the money, or that he may, in entering into a contract of this kind, have in view the fulfilment of some other contract not with an analogous stipulation, which a contract in any different form would not fulfil. The Lord Justice continues, "That object seems to be actually obtained by knowing when the shipment will be, or has been completed as by knowing when each part of the goods was put on board. Therefore should entirely agree with the decision in Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530) even if that decision was not binding on us."

It is that makes it right that I should refer to the decision in Alexander v. Vandersee. The Court of Appeal in the present case seem to have thought that there was a rule of general application laid down by the decision of that case in the Exchequer Chamber, and that that rule was binding, or ought to have been binding, in the court below in the present case. I do not find that there was anything which could be called a rule laid down in the case of Alexander v. Vandersee. It was a case in which a contract somewhat similar to the present, but of Danubian maize, was made; and the contract was that the maize was to be shipped in the month of June, and, in point of fact, what took place was this, a great part of the maize was shipped in the month of May that is to say, was put on board in the month of May. The remaining part was put on board in the month of June, and a bill of lading was given on the completion of the shipment for the whole parcel of maize. Then it appears that, at the trial of this case, the question was left to the jury: Was a shipment of maize under those circumstances, commenced in May, concluded in June, and the bill of lading for the whole given in June, a June shipment according to the understanding of the trade? The jury in that case found that it was a June shipment, and the majority of the Court of Exchequer Chamber were of opinion that that question was properly left to the jury, and that, the jury having answered it as they did, that disposed of the case. Your Lordships have not now to decide, and cannot now decide whether what took place in the case of Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530) was the course which ought properly to have been taken with respect to the conduct of the case. We have not before us the evidence which was before the jury, or the form in which the question was left to the jury; but in that particular case that question, which I have stated, seems in some form or other to have been left to the jury, and they, as I have said, found that the shipment was a June shipment. I will assume that that decision was right, and that the mode in which that case was treated, was the correct mode. It has no application to the present case. Your Lordships have not here what occurred in the case of Alexander v. Vandersee, a continuous shipment going on up to the period of completion, the completion being in the month specified, and a bill of lading given in that month. The case, therefore, of Alexander v. Vandersee in the first place laid down no general rule; it proceeded on the finding of the jury in that particular case, and whether it laid down a rule or not, the rule would not be applicable to a case like the present, in which the facts are different from the facts which occurred there.

Before leaving that part of the case, I must advert to a suggestion which was made at the bar on behalf of the respondents, although it does not appear to have been made in the court below. It was suggested that even if the construction of the contract be as I have stated, still, if the rice was not put on board in the particular month, that would not be a reason which would justify the appellants in having rejected the rice altogether, but that it might afford a ground for a cross action by them if they could show that any particular damage resulted to them from the rice not having been put on board in the month in question. I cannot think that there is any foundation whatever for that argument. If the construction of the contract be, as I have said, that it means that the rice is to be put on board in the months in question, that is part of the description of the subject matter of what is sold. What is sold is not 300 tons of rice in gross, or in general. It is 300 tons of Madras rice to be put on board at Madras during the particular months. The construction may be shown by evidence to be different from what I have supposed; but if the construction be that which I have supposed, the plaintiff who sues upon that contract has not launched his case until he has shown that he has tendered that thing which has been contracted for, and if he is unable to show this, he cannot claim any damages for the non-fulfilment of the contract.

Now, having submitted to your Lordships what I understand to be the natural and literal meaning of this contract, I ask how is that, the natural meaning, to be got rid of? I conceive in this way, and only in this way. It was, of course, competent for those who were resisting the application of this natural construction of the contract to have said, "We will prove by evidence that, according to the custom of the trade, these words which have this natural signification, are used in a wider, or in a different sense. The natural meaning of the words, no doubt, is that the rice shall be shipped during these two particular months, but we will show that, by the custom of the trade, a latitude is allowed, and that provided the shipment has been conducted in such a way as that the ship will be able to sail during these two months, that means, by the custom of the trade, the shipping of rice on board during the months in question." That, of course, would—according to the well-known rule of law which admits parol evidence not to contradict but to explain the words used in a document; to be as it were the mercantile dictionary, in which you are to find the mercantile meaning of the words which are used—be a legitimate and well-known mode of construing the document.

Now, has any evidence of that kind been adduced here? It is a case which is certainly one of the most singular I have ever observed in this respect. The defendants in the action put upon the record pleas which repeated the stipulations in the contract with regard to the shipment being made during the particular months, and the plea averred not only that the stipulation had that meaning, that the goods were to be put on board during those months, but that negatively they should not be put on board at any other time; and the parties went to trial upon those issues among others. The plaintiffs did not propose to adduce, and did not themselves adduce, any evidence as to any custom which would put upon the words in question any meaning different from whatever might be their ordinary or natural meaning. But the defendants not merely rested upon what they contended to be, and what as it seems to me was, the natural meaning of the words, but they proceeded to give evidence that that which was the natural meaning of the words was understood by the trade to be their real meaning, and to be the meaning which the trade was in the habit of acting upon. This appears to me to have been, on the part of the defendants, a taking upon themselves an onus, and an effort to discharge an onus, which, if it pointed to the producing of evidence at all, was an onus that lay on the other side. It was for the plaintiffs, if they had any evidence of a custom controlling or explaining the natural meaning of the words in the contract, to have produced their evidence, and it was hardly necessary for the defendants to produce evidence which only professed to show that the words meant what naturally they would have appeared to have meant. However, evidence was so produced, and very strong evidence was produced by the defendants to that effect, and what is still more remarkable, one of the very strongest pieces of evidence the defendants had on that point was the evidence of one of the plaintiffs, who upon cross-examination said, with at least as much distinctness of force as any of the other witnesses, that he would not consider rice put on board during any months other than the two months specified to be a tender within the meaning of this contract. In that state of things, from any evidence being produced by the defendants to alter the natural meaning of the words, the evidence was evidence going to show that the words ought to receive, and would in fact receive, their natural and ordinary construction, and I think the counsel for the respondents to your Lordships' bar admitted with great propriety that they could not have done otherwise. I admit, that if the question were asked, Was there any evidence to go to the jury of a custom upon these words a meaning different from their natural and ordinary meaning? the answer would be that there was no evidence of that kind to the jury.

Therefore, I submit to your Lordships that the evidence which appears to me to have been the only evidence of controlling the natural construction of the contract, was not a mode which was resorted to, or could be resorted to in this case. There was nothing whatever in the evidence to go to the jury entitling the plaintiffs to say that a construction different from the ordinary meaning of the words should be put upon the contract. That the more important as bearing upon some of the observations of the Lord Justice in the Court of Appeal.

Your Lordships will remember that there were in substance two applications to the Court of Appeal. One was with reference to whether the verdict should be entered for the defendants; the other was with reference to a motion for a new trial; and with regard to the motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, Mellish, L.J. thus expressed himself: "Several witnesses, and among them the plaintiff himself, have deposed that they understood the word 'shipped' to mean 'put on board,' and that the whole quantity sold must be put on board within the specified time, and no witness says that the word in mercantile usage has any other meaning, and they appear to have based their verdict upon a construction which, though made by one or two witnesses, we do not think satisfactory, between contracts which the ship is named, and contracts which are to be fulfilled by delivering goods out of any ship." On the other hand we think it is obvious in going through the evidence that each witness was not speaking of any real mercantile meaning, but the word "shipped" or "shipment" was being put upon his own construction on the ground, and, as persons who are not lawyers are apt to do, interpreted the word literally. No witness said that he had known instances of goods being shipped and such rejection acquiesced in when the shipment had been completed within the specified time, because the whole of the goods were on board during that time; and this is the evidence which in our opinion ought to be taken before the rule established by the decision in Anderson v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 Q.B.) is departed from." I have already ascertain the exact state of things at the date of the contract, and in truth the goods which have been tendered to the defendants were all on board at the very date of the contract itself. They had, therefore, been put there of course with no reference whatever to the contract and its terms, and it is not surprising that this shipment or embarkation of the goods, made before the contract was entered into, and without knowledge of the contract, should not be found to square with that instrument. The consequence is that we have here, as it seems to me, an engagement to supply rice to the defendants, the character of which rice was to be this, it was to be rice shipped during these two particular months, or either of them, and not otherwise.

Now under these circumstances, and with the plain meaning of the contract lying, as it appears to me, on its surface, we are not entitled to speculate on the reasons and motives which have induced those who are engaged in this particular trade to frame their contracts in the manner which pleases them best. We must assume that it is owing to the custom of the trade that they have determined to frame them in this fashion. They do not stipulate either that the goods shall be found on board at such a time, or that the goods shall be on board before the end of the month of April; that would have been a very simple mode of expressing it, if that was what they intended; but they do expressly say that the goods shall be shipped, that is to say, put on board, during these two particular months, or one of them.

Now the learned judge who tried the case and addressed the jury in the first instance, appears to have reasoned upon the motives which might probably have induced such a contract to be entered into, and also Mellish, L.J., in the Court of Appeal, did in some degree consider how far in his judgment a reason could be assigned for such a form of contract. Brett, J., in addressing the jury, seemed to read the contract in fact as I have just expressed, as if it had been that the ship should be loaded before the end of April; that is the construction which in his view of it, expressed as he expressed it, it would convey. The view that I take of the contract I confess is this, that it is not the article "rice" only that is sold, but the thing that is sold is the article "rice shipped in March or April," and the article "rice shipped in February" is not the article which has been purchased by the defendants. The Lord Justice says, in very much the same phraseology, that the word "shipped" is capable of the two constructions, of meaning either "begun and finished to be put on board," or "the putting on board completed," in March or April. [His Lordship read the passage from the judgment of Mellish, L.J., quoted by the Lord Chancellor, and continued:] Now with the greatest possible respect, and I am sure no one judge ever entertained more respect for another than I entertain for Mellish, L.J., I do think that that is a very hazardous way of construing a contract, namely, to say in a class of contracts having a great range that the judge can see upon the face of the contract, relating to a class of business upon which he may or may not have been well informed, a sufficient reason to reject what may be the literal interpretation, if otherwise there would be an excuse afforded to parties for rejecting contracts.

The danger of such a construction is not because it is impossible to know all the facts which may have induced the persons to put into a contract. If the words have a certain finite meaning, it is dangerous to depart from meaning, until you can arrive at any sound ground upon which you should do so; it is dangerous to depart from it upon a conjecture that it can make no difference to the parties; and special cannot reject the literal construction, as it is to me, because you think that unless you reject it you may be affording an opportunity for a dishonest purchaser to escape from his bargain course, as has been already observed in cases, if a purchaser is desirous of escaping his bargain, and if he finds that the bargain it is attempted to enforce as against him only burdensome, but is against the letter contract, there is nothing in our law which prevents his availing himself of the answer case made against him, namely, that he has entered into the engagement you allege, if you seek to fasten it upon him, you must bring him within the four corners of the contract. What Mellish, L.J., says, is very much like Brett, J., said. Assuming in the first place the only object in view is to know when the goods may arrive, he further assumes that the object is to know the latest period at which it may arrive.

Now I apprehend that it is important to persons entering into contracts of this description to arrange all their contracts for the whole course of the year after the calculations they may have made as to what particular times they will require funds to meet their engagements, and it is just as important to them to know how long it will be before their ship arrives, as to know how soon she will be that she will arrive. They do not wish the goods to arrive sooner than the time when they have made their arrangements for them, and they do not wish them to arrive later than the time they have made their arrangements for, and if they have specifically named the months of March and April, they mean those two months. They do not mean to purchase goods placed on board in the previous month, February, which therefore would, or might, arrive at a different season from that at which they specially engaged by the contract to accept the goods, which goods by the nature of the contract are to be paid for immediately on the ship's arrival.

That really seems to me to amount to the whole case, because as regards the evidence which has been produced, I entirely agree with what has been already said, that that evidence, if it was required at all, or if it is admissible at all, has nothing, strengthened what appears to be the natural construction of the contract, that "March" does mean "March," and "April" does mean "April," and that the loading "during the month of March and April," does mean a loading during those months.

Without detaining your Lordships any longer upon the case, which has been so fully and ably gone into, I am content to say that I do not think this case is at all governed by the decision of Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 530), nor do I think it necessary to say anything whatever upon that case. I think it is upon the construction of the contract which we have before us, that that contract was formed in such a manner as that the question of fact whether the things which are proved in evidence to have taken place as regards these defendants did amount to a shipping of the rice within the meaning which ought to be put upon the contract. Before saying a word about the evidence which was given with regard to usage and custom, I will proceed to consider what is the meaning which your lordships should, in the absence of any evidence of mercantile usage, put upon the word "shipped" in a contract of this sort. Supposing we had no help from mercantile usage, and nothing to guide us but that general knowledge of dealing and of what takes place which judges judicially possess and take notice of, what would that contract mean? It seems to me that where a parcel of goods is begun to be put on board on or after March 1st, and they are all finally put on board, so that the shipping is entirely completed before March 31st, and nothing then remains but to take the bill of lading for them, there can be no doubt that that is a March shipment; the whole shipment is completed in that month. But there would be a great deal more difficulty in saying whether it was a March shipment or not if the case were this: suppose the shipment of a large parcel of goods goes on as one transaction which occupies several days; suppose, for example, the shipment of a large parcel of goods which may take ten days or so to put on board, has been begun before the end of the month of February, and has been proceeded with continuously with reasonable despatch, and in the ordinary way as a matter of fair dealing, and the completion of the shipment is in March, although the commencement was in February, and the bill of lading is taken in March, I think the materiality of the bill of lading would only be as evidence to show that the shipment was then completed. I do not think the delaying of the bill of lading for a fortnight would make the date of the shipment a fortnight later. I think the material thing is the completion of the putting the goods on board, which would entitle you to the bill of lading, but the bill of lading would be strong, and in most cases conclusive evidence of the date when the shipment was really completed. I think in a case of the sort I have supposed there is a serious and grave question whether or no the shipment may be considered as being made partly in one month and partly in the other, or whether it may not be considered as made at the time when the one indivisible transaction of putting those bags of rice on board was ended and completed, resulting in the whole parcel being on board, so that there is now a right to say, We have shipped this cargo, or portion of cargo, and we are now entitled to a bill of lading.

That was the case which arose in Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530). I do not mean to say more upon that than to point out that that was the case which arose there. The majority of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, Kelly, C.B., dissenting, said that that was a sufficiently ambiguous matter to make it a proper question to ask the jury whether this was a shipment in June or not, that being the month when it ended, having begun in May. The decision was that it was a proper case to take the opinion of the jury upon. I see that I am reported to have said (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 534), standing as far as I can perceive alone in that respect, that without the aid of the finding of the jury I should have come to the same conclusion. I do not mean to say more about the case than this, that, while saying I was wrong upon that, I have very considerable hesitation and doubt in saying now that I was right. I pass by that case with merely that observation, and leave it as it stands. When this case came before the Queen's Bench Division, and I had to give judgment, I could not consider whether the decision in Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 530) was right or wrong. Being a decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber it bound me, and consequently it was absolutely necessary for the purpose of the decision there to distinguish this case, and so that it was not the same as Alexander v. Vandersee. Now, when I am advising your Lordships in the House of Lords that is no longer so, I am not bound to say that the decision in Alexander v. Vandersee is good, but it is quite enough for the purpose of advising your Lordships what conclusion you should arrive at to say that I do distinguish the present case from Alexander v. Vandersee, and that I think it is distinguishable now for the same reasons as those in which I distinguished it in the Court of Queen's Bench below, where it was absolutely necessary to distinguish it.

The facts are here that the great bulk of the rice was put on board during the month of February. For nine-tenths of it bills of lading were signed in February. With regard to the remaining tenth, a large part of that was put on board in February, but a small portion, amounting, I think, to four tons, was put on board in March, and the bill of lading for the last parcel was signed in March. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that, putting aside the mercantile evidence altogether, it is quite clear that as far as regards those nine-tenths which were put on board in February, and the shipment of which was completed in February, as was indicated by the taking of the bills of lading then, it was not part of a continuous operation eked out by putting on board four tons more in March. It seems to me that it was a completely a February shipment that, had this contract said "shipped in February" instead of saying "shipped in March <sup>and</sup> April," the defendants could not have rejected it. I think that equally applies to the present case; being a February shipment it cannot be a March shipment. I observe that in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, Mellish, L.J.—and I suppose I need hardly say that every word which comes from him I consider with the greatest respect, and do not differ from without thinking over it very much—takes a different view. I quite agree with him that a bill of lading is no essential part of the shipping of a cargo or parcel of goods. A parcel of goods may be put on board a ship without a bill of lading at all; it is no necessary part, therefore, of the shipment. But when the question is whether there has been a shipment within a particular time or not, the fact that a bill of lading has been made out and signed is to my mind evidence, and until a mercantile man appears to tell me that it makes no difference, I should regard it as conclusive evidence, at least as far as regards that portion of the shipment in which it is signed, it is then completed and has an end. It is in that way that I consider it being a decisive and important question, and I must say that, to my mind, the real

[APP.]

LEASE v. SCOTT.

[CT. OF APP.]

J. and of the other learned justices of law agreed with him on that point is not

, therefore, that it comes round to this, ad facie in the absence of mercantile or the like, the true construction of the words that "shipped in March" bears such a sense that the portions or parcels of goods put in this case in February, and so come on board and shipped that bills of lading signed for them, were not March bills, and consequently, in the absence of mercantile usage, the defendants are entitled to the mercantile usage, I will say scarcely upon that subject, for it really comes to this, that the plaintiffs did not attempt to prove their case by mercantile evidence. They said the bill of lading was signed without mercantile usage in their favour. The defendants might have said upon that; but the jury having found in Alexander v. Vandersee (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 1) in that particular case there was a mercantile meaning to the thing, they decided in favour of that, and they took upon themselves to prove the negative. Taking up that you could hardly expect them to give evidence of it. They took upon themselves to prove that there was no custom. Nobody was asked to prove that there was a custom the other way. I think your Lordships are bound to act upon the question which was asked, and such an answer was given, as to whether there was any difference in the meaning of the words established by mercantile usage, of which plainly no evidence was given.

That view of the case it seems to me that the court should be for the defendants, as it was given in the Queen's Bench Division, and I agree with what the noble and learned Lord who took the lead has proposed, that the costs should be awarded in future cases, give an indemnity. I therefore include the costs in this House as the court below.

ORDON concurred.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed. The judgment of the Queen's Bench Division affirmed with costs.

For the appellants, Lathey and Hart.
For the respondents, Stevens, Wilkinson and Parry.

THE COURT OF JUDICATURE.

COURT OF APPEAL.

MEETINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Presided by W. ARLETON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

For the appellants, COLEBRIDGE, C.J., BRANWELL and BRETT, L.J.J.

April 16, 17, and May 5, 1877.

LEASE v. SCOTT.

*Bill of lading—Assignment of—Consideration for stoppage in transitu—Unpaid vendor.
If a bill of lading for valuable conmodity is assigned to a third party, and it makes no difference that no part of* the consideration for the transfer arose out of such bill of lading.

*G. and Co., the consignees of certain goods from the defendant from abroad, for which they had accepted a bill of exchange at three months, being already indebted to the plaintiff, obtained a further loan on the condition of giving security.
They delivered to him the bill of lading of the goods, together with other securities to the amount required. After this and before the arrival of the goods G. and Co. became insolvent.*

Held (reversing the decision of Field, J.) that the defendant was not entitled to stop the goods in transitu, for that it was not necessary that the consideration for the assignment of the bill of lading should be obtained by means of the bill of lading, and that there is in such a case no difference between a past and present consideration.

Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (L. Rep.
2 P. C. 393; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 271) dissented from.

THIS was an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of Field, J., directing judgment to be entered for the defendant.

The facts of the case, which will be found in the report of the case in the court below (ante, p. 352) are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Williams, Q.C. (with him Matthews) for the appellant.—The transfer of a bill of lading to a bona fide transferee on account of an existing debt with the intention of passing the property of the goods therein contained, does in fact pass the property, and even if this were not so, there was in this case something more to support the transfer than an existing debt; there was an indorsement made and given in pursuance of a binding obligation. The judgment of the court below was founded on the decision in Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 271; L. Rep. 2 P. C. 393), but that case can be distinguished as to the facts from the present case. There was there first a promise to make an advance, and then a fresh contract to assign the whole property, and this was the contract for which there was no consideration; that there was valuable consideration is an essential ingredient in that decision as may be seen from the judgment at p. 406. The decision in The Marie Joseph (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 219; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 190, 394) is to the effect that a transferee of a bill of lading for valuable consideration is entitled to the goods before an unpaid vendor, and this favours the appellant's contention. In the present case, as in The Chartered Bank of India v. Henderson (L. Rep. 5 P. C. 501), a bill of lading has been indorsed for valuable consideration, and a distinction between such a case and that of Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte, is pointed out at p. 512 of the judgment of Sir B. Peacock. They also cited:

Hibbert v. Carter, 1 T. B. 745;
Lempriere v. Paisley, 2 T. B. 485;
Lackbarrow v. Mason, 1 Sm. L. C. 757;
Ex parte Norton, L. Rep. 16 Eq. 397;
Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 491;
Currie v. Misa, L. Rep. 10 Ex. 158;
Alliance Bank v. Broom, 34 L. J. 258, Ch.

Webster (with him Murphy, Q.C.) for the defendant.—Even if the plaintiff is entitled as against Green and his assignee, he can have no right against Scott, the unpaid vendor, for there was no consideration for the indorsement of the bill lading. The only consideration was the antecedent debt, and that being a past consideration will not suffice to defeat the right of the unpaid vendor to stop in transitu; no advance was made on the faith of this bill of lading, and so no part of the consideration arose out of it. Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 271) is clear on this point. In Lickbarrow v. Mason (1 Sm. L. C. 757) it is said that the right here claimed may be defeated by the negotiation of a bill of lading, but in that case there was a handing over for present value, and it does not decide that a transfer in pursuance of a general agreement to give security will give as good a title to a transferee, and that is what has been done here. The question of past consideration did not arise in The Marie Joseph (L. Rep. 6 P. C. 219; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 190, 394); and Currie v. Misa (L. Rep. 10 Ex., 153) does not apply, because there can be no stoppage in transitu in the case of cheques. The assignee of this bill can only be in the same position as regards the defendant as were the assignors, Geen and Co., and the equitable right which the defendant had against Geen and Co., he also had against the plaintiff. Specific performance of this contract would not have been decreed; an order might have been made that security should be given, not that this bill of lading should be handed over. He cited also:

Spalding v. Ruding, 6 Beav. 376;
Re Westsithus, 5 B. & Ad. 817;
Mangles v. Dixon, 3 H. of L. Cas. 702;
Gurney v. Behrend, 3 E. & B. 632;
Williams, Q.C., in reply, cited:
Twyne's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 1.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 5.—The judgment of the Court was delivered by BRAMWELL, L.J.—The defendant has stopped in transitu the goods the subject of this proceeding. He has done so effectually and rightfully, unless the plaintiff has obtained a title to them which cannot be defeated by such a stoppage. Whether he has is the question.

The facts are few, and as follows: Geen and Co., the consignees of the goods, were indebted to the plaintiff. On Saturday 30th Dec. they applied to the plaintiff for a further advance, which he agreed to make on being first covered. Geen and Co. promised to give him cover, not naming anything in particular, and the plaintiff advanced them a further sum of 2000*l.*, the plaintiff being content with their promise. On the following Tuesday the bill of lading of the goods in question consigned by the defendant to Geen and Co. came to the possession of the latter, who on the following day, Wednesday, deposited it and other property with the plaintiff in fulfilment of their promise to cover him. No question turns on the quantity of property so handed over, nor in any way as to the validity of the transfer; for the jury on this have found entirely in favour of the plaintiff.

This being so, the plaintiff contended that he was a bonâ fide holder of the bill of lading for valuable consideration by transfer from the former lawful holder and proprietor thereof, and of the goods mentioned in it. This was not denied by the defendant. His contention was that, though the plaintiff was such holder effectually as against Geen and Co. and their assignees if they had become bankrupt, or anyone claiming through against them except him, the defendant, the defendant, had not lost his right to transitu; that the right of stoppage is available and is effectual against every person except against the assignees of a bill of lading for valuable consideration, and against them that valuable consideration has been given in pursuance of the bill of lading; that, if the consideration was past, it was not such consideration, and the title gained by it was such a title as would defeat the equitable right of stoppage in transitu; that such right was defeated where there was a transfer for valuable consideration; that it was so in such a case the consignor or stopper in transitu parting with the bill of lading enabled the assignee to get valuable consideration by means of it; and so had indirectly caused the giving of valuable consideration by the assignee of the bill of lading, but that that was not so where the consideration was past. There the giver of the valuable consideration was not prejudiced by means of the lading, and consequently there was no reason why the equitable right of stoppage in transitu should be lost.

It was first argued for the defendant that the equitable right of the consignor should prevail against the equitable right of the transferee of the bill of lading. But on its being pointed out that the title of the transferee was legal, the argument was changed to what is above mentioned, viz., that the equitable right of stoppage prevails against a legal title acquired by receiving the bill of lading for a consideration, no part of which was caused to be given by the bill of lading. The distinction between the two propositions is material. In support of this argument, Rodger v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 271) was cited. We think that it justifies the argument, and is in point. There may be differences in the facts of the two cases, but the ratio decidendi was clearly founded on the principle which is advanced for the defendant in the present case. We are not bound by its authority, but need hardly say that we should treat any decision of the Privy Council with the greatest respect, and rejoice if we could agree with it. But we cannot. There is no trace of any such distinction between cases of past and present consideration to be found in the books. It is true there is no decision in the law. But wherever the rule is laid down, it is laid down without qualification, viz., that a transfer of a bill of lading for valuable consideration to a bonâ fide transferee defeats the right of stoppage in transitu. It is true, no doubt, that opinions must be taken secundum subjectam materiam, but it is strange that no judge, no writer, ever guarded himself against applying the rule too widely, by inserting this qualification if he thought it existed. We cannot help saying then, that not only is this a novelty, but it is a novelty opposed to what has been called the silent authority of all judges and writers who have dealt with the subject. More than that, in Veritas (4 Camp. 31), where Lord Ellenborough said of his way to say that the plaintiff's transferee for valuable consideration could not defeat the right of stoppage, he said the ground that the consideration tion was completed in Feb. 1875, but in Nov. 1874 the defendant Norman's underwriters had paid him as for a total loss. The plaintiff in this action sued the defendant Norman to recover the cost of the removal of the wreck. The defendant pleaded that the obstruction being caused by the act of God, there was no liability; and that even if there was liability, the underwriters only were liable, as they had become owners of the wreck from the time of their payment for a total loss. Norman joined one of the underwriters as a defendant. No notice of abandonment had been given to the underwriters.

At the trial before Cleasby, B., the learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiff as against the defendant Norman, who now appealed.

By the Harbours Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 56:

The harbour master may remove any wreck or other obstruction to the harbour, dock, or pier, or the approaches to the same, and also any floating timber which impedes the navigation thereof, and the expense of removing any such wreck, obstruction, or floating timber shall be repaired by the owner of the same, and the harbour master may detain such wreck or floating timber for securing the expenses, and on non-payment of such expenses, on demand, may sell such wreck or floating timber, and out of the proceeds of such sale pay such expenses rendering the overplus, if any, to the owner on demand.

Butt, Q.C. and Benjamin, Q.C. (A. E. Hardy with them) for defendant Norman.—The shipowner is not liable under sect. 56 of the Harbours Act 1847, where there has been no negligence on his part. The Ardrossan Harbour Act incorporates the Harbours Act 1847, and under sect. 74 of the latter Act the shipowner is only liable for obstructing the harbour where there has been negligence: (River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson, ante, p. 242; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 118; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. D. 546.) The same principle ought to be applied to sect. 56. The statute did not intend to impose upon the shipowner a liability greater than he had at common law. The underwriters were really the owners of the wreck; except for certain purposes the fact of one man being registered owner does not prevent another being the real owner. Besides, this was a wreck, and therefore registration was at an end:

White v. Crisp, 10 Ex. 312; 23 L. J. 317, Ex.;

Brown v. Mallett, 5 C. B. 599.

The effect of paying for a total loss operates as a transfer of the property to the underwriters:

Emerigon, vol. 2, c. 17, p. 205;

Case v. Davidson, 5 Mau. & Sel. 79;

Miller v. Woodfall, 27 L. J. 120, Q. B.; 8 E. & B. 493;

Phillips on Insurance, sects. 1717, 1723, 1726;

Arnould on Marine Insurance, 4th edit., p. 866, 868 (vol. 2).

[Lord COLERIDGE.—The passage from Arnould is adopted by the court in Cammell v. Sewell (5 H. & N. 728; 6 Jur. N. S. 918; 29 L. J. 350, Ex.) In Micklereid v. West (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. D. 428) "owner" in the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) was held to mean charterer. When the facts on which Brown v. Mallett (5 C. B. 594) was decided (in 1848) occurred, the 19 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 3 was in force. Sect. 56 of the Harbours Act 1847 says that the harbour master may remove, not that the owner shall remove. When the owner has abandoned, he has ceased to be owner, and the section does not apply. The case of the owner of the ship having abandoned the wreck, and the wreck, not being the expense of removal is a casus omissus.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and Macleod (for them) for the underwriters.—The sole question is what is the meaning of "owner" in the Act. This is not a case of mere wreck, as which has drifted in as flotsam and jetsam causes an obstruction. Under sect. 56: "other obstruction" means obstruction generis as wreck. This was not a "wreck" within the meaning of the section. The nature of a peculiar construction being built in watertight compartments. The owners treated it as a ship after the casualty occurred and the sect. 56 does not intend the harbour master's power whilst the ship is under the owner's management. Sect. 3 of the 19 Geo. 2, c. 22 deals with ships sunk or stranded, showing that the legislature does not assume, except in cases of wreck, that the harbour master supersedes the owner's right. As to the definition of a "wreck," see Coke's Inst. (pt. 2) and Comyn's Digest, Title "wreck." It is admitted that by paying upon a total loss the underwriters are placed in the position, for some purpose having the property passed to them from the time of the event which caused the loss: (Arnould on Insurance pp. 1178 and 1181); but for the purpose of sect. 56 of the statute of 1847, the underwriters have never in any sense been the "owner." They may refuse to take the property. At any rate, they must do some unequivocal Act showing that they mean to take it: (Phillips on Insurance, p. 1181; Xenos v. Fox, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 84; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 630). There is an obvious distinction between payment on a total loss when complete and accepting notice of abandonment. In the latter case there is some evidence of the underwriter's acquiescence in the passing of the property to him.

Sir H. James, Q.C. and Cohen, Q.C. (for them) for the plaintiff.—The defendant Norman is primarily liable. He was the registered and actual owner at the time of the obstruction, and afterwards he held himself out as the owner. Under sect. 56 "owner" is the owner at the time of the casualty; if not, there is a great difficulty in determining at what time ownership imposes liability under the Act. There is no hardship in making the registered owner at the time of the casualty liable. If he is not liable, then an owner by a transfer of a mere voluntary transferee (and the underwriters are no more) can evade his liability. There can be no renunciation of the property where the wreck goes down in the harbour. The River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson (sup.) differs from the present case, because the subject matter was a vessel, reference to which sect. 74 was passed, was made by means of one vessel coming into collision with another, which supposes negligence. Sect. 56 contemplates a wreck through stress of weather, which is the act of God. Whether the obstruction occurred by accident or not, there would be no liability against the owner under sect. 56. The liability imposed by the Act: (Cammell v. Sewell).

A. E. Hardy, for the defendant Norman.—The court can, if it thinks fit, make an order against the underwriters under the Order XVI. of the Judicature Act of 1873. There is no liability under sect. 56 until the obstruction is completed, nor is

[OF APP.]

THE EARL OF EGLINTON v. NORMAN AND ANOTHER.

[OF APP.]

the property until, at any rate, the removal commenced. The harbour master may remove obstruction cheaply, as by blowing it up, or, alternatively, as by employing divers with a view to the cargo. If the construction contended for by the plaintiff is correct, if the owner sells the ship, the harbour master might saddle him with the costs of removing the obstruction in the expensive way, leaving the vendee to reap the benefit. "Owner" means the person beneficially entitled to the obstructing property at the time when the harbour master objects to its removal. The underwriters are primarily liable to use they have not disclaimed the property: see Insurance Act, 1717.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—This case has given rise to a number of interesting questions, many of which, as far as I know, arise for the first time. It appears to me that the whole matter in dispute reduces itself to a single point, to be considered, perhaps, under two heads, namely, what is the true construction of sect. 56 of the 10 & 11 Vict. in respect to the word "owner," or who is the "owner" within the meaning of the Act? At what point of time does the ownership for the purpose of fixing him with the liability which is incurred under the section? And the words of the Act are these. [His Lordship read sect. 56.]

In this case the plaintiff was the owner of a ship, private in the sense that he had the benefit of the tolls of it, but public in the sense that he was bound to allow any ships to come and take the benefit of it. Of that harbour was the harbour master. The ship in question was up near the entrance of the harbour, having been built in watertight compartments, part of it floated into the harbour, and did not sink at all. This part was taken possession of, and gives rise to no question under the section. The other portion of the ship, upon which the wreck taking place, stuck fast at the entrance of the harbour, and was undoubtedly an obstruction to the harbour, dock, and pier, and their approaches. It was properly removed by the harbour master under the powers given him by sect. 56, and the simple question for our determination is, who is the person liable over to the harbour master for the expense of such removal? There is no dispute before us as to the amount of the expenses or of the extent to which they were recovered against the "owner," whosoever he be. We have simply to treat these expenses as an unascertained quantity for the purpose, and decide on principle on whom the burden falls. The owner of the ship upon the day, and up to the moment of her striking the rock, was the defendant Norman, one of the partners of Messrs. Baring. The ship was insured for a large sum with certain underwriters, the defendant underwriter, representing the insurers of the policy, has been made a defendant in this action, and the main question for us is, whether the owner before the accident, or the underwriter afterwards, is, under the circumstances I have mentioned, the proper person to be made liable for the amount of the expenses under the words "owner of the same" in sect. 56. The facts I need mention are these:—Some considerable time—three weeks or a month—after the casualty, the underwriters paid as for a total

Now, it is admitted under well-known principles of law that for certain purposes, and in regard to certain persons, the underwriters paying that total loss would have vested in them, as from the time of the casualty, the subject matter of the policy in respect of which they had paid the total loss. The question is whether, applying that principle of law to the unquestioned facts of this case, they are the owners of the wreck or obstruction for the purpose of being liable to the harbour master under the 56th section. I am of opinion that they are not, and that the true construction of this section is to fix the ownership on whoever is the owner of the wreck or obstruction at the time of the casualty, when the ship first becomes a wreck which obstructs the harbour. The section is by no means free from difficulties, and those difficulties of interpretation have been very ably put in the course of the arguments before us. The difficulty in construing this section is that which applies to many sections, expressed in general terms of many Acts of Parliament, namely, that we have to construe it with reference to a particular state of facts which manifestly was not in the mind of the framers of the section at the time when the Act was passed. We have, therefore, to deduce a meaning by applying legal principles and rules of interpretation.

The section empowers the harbour master to remove something which by supposition is already in a state of wreck and obstruction. He is empowered to remove, for the benefit of the public, or the general advantage of the harbour, that which, at the moment he has to deal with it, becomes a wreck and an obstruction. He is first to remove, and then to recover, if he can, the expense from the owner. Now, who in reason is the owner? There is a hardship in a certain sense on whomsoever is made the owner, that is to say, a burden is imposed upon some one whose property has been injured by no fault or negligence of his own, and on the other hand the harbour master has his harbour obstructed by no fault of his own. On whom is the hardship to fall? It seems to me that the policy of the act is to make the person liable whose property has caused the obstruction, i.e., the persons whose property the ship was when it became in such a state as to cause the powers given by the section to the harbour master to apply. That construction gets rid of the powerful argument founded on the case of The River Weir Commissioners v. Adamson (ante, p. 242), an argument which, until I considered it more fully, had great weight with me. That case was lately heard in this court, and a decision was pronounced upon the 74th section of this Act that under that section the owner of a vessel, or floating timber, was to be answerable to the undertaker for damage done to the harbour, dock, or pier, but that if the damage, although done by the ship in the sense that the ship was the instrument, was yet done without any fault or negligence on the part of the owner, or by some force against which the owner could not provide, and could not control, that damage is exempted from the operation of sect. 74 (although the liability is by statute), as it would have been exempted from liability at common law. But under sect. 56, we are not dealing with an injury directly produced upon property by what has been called Actus Dei, but with an obstruction which is the result of, although not directly consequent on, the Actus Dei. In the present case, for example, if the ship, instead of breaking up on a rock a little way from the pier, had dashed upon the pier and injured it, and had afterwards been washed away from the pier and gone down in the fairway of the harbour, then, as I understand the decision in The River Weir Commissioners v. Adamson, Lord Eglinton would not have been able to recover from the owners of the ship the damage done to the pier, because it was the direct and immediate result of the Actus Dei; but the Actus Dei being at an end, and the consequence being a continued obstruction to the harbour, the harbour master must remove the obstruction, and somebody must pay the expense.

On the whole, I come to the conclusion that the true interpretation of the word "owner" in sect. 56, is "owner" at the time when the casualty happens, and that he must thereupon repay to the harbour master the expenses of removal. That being the decision to which I have come, it is unnecessary to decide a great many questions that were properly raised in argument, because Norman was undoubtedly the owner of the ship at the time of the casualty. At that time the rights of the harbour master against the owners vested. He had a right at that time to begin to remove the obstruction, and to remove it at the expense of the persons who were at that time the owners. In my judgment it would be carrying the doctrine of relation too far to say that, in this case, the property related back to the underwriters, who had either received or accepted notice of abandonment, or paid upon a total loss after receiving such notice. It would be carrying the doctrine too far to hold that any such consequence of law could divest an already vested right of action in a person who might have already begun, and in this case had begun, to act upon that right. I do not question the effect of the relation back as between the underwriters and the assured.

The only other question is one which I agree with Mr. Hardy in thinking is properly before us under the rules of the Judicature Act, and, as far as I understand the shorthand writer's note of what took place before Baron Cleasby is before us by agreement between the parties. That question is, whether the owner has a right over against the underwriters to recover the expenses of removal. Now anything I am about to say has reference only to the circumstances of this case. I think the liability here is a risk which the owner might have, but has not insured against. It is a risk which is not covered by any words in this policy unless it can be supposed to come under the suing and labouring clause. In my judgment it is far beyond the meaning of that clause that such a liability as this could be recovered under it. I do not think there is any ground either upon the facts, or under the policy to fix the underwriters with any such liability as has been attempted to be placed upon them.

For these reasons I am of opinion that Cleasby, B.'s judgment is right, and must be affirmed.

BRAMWELL, J.A.—I am of the same opinion.

The plaintiff's case is a very simple and short one. He says, "there was an obstruction which I have removed. I have been put to expense, which the owner must pay, and the owner is either Norman, or the underwriters." The first answer to this was made by Mr. Butt, and it would be an answer for both sets of defendants if it were a well founded one. If "the storm which wrecked the vessel caused the calamity is the act of God," claims that the decision in the case of the Weir Commissioners v. Adamson (ante, p. 3) in his favour on that point. I concur in the decision, and think it was perfectly right, think that case entirely distinguishable from because, as Lord Coleridge has said, if the in this case had done the damage to the pier sunk just outside, the owner would not be. But here it is not the mere sinking, but the lying and continuance there which makes liable. Sect. 56 contemplates the case there as a wrong, and as a thing to be removed and obviated.

The next argument, which was used by Benjamin, would also have answered the sets of defendants. He says that the authorities show (and I agree with him that they do) if the owner of a wrecked vessel abandons and renounces all property in it, he is not at common law to remove it, although, continuing where it is, it is an obstruction to navigation. Here, he says, the wreck was the act of God without negligence on the part, and when he abandons the property the case does not come within sect. 56. I think if Mr. Benjamin could make out the last this argument as a matter of fact it would be a good answer, because I think the Legislature not intend to alter the substantive law of the country with reference to harbours contained under this Act of Parliament. If the Legislature thought it right when the vessel sank in default of the owner, and continued the obstruction to the navigation that the owner, although he renounced all property in it, should be liable to remove the wreck, it seems to me that the Legislature ought to have made it the general law of the country applicable to all harbours in all times. They have not done so, and I am inclined to think that sect. 56, does not intend to alter the law, but to enable harbour masters to remove a nuisance. It seems more a matter of form than of substance. I am inclined to think that Mr. Benjamin's argument would have been founded if he could have made out that there was an abandonment by the owner, but he has not done so. It is perfectly clear that Norman was interested in the property after the vessel was conducted himself in such a way that if the harbour master had treated the property as abandoned and proposed to blow it up so as to get it in the cheapest way, Norman could not say "I have not abandoned the property," and have no right to deal with it on that ground. I therefore cannot agree with the argument on abandonment.

I think the plaintiff has shown no ground of action against one of the two defendants, the question is, which? I think that depends on the construction of sect. 56, and that in that section means "owner at the time when the vessel becomes an obstruction to the harbour." That if the vessel was wrecked in the harbour, and not to cause an obstruction at the time, but afterwards became an obstruction, by lying on a rock for instance into the channel, the question to inquire who was the owner at the time of the obstruction. The same with 1

.]

THE EARL OF EGLINTON v. NORMAN AND ANOTHER.

[Ct. of App.

must look to the owner at the time of ion. There are difficulties, no doubt, this definition; one is, if the person owner, has assigned his right in the here you must determine the owner out who is the person to whom you er the overplus if there be one, and it the assignee is entitled to the over- therefore the owner. Then there is ulty suggested in the case of floating h has been sold after the obstruction. k you must find out who is the person to remove it. He is the continuing be owner contemplated by the Act of

The next difficulty is, I think, a very . Supposing the wreck is an ob- d the owner sells it, then, is the was owner at the time of the ob- be consulted about the removal, or owner remove it in such a way as to beneficial salvage as possible, or original owner with the expense, or owner liable himself? I think , that a purchaser, under those cir- has a right to have a voice in the it does not follow that the original t the person to whom the harbour look. But it seems to me that we not so much to decide an abstract f law, as to consider the circumstances lar case. It is said that the under- and so became entitled as owners to id that their ownership related back, the happening of the disaster. Now, e that they are owners in any sense; a man cannot become the owner of hout his assenting to the ownership. had a right to the ownership which ect to exercise or not. If they did ht lose that right, but until they did t owners. To my mind, in this case idence of their intending to be owners rty. I agree with a remark of Mr. : assuming them to be owners, a ht arise between them and Mr. Nor- re could be no question between them glinton. Suppose the underwriters : paid the money, but had insisted n being brought against them, and d not been obtained until eighteen wards, would the cause of action Eglinton had against Mr. Norman vested, and a new cause of action against the underwriters, because ers a long time after had been com- the money? I think it could not be

o me, therefore, that when we com- instances of this case, the difficulties tting a construction in the abstract do not arise, or at any rate not so

Mr. Norman was the owner of the e went down and when the obstruc- d he was also the owner beyond all t they first began to remove it. To as continued the owner to the present use the utmost that has happened o the underwriters only gave them a ship which they have not exercised. ld that, within the meaning of sect. an is the owner, and the underwriters

Then another question arises, suppose Mr. Nor- man liable, has he any remedy over against the underwriters? I have my misgivings as to whether the question is open to us here, and I pronounce no opinion upon that, but I think, as to Mr. Norman's remedy over, that it depends upon the underwriters dealing with the wreck as a question of salvage after the casualty had occurred. In my mind, the underwriter would be liable if he had thought fit to take the benefit of the salvage, that is to say, if the harbour master had removed the wreck and sold it, and there was a surplus after paying the expenses of removal, which the under- writer claimed, but here the latter has not chosen to take to the wreck, and, as far as he is concerned, he has abandoned, and done nothing to render himself subject to the liability I have mentioned. Another observation is, that the expenses incurred have not been of removal of the obstruction merely, but have also been certain expenses incurred by arrangement for the preservation of the property, and I do not see how the underwriter could be liable for them.

I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment against Mr. Norman, and not against the underwriters, and that Mr. Norman has no remedy over against the underwriters.

BRETT, L.J.—The main question is on the construction of sect. 56, and the first thing to determine is whether the case is within the section at all. The conditions which bring it within the section are that there should be a "wreck or other obstruction." There must not only be a wreck, but a wreck, or some other thing not included in the term wreck, such as floating timber, which is an obstruction to the harbour and impedes the navigation. As soon as the conditions exist the section comes into play, and a power is given to one person, and one person only, and a burden is thrown upon one other person and one other person only. The power is given to the harbour master, who has to exercise his judgment whether the thing is an obstruction or not, and, if it is, he has to remove it; the burden is laid upon another, person, and I can see no contemplation in the section of a transfer of that burden to another. The burden is laid upon the owner, and, considering that the power is given to the harbour master the moment the condition exists, I can see no reason why the burden is not placed upon the owner at the very same moment. The power and the burden are created the moment the conditions exist. In this view the "owner," therefore, is the owner of the property which is the obstruction, and which may be removed when it first becomes an obstruction to the harbour. That being the construction of the section as to time, it seems to me that almost every other question that has been raised falls to the ground.

There is Mr. Butt's contention that the obstruction must be caused by negligence, but the section does not come into play until that which has caused the casualty has produced its effect. Whether that which is a wreck or obstruction was brought there by negligence, or the act of God, or by accident, which is not the act of God, the result has been brought about before the section comes into play. The negligence may have existed, or the casualty may have occurred, long before there is a wreck or obstruction. I see nothing in the section which has any reference either to the cause by or through which the thing becomes an obstruction. The section applies the moment the thing is an obstruction, however caused. If that be so, any decision with reference to sect. 74 is inapplicable, because sect. 74 applies to a state of things which has existed before sect. 56 comes into play. Sect. 74 applies to the time of the casualty, and in the case of Adamson v. The River Weir Commissioners (ante, p. 242), where the damage done was to a pier, the damage existed before the obstruction occurred. I express no opinion upon whether I should have decided the Weir Commissioners' case in the way it was decided, although Lord Justice Bramwell has added his great authority to that decision.

I cannot agree with Mr. Benjamin's argument that if there was no negligence there was a renunciation of the property by the owner, and that, therefore, sect. 56 does not apply; I confess I cannot agree with that, even supposing there had been a renunciation. That renunciation takes place after the rights of one party and the burdens of the other have accrued. If that renunciation made the owner cease to be owner, he would so cease at a time when the burden has already been cast upon him, and after the time when sect. 56 applies, that is, after the right and the burden have accrued. I entirely agree, however, that there was no such renunciation in this case.

Then it is said that the underwriters were owners at the time when sect. 56 was applicable, and this would be so if it were true that by a payment in full the underwriters, to all the world, and for all purposes, become the owners, and have the property in them, and are subrogated into the position of owners from the time of the casualty, because the casualty which makes the underwriters liable may have occurred before there is an obstruction, and before sect. 56 applies at all. But I do not think it necessary to determine whether the underwriters can, without their own consent, become owners. I am inclined to think that by paying the total loss, or by accepting notice of abandonment, they had, as between them and the assured, become owners at the time of the casualty, but I think that is a relation existing between them by virtue of the contract into which they had entered, and not a relation which can affect an existing, though it be an accruing, right of a third person. I think, therefore, that they cannot, by reason of that contract, divest the existing right of the harbour master, or escape from the burden which was upon the owner at the time of the casualty. My brother Bramwell seemed to think that if the underwriters took to the salvage they would be liable to the burden. For the reasons I have just given I do not agree with him. I cannot think that anything which the underwriters do, or which the owner does after the time when the harbour master's right has accrued or begun to accrue, can affect the position of the harbour master.

Then, in answer to Mr. Hardy's question as to which owner is to say how the wreck is to be removed, I say that the harbour master ought not to consider the interest of either party. He has to consider the interest of the harbour only, and get rid of the obstruction in a reasonable way. He must not destroy property unreasonably, but he has no right to entertain the question of who will be most injured or benefited by the mode in which he performs his duty.

The result, so far as the construction and application of sect. 56 is concerned, is that Mr. Norman is liable, and, at all events, primarily liable.

Then comes the question whether we ought to say that the underwriters were liable over Norman. I confess I think Order XVI. was intended for the very purpose of such a case as this. There are several questions arising between different parties all of the same casualty or transaction. I can help thinking that in the Court of Chancery formerly the underwriters might have been brought in so that the rights of every party might be adjudicated upon. Rule 13 says that the court may, in every action, "deal with matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it." I apprehend that word "actually" was put in to meet such a case, and I think that meaning made plainer by what follows: "The court may, at any stage of the proceedings, and upon or without, the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the court, a judge to be just, order that the names of names of any parties or party whether as plaintiff or defendants improperly joined be struck out, that the name or names of any party or party whether plaintiffs or defendants, who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court to effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, be added." I apprehended that rule was made for the very purpose of making it one action instead of two, and therefore, under the rule, I should have thought that we have a right to make an order as between the two defendants; but there is more; I think it clearly made out by the consent of the parties, and by the order in Cleasby, B. made upon that consent, that the court was to make an order here as between the two defendants, and the only question could arise between the two defendants, distinguished from any question which might arise between the plaintiff and either of them, and every question, whether the underwriters were liable over.

I think the underwriters here are not liable over. First of all it is said they are not liable over by the suing and labouring clause. The assured here have not sued and laboured for all. It is a right which the harbour master has and which he has exercised as against the owner, and it cannot, to my mind, be brought under the clause. Mr. Hardy, in his ingenious suggestion, certainly did for a moment startle me by the 1717th section in Phillips on Lien (3rd edit., vol. II.): "Where the salvage is encumbered with a lien arising out of the insurance against, the insurers take it subject to such charge." I think the case is not within that section, because I think the lien, if it exists, does not arise out of the policy but against the owner. There would be no lien except as against the owner, and that would be a new and independent action of the harbour master; that new and independent action is a right given to him by the statute, and the exercise of the right was not a peril insured against. This is a peril, if this decision is made, which shipowners will now understand to be a peril against which they are not insured; but it is a peril against

OF APP.]

THE DAOIZ.

[Ct. OF APP.]

have not hitherto insured, and certainly not this contract.

Judgment for plaintiff. Judgment affirmed.
Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hollams, Son, and Co.

Solicitors for the defendant Norman, Markby, and Stewart.

Solicitors for the underwriter, Walton, Bubbs, Walton.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Directed by J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAIKES, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

APPEAL FROM THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISIONS (ADMIRALTY).

Friday, March 9, 1877.

James, Mellish, and Baggallay, L.JJ.

Wednesday, April 18, 1877.

Jessel, M.R., James, Mellish, and Baggallay, L.JJ.

THE DAOIZ.

Levy pilotage—Onus of proof—Costs—Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 388.

The defence of compulsory pilotage is relied in a collision cause, the onus of proving negligence on the part of the defendants or their agents causing or contributing to the collision, the plaintiff.

Navigation Company v. Barclay (1 App. Cas. 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 379) followed. The (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 432; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. disapproved.

A suit (instituted in Admiralty Division) is dismissed, or an appeal succeeds on the ground the defence of compulsory pilotage is established, no order will be made as to costs either on or on appeal. (a)

Swann (L. Rep. 4 Ad. & Ecc. 187; 30 L. T. N. S. 537) followed.

*As a motion made by leave of the court as to the cause was instituted in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty) by General Steam Navigation Company owners Steamship Pilot, against the Spanish steamships for damages occasioned by a collision between these vessels which took place in the night of the 25th Nov. 1875. The defence of the alleged (1) that the collision was occasioned by negligence of the Pilot steamship, (2) that the result of inevitable accident, (3) that the Daoiz was at the time in charge of a pilot engaged by compulsion of law, and that if any negligence was attached to the Daoiz for the collision was solely attributable to the fault and incapacity of the pilot, and not to any neglect or omission on the part of the master and crew, and under the circumstances the defendants were exempted from liability by sect. 388 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.*

Plaintiffs joined issue simply on these facts, and on the 19th June 1876, the cause came on for hearing before Sir R. Phillimore and the Trinity Masters. In the course of the proceedings it was admitted by the defendants, that their

*It would appear that this rule as to costs only applies to cases in the Admiralty Division or on appeal in that division, where the suit is instituted in another division of the High Court, the ordinary rule that costs follow the event holds good: (See The General Steam Navigation Company v. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co., 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 743.)*

vessel the Daoiz was to blame for the collision, and the only question which the court had to decide was whether the defendants were exempt from liability by reason of the orders of the pilot, whose employment was compulsory, being obeyed.

Butt, Q.C. and Clarkson for plaintiffs.

Webster and W. Phillimore for defendants.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, following the principle of the Iona (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 432; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158) and the Velasquez (L. Rep. 1 P. C. 494; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 777) held that the onus of proof lay on defendants, setting up the defence of compulsory pilotage, to show that the pilot's orders were understood and obeyed, and decided that the proof was not conclusively made out, adding: "It appears to me, for the reasons I have already given, to be a matter not of certainty at all, but of doubt, and therefore I must pronounce what was formerly called a deficit probatio, that there is not that sufficient proof which the exigency of the law requires in the case."

From this judgment the owners of the Daoiz appealed, and on the 9th March 1877, the appeal was heard before James and Mellish, L.JJ. and Baggallay, J.A., when the court, following the decision of the House of Lords in Clyde Navigation Company v. Barclay (ante, p. 390; L. Rep. 1 App. Cas. 790; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 379) (which case was not at the time of the decision of the court below reported) held that the pilot in charge of the Daoiz was primarily responsible for the collision, and that the owners were therefore exempt from liability, the plaintiffs not having shown contributory negligence on their part, and accordingly reversed the decree of the court below on that ground. In drawing up the decree of the court a question arose with regard to the costs of the cause below and on appeal, and on the 18th April 1877, an application was made to the court, consisting of Jessel, M.R., James, Mellish, and Baggallay, L.JJ., for direction on the point.

Webster, for the owners of the Daoiz, contended that as it was the universal rule in the Court of Appeal (Practice of the Court, W. N. 1875, pp. 185, 186) that costs should follow the event, there was no reason why a defendant, succeeding on the defence of compulsory pilotage, should not be entitled to his costs.

Clarkson.—It has been the universal rule in the Court of Admiralty and in the Privy Council in Admiralty Appeals that where a defendant succeeded on the ground of compulsory pilotage, no costs were given. The Schwann (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 259; L. Rep. 4 Ad. & Ecc. 187; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 537) and this court will, in Admiralty Appeals, follow the practice of the Privy Council.

The City of Cambridge, ante, p. 307; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 781;

The Corinna, ante p. 307; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 781.

Webster in reply.

JESSEL, M.R.—The rule acted on in the Admiralty Court in cases like the present was that when the owners of a vessel were relieved from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage, no costs were given on either side, and the same rule ought to apply in the Court of Appeal; there will, therefore, be no costs on either side in the court below or in the Court of Appeal.

JAMES, MELLISH, and BAGGALLAY, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors: Lowless and Co.; Batham.

ADM.]

THE JONES BROTHERS—THE CYBELE.

ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL, and F. W. BAIKES, Esqrs., Baristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, July 31, 1877.

THE JONES BROTHERS.

Judgment debt—Interest—Salvage award—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17—The Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 76.

Since the incorporation of the High Court of Admiralty in the High Court of Justice, an award of salvage is a judgment debt, and as such bears interest from the date of entry of judgment, the taxed costs bearing interest from the date of signing of the allocatur. (a)

THIS was an application on behalf of certain salvors, that the owners of the Jones Brothers and their bail should be ordered to pay interest to the plaintiffs on the amount of salvage awarded by the court to be due to them for services rendered to the Jones Brothers, and also on the salvors' taxed bill of costs.

W. Phillimore, for the plaintiffs, admitted that it had not been the practice in the High Court of Admiralty to allow interest on awards of salvage, and that 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, did not apply to that court, but since the passing of the Judicature Acts, sect. 76 of the Act of 1873 extends the operation of the first-named statute to all judgments of the High Court, and therefore to an award of salvage.

Pritchard for the defendants, owners of the Jones Brothers.—The practice of the High Court of Admiralty will be followed by this Division where no special rule is made to the contrary. An enactment referring to other courts cannot apply to a case of salvage, which is still in the exclusive jurisdiction of the division.

Sir R. Phillimore.—Since the passing of the Judicature Acts this court is bound to follow the practice laid down for the High Court of Justice; and by sect. 76 of the Act of 1873, the Act

(a) Apart from 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, interest on a judgment debt in any Division from date of entry can now be levied by the sheriff under the provisions of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, Sch. I, Order XLII., rule 14, which is itself almost identical with R.G.H.T. 1853, rule 76, which carried out the principle of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, so far as the courts of common law were concerned.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17, enacts, "that every judgment shall carry interest at the rate of 4l. per cent. per annum, from the time of entering up the judgment, or from the time of the commencement of this Act (1st Oct. 1838), in cases of judgment then entered up and not carrying interest, until the same shall be satisfied, and such interest may be levied under a writ of execution on such judgment."

Sections 18 and 21 of the same Act, whilst extending the Act to decrees, &c., of the Court of Chancery and judgments of the Courts of Common Pleas of Lancaster, and Pleas at Durham, and to orders as to costs and other matters, make no mention of the High Court of Admiralty or the judges thereof.

The Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, s. 76, enacts that "All Acts of Parliament relating to the several courts and judges, whose jurisdiction is hereby transferred to the said High Court of Justice . . . or wherein any of such courts or judges are mentioned, shall be construed and take effect so far as relates to anything done, or to be done, after the commencement of the Act, as if the said High Court of Justice . . . and the judges thereof respectively, as the case may be, had been named therein instead of such courts or judges whose jurisdiction is so transferred respectively."

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 applies to every D the High Court, and sect. 17 of that A that judgment debts shall bear interest of entry. I shall allow interest on this from the 2nd June, the day on which entered, and on the costs from the 1 the day on which the allocatur was s shall not allow the costs of this applicati question is a new one in this court.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Fielder and Solicitor for the defendants, Pritchard

May 8, June 22, and July 17.

THE CYBELE.

Salvage—Pleading—Loss of prospective a —Right of vessels in the civil service of a ment department to salvage—"Her M
ships"—The Merchant Shipping Act 185
. 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 484, 485—The Harb
Passing Tolls, &c., Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vid
A paragraph in a statement of claim for a stating that by rendering the salvage the salving vessel had been prevented from ing information which would have rend profitable employment, ordered to be struck relating to matters which the court could into consideration in estimating the value services.

The Board of Trade can claim salvage in rep services rendered by vessels employed by it and about a public harbour, the property in is vested in the Board of Trade. Such not "Her Majesty's ships" within the of sects. 484, 485 of the Merchant Shippi 1854, and the commanders and crew of vessels are entitled to sue for and obtain reward for their services without obtaini previous consent of the Admiralty to th doing.

Amount awarded as salvage ordered to be paid court pending appeal.

THIS was a cause of salvage instituted on 1 of the owners, masters, and crew of the Ben Achie, against the screw steamer Cybele cargo, for services rendered to her on the 25th Dec. 1876, by the Ben Achie and the Vulcan, and lifeboat Bradford.

The owners of the Cybele and of the board her intervened and served notice the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, I, Order XVI., r. 17, on the Board of the owners of the steam tug Vulcan and Bradford, and appearances were entered of the Board of Trade and the masters of the Vulcan and Bradford.

The statement of claim on behalf of Achie, delivered on the 26th April 1877 (inter alia).

On the 24th of Dec. 1876, while the Ben lying at anchor off Deal Pier awaiting ord managing owner in reply to her master's such owner, the attention of those on board about 10.30 p.m., attracted by signals from light vessel.

And then, after proceeding to describ of the salvage services, and the shing them taken by the Vulcan and cceeded as follows:

31. On arriving off Deal the master received the expected telegram from directing him to proceed to Weymouth did the sum of £105 would have been telegraphed would have been received on being had the Ben Achie remained at her in Cybela, being deprived of her steam rig only one anchor, the master of the Cybel to remain by the Cybel, and did fail the said Weymouth engagement, so late to do so.

ving her said services, the Ben Achie's naged to the extent of £50, and she lost er said Weymouth engagement, and the ewer worth £25.
sa, masters, and crews of the Fulcon and appeared in this action, and claim salvage n.

y 1877, W. G. F. Phillimore, for the oved the court under the Supreme diction Act 1875, Sch. I, Order 1, to strike out the 31st paragraph se printed above in italics in the h of the statement of claim, as and irrelevant. A loss of market erable in an action of tort (The p. 399; L. Rep. 2 P. D. 118; 36 f. S. 368), and therefore, a fortiori, recoverable in an action of con- s, it raises a side issue altogether, r the Ben Achie could, or could not, the money, and is therefore em-son for the plaintiffs.—The pleading imilar in nature to that which is a salvage service is rendered by which, in consequence of rendering voyage; the plaintiffs do not claim to that particular amount, but only f it should be taken into considera- ing the amount of salvage due to

Phillimore in reply.

UNOAS granted the application on the e paragraphs objected to asserted a remote a nature for the court to take action in awarding salvage, and raph 31 and the portions of para- eted to be struck out with costs, ifendants a week to plead.

the defendants delivered their stato- ce, alleging (inter alia) of Trade are the owners of the Fulcon, Lifeboat Institution are the owners of the her the Board of Trade, nor the National tion, have made or could make any claim in respect of their ownership of their le, and the tackle belonging to them.

atement of defence the plaintiffs amendment (inter alia), that the de, and not the National Lifeboat ero owners of the Bradford; that the e could make, and did make, a claim oth vessels and their tackle, and to defendants rejoined:

ants join issue on so much of the 2nd n reply as relates to the National Lifeants demur to so much of the 2nd para- as relates to the Board of Trade, and so is bad in law, on the ground that it is provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act he demurrer came on for argument. ses of the argument it was taken for the Bradford as well as the Fulcon a Board of Trade.

The argument turned on the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) (a) and the Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c., Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47) (b).

(a) Sect. 484. In cases where salvage services are rendered by any ships belonging to Her Majesty, or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be made or allowed for any loss, damage, or risk thereby caused to such ship, or to the stores, tackle, or furniture thereof, or for the use of any stores or other articles belonging to Her Majesty supplied in order to effect such services, or for any other expense or loss sustained by Her Majesty by reason of such services.

Sect. 485. No claim whatever on account of any salvage services rendered to any ship or cargo, or to the appurtenances of any ship, by the commander or crew or part of the crew of any of Her Majesty's ships shall be finally adjudicated upon unless the consent of the Admiralty has first been obtained, such consent to be signified by writing under the hand of the Secretary to the Admiralty, and if any person who has originated proceedings in respect of any such claim fails to prove such consent to the satisfaction of the court, his suit shall stand dismissed, and he shall pay all the costs of such proceedings; provided that any document purporting to give such consent and to be signed by the Secretary to the Admiralty shall be prima facie evidence of such consent having been given.

(b) Sect. 1. In the construction of this Act the following expressions shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless such meanings are inconsistent with the context.

The expression "Board of Trade" shall mean the committee of Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and forming plantations, &c.

Sect. 22. On and after the 1st Jan. 1862 the harbour of Ramsgate and the soil thereof and, all property, real and personal, vested in the trustees of the said harbour, or in any person in trust for the purposes of the said harbour, with their actual and reputed appurtenances, subject to all leases, contracts, charges, or other liabilities affecting the same, shall be transferred to and are hereby vested in the Board of Trade.

Sect. 23. All powers, rights, and privileges of imposing, collecting, or recovering any taxes or rates, of purchasing any lands, or of doing any other matter or thing relating to the said harbour of Ramsgate, or the property belonging thereto, which may by virtue of any Act of Parliament, charter or otherwise, be vested in or exercisable by the trustees of Ramsgate Harbour, shall be transferred to and are hereby vested in the Board of Trade.

Sect. 24. On and after the 1st Jan. 1862 the Board of Trade shall be entitled to receive a percentage of £1. in the hundred on all salvage paid or liable to be paid in respect of any ship, or boat, or cargo, or apparel of any ship or boat, or any wreck or property, which may be brought into the said harbour; and such percentage shall be deducted from the salvage, and shall be paid to the Board of Trade before the remainder of the salvage is paid over to the salvors, and shall be recoverable by the same means by which the salvage is recoverable.

Sect. 25. The Board of Trade shall, whilst Ramsgate Harbour remains in their hands, render to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury periodical accounts of the whole of the receipts and expenditure in respect thereof; such accounts to be signed and declared to by the accountant appointed by the Board of Trade for that purpose, and the said commissioners shall cause the same to be examined and audited in such manner as they think fit.

Sect. 26. If at any time whilst the harbour of Ramsgate is vested in the Board of Trade, the income and revenue applicable to the purposes of managing, maintaining, and improving the said harbour of Ramsgate are insufficient for such purposes, or for the other purposes to which the said Ramsgate Harbour fund is applicable, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to advance such sums as may be requisite for the said purposes out of moneys to be provided for the purpose by Parliament.

Sect. 28. For the purposes of Ramsgate Harbour, "The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847" shall be deemed to be incorporated with this Act, and

ADM.]

THE CYBELL.

Myburgh and W. G. F. Phillimore, for the defendants, in support of the demurrer.—The Vulcan and Bradford are vessels in the service of the Crown, and as such are precluded from recovering for salvage services by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 484. Their crews are salvors, but probably are precluded from having any salvage remuneration allotted to them, unless they have previously the consent of the Admiralty to sue for it in accordance with the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 485. That question, however, does not arise at present, though it may become important hereafter. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—It is important to this extent, that if I have not power to award salvage you cannot give it me.] These vessels under the Board of Trade are in the same situation as revenue cruisers under the Custom-house. It may be that the leave of the Admiralty is necessary to enable the crews to recover, but the Board of Trade are by sect. 484 precluded in any case from recovering for the services rendered by the ships as distinguished from the crews. Sect. 484 is not confined even to ships, but to all stores the property of Her Majesty, e.g., ropes from a gun wharf, &c., and under that comprehensive definition these vessels must come, though sect. 485 may only apply to the crews of Her Majesty's ships commonly so called, i.e., vessels in the military marine service of the Crown. Sect. 484 is not confined to such vessels; a vessel in the civil service of the Indian Government, commanded by a person without a commission from the Crown, is within it: (The Cargo ex Woosung, 1 P. D. 260; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 8; 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 239.) The ratio decidendi there was, that the ship was ordered on the service by the representative of the Government, and her services being gratuitous, an agreement made by her captain including those services was inequitable. This is the same case, except that there is no agreement. The vessel belonging to Her Majesty must give its services gratuitously, whether by special order or not, and therefore cannot recover in respect of them. Even independently of the Merchant Shipping Act it is contrary to public policy that a vessel in any sense belonging to the public should receive salvage for her services: (H.M.S. Thetis, 3 Hagg. 61; The Lord Dufferin, 7 Notes of Cases, Sup. XXXIII.). The property in these vessels is vested absolutely in the Board of Trade by sect. 22 of the Harbours and Passing Tolls, &c., Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), as defined by sect. 2 of the same Act, and to show that it was the intention of the Legislature to preserve generally the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, a special provision as to salvage is made by sect. 28, which allows the Board of Trade a percentage of 5 per cent. on all salvage earned: this provision would be meaningless if their own vessels could earn salvage. If an award be made in respect of the vessels' services the Board of Trade can only claim under the statute 5 per cent.; and what becomes of the remaining 95 per cent.? The Act refers to for the purposes of such incorporation this Act shall be deemed to be "the Special Act." The rates and moneys hereby made leviable on account of the harbour of Ramsgate shall be deemed to be "the rates authorised to be levied by the Special Act," and the Board of Trade shall be deemed to be the undertakers.

several other harbours, but makes provisions those harbours different from those at Ramsgate Harbour. Sects. 32 and 36 show was the intention of the Legislature that Ramsgate Harbour, with all its appurtenances be a public harbour, and therefore the Board of Trade, as owning it, are acting as trustees for the public, that is as the officers of the Crown.

E. C. Clarkson (with him Cohen, Q.C.) plaintiffs.—The Vulcan has already on occasions been awarded salvage. The intention of the Harbours and Passing Tolls Act was to simplify the previously troublesome provisions keeping up harbours of refuge at Ramsgate and other places by levying tolls on passing ships for that object the property in the harbour and its appurtenances, including this tug, is vested in the Board of Trade as trustees for the preservation of the harbour, but all the rights of the predecessors in title are preserved by sect. 23, and amongst those rights is the ordinary right of a private shipowner to salvage. Sect. 28 expressly that the Board of Trade has a right to a percentage on salvage earned by third parties who, in the course of the salvage service, use of the harbour, i.e. of the stores, &c., belonging to the Board of Trade, but that, whilst it moves any doubts which might arise as to the right of the Board of Trade to salvage with respect to the use of the harbour generally, does not interfere with their rights as owners to salvage earned by their own vessels: they have 5 per cent. on all salvage earned by those using the harbour, and can recover it as salvage is recovered, which shows that it was contemplated that they should be able to recover salvage. They may very possibly be entitled to 5 per cent. on the salvage earned by the master and crew of the tug and lifeboat; but if so, that is in addition to, and not in substitution for, any salvage they may be entitled to in respect of the services of the vessels themselves. Sect. 39, which declares that the Board of Trade shall quod Ramsgate Harbour be deemed the "undertakers" within the meaning of the Harbour Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, shows that they are to be considered, so far as the ownership of property is concerned, as private individuals, and not as servants of the Crown. The master of the Vulcan, an ordinary steam tug employed for harbour general purposes, cannot be called a commissioned vessel in Her Majesty's service within the meaning of sect. 484 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104).

Myburgh in reply.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—In this case a question of some curiosity and nicety is raised for the first time in this court as to the construction of some sections of the Merchant Shipping Act in connection with the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47, entitled "An Act to facilitate the Construction and Improvement of Harbours by authorising Loans to Harbour Authorities; to abolish the Tolls, and for other purposes."

Now, it must be taken as admitted for the purpose of the present discussion, that the tug and steamship and the Bradford lifeboat both belong to Ramsgate Harbour, and that they are employed by the Board of Trade to render salvage services. It being already admitted, the question now arises on the demurrer, is whether the Vulcan and Bradford are Her Majesty's ships in the meaning of the Act, in which that phrase is used in the

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[H. OF L.]

sects. 484, 485. If they are such ineration at all can be claimed in vessels themselves, and the crews and master of the Vulcan can only eration for salvage services after permission of the Lords of the make such a claim. (His Lordship sections of the Merchant Shipping and set out above, and proceeded :) sition is whether there is any distinc- 'ships belonging to Her Majesty," id "Her Majesty's ships," in sect. able to see any distinction between ons, and think that the two sec- ri materiâ, and that they both relate er Majesty's ships in regard to lared that no salvage reward shall far as their commanders and cerned, without the consent of the Admiralty to the claim. of the defendants in support of s now brought forward for the first fact that the Vulcan is not what novus hospes in this court does not difficulty that may arise on the the above section. How, then, is ion of these provisions of the ping Act 1854 affected by the Har- ing Tolls, &c., Act 1861? It is said material words in the later Act present question are those which , ante) provide that the harbour of that time vested in the trustees of all be transferred, with all its inci- board of Trade, who are, it is con- stutes of Ramsgate Harbour. Then vision which appears to me very contention of the defendants (sect. that the Board of Trade shall re- age on salvage earned by all ves- harbour—not by any vessel belong- bour, but in respect of any vessel e harbour. I cannot come to any herwise than in favour of the gh I admit the case may be plau- ie other way. I cannot think, on those sections of the 24 & 25 Vict., late to Ramsgate Harbour, that it ion of the Legislature to place the steamtug belonging to Ramsgate a before the Act were owned by the harbour, and therefore must now e Board of Trade, in the category y's ships. It is true that in one ulcan and the Bradford are to as belonging to the Crown belong to the Board of Trade, l of Trade is a department under at still Acts of Parliament must he light of common sense, and wording of the sections I have re- n of opinion that this attempt to and the lifeboat belonging to bour in the category of Her s, and therefore within the provi- ctions of the Merchant Shipping ting to salvage services rendered s cannot be successfully main- fore pronounce against the demurror.

s then heard on the merits, befo<sub>re</sub> N. S.

the judge, assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. It was proved that the Bradford was the property of the Board of Trade, and not of the National Lifeboat Institution; there was no evidence that the consent of the Admiralty had been obtained by the master of the Vulcan and crew of that vessel and the Bradford to the prosecution of their claims. After hearing the evidence as to the nature of the services rendered,

The COURT awarded 500*l.* to the owners, master, and crew of the Ben Achie, and 1200*l.* to the Board of Trade, as owners, and to the masters and crews of the Vulcan and Bradford.

July 17.—W. G. F. Phillimore moved the court for a stay of execution pending appeal to the Court of Appeal as to the right of the Board of Trade to recover salvage in respect of the Vulcan and Bradford.

E. C. Clarkson, contra.

The COURT directed execution to be stayed till the second week in November, and subsequently, on the application of E. C. Clarkson, ordered the money awarded to be brought into court and applied to the purchase of Exchequer Bonds.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

Solicitors for defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

July 10 and 12.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lords PENZANCE, O'HAGAN, BLACKBURN, and GORDON.)

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

ON APPEAL FROM HER MAJESTY'S COURT OF APPEAL.

Ship — Rights of mortgages — Cargo on ship's account — Nominal freight.

A mortgagee of a ship has no general right to a proportionate share of the earnings of the ship; he is only entitled to such freight as is accruing due and has been actually contracted for, before he takes possession.

*M. mortgaged his ship, then in California, to the appellants, but the mortgage was not registered. A cargo was afterwards put on board in California on account of the ship, and bills of lading were drawn for a nominal freight of 1*s.* per ton. Before the ship arrived in England the respondents, without notice of the mortgage, advanced money to M. on the security of the cargo, and then sold the cargo to J. by a contract containing the following clause: "As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55*s.* per ton, and invoice to be rendered accordingly." M. paid for the cargo, and received the bills of lading, and handed them to the respondents with an assignment indorsed of his interest in "the within freight" expressed to be "at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton." The appellants registered their mortgage, and on the arrival of the ship took possession, and claimed freight at the rate of 55*s.* per ton.*

*Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the sum of 55*s.* per ton was not really freight, but was part of the price of the cargo kept back till the arrival of the ship, and that th-* mortgagees were not entitled to more than 1s. per ton, the freight specified in the bills of lading.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Mellish, Baggallay, and Bramwell, L.JJ.), reported ante, p. 426, and L. Rep. 2 C. P. Div. 163, reversing a decision of the Common Pleas Division (Brett, Archibald, and Lindley, JJ.), reported in ante, p. 280, and L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 722), in favour of the appellants (plaintiffs) on a special case.

The special case is set out at length in the report in the court below, and the facts appear briefly in the head-note above.

Bowen (Herschell, Q.O. with him), for the appellants, argued that the judgment of the court below was erroneous in holding that the sum of 55s. per ton was not really "freight," but only part of the purchase money of the cargo. Miller v. Woodfall (8 E. & B. 493) appears to be against our contention, but it is really a different case. The contention of the respondents would open the way to frauds on the part of captains. The right to the freight is a necessary incident of the property in the ship. See

Hickie v. Rhodocanachi, 28 L. J. 273, Ex.; 4 H. & N. 455;

Stewart v. Greenock Marine Insurance Company 1 Maqq. 328;

Scottish Marine Insurance Company v. Turner, 1 Maqq. 334.

All advantages accruing and everything earned during the voyage belong to the mortgagee: (Westerdell v. Dale, 7 T. Rep. 306.) The intention was to earn freight, and everyone connected with the matter regarded it as such, as appears plainly from the case. The object of the nominal entry in the bill of lading having been attained, the actual rate of freight at San Francisco was recognised. The respondents are not the ordinary indorsees of a bill of lading, but claim under a bill in which the true rate of freight was inserted. No doubt it is a hardship on them, but the blame rests with Morison, not with the appellants. The fact that he effected an insurance on freight shows that he regarded it as such. What all believed the ship to be earning must belong to the mortgagee:

Case v. Davison, 5 M. & S. 79;

Morrison v. Parsons, 2 Taunt. 407;

Camden v. Anderson, 5 T. Rep. 709.

[Lord PENZANCE.—Those are all cases of contract.] We say there was a new contract in this case. The question was discussed in Brown v. North (8 Ex. 1; 22 L. J. 49, Ex.). See also

Flint v. Fleming, 1 B. & Ad. 15

Gumm v. Tyrie, 4 B. & S. 680; 6 B. & S. 298;

Weguelin v. Cellier, L. Rep. 6 H. L. 286.

The case of the Mercantile Bank v. Gladstone (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 233; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 87), relied on by the other side, is distinguishable and not in point.

Webster (Thesiger Q.C., with him), for the respondents, maintained that the case must follow the established rule that a mortgagee on taking possession can only claim freight when it exists under such circumstances that the owner could claim it. The mortgage gives no further right. The contention on the other side is too wide; for example, a mortgagee cannot claim freight paid in advance: (see Brown v. Tanner, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 94; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621; L. Rep. 3 Chan. 597.) Brown v. North (ubi sup.) is a direct authority in our favour. The in this case was owner of 4-64ths, and I not contemplate freight at 55s. per ton how could the mortgagees in respect of 60-64ths? Gumm v. Tyrie (ubi sup.) is Brown v. North. The case of The Mercantile v. Gladstone (ubi sup.) is not a direct authority but it shows the rights of a mortgagee on own ship. Weguelin v. Cellier (ubi sup.) is in favour, as is all authority. The mere ver accuracy of calling the balance of the per money "freight" cannot affect the respondent's rights.

Bowen in reply.—None of the authorities in Miller v. Woodfall go further than that the bill of lading has a right to the goods as ment of the freight. The Mercantile Bank v. Gladstone and Brown v. North are beside point. The computing a sum of 55s. per ton freight is in effect a new contract for freight that rate. See also

Rusden v. Pope, 3 Mar. Law Cas. 91; 18 L. T. N. S. 651; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 269;

Liverpool Marine Credit Company v. Wilson, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 323; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 811

Rep. 7 Chan. 507;

Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 211 L. T. Rep. N. S. 346; L. Rep. 14 Eq. 32.

At the conclusion of the arguments the Lordships gave judgment as follows:

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, after the able and ingenious arguments of Bowen, and after hearing everything that possibly be said in support of the contention of the respondents, I do not think there can be said in your Lordships' mind as to the decision which you ought to arrive in this case.

I will say at the outset that there is after much conflict of opinion between the judges in two courts below. It is true that the Common Pleas Division determined the case in favour of the present appellants; but, as I read the judgment of the court appears to have been occupied much with the question which has been argued before your Lordships as with the question of registration of the mortgage, and the former was disposed of in a very few words.

The question now arises as to the rights of the mortgagee on taking possession of a ship, both orally and with reference to the particular circumstances of this case. As to the general rule, there can be no doubt that the mortgagee obtains possession of the mortgage no transfer of the ship; nor does the mortgagee undertake to pay any particular amount of freight for the ship; he either earn a substantial freight, or he may earn a nominal amount of freight, or he may carry cargo at less than the market rate of freight. All these rights are incident to the interest of a mortgagee in his ship, and he is entitled to them until the mortgagee takes possession. The propositions being beyond dispute, it is not denied in the present case (a nominal freight per ton having been inserted in the bill of lading) that the master had a right to insert freight at a rate, and that, if the bill of lading was handed over to third parties, such parties would have been entitled to take possession of the goods on payment of the nominal freight. It is denied that if the owner of the ship demanded the cargo from the mortgagee, he would have been entitled to receive it.

OF L.]

KEITH AND ANOTHER v. BURROWS AND ANOTHER.

[H. OF L.]

the same amount. A mortgagee on taking possession of a ship is entitled to everything that goes to the ship: but his rights are checked by limitation, that he can only receive what the ship has earned under an express contract for freight, or by conveying goods on a quantum meruit.

Now, it is argued on behalf of the appellants that though the bills of lading were drawn for nominal freight, and although the goods would have had to be delivered on payment of that amount, yet that a different state of things existed during the voyage. The bills of exchange drawn against the cargo were forwarded to the mortgagee, and in order to get possession of the bills from Morison, the owner of the ship, had to provide a sum of more than 10,000*l.* to meet the bills of exchange. Not being prepared to do this, he agreed with the respondents to advance the necessary funds, and the sale was put into their hands.

They sold the cargo to Jump and Sons, and it is upon the wording of the documents at issue in the case that the present difficulty arises.

I must remark that the documents are not happily expressed, but there seems to me to be no real doubt as to what was intended.

There are three in number, but though they bear different dates they must be construed together.

The first is the contract of sale by the respondents to Jump and Sons, dated Feb. 1875. I need not read it at length.

In the middle of it are the words "including freight and insurance," but the last clause explains the meaning of the word "freight," and we read the whole contract as if the last clause inserted to explain what was meant, bearing in mind what was known to both parties as to the contents of the bills of lading. The words are "as the cargo is coming on ship's account freight is to be added at 55*s.* per ton of 2240 pounds, and interest to be rendered accordingly," and I read this as meaning that as the cargo was on account of the ship the rate in the bill of lading was understood to be nominal. But there is a virtual statement that, though there was a nominal freight, the freight meant by including a larger and different rate of 55*s.* per ton to be computed as if for freight, not that this should be the substituted rate of freight, but that a deduction of an amount equivalent to freight should be made, and should remain unpaid until the vessel arrived in England.

An estimate was accordingly made and inserted in the invoice of the cargo at a price of 43*s.* 6*d.* per quarter, and a bill of lading was made by way of a computation of the freight as well as the usual reckoning of brokerage, and the result is a balance of 9580*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* On Feb. 1875, Morison handed over the bills of lading, with the three bills of lading attached, to the respondents, and signed this memorandum, which was indorsed on the bill of lading, and is the substance of the documents referred to: "We assign our interest in the within freight to Messrs. Messrs. and Perks, London, whose receipt, or that of their appointed agent will be sufficient discharge."

The freight assigned is at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton.

Now, was this memorandum intended to alter the original arrangement for freight at 1*s.* per ton, and to substitute a contract by which the respondents engaged to carry the cargo at the higher rate of 55*s.* per ton? I cannot find anything which can indicate such an intention on the part of Morison or the respondents. It seems to have been a necessary subject of arrangement that the payment for the cargo should be divided into two parts, the first instalment to be paid within seven days from the date of the contract of sale, and payment of the remainder, being calculated as equal to freight at 55*s.* per ton, to be postponed till the arrival of the goods; but there does not seem to me to have been any act done, or any intention in the minds of the parties, to create a contract for freight at 55*s.* per ton.

I cannot, therefore, find anything which would entitle the mortgagee to any higher rate of freight than was named in the bill of lading, and I propose to your Lordships that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

LORD PENZANCE.—My Lords, this case has been very ably argued on both sides. When the appellants' case was first brought before your Lordships it appeared to be put upon the simple ground that where goods have been put on board a ship by the master, and no freight, or only a nominal amount of freight, is named in the bill of lading, a mortgagee taking possession of the ship may look upon its earnings as his property, and that although there was no contract to pay anything in respect of the carriage of the goods, yet as the ship had earned something, the mortgagee was entitled to a proportionate benefit. There is no doubt that in such a case the owner receives in the shape of increased value something which corresponds to freight, and there is no doubt that in the abstract the ship has earned something; but has it ever been held that a mortgagee is entitled to anything in respect of such implied earnings?

Several cases have been cited, among others Brown v. North (8 Ex. 1; 22 L. J. 49, Ex.) and Miller v. Woodfall (8 E. & B. 493). In the latter case goods had been shipped on the owner's account, and the property in the cargo had passed to an assignee, who claimed credit for freight, though the cargo had been shipped on the owner's account, and no freight was named in the bills of lading; but it was held that he could not maintain any such claim. That judgment is opposed to the principle contended for by the appellants. Another authority cited was The Mercantile and Exchange Bank v. Gladstone (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 87; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 641; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 233) which was the case of a vendee claiming a sum equivalent to freight where the goods had been shipped on the owner's account at a nominal rate of freight; but it was held that he was not so entitled.

Looking at these cases I think that the appellants' argument as to the general right of a mortgagee to a proportionate share of the ship's earnings must fail. But it is urged that, assuming that the mortgagee is only entitled to freight which has been actually contracted for, yet the case shows this state of things: only a small amount of freight was originally provided for, but there was afterwards an agreement to vary this arrangement, and to fix the freight at the higher rate of 55*s.* per ton. The question then is, Do the facts disclosed in this special case justify this contention? The whole question turns on the document of 19th Feb. The respondents had agreed to make advances to Morison in order that he might take up the bills of 36 with Jump and Co. was doubtless a lithographed form, being of an nature, well understood by merchants. s were to pay cost, freight, and in- it they were not liable to pay anything received the shipping documents. The t down the whole price in the invoice, a deduction from the contract price to d as freight. The ordinary rate was 1 at that time, and it was thought fair ck that sum till the ship arrived, that amount necessary to be paid before the ld receive the goods. The arrangement 7 intelligible one, and Jump and Co. that Morison should indorse on the ing a notice that the respondents were the freight, and that their receipt was charge. How can it be said that this contract? It does not purport to be of lading, but it only gives notice that lents are entitled to receive the freight. agee urges that this amount of freight l by the original contract, and belongs ; I am of opinion that there is no such r, and no proof of any such intention dended for.

RDON concurred.

ent appealed from affirmed, and appeal issed, with costs.

s for the appellants, Freshfields and s for the respondents, Lowless and Co.

July 12, 13, 17, and 27.

16 LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lords AGAN, BLACKBURN, and GORDON.)

v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

IAL FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER IN IRELAND.

mpany—Sea transit—Through booking tion from liability—Reasonable condi- ilway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 (17 t. c. 31), s. 7—Regulation of Railways (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 16—Regula- railways Act 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 78), the Regulation of Railways Act 1868 the provisions of the Railway and raffic Act 1854 to all classes of steam- fic.

the Regulation of Railways Act 1871 he provisions of the Act of 1868, s. 16, to ompanies carrying goods under a con- steam vessels not belonging to the dent company contracted with the appel- rry cattle from Ireland to England. l no steamships of their own, and they a steam packet company to carry the cattle s passage. During the voyage they were e negligence of the servants of the steam mpany. The contract was made subject lition that the respondents should not be ble or responsible for the loss of, or any r injury, to animals, goods, or property to them arising from the dangers or of the sea, &c., improper, careless, or navigation, or any default or negligence of the master or any of the officers or crew of the company's vessels.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the contract was governed by sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854, as extended by the later Acts, and that the condition was consequently void and the respondents liable for the loss.

Cohen v. S.E. Railway Co. (2 Ex. Div. 253; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 130) approved.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Ireland, which had reversed a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favour of the appellant, the plaintiff below.

The plaintiff was a cattle dealer in the county of Carlow, and he had entered into a contract with defendant company to carry sixty-three head of cattle from Dublin to St. Ives, in Huntingdonshire. The contract was a through contract, and made subject to the following condition in writing:

The company will not be accountable for any injury to horses, cattle, or other live stock, while shipping, during the sea passage, or landing, but will give free passage by sea to the owners or others sent to take charge of such animals on the passage. With respect to any animals, luggage, parcels, goods, or other articles booked through by them or their agents, partly by sea and partly by railway, or partly by canal and partly by sea, such animals, luggage, parcels, goods, or other articles will only be so conveyed on the condition that the company shall be exempt from liability for any loss or damage which may arise during the carriage of such animals, luggage, parcels, goods, or other articles by sea, from the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, accidents from machinery, boilers, and steam, and all other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation, of whatever nature and kind soever, in the same manner as if the company had signed and delivered to the consignor a bill of lading containing such condition, nor will the company be accountable or responsible for loss of, or any damage or injury to, animals, goods, or property entrusted to them, arising from the dangers or accidents of the sea, or of steam navigation, the act of God, the Queen's enemies, jettison, barratry, collision, improper, careless, or unskilful navigation, accidents connected with machinery or boilers, or any default or negligence of the master, or any of the officers or crews of the company's vessels.

The defendant company did not own any steam vessels of their own, and the cattle were accordingly put on board the St. Columba, a vessel belonging to the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company, under a through booking arrangement. On the passage the ship was wrecked on the Skerries Rock, near Holyhead. The plaintiff then brought this action to recover the value of the cattle.

The case was tried before Palles, C.B., at the Kildare Summer Assizes in 1874, when the jury found that the loss was occasioned by the negligence of the crew of the St. Columba, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 765*l*. The defendants obtained a rule to enter a nonsuit or a verdict for them, on the ground that they were exempted from liability for negligence by the condition set out above; but upon argument the rule was discharged by the Court of Common Pleas, on the ground that the condition was rendered void by the Railway Regulation Acts.

The defendants appealed to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, where the decision of the Court of Common Pleas was reversed by Palles, C.B., Fitzgerald, Deasy, and Dowse, B.B., and Fitzgerald and Barry, J.J., Whiteside, C.J., dissenting. This appeal was then brought to the

H. OF L.]

DOOLAN v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

[H.]

House of Lords. The case is reported below in Ir. Rep. 10 C.L. 47.

Macdonough, Q.C. (of the Irish Bar), Benjamin, Q.C., and Fitzgerald appeared for the appellant.

Walker, Q.C. (of the Irish Bar), Watkin Williams, Q.C., and Robertson (of the Irish Bar) for the respondents.

The argument turned upon the construction of the sections of the Acts of 1854, 1868, and 1871.

The following cases were cited or referred to :

Peck v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 10 H. of L. Cas. 473; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 768;

Moore v. Midland Railway Company, Ir. Rep. 9 C. L. 20;

Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company, ante p. 248; L. Rep. 2 Ex. Div. 253; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 130;

Le Conteur v. London and South-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 54; 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 325;

The Normandy, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 519; L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 152; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 631;

The South Wales Railway Company v. Redmond, 10 C. B., N. S., 675; 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 619;

Aldridge v. Great Western Railway Company, 15 C. B., N. S., 582;

Zuns v. South-Eastern Railway Company, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 539; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 873;

Machu v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 2 Ex. 415.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

July 27.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows :

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords,—The Midland Railway Company, the defendant in the court below, which is an ordinary railway company, having no special powers for building or working steam vessels, at an office which it has in Dublin, made a contract with the plaintiff to carry sixty-three head of cattle for him from Dublin to St. Ives for reward. The railway company procured the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company to carry the cattle for them in one of their steam vessels called the St. Columba. The jury found that the cattle were lost not by any peril of the sea, but by the negligence of the crew of the St. Columba. Had this been all, the railway company would plainly have been answerable to the plaintiff. But the contract was in writing and signed by the plaintiff, and contained a condition that the Midland Railway Company were exempt from liability for any loss or damages which may arise during the carriage of such animals arising from the dangers or accidents of the sea, or of steam navigation, the act of God, the Queen's enemies, jettison, barratry, collision, improper, careless, or unskilful navigation, accidents connected with machinery or boilers, or any default or negligence of the master, or any of the officers or crews of the company's vessels. If, therefore, this condition is valid, it protects the company from liability for the loss which happened.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that the 12th section of the Regulation of Railways Act 1871 (34 & 35 Vic. c. 78, s. 12) renders this condition void; the contention of the railway company is that the enactment has not that effect. This is the one issue wrapped up in the voluminous pleadings.

But the construction of this section is not a simple matter. It provides that, "Where a railway company under a contract for carrying persons, animals, or goods by sea procure the same to be carried in a vessel not belonging to the railway company, the railway company shall be answerable in damages in respect of loss of life, or personal injury, or in respect of loss or damage to animals or goods, in like manner and to the same extent as the railway company would be answerable if the vessel had belonged to the railway company, provided that such loss of life, or personal injury, or loss or damage to animals or goods, happens to the person, animals, or goods (as the case may be) during the carriage of the same in such vessel, and the proof to the contrary to lie upon the railway company." The Act is, by sect. 1, to be construed as one with the Regulation of Railways Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), the 16th section of which extends the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31) to steam vessels and the traffic carried on thereby; and was settled by the decision of this House in Peck v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company (H. of L. Cas. 473; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 768) the condition having the effect of exempting the company from responsibility for the negligence or fault of his own servants is not just and reasonable within the meaning of sect. 7 of the last-named statute. If, therefore, the Act of 1854 is applicable to the contract in the present case, the railway company cannot successfully plead the special conditions under which the contract was entered into.

The first matter to be inquired into is, what is the true construction of the Railway Regulation Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), which applies the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 to the traffic carried on by steam companies on steam vessels which the companies themselves own or work. The Court of Common Pleas in Ireland in Moore v. Midland Railway Company (Ir. Rep. 9 C. L. 20), and the Court of Exchequer and the Court of Appeal in Ireland in Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company (ante p. 248) have unanimously held that the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 are extended to the whole of the traffic on such steam vessels. The majority of the judges of the Irish Court of Appeal have in the present case held that the provisions of the Act as to passenger traffic on the steamboats was not meant, and consequently that only the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 as to goods traffic is extended, thus excluding the provisions as to passenger traffic. I cannot agree with them.

In the present case the Midland Railway Company did not own or work the steam vessel in which the cattle were carried, and were not, therefore, brought within the provisions of the Railway Regulation Act 1868, sect. 16. They did, however, under a contract for carrying goods, procure them to be carried in a steam vessel not belonging to the railway company, and the question mainly argued at your Lordships' instance was whether the Railway Regulation Act 1868 was or was not to be construed as extending the provisions of the Railway Regulation Act 1854, applicable to railway companies, to contracts carrying goods by sea in steam vessels, to railway companies under a contract procuring them to be carried in a vessel not belonging to the railway company.

I will state briefly the effect of the decisions on this subject. The decision in Peck v. North Staffordshire Railway Company (ubi sup.) upon sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854 only affected

DOOLAN v. THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

university by railway. At that time it was for railway companies to use and vessels; but in 1863 provision was for made for cases where railway companies authorised by any future enactment that Act to buy, hire, or use, or to engagements for the buying, hiring, or vessels. Sects. 30 to 35 of the Act 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 92) subject, and sect. 31 expressly extends of the Act of 1854 "to steam vessels to be carried thereby." Sect. 16 of the concludes with precisely the same as earlier part of the section containing following words: "Where a company is authorised to build, or buy, or hire, maintain, and work, or to enter into for using, maintaining, or work vessels for the purpose of carrying communication between any towns or to take tolls in respect of such, then and in every such case at all times charged to all passengers conveyed in a like vessel, on the same places, under like circumstances and no reduction or advance in the made in favour of or against any passenger vessels in consequence of his ed, or being about to travel, on the part of the company's railway, or not ed, or not being about to travel, on of, or in favour of or against any the railway, in consequence of his or being about to use, or his not or not being about to use, the steam where an aggregate sum is charged by or conveyance of a passenger by a nd on the railway, the ticket shall nt of toll charged for conveyance by not distinguished from the amount conveyance on the railway." The Act sought to take advantage of of the Railway Regulation Bill to induce an enactment making their they were procuring other ship for them no greater than if they in their own ship, the burden of the misfortune happened while the a the ship being on the company. attention to the fact that the existing lation Act 1868 left a railway com- y to impose any conditions when other shipowners to carry for them. t that the restriction on the liberty eadly imposed on railway companies g the traffic on their own steamers tended to such a case; and that if company had contracted to carry l, partly by steam, and partly by r conveyance on which they might npose any condition, the burden of misfortune happened after the goods f the steamship ought to lie on the ay. In my opinion both objects reasonable, and I think the Legis- d to give effect to both; it ought, ve expressed its intention in two es, one for each object. And it is e attempt to make one clause serve hat has created the obscurity. As is actually worded, there is, I think, some difficulty in finding apt words to limit the liability of the railway company for loss of life or injury to the person to the aggregate amount, though I cannot doubt that was intended. That, however, is not the question before your Lordships. I think there are quite sufficient words to express the intention of the Legislature to extend the restriction on liberty of contract to contracts by railway companies to carry by sea, executed by procuring other steamship owners to do the sea carriage. Whether this be politic or not, the Legislature thought it politic. The proviso as to which so much has been said is applicable to this, and to this alone.

I may here dispose of a point which was relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents—namely, that, as the Midland Railway Company are not authorised by any Act of Parliament to use, maintain, and work steam vessels, or to enter into arrangements for using, maintaining, or working them, they were not affected by sect. 16 of the Act of 1868, and consequently sect. 7 of the Act of 1854 did not apply in the present case; but I cannot believe that the Legislature intended to place companies with no Parliamentary powers in a better position than those who have obtained statutory authority to carry on this class of traffic. In the case of Cohen v. South-Eastern Railway Company (ante, p. 248) the defendants carried on their traffic by their own steamers, and therefore the question of the negligence of other parties did not arise; but I think that decision was right, so far as it decides that the Act of 1854 is extended by sect. 16 of the Act of 1868 to all classes of steamship traffic.

As to what seems to have weighed with some of the judges below, that the railway company may contrive, by acting as booking agents for the Dublin Steam Packet Company, to evade the Act, I can only say that they are free to try. I doubt if it will be found practicable to have the benefit of an office of their own in Dublin, and at the same time to avoid the responsibility. If they succeed in doing so, and in a future Railway Regulation Act a clause is inserted to prevent it, I hope it may be more artistically framed.

The only remaining question is whether this clause is to be adjudged reasonable. And as the condition now before your Lordships tries to exempt the company from all liability for the negligence of their employees, if any condition can be unreasonable within the decision in Peck v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, this is.

I therefore advise your Lordships to reverse the judgment, and allow the appeal, with costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Guthrie), Lords O'HAGAN and GORDON concurred; the LORD CHANCELLOR observing that their Lordships had fully made up their minds on the question at the time the case was argued, and had only reserved judgment in consequence of the great complexity of the situation.

Judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Ireland reversed, and appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Sherwood, Grubbs, Pritt and Cameron, agents for Dillon and Co., Dublin.

Solicitors for the respondents, Carlisle and Ordell, agents for Watson and Co., Dublin.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by J. P. ASHFALL, and F. W. BAKER, Esq.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, July 13.

(Before JAMES, BAGGALLAY, and COTTON, L.JJ.)

THE AMSTEL.

Right of appeal—Matter in discretion of judge—Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, sects. 19, 45, 49—Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876, sect. 20—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), sects. 27, 29—County Courts Act 1875 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 50), sects. 10, 12.

Sect. 19 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, does not give the Court of Appeal jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a judge of the High Court with reference to a matter which before the passing of the Judicature Acts was in the absolute discretion of the judge.

Leave to extend the time for appealing from a County Court in the exercise of its Admiralty Jurisdiction, is by sect. 27 of the County Courts Act 1868, a matter within the absolute discretion of the judge of the Admiralty Division, and from his decision no appeal lies to the Court of Appeal.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty) refusing to extend the time for lodging an appeal from a decision of a County Court in the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction.

A cause of damage was instituted in the Glamorganshire County Court by the owners of the foreign ship Amstel against the Flying Fish, a steaming tug, to recover the damages arising out of a collision between the Amstel and the Greek barque Aghios Spiridon, which was occasioned, it was alleged, by the negligence of the Flying Fish whilst towing the Amstel under a contract of towage.

The cause was heard in the County Court on 20th March 1877, when the learned judge decided that both the tug and the tow were to blame for the collision, and condemned each of those vessels in a moiety of the damage, and on the 14th April 1877, the learned judge of the County Court delivered a judgment, assigning his reasons for the decree of the 19th March 1877.

On the 19th March 1877, the owners of the Aghios Spiridon instituted a cause in rem against the Amstel in the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice for damages arising out of the same collision. In that cause the owners of the Amstel claimed to be entitled to contribution from the owners of the Flying Fish, and on April 16th obtained leave to serve notice under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, Schedule L, Order XVI., rule 18, on them, and thereupon the owners of the Flying Fish entered an appearance. The owners of the Amstel then filed an admission of their liability, and applied to the registrar for a transfer of the cause in the County Court to the High Court, and under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, Schedule L, Order XVI., rule 19, for directions as to the mode of determining the apportionment between the Amstel and Flying Fish, in the already pending in the High Court. This application was on 13th May refused with costs.

The owners of the Amstel then applied to the Judge of the Admiralty Division for leave to appeal from the decree of the County Court notwithstanding that the ordinary time for appeal had expired, and on 29th May the motion for hearing. The principal enactments in reference was made in the arguments submitted were as follows:

County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71).

Sect. 27. No appeal shall be allowed unless the judgment of appeal is lodged in the registry of the Court of Admiralty within ten days from the date of the decree or order appealed from, but the judge of the Court of Admiralty of England may, on sufficient being shown to his satisfaction for such cause, allow an appeal to be prosecuted, notwithstanding that the instrument of appeal has not been lodged within the time.

Sect. 29. There shall be no appeal from a decree of the High Court of Admiralty of England or from an appeal from a County Court, except by express permission of the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty.

The County Courts Act 1875 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 50).

Sect. 10. There shall be no appeal from a decree or order of the High Court of Admiralty of England or from the County Court when such decree or order affirms the judgment of the County Court, except by express permission of the judge of the High Court of Admiralty. When upon an appeal the High Court of Admiralty alters the judgment of the County Court so as to appeal to her Majesty in Council shall be deemed to be a case for appeal.

*Sect. 12 repeals various enactments contained in Schedule C. of the Act, amongst which is, Alia (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 above.*

G. Bruce in support of motion.—The time for appeal is not absolutely limited to ten days, in the case there is "sufficient cause" for extending. Until the registrar refused our application we had no reason for appealing, we saved expense by not doing so, as our application to have the judgment in the action brought by the Aghios Spiridon against the Amstel, and in which the owners of the Flying Fish have appeared, determined as to the liability of the Amstel and the Flying Fish, would, if allowed, have settled the whole question of liability. If an appeal is not now allowed, there will be an absolute denial of justice to the owners of the Amstel, notwithstanding that we have a judgment to the effect that the Flying Fish is, in the events, jointly liable with the Amstel for the collision. Besides there is a question of the application of the Admiralty rule of damages in cases where the claim is not merely between colliding vessels, but between them and parties.

Webster, for the owners of the Flying Fish against the motion.—There is no ground for the court to allow this appeal. The Amstel admitted her liability in the action in the County Court and cannot call on us for contribution, the contribution amongst fort feussors, and the Order XVI. do not apply to such a case, and if the appeal was allowed no portion of the damages for which the Amstel has been found liable could be recovered against the Flying Fish. The appeal would be simply a waste of time. The Judge of the County Court was deciding that both vessels were

P.]

THE ANNANDALE.

[OT. OF APP.]

e to the Amstel, and there was as 1 for that appeal on the 20th March n reply.—We did not know the reasons ed judge below for his decree till and dating from that day we were time by taking action to make the contribute.

'HILLMORE.—I think Mr. Webster's s correct, and that there has not been reason" shown for extending the time, se the application. The owners of the are entitled to costs.

s decision the owners of the Amstel
d on the 13th July the appeal came on for appellants (after an intimation from show that he had a right of appeal).

of the Supreme Court of Judica-73 gives jurisdiction to the Court of ertain an appeal from any judgment or High Court, except in "cases herein-ned," and this is not one of the cases n sect. 49 or elsewhere in the Act.
nder sect. 29 of the County Courts urisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict.
eal could be brought except by the Judge of the Admiralty Court, but was repealed by the County Courts & 39 Vict. c. 50), s. 12, and sect. 10 of ct does not apply to the present case, ed Judge of the Admiralty Division irmed," nor "altered" the judgment y Court, but refused an interlocutory having no bearing on the merits of ut in which he had original jurisor the same reasons the Supreme ndicature Act 1873, s. 45 does not his decision in such a matter was thin the meaning of the Appellate Act 1876, s. 20.

Q.C., for the respondents, owners of Fish, was not called on.

[—The Court of Appeal has no jurisntertain this application. Sect. 19 of Court of Judicature Act 1873, it is a general terms an appeal from every order of the High Court, but per-extend the time for appeal from a rt in the exercise of its Admiralty is left by sect. 27 of County Courts urisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. and entirely within the discretion of the Admiralty Division, and there is ven to the Court of Appeal to inter-a matter.

and COTTON, L.J.J. concurred.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

for the appellants, Ingledeu, Ince, and or the respondents, Wynne.

Tuesday, July 17.

(Before JAMES, BAGGALLAY, and COTTON, L.J.J.)

THE ANNANDALE.

Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104)
sect. 103—Concealing British character—For- feiture—Bonâ fide purchaser—When forfeiture attaches.

Where an offence is committed by a shipowner or master against sect. 103 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, the ship becomes forfeited to H. M., and the forfeiture attaches, and the property in the ship is divested out of the owners and vested in the Crown from the date of the committing of the offence; and a person purchasing such ship bon- fide, and without knowledge of the offence com- mitted, after such date but before seizure and condemnation, cannot acquire a title which will override the right of the Crown.

THIS was an appeal from an interlocutory judgment or decree of the High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) in favour of the plaintiff on a demurrer.
The action was brought by the plaintiff, an officer of Her Majesty's Customs, against the ship Annandale, in rem, to obtain a condemnation and forfeiture of the ship for breaches of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict.
c. 104) sect. 103, sub-sect. 2, and the statement of claim set out the specific offences charged, alleged that the ship had been seized by the plaintiff and brought in for adjudication, and claimed a forfeiture and sale.

The statement of defence alleged amongst other things that after the dates of the offence charged in the statement of claim and before seizure by the plaintiff, the defendant had become a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration and without notice or knowledge of the matters charged to have been done by the former owners of the ship.

To this part of the statement of defence the plaintiff demurred, and the court below pronounced in favour of the demurrer.

The pleadings and the judgment of the court below will be found fully reported ante, p.
383.

Patchett, Q.C. and Milvain for the appellant.—
By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 103, it is (inter alia) provided that if "the master or owner of any British ship does, or permits to be done, any matter or thing, or carries, or permits to be carried, any papers or documents, with intent to conceal the British character of such ship from any person entitled to inquire into the same, or to assume a foreign character with intent to deceive any such person as lastly hereinbefore mentioned, such ship shall be forfeited to Her Majesty." The question raised on this appeal is whether the defendant, having purchased the ship without notice or knowledge of any offence having been committed against that statute, and before process issuing against the ship, has not got a title which defeats the right of the Crown to forfeiture, or did the acts alleged to have been done by the former owners vest the property in the ship in the Crown at once so that there could not be valid conveyance to the defendant.
[JAMES, L.J.—If the owner can convey the ship at all after the committal of any such acts as these alleged he can give a good title whether there be notice or no notice.] In the case of a common law forfeiture no property vests in the Crown until conviction, so here no property vests till condemnation. [JAMES, L.J.—Before the sale the Crown clearly had a right to seize the ship; when did the Crown lose that right?] On the sale itself. In United States v. 1960 Bags of Coffee (8 Cranch 398) Story, J. expresses the strongest opinion that in such a case there is no forfeiture until condemnation. The language of the section is not “is forfeited,” but “shall be forfeited,” i.e., shall be forfeited on seizure and condemnation. There must be some step taken to take away the owners’ right to give a good title. In Reg. v. McCleverty; the Telegrafo (L. Rep. 3 C. P. 673: 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748; 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 63) it was held that a forfeiture for piracy could not be enforced as against a bonâ fide purchaser. [JAMES, L.J.—Forfeiture for piracy is a punishment awarded by the court on conviction. There is no statute law prescribing the forfeiture or showing when it operates.] The case shows that the court will protect bonâ fide purchasers for value. Some step must be taken by Government before the forfeiture attaches; otherwise a vessel might be chartered, insured, and earn freight, and the Crown would have a right to step in and say that all profits and moneys due in respect of the ship must be paid to the Crown in their right as owners. It is true that the majority of the court in United States v. 1960 Bags of Coffee (8 Cranch 398) was in favour of the forfeiture, but there the words of the statute were “whenever” an Act against the statute is committed forfeiture shall ensue, thus fixing the time; whereas here the word is “if” such Act is committed the forfeiture shall ensue; thus, in the English statute no time is fixed, and as the statute being penal must be construed strictly in favour of the shipowner the time to be implied is seizure or condemnation. Again, the section provides for the detention of ships which have become “subject to forfeiture;” that is to say liable to be forfeited on condemnation; not forfeited already. [JAMES, L.J.—Those words imply that the ship have already become subject to forfeiture.] But not forfeited. The forfeiture clauses ought to be strictly construed: (Hubbard v. Johnstone, 3 Taunt. 177.)

The Admiralty Advocate (Dr. Deane, Q.C.) and E. C. Clarkson (The Attorney-General with them) for the respondent.—The forfeiture takes place on the committing of the offence, and the ownership of the property then becomes vested in the Crown:

Wilkins v. Despard, 5 T. Rep. 112;
Gelstin v. Hoyt, 3 Wheaton, 311;
Henderson’s Distilled Spirits, 14 Wallace, 44.

To decide against the Crown in this case would be to enable all offenders to evade the penalties of the statute, by setting up a fictitious sale as having taken place before seizure.

Patchett, Q.C. in reply.

JAMES, L.J.—I think we must confirm the decision of the learned judge of the Court of Admiralty in this case. He proceeded upon the authority of two cases—two old English cases—which seem to have decided almost the same point, that is to say, that the property is divested upon the committal of the act, by reason of which the forfeiture is claimed; and upon decided after very great consideration. The Supreme Court of the United States of The United States v. 1960 Bags of Coffee (8 Cranch, 398), in which Mr. Justice Story made an elaborate disquisition (for that is what it is), which we have heard to day, from the decision of the majority of those authorities seem to me to be correct, and I agree with the language, if I may, the Chief Justice of the United States question really turns upon the language of the statute. It seems to me that the language of the statute is substantially the same in the language of the statute in the other is that, if a certain offence is committed “shall be forfeited.” It does not say it liable on conviction of the offence to be but that the ship shall by reason of the forfeiture; and it goes on to say that the customs shall seize the ship, and send her into court for adjudication. Then impossible to deny that by the offence has made herself liable to forfeiture, and seized under that liability, and I cannot that liability is got over by any dealing person who is the owner and who has committed the offence for which liability attaches. It is said it is a hard case, and those hardships dwelt upon at great length by Mr. Justice (8 Cranch. 401), who speaks of the hardships to innocent purchasers, and of the hardships and inconveniences affecting all their transactions; those hardships are reduced in a great measure, and practically we do not find that any justice arises upon that. Purchasers do not get into a difficulty of this kind, or even into a difficulty which is more common, the case of purchased property which has been stolen. However, if there is an inconvenience men must suffer if they buy property which happens to be in the possession of a person who is not the true owner.

According to the view of the law which has been taken upon cases such as the present, the property of the owner is divested the moment he commits the offence for which the law provides a forfeiture, and being divested, he cannot transfer in anybody else unless there is a statutory provision to that effect, such as does exist in our law with regard to the sale of stolen goods in a covert, where a person who has no title can give a title to a purchaser. The person whom the owner has divested, could not give a title to anybody else, however innocent that person might be. However, if there is any case of hardship, I doubt the Crown will always take that into merciful consideration.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision of the court below should be affirmed.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

It appears to me that the opposite construction of the 2nd subsection of the 103rd section of the Act would substantially render that section a dead letter; for though the defence is made on behalf of a purchaser without notice of the alleged forfeiture, or act occasioning the forfeiture, the claim for protection is not made in this, that there is no actual seizure or adjudication, or at any rate no actual seizure if that were the true construction. No distinction could be drawn

CT. OF APP.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[Ct. of App.]

value of both vessels, the inconvenience and risk arising from the delay both to the cargo and passengers of the Spain, and which would have been incurred by the cargo and passengers of the City of Berlin had the services not been rendered; it does not amount to 1 per cent. on the value of the salvaged property alone, and is not equal to the commission which a broker would earn for merely selling the cargo.

Milward, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson for respondents.—There was no risk incurred in rendering the service, it occasioned no deviation on the part of the Spain, and only caused a delay of a few hours in her voyage; the amount awarded is sufficient; an award of salvage is a matter in the discretion of the judge, and the Court of Appeal will not encourage appeals in such matters.

July 23.—After consultation with the two nautical assessors, by whom the court was assisted, the judgment of the court was delivered by

JAMES, L.J., who, after setting out the circumstances of the ships and the nature of the services, increased the award to 4000*l.*, with costs of the appeal.

BAGGALLAY and COTTON, L.JJ. concurred.

Milward, Q.C. submitted that the appellants were not entitled to costs of the appeal. It was not the practice of the Privy Council to give costs where an award of salvage was varied by them: (The Inca, 12 Moo. P.C. 189; Swa, 370; The Oshaka, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 177; L. Rep. 2 P.C. 205; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 621; The Amerique, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 460; L. Rep. 6 P.C. 468; 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 854); and this court will follow the practice of the Privy Council in Admiralty appeals.

JAMES, L.J.—It is the custom in this court to give a successful appellant his costs, and I see no reason on principle why salvage appeals should differ from appeals in other cases.

BAGGALLAY and COTTON, L.JJ. concurred.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors for appellants, Toller and Sons, agents for Stone and Fletcher, Liverpool.

Solicitors for respondents, Gregory, Rowcliffe, and Co., agents for Duncan, Hill, and Dickenson, Liverpool.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by W. APPLETON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

May 30 and 31.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., JAMES, BRAMWELL, and BRETT, L.JJ.)

FISHER v. SMITH.

Marine insurance—Sub-agent of broker—Lien on policies for premiums paid by him—Notice.

Plaintiff, a shipowner, employed S and Co., insurance brokers, to effect marine insurances for him. S. and Co. had acted as plaintiff's brokers for about three years previously, and the ordinary course of business was for plaintiff to pay S. and Co. on monthly accounts between them. S. and Co. effected the insurances through defendant, as a sub-agent, who paid the premiums. Defendant had notice throughout the transaction that S. and Co. were acting as brokers for plaintiff, and also knew the ordinary course of business between plaintiff and S. and Co., as to monthly payments, but the plaintiff did not know, until the policies had been effected, that S. and Co. employed defendant or anyone else to effect the Plaintiff, in one of his usual monthly settlements with S. and Co., was debited with the amount the premiums on the policies, but the premium remained in defendant's hands. S. and Co. never paid defendant the amount of the premium. A loss occurred on the property insured, plaintiff brought an action against defendant to recover the policies.

Held (reversing the decision of the Exchequer Division), that the defendant had a lien on the policies for the amount of the premiums paid him.

This was an appeal by the defendant from a decision of the Exchequer Division.

The action was to recover several policies of insurance, or damages for their detention.

At the trial, before Archibald, J. and a jury, at the Gloucester Spring Assizes 1874, verdict for the plaintiff for the damages claimed was taken by consent, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following special case.

CASE.

1. The plaintiff is a shipowner and merchant at Barrow-in-Furness, in Lancashire, and sole agent at that place for the steel rails of the Hematite Steel Company, which company carries on its business also in Barrow-in-Furness, and the only manufacturers of steel rails there. The defendant is an insurance broker, carrying on business at Liverpool, in connection with W. J. Skinner and Co.

2. On or about the 19th July 1874 the plaintiff authorised Messrs. Skinner and Co., who are insurance brokers at Barrow-in-Furness, to effect marine insurances to the amount of 4000*l.*, on a cargo of steel rails from Barrow to St. John's, New Brunswick, per ship Eliza S. Milligan, provided they could effect such insurances at 40*s.* per centum.

3. On the 1st Aug. 1874 the plaintiff received from Messrs. Skinner and Co. a covering note, which the following is a copy:

58, Hindfoot-road, Barrow-in-Furness,
1st Aug. 1874.
Insured for account of Messrs. James Fisher and Sons, 4000*l.*, per Eliza S. Milligan, captain—
From Barrow to St. John's,
On steel rails valued at 4000*l.*,
"f.p.a." "f.g.a."
4000*l.* at 40*s.* per cent. ... ..
Policy ... ..
10 per cent of 76*l.*

W. J. SKINNER and Co.
FREDERICK EVANS.

The letters, "f.p.a." "f.g.a." and "f.c." meaning "from particular average," "general average," and "free from capture and seizure," refer to known clauses and conditions which were to be among the terms of the policy. The deduction of 10 per cent. in the premium represents the usual underwriting discount, and the signature, "Frederick Evans," to the said note, is the signature of the employ of Skinner and Co., who effected the insurance.

4. The plaintiff had employed S. and Co. as insurance brokers, to effect policies

CT. OF APP.]

FISHER v. SMITH.

[CT. OF AP.

brokers, and that the plaintiff was their principal.

17. The premiums paid by the defendant on the three policies detained by him and still owing to him amount to 52l. 18s. 9d. The premiums paid by the defendant on other policies effected by him for the benefit of the plaintiff on the instructions of Skinner and Co. under similar circumstances to those stated above, and still owing to him, amount to a much larger sum.

It is agreed between the parties that the pleadings in this action on both sides shall form part of the special case, also that the court be at liberty to draw any inferences or find any fact which in the opinion of the court a jury ought to have drawn or found. The questions for the opinion of the court are, first, whether the defendant was entitled to retain the said policies of insurance as against the plaintiff in respect of lien for the premiums on those policies; secondly, whether he was entitled to retain the said policies in respect of a general lien for the unpaid premiums upon the other policies mentioned in the 15th paragraph of this case.

If the court shall be of opinion in the affirmative on both questions, the verdict entered for the plaintiff is to be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant generally with costs. If the court shall be of opinion in the affirmative on the first question only, a verdict is to be entered for the defendant with costs, except on the 1st, 2nd, and 10th pleas, on which a verdict is to be entered for the plaintiff. If the court shall be of opinion in the negative on both questions, the verdict entered for the plaintiff is to stand for 3000l. with costs, to be reduced to 40s. upon the three policies in defendant's possession being given up to the plaintiff.

The Exchequer Division gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

[The case in the court below is reported, ante, p. 211.]

H. Matthews, Q.C. and David MacLachlan, for the defendant, argued that, both by the general law of agency, and also by the peculiar rights and liabilities of an insurance broker in marine insurance law, defendant had a lien on these policies against the assured in the first place, and had done nothing since to prevent him setting it up here. In the first place, by the general law of agency, defendant had a lien on these policies against the plaintiff; for the plaintiff, by bringing an action for them, owns they were made for him. The right of lien is a right attaching to the thing, and is not qualified by any consideration of persons against whom it is claimed:

Arnould on Marine Insurance, p. 196;
Mauns v. Henderson, 1 East, 336;
2 Duer Marine Insurance, 355;
Xenos v. Wickham, 14 C. B., N. S., 452;
Beckwith v. Bullen, 8 E. & B. 685;
Lanyon v. Blanchard, 2 Camp. 597;
Mann v. Forrester, 4 Camp. 60.

[Brett, L.J. cited Phillips on Insurance, s. 1909.]

But more especially is there such a lien in the case of an insurance broker who has effected a policy, and that by reason of the peculiar incidents of his position in insurance law. Such a broker is the only broker in the transaction. There cannot be two brokers. Skinner and Co., whatever their profession may be, are not brokers in this transaction; they are merely plaintiff's agents. The rights and liabilities of a broker are peculiar to only one man—and that the man who has acted as broker in effecting the insurance—can be only one man: (Cahill v. Dawson, 3 C. B., N. S., 104.) The only liability of the agent is to his employer, in tort, for negligence. But the broker is a person primarily and solely liable to the underwriter for premiums; i.e., he is a principal as against the underwriter, and therefore he is a principal to sue the assured for repayment to him of the premiums. An underwriter cannot go against the assured for the premiums, nor set them off against him; he can only look to the broker:

De Gaminde v. Pigou, 4 Taunt. 246;
Dalsell v. Mair, 1 Camp. 532;
Jenkins v. Power, 6 M. & Sel. 232.

Being therefore absolute debtor for premiums to the underwriters, it follows that he must be a creditor of the plaintiff for them. To such extent even is that the case, that he can sue them before he himself has paid them over to the underwriter.

Power v. Butcher, 10 B. & C. 329;
Airy v. Bland, 2 Park. Ins. 811.

And so well is this position understood in the trade of insurance, that the books are absolutely void of cases of competing claims between brokers. Skinner and Co., therefore, never have been principals, and debiting an agent cannot affect the rights against a principal. The argument even goes the length that payment by Skinner and Co. was a wrongful payment, being eliminated from the transaction, completely and collaterally. It is true that, if they had paid defendant the premiums, they might have had a lien against the plaintiff; but, in that case, they would merely have succeeded to defendant's lien. Defendant, then, both by the general law of agency, and by virtue of his peculiar position as an insurance broker, having a lien, what has he done to deprive himself of it? He has in no way agreed to give credit, nor is such an agreement to be deduced from any binding usage in the trade. He must have done something to deceive the principal into paying the middleman, which there is no colour for saying he has done:

Heald v. Kenworthy, 10 Ex. 739, 745: 24 L. J. Ex.;
Wyatt v. Lord Hertford, 3 East, 147;
Calder v. Dobell, L. Rep. 6 C. P. 486.

Powell, Q.C. and Pritchard for the respondent—The case finds that defendant knew that plaintiff would, in the ordinary course of business, pay Skinner and Co., for it finds that such a course "was usual in the trade." Knowing that, and not having moved to prevent the plaintiff from doing his position by paying to Skinner and Co. when the policies were in defendant's possession, he must be taken to have estopped himself from setting up a lien against the plaintiff, under the principle of Pickard v. Sears (6 Ad. & E. 404) and Smethurst v. Mitchell (23 L. J., N. S., 241), and many other cases. Again, defendant's knowledge of the course of dealing between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, and his conduct, must be taken to have constituted Skinner and Co. his agents to receive payment of premiums, so that the payment to Skinner and Co. was payment to himself, and discharged any lien he might have. If it is true that there can be no lien in any transaction of marine insurance between a broker and Co., and not defendant, are in merely their sub-agent. Against consequently, the only lien is that of Co.; defendant, if he has any lien, against Skinner and Co., who employ him. It is not correct to say lien is a lien on the property irrespective of anything else also cited.

Colmes, 1 Johnson & Hem. 241; 30 L. J.

agency, 386 et seq.

C.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment below must be reversed.

The facts in the case are as follows:—The plaintiff, a merchant carrying on business in Barrow-in-Furness, was in the habit of employing Skinner and Co., as insurance brokers, to effect insurances for him. There being no objection in Barrow-in-Furness, Skinner and Co. were obliged to effect the necessary insurances; doing so, sometimes themselves, sometimes employing other brokers, in Liverpool or elsewhere, to do so in his particular case they employed the insurance broker at Liverpool. The plaintiff effected four policies—the right to the three only of which is now in question—three of which is now in question: the plaintiff paid the premiums, or had credit to his account with Skinner and Co. Now Skinner and Co., there was a lien for payment existing between them. The account was drawn up by Skinner and Co. in favor of the plaintiff, who thereupon paid one month in payment. That mode of payment was in the present case. The monthly premium, which was sent in, and a bill which was paid in due course. So, as I have said, employed the defendant to effect these policies, and they remained in possession after the above settlement—plaintiff and Skinner and Co., and of the 13th Aug. had occurred. They were paid by the plaintiff, but defendant, Skinner and Co. or plaintiff, refused to pay the premiums on the policies.

The question therefore is, whether there is a lien on the policies in the hands of the defendant.

The general law as regards such cases is, that there is a lien for premiums on policies issued by the defendant. Is there anything here—and, if so, to deprive the defendant of that lien?

It is said that because the defendant knew—as the special case finds—that Skinner and Co. were employed by him, and that in the ordinary course of business premiums on these policies would be counted between Skinner and Co. and the plaintiff, that therefore he trusted Skinner and Co., and has no right now to recover. But we must look to the ordinary course of business before we can say that defendant should be made to answer. Now it appears that defendant was in his possession till the premium was paid. The plaintiff, therefore, is not liable: either Skinner and Co. were not to make these insurances through an agent, or were not. If Skinner and Co. had not, then his principal becomes the employer of the agent, and must be subject to the liabilities of that position. If not, then the agent is not his agent to effect the policies, and the policies are not his, and he can have no claim to the possession of them. But then another answer is made. It is said that defendant, knowing as he did, the course of business between plaintiff and Skinner and Co., has "lain by" and allowed the plaintiff to be prejudiced, by permitting him to pay over the premiums to Skinner and Co. without giving him (the plaintiff) notice that the policies were in defendant's hands, who would claim a lien upon them till he was paid the premiums. I do not say that if there had been at that time any doubt as to the solvency of Skinner and Co. there might not perhaps have been some substance in such an answer; but in this case all parties were at the time considered to be solvent. Therefore I am clearly of opinion that there was no duty on the defendant—and, further, I think it would have been a most extraordinary course for him to have taken—to have gone to the plaintiff and said, "I have effected the policies, and have them now, and mean to keep them; so if you pay Skinner and Co. you must run the risk of having to pay again to me, should Skinner and Co. fail to do so."

Therefore I am of opinion that plaintiff did give authority to Skinner and Co. to go and get these policies effected in the way they were effected; and that therefore defendant was his agent, and it was his business to see defendant paid, and defendant has a lien on the policies till he is paid.

JAMES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have little to add to what my Lord has said.

When the policies had been made by the defendant, either on credit or for cash, they were, from the first moment of their existence, subject to a lien for the amount of the premiums; and that lien was not against this man or that, but was a lien attaching to that property against whomsoever had a right on payment to claim it. That being so, what has defendant done or omitted to do to alter his rights? He has always kept the policies, he has never been paid, and he has done nothing showing an intention to give them up till he is actually paid. There has been nothing of the nature of "standing by." "Standing by" means lending yourself, by doing something, unconscientious if not dishonest, to another man putting himself into a false position. There has been nothing at all of that sort. All has been in the ordinary course of business. It is simply that defendant, finding Skinner and Co. insolvent, turns round to the plaintiff, and plaintiff finds he has paid to an insolvent man what was meant for defendant, and must pay again.

BRAMWELL, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

If this had been a solitary transaction between these parties, no argument would have been possible, because plaintiff knew defendant had been employed, and acknowledged it by bringing this action. Therefore there was an inevitable lien, and a lien on the article against all the world. It becomes unnecessary to go into the question raised by Mr. MacLachlan in his learned and able argument, which, however, shows conclusively that, at any rate in such a case as this, there is a lien in one holding the position of the defendant in this case. If it would have been so had this been the only transaction between the parties, it will be so here, unless there is something in their relations to alter their legal position as regards each other. What of that sort has happened? As to the judgments in the court below, I do not quite see on what ground they proceed, with the exception of that part of Baron Cleasby's judgment which proceeds on the ground of partnership. But I can see nothing like partnership in the case. If not partnership, then it is said payment to Skinner and Co. was payment to defendant's agent. There is no ground, however, on the evidence, for saying so; for payment was not payment of a particular sum, but in account. And, even if that had been otherwise, it was payment to plaintiff's, not to defendant's, agent. "Standing by" always implies that one colour has been given to a transaction which had, at first, another. Here the plaintiff was in the habit of paying Skinner and Co. without asking whether they had paid the premiums, or had the policies. What has defendant done, or suppressed, to give a different colour to the transaction? Take it he knew of that course of business between plaintiff and Skinner and Co., as we must. He would say to the plaintiff, "If you are content to pay Skinner and Co. I have no objection, but if the time comes for Skinner and Co. to pay me, and they don't, you must look out." He is not bound to take care of the plaintiff, when the plaintiff does not take care of himself. I can see no ground for saying defendant had not a lien, or cannot set it up here, if he has one. I think he has a lien, that is, a specific lien; as to a general lien, the judgment below will stand.

BRETT, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, but desire to put my judgment expressly on the ground of concurrence in the argument of Mr. MacLachlan.

Defendant says he has a lien until the premiums are paid him. He does not allege that he has paid them to the underwriters himself, therefore we must assume they are not paid. Therefore defendant can claim no lien here unless he does so on the ground of the peculiar nature of his rights as a broker in the trade of insurance. Defendant knew that he was effecting these policies for the plaintiff, therefore immediately they were effected they became plaintiff's property; and therefore there can be no lien, if not the peculiar one contended for. By the custom of insurance, the broker who actually effects the policy is the man who is liable to the underwriters, and he is the only man who is so liable; therefore he is the only man who has this lien. Therefore, in this case, the defendant alone had this lien; Skinner and Co. did not effect the policies, and were not therefore possessed of a lien or liable to the underwriters. Therefore Skinner and Co., though brokers by trade, are here merely agents; whether they were entitled to delegate their employment, as they did, is not material; if it were a question, I should be of opinion that they were not, and that the plaintiff could, if he had chosen, have abjured the whole transaction when he came to hear of it. But he did not do so. What does he do? He ratifies it, for he knows of it before he pays Skinner. So it stands thus: defendant has effected some policies for the plaintiff, and plaintiff has accepted what he has done; the defendant, then, has a lien. Lien is only wanted against the owner of the thing retained, for he is the only person who can claim it; therefore "lien against all the world" is an erroneous expression. The defendant, then, had a lien against the plaintiff. Is it got plaintiff says yes, because payment to Sk Co. is payment to defendant's agent or see nothing which makes Skinner and Accounts are sent in according to course of insurance business, and it yet been suggested that on that acc is gone. Skinner and Co. were p the bill was given and accepted, and no doubt, looked to Skinner and Co. as t who were to pay them; but that is not Skinner and Co. defendant's agents t payment. Therefore payment to Skinner was not payment to the defendant. Th they lost their lien by "standing by?" in the definition given by my brother, is "standing by." The defendant did i wrong.

And, moreover, the conclusion we come not without the support of authority: (A on Marine Insurance, pp. 196, 197; Phillips Insurance, sect. 1909.) Phillips is very express says: "The agent who effects a policy is principal, and advances the premium, or b responsible for it, and retains the policy i hands, has a lien upon it for his commissi the premium, until the same are paid to h he is supplied with funds for the pay whether his immediate employer is the s himself, or an intermediate agent; and, i latter case, whether the intermediate agenc known, or not known, to the sub-agent cl the lien." That seems an authority entir point. I am of opinion, therefore, that the dant had a particular lien; as to a general do not disagree with the court below.

Judgment reserved.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Chester, Erye Mayhew, and Holden, agents for Bradshaw Pearson, Barrow-in-Furness.

Solicitors for the defendant, Sharpe, Pritchard, and Sharpe, agents for Gill and Liverpool.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by J. A. FOOTE and CAMERON CRITCHFIELD, Barristers-at-Law.

Tuesday, June 19.

ADAMS v. HALL.

Principal and agent—Undisclosed principal—Trade usage—Interpretation of charter—Admission of letters in evidence to charter-party—Agent his own principal—The plaintiffs and defendants entered into a charter-party of the ship R. to load a cargo of deals. The body of the charter the defendants were to load as follows, "It is this day mutually agreed between Messrs. J. H. and Co., of Newcastle, owners of the good ship R." The defendants signed the charter-party at the foot, "For owners, J. H. & Co." A cargo was loaded on board the ship R. at H., and the defendants signed a bill of lading for the same, which he had received it in good condition. The cargo was ultimately delivered to the defendants, and was found on delivery to be damaged to the extent of 50l. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants for the damage, in the County Court at agency. The name of Charles F. Schwedberg is not there, a nearby stamp reads "Schwedberg" and "Schwedberg and Schwedberg" is also stamped in the same handwriting. That it was entered between 1 and 7, 1916, then at which one 1 and 7, 1916, Merchants' Bank the ship should proceed, when and there came from the agents' Merchants' Bank. "To be brought from knowledge at Merchants' Bank when the said merchants hereby and some of them and should proceed to Miami, then in paying freight." Every thing else moved the said Merchants' Bank and the shipping and ten days demurrage. The charter-party was signed "by agents and as agents for Mr. A. E. Schwedberg, Miami, 1 and 7, 1916, at which 1 and 7, 1916, the defendants set out their party and averred that Schwedberg was foreigner, not a subject of this nation, beyond the seas, to wit as Miami, and in defendants' demurrage and freight defendant's plea, that the agreement entered into by defendants by the ship and for and on behalf of, and as agent, for, and not otherwise, and he was not and known by plaintiff as being defendant's agent at the time the agreement was made. Demurrer, judgment for plaintiff, the rest of the charter-party showing that defendants' tractated personality. Moreover, the vessel admitted by the defendants in the correspondence. In the letter of 2nd Nov. 1916, the defendants write:

25

Memrs. Thomas Adams m/c.
Birmingham.

Dear Sirs,—We duly received your favour of the 11th ult., and in reply, we cannot entertain any plan of the kind you make, and must ask you to forward a balance of freight, otherwise we will be obliged to put the matter in the hands of our Freight and Damage Association. We remain, yours truly,
(Signed) JOHN HALL & Co

The second letter is dated 14th Nov. 1964 in this the ownership is clearly admitted. The letter is from the defendants' solicitors to the plaintiffs' solicitors, and is as follows:

Dear Sirs,—Messrs. John Hall and Co., of Swindon-upon-Tyne, have handed us your letter of yesterday date; they instruct us that the damage of my goods amount to only a small sum, and under the circumstances we must request you to let us have particular bills to make out so large a sum as £53 2s. 6d.

Please inform us for what price the deer which you complain were sold, and also what price obtained for the remainder of the cargo.

truly, (Signed) OLIVER and BOND

The third letter, which is also from Messrs. Taynton and Son, Solicitors, Gloucester, solicitors to the plaintiffs, is dated 22nd Nov. and is as follows :

Dear Sirs,—We have seen our clients with reference to your letter of the 16th inst., and they instruct us that although they do not admit any liability in respect of the matter named in your letter, still they are willing to take all portions of the cargo which you may claim to be damaged and to pay your clients for the same at the price together with all freight and other charges paid by them on the same, and thus your clients may make any loss whatever in the matter. If, therefore, you decline this offer we will, of course, defend your clients against any claims they may think fit to make. Yours faithfully,
OLIVER and SON,
Messrs. Taynton and Son, Solicitors, &

P. Div.]

ADAMS v. HALL.

[C.P. Div.]

correspondence must be read. In the case Shmatt v. Avery (16 Q. B. 655) which was an assumption on a charter-party by a freighter not a shipowner for not receiving the cargo, non-assumpsit, proof was given of a charter-party expressed to be by the defendant, of one P., "and G. S. and Co. (agents of the freighter) and other," and containing a memorandum as follows: "This charter being concluded on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all responsibility on the part of G. S. and Co. shall be as soon as the cargo is shipped." No notice of this memorandum was taken in the declaration. P. and Co. were proved to be the plaintiffs.

It was held, first, that notwithstanding the fact of the charter-party, plaintiff might prove that he was the freighter, and his own principal, on proof of his being so, was entitled to sue in his own name; secondly, that it was necessary to notice the memorandum in the declaration. The usage of trade must be judicially ascertained when the principal is not disclosed. That was decided in the case of Fleet v. Murton (10 Q. B. 126). There the defendants, P. W., fruit brokers in London, being employed by the plaintiffs, merchants in London, to sell for them, gave them the following contract note addressed to the plaintiffs: "We have this day sold for your account to our principal" so many raisins. (Signed) M. and W., brokers. Defendants' principal having accepted part of the raisins and not having accepted the rest, the plaintiffs brought an action on the contract against the defendants, and they sought to make the defendants personally liable by giving evidence that, in the London fruit trade, if the defendants did not give the names of their principals in the contract, they were held personally liable, although they contracted as brokers for a principal. Evidence was also given of a similar custom in the London colonial market. There was held that the evidence of the custom in the fruit trade was admissible, as not inconsistent with the written contract, on the authority of Frey v. Dale (7 E. & B. 266; E. B. & E. 1004), but that the evidence of a similar custom in the colonial market was admissible, being evidence in a similar trade in the same place, and as tending to corroborate the evidence of such a custom in the fruit trade. In Parker v. Winlow (7 Q. B. 942), it was held that a memorandum for a charter-party was expressed to be made "between P., of the good ship C., and W., agent for E. W. and Son," to which the ship was to be addressed, it was held by W. without any restriction: it was that W. was personally liable as charterer.

Mason in reply.—Paice v. Walker is distinguishable. Gadd v. Houghton is precisely similar in case, only there the defendant signed "on behalf of" instead of "for." In Fleet v. Murton evidence of custom was admitted as not being inconsistent with the written contract; here the evidence that it is proposed to admit is inconsistent with the charter-party. The correspondence must be received to vary the contract. [Lord Coleridge, C.J.—We cannot exclude the correspondence, for why does the learned judge send it? Do you contend that the charter-party is not varied by subsequent correspondence? The question is, as is generally the case, was there evidence that the defendants intended to render themselves liable as principals? You applied for a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence on this point. The judge was right in overruling the objection, if there was any evidence. You must argue that you are entitled to a nonsuit on the charter-party, and all submitted to us.] Southwell v. Bowditch is very clearly in favour of my contention. [Lord Coleridge, C.J.—In every case cited the parties in one sense contracted as agents, that is, including the principals. The question is, whether they excluded themselves, or whether the agent and principal are both liable, or, in other words, what is the effect of the words which may be read as personal to themselves?] In the case of Potter v. Duffield (L. Rep. 18 Eq. 4) where real estate was put up for sale under particulars and conditions of sale which did not disclose the vendor's name, but stated that B. was the auctioneer, the purchaser of one of the lots signed a memorandum acknowledging his purchase, and B. signed at the foot of this memorandum another, in these terms, "Confirmed on behalf of vendor, B." There it was held that the memorandum did not sufficiently show who the vendor was, and a bill for specific performance of the contract for sale was dismissed.

Lord Coleridge, C.J.—It is not necessary for me to express any opinion as to what our judgment would have been if we had had to decide this case upon the charter-party alone, for the charter-party is not alone. We have also the correspondence. The evidence and the correspondence are both set forth and sent to us by the learned County Court judge. He expressly mentions the letters, no doubt for some purpose, and they are intended to form materials for framing our judgment. We are asked for a nonsuit, upon the ground that there is no evidence against the defendants as principals, but that it appears upon the charter-party that they were only agents, and are not therefore liable. We cannot doubt, looking at the way the case is framed, that we are intended to look at the correspondence, and therefore it is not the dry construction of the charter-party alone that we have to consider, but the charter-party as explained and thrown light upon by all the evidence that is placed before us. There is no case which is in itself conclusive that decides such explanation. It must always in such cases be plain that the parties in one sense act as agents. The question, therefore, is not whether they are agents or principals, but whether, though agents, they are also principals. In an application for a nonsuit we must look at all the evidence. The evidence was tendered to the County Court judge without objection, and the question that we have to decide is, whether there was not abundant evidence that the defendants were owners, and contracted personally, and were personally liable. It is consistent with the signatures that they might be owners. When charged with their liability, their solicitors do not repudiate their liability, but request to be furnished with particulars in order that they may ascertain how the plaintiffs make out so large a sum as 53*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* In their next letter the defendant's solicitors say, that, though they do not admit the liability in respect of the matters named by the plaintiffs, yet they are willing to take all portions of the cargo which the plaintiffs allege to be damaged, and to pay the plaintiffs the cost price for the same, together with all freight and other proper charges paid by them on the same. What is this but admitting their liability? The only point they really question is the extent of their liability. On that ground, therefore, without going into the number of cases that were cited, we think there was abundant evidence to show that the County Court judge was right in deciding that the defendants were, in fact, part owners of the ship, and personally liable. The judge arrived at that conclusion, and I should have done the same.

GROVE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The letters were not touched, as to their contents, in the argument of the plaintiff. The letters are very strong. Mr. Anderson says they are not admissible, but he cannot well contend that, assuming they were admitted, they were not strong evidence. They were admitted, and there is nothing to show that they were ever objected to. But, moreover, the letters are evidence, for, as it was not clear on the charter-party in what capacity the defendants, Messrs. Hall and Co., were acting, it became material to show whether they were acting for themselves or others; and even if they were acting for others, there is nothing to prevent their taking their principals' liability, as in the case of a del credere agent. Moreover, we could not be sure that there was not some evidence of trade customs, and therefore we think that the letters were properly read, and were clearly evidence to support the decision. They have been sent up to us stamped with the County Court stamp, and are clearly intended as evidence to assist in framing our judgment. We think, therefore, that there is no evidence at all to support a nonsuit. Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Oliver, Botterell, and Roche, Newcastle-upon-Tyne and London.

Solicitors for the respondents, E. Doyle and Edwards, for Taynton and Son, Gloucester.

Thursday, Nov. 22, 1877.

(Before GROVE and LINDLEY, JJ.)

DE GARTEIG v. THE MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD.

Dock rates—Vessel trading inwards—Vessel arriving in ballast—Colourable cargo—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 92), s. 230.

An Act of Parliament provided that a vessel trading inwards to the Port of Liverpool should pay dock rates, according to a fixed scale, proportioned to the distance of the port from which she was trading, and that a vessel arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, should pay in proportion to the distance of the port to which she was trading. A vessel that had discharged her cargo at a port in England and taken on board ballast, being about to sail to Liverpool for the purpose of loading a cargo for the West Indies, took on board a bale of cotton and a few other articles admittedly in order that she might pay dock rates as a vessel trading inwards from the port where she took on board such articles, and not as a vessel arriving in ballast.

Held, that she was a vessel arriving in ballast within the meaning of the Act.

SPECIAL CASE.

The plaintiff is a native of the kingdom of Spain, and is the master of the barque Esmeralda.

2. The Esmeralda is a barque of 336 register, and capable of carrying, when loaded, 340 tons of cargo. She arrived at Liverpool from Fleetwood, and entered the dock the 29th Jan. 1877, having the following goods on board, for which bills of lading had been issued by the plaintiff as master of the ship: three bales of canvas, one barrel of beer, two barrels of potatoes, and one bale of cotton. The said goods were placed on board, and the said bills of lading were signed as aforesaid, in order that the barque might be treated as a vessel trading outwards, and not a vessel arriving in ballast: the meaning of the 230th section of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act 1858.

3. When the said vessel entered the dock at the port of Liverpool, she had on board 42 tons of ballast, which she had taken in at Fleetwood, where she loaded a cargo consisting of goods which was discharged and delivered at Fleetwood. No further ballast was taken in at Fleetwood.

4. While at Fleetwood, the vessel was chartered for a voyage from Liverpool with cargo to be there taken on board for Puerto Rico in the West Indies.

5. Fleetwood was the most distant of all ports from which the said vessel had sailed to Liverpool since her arrival in the British Isles.

6. The Esmeralda loaded at Liverpool a full complete cargo, consisting of 508 tons weight, measurement with which she sailed from Liverpool for Puerto Rico.

7. By the Act of Parliament (21 & 22 Vict. c. 92), s. 230, it is enacted with respect to dock tonnage rates on vessels entering and leaving the docks as follows:

All vessels entering into or leaving the docks shall be liable according to the tonnage burden thereof, to pay the board the rates hereinafter called the Dock Rates, mentioned in schedule B. to this Act, according to the several and respective classes of voyages described in such schedule, that is to say, from the port of Liverpool, from or to any part of the world in such schedule mentioned, and such rates shall be payable to the board by the masters or owners of such vessels and shall be charged as follows:

Vessels trading inwards shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports from which such vessel shall have traded to Liverpool. Vessels arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, shall also be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports to which such vessel shall trade outwards, and vessels built within the port of Liverpool and trading outwards shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports to which such vessel shall trade outwards, and vessels built within the said port on first trading outwards, shall be liable to one moiety only of such rates, but shall be liable to full rates.

Vessels arriving in ballast and departing from the said port shall be liable to one moiety of the rates payable to the most distant of all the ports to which such vessels shall clear out or depart.

One arrival with one departure of a vessel shall be considered as one voyage, whether such vessel shall be traded both inwards and outwards, or arrived in ballast, and without regard to any intermediate voyage between which she may have traded whilst at Liverpool, but such vessel shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports to which such vessel shall have traded. Vessels trading in ballast and trading outwards, and vessels trading outwards from the port of Liverpool and trading outwards, shall be liable to the rates payable on such trading outwards, afterwards, on trading inwards, shall be liable to the rates payable on vessels trading inwards.

C.P. Div.]

THE OMOA AND CLELAND COAL AND IRON COMPANY v. HUNTLEY.

[C.P. Div.]

8. The following is a copy of schedule B. referred to in the said section.

[Schedule B. here set out.]

9. After the passing of the said Act the rates of the toll, schedule B. classes, have been legally altered, and at the time the Esmeralda sailed from Fleetwood the dock tonnage rates payable under classes 1 and 7 (which alone affect the present case) were at the rate of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  of a penny per ton, and 1s. 6d. per ton respectively.

10. The defendants insisting that the Esmeralda was not a vessel trading inwards within the meaning of the 230th section of the above-mentioned Act, but was a vessel arriving in ballast, demanded 1s. 6d. per ton on her registered tonnage under dock tonnage rates under class 6 of schedule B.

11. The plaintiff insisted that the Esmeralda was a vessel trading inwards, and that she was only liable to pay dock tonnage rates on her registered tonnage board at the rate of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  of a penny per ton under class 1 of schedule B.

12. The plaintiff was compelled to pay, and did so, under protest, the said rate of 1s. 6d. demanded, in order to obtain her clearance.

13. If the dock tonnage rates were payable by the Esmeralda as a vessel arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, the claim of the defendants was right; if as a vessel trading inwards, the contention of the plaintiff was right.

14. The difference between the amount claimed by the defendants and the amount admitted by the plaintiff is 20l. 10s. 10d.

15. The court is to have the power to draw inferences of fact from the matters stated in the case.

16. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the said barque, on entering the docks, as a vessel trading inwards or a vessel arriving in ballast within the meaning of the 230th section of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act 1858.

17. If the court shall be of opinion that the dock tonnage rates ought to have been paid by the plaintiff in respect of the vessel as trading inwards, judgment to be entered for the plaintiff for the said sum of 20l. 10s. 10d., with costs.

18. If the court shall be of opinion that the dock tonnage rates ought to have been paid by the plaintiff in respect of the vessel as arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, judgment to be entered for the defendant, with costs.

Crompton (with him Herschell, Q.C.) for the plaintiff.—It is sufficient to come within the words of the statute. It is for the defendants to make out that this was a vessel arriving in ballast. The court can draw no line between one bale of cotton and a hundred. He cited Geldard v. Hadstone (11 East, 675); and remarks of Lord Cairns in Partington v. The Attorney-General 2. Rep. 4 E. & I. App. 100, 122).

Shand (with him Benjamin, Q.C.), for the defendants, was not called upon to argue.

Grove, J.—I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the defendants, even accepting the argument for the plaintiff to the fullest extent. The words of the Act are: "Vessels trading inwards shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports from which such vessels shall have traded to Liverpool.

Vessels arriving in ballast but trading outwards . . . shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports to which they shall trade outwards." The whole question here is the contradiction between "vessels trading inwards" and "vessels arriving in ballast but trading outwards;" and what we have to decide is to which of these two classes, on the facts set out in the case, the vessel in question belonged. It appears to me that she belonged to the latter class. She had discharged her cargo at Fleetwood, and was in ballast; but, in order that she might pay toll at a lower rate on entering the docks at Liverpool, she took on board three pieces of canvas, one barrel of beer in bottles, two barrels of potatoes, and one bale of cotton. The case expressly finds that these goods were placed on board in order that she might be treated as a vessel trading inwards, and not a vessel arriving in ballast. It therefore negatives their having been taken on board in the bona fide course of trade for the purpose of earning the freight. How then can she be said to be a vessel trading inwards? I must read the second paragraph of the case as stating the only reason for taking the goods on board; and, so doing, in my judgment the case really finds the plaintiff out of court. Cases might arise where there was at once a bona fide desire to earn freight, and also to be liable for the lower duty only; cases of mixed motive, where neither reason by itself would be sufficient to induce a man to take goods on board, but where the two together are sufficient. But that would be a different case to the present. Looking at paragraph 2 of the case, and using the power to draw inferences of fact, it appears to me that this vessel had all the attributes of a vessel arriving in ballast, and none of those of a vessel trading inwards.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me the only question we have to consider is into which of the two classes this particular vessel comes. Is she more correctly described, under the circumstances set out in the case, as a vessel trading inwards or as a vessel arriving in ballast? When we look at the facts, I think it would be impossible for us, or for any one, to doubt that the latter is the correct description. I do not wish to say anything about evading Acts of Parliament; but Acts of Parliament, whether fiscal or not, must be reasonably construed, so as to give some effect to their provisions. The question here is, what was the true character of this vessel, and the question of intention is only important as throwing light upon that. The true character of this vessel was that of a vessel arriving in ballast and trading outwards, as distinguished from a vessel trading inwards.

Judgment for the defendant with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Stone and Fletcher, Liverpool.

Solicitor for the defendants, A. T. Squarey.

Monday, April 30.

THE OMOA AND CLELAND COAL AND IRON COMPANY v. HUNTLEY.

Charter-party — Construction — Liability to charterers for negligence of crew.

The plaintiffs were charterers of a steamer belonging to the defendant under a charter-party by which the defendant was to appoint and man-

C.P. Div.]

THE OMOA AND CLELAND COAL AND IRON COMPANY v. HUNTLEY.

[C.P. Div.]

tain the ship with a full crew, whilst the plaintiffs were to find coals and to have the use of the ship for the purposes of trading between certain ports:

Held, that the defendant was responsible for the negligence of the crew.

THE following special case was stated for the opinion of the court pursuant to an order of Huddleston, B., in chambers.

The plaintiffs were the charterers, and the defendant the owner of the Vesper steamship. The charter-party was (so far as material to this case) as hereinafter set out.

The vessel sailed from Glasgow for Dunkirk with coals. In the course of the voyage she was totally lost. For the purposes of this case, but not otherwise, it was assumed that the loss was occasioned by the negligence of the master and crew, and not by any excepted peril. It was admitted that the master and crew were appointed and paid by the ship-owners.

The plaintiffs contended that the master and crew of the vessel were the servants of the defendant, who was liable for the loss caused by their negligence.

The defendant contended that they were not so, and that he was not liable for their negligence.

The question for the opinion of the court was, which of the two contentions was correct.

The charter-party was as follows:

It is this day mutually agreed between Mr. W. H. Durie, agent for owners of the good steam ship or vessel called the Vesper, . . . and the Omoa and Cleland Iron Coal Company, of Glasgow, charterers of the said steamer:

Witnesseth that the said vessel or steamer, being tight, staunch and strong, and in every way fitted for the voyage or service, and so maintained by owners with a full complement of officers, seamen, engineers, and firemen, adapted to a steamer of her class, shall be placed under the direction of the said charterer or merchant, or his assigns, to be by him or them employed for the conveyance of lawful merchandise <sup>and</sup> passengers, as follows—between ports in the United Kingdom and the Continent, Baltic and the Black Sea being excluded between 1st Sept. and 1st March, as may be ordered by the charterers, the cargoes to be laden or discharged in any dock or other safe place the charterers may order.

The said steamer is let for the sole use of the said charterers and for their benefit for the space of six months; with option of twelve calendar months at charterers' option, commencing from the vessel's being ready at Grangemouth, N.B., to be at the disposal of the charterers.

The charterers to have the whole reach of the vessel's holds and usual places of loading, including passengers' accommodation, if any, sufficient room being reserved to the owners for the crew, necessary tackle, apparel, and furniture of the said vessel, and she is not to be required to load more than she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, provisions, stores, and fuel.

The captain shall see all and every despatch possible in prosecuting the voyages, and the crew are to render all customary assistance in loading and discharging.

The captain to sign bills of lading as presented without prejudice to this charter-party, to follow the instructions of the charterers, or their assigns or consignees as regards loading, discharging, and departure.

The coals for the steam-engines shall be supplied by and at the cost of the charterers, as also all port and dock charges, pilotage, and extra labourage that may be required in addition to the crew for loading and discharging, the owners finding all ship's stores, paying crew's wages, and necessary stores for the engine-room, that is oil, tallow, and waste, also dunnage, and insurance on ship.

The freight for the hire of the said steamer shall be as follows, videlicet: Four hundred and ten pounds per ton in advance monthly, until the vessel is again returned by the charterers, he or they may previously given not less than fourteen days' notice.

That in the event of loss of time by deficiency of collision, want of stores, breakdown of engines, machinery, or the vessel becomes incapable of sailing for more than twenty-four running hours, payment hire to cease until such time as she is again in efficient state to resume her voyage. . . . Shall the vessel from breakdown of engines put into any of ports than those to which she is bound, the port dues, pilotage, &c., at those ports to be borne by the owners.

The owners to have a lien upon all freight and cargo for arrears of hire. The charterers to have a lien on the ship for the monthly freight paid in advance; in the event of the said hire not being paid as above, owners to have the liberty of terminating this charter-party, but still holding the charterers liable for the hire.

The vessel to be delivered up to the owners at termination of this charter-party at Clyde or Port Carlisle and salvages for owner's and charterer's benefit.

The captain to furnish the charterers, their agent or supercargo when required, a true daily copy of log, to take every advantage of wind by using sails in view to economize the expenditure of coals, &c.

Butt, Q.C. and J. C. Mathew for the plaintiff—In Laugher v. Pointer (5 B. & C. 547), at p. 554, Littledale, J., says, "If a man is the owner of a ship, he himself appoints the master, and desires the master to appoint and select the crew; the crew thus become appointed by the owner, are his servants for the management and government of the ship," and he is liable for default. Again, at page 578, Abbott, C.J., says the very case of a ship hired and chartered for a voyage, and remarks that "Many accidents have occurred from the negligent management of such vessels, and many actions have been brought against their owners, but I am not aware that any has ever been brought against a charterer, though he is to some purpose dominus pro tempore," &c. Fletcher v. Braddish (N. R. 2 Bos. & P. 182) was a stronger case; the owner of a ship, chartered and commanded by an officer put on board by the Government, was liable. In Quarman v. Burnett (6 M. & W. 61) the person who supplied the horses and the driver was held liable for the negligent driving. In Schuster v. McKellar (7 E. & B. 704) the same note suggests that the shipowner is liable for the miscarriage of goods, although he has chartered his ship. They also cited,

Fenton v. Dublin Steam Packet Company, 8 L. R. 835;

Russell v. Niemann, 17 C. B., N. S. 163.

Herschell, Q.C. and J. Edge for the defendant—Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Company (L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 208), decides that, although the owner of a mine employed the engineer whose negligence caused the accident, yet they were not liable because the engineer was under the control of their contractor. Colvin v. Newberry (1 Q. B. 283) is directly in point. Lord Tenterden says, at page 297: "Two propositions are clear . . . the first is, that in the case of goods shipped on board a vessel the shipper has a right to maintain an action against the owner of the ship; the other is, that if the owner charters that ship for his goods . . . although he provides the master and crew . . . the action can only be maintained against the person to whom the ship has been chartered the ship, and who is owner pro tempore, &c.": (Sander v. Brown, L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 86.) The owner

ADM.]

THE ANNANDALE.

Ld

in the North Sea, about sixteen miles from Flamborough Head; she was there found by the three fishing smacks, which succeeded in towing her to within fourteen miles of the Tyne. There a tug was engaged by the smacks, which towed the Annandale into Shields. The action having been commenced, the defendants, in accordance with the practice of the court, about the 16th Jan. 1877, filed affidavits of value, by which it appeared that the value of the ship as salvaged was 725*l.*; the value of the wood cargo as salvaged 1280*l.*; and the value of the iron cargo as salvaged 450*l.*; making the total value of ship, cargo, and freight 2455*l.*

The plaintiffs adopted these values in their statement of claim, and the defendants in their statement of defence did not deny the value as stated, and tendered 330*l.*, which at the hearing was increased to 360*l.*, to cover life salvage.

On the cases coming on to be heard,

Butt, Q.C. (W. G. F. Phillimore with him), for the defendants, tendered evidence to show that the value of the wood cargo had turned out very much less than that at which the affidavit of value filed by the defendants had put it, and desired to show that this fact had been communicated to the plaintiffs as soon as possible after the sale of the cargo by auction, the sale taking place at the end of March, and the defendants' solicitor having written to the plaintiffs' solicitors on April 17th, stating the difference in value. He mentioned

The James Armstrong, 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 46; L. Rep. 4 A. & E 280; 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 390.

Micoard, Q.C. (J. P. Aspinall with him), objected to the evidence being given on the ground that by the practice of the court, an affidavit of value being once filed by defendants in salvage suits and accepted by the plaintiff, the defendants could not afterwards alter the values. The cargo might have deteriorated in value between the service and the sale. Moreover, the plaintiffs having stated the values in their statement of claim, as given in the affidavits of value filed by the defendants, the defendants had not, in their statement of defence delivered on 17th April 1877, denied the value so stated.

Sir R. Phillimore.—The defendants, having filed an affidavit of value which has been accepted and agreed to by the plaintiffs, have, by the practice of the court, precluded themselves from giving evidence to reduce that value, and I must reject the evidence tendered.

The cause having been heard on the facts:

The Court overruled the tender, and awarded the sum of 560*l.*

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Clarkson, Son and Greenwell.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1877.

THE ANNANDALE.

Forfeiture—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103, sub-sect. 2—Collusion—Sale to a foreigner—Costs.

A nominal transfer of a British vessel to an Englishman resident abroad, to enable her to sail under a foreign flag, her former British owners preserving their control over her, and by such means endeavouring to evade the provisions of the Legislature with regard to the inspection, &c., of British ships, is an infringement of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 103, and the ship so transferred is forfeit to Majesty.

The original English owners, who were all defendants by order of the court, and who did not appear, condemned in costs.

The Sceptre (3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 30; L. T. Rep. N. S. 439) followed.

In this case the plaintiff, a collector of Customs at the port of Liverpool, acting on behalf of the Board of Trade, prayed a forfeiture of the Annandale to Her Majesty for a breach of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 103, sub-sect. 2. A Norwegian subject, named Low, entered an appearance and raised a defence, and up a bond file sale to him before answer; and in defence the plaintiff demurred, and the demurrer was sustained by the Judge of the Admiralty Division (ante, p. 383; 3 P. D. 179; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 259), and on appeal by the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 472). The case now came on for judgment on the merits, as an undefended action, the Annandale which had been on the record (ante, p. 383) being withdrawn.

Dr. Deane, Q.C., for the plaintiff, put in affidavits of the Customs House officers at the castle-on-Tyne to show at what date the Annandale was struck off the register of British ships; the representation of her managing owner that she had been sold to foreigners, and that they had subsequently known her as sailing under the Belgian flag; secondly, affidavits of Customs House officers at Liverpool, with a declaration, made by them of the ship, that she was a Belgian vessel, under the Lettre de Mer, under which the vessel was as a Belgian ship, attached as exhibits, a copy of a bill of sale, executed on the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool and two days before her sale by her former English owners, acting in the character of attorneys for one Henry Thomas Watson, the alleged Belgian owner, to the deponent; fourthly, an affidavit of the said Henry Thomas Watson, setting out the circumstances under which he became the nominal owner of the ship under the Belgian flag, and from which appeared that the former owners executed a bill of sale, in the presence of the Belgian Consul, the deponent, who, being an Englishman and a British subject, was alleged to be a Belgian citizen; that the bill of sale was sent to the deponent, then resident in Belgium, that the deponent produced the bill of sale to the Belgian authorities, and, on his representation, the ship belonged to him—a Belgian citizen—he obtained a Lettre de Mer or provisional order for the vessel, which he forwarded to the English owners. The consideration expressed in the bill of sale was never paid, or intended to be paid by the deponent; but he received a sum of £1000 in loan of his name to the transfer. To him were attached as exhibits (a), a power of attorney to the former English owners to grant mortgages and give bills of sale as security for mortgages, whereby the mortgagees should be in as full possession of the property as if they were a copy of the bill of sale to him, and of a letter from the former English owners to him forwarding the bill of sale, and the Belgian papers to be sent as aforesaid, and referring to a circular of the Admiralty into the Times and Shipping Gazette.

Deane then read a document which he stated the one referred to in the exhibit (c) and to Watson's affidavit, and which was in following terms :

Newcastle-on-Tyne, June 25, 1874.

—I beg to inform you that I have made arrangements for registering British or other ships under flag (allowing the employment of officers of any nationality) on cancelling their present register. The will remain at the disposal of the parties inmost of this arrangement and of procuring the register will be £25 for each vessel, and for that you can be entirely freed from the interference of Board of Trade, whether instigated by tradesmen work, by discharged servants, by Mr. Plimsoll friends, or by any officials who, seeing a ship is to be repaired, think they ought to have the credit of it. Should you wish to avail yourself of opportunity of protecting your interests you can do so by communicating with me. Yours truly, concluded by praying a decree of forfeiture of the ship.

H. J. LIVINGSTONE.

R. PHILLIMORE.—I grant the prayer of the writ of claim, and condemn the vessel to be sold to Her Majesty under sect. 103, sub-sect. 2 Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18

v. 104) with costs.

Deane asked against whom the decree for should be made, as some persons—i.e., the English owners of the ship—had been defendants by order of the court on 28th 876 (L. Rep. 2 P.D. 179, note). But of the so added only one had entered an appearance and he had taken no further part in the process.

R. PHILLIMORE.—The decree will be against defendants generally.

Solicitor for plaintiff, C. G. Toller, for Solicitor Board of Trade.

Solicitors for defendant Lows, Oliver and

Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1877.

THE RAFFAELLUCCIA.

Practice—Wages—Viaticum.

—seamen discharged in Great Britain, and recover wages in a suit against a foreign in which they served, are not entitled as to their passage money home, but will not it when their consul certifies they have or are about to go home.

their shipping in another vessel as seamen, for the voyage home, would disentitle them. as an action for wages, instituted by the Albergo Trapani and several seamen, the Italian brig Raffaelluccia. It ap-that the plaintiffs, with one exception, a named Volpa Gaetano, had been engaged 10th Feb. 1877, at the port of Castellamare, kingdom of Italy, to serve on board the luccia, on a voyage from that port to Hull, or one year, at certain specified rates of per month. Volpa Gaetano had been engaged on the 14th July 1877, at Hull, whilst the was lying at that port, on monthly wages; subsequently all the plaintiffs were discharged in the port of Hull, and on 28th Aug. commenced proceedings for their wages, also damages for wrongful dismissal, return of money by way of viaticum to enable them to return to their homes. The action was decided.

J. P. Aspinall for the plaintiffs.—We are entitled to a sum of money in compensation for the breach of contract, as our engagements were, with the exception of Volpa Gaetano, for a year certain, and not the ordinary monthly or voyage engagements used in British ships; and if we waive any special claim to compensation in that respect we are certainly entitled to be conveyed home at the expense of those who have broken the contract, so as to be enabled to enter into others on the same terms as this one. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Have you any certificate or notice from the Italian consul that these plaintiffs have returned or are about to return to Italy?] We are not provided with a certificate, as it is usual to grant a viaticum to foreign seamen discharged in this country.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There is no doubt the plaintiffs are entitled to the wages claimed, but the viaticum does not follow as a matter of course; it may be that the plaintiffs are shipped, or are about to ship, in other vessels in this country at the same or higher rates of wages. I shall not make a decree for anything beyond the amount of wages earned, unless I am satisfied that the men are really bond fide going or that they have already gone home. I shall make a decree for the wages claimed, and, on the production in the registry of a certificate from the Italian consul that the men have gone or are going home, for the passage money of the plaintiffs to their homes.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, H. C. Coots.

Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1877.

THE MARIE CONSTANCE.

Practice—Action in rem.—Service of writ of summons—Rules of Supreme Court 1875, Order IX., r. 10.

The rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature as to service of writ of summons in Admiralty actions in rem are to be strictly followed.

Service of the writ on the captain of the ship on board, and nailing of the warrant of arrest on the mast, are not sufficient notice of a suit in rem against the ship to all whom it may concern.

THIS was a cause of damage instituted by the owners of the brigantine George, against the Marie Constance, for damages arising out of a collision between those vessels in the Bristol Channel, at 2.30 a.m., on the 22nd July 1877. The cause was undefended, and now came on for hearing, on the affidavits of those on board the George at the time of the collision.

J. P. Aspinall moved, in accordance with the prayer of the statement of claim, for a decree for the amount of damages sustained and costs, and for the sale of the Marie Constance, and payment of the amount of such judgment out of the proceeds. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There appears to have been an irregularity in the service of the writ of summons in this case; it appears that it was not nailed to the mast of the vessel, in accordance with Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, Sc. 1, Order IX., r. 10; R. S. C., Dec. 1875, rule 6.] The writ was served on the master on board the ship, and the warrant of arrest was duly nailed on the mast by the proper officer of the court; previous to the passing of the Judicature Acts, it was not necessary to do anything more than nail the warrant to the mast, and that has been done, and that is notice to all whom it may concern of the suit, just as much as nailing the writ of summons could be; besides, the captain is the agent for all parties concerned in the ship, and service on him as custodian of the property is good service.

ADM.]

THE ROWENA—THE BRIDGWATER—THE ENGLISHMAN.

[A]

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—It is necessary that the rules should be strictly obeyed, and that has not been done in this case. Under the former practice of this court the warrant of arrest was in its form citatory, and therefore the nailing of it to the mast was a sufficient notice to all the world of the suit. That is no longer the case; the warrant of arrest contains no citation itself, that part of it is supplied by the writ of summons, which therefore is directed to be nailed to the mast in addition to the warrant of arrest. Service on the captain, even on board the ship, is not an alternative allowed by the rules of practice, nor sufficient notice to all parties who may have an interest in the ship; as, for example, mortgagees and others, between whom and the captain there is no privity, either real or implied. I shall not allow judgment to be entered until I am satisfied that the writ of summons has been served in the proper manner, and the proper times have elapsed for appearance and other proceedings subsequent to such service, but I will make the order as prayed, subject to the due service of the writ.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1877.

THE ROWENA.

Practice—Bottomry—Default cases—Evidence.

In all bottomry actions it is necessary that the original of the bond should be produced at the hearing.

This was an undefended bottomry suit, instituted against the Rowena, her cargo and freight. No appearance had been entered by the owners or others concerned in the ship.

W. G. F. Phillimore moved the court, on behalf of the bondholders, for a decree pronouncing for the validity of the bond so far as concerned the ship, and to order a sale of the vessel. In support of his application he referred to the copy of the original bond.

Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE inquired whether the original bond was in court, and on being informed that it was not, granted a decree for the validity of the bond, subject to the original being produced in the Registry; but said that he desired it to be known to all persons that the practice of the court, requiring the production of the original bond, and not merely a copy of it, at the hearing, is to be strictly adhered to as well in causes by default as in other cases, and that, if it were not, no decree of validity would in future be made.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Pritchard and Sons.

Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1877.

THE BRIDGWATER.

Practice—Ship under arrest—Discharge of seamen—Wages.

When a foreign ship is under arrest, and no appearance is entered for her, the court will allow the payment of wages and viaticum out of freight in the hands of a plaintiff in a bottomry suit, and order the discharge of the crew, although there is no suit instituted for their wages.

This was a motion on behalf of Messrs. Munn and Co., the plaintiffs in a suit of law against the United States ship Bridgewater, cargo and freight, for the discharge of the crew of that vessel, with the exception of those who were to leave to pay them the wages due out of the freight in their hands. They were holders of the bills of lading of the cargo, and entitled to delivery of it on payment of freight. They had not arrested the ship, and chartered freight due for the transportation of the cargo, and which remained in their hands, was insufficient to satisfy their claim on the bill of lading.

The seamen had not instituted any suit for their wages, but there were other suits in progress, and it was necessary, &c., pending against the ship, of which had any appearance been entered.

Clarkson, for the plaintiffs, moved the court for an order the discharge of the crew on payment of their wages due at the date of discharge, and a sum of money by way of viaticum to enable them to return home, the ship being a United States vessel. He pointed out that, whilst the suit was pending and no appearance entered, it was a perfectly useless expense keeping the crew on board, the plaintiffs, though holders of a bottomry bond, and having freight in their hands, could not get off the crew without the order of the court.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I shall make an order that the seamen be discharged, and shall give leave to the plaintiffs to pay them their wages in the hands of their discharge, and such sum as the American Consul shall certify for to enable them to return home, out of the freight in their hands, and to allow the plaintiffs the costs of this motion.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Sillard, Gilman, and Crowsley.

Nov. 12 and 13, 1877.

THE ENGLISHMAN.

Collision—Lights—Look-out—Fishing vessels—Contributory negligence—36 & 37 Vict. c. 17—Regulations for preventing collisions at sea, articles 5, 9.

Docked fishing vessels are bound to carry the lights prescribed by art. 5 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea so long as they are actually under way, and are only permitted to substitute the white mast-head light prescribed by the 2nd cl. of art. 9, when their nets are down and they are kept stationary by them.

The Esk and The Gitana (L. Rep. 3 A. & B. 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587; 3 Mar. Law Cas. 242) followed.

A vessel, though infringing the "regulations for preventing collisions at sea," will not be held to be in fault "within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 for a collision caused exclusively by the negligence of the colliding vessel, if the infringing vessel's regulations could not, under the circumstances of the case, have contributed to the collision. A close-hauled vessel exhibiting lights and signals required by the regulations for preventing collisions at sea was run into by a steamship, free, and whose duty it was to keep a proper look-out, did not see the lights of the fishing vessel or her lights till the moment of collision. Held, that as the proper lights ld not have been seen, neither their exhibition of an improper light, was seen, but which, by reason of look-out, was not seen, could by it have contributed to the collision, & that the vessel infringing the lights could not be "deemed to be the collision within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873.

be Fanny M. Carvill, The Duke of 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 478; L. Rep. 17; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129). The Carvill (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 565; 32 S. 648) explained.

tion for damages sustained by the L'Etoile in a collision between the British three-masted schooner the morning of the 27th Nov. 1876, less south of the Kentish Knock that the wind was about S.S.W. a o, the weather fine, and the tide was some dispute as to the time of the on board L'Etoile alleging it had at 7 a.m., when it was already day on board the Englishman stating place about 5.30 a.m.

ich was a decked (not "open") and was prosecuting a fishing in trawling in the early part of the he time of the collision was not her nets on board, and was under auled on the port tack, going about a half knots an hour, and preparing over again. She had no side lights time, having taken them in shortly ted a white mast-head light.

was running nearly before the er easy canvas, and had her side places. She never saw L'Etoile jibboom was between the lugger's of the Merchant Shipping Act, lations for preventing collisions at the argument principally turned, ing:—Sect. 17 Merchant Shipping 37 Vict. c. 885):

of collision it is proved to the court as is tried, that any of the regulations lision contained in or made under the g Acts 1854 to 1873 has been infringed, h such regulation has been infringed be in fault, unless it be shown to the court that the circumstances of the are from the regulation necessary.

for preventing collisions at sea in Council, 9th Jan. 1863:—

ider weigh, or being towed, shall carry steamships under weigh, with the ate mast-head lights, which they shall its and other open boats shall not be he side lights required for other vessels; lo not carry such lights, carry a lantern de on one side and a red slide on the 1 the approach of or to other vessels be exhibited in sufficient time to pre- hat the green light shall not be seen on the red light on the starboard side. and open boats, when at anchor or sets and stationary, shall exhibit a Fishing vessels and open boats shall, however, not be prevented from using a flare-up in addition, if considered expedient.

Nov. 12, 1877.—The cause came on for hearing before the Judge of the Admiralty Division, assisted by two of the elder brethren of the Trinity House as assessors.

Milward, Q.C. and Clarkson, for plaintiffs, the owners of L'Etoile.—The Englishman is alone to blame for this collision; it is obvious that they had no proper look-out. If there had been a look-out, he would have seen us sooner than he did, even if we had no lights exhibited. We were justified in carrying the light we did carry; we were practically trawling at the time. We were on the trawling ground, and going very slow, for the purpose of getting our trawl net overboard, and had already got the beam of it over the side. We were, therefore, within the meaning of the 2nd clause of art. 9 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, and had the light required by that regulation exhibited; but, even if the court should hold that we were not entitled at the time to exhibit that light, and should have had the ordinary side lights, or the light with slides, in substitution for them allowed by the 9th article for fishing vessels, it cannot be said that the absence of such lights caused or in any way contributed to this collision, or could have done so, so as to bring us within the scope of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, sect. 17. To do that, it must be shown that the condition of our lights contributed to the collision (The Magnet, ubi sup.), and that has not been done. The white light shown by us was visible at a greater distance than the ordinary side lights, and could have been seen if anyone on board the Englishman had been looking out. If the light had been seen, and from its nature misled the Englishman, and made her do or leave undone something, we might be liable. But a light which can be seen, but is not seen, cannot be said to contribute to a collision. Neither did the absence of our side lights contribute to the collision; if the white light was not seen, a fortiori the coloured lights would not have been seen. The mere absence of a light which might have been seen is not sufficient: the regulations require the lights to be exhibited from sunset to sunrise, but the absence of the lights just before the rising of the sun, when it is already broad daylight, could not in any sense contribute to a collision. So also, if there was on the deck of one of two colliding vessels no person but the helmsman, and he so situated as to be unable to see anything on either bow or ahead, the fact of the other vessel having no lights would not contribute to the collision. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Your contention is that sect. 17 assumes that the other party is doing his duty, and that if you show that, by his failure to do so, your neglect to observe the regulations as to lights could have no effect on his conduct, you do not come within the section.] That is so. Had they seen our white light, which was visible three miles off, they might have contended that, it signifying a vessel either attached to her nets and stationary, or a vessel at anchor, they went closer than they otherwise would have done; but, as they did not see it at all, its nature could have no effect on this.

Bull, Q.C. (with him Dr. Phillimore), for the defendants.—It is only necessary to establish the a vessel getting under way, or coming to an anchor, and then it is settled that she is bound to exhibit her side lights when she is not actually held by her anchor: (The Esk and The Gilana, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587; L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 350; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 242.) But to avoid the statute it is necessary for her to show that her neglect to comply with the regulations could not by any possibility have affected the collision, and she has not done so: (The Fanny M. Carvill, The Duke of Sutherland, The Magnet, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 478; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129; L. Rep. 4 A. & E. 417.) The statute applies to foreign as well as British ships, the other vessel in the case of The Magnet (ubi sup.) having been a foreign vessel, and she was held to blame under this section. The Fanny M. Carvill, in which case also the other vessel was a foreigner, was appealed to the Privy Council (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 565; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 646), and in the judgment of that court the true interpretation of the section is laid down: "Nor does it appear to their Lordships that the 17th section of the Act of 1873 can be taken merely to shift the burden of proof by raising a presumption of culpability, to be rebutted by proof that the non-observance of the rule did not in fact contribute to the collision, because the preceding (16th) section clearly shows that where the Legislature intended only to raise a presumption capable of being rebutted by such proof, it used apt words to express that intention. Their Lordships therefore conceive that, whatever be the true construction of the enactment in question, that which would take the case out of its operation, by mere proof that the infringement of the regulation did not in point of fact contribute to the collision is inadmissible." L'Etoile infringed the regulations in two respects, either of which might have contributed to the collision. She should, under the circumstances, have carried her coloured bow lights, and no others. She did not carry the bow lights and she did carry another crew on deck. While they were getting ready, those on board L'Etoile saw the Englishman a mile off on their weather about W. by S., and then they showed and a flare-up on board, but no head them by the English vessel, which French vessel, and struck her port side. There is no question as to whether seen or heard of before the time of the preliminary act, filed on behalf of the Englishman. According to what she was neither seen nor heard of until of the Englishman had run between her English vessel appears to have had her starboard quarter. There has been discussion on a very important and whether the English vessel had a proper look-out; if she had a proper and had seen the French vessel, of her duty, having the wind free, to get way. I have considered this matter various other parts of the case, with Brethren, and we have arrived at the conclusion that the fair result of the evidence into consideration all the circumstances what has been said, and the depositions of the witnesses—is that there was a want on board the English vessel; nor, as stoutly contended, nor could it be, is not the case.

But a question remains to be considered in respect to the liability of the French vessel for disobedience to the sailing regulations leads to the consideration of the 17th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 60) taken in connection with art. 9 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The ship read the section and article 9, and observing that L'Etoile was a fishing boat, proceeded: [It is therefore unless she was attached to her

DM.]

THE SPECIE ex SARPEDON.

[ADM.]

fish the means of apprising other vessels whether the vessel carrying them be stationary or in motion, in order that the coming or meeting of the vessel may direct her course in consequence, and the vessel carrying coloured lights and in a wider berth than she would give if that vessel carried an anchor light and was stationary. It is the principle which underlies these rules. It is possible, no doubt, to draw fine distinctions between vessels which have just actually raised anchor off the ground, and those which are in the very act of doing so; but practically the criterion as to the application of the regulation must be whether the vessel be actually held under the control of her anchor, or not. At the moment she ceases to be so she is in the very act of a vessel under way, and must carry the pointed coloured lights." I am of opinion that the principle of that decision applies to the present case, and that the rule of navigation to which I have referred has been infringed by the French vessel.

On this occasion it remains to be considered what is the legal result of this infringement on the part of the French vessel, it being, in our opinion, clearly proved that the collision in the present case was caused, as I have said, by a want of look-out on the part of the Englishman. The clause of the statute I have read has been the subject of very careful consideration both in this House and on appeal in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which affirmed the judgment which I delivered in the case of The M. Carvill (ubi sup.) There is no doubt a difficulty in applying the principles laid down in that judgment to all cases coming before the House; but, as I infer from the judgment of the Privy Council, the true principle to be applied is that the party guilty of the infringement of the regulation has the burden cast upon him of proving that it could not possibly have contributed to the collision. Therefore, I have to consider, looking to all the circumstances of the case, whether the absence of a side light could possibly have contributed to the collision. There was a want of look-out on board the Englishman, and the French vessel had a white light at least a mile distant at least; she had also a flare-up, and neither of them was seen, and those on board the Englishman knew nothing of the approach of the French vessel until the shock of the collision and the blow. It is not immaterial to observe that the blow was upon the weather side. Did, then, the absence of the red side light contribute to the collision? After much consideration, we think that it did not, and that the collision was the consequence of no look-out on the part of the Englishman, and that the side lights did not have been unseen as much as the mast-head light actually was. The absence of lights, in our opinion, could not have contributed to the collision; therefore, the clause of the statute does not apply, and the English vessel is alone liable for the damage, which, in our opinion, was unquestionably caused by the want of a look-out on the part of that vessel.

I pronounce, therefore, for the plaintiff.

The application of the defendant, execution stayed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lowless and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Shepherd and White.

Nov. 13, 20, and 27, 1877.

SPECIE ex SARPEDON.

Life salvage—Liability of owners of lost ship to contribute—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 459—Costs of notices.

Where lives and cargo have been saved from a ship, but the ship has been totally lost, the owners of the cargo are liable to pay salvage in respect of the lives, and the owners of the lost ship are not liable to contribute to such payment. (a)

Life salvage awards can only be made out of the res salvaged, and not against owners of a ship personally.

Where parties have been summoned to appear under Order XVI., r. 18, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, against whom no claim to contribution is made out, the parties so summoned are entitled to their costs.

THIS was a motion in a cause of salvage. The cause was instituted on behalf of the owners and crew of the Spanish screw steamer Calderon for services rendered by that vessel in saving the passengers and crew, consisting of eighty-one persons, and eight boxes of specie of the value of 28,000*l.* or 30,000*l.*, from the British screw steamer Sarpedon.

The Sarpedon had been in collision with the British steamer Julia David on the night of the 4th Sept. 1875, about eighty-five miles S.W. of Ushant, and had sustained such damage that the crew and passengers had taken to the boats at once. The Calderon had come up at daylight, and at the request of the master of the Sarpedon the passengers, and the specie on board the Sarpedon were taken on board the Calderon. The Calderon attempted to tow the Sarpedon, but after some hours the attempt was given up and the Sarpedon abandoned in a sinking condition. The value of the Sarpedon and her cargo before the collision was estimated to be about 250,000*l.*

The suit was commenced by an action in rem against the specie salvaged, the statement of claim setting out the salvage services to the specie and to the crew and passengers as well. The cause came on for hearing on the 16th Jan. 1877, and was partly heard, and adjourned, and on the 19th Jan. 1877, on the application of the defendants, leave was given to serve notice of a claim to contribution and for an indemnity, under Order XVI. r. 18, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, on the Ocean Steamship Company, owners of the Sarpedon. On the 5th Feb. the Ocean Steamship Company entered an appearance, and on the 12th Feb. the Court gave directions that the notice served on them should be treated as a pleading.

The owners of the Sarpedon, on the 27th Feb. 1877, delivered a statement in answer, denying their liability. To this statement the defendants replied on the 9th March 1877 by a joinder of issue, and the plaintiffs on the 14th March 1877, by denying the claim for contribution and demurring to that for an indemnity.

(a) It must not be assumed from this case that an action will not lie in personam in Admiralty to recover salvage. As long ago as 1801 Lord Stowell held, in The Hope and The Trelawney (3 C. Rob. 215), that a suit in rem was not necessary, but that he would issue a motion against the owners of salvaged property to show cause why they should not pay reward to the salvors. At the same time there is no instance known of a motion having gone against the owners where none of their property could be proceeded against through its loss.—Y

ADM.]

THE SPECIE ex SARPEDON.

[ADM.]

On the 10th April the judge decided to try the issue of fact before hearing the demurrer; and on the 5th May 1877 the hearing of the cause of salvage was continued, and an award of 4000*l.* made for the salvage services, to be paid in the first instance by the owners of the specie, but without prejudice to any claim they might have against the owners of the Sarpedon or the Julia David.

There was a cause of damage pending between the owners of the Sarpedon and the Julia David, which was heard in the Admiralty Division on 27th and 28th Nov. 1876, in which the judge of the Admiralty Division, on 29th Nov. 1876, found the Sarpedon to blame, but in which the Court of Appeal, on 7th Aug. 1877, after admitting fresh evidence at the hearing of the appeal on the 4th and 7th June 1877, reversed his decision, and found the Julia David alone to blame.

On the 13th Nov. the owners of the specie, in pursuance of notice, moved the court,

To determine how much of the sum of 4000*l.* awarded as salvage in this action on the 5th day of May 1877, and subsequently paid to the plaintiff by the defendants with costs, was for life salvage, and how much for salvage of specie, and to declare that the sum awarded for life salvage ought to have been paid to the plaintiffs by the owners of the Sarpedon parties in this action, and to order the owners of the Sarpedon to recoup to the defendants the sum paid by them in respect to life salvage and costs to the plaintiffs.

Dr. Phillimore, for the defendants, owners of the specie.—There is no obligation on the owners of this specie to pay life salvage; there is no privity between the owners of cargo and the passengers. The owners of a ship, though she is not herself salvaged, must pay for the salvage of the lives of those on board her: (The Medina, ante, p. 219, 305; L. Rep. 1 P. D. 272; 2 P. D. 5; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 918; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 779.) The fact that in that case the court was called on to consider whether an agreement between the captain of the vessel from which the life salvage was made and the salvor was equitable or not, makes no difference, for in every case of salvage there is an implied agreement to save for a reasonable sum. Here the master of the Sarpedon, acting on behalf of his owners invites assistance by hoisting signals of distress, and the Calderon in reply accepts the responsibility of salvaging, if possible, the ship as well as the passengers and specie. There is a perfect agreement, only the amount is not settled at the time, but, as often happens, is to be settled on shore when the service is complete; that was an agreement at least as binding on the owners as that which in The Medina (ubi sup.) the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of this court, considered inequitable indeed as to amount, but which they recognised as lawful by modifying it, and awarding what they considered to be a reasonable amount to be paid by the owners of the ship, though there was no property of theirs salvaged, and therefore no res capable of arrest.

Clarkson for noticees, owners of the Sarpedon.—An owner whose property is not salvaged, has never been liable to pay salvage. The Legislature intended to encourage life salvage, and did so by enacting in the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, sect. 459) that claims for life salvage should have priority over claims for salvage of property, and the property salvaged, whether ship or cargo, or both, is liable to remunerate such claim for life salvage (The Fusilier, Br. & Lush. 341; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 186; 12 L. Cas. O. S. 39, 177); and that, even when the cargo is recovered by its owners, and not by him who saved the lives of passengers (Camp v. Schiller, ante, pp. 226, 439; L. Rep. 1 P. D. 473; 2 P. D. 145; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 9; 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 714); therefore it certainly is liable in this case when salvaged by the same persons, and in the same operation. If the ship owners are to contribute, on what value is the contribution to be assessed when none of the property is salvaged? If a ship and crew are salvaged, but the cargo lost, it could not be held that the owners of the cargo should contribute in paying life salvage. In the case of The Medina (ubi sup.) the captain chose to bind, or attempt to bind, his owners by a bond given by him, expressly acting as their agent; but that is not the case here. The foundation of a suit of salvage is the maritime lien the salvors have on the salvaged property, and is not a personal action against the owners.

Phillimore in reply.

Cour. adm. mil.

Nov. 20, 1877.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The court has already awarded the amount of salvage remuneration due in this case, namely, 4000*l.* of specie recovered from going to the bottom of the sea, being part of the cargo belonging to the Sarpedon. The Sarpedon was abandoned at sea in a sinking condition, and has not been recovered, but eighty-eight persons were taken from on board her and saved by the Calderon, a Spanish vessel. It may be observed in passing that these persons were "persons belonging to the ship," within the meaning of sect. 459 of 18 Vict. c. 104—according to the judgment of the Privy Council in The Fusilier (ubi sup.). The owners of the specie have cited the owners of the Sarpedon, the lost vessel, and now call on them to contribute to the payment of the amount awarded by the court.

It was contended on behalf of the owners of the specie, first, that the master of the Sarpedon as agent for the owners contracted with the Calderon to save the lives in question. I am of opinion that this averment is not in accordance with the facts of the case.

Secondly, it was contended that the master of the Sarpedon was bound to contract, and did contract by implication, with the Calderon for the saving of these lives. In support of this proposition the case of The Medina (ubi sup.) was cited. The circumstances of that case were very peculiar. The captain of the ship, which had gone to the bottom of the sea, had contracted on behalf of 500 pilgrims who were on a rock just six feet above the water to have them taken off for the sum of 4000*l.*; the case was referred to this court from the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice. I considered it to be a salvage contract, and reduced the amount to 1800*l.* on the ground of the unreasonable nature of the amount extorted, as I thought, by the captain. That case cannot, in my opinion, be considered as supporting the demand of the owners of the specie in the case before me. I consider now a fixed principle of salvage law that, in the absence of any special contract between the ship or cargo, must be sought to found the liability of the owner of the cargo to payment of salvage remuneration.

It has been particularly asked if

M.]

THE PECKFORTON CASTLE.

[ADM.]

as well as the ship had been entirely lost, the owners of the lost specie have been liable to contribute to the salvage as it is argued that the owners of the lost ship are? The principle much discussed in the case of The Fusilier (sup.) already adverted to; but the case ergo ex Schiller (ubi sup.) appears to me to be a still more direct bearing upon the question now before me. In that case the Schiller was lost, but specie to a large amount, part of which cargo had been recovered by divers. I concluded the cargo was liable to pay salvage to persons who saved life from the wreck, and made an award accordingly. This sentence was appealed from and was reversed by two out of three judges of the Court of Appeal. Lord Justice Baggallay's judgment contains several passages which directly bear upon the present case. After affirming the liability of the cargo to pay salvage he says: "In the terms of section 1, it is a liability to pay a reasonable amount of salvage; but is this to be construed as a general personal liability to be enforced against owners under any circumstances whether the ship and cargo are lost or not, or as a liability limited to being enforced against and therefore limited to the value of the property, whether ship or cargo, saved from destruction?" After an argument in which this question is answered in the affirmative, he says: "Upon the consideration of several sections of the Act, I am of opinion that the liability to pay a reasonable amount of salvage to life salvors is imposed upon owners of ships as well as upon owners of the ship, and such liability is not a general personal liability enforced in any circumstances whether the ship and cargo are lost or not, but a liability limited to the value of the property saved from destruction."

I am of opinion that the owners of the lost specie are not personally liable to pay salvage, and therefore reject the prayer of the defendants to determine how much of the sum awarded was for salvage of life and how much was for salvage of specie, and to declare that the owners of the Sarpedon ought to pay to the owners of the specie the sum they have paid in respect of salvage.

The motion was accordingly rejected.

C. Clarkson, on behalf of the owners of the Sarpedon, applied for their costs.

R. PHILLIMORE directed the question of costs to be over.

27.—E. C. Clarkson.—The owners of the Sarpedon are entitled to their costs. The action on the part of the owners of the August to bring them in was wholly unnecessary and unreasonable. The question of law as to liability was not even new, but had been decided in ex Schiller (ubi sup.) Besides, so far as we are concerned in the litigation, we have won, and we are therefore, according to the ordinary rule, entitled to our costs.

Phillimore for the owners of the specie.—The question of law was new, and we were justified in asking to have the question of liability tried in all the parties concerned.

R. PHILLIMORE.—I have considered the question of costs in this case. The owners of the August were brought in at the request of the owners of the specie. On the 5th May I decided that an amount of salvage reward should be paid, and that it should be paid in the first instance by the owners of the specie, and condemned them also in the costs, reserving the question as to the liability of the owners of the Sarpedon to contribute to the payment of that award if the owners considered that they had a claim on them; there the matter rested till notice of the motion decided by the court last Tuesday was given. The court, on hearing that motion, decided that the owners of the Sarpedon were not liable in law to pay any salvage at all; and thus ended the attempt on the part of the owners of the specie to throw a portion of the burden of the salvage which they were primarily liable to pay on the owners of the Sarpedon. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the owners of the Sarpedon are entitled to their costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, owners of the Calderon, Clarkson, Son, and Greenwell.

Solicitor for the defendants, owners of the specie, Toller, agent for Hull, Stone, and Fletcher.

Solicitors for the noticees, owners of the Sarpedon, Pritchard and Sons.

July 30 and 31, 1877.

THE PECKFORTON CASTLE.

Collision—Sailing rules, Arts. 12 & 17—Conflict of rules—Proper manœuvres.

When a close-hauled ship is on the leequarter of another and sailing faster than one on the same tack having the wind free, and is consequently gaining on her, and their courses are such as to occasion risk of collision, Art. 12 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applies and not Art. 17; and it is the duty of the ship having the wind free to keep out of the way of the close-hauled ship.

Semble, the proper manœuvre for the ship having the wind free to adopt is—if the vessels have the wind on the port side, to port; and if on the starboard side, to starboard the helm.

THIS was an action in rem instituted by the owners of the German barque August against the British ship Peckforton Castle, for damages sustained by the August in a collision between the two vessels seven miles W. by S. from the Lizard about noon of the 7th July 1877. There was a counter-claim by the owners of the Peckforton Castle for the damages sustained by that vessel in the collision.

The wind was variously stated by the August to be about north, and by the Peckforton Castle to be about N.W.

The August was bound up channel on a voyage from Beaufort, South Carolina, to Bremerhaven, and was steering east with the wind free, going about four and a-half knots an hour.

The Peckforton Castle was bound down Channel on a voyage from Rotterdam to Cardiff in ballast, and was close-hauled on to port tack, making about five and a-half knots per hour.

When first observed the Peckforton Castle was on the starboard (lee) quarter of the August, and the August on the port (weather) bow of the Peckforton Castle, and the Peckforton Castle was overhauling and approaching the August on her lee (starboard) quarter. Neither vessel performed any evolution till the collision was imminent, each considering that it was the duty of the other to get out of the way. At the last moment the helm of the August was put hard a-starboard, and that of the Peckforton

Castle hard a-port, but notwithstanding these manœuvres the port bow of the Peckforton Castle came into collision with the starboard side of the August about the main rigging, doing so much damage that the August had to put into Plymouth to repair them.

July 30.—The cause came on for hearing before Sir Robert Phillimore, assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House as assessors.

The argument turned on articles 12, 17, and 18 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, which are as follows :

Art. 12. When two sailing ships are crossing so as to involve risk of collision ; then if they have the wind on different sides, the ship with the wind on the port side shall keep out of the way of the ship with the wind on the starboard side, except in the case in which the ship with the wind on the port side is close-hauled, and the other ship free, in which case the latter ship shall keep out of the way ; but if they have the wind on the same side, or if one of them has the wind aft, the ship which is to windward shall keep out of the way of the ship which is to leeward.

Art. 17. Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel.

Art. 18. Where by the above rules one of two ships is to keep out of the way the other shall keep her course, subject to the qualifications contained in the following articles.

E. C. Clarkson and C. Hall for the plaintiffs, owners of the August.—The case is governed by Articles 17 & 18 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea. The Peckforton Castle was an overtaking ship within the rule laid down in The Franconia (ante, p. 295 ; L. Rep. 2 P. D. 8 ; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 721). Had it been night she could not have seen our side-lights in consequence of our relative positions ; it was therefore her duty to keep out of the way, which she did not attempt to do till too late, ours to keep our course, which we did.

Butt, Q.C. and Myburgh, for the defendants, owners of the Peckforton Castle.—The case is governed by Articles 12 and 18. The vessels were crossing vessels ; it cannot be said that a vessel beating down channel is following one running up with a fair wind ; and it is the case of crossing vessels, where both vessels "have the wind on the same side ;" and therefore "the ship which is to windward" (the August) "shall keep out of the way of the ship which is to leeward" ; and by article 18, we were bound to keep our course, which we did.

Clarkson in reply.

July 31.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE, after consultation with the Trinity Masters.—It has been very properly admitted by the counsel on both sides that the real question at issue is whether Article 12 or Article 17 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applies to the facts and circumstances of this case. [His Lordship then read Article 12, given above, and proceeded:] Now, the wind, according to the Peckforton Castle, the defendant and counter-claimant, was N.W. by N., and according to the August was N. The Peckforton Castle was heading N.E. by N. a little before the collision, and N.E. at the time of the collision. The August was heading about E. It appears, therefore, that there was a difference of four points in the direction of their heads, and that both had to wind on the same (the port) side. The collision was a sliding blow—the Peckforton Castle, from leeward, striking the starboard beam of the August about her main rigging. Now, it is admitted that the August had the wind three points free. She says she saw the three points abaft her lee (starboard) beam. The question, therefore, is which of the two is to be considered as governing this case. The rule which says that a ship with the wind free shall get out of the way of one close-hauled override? or is it consistent with the other rule that "every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of such last-mentioned vessel?" That is a question on which I have with a certain amount of diffidence, notwithstanding the assistance which I have had from the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House. I am of opinion, however, that, although the vessel which the wind free was being overtaken by the faster ship, yet, as the faster ship was close-hauled, as both had the wind on the same side, the rule which governs this case is that which is contained in the 12th Article. I think the vessel which had the wind free ought to have had time to avoid a collision ; at all events, she ought to have taken any steps which were necessary to avoid a collision. I say again, I pronounce my opinion with great diffidence ; but, on the judgment I can form in this matter, it is that the rule which applies in this case is that a vessel with the wind free shall keep out of the way of one close-hauled. I must, therefore, pronounce the August alone to blame.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Thomas Cooper.

Solicitors for defendants, Gregory, Bonham and Co.

Dec. 7 and 8, 1877.

THE PHILOTAXE.

Collision—Rules for preventing collisions at sea. Arts. 17, 19, and 20—Thames Conservancy Rules, Arts. 29, Arts. A., F., H., & J.—Practice—Assessment of Damages—Disagreement.

A steamer manœuvring to come to an anchor in a place and manner such, that her regulations cannot be seen by an approaching vessel, is bound to give timely notice of her presence by showing a light or some other sufficient means.

Semble, the case of a faster-sailing vessel overtaking a slower steamer, in the ordinary course of navigation, is governed by Art. 17 and not by Art. 12 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

Semble, where the two assessors disagree, the court can call in a third, and, after submitting evidence already given to him, have the matter reargued before the three assessors.

THIS was an action in rem, instituted by the owners of the British screw steamer Carlotta, for damages sustained by that vessel in a collision with a Norwegian barque Philotaxe, which was in Sea Reach of the river Thames, on 11 p.m., on 5th Oct. 1877. There was a counter-claim in rem by the owners of the Philotaxe for the damages sustained by that vessel in the same collision. The action was brought in a county court, but was transferred to the high court.

At the time of the collision the weather was fine but dark, the wind about E.S.E. with the reach a moderate breeze, and the water high-water. The Carlotta was a screw steamer of 383 tons register, and was bound for London with a cargo of coals,

[L.]

THE PHILOTAXE.

[ADM]

a collision was about to anchor on the shore, a little below Thames Haven. For purpose her engines had been stopped, and was lying almost motionless with head ag to the north shore in a N.N.W. direction, and her regulation lights burning. Under these circumstances the Philotaxe, a barque of 389 tons, on a voyage from Christians to London, a cargo of ice, came up the reach under top-sail and foresail, running about three knots and before the wind, on a W.N.W. course.

From the relative position of the two vessels it was visible for the Philotaxe to see the regulation lights of the Carlotta, and the Carlotta's hull was distinguished till the Philotaxe was about a short length off, when it was seen right ahead, the helm of the Philotaxe was put hard a-lee. Those on board the Carlotta observed the light of the Philotaxe on their starboard side about a quarter of a mile off, and shortly afterwards her green light. The steam whistle of the Carlotta was—it was alleged on the part of the Carlotta, but denied by the Philotaxe—sounded, her engines were put on full speed ahead, and she ran hard a-lee, but the stem of the Philotaxe struck the starboard quarter of the Carlotta.

On the 7th Dec. 1877 the cause came on for hearing before Sir R. Phillimore, assisted by Mr. J. H. Elder Brethren of the Trinity House.

The argument turned upon the construction of Arts. 15, 17, 19, and 20 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, which are as follows:

15. If two ships, one of which is a sailing ship and the other a steam ship, are proceeding in such direction as to involve risk of collision, the steam ship shall keep out of the way of the sailing ship.

17. Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned

19. In obeying and constraining these rules due regard must be had to all dangers of navigation; and due regard must also be had to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case rendering a departure from the above rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.

20. Nothing in these rules shall exonerate any vessel from the owner, or master, or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper look-out, or of the want of any precaution which may be required by the special practice of seamanship, or by the special circumstances of the case.

A collision taking place in the River Thames at Yantlet Creek, the vessels were also subject to the Rules and Bye-laws for the Regulation of Navigation of the River Thames, made by the Conservators of the river. Those having reference to the present case were approved by the Council of 5th Feb. 1872, and of those Arts. F., H., J., and A. are identical with Arts. 15, 17, 19, and 20 respectively, except some verbal differences between the last-mentioned one in each case. (a)

Second, Q.O. and with him Phillimore for the plaintiffs, owners of the Carlotta.—This case governed by Art. 17 (Rule 29, Art. H.), is special, and therefore overrides Art. 15 (Rule 29, Art. F.), which is general. That the overtaking ship was a sailing vessel, and Third, Q.O. and with him Phillimore for the plaintiffs, owners of the Carlotta.—This case governed by Art. 17 (Rule 29, Art. H.), is special, and therefore overrides Art. 15 (Rule 29, Art. F.), which is general. That the overtaking ship was a sailing vessel, and

It may be noticed that in the authorized printed copy of the Thames Conservancy Rules the marginal note to Art. F., confines its operation, as far as sailing vessels are concerned, to "sailing vessels in tow;" but this itself is identical with Art. 15 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, given above.

Q. III., N. S.

the one overtaken a steamer, is unimportant. The Carlotta was not "proceeding" at all; she was lying stationary, so far as any motive steam power was concerned. Yet, not being anchored, she was on her voyage to London and was drifting with the wind and tide up the river, and so was, if "proceeding" at all, "proceeding" away from the Philotaxe, which was behind her, and not therefore so "as to involve risk of collision;" it was the "proceeding" of the Philotaxe coming up astern which involved the risk, and therefore the Philotaxe was an overtaking vessel. We must, under the circumstances, be considered as a vessel under way, because we were bound to carry the regulation lights (The Esk and The Gitana, L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 350; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 242) and "no others;" and so far as the relative courses of the vessels were concerned, we came within the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in The Franconia (ante, p. 295; L. Rep. 3 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 721), to determine what are overtaking vessels. Besides, we were in the position of a vessel quasi disabled, we were out of the fair way of the river, and just coming to an anchor, we could not go far ahead because of the shore, and we could not go astern on account of vessels anchored further out than we were. If the Philotaxe came inside vessels at anchor she did it at her own risk, and Rule 19 (Rule 29, Art. J.) applies to the case. We saw her at a time when she might, by proper manoeuvres, have avoided the collision, and we gave her notice of our position by whistling, which was all we could do under the circumstances. When we began to manoeuvre to come to anchor the river was clear; there was, therefore, no negligence on our part, but a proper observance of the rules. There could not have been a proper look-out on board the Philotaxe, or they would have seen us sooner than they did; had they done so they would have starboarded sooner, and kept clear.

Clarkeon (with him O. Hall) for defendants, owners of the Philotaxe.—We admit that the simple case of a slow steamer overtaken by a fast sailing vessel would be governed by Art. 17 and not Art. 15. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—You say that neither of those articles applies to the present case.] Neither of them, for we should not have been an overtaking ship except for the act of the Carlotta in slowing and stopping her engines. A steamer stopping and throwing herself across the river, for whatever purpose, does so at her own risk, and must not embarrass other vessels by her manoeuvre. The Carlotta had no proper look-out; had she had one she would have seen our lights at their full distance (two miles), probably before she began to come across the river; but she admits that she only saw them at a distance of a quarter of a mile. Had she seen them sooner, she could have straightened again, or even if, when she did see them, she had shown a light (The John Fenwick, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 201; L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 500; 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 322), we might have been able to get out of the way. The case is really under Art. 20 (Rule 29, Art. J.) There was no negligence on the part of the Philotaxe. We were lawfully navigating the river; we were running up nearly mid-channel, and we had a perfect right to go whichever side of the vessels at anchor we thought fit, and to expect that any vessel obstructing the navigation would give timely notice of it to us. Reverend good look-out, but we could not see this low black object on the water till close upon it. Had its presence been notified to us, as it might have been, we should not have come inside the vessels at anchor, and the collision would not have happened.

ADM.]

THE PHILOTAZE.

Milward, Q.C., in reply.

Dec. 8.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE, after consultation with the Trinity Masters.—There is in this case so decided a difference of opinion between the two gentlemen by whom I am assisted, and on whose opinion in nautical questions I repose great confidence, that I think it would be better before giving my judgment—which agrees with the opinion of one of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, but is contrary to that of the other—to ask for the attendance of a third Trinity Master, to give him an opportunity of considering the evidence already given, and then on a future day—without detaining the witnesses, and so incurring expense—to have the question re-argued before myself and the three Elder Brethren; but if the parties desire it I will deliver the judgment at once, in which, as I have already observed, one of the Elder Brethren concurs.

Counsel on both sides being agreed that it would be more convenient to have the judgment at once, without incurring the expense of a fresh argument, and of printing the evidence for the third Trinity Master,

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I feel the cogency of the objection of putting the parties to further expense, and I will give my judgment, in which one of the Trinity Masters agrees.

This is a collision which happened upon the 5th October in this year, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, and the place was a little below Thames Haven, in the river Thames. The direction of the wind was E.S.E. The vessels that came into contact were the Carlotta, a British steamship of 383 tons register, with a crew of sixteen hands, and the Norwegian barque Philotaze, of 389 tons register, manned by a crew of eleven hands. The Carlotta had a cargo of coals, and the Philotaze had a cargo of ice. The state of the weather, which is material in this case, is alleged and is proved to have been fine and clear—that is, it was a night on which lights were visible, though objects on the water were difficult to make out. A point in which the Elder Brethren are perfectly agreed is that the lights were all distinctly visible at a proper distance. The portions of the vessels which came into contact were the stem of the Philotaze and the starboard quarter of the Carlotta about twelve feet from the stern. The Carlotta's story is that she was about to drop an anchor on the north shore, and to the north of two vessels—a brig and a barque. It is important to notice that, according to her statement, she was to the northward of both these vessels. The evidence shows that she had passed the Philotaze some twenty-five minutes or half an hour before that vessel passed, as the evidence also shows she did pass, between the brig and the barque. It will be understood that, the Carlotta having gone to the northward, the Philotaze came between the brig and the barque; and the contention is that she had no right to do that, and that she ought to have kept to the southward, in which case there would have been no collision. Two facts are undisputed in respect to the two vessels: it is admitted that the Philotaze carried proper lights, and it is uncontroverted that the Carlotta was not visible, so far as her lights were concerned, to the Philotaze when she came between the two vessels and was an approaching vessel. It is admitted that the Carlotta had look-out on the starboard side aft, and that she took no other precaution than that of whistling. She said she was under a port helm, with her helm N.N.W. or North, making a little way up the river with the wind and tide; that her engines were stopped and her anchor ready to let go. In that state of things she sees the red light of the Philotaze with her sails set, about a quarter of a mile off, at the speed at which the Philotaze was coming, shown to have been between four and five knots an hour. The Carlotta stated that she caused her whistle to be blown, and as the Philotaze came on and exhibited her green light, the engines of the Carlotta were put full speed ahead, and her helm was put hard aport, and that the Philotaze came on and struck her on the starboard quarter. The contentions of the Philotaze is that she was proceeding W.N.W. with her proper regulation lights duly exhibited; that the Carlotta had passed her half an hour before at a distance of a ship's length, and that when, shortly before the collision, she came aware of the presence of the Carlotta, she adopted the right course, namely, putting her helm to starboard; but that nevertheless her stem came into collision with the starboard quarter of the Carlotta. She says the Carlotta was to blame for putting herself across the river at an improper time, without having regard to the circumstances; and the Carlotta contends that the Philotaze was to blame for not taking proper measures for getting out of the way, one being a vessel about to be overtaken and the other an overtaking vessel.

I do not think it necessary to decide whether Art. 17 does or does not apply to the collision of a vessel like that in which the Carlotta was. Art. 20 appears to me to be of great importance in the present case. The words of the article are these: "Nothing in these rules shall exonerate any ship, or the owner or master or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to make proper look-out." Then follow words which ought to be borne in mind: "Or of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen or by the special circumstances of the case."

Now, the court, with the advice of one of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, is of opinion that the Philotaze appears to have been carefully managed. She shortened sail when coming up the river, reducing her speed before reaching the Chapman Light; she gave a good look-out, and she exhibited her proper lights. The court is unable to see why she was bound to go to the south side of the river, and she was not at liberty to have taken any other course to that which the Carlotta had done. The court, therefore, is of opinion that the Philotaze is not to blame for going between the barque and the brig, taking the precautionary measures which she had done.

The Carlotta, it appears to the court, had passed the Philotaze, proceeded on up Sea Reach, and passed to the north of the two vessels described as above, the southernmost of which is proved where the Mucking Light showed the Carlotta appears to have gone to ward for the purpose of anchoring, afterwards from W.N.W. to North, the result as that she threw herself in the course of blowing. The night was dark but clear, proper look-out been kept, the lights of the vessel must have been seen in sufficient time to have allowed the Carlotta to have taken action which would have prevented the collision. I do not prescribe any act, but she might have shown a light, other means have indicated her position; alleged that she whistled and hailed; on the other hand, the evidence is that neither the whistling, if any, took place at too late to give any useful indication of the position of the vessel.

Looking to the peculiar circumstances of the case, the whistling, if any, took place at too late to give any useful indication of the position of the vessel. The whole, the court is of opinion, with the aid of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity, that the Carlotta is alone to blame, and that "neglect" some "precaution," which is required by the special circumstances of the case, therefore pronounce the Carlotta alone responsible for the collision, and an application of the plaintiffs, a stay of proceedings was granted.

For the plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.
For the defendants, Cooper and Co.

Tuesday, Dec. 4, 1877.

THE NATIVE PEARL.

in rem—Action in rem—Default of appearance—Reference—Joinder of defendants—Rules of Supreme Court, Order 13.

An action is brought in rem against a ship and the owners of certain shares therein claiming an account against the managing owner, and the latter makes default in appearing, the court will order such managing owner to be made a defendant, so that his accounts may be taken, and will give possession to the plaintiff if they hold a majority of shares; but on order, before the reference, a sale of the ship's shares to satisfy the plaintiffs' costs and sum found due at the reference.

An action brought by the owners of 64th shares in the British ship Native Pearl against that vessel, to obtain possession as against Nicholas Richardson the late managing owner, and to the said Nicholas Richardson, as late owner an account of his management. Richardson was served on the ship in the usual way Oct. 1877, and the ship was subsequently taken by the marshal, but no appearance was made by Nicholas Richardson or any other defendant's statement of claim alleged that Richardson, as managing owner, had possession of the ship and of her certificate of registry, that he had used her improperly, that his authority as managing owner had been revoked by the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were desirous of obtaining possession of the ship and the certificate, which Richardson refused to deliver up, and that Richardson had refused and neglected to render proper accounts relating to the management and earnings of the ship, and such accounts were still outstanding; and the plaintiffs claimed possession of the ship and of her certificate of registry, a reference of the accounts to the registrar and merchants, a sale of Richardson's shares in the ship, and payment out of the proceeds such sale of the balance found due to the plaintiffs upon the accounts and of the costs.

The action now came before the court on motion for judgment. In support of the statement of claim, an affidavit of the plaintiffs verified the facts stated in the statement, and further said that Richardson had failed to account for two voyages, and that his accounts for a previous voyage were deficient, that he had been dismissed from his post as managing owner, but that he declined to deliver up possession of the said ship or of her certificate of registry.

James P. Aspinall, for the plaintiffs, in support of the motion.—The plaintiffs being owners of a majority of the shares, are entitled to possession of the ship, and also to her certificate of registry, the delivery up of which I ask the court to order under the general power possessed by the court:

The St. Olaf, ante, p. 268; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 428.

The Frances, 2 Dods. 420.

But, as to the accounts, there is a difficulty. Richardson has not appeared, and, consequently, although the plaintiffs are entitled to a reference, they will have no accounts to refer; and, as Richardson is not a party, there is no means of making an order upon him to file his accounts. I ask the court to make Richardson a party to the action as defendant, and that the proceedings may be served upon him. By the rules of the Supreme Court, Order XVI., r. 13, it is provided that "no action shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder of parties. . . . The court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the court or a judge to be just, order. . . . that the name or names of any party or parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, be added." Here the presence of Richardson is clearly necessary in order to enable the court to settle the question of accounts. This course has already been taken in an action in rem in The Annandale (ante, p. 489; L. Rep. 2 P. Div. 179; 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 364). I also ask for sale of Richardson's shares to satisfy the plaintiffs' costs, and any sum that may be found due to the plaintiffs on the reference.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the ship and of the certificate of registry; and for this I pronounce judgment, and order that the ship and certificate be delivered up to them within three days after service of my order on Richardson, the late managing owner. I also order a reference of Richardson's accounts to the registrar, and that the name of such managing owner be added as a defendant, and that he be served with the proceedings, as provided by the rules. But with respect to the sale of the late managing owner's shares, I shall hold my hand until after the reference. It may be that he will pay the costs and what is found due without the necessity of selling the shares; or it may be that nothing will be found due to the plaintiffs, but something to the defendant; and that, whatever costs they are entitled to in respect of recovering possession of the ship, are counter-balanced by the amount due to the defendant.

H. OF L.]

STEEL AND ANOTHER v. THE STATE LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

[H.]

Solicitor for the plaintiff, H. C. Coote.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

July 19 and 20.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), Lords O'HAGAN, SELBORNE, BLACKBURN, and GORDON.)

STEEL AND ANOTHER v. THE STATE LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

ON APPEAL FROM THE FIRST DIVISION OF THE COURT OF SESSION.

Ship—Bill of lading—Warranty of seaworthiness—Exceptions—"Peril of the seas, however caused"—Open port.

In the absence of express words to the contrary, a bill of lading implies a warranty of seaworthiness, and all the exceptions in it must be taken to refer to a period subsequent to the sailing of the ship with the goods on board.

A ship sailed from America for Scotland with a cargo of wheat, and in the bill of lading "peril of the seas, however caused," was excepted. During the voyage the wheat was damaged by sea water. In an action by the indorsees of the bill of lading against the owners the jury found that the water obtained access to the cargo in consequence of one of the ports being insufficiently fastened, and on this finding the Court of Session entered a verdict for the shipowners, on the ground that the loss was covered by the exception in the bill of lading.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that, as in order to bring the loss within the exception it must be found that the ship sailed with the port in a seaworthy state, and the jury had not done so, a new trial must be had.

THE respondents in this case were the owners of a line of steamers trading between New York and Glasgow. One of their steamers, the States of Virginia, sailed from New York with a cargo of wheat. On the voyage, after the ship had been five days at sea, she was found to be leaking very fast, and it was discovered that one of the orlop-deck ports was unfastened. The wheat was much injured by the sea-water, and the appellants, who were the indorsees of the bill of lading, brought this action to recover the damage they had sustained.

The bill of lading contained these exceptions, "bursting of bags, risks of craft or hulk, transshipment, explosion, heat, or fire at sea in craft or hulk, or on shore, boilers, steam or machinery, or from the consequences of any damage or injury, however such damage or injury may be caused, collision, straining, or other peril of the seas, rivers, navigation, or land transit, of whatever nature or kind soever, and howsoever caused, excepted." The case was tried before Lord Young, when the jury found a special verdict in the following terms: "That the wheat was shipped to be conveyed according to the terms of the bill of lading; that the wheat was carried to Glasgow and delivered to the pursuers; that when delivered it was not in the like good order and condition in which it was shipped; that through the negligence of some of the crew one of the orlop-deck ports of the said steamship was insufficiently fastened, and that in consequence the said sea-water thereby admitted to the hold after the ship had been five days at sea; that as the said ship was loaded, the said port was situated above the water line, and that if properly secured by means of the screws thereto attached the port would have been watertight throughout the voyage; that the said sea-water was not admitted to the hold till the morning of Sept. 6, and for the first seven days of the voyage the weather encountered was substantially as set forth in the mate's log, which forms part of the evidence."

Upon these findings the First Division of the Court of Session, consisting of the Lord President (Inglis), and Lords Deas, Muir, and Stewart, entered a verdict for the shipowners (the defendants). The pursuers then appealed to the House of Lords.

Benjamin, Q.C. and Watkins Williams, appeared for the appellants, and contended that the whole bill of lading proceeded on the assumption that the ship sailed in a seaworthy condition, which it could not be if the port was imperfectly secured. All the exceptions depend on the implied warranty of seaworthiness, the breach of which was the cause of the loss. On the bill of lading the owner is prima facie liable, unless he can bring himself within the exceptions.

Cohen, Q.C. and J. O. Mathew, for the respondents, argued that it was impossible to go beyond the verdict of the jury, which does not raise the case of anything more than negligence on the part of the owners, which would be covered by the exception in the bill of lading of "perils of the seas, however caused;" some of the exceptions of the bill applying to risks which might occur during loading, before the ship had sailed on the voyage. The following cases were referred to, in addition to those cited in the judgments:

Merchants' Trading Company v. Universal Marine Insurance Company, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 431 (approved); also in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, at L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 596 and 31 L. T. Rep. N.S. 39; Stanton v. Richardson, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 2 Id. 283; 3 Id. 23; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 611; 2 C. P. 390; 27 L. T. Rep. N.S. 513; 30 L. T. Rep. 643, and in the House of Lords, 33 L. T. Rep. N.S. 193; Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 3 Id. 101, 393; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 581; Q. B. 2 App. Cas. 284; 31 L. T. Rep. N.S. 31; 32 L. T. Rep. N.S. 36; 36 L. T. Rep. N.S. 382; Macmanus v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 4 H. & N. 327; Carr v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 7 Ex. 707; Daniells v. Harris, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. L. Rep. 10 C. P. 1; 31 L. T. Rep. N.S. 38; Smith v. Kirby, L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 121; (a)

(a) Q. B. Div. Dec. 15, 1875.—SMITH v. KIRBY AND ANOTHER.—This was an action brought to recover damages for the loss of a cargo of maize, which in a collision whilst being carried on board the steamship the George Cairns. The case came on at the London Sittings after Trinity Term 1875. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to an order to an arbitrator as to the amount of damages. The arbitrator subsequently found £9353 11s. 6d. in favour of the plaintiff, and gave his certificate accordingly. The defendants thereupon obtained a rule of court requiring the plaintiff to show cause why the certificate should not be varied by reducing the amount of the damages to the aggregate amount of £8 per bushel of the George Cairns, on the ground that the defendants were not liable for more under the Shipping Act Amendment Act 18

OF L.]

STEEL AND ANOTHER v. THE STATE LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

Iday v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 B. & 3. 903.

the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, is some difficulty in this case by reason of urse which it has taken in the court below; think, when your Lordships consider the of the facts, so far as they appear, and guments which your Lordships have heard, cannot be much doubt as to the result at your Lordships should now arrive.

question arises upon the shipment of a conble quantity of wheat at New York in one of ste Linesteamers named the State of Virginia. resent appellants are the indorsees of the lading of that wheat, but, having regard to ovisions of the Bills of Lading Act, they are is indorsees, and they stand in the position original shippers; they have whatever right ion the original shippers had, and I may of them as if they had been in point of fact ippers of the wheat.

v, on the shipment of the wheat, a bill ng was given, and I will in the first place your Lordships' attention to that bill ling. It contains an affirmative portion, leo a portion which we may call a nega-ortion, or rather a portion which, by way ception and curtailment of some ante-liability created by the earlier portion, ours to protect the shipowners from t consequences. The affirmative part of ll of lading is this: it states that the in question, marked and numbered the margin, has been shipped, and is "to vered from the ship's deck, where the e-responsibility shall cease, in the like good and condition, at the aforesaid port .sgow." It is an engagement, therefore, y and to deliver at a certain port in this m the wheat so shipped on board. What is eaning of the contract created by those supposing they stood alone? I think there be any reasonable doubt entertained that a contract which not merely engages the ner to deliver the goods in the condition ed, but that it also contains in it a repre-on and an engagement; a contract by the having occurred without the fault or privity of ndants. The gross tonnage of the George Cairns 31 tons, and the difference between the amount the rate of £8 per ton and the amount awarded, xceeded interest from the date of the collision to nt at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

r, Q.C. for the plaintiff, showed cause, and on- that, on the authority of The Northumbria (3 Mar. ss. O. S. 314; L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 6), the plaintiff itled to interest on the aggregate amount at £8 of the ship's tonnage from the date of collision, at the above case was in accordance with the e of the Courts of Chancery and Admiralty, which allowed interest.

William, Q.C., for the defendants, in support of le, tried to distinguish the cases on the ground t the present case there was only a single claim, s in the other cases there were several claims, nounting to the full liability value.

COWAR (Blackburn, Quain, and Archibald, JJ.) t there was no distinction in the case, and that rt would adhere to the established practice, and t interest as claimed by the plaintiff, and discharged

Rule discharged.

Here for the plaintiff, Hollams, Son, and Coward. Here for the defendants, Ingledew, Ince, and y.

shipowner that the ship in which the wheat is placed is at the time of its departure reasonably fit for accomplishing the service which he engages to undertake and perform. Reasonably fit to accomplish that service the ship cannot be unless it is seaworthy. By "seaworthy" I do not desire to point to any technical meaning of the term, but to express that the ship should be in a condition to encounter whatever perils of the sea a ship of that kind, and loaded in that way, may be fairly expected to encounter in crossing the Atlantic. If there were no authority upon the question, it appears to me that it would be scarcely possible to arrive at any other conclusion than that this is the meaning of the contract. I took the liberty of asking the learned counsel for the respondents whether they were prepared to say that, if the owner of goods engaged room in a ship of this kind, and on bringing his goods alongside at the time the ship was ready for departure found that it was not seaworthy, he could not refuse the fulfilment of his promise to put his goods on board, and whether on the other hand he could not maintain proceedings against the owner of the ship for not having accommodation for his goods in a ship that was fit to carry them. I did not understand the learned counsel for the respondents to deny that the relative position of the owner of the goods, and the shipowners, was that which I supposed; that on the one hand the owner of the goods was entitled to refuse to put his goods on board, and on the other hand the owner of the ship did incur liability by not having a ship fit to fulfil the engagement he had entered into. But if that is so it must be from this, and only from this, that in a contract of this kind there is implied as part of the contract an engagement that the ship shall be reasonably fit for performing the service which she undertakes. In principle I think there could be no doubt that this would be the meaning of the contract, but having regard to authority it appears to me that the question is really concluded by authority. It is sufficient to refer to the case of Lyon v. Mells (5 East, 428), in the Court of King's Bench, in the time of Lord Ellenborough, C.J., and to the very strong and extremely well-considered expression of the law which fell from the late Lord Wensleydale, when he was a judge of the Court of Exchequer, and was advising your Lordships' House in the case of Gibson v. Small (4 H. L. Cas. 353).

That being, as I submit to your Lordships, the effect of the earlier part of the bill of lading, it then becomes material to consider, still upon the construction of the bill of lading, what is the effect of the latter part, the qualified or exceptional part of the bill of lading. It is not very happily expressed as regards its grammar and the collocation of the words, but I will assume in favour of the respondents that everything that is mentioned between the words "not responsible" and the word "excepted" is meant to be matter in respect of which there is to be no liability on the part of the shipowner. But, looking at all that is mentioned between those two termini in the bill of lading, it appears to me that everything which is mentioned is matter subsequent to the sailing of the ship with the goods on board. There is mentioned there "the bursting of bags" and "the following perils, risks of craft or hull"—which was found by the verdict, which I shall afterwards have to refer to, not to mean the risk of the ship herself—"transshipment, explosion, heat, or fire at sea in craft or hulk, or on shore, boilers, steam, or machinery, or from the consequences of any damage or injury thereto, however such damage or injury may be caused, collision, straining, or other perils of the seas, rivers, navigation, or land transit, of whatever nature or kind soever and howsoever caused, excepted." The only attempt to give any of these words a meaning which would refer them to what happened antecedent to or at the time of the departure of the ship was to construe the words "peril of the seas, however caused," so as to make them point to unseaworthiness ending in a loss at sea. But it appears obvious to me that what is here referred to as "peril of the seas" is, as described, something which happens on the transit, whether land or sea transit, and that, of course, does not commence till the ship leaves the port. Therefore, if it be the case, as I submit to your Lordships it is, that in the earlier part of the bill of lading there is an engagement that the ship shall be reasonably fit to perform the service which she undertakes, there is, in my opinion, nothing in the latter part of the bill of lading which qualifies that engagement.

H. OF L.]

STEEL AND ANOTHER v. THE STATE LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Now, that being the view of the construction of the bill of lading which I shall submit to your Lordships, let me proceed to apply it to what is found to have occurred in the present case. With regard to the pleadings, there is a statement in the 5th article of the condescendence of the pursuers (the appellants) that, "when the said vessel left New York she was not in a seaworthy condition in respect of one of her side ports being open, or, at least, not sufficiently secured or fastened to prevent the influx of water into the hold; and the said port was allowed to remain open, or insecurely fastened, through the gross carelessness of those in charge of the vessel, and the result was that water flowed into the hold through the said port; and so little care was taken of the cargo that there were about fifteen feet of water in the hold before the fact of the leakage was discovered, and it is the damage done to the wheat in consequence of this influx of water which forms the subject of complaint in the action." There is a denial to that, but it is explained that on Sept. 6th, when the State of Virginia was about 1100 miles from New York, one of the side ports was burst open to some extent by the heavy seas which she encountered, and water overflowed into the hold through the said port." That will show your Lordships sufficiently the character of the allegations on the one side and on the other on that point, and to that I may add, in the statement on the part of the pursuers No. 3, it is said, "when the said vessel sailed from New York on the said voyage she was unseaworthy," and to that there is a denial that the vessel was unseaworthy when she sailed from New York. There is one statement to which I will refer in the condescendence; but, upon the general averment and denial, the first plea in law for the pursuers, before the additional pleas, was this: "The pursuers having sustained loss and damage to the extent aforesaid through the unseaworthiness of the defender's vessel, and the failure of the defenders to fulfil the said contract of carriage and safe custody, are entitled to decree for the sum sued for with interest and expenses." The case came on for a jury trial in Scotland, and the jury for issue a special verdict, and that special finds—[His Lordship then read the special verdict as set out above, and continues]

Now, looking to this special verdict, and that alone for the facts with which we have to deal, it appears to me that if our attention were merely to that special verdict there would be great incertitude and ambiguity as to the facts really were. Whether the ship when she left New York was or was not in a fit condition to perform the service which she was taken with reference to these goods, whether she was or was not "seaworthy" in the sense I have used that term, was a question of fact in the view which I have taken of the case. The bill of lading, it was a question of fact whether it lies at the very root of this case. But the special verdict does not find in the special verdict, it is, any answer whatever to that question of fact. And although the Court in the first instance thought themselves able to apply the special verdict, and to enter upon it a judgment in favour of the defenders, and although the appellants in the first instance asked your Lordships to set aside that judgment and to enter a judgment in favour of the appellants, I think it has come to be admitted in the Court on both sides that, if the construction of the bill of lading be such as I have submitted to your Lordships it is, there is not here any finding of fact which would enable the Court to enter a judgment in either way. Therefore I fear, although I regret the result, that nothing can be done by your Lordships now but remit the case to the Court of Session in Scotland, and to direct that a new trial shall be had.

The judgment of the Court of Session was unanimous, but I do not see that in the course of fact there was any opinion expressed by the learned judges in that judgment which was at variance with the law as I understand it, and as I have endeavoured to submit to your Lordships. What I mean is this: I do not understand that any of those learned judges would have said that, if the question was, what was the construction of the affirmative part of the bill of lading, they would have placed that construction on any other footing than that on which I have endeavoured to place it. But what it was to me was the error of those very learned judges was this, that although at one part of the judgment they appear to recognise the construction which I have mentioned of the earlier part of the bill of lading, they seem afterwards to have been entirely occupied with the other part of the bill of lading, with the exceptions in it, and to have assumed that those exceptions would be sufficient to wipe out or to destroy what was the effect of the earlier part of the bill of lading. For this reason: I find that the Lord President in the earlier part of his judgment expressed thus: "I think it is conceded on the part of the shipowners, the defenders here, that this clause was to save them from any liability which might be applied in the obligation to deliver the goods in order and condition, except a loss which might arise from the unseaworthiness of the vessel. If they provided a seaworthy vessel, staunch, and strong, well manned, and fitted for the carriage of goods, the consequence of the manner in

H. OF L.]

STEEL AND ANOTHER v THE STATE LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

[H.]

Now, taking that to be so, it is settled that in a contract where there are excepted causes, a contract to carry the goods, except the perils of the seas, and except breakage, and except leakage, it has been decided that there still remains a duty upon the shipowner not merely to carry the goods, if not prevented by the excepted perils, but also that he and his servants shall use due care and skill about carrying the goods, and shall not be negligent. That has been determined in several cases, of which Phillips v. Clarke (2 C. B., N. S., 168) is the leading one, and that decision has been followed in several cases. In the case of Moss v. The Leith and Amsterdam Shipping Company (5 Macph. 988; 39 Jur. 546), decided in Scotland, the same thing seems to have been determined, namely, that where there is such an exception, if the shipowner or his servants are guilty of negligence producing the misfortune, they are liable on that account. I think myself that the right and proper way of enunciating it in such a case would be to say, if, owing to the negligence of the crew, the ship sinks while at sea, although the things perish by a "peril of the sea," still, inasmuch as it was the negligence of the shipowner and his servants that led to it, they cannot avail themselves of the exception. They may protect themselves against that, and they do so in many cases by saying, these perils are to be excepted whether caused by negligence of the ship's crew or not. When they do so, of course, that no longer applies. I think that exactly the same considerations would arise here as to the implied duty, which, though not expressly mentioned, arises by implication of law on the part of the shipowner, to furnish a ship really fit for the purpose. If that duty is neglected, and if in consequence of that neglect of duty the ship sinks, as it did in the case of Kopitoff v. Wilson, the shipowner is liable. If, as is alleged here, a port gives way, and the seas come in and wet the wheat, and if it is a consequence of the ship having started unfit that the mischief is produced, it seems to me to be exactly like the case of Phillips v. Clarke, where negligence not provided for by the contract occasioned the damage which it was said was an exception, but which the court determined was not an exception of which the shipowners could avail themselves, seeing that it was brought about by their negligence.

I perfectly agree with what has been said on the construction of the contract, that it does not at all provide for this case of an unseaworthy ship producing the mischief. The shipowners might have stipulated if they had pleased: "We will take the goods on board, but we will not be responsible at all, though our ship be ever so unseaworthy—look out for yourselves; if we put them on board a rotten ship that is our look out, you shall not have any remedy against us if we do." They might have so contracted, and perhaps in some cases they may actually do so. Or the shipowner might have said: "I will furnish a seaworthy ship, but I stipulate that, although the ship is seaworthy, and although I have furnished it, I shall only be answerable for the vitiation of your policy of insurance, if you have one, in case the ship turns out not to be seaworthy, and I will protect myself against any perils of the sea, though the loss should be caused by that unseaworthiness." They might have contracted in that way. I think that, when this contract is fairly looked at, it appears that they do not so much as to apply it to this case. I think that the here sufficiently expressed in the contract it will not be responsible or answerable for the sequences of a loss by perils of the sea, or the excepted perils, even though it may be produced by the negligence of the mariners, that they have done that, and that is what the Court of Session appear to have thought that it was necessary to say. But then it is below lost sight of the fact that if there was of seaworthiness in the ship—using the phrase, which is used as meaning if the ship make the ship reasonably fit for the voyage not been fulfilled—if there was a want of seaworthiness in that sense, and that want of seaworthiness caused the loss, the contract did not protect shipowners, and therefore it was incumbent on them to see whether there was a want of seaworthiness, and whether it did produce the loss. The point was raised on the first plea in law drawn, and then there were several additional pleas in which it was not raised, and it seems to have been lost sight of; and though the issue was so worded as to leave this open, it is so worded as to lead me to think that those who drew it were not thinking of this point, and when there came to be a verdict it was found that "one of the cargo ports of the said steamship was insufficiently fastened, and that in consequence the cargo was admitted to the hold after the ship had been five days at sea;" and then it was found that the port was about a foot above the water line, and that the weather had been "as described in the mate's log." Now I cannot see that this verdict finds either one way or the other, whether or no there was a want of seaworthiness, or reasonable fitness to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage or not. I think that is left ambiguous and uncertain. I quite agree with what has been said that it was a question of fact for the jury whether or not the vessel was fit to encounter those ordinary perils.

That being so, I think it is impossible to decide either way, and consequently the case must be remitted to the Court of Session to ascertain whether or no the ship was seaworthy at the time she sailed, and whether the loss was occasioned by the want of seaworthiness, if such there was.

Lord GORDON concurred.

Interlocutor appealed from reversed, and the case remitted to the Court of Session, with a declaration that there ought to be a verdict on the issue.

Solicitors for the appellants, Simeon, Watt and Simeon, for J. Henry, Edinburgh.

Solicitors for the respondents, Holliday and Coward, for Webster, Will, and Biddis, Edinburgh.

H. OF L.]

THE RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[Ex.]

not strictly be said to have been occasioned by the "act of God" at all. The interpretation put on the section by the court below puts a premium on the early abandonment of a ship in distress, and is unsupported by any authority. [Lord BLACKBURN referred to Coe v. Wise, 5 B. & S. 440.]

The Attorney-General (Sir J. Holker, Q.C.) and Greenhow, for the respondents, argued that the intention of the section was to protect piers, &c., by stringent legislation, which would make people careful; but the exception in the case of compulsory pilotage shows that the owner cannot be held liable when he has lost control of the ship, and it is a mere log on the water. The common law maxim is founded on the case of Paradise v. Jane (Alley, 27): See also

Rea v. Commissioners of Sewers, 8 T. Rep. 312;

Nichols v. Marsland, 2 Ex. D. 1; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 725.

There is a great distinction between obligations imposed by law, and those resulting from contracts:

Brewster v. Kitchell, 1 Salk. 136;

Bailey v. Crespigny, L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 180; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618.

The Legislature did not contemplate making the shipowner responsible for the act of God. [Lord BLACKBURN referred to Latliff v. Holmes, 4 T. R. 660.] See

Nugent v. Smith, 1 C. P. D. 423; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 827;

Nichols v. Marsland (ubi sup.)

The Act was intended to enlarge the remedies of pier-owners, not to extend the liability of shipowners except in cases of negligence, though it gives power to arrest the ship. It was passed in 1847, and there was no Admiralty jurisdiction in rem in such cases till 1861: (see The Clara Killam, L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 161; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O.S. 363.) The Merchant Shipping Act limits the owner's liability in cases of damage to life or shipping, and it would be a great hardship if he could be made liable to any amount for damage to a pier. A man may protect himself against a common enemy, such as the sea, even if he damages the property of another in so doing:

Nield v. London and North-Western Railway Company, L. Rep. 10 Ex. 4.

Shield was heard in reply.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

July 27.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, on the 17th Dec. 1872 the steamship Natalian was attempting, under stress of weather, to enter the Sunderland Docks, belonging to the appellants. While she was still in the open sea, about forty or fifty yards from the pier, she struck the ground, canted with her head to the south, and drifted bodily ashore. The crew were rescued from the ship by means of the rocket apparatus. The tide was low at the time, and as the tide rose the flood and the storm drifted the ship against the pier and caused damage to the amount of 2825l. 13s. The respondents are the owners of the ship, and the question is whether they are liable to pay this damage to the appellants.

The Court of Queen's Bench have held that the owners are liable. The Court of Appeal have been unanimously of opinion that they are not. The question depends upon the true meaning of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, which enacts that the owner of every vessel which timber shall be answerable to the undertakers is in this case to the appellants) for any damage done by such vessel or float of timber, or by any person employed about the same, to the wharf, dock, or pier, with certain further provisions. I need not at present mention.

The Court of Appeal has been of opinion, and I think rightly, that the injury was in this case occasioned by the voluntary negligence of the respondents, or of any person on board of or connected with the ship; that it could not have been prevented by any human instrumentality; but that it was occasioned by a vis major—namely, by the act of God in the violence of the tempest. Fearing himself on this, the Master of the Bella stated it is a familiar maxim of law that, where there is a duty imposed or liability incurred, as a general rule there is no such duty required to be formed, and no such liability required to be assumed, where the event happens through the act of God or the Queen's enemies, and that the court may well come to the conclusion that the act of God and the Queen's enemies cannot be meant to be comprised within the first limb of the section. The Lord Chief Baron stated that a man can be answerable, unless by express contract for any mischief or injury occasioned to another by the act of God. Lord Justice Mellish stated that the act of God does not impose any liability on any body. Mr Justice Denman states that the words of an Act of Parliament are not to be construed so as to impose a liability for an act done if the act is substantially caused by a superior power, and the law calls the act of God.

In my opinion these expressions are not more than is warranted by any authorities of which I am aware. If a duty is cast upon an individual by common law, the act of God will excuse him from the performance of that duty. No man is compelled to do that which is impossible. It is the duty of a carrier to deliver safely the goods entrusted to him; but, if in carrying them with proper care they are destroyed by lightning or swept away by flood, he is excused because the safe delivery by the act of God becomes impossible. However, a man contracts that he will be liable for the damage occasioned by a particular state of circumstances, or if an Act of Parliament enacts that a man shall be liable for the damage occasioned by a particular state of circumstances, know of no reason why a man should not be liable for the damage occasioned by that state of circumstances, whether the state of circumstances be brought about by the act of man or by the act of God. There is nothing impossible in a man contracting, or in an Act of Parliament enacting, which, on such an hypothesis, he has no right to do, or which he is by the statute ordered to do, namely, to be liable for the damage occasioned by the state of circumstances. Therefore, by the section to which I have referred, I mean that the owner of every vessel is liable, irrespective of whether anything has happened, which would at common law give a right of action against anyone, pay to the undertakers for damage done by a ship to the pier, I should not see any reason why the payment should not be made in the manner required by the section.

I cannot, however, look upon it

OF L.]

THE RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

as intended to create a right to recover in cases where before the Act there was no right to recover damages from the owner. The section and those which follow are in an Act which collects together common and ordinary clauses which it was the duty of Parliament to insert in private legislation authorising the construction of piers and harbours.

There was no special legislation intended to head for any particular place or any particular state of circumstances; and it would be difficult to suppose that, by means of ordinary and special clauses inserted in private or local Acts, Parliament, although it might well provide a simple and uniform procedure for recovering damages where a right to damages existed by common law, would create a new right of liability altogether unknown to the common law.

Under the common law, if a pier were injured by a vessel sailing against it, the owner might be liable, as on board and directing the navigation of the vessel, or if the ship was navigated by persons for whose negligence he was liable. But the owner was not liable merely because he was the owner, or without showing that those navigating the vessel were his servants.

In my opinion it was to meet this state of the law that this section was introduced. It proceeds, as it seems to me, on the assumption that damage has one of the kind for which compensation can be recovered at common law against some person—to say, damage occasioned by negligence or misconduct, and not by the act of God. The section relieves the undertakers from the investigation of a difficult one for them to pursue, whether the fault has been the fault of the owner, the charterer, or of the persons in charge. It makes the owner as the person who is always answerable by means of the register, and it provides that he shall be the person answerable—that is to say, the person who is to be sued, or is to be sued, for the damage done. It does not absolve the master or crew if there is any wilful fault or negligence on their part. They, in that case, may be sued as well as the owner, but if the owner is thus in the first instance held to pay the damage, where there has been negligent conduct on the part of the master or crew, the owner may recover over against the master or crew; and if the damage has occurred by reason of the act or omission of any person—if, for example, someone who had chartered the ship sent her to sea insufficiently manned, and the accident occurred in consequence of the owner might apparently recover from the charterer by reason of this act or omission.

The clause appears to me to be a clause of procedure, dealing with the mode in which a right of action for damages already existing shall be maintained, and not creating a right of action for damages where no right of action for damages had previously existed before.

It makes the part of the section relating to the liability of a pilot intelligible and consistent with the rest of the enactment. If a licensed pilot is engaged, the owner is not discharged from a possibility, but everything is left as it would be under common law. If a pilot was in charge of a vessel and the owner was at the same time directing the navigating the ship and did an act which caused damage, he would be liable at common law, but the Act leaves him so; but, in the same case, if, while the pilot was in charge and the owner was navigating the ship, the ship became unmanageable by tempest, the owner would not be liable.

I therefore think, although I do not concur in the reasoning of the learned judges of the Court of Appeal, that their conclusion was right, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed, with costs.

LORD HATHERLEY.—My Lords, I must candidly say that this case has given me much anxiety, and I have felt very great doubt and difficulty as to the proper interpretation to be given to this clause, which is, as it appears to me, somewhat inartistically framed. I cannot concur in the views expressed in the court below by some of the learned judges—on the one hand, that the damage which was done in this case having been caused by what is commonly said to be an accident, but is called in the language technically used in the law courts “the act of God,” namely, a storm, the owner of the vessel would be excused by the section of the Act of Parliament, however construed, from the consequences of that mischief. Neither can I think, on the other hand, that, as has been held by others of the learned judges in the court below, the clause in question refers only to cases where a vessel is in charge of somebody. I do not think, in the first place, that the grammatical construction of the clause will admit of that solution of our difficulties.

When we look at the whole construction of the clause, it appears to me that it speaks in the first place of damage done by a vessel, without regard to anyone being on board or not; then it speaks in the second place of damage done by any person employed about the vessel; and then it says that the master or person in charge of a vessel is to be liable if damage is done through his wilful act or negligence. And then the excepted case occurs of the pilot, because he had been compulsorily, and against any power of resistance of the owner, placed on board and in charge.

Now we have to see whether or not damage arising from the “act of God”—that is to say, in this particular case, a tempest—should be held to be excepted. There might be other cases which would be similar to this of a tempest; the vessel might have been driven on the pier in some other way, or have been injured and become unmanageable by lightning, or the like. However it occurred, if the pier was damaged by the vessel in the way which was called by the learned judges in the court below “the act of God,” is there anything in the Act of Parliament to say that the owner of the vessel shall not be responsible for the damage, but that there shall be an exception in respect of damage so caused?

One can easily conceive that the Legislature might think it desirable that those who provide this great accommodation for the navigation of the country—those who provide harbours of refuge and the like, which are greatly wanted in many parts of the coasts of the United Kingdom—should be indemnified against the possible damage which may accrue to their docks or other works, which they construct in discharge of the duties in question, and in the exercise of those powers which they have for making docks and other works. Those promoters might say: “We offer protection to the public at all times, ~~only~~ <sup>only</sup> protect us from having our works damaged, in consideration of the benevolent hospitality which we so afford." There is nothing, as it appears to me, utterly unreasonable in such a proposition reasonably carried out. It is quite true that many cases put by the learned judges in the court below are cases in which it would seem to be a very rigid enactment indeed, that damage to a very large and extensive amount, exceeding the value of the vessel itself, should be compensated by the persons whose vessel has done this damage being made answerable to make it good to the full amount of the damage done, which might even go to the destruction of the principal works, and might therefore result in the ruin of those persons whose vessel had been so forced against them. But, on the other hand, if there was any intention at all of giving a relief of this kind, which must be sought, of course, in the words of the Act, then, I apprehend, that the exception of a storm or tempest would be a very singular one, because it is a probable case to happen. There are, no doubt, many other ways in which damage might be done; but it is amongst the very probable causes that a storm or tempest should be the thing which would occasion the damage through the medium of the ship, which directly produced that damage. I do not think, therefore, that I can say, at all satisfactorily to my own mind, that, provided that the Act itself is clear and specific in its clauses, the party who caused the damage could be exempted because the damage was the result of a tempest, and not of what is ordinarily called his fault. Neither, as I have already said, by the grammatical construction of the clause, do I think that the clause is only to be applied in cases where some master, or other person, is in charge of the vessel.

Possibly the expression of Mellish, L.J. may come nearer to the mind of the Legislature. His notion of the general intent of the clause is this—that it points to something in which man is concerned. I think that is his expression. That is to say, in which human agency intervenes; and it was on that ground that he coincided with the views taken by the other learned judges. His idea of the whole intent and purpose of the clause was, not that the "act of God" was wholly to excuse the person liable under the enactment, if that liability once existed; but that the clause pointed to some act of man which was to take place, and not to a mere casualty occasioned by the tossing and driving about of the vessel from the effect of a storm upon the sea.

Finding that I cannot concur in the reasons given in the court below, of course one has to consider the construction of the clause. I think that, taking the view which was taken by the appellants in this case, the clause has been framed with probably extraordinary pressure and severity against the persons by whose vessels this damage would be created. No one can possibly deny that; and that severity seems to have induced some of the judges before whom the case has come, to think that it is impossible to attribute such an intention to the Legislature. Now I am afraid that it does sometimes occur that an Act of the Legislature cannot be carried out without very great inconvenience and hardship; but that is not because the Legislature intended it, but because the possibility of its occurrence had been forgotten. I think that such a circumstance may have occurred here, and produced the enactment that we have before us.

However, it is the opinion, I believe, majority of your Lordships, that, on the case being considered, this is not a case that can regard as struck at by this clause. What ground to be assigned for that is the view has been expressed by the Lord Chancellor whether any view may be adopted by any of your Lordships, similar to that taken in the court below, leading to the conclusion that the clause which here occurred is not brought within the meaning or purview of this Act, I shall not now to inquire. There being this difference of opinion, I shall not do what I might probably under other circumstances have thought it my duty to do in this case. I am unwilling to do anything that may be said that I cannot concur in the view expressed by my noble and learned friend Lord Woolsack, otherwise than with extreme doubt and hesitation.

Lord O'HAGAN.—My Lords, I need scarcely say that this is a difficult and embarrassing case, and that various views which have been adopted by the judges make this very plain, and I do not think that any conclusion at which we can arrive will be completely satisfactory.

The difficulty arises from the former of the two short clauses we are required to interpret. Your Lordships, exercising your appellate jurisdiction, act as a court of construction. You do not legislate, but you ascertain the intention of the Legislature; and if you can determine what that purpose was, you are bound to enforce it, although you may not approve of the motives from which it springs, or the object which it aims to accomplish.

Our daily experience demonstrates that the task of construction so understood, is not a very easy one. It sometimes involves the necessity of harmonising apparently inconsistent clauses, and making homogenous provisions cast together haphazard by various minds, differently constituted, and looking to different and special objects, without regard to the harmony of the whole.

Undoubtedly, if the first division of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 stood alone, it would seem to impose upon the owner under all possible circumstances liability to the undertakers for damage done by his vessel. That was the view reluctantly adopted by the Court of Queen's Bench, which we are asked to affirm in opposition to the judgment of the Court of Appeal; and your Lordships, on a full consideration of the whole clause are satisfied that that was the intention intended to be carried out, you have no alternative but to act upon it. No speculation as to inconvenience or even the injustice which it may accomplish, no consideration of the absolute innocence of the owner of the vessel, or of the inevitable nature of the accident which wrought injury, would justify a refusal to interpret the clause according to the design of the makers of it, if you clearly see that they meant the liability to be unqualified and universal, you are not to be on such grounds, to defeat that design, that the appellants shall not have the law. If the law as it stands is oppressive, it is for the Legislature which devised it to reform it; and certainly, in my judgment, your Lordships feel yourselves obliged to follow the ruling of the Court of Appeal, which will be needful, and should be.

I do not know the exact history of the legislation; but in this state of things the undertakers may perhaps have reasonably complained, that having performed great public service in forming a harbour, a dock, or a pier, they found themselves unable to recover for injuries confessedly done to works accomplished with much expense and labour, and of the utmost importance to the commerce of the country. And the Legislature may have fairly said that greater protection was due to them than they derived from the law which had grown up before that commerce and those works had been created, involving the necessity of safeguards theretofore uncalled for and unknown. Accordingly they made the owner, a person easily and always to be found, "answerable" as owner, and they dispensed with the proof of negligence, or any other proof, save of the fact of injury by the vessel, in all the cases contemplated by the Act. This was a great change, and a great addition to any security which the undertakers enjoyed at common law; and it was so, whether we give the clauses the universal force for which the appellants contend, or the more restricted application which, with the Court of Appeal, I think your Lordships should attribute to them. And in addition a further material advantage, unknown to the antecedent law, is afforded to the undertakers, who are empowered to "detain the vessel or float of timber until sufficient security has been given for the amount of damage done by the same."

These most important provisions supply the raison d'être for the legislation, whatever be the issue of the controversy as to the extent of its action; and I think it is vain to allege that we cannot suggest for it a sufficient motive without straining its effect to work confessed injustice.

I do not stay to consider the argument that this construction, approved by the Court of Appeal, should be rejected because a float of timber is not usually "in charge" of anyone as a vessel is, and that Parliament cannot, therefore, be supposed to have restricted its view to cases in which the instrument of injury is derelict. The first answer is that floats may be, and are often, "in charge," not perhaps of such a "master" as governs a vessel, but of other persons such as the statute takes care to mention. And next the statute deals with the vessel and the float of timber, quoad the "charge" of them, precisely in the same way, and the observations I have made as to the first will, if they have force, be equally applicable to the second.

My reasoning has not been precisely that of the Court of Appeal, and I have not based it altogether upon the legal doctrine as to the "act of God." That doctrine is founded on the view, which commends itself alike to equity and reason, that liability should not be imposed, unless in special circumstances, or where public interests imperatively require it, for consequences which are not wrought by human will or act, and for which no human being is morally responsible. There are exceptions to its application, as when a man voluntarily contracts, with full opportunity of anticipating possible results, to do that from doing which he is disabled by inevitable accident; or when, as is said, the repairing of seawalls is imperative by prescription, and is made impossible by such accident; and in various other cases.

And I am not at all prepared to say that the Legislature has not full power, if it is minded, to declare that a proceeding which is a proceeding it commands, shall not be justified in the commission of the one, or the commission of the other, because the result was caused by the "act of God." A law so providing we should be bound to enforce, and if in the case before us the statute was universally applicable, as the appellants contend, the unhappy shipowner must be submitted to its hard infliction. As I have said, I think that it is not so applicable, and in these circumstances it does not apply, and it seems proper to suggest that we should not use any phraseology of a doubtful character, or without the clearest and most unequivocal expression of legislative intention, or if we may any reasonably interpret that intention in any sense, assume that a maxim so ancient, so well established, and so accordant with the common sense of mankind, has been set at naught by the statute before us.

In the view I have presented to your Lordships the only case cited as touching the present (Deane v. Tovell, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 402 n.; L. Rep. Q. B. 10; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 482) has no application to it. There the vessel was not derelict, and the owner may properly have been held liable. But on the other hand, in the words of Pollock, B., "on the high seas she met with certain ruinous injuries, which compelled the crew to leave her, and she became derelict." And in my judgment she should be dealt with as if she had been abandoned at the Antipodes, and had been floating the ocean without a crew for years before she was driven against the pier at Sunderland.

On the whole I think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords, I have had a great doubt and hesitation in this case, and while considering it, changed the opinion I first held.

The question raised depends upon the true construction of three sections of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 43), namely, sects. 74, 75, and 76. These are parts of a set of clauses gathered together under one head, viz., "Protection of the Harbour, Dock, and Pier, and the vessels lying therein, from fire and other injury." I do not think any clause in the Act throws light on the construction of those sections, nor do I think that the construction put upon them will have any legal bearing on the construction of sections in other parts of the Act; though no doubt the principle of construction of statutes laid down by the House in the present case must have an important effect on those who have to construe any other enactment.

It is of great importance that those principles should be ascertained, and I shall therefore state as precisely as I can what I understand to be the decided cases to be the principles on which the courts of law act in construing statutes in writing; and a statute is an enactment in writing. In all cases the object of the law is what the intention expressed by the legislature is. But, from the imperfection of human language, it is impossible to know what the intention is without inquiring further, and as to the circumstances were with re-

[L.]

THE RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

words were used, and what was the object of using them had in view; for the meaning of words varies according to the circumstances with respect to which they were used. I know that I can make my meaning plainer by referring to the old rules of pleading as they are in cases of defamation. Those rules, though highly technical, were very logical. No one could enlarge the sense of the words that which they prima facie bore, unless supported by an inducement, or preliminary statement of facts, and an averment that the libel was published, or the words spoken, of and concerning those facts, and of and concerning the facts as connected with those facts. If these facts were proved, words which prima facie bore a very innocent meaning might become a very injurious one, and it was for the sake of saying whether, when used of and concerning those facts, they bore the meaning imputed by the defendant: (see the note to Craft v. Boite, 1 Ex. 246.) The Legislature has rendered it unnecessary to set out in the record the facts and the colloquium necessary to support an averment, they are now only matters of proof on the part of the defendant, but the principle remains.

In construing written instruments, I think the same principle applies. In the cases of wills the testator is speaking of and concerning all his affairs; therefore evidence is admissible to show all that he intended, and the court has to say what is the meaning indicated by the words, when used with reference to those extrinsic facts; for the same words used in two wills may express one intention when used with reference to the state of one testator's affairs and family, and quite a different meaning when used with reference to the state of another testator's affairs and family.

In the case of a contract the two parties are agreed as to certain things only, and therefore the admissible evidence is limited to those circumstances of and concerning which they used those words. (See Graves v. Legg, 9 Ex. 709.) In neither case does the court make a will or a contract such as the testator or the parties wished to make, but it declares what the intention indicated by the words used under such circumstances really is. This is as applied to the construction of wills, and is no new doctrine. As long ago as the case of 3 Rep. 7 Lord Coke says that it was the duty of the court to say "That for the sure and true interpretation of all statutes in general, be they penal or prohibitory, restrictive or enlarging of the common law, the things are to be discerned and construed."

First, What was the common law before the Statute? Secondly, What was the mischief and for which the common law did not provide?

What remedy the Parliament hath remedied and appointed to cure the disease of the mischief? and fourthly, The true reason of the remedy; and then the office of all the judges is always to make such construction as will suppress the mischief, and advance the benefit of the subject.

But it is to be borne in mind that the duty of the judges is not to legislate, but to declare the expressed intention of the Legislature, and that intention appears to the court in the words of the statute; and I believe that it is not disputed that Lord Wensleydale used to call "the rule" is right, viz., that we are to take the statute together, and construe it altogether, giving the words their ordinary signification, unless when so applied they produce an inconsistency, or an absurdity or inconvenience so great as to convince the court that the intention could not have been to use them in their ordinary signification, and to justify the court in putting on them some other signification which, though less proper, is one which the court thinks the words will bear. In Allgood v. Blake (L. Rep. 8 Ex. 160; 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 331), in the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber as to the construction of a will, it is said: "The great difficulty in all cases is in applying these rules to the particular case; for to one mind it may appear that an effect produced by construing the words literally is so inconsistent with the rest of the will, or produces so absurd a result, or inconvenience so great, as to justify the court in putting on them another signification, which to that mind seems a not improper signification of the words; while to another mind the effect produced may appear not so inconsistent, absurd, or inconvenient, as to justify putting any other signification on the words than their proper one, and the proposed signification may appear a violent construction. We apprehend that no precise line can be drawn, but that the court must in each case apply the admitted rules to the case in hand, not deviating from the literal sense of the words without sufficient reason, or more than is justified, yet not adhering slavishly to them when to do so would obviously defeat the intention which may be collected from the whole will." I think this is applicable, mutatis mutandis, to the construction of statutes as much as of wills, and I think it is correct.

In local and personal Acts there was found to be great inconvenience from the clauses being framed according to the views of the promoter's counsel, and, consequently, being very differently worded; and to remedy this a practice arose of obliging the promoters to submit their Bills to the revision of the chairman of committees, who required them to make their clauses in the form he had approved of, unless some good reason was shown for deviating from it. These forms of clauses were well known, and from the name of the noble lord who had originated them, were called Lord Shaftesbury's clauses. The research which my noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Gordon) has made, shows that in the Harbour Acts passed in 1846, the common form of the clause used was in the words of what is now sect. 74 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847, but, except in one instance, without a proviso similar to that at the end of it. That shows what the frame of the section would have led one to guess—that the proviso was an afterthought, added to the enactment after it had been adopted. The preamble of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act declares that it is passed for the purpose of comprising in one Act the clauses usually contained in harbour and pier Acts for the purpose of avoiding prolixity, and producing uniformity. And the clause in question is one of a series for the "protection of the harbour, docks, and pier, and the vessels lying therein from fire or other injury."

The first inquiry for your Lordships is, are we justified in putting a different construction on the words of an Act passed at the instance of particular promoters, from that which would be put on similar words in a general Act? To some extent I think we are. If in a local and personal Act we found words that seemed to express an intention to enact something quite unconnected with the purpose of the promoters, and which the committee would not, if they did their duty, have allowed to be introduced into such an Act, I think the judges would be justified in putting almost any construction on the words that would prevent them from having that effect. But I do not think it impossible that the Legislature can have intended in such an act to create a new liability to damages unknown to common law. The creation of such a liability would be in direct furtherance of the declared object of the enactment—the protection of the piers from injury. And in every construction of the enactment in question which I have heard suggested, the Legislature does impose on the owners a liability for damages occasioned by persons for whom they would not be liable at common law. At present I cannot see my way to limiting the words in this Act more than in a general Act; but I think that neither in a general Act nor in a special Act could the Legislature have meant to shift the burden of a misfortune befalling the owner of a pier from the owner of the pier, who at common law would bear it, to the owner of a ship wholly free from blame, and involved without fault of his in a common misfortune. It may have been said, but it can hardly have been intended to be said.

The common law is, I think, as follows: Property adjoining a spot in which the public have a right to carry on traffic is liable to be injured by that traffic. In this respect, there is no difference between a shop the railings or windows of which may be broken by a carriage on the road, and a pier adjoining a harbour, or a navigable river, or the sea, which is liable to be injured by a ship. In either case the owner of the injured property must bear his own loss, unless he can establish that some other person is liable to make it good; and he does not establish this against a person merely by showing that he is owner of the carriage or ship which did the mischief, for that owner incurs no liability merely as owner; but he does establish such a liability against any person who either wilfully did the damage, or neglected that duty which the law casts upon those in charge of a carriage on land, and a ship, or a float of timber, on water, to take reasonable care, and use reasonable skill to prevent it from doing injury, and that this neglect caused the damage; and if he can prove that the person who has been guilty of this negligence stood in the relation of servant to another, and that the negligence was in the course of his employment, he establishes a liability against the master also.

In the great majority of cases the servant actually guilty of the negligence is poor, and unable to make good the damage if it is considerable, and the master is at least comparatively rich, and consequently it is generally better to fix the master with liability; but there is also concurrent liability in the servant, who is not discharged from liability because his master also is liable. And in a very large number of cases the owner of the carriage, or ship, or float of timber is, or at least is supposed to be, the master of those who were negligent, and consequently the action is most frequently brought against the owner, and is very often successful. But the principle extends, not because the defendant is owner of the carriage, or ship, or float of timber, but because those who were guilty of the negligence were his servants.

I have stated the law with precision, because I think it important to have it stated before us. What I have said is really a statement of the law as laid down by Parliament in delivering the judgment of the Exchequer in Quarman v. Burnett (6 M. & W. 499), where the plaintiff was nonsuited because the defendant, though owners of the carriage, and seated in it at the time of the accident, were the mistresses of the coachman whose negligence caused the accident.

I have already said that in the ordinary case of things those employed about a ship are servants of the owners, and in Hibbe v. Lamb (L. T. Rep. N. S. 67; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 534; 21 Law Cas. O. S. 297) the majority of the Queen's Bench thought this was so much that that proof of ownership in the defendant was prima facie evidence that they were his servants, and on him to prove an exceptional state of things, in which they were not his servants. A case unlikely to occur in a harbour in which this would be disproved would be where the ship was in the hands of a shipwright to be repaired, and the shipwright's servants in moving her into the graving dock negligently did mischief. The owner would not there be liable at common law. Where the owner of a ship is compelled to take a pilot on board, that pilot is not the servant of the owner, and he is not liable for the negligence of that pilot; but the captain and crew remain his servants, and he is liable for their negligence, though a pilot is on board. Where no one is to blame—as where the damage is occasioned by an inevitable accident—the loss, at common law, is borne by the owner of the property injured. Lastly, the person injured has at common law no right of action against the owner of the ship, but only a right of action against the person to blame, and also, if he was a servant, against his employer.

Reading the words of the enactment, and bearing in mind what was the state of the law at the time when it was passed, it seems to me that the object of the Legislature was to give the owners of harbours, docks, and piers, more protection than they had before. It seems to have occurred to those who framed the statute, that in most cases where an accident occurs it is from the fault of those who are managing the ship, and in most cases those are the servants of the owners, but that there were some matters in every case must be proved, and that consequently there was a great deal of litigation incurred before the owner, though he really was liable, could be fixed; and with a view to meet this the remedy proposed was that the owner, who was generally really liable, though it was difficult and expensive to prove it, should be liable without proof either that there was negligence, or that the person guilty of negligence was the owner's servant, or proving how the accident happened; and this is expressed by the words of the owner "shall be answerable for any damage done by the vessel, or by any person employed about the same," to the harbour. It has been suggested that where a pilot was on board the mischief his fault, and the presumption on which rested—that mischief generally was due to the fault of the owner's servants—did not arise. This, therefore, was by the proviso taken out of the enactment, and restored to common law. As a possible case of the mischief being occasioned by the servants of a shipwright, or other substantial person, it seems to have been thought enough to give the remedy over provided by sect. 76. In the cases in which the fault was of some person not able to make satisfaction, for whom the shipowner was to common law responsible, it may have been thought that the cases would occur so rarely, or when they occurred would probably be of small amount, that the shifting of the burden from the owner of the property to the owner of the ship was not too high a price to pay for the sake of litigation and expense. The cases of a sudden misfortune befalling both ship and pier, the fault of either seems not to have been thought of. At all events, no exemption or remedy to take these cases out of the general enactment is given in express words.

[F. L.]

THE RIVER WEAR COMMISSIONERS v. ADAMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

On reading the words of the enactment, I ought to the conclusion that such was the scheme of legislation adopted by Parliament, the mischief being the expense of litigation, the remedy that the owners should be able without proof of how the accident occurred. And if it had been confined to cases in which the damages were under 50*l.*, and might be covered before two justices under sect. 75, it would be a scheme of legislation against a very serious objection could be raised.

Adams v. Lovell (L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 10; 27 L. T. Rep. 32) was a case under 50*l.* raised in the County Court and brought by appeal before the Court of Appeal Bench. Without bestowing so much consideration on the case as I have now done, I am in the judgment of the court, which I have long time thought right, and now dissent with great doubt and hesitation. It is impossible, however, to put any limit on the amount of damages, if liable at all under this statute, is jointly liable to his last farthing for the damage, however great and however small be the value of his ship. In the present case the amount is 2825*l.*, and if the statute transfers the liability for so large a sum from the defendants to the defendants, who have done nothing, there is no doubt it is a hard case on the defendants. There is a legal proverb that hard cases make bad law; but I think there is truth in the report that it is a bad law which makes hard cases.

And I think that before deciding that the enactment of the statute is such as to make hardship, we ought to be sure that such is the construction; more especially when the hardship affects not only one individual, but a whole have therefore examined the reasons given by various judges in the Court of Appeal, and wish to find that some of them would mind justify the conclusion to which they come in favour of the defendants. And we tried to find some ground which had in their notice in which I could advise yourships to uphold that decision, but for a long without success.

is quite true that where a duty is imposed

OL. III., N. S.

by law, if the performance of the duty is rendered impossible by the "act of God, or the King's enemies," the non-performance of the duty is excused. Paradine v. Jane (Alleyne 27), which is the case generally cited for that position, is one in which the point did not arise. That case was one in which it was attempted to argue that the duty imposed by the contract to pay rent was subject to a condition that the tenant was not evicted by the "act of God," or other vis major, and the really important part of the decision is, that where a contract is made which does not either expressly or implicitly except the "act of God," the courts could not introduce that exception by intendment of law; and that makes strongly against the supposition that in construing a statute where the Legislature might have expressed, but did not express, such an exception, the court should introduce it. And there is no case cited, and, as far as I can find, no case exists in which such a doctrine is laid down. In Latless v. Holmes (4 T. Rep. 660), where an Act, which received the Royal assent in May, by fiction of law related back to the first day of the session in October, it was held to apply to a transaction occurring between October and May. This was contrary to two legal maxims—that a fiction of law should never be used to work injustice, and that the law compels no one to do an impossibility; but the words of the enactment were too plain, and the court was obliged to work not only great hardship, but, in the particular case, great injustice. And in the present case, if the object of the statute be, as Pollock, B. says, and as I think it is, with a view to avoid expense and delay, that the owners of the docks are not to be put to the proof of negligence, or to the proof of how the injury was occasioned; that object would be, to some extent, less effectually carried out by importing such an exception, which is certainly not expressed in terms.

Still there remains the question whether the hardship produced, and the injustice worked, is so great as to justify the court in putting any meaning on the words, which they will bear in order to avoid it. Both Mellish, L.J., and, as I understand him, the Lord Chancellor, have thought that the words may be construed so as to make the owner of the ship answerable only for damages occasioned by the act of man, damages for which someone is answerable at common law.

I have already said that the question whether words can bear a secondary sense different from the usual one, is one on which different minds differ. In the present cases I feel no doubt that the hardship is great enough to justify putting a considerable strain on the words to avoid it; for I feel certain that if the enactment has the effect of shifting the burthen of a misfortune to the piers from the owners of the property, who at common law would have borne it, to the owners of the ship, who are free from all blame, it is an unforeseen consequence of the words used, which words, if the consequence had been foreseen, would not have been used in the enactment.

I cannot see anything in the language of the Act to justify what was the opinion of some of the Judges of Appeal, and is, I think, adopted by Lord O'Hagan, that it is confined to cases in which someone is in charge of the ship, even if that exception could save the defendants, which I do not think it would. The defendants were by their servants in possession of the ship when it drove on the bank. It did not strike the pier till the rising tide floated it in, but it was all one transaction; and when it struck the pier it was still a ship, and the defendants were still its owners. It is not necessary to inquire when and under what circumstances that which was once a ship becomes a mere congeries of planks to which the statute would not apply, further than to say this ship cannot be treated as having become such, nor was it in my opinion in any sense a derelict.

After much hesitation and doubt I am not prepared to say that this judgment should be reversed. I am not prepared to say that the words "damage done by the ship," as used in this enactment, necessarily include all expenses occasioned by misfortune in which the ship was involved in common with the piers. Mellish, L.J. (for whose judgment I have always had a degree of veneration, which his lamented death permits me to express more fully than I should think seemly if he still lived) seems to have thought that these words might bear the more restricted sense of injuria cum damno. The declared object of the enactment is the protection of the piers, &c., from "injury," which renders this construction a little less violent than if the object had been expressed to be to protect the harbour authorities from "loss." If they can bear that sense we ought to construe them so; and though I have had, and have, great doubt whether this is not too violent a construction, I am not prepared to reverse the judgment based on it; and consequently I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

LORD GORDON.—My Lords, the opinion which I have formed in this case differs from that at which the majority of your Lordships, and the Lords Justices of Appeal have arrived. I incline to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. Having regard to the great weight due to the opinions which have been expressed by your Lordships, and also to the great weight due to the opinions of the Lords Justices of Appeal, both in their collective and in their individual capacity, I feel great distrust in my own opinion. But I have considered the case with great anxiety, not only in consequence of the views entertained by your Lordships, but also in consequence of the case involving the construction to be put upon a section of an Act of Parliament—a matter which it is of importance should not be subject to conflicting views, founded upon supposed expediency; and I feel that it is my duty to explain more fully than I should otherwise do the grounds upon which I venture to dissent from the opinions which have been expressed by your Lordships, although I am aware that my doing so will have no practical effect upon the decision of this case.

The question relates to the application of the provisions of an Act passed for consolidating certain provisions usually contained in special Acts authorising the making and improving of harbours, docks, and piers. It is a British statute, applicable to Scotland as well as England, and its provisions are of much importance. The question in this appeal arises out of the leading enactment of the 74th section, which provides [His Lordship here read the section, as set out above, and continued:] The enactment is as follows: "The owner of every vessel causing damage to harbours, &c., shall be liable for such damage, except in the single case where the vessel is in charge of a pilot; and question which your Lordships have to determine is whether the words of the section are to be construed and applied in their ordinary common meaning, or whether there is to be inserted into the statute another exception than that express exception it contains, relieving the owner of a ship which at the time the damage occurred was in charge of a duly licensed pilot, as an exception, viz., from liability in cases where the damage was caused by the vessel through an "act of God," or, as it is sometimes expressed, vis major."

It may be mentioned that this section was the subject of consideration in the case of Dennis v. Towell (ubi sup). That case, which involved a sum under 50*l.*, was decided in the County Court, but was taken on appeal before the Court of Queen's Bench who dismissed the appeal. That previous decision of the Court of Queen's Bench prevented that court from reconsidering the section in the present case, but leave was granted by the court to appeal to the Lords Justices, which led to their Lordships' judgment on the subject of the present appeal to your Lordships' House.

The exemption from liability on the part of the owner when his vessel is under charge of a licensed pilot may, it appears to me, be regarded as strengthening the express words of the leading enactment of the 74th section, in accordance with the maxim exceptio probat regulam. The first consideration to be attended to in reading the clause judicially is whether the words are express, intelligible, grammatical, and unambiguous. I submit for your Lordships' judgment that they have all these characteristics. In my humble opinion the word "answerable" is merely an equivalent for "liable," and I think that their Lordships in the Court of Appeal were right with the expression as having that meaning. The argument was addressed to your Lordships at the bar, on the part of the respondents, to the effect that the word was capable of any other construction. I think the section in question itself shows that the words are synonymous. For it enacts that the owner shall be "answerable for any such damage," and likewise enacts that the owner, or person in charge shall, "also in cases of negligence be liable," and then it provides that "nothing contained shall extend to impose any liability for any such damage upon the owner" when the vessel shall be in charge of a pilot.

The next matter for consideration is the duty and province of a court of law in ascertaining what effect is to be given to a section, which in my opinion is of the plain and unambiguous character already mentioned, in expressing an opinion upon this question. Your Lordships are at present officiating, not in a legislative character, but as the Supreme Court of Appeal, in a judicial capacity.

Blackstone, the highest constitutional authority with reference to the law of England, when treating of statutes (vol. I., p. 89) "where the common law and the statute differ, the common law gives way to the statute," and again (p. 91) "If the

in a vessel to which the owner is not entitled to recover the value of the vessel, but only the value of the cargo, and the value of the cargo is not the value of the vessel.

It seems to me that the question is whether the vessel is a vessel of the Admiralty, or whether it is a vessel of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty.

It seems to me that the question is whether the vessel is a vessel of the Admiralty, or whether it is a vessel of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty.

The risk of causing damage to piers or harbours is, I apprehend, a risk which it would be competent to owners of vessels to insure against, although it might require an alteration of the existing form of policy, by making an express provision against the risk of such damage. The supposed impurity of the section thus resolves itself into a mere question of payment of money to cover the premium to secure against the risk of such damage.

Applying the authorities to which I have referred to the present case, I am humbly of the opinion, which I entertain with very great hesitation after the opinions which have been expressed by your Lordships, that the statute ought not to be construed as if it contained an exemption from liability for damage when it occurs by the "act of God." The words appear to me to be express and unambiguous, and the question is whether the vessel is a vessel of the Admiralty, or whether it is a vessel of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty, and the answer to that question is, that it is a vessel of the Admiralty.

SHIPPING CASES

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

THE ADMIRALTY CASE. (The "Hibernia" v. The "Hibernia")

.]

THE PECKFORTON CASTLE.

[CT. OF APP.

ard to Ramsgate Harbour, is acting of the Crown or as trustee for the position of the Board of Trade well defined; it is a committee of the Privy Council, and therefore actually Her Majesty's servant as the miralty is (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 2). The question has already been decided in the case of The Cargo ex Woosung. Law Cas. 239; Law Rep. 1 P. Div. T. Rep. N. S. 8). The commander of the vessel in that case was no more than the ordinary acceptance of the master of this tug is, and the vessel belonged to the Bombay Marine, certainly not in any sense more Her Majesty's servant than the Board of Trade is. The court upheld the decision of the Admiralty setting aside the agreement made by the master of the salving vessel, on the ground that he had no right to claim for the service of the ship, she being one of Her Majesty's ships. [JAMES, L.J.—The reason of that is that the vessel was despatched on a service by superior orders, and the master had no authority, express or implied, to make an agreement for services which he was not bound to perform.]

C. and E. O. Clarkson, for the respondents, called on. (a)

—I am clearly of opinion that this is a ship within the meaning of the Act. The Board of Trade merely took over the harbour, as an ordinary corporation would do, and used them for the same purposes, and it seems that the learned judge of the court below could have come to any other conclusion than the one at which he arrived. The respondents are dismissed.

L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The provisions only apply to fighting ships and to troopships and store ships, which are known as "Her Majesty's ships." These are employed simply for commercial purposes, as a tug and lifeboat attached to the harbour, performing the ordinary harbour services. They are neither under the special command of the Admiralty nor are they employed to perform the special services of the Admiralty.

L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is not necessary to give an exact definition of the "Majesty's ships," though I, and I think the other members of the court, consider that the word is used in the ordinary and natural sense, and not intended to include every case in the department of Her Majesty's service or to use a vessel for that service.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

for the appellants, owners of the Hard and Sons.

for the respondents, owners of the Keon, Son, and Greenwell.

that similar decision, to which no reference was made by the court below, is that of The Helen, where it was held that a vessel employed for service and the property of or hired by the Customs, but armed at the public expense, was entitled to prize salvage on the recapture of the vessel on the scale allowed to private ships, and not on the scale allowed to Her Majesty's ships. See also the Bellona (Hd. 68).

Jan. 21, 22, and 25, 1878.

(Before JAMES, BAGGALLAY, and THESIGER, L.JJ.)

THE PECKFORTON CASTLE.

Sailing regulations — Crossing — Overtaking — Articles 12 and 17.

Sailing ships on converging courses are crossing ships within article 12, and the faster sailing vessel is not an overtaking ship within article 17, if at no time was she abaft the beam of the slower vessel.

Hence, it is a well-recognised and useful rule of navigation that in all cases a sailing vessel going free should give way to one close-hauled.

Quare, what is the proper definition of an overtaking ship or steam-vessel.

The Franconia (L. Rep. 2 P. Div. 8; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360; 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 295) doubted.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the judge of the Admiralty Division by which, on 31st July 1877, he had found the German barque August alone to blame for a collision which took place between that vessel and the British ship Peckforton Castle, off the Lizard Point, in the English Channel, on 7th July 1877. The circumstances of the collision and the judgment of the court below will be found fully reported ante, p. 511; 2 P. D. 232. It will be observed that the Court of Appeal took a different view of the facts of the case from that taken by the court below, finding that the Peckforton Castle never was on the quarter of the August, whilst the court below took it to be admitted that she was so, but nevertheless arrived at the same conclusion and found the August alone to blame.

Jan. 21.—MILWARD, Q.C. (with him E. O. Clarkson and C. Hall) for appellants, owners of the August. The facts of the case have been found in our favour, and this court will not disturb the finding of the court below on the facts. We are found to be an overtaken ship, and therefore we come within the rule laid down by this court in The Franconia (L. Rep. 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360; 3 Asp. Mar. L. C. 295); but the judge, instead of following that case and deciding that rule 17 applied, considered that the latter clause of rule 12 governed the case, because both ships had the wind on the same, the port, side, and that therefore, because we were to windward, it was our duty to give way. This cannot however be the proper construction of that clause. The article has been speaking of "crossing" ships, and therefore "they" in the last clause can only refer to the case of crossing ships before mentioned, and cannot include our case, which has been found not to be one of crossing ships, and in one which is not mentioned at all in the rules before art. 17, which gives the rule to govern the case of overtaking ships under which we come. [BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The case of The Franconia (ubi sup.) was one of two steamers; may not the case of two sailing ships be different, as art. 12 only applies to sailing ships, and therefore could not have been applied to The Franconia (ubi sup.)?]. That cannot make any difference in the ratio decidendi of The Franconia, as the test given there the invisibility of the lights of the overtaken ship, would preclude the overtaking vessel from knowing whether she was a steamship or a sailing vessel. [JAMES, L.J.—But the overtaking ship is herself a steamer, is it not unimportant whether the overtaken one is a sailing ship or a steamer, as in any case, either by art. 16 or art. 17, the overtaking ship is to get out of the way? Art. 16 appears to be perfectly general so far as a steam and sailing vessel are concerned, and so long as the steamship, approaching at whatever angle, cannot see the lights of the approached vessel she must conclude that she is a sailing vessel and act accordingly; but that rule would not apply in the case of an approaching sailing vessel which may come within the provisions of art. 12. THESEIGER, L.J.—Is it not possible that a vessel may be in one sense overtaking, but yet practically a crossing ship? I submit not. The great benefit of the rules is their simplicity, and for that purpose ships are divided into three classes: (1) vessels meeting end on, (2) vessels crossing, and (3) vessels overtaking. The first class is defined by the Order in Council, issued subsequent to and explanatory of the rules on the 30th July 1868, only to include those cases where each vessel sees both side lights of the other; the third was defined by this court to include only those cases where one vessel saw neither side light of the other, leaving for a definition of crossing vessels those cases where one side light only is seen. If it is now said that a vessel may be both overtaking and crossing, it will lead to great confusion, and put persons in charge of ships in grave doubt as to the course they should pursue under circumstances where prompt and decisive action is required. Moreover, whatever the court may consider to have been our duty under the circumstances, it will consider that there was at least an equal neglect of duty on the part of the Peckforton Castle in deliberately keeping her course till she ran us down, in a case where there was any doubt as to the application of two rules, and will vary the decree so far as to find both the vessels to blame for the collision.

Butt, Q.C. (with him Myburgh) for respondents, owners of the Peckforton Castle.—The fair result of the evidence is that the Peckforton Castle was not an overtaking ship at all, but a crossing vessel. It is impossible, if she had been in the position and at the distance at which it is stated by the August that she was first seen, that she should in the time have come up to the August. She must, both from the evidence and also from the physical necessities of the case, have been not on the quarter but before the beam of the August when first seen, and therefore the rule laid down in The Franconia (ubi sup.) does not apply. Had the course of the Peckforton Castle been, as the appellants contend, about E.N.E., it is obvious that we should not have been on that tack at all, as we should have had a fair wind to pursue our voyage on the other tack. It cannot be said that a vessel bound down channel is overtaking one bound up. If our story as to the direction of the wind is correct, and the relative position of the vessels is as stated by the appellants, the collision could not have happened at all. If their story as to both the direction of the wind and also the relative positions of the vessels is correct, it would have been impossible for us to have caught her up in the time; therefore the only possible solution of the collision is that both the direction of the wind and the relative position of the vessels are correctly stated by us, and therefore that we were crossing ships.

Milward, Q.C. in reply.

Curr. adv. vult.

Jan. 25.—BAGGALLAT, L.J.—Shortly after on the 6th July last, the German barque August and the British ship Peckforton Castle came in collision in the English Channel near the line the barque was passing up channel, on a voyage from South Carolina for Bremerhaven, and the ship was proceeding in ballast from Rotterdam to Cardiff. An action of collision was at once instituted by the owners of the August against the owners of the Peckforton Castle, which was met by a counter-claim of the latter. The action came on for trial, and on the 31st of the same month the judge of the Admiralty Court held that the August was alone to blame. From that decision the present appeal is brought.

It is the common case of the appellants and of the respondents, that at the respective times when each vessel was first seen from the other, the August was on the port tack heading E., or nearly so, and had the wind at least three points free; it is further agreed that for at least half an hour before the collision the Peckforton Castle was close-hauled and on the port tack, but there is much conflict of evidence as to the direction of the wind and the compass course of the Peckforton Castle, and also as to various other circumstances of the case. It was however admitted in the Admiralty Court, and has been admitted in the argument before us, that the real question at issue is whether the 12th or 17th article of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea is applicable to the circumstances of the present case. The appellants assert that the Peckforton Castle was first seen from the August about 11.30 a.m.; that the wind was then, and continued until after the collision to be, from N. to N.W. by W.; that the Peckforton Castle when so first seen was three points on the starboard quarter of the August, distant about three miles, heading between E.N.E. and N.E. by E., that is at an angle of from two to three points from the course of the August, which was E.; that each vessel continued on her course until just before the collision, the speed of the Peckforton Castle being considerably in excess of that of the August; that under such circumstances the Peckforton Castle was an overtaking vessel within the meaning of the 17th article of the regulations, and, as such, bound to keep out of the way of the August, but neglected to do so. The respondents on the other hand insist that the wind was from N. to N.W. by N.; that the Peckforton Castle, during the forenoon had been on the starboard tack heading W. by S., went on the port tack at twelve o'clock, and that thenceforth her course was between N.N.E. and N.E. by N., or inclining at an angle of from five to six points to that of the August, and that the August was first seen from the Peckforton Castle about 12.15, being three points on the port bow and distant about a mile and a half; that under such circumstances the August and the Peckforton Castle were crossing vessels within the meaning of the 12th article of the regulations, and the August being to windward was bound to keep out of the way, and, not having done so, was alone to blame. The respondents further assert that at no time was the Peckforton Castle three points on the starboard quarter of the August as seen from that ship, and that, if she was in that position, with the wind from N.W., a collision between the two vessels could not possibly have occurred if each had kept to her course.

Q.B. Div.]

WILSON AND ANOTHER v. GENERAL SCREW COLLIERY COMPANY.

[Q.B.]

abaft her beam; and therefore the question whether the definition is accurate or not is not of importance in the present case. I desire however to state that, without expressing any dissent from the definition—which I am bound to say I at the time thought unsatisfactory, though it was not in my opinion necessary for the decision of The Franconia case—I am unwilling to be considered as giving it an unqualified assent; the arguments in the present case have caused me to entertain some doubt upon the subject, and I desire to reserve to myself the right of reconsidering it when the circumstances of any case before me may require it. It is occasionally a matter of considerable difficulty to decide whether a particular vessel is crossing, overtaking, or approaching the other, within the intent and meaning of the several articles of the regulations; and the court, whose duty it is to decide such questions, must act upon the view taken by it of the special circumstances of the case under consideration, and with a due regard to the several matters provided for by the 19th article, as well as those recognised rules of navigation which, though not expressed, or fully expressed, in the regulations, are nevertheless of general application.

JAMES, L.J.—I also desire to add that the result of the argument induces me to come to the conclusion that I doubt whether the definition laid down in The Franconia case can be laid down as a rule to be so generally applicable as appears to be intimated in that case.

THE SINGER, L.J.—With regard to the rule referred to, after what has fallen from the other members of the court, I have only to add that I am not prepared, in a case like the present, to express the view that it ought not to be adopted as a convenient rule of navigation. I only desire to reserve my assent to it until the occasion arises when it will have to be considered more fully whether the test given by it can be in all cases equally applied.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, owners of the August, Gregory, Rowcliffe, and Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, owners of the Peckforton Castle, Cooper and Co.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by J. M. LELY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, Dec. 21, 1877.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J.)

WILSON AND ANOTHER v. GENERAL SCREW COLLIERY COMPANY.

Steamship—Contract for fittings of—Breach—Measure of damages—Recovery for loss of use of ship.

The defendants, having contracted to supply the plaintiffs' steamship with a propeller shaft and other fittings, supplied useless fittings, whereby the plaintiffs, besides being obliged to replace the fittings, lost the use of the ship for nine days.

Held, that the lost earnings of the ship for the nine days ought to be included in the damages recoverable.

This was an action for breach of a contract by the defendants to supply the plaintiffs' ship with certain fittings.

The facts appear from the written judgment of Cockburn, C.J.

Day, Q.C. and Edwyn Jones for the plaintiffs.
Murphy, Q.C. and J. C. Mathes for the defendants.

Cur. adv. h.

Dec. 21.—COCKBURN, C.J.—This was an action tried before me at the last assizes for the county of Surrey. It was an action brought against the defendants, who are a company engaged in the repair of steam vessels, for breach of a contract to furnish a new brass liner to the propeller shaft of a steam vessel of the plaintiffs, and a new brass stem brush; the allegation being that the articles were not constructed, or fitted in a workmanlike and proper manner, in consequence of which they became useless, and the plaintiffs were obliged to replace them, whereby they were not only put to expense, but lost the use of the vessel for nine days; and they claimed damages not only for the cost of the new brass liner and stem brush, but also for the loss sustained by the detention of the vessel. The jury found for the plaintiffs as to the machinery having been defective; and it is not disputed that judgment should be given for the cost of the new machinery amounting to 157*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; but it was contended by the defendants that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover damages for the loss sustained by the vessel remaining unemployed during the time that the new machinery was being made and fitted.

Evidence was given by the plaintiffs that the earnings of such a vessel as the one in question would be from 26*l.* to 27*l.* a day. No evidence was adduced to show that the vessel would have been actually so employed; but no objection was made on this score, the contention of the defendants being based on the general proposition that the damages claimed were too remote. I reserved the question for future consideration, and it has since been argued before me by counsel.

On consideration I am of opinion that the damages claimed are not too remote, and are within the rule laid down by the Court of Exchequer in Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341. It is there said: "Where two parties have entered into a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as either arising naturally, according to the usual course of things, from the breach of contract itself, or such as may be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of the breach of it." It seems to me that when machinery is ordered for a going steam vessel, it must be in the contemplation of the parties that the purpose of the thing is to enable the vessel to resume her employment, and that, in the event of the machinery being defective, the defect will have to be made good before the vessel can be again employed; that the detention of the vessel is the probable result of the breach of contract.

I therefore hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the loss sustained by the detention of the vessel, amounting to 234*l.*, and machinery. The judgment will be reversed for 3911. 15s. 6d.

STEEL v. LESTER AND LILEE.

[O.P. Div.]

Judgment accordingly. The plaintiff, Lowless, Nelson, and the defendants, Thomas and

N PLEAS DIVISION.

I. BITTLESTON and J. A. POORE, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Dec. 7, 1877.

GROVE and LINDLEY, JJ.)

L. v. LESTER and LILEE.

FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Revanant—Partnership—Negligence—and captain of—Transfer of control profits—Registration—"Managing
'39 Vict. c. 88, s. 4, sub-sect. 4.

ship, who, by a verbal agreement, control over her to the captain, but re-to one-third of the net profits, and y to the agreement registered as mer" under the Merchant Shipping Act for the negligent management of the captain, although occurring poyment under a charter-party of r knew nothing. (a) (13 East, 238) distinguished.

ted by a County Court judge.

action brought by the plaintiffs, at Spalding, against the defendant, as the owner, and the defendant Lester, of a sloop called the Anne of the amounting to the sum of 50l.
the plaintiffs' wharf by the sloop from her moorings under circumstances, in my opinion, showed negligence of Lilee in the management of the sloop being given that damage to the plaintiffs in consequence of judgment against both the defendant with costs. From this judgment, appeal on the part of the defendant, the defendant Lester alleges that the negligence of Lilee.

ing upon this point proved before me:—

Lester, who is a merchant living business at Stoke-upon-Trent, in afford, purchased, in the month of April, 1875, a sloop called the Anne, which was duly transferred registered in his name as the owner, afterwards registered as the owner, under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1875.

Three months after the defendant Lester, the vessel, he traded with her on his own account, employing the defendant Lilee as his agent, paying him standing wages. At the same time from his purchase of the sloop, he verbally with the defendant Lilee me upon the facts which are held to be that had not given up all his right and control, but intended to preserve his right as managing owner. In the United States law, it is held that where a master has the control of the vessel, and no other facts show that the master owner pro hac vice, is not liable for his negligence or the negligence of the crew engaged by him. (See Somer v.

Sp. 542; 20 Amer. Rep. 718.)—Ed.

that he should take the ship wherever he chose, on condition that he (Lester) should have a third of the net profits. Lilee was to be at liberty to go to any port, and to take in any cargo he chose, and to refuse any cargo. He was also to engage the men, and Lester had no control over the vessel. Lilee was to render to Lester accounts of his profits from time to time, and this state of things continued till after the collision, Lester selling the vessel in 1876. Lester, on cross-examination, could not say what his profit was on this particular voyage. He said the account given him by Lilee was somewhere, but he had not got it with him. In the month of March 1876 the defendant Lilee entered into a charter-party, a copy of which is set out in the Appendix hereto (No. 1).

The sloop arrived at Spalding in due course, and after partially discharging the cargo the vessel remained several days at the said port, and whilst so remaining the damage was occasioned to the plaintiffs' wharf, by reason of the negligence of the defendant Lilee.

The defendant Lester was not consulted by the defendant Lilee as to the contract for taking the said cargo, and never saw or heard of the charter-party till after the commencement of the action;
he was not present at the port of Spalding when the vessel arrived there, or at any time thereafter during her stay at the said port, and he did not take any part in the management of the said vessel during her voyage to, or whilst she remained at the said port. The men employed in navigating the said vessel (as on all previous voyages during the existence of the agreement between the two defendants) were hired and paid by the defendant Lilee, who found all stores required for the said ship, and paid to the defendant Lester one-third of the profit realised by the voyage.

I gave judgment on the 5th July 1877, and a copy of such judgment will be found in the appendix (see Appendix No. 2).

The question for the consideration of the court is whether, under the circumstances above stated, the defendant Lester is legally liable for the negligence of the defendant Lilee in the management of the said ship whilst lying at the port of Spalding, which occasioned the damage to the plaintiffs' wharf for which this action was brought.
If he is so liable my judgment is to stand; but if he is not, then the judgment is to be against Lilee only, and judgment to be entered for the defendant Lester, with costs.

JAMES STEPHEN, Judge.

8th Aug. 1877.

APPENDIX No. 1. COPY CHARTER PARTY.

London, 21st March 1876.

It is this day mutually agreed between Lilee, master, for and in behalf of the owner of the good ship or vessel called the Anne of Gooite, burthen per register 44 tons, now at London, and Lawes Chemical Manure Company (Limited), 59, Mark Lane, London, that the said ship, now being tight, staunch, and strong, and every way fitted for the voyage, shall with all convenient speed sail and proceed to wharf or dock as directed by shipper, free of dock dues to vessel and there load in regular turn with other sea-going vessels (barges not to be termed sea-going ships) from the factors of the said merchants a full and complete cargo of manure in bags and or bulk at merchants' option, about 80 tons, the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the vessel at merchants' risk and expense, notwithstanding what she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, apparel, provisions, and

O.P. Div.]

STEEL V. LESTER AND LILEE.

[C.P. h

furniture, and being so loaded shall therewith proceed to Spalding or Gainsboro' as ordered on signing bill of lading and deliver the same on being paid freight at the rate of 6s. 6d. per ton of 20cwt. and 21s. gratuity. Merchant paying Welland dues on cargo. If cargo be shipped in bulk the bags to be carried free of freight (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation, of whatever nature and kind soever during the said voyage always excepted); the freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo in cash. Four working days are to be allowed the said merchants (if the ship is not sooner despatched) for discharging the said ship, and all days on demurrage over and above the said lying days at 30s. per day.

Penalty for nonperformance of this agreement, estimated amount of freight.

(Signed) JOHN LILEE.
21-3-76. Pro. Lawes and Co., THOS. PHILO.

APPENDIX No. 2. COPY JUDGMENT.

In the case of Steel v. Lester and Lilee, which was heard at the last court, the action was against Lester the owner and Lilee the master of the ship Anne, which, having broken from her moorings in the river at Spalding in April last, damaged a wharf belonging to the plaintiffs to the extent of fifty-seven pounds six shillings and threepence, and the action was brought to recover the sum of fifty pounds, the residue being abandoned in order to bring the case within the jurisdiction of this court.

In order that either of the defendants should be liable in this action, it must be shown that there was negligence on the part of the defendant Lilee, who had the control of the vessel. And I am of opinion, on the evidence, that he was guilty of negligence in the way in which he fastened the ship after he had removed her from her first moorings, and also because he left the ship under the charge of an incompetent man, who might have avoided the accident if he had attended to what was said to him by the witness Mitchell.

No serious opposition was made to the amount of the damage alleged to have been caused by the ship, and I have therefore no difficulty in giving judgment in the action for the amount claimed.

With regard to the other defendant, the owner of the vessel, it was urged in his behalf that, though he was at the time of the transaction the registered "managing owner" of the vessel, that the relationship of master and servant did not then exist between him and Lilee so as to make him liable for his misconduct, and I was pressed with the case of Fraser v. Marshall (13 East, 238) as supporting that view. That decision, however, when I had the opportunity of reading it over carefully, I found to have been given in reference to a state of facts widely differing from those before me. In that case the owner had actually by a charter-party demised the ship for a time certain to the master at a certain rent, but here there was nothing of the kind: a verbal arrangement at the most, and that very loosely proved. And it is clear to me that the owner must be held liable in this case either as standing in the position of Lilee's master or else as his partner under the peculiar arrangement he said he made with him. And, for the purposes of the present action, it is of no importance which position he filled, as in either case he would be responsible for Lilee's acts while in conduct of the vessel.

Judgment, therefore, for fifty pounds and costs must be entered against the defendants.

F. T. Streeten for the appellant.—The agreement between Lester and Lilee does not constitute a partnership, a mere sharing of profits is not enough: (Ross v. Parkyn, 44 L. J. 616, Ch.) There is nothing here to show a partnership. Further, there is here no relationship of master and servant, or employer and employee, or principal and agent. [LINDLEY, J. cited Frederick Driver (L. Rep. 5 Ch. D. 45; 46 L. J. 48), GROVE, J. cited Lock v. Fowler (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 272; 41 L. J. 99, Ch.)] If a person is injured by the negligence of another, a third person is not liable unless the relationship of master and master can be shown to exist between the third person and the person doing the injury, or unless the act from which the damage arises is done by the express authority of the third person: (Venables v. Smith 46 L. J. Q. B.) Here nothing of the sort is shown. The case finds that Lester knew nothing of the charter-party. [LINDLEY, J.—He may have everything in Lilee's hands, and yet Lilee is the captain.] In Milligan v. Wedge (12 Ell. 737) the buyer of a bullock employed a licensed drover to drive it from Smith's; the drover employed a boy to drive it, and the boy was occasioned to the bullock through the negligence of the drover in the driving of the boy. There the licensed drover was held to be liable, if anyone. That case shows that you can only go one step beyond the person who does the injury. [GROVE, J.—In Milligan v. Wedge (ubi sup.) Lord Denman says: "The plaintiff has not done the act complained of, but employed another who is recognised by the law as exercising a distinct calling." It is not necessary here that Lester was owner of the vessel; it is found by the case that he had no control over the vessel; Lilee had the possession and entire use of the vessel; but not the whole profit. Although there is no letting here, there is a parting with the control of the vessel, and therefore the case of Fraser v. Marshall (13 East, 238) is in point. The case of Fowler v. Lock (L. Rep. 7 C. P. 272; 41 L. J. 99, Ch.) is also in point. [GROVE, J.—My opinion in that case went on the fact that the plaintiff gave up the use of the cab for the day, and therefore the cabman was the bailee of the cab, and not the servant of the owner, at all events.] And I distinguished the case of Porter v. Porter (6 E. & B. 207; 25 L. J. 331, Q. B.) on the ground that the judgment in that case proceeded on the relation and responsibility of the cab proprietor to the outside public. [LINDLEY, J., in his judgment in Fowler v. Lock (ubi sup.), says: "Suppose that in a country in the time of Charles I., the owner of a horse and cart contracted to allow another man to use the entire and exclusive personal use and control of them, at so much a week or so much a month for the purpose of carrying, for the driver, passengers or goods within the limits of the country, but without reserving to himself (the owner) the right to direct where the horse and cart should go, provided they were used within the limits and were returned within the agreed time; what in that case would have been the relation between the parties? I do not think I thought it would not have been that of master and servant, but would have been that of owner and bailee." Here there is an agreement with the control of the vessel to the sailors, hired the sailors, paid them, discharged them, could go wherever he pleased.]

Div.]

STEEL v. LESTER AND LILEE.

[C.P. Div.]

so in all cases of partnership, where there is a permanent partner.] He cited also dis v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (4 Exch. 244.)

say for the respondent.—This is really a question of fact, upon which the decision of the County Court judge is equivalent to the verdict of a jury. He decides upon the evidence there was not here an absolute demise of property, as there was in Fraser v. Marsh (ubi sup.) [LINDLEY, J.—Have not we to decide whether his conclusion was right, on the facts?]

GROVE, J.—Here the evidence is uncontradicted, and we have to decide what is the legal inference to be drawn from these undisputed facts.] Then, Lester is registered managing owner, under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 88, subsect. 4. If the contention of the appellant is right, Lilee, and not Lester, would be so registered. [GROVE, J.—This is an action brought, Lilee against Lester, but by a third person, therefore distinguishable from Fowler v. Lock (sup.)] That is so. The registration of Lester as managing owner is an admission of the fact of the kind that the vessel was under his control.

[GROVE, J.—The case finds that he had control over the vessel. But that may be in the same way as a master exercises no direct control over his coachman.] He was stopped by the police.

Lilee in reply.

L. J.—I am of opinion that the County Court judge was right, and that his decision must be upheld. The action was commenced against Lilee for injury occasioned by the negligence in the conduct of a ship of which Lilee was managing owner and Lester the registered owner. The question we have to decide is, whether the relation of master and servant existed between Lester and Lilee, or, to put it more widely, whether Lester had not divested himself of his responsibility for the acts of Lilee.

The case that seemed most in favour of the plaintiff's contention was Fraser v. Marsh (13 Q.B. 38). There it was held that the registered owner of a ship having chartered her to a captain at a rent for a certain number of years, is not liable for stores furnished to the ship by order of the charterer during the charter party. But there was there an absolute demise and parting with the vessel; nor was the relation there of the same kind as the relation of the managing owner under the Merchant Shipping Act 1875, which has for its object that all be some one responsible for the seamen and proper management of the vessel. There are, therefore, two distinctions between Fraser v. Marsh and the present case; and I draw the inference as the County Court judge did, that there was here no absolute parting with the vessel, but that Lester still in a certain sense retained the management of the vessel through the other case cited was that of Fowler v. Lock (10 Q.B. 279). There the plaintiff, a cab-driver, brought the action against the defendant, a cab proprietor, and cab upon the usual terms—viz., the driver, on bringing them back at the end of the day, should hand over to the proprietor a certain sum, retaining for himself all the day's profits over that sum, the day's food for the horse supplied by the owner, and the latter having no control over the driver after leaving the yard. The majority of the Court of Common Pleas held that the relationship between the defendant and the plaintiff was not that of master and servant, but that of bailor and bailee, and consequently that the defendant was under a legal obligation to furnish the plaintiff with a horse that was reasonably fit to be driven in a cab. The Exchequer Chamber, being divided in opinion, and considering the statement of facts upon which they had to decide imperfect, ordered a new trial. Upon the action again being tried, in answer to questions put to them by the judge, the jury found that the horse was not reasonably fit to be driven in a cab; that the plaintiff did not take upon himself the risk of its being reasonably fit to be so driven; that the defendant did not take reasonable precautions to supply the plaintiff with a reasonably fit horse; and that the horse and cab were intrusted to the plaintiff as bailee, and not as servant. A verdict having been thereupon entered for the plaintiff, the Court refused to disturb it. If the present action had been one by Lilee against Lester, by the master of the vessel against the owner, Fowler v. Lock might have had a very strong application, but that is not so. The action here is brought by one of the public, and is consequently within the express distinction taken in Fowler v. Lock between that case, which involved the nature of the contract between the cabowner and the cabman only, and a case involving the relation and responsibility of the cab proprietor to the public, a distinction supported by the previous decision in Powles v. Hider (6 E. & B. 207; 25 L. J. 331, Q. B.). Assuming, therefore, Fowler v. Lock to be rightly decided, it does not govern this case.

Then Venables v. Smith (L. Rep. 2 Q.B. Div. 279) is, as far as it goes, in favour of the decision of the County Court judge. It may be distinguishable from the present case, but, at all events, it supports the contention of the respondents rather than of the appellants.

There was one part of the case which at first seemed to me to be very strongly in favour of the appellants' contention—namely, the finding that Lester had parted with all control over the vessel. Because it seemed that, if that was so, the case was brought within Fraser v. Marsh (ubi sup.). But though it is true in a certain sense to say that Lester had no control over the vessel, he still remained the responsible owner and manager of her as regards the outside public. There are two important matters that lead me to this conclusion. The first is that by sect. 4, subsect. 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act 1875, it is provided that "the owner of every British ship shall from time to time register at the custom-house of the port in the United Kingdom at which such ship is registered the name of the managing owner of such ship, and, if there be no managing owner, then of the person to whom the management of the ship is intrusted by and on behalf of the owner; and in case the owner fail or neglect to register the name of such managing owner or manager as aforesaid he shall be liable, or, if there be more owners than one, each one shall be liable in proportion to his interest in the ship, to a penalty not exceeding in the whole 500*l.* each time that the said ship leaves any port in the United Kingdom, after Nov. 1, 1875, without the name being duly registered as aforesaid." Now it is found by this case that Lester was registered as owner of the vessel. If he had demised the ship so as to part with the management of her, he might have had Lilee inserted in the register as the managing owner. He did not do so, however, and, in consequence, remains the responsible owner of the vessel. The second matter is, that he never gives up his interest in the adventure; so that he not only avows to the public through the register that he is the responsible owner, but he retains an interest in common with Lester to the extent of one-third of the profits. Whether that constitutes him a partner for all purposes it is unnecessary now to decide; it is sufficient for the present purpose that he would suffer by the failure of an adventure, and benefit by its success.

C.P. Div.]

PALMER v. ZARIFI BROTHERS.

[C.P.]

On these grounds, I am of opinion that Lester is liable for the negligent conduct of the vessel by Lilee.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question we have to decide is, whether on the facts stated the defendant Lester is liable. The facts are shortly these: Up to July 1873 Lester employed Lilee as skipper. Then that arrangement was altered, and the altered arrangement was this: instead of Lilee being master of the vessel, Lester allowed Lilee to have the management of it, on condition of paying a certain proportion of the profits to him. What is the true effect of that agreement? We are asked to say that it amounts to a demise of the ship from the owner to the master, so as to shift the responsibility for negligent management from the one to the other. I do not think that that is so. It seems to me that this agreement may be looked upon as having for its object one of two things. It may be either a mode of paying the master of the ship, Lester still retaining the management of her; or a taking of the master into partnership. Which of these views is the correct one it is unnecessary to decide. I think the former is the most probable. But the vessel was being managed for the joint profit of Lester and Lilee. Lilee was therefore either Lester's partner or Lester's agent. I do not think the facts show anything like a demise of the ship.

This is how I treat the matter independent of the Merchant Shipping Act 1875, but I think it important that Lester does not register Lilee as managing owner of the vessel, under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, but himself. I do not say that that is conclusive. Looking at the purposes of that provision, it may sometimes, in cases of this kind, be necessary to go behind the register in order to discover the true relation of the parties. But the fact of a man going and registering himself as managing owner is certainly very strong evidence that he is so. Then Lilee himself takes that view, as he enters into a charter-party on behalf of the owner. That is a very good ground for our taking the same view.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Wedlake and Son, for Keary and Marshall, Stoke-upon-Trent.

Solicitors for the respondent, Louth and Stacey, for Maples and Son, Spalding.

Nov. 7 and Dec. 21, 1877.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., and DUNN, J.)

PALMER v. ZARIFI BROTHERS.

Bill of lading—Charter-party—Demurrage—Contract by indorsee of bill of lading.

A charter-party stipulated that the agreed freight should be paid on right and true delivery of the cargo, and that the discharge of the cargo should be done in accordance with the usage of the discharging port. The bill of lading was indorsed to the defendants, and expressed to be subject to the conditions of the charter-party, and contained the following clause: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignee immediately they come to hand in discharging the ship, otherwise they will be landed or put into craft by the master or ship's agent at the merchant's risk and expense, and shall both to have a lien on such goods until the payment of all costs and charges so incurred."

In an action by the plaintiff for damages for the detention of the ship by default of the defendants, the jury found that the ship was detained for two days beyond a reasonable time for loading, and that 30l. a day was a fair value for the detention, and that the defendants had put themselves out to the plaintiff as receivers of the cargo under the bill of lading, so as to lead the plaintiff to look to them as such. There was evidence that the defendants told the plaintiff's agent that the ship arrived, that they had the cargo, and would pay the freight; and that on the unloading the plaintiff's agent complained to the defendants of their delay, telling them that there would be a claim for demurrage, and repudiation by them of liability.

Held, that there was evidence that the defendants undertook to pay for any unreasonable detention, and that they took delivery under the provisions of the bill of lading.

Action by shipowners for damages for the detention of a ship beyond a reasonable time for the delivery of a cargo of wheat.

The ship was chartered by merchants to take a full cargo of wheat to a safe port in England, to be named on signing bills of lading, freight of 5s. a quarter to be paid on the true delivery of cargo, "the discharge of the cargo to be done in accordance with the usage of the discharging port." The master's bills of lading, expressed to be subject to the conditions of the charter-party; and the bills of lading were indorsed to the defendants, who had the ship's arrival at the English port.

The bill of lading referred to the charter-party for the amount of freight payable, and contained the following clause: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignee immediately they come to hand in discharging the ship, otherwise they will be landed or put into craft by the master or ship's agent (at the merchant's risk and expense), and either or both to have a lien on such goods until the payment of all costs and charges so incurred."

There was evidence that the cargo had been discharged in twenty days, according to the usage of the discharging port, and that during the unloading the cargo was made to the defendants by the master, and acknowledged by them, as the defendants alleged that they were a bill of lading, and were acting for the pool.

He sued for damages for three days' detention of the ship, at 30*l.* a day. The jury found the ship was detained two days beyond a reasonable time for unloading, and that 30*l.* a day was a reasonable claim; and, further, that the defendants held themselves out to the plaintiff as receivers of the whole cargo under the bill of lading to lead the plaintiff to believe that the persons to whom the plaintiff was indebted were the persons to whom the plaintiff was indebted.

The plaintiff had obtained a rule nisi for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the defendants had been left to the jury, or to the contrary by the defendants to pay reschell, Q.C., for the plaintiff, showed that the defendants contend, first, that the bill of lading are not liable for this delay, secondly, that, even if that were not, in that sense, the holders. As to the first point, even if the defendants were the principals, and holding the bill of lading, the jury have found that they held out as receivers of the cargo under the bill of lading, so as to induce the plaintiff to look to them as such. An actual bill of lading, giving no notice of any person to whom he is acting, is personally liable on the conditions expressed in it. Here the plaintiff waived his lien for freight by giving the bill of lading to the defendants, confiding in the ostensible holder of the bill of lading. And, if the defendants are to be held as holders of the bill of lading, they are liable, for the bill of lading incorporates the terms of the charter-party, and provides that the cargo shall be taken from the ship immediately on delivery to hand in unloading. Miller v. The Owners of the Ship "The S. S. B. & B." (31 L. J. 100); Chappel v. Comfort (31 L. J. 100). It is deduced that a promise might be implied from the bill of lading to pay freight, and, on the same side.—The question was as to whether the bill of lading was a condition in the bill of lading that there was no evidence to justify the jury in finding for the plaintiff, and in holding that there was evidence of a contract for the payment of demurrage.

Per curiam, 17 L. J. 166, Q. B.;

Ally, 4 Taunt. 52;

Smith, 15 C. B. 729.

(J. C. Mathew with him) for the defendants. First, we say that under this bill of lading the plaintiff himself would not be liable for detention. There is an express clause in the charter-party that the master shall not be liable for damages. He cannot refrain from doing so, for damages. Secondly, there was no demurrage given by the charter-party, and no bill of lading. The law implies no such liability on the defendants as that alleged, and it is in fact. There was no evidence of the defendants' failure to deliver the cargo on the ground of demurrage; and therefore there was no liability if the cargo was given up. The defendants were mere holders of the bill of lading, and not owners of the property in the cargo.

The judgment of the court (Lord Denman, J.) was delivered by Lord Denman, J.—In this case the plaintiff, who was the owner of the steamship Greenwood, sued the defendants for damages for three days' detention of the ship beyond a reasonable time for delivery of a cargo of wheat. The statement of claim set forth the terms of a charter-party, by which certain merchants of Smyrna agreed to give the ship a full cargo of wheat for a safe port in England, to be named on signing bills of lading, freight of 5*s.* per quarter to be paid on right and true delivery of the cargo, "the discharge at the port of delivery to be done in accordance with the usage of the discharging port." It was then stated that upon loading the cargo, the master signed bills of lading, which were expressed to be subject to the conditions of the charter-party, that the bills of lading were indorsed to the defendants, who had notice of the arrival of the ship; that, according to the usage of the port, the cargo might have been discharged in twenty-four hours, which it was not; and the plaintiff claimed three days' demurrage according to the contract, 30*l.* per day. There was also a claim on the ground that the defendants were bound to take delivery within a reasonable time, which it was alleged they had not done. The bill of lading referred to the charter-party for the amount of freight, and contains the following clause: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignee immediately they come to hand in discharging the ship, otherwise they will be landed or put into craft by the master or ship's agent (at the merchant's risk and expense), and either or both to have a lien on such goods until the payment of all costs and charges so incurred." According to the evidence for the plaintiff, the crew could have discharged more rapidly than they did, but for want of lighters. The jury found that the ship was detained for two days beyond a reasonable time for unloading, and that 30*l.* a day was a fair charge for the detention. They also found "that the defendants held themselves out to the plaintiff as receivers of the whole cargo under the bill of lading, so as to lead the plaintiff to believe that they were the persons to whom the plaintiff was to look as such." A rule nisi was granted to show cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection in not holding that there was no evidence to justify the jury in finding for the plaintiff, and in holding that there was evidence of a contract for the payment of demurrage.

We do not think that the finding of the jury is to be construed so critically as to authorise us to draw a distinction between demurrage in the strict sense and damages for unreasonable delay; but we consider the real question to be whether, upon the evidence in the case, the learned judge was bound to have told the jury that there was no evidence upon which they could find that the defendants were liable for the two days' delay found by the jury. We are of opinion that there was evidence upon which the jury could properly find as they did, and that their finding, fairly construed, amounts to a finding that the defendants' took delivery of the cargo under the bills of lading, including that part of them which stipulated that the goods were to be taken from the ship immediately they came to hand in discharging the ship. It was proved that some time before the arrival of the ship the defendants announced to the plaintiff's agent that they had the cargo, and would pay the freight. This we understood to mean the freight stipulated for in the charter-party. This, of itself, would not be evidence of any agreement to pay demurrage as such, there being no stipulations as to demurrage in the charter-party. But the evidence showed that daily during the delivery the plaintiff's brokers complained of the delay, and told the defendants that there would be a claim for demurrage. Looking at the terms of the bill of lading, we think that the fair construction of these complaints and warnings is, that they amounted to a notice to the defendants that they were being held to the terms of the bills of lading as regards an immediate discharge of the cargo. It was sworn by one of the plaintiff's witnesses that the defendants, in answer to these complaints and warnings, replied that they hoped that the brokers would not press them, and that the plaintiff had been very lenient in a former case, which was a case of demurrage. After the discharge was completed the defendants, on being told that the claim for demurrage was three days, asked the broker if he would not settle for less, and on more than one occasion offered to settle for 50l. It appears to us that this was evidence upon which the jury might not improperly find that the defendants undertook to pay for any unreasonable delay, and that this, in substance, is what the jury have found. The consideration for this undertaking would obviously be, that the plaintiff abstained from exercising his power under the bill of lading to employ other lighters and to keep his lien upon the goods against the consignees for the cost. We think that is the true effect of the finding and the evidence, and that the rule must consequently be discharged.

ADM.]

THE SARAH.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lowless and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

ADMIRALTY BUSINESS.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAINES, Esqs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Jan. 11, 1878.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE SARAH.

Salvage—Custom to apportion award—Information leading to salvage service—Costs.

Where there was a custom to share in salvage awards in a particular manner according to the ratings of the salvors on board their ship, but some of the salvaging crew had exposed themselves to much greater risks than the rest, the court gave them a larger share on equitable principles.

Carrying information to a vessel which enables her to render a salvage service is itself a service in the nature of salvage, and will be rewarded accordingly.

Where separate salvage suits have been unnecessarily prosecuted, the court will only allow one set of costs, and direct the amount allowed to be distributed rateably amongst the plaintiffs in the separate suits.

THESE were causes of salvage instituted respectively by the mate and two of the crew of the steam tug Great Western, the owners, master, and remainder of the crew of the Great Western, and the owners, master, and crew of the steam tug Kingfisher, against the ship Sarah, for salvage services rendered to that vessel on the 14th Oct.

1877, and following days. The two latter had been consolidated, leave being granted owners of the Kingfisher to be represented hearing by one counsel. The Sarah was a ship of 1176 tons register, belonging to the of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and on the 14th 1877, whilst on a voyage from Quebec to Liverpool, laden with a cargo of timber, she was on the Middle Mouse Rocks off the coast of Anglesey, in which position she was observed those on board the Kingfisher, a paddle tug belonging to the Liverpool Steam Tug Company. The Kingfisher was at the time engaged to form a contract of towage, and was consequently unable to proceed to the Sarah. She, however, left her tow for awhile, and proceeded to the Great Western, a paddle steam tug of 300 tons register, propelled by engines of 130 nominal power, and capable of working up to 800 horse power, and which at the time, about 10 a.m., was off the Ormes Head on the look-out for wrecks. Those on board the Kingfisher informed the crew on board the Great Western of the position of the Sarah, and the Kingfisher then returned and completed her contract of towage. The Great Western at once proceeded to the Middle Mouse Rocks, and arrived there about noon, the tide being low, the wind blowing a moderate and increasing from W.S.W. and a heavy sea running. The Great Western arrived the Sarah was close forward, with a list to starboard, and the Great Western was breaking over her stern; and her captain and crew were removing their effects from her. The Great Western was communicating with the captain of the Sarah, and the Great Western proceeded to put some of the crew of the Sarah on board into a pilot boat in the neighbourhood, and on her return, about four p.m., the crew of the Sarah getting into a lifeboat, which had come off to her. The Great Western then towed the lifeboat to her station. The mate and pilot of the Sarah shortly afterwards came on board the Great Western, and, after looking at the ship's papers and chronometer, went ashore to consult Lloyd's agent. About five p.m., when there was on shore and no one on board the Sarah, the mate and two of the crew of the Great Western observed that the Sarah had changed her position and was lying heavily on the rocks with her port beam to the Great Western. The Great Western then went as close to the Sarah as was prudent, and her mate and two of the crew of the Great Western succeeded in towing her off the rocks. The Great Western then got another hawser from her bow to the Sarah, which then proceeded to tow the Sarah to Liverpool. The Sarah was water-logged, and the two hands from the Great Western remained on board and navigated her to her arrival in the Mersey, at about 8.30 a.m. on the 15th Oct., when she was brought to an anchor. At the time the services were performed there was a heavy gale, with rain and snow. The Great Western continued in attendance on the Sarah till the 22nd, when, the weather having moderated, she, with the assistance of the tug Kingfisher, beached the Sarah near New Ferry in the afternoon, after which the Great Western still continued in attendance till 25th Oct. The value of the Sarah as salvaged was 6,566l., and the value of the cargo was 13,000l.

The discussion turned principally of a custom among tug owners to pool to share salvage awarded at percentage, according to the ratings which the mate of the Great Western got to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., and each of the rest of the total amount. This was denied in the first suit, and it was held that it existed as to ordinary salvage, but not as to apply where some of the crew performed special services at the risk of their lives, such services being admitted, not called to prove them.

The cause came on for hearing before me, assisted by two of the elder judges, at the Trinity House.

Potter, for owners, master, and mate of Great Western, contended that it was a good one:

L. T. Rep. N. S. 72; 2 L. Rep. A. & M. Law Cas. O. S. 342; and were entitled to their costs as to apportionment might have been made without instituting a separate claim for mate and two of the crew of the Great Western.—Such an agreement, if it existed, does not tie the hands of the court, does not apply to a case like the present, where the services of those remaining on the Great Western were unattended with, and ours were rendered at the risk of life. The court will decree an apportionment on equitable principles.

The owners, master, and crew of the Kingfisher were entitled to salvage. Had it not been for the action brought by us to the Great Western, the salvage services would not have been made. We did all we could do in the case. We set the salvage operations in motion for defendants, owners of the Kingfisher, for the salvage services, they only incurred, and were rendered without cost; incurred, at all events, by those remaining on the Great Western. The alleged services by the Sarah, after she got off the rock, are not salvage services at all; they are of tugs there, and any of them incurred by the ship for a small rate at that time. The Great Western was not a servant of the Sarah, and was not entitled to a payment of 25l. per cent. as agreed to pay. The service, if salvage at all, is of the most ordinary kind. We ought not to pay costs of more than one suit. It was unnecessary to go more than one suit.

ORE, after consultation with the judges.—It has been very properly admitted that a meritorious salvage service has been performed by the ship, which was in my opinion—firmly by that of the Elder Brethren at the Trinity House—in a state of great peril on a rock on the Middle Mouse. The ship had been left by her crew. There was no doubt but for the immediate succour which was sent, it would have gone entirely to the bottom. It is another consideration of immense amount of personal peril that those who rescued her, which case has a considerable bearing, and which is only of the service rendered in getting her off the rock, but of the admitted state of the weather. Looking to all the circumstances, and without thinking it necessary to recapitulate the principles on which salvage awards are made in this court, I am of opinion, and the Elder Brethren agree with me, that I ought to award 3000l. as the total amount. The value of the property saved from total destruction, at considerable peril to the salvors themselves, was 6566l.

As to the distribution of the award, the Kingfisher did render a meritorious service in the nature of salvage service in conveying the information with great rapidity, thus setting in motion the machinery by which the salvage was rendered; and I shall award her 60l. with costs. To the three men who went on board the Sarah, I award, to the mate 25l. and to the two seamen 20l. each, in addition to what are their shares on the usual scale in these boats; the remainder to the owners, master, and crew of the Great Western. I only allow one set of costs; that set of costs to be divided rateably between the plaintiffs other than the Kingfisher, and I allow the Kingfisher her costs.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, owners, master, and crew of the Great Western, except three; and also for plaintiffs, owners, master, and crew of the Kingfisher; Wright, Stockley, and Becket.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, mate, and two of the crew of Great Western; Tyndall and Paxton.

Solicitors for defendants, owners of Sarah; Stone and Fletcher.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 19, 20, and Dec. 7, 1877.

(Before BRAMWELL, BRETT, and COTTON, L.JJ.)

BAYLEY AND OTHERS v. CHADWICK.

Commission—Proximate cause—"In consequence of."

Defendant employed plaintiffs to sell a ship, and agreed that if a sale was effected to any person "led to make such offer in consequence of" plaintiffs' mention or publication of it, plaintiffs should be paid commission.

Plaintiffs advertised the ship, and put her up to auction, but she was not sold. Shortly afterwards, S. purchased her by private contract. S. had heard of the auction from a person who had been in communication with plaintiffs.

Held (reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas Division), that there was no evidence that S. had been led to purchase in consequence of plaintiffs' advertisement.

APPEAL from the judgment of the Common Pleas Division.

The action was brought to recover a commission of one per cent. on the purchase money of the steamship Bessemer. The defendant, who was the liquidator of the Bessemer Steamship Company, had instructed the plaintiffs to sell the Bessemer by auction.

By a written agreement the plaintiffs were to have one per cent. commission on the purchase money, if the ship was not sold by auction but a sale was subsequently effected "to any person or firm introduced by" the plaintiffs, "or led to make such offer in consequence of" the plaintiffs "mention or publication of the ship for auction purposes." The plaintiffs advertised the Bessemer for sale, and put her up to auction, but she was not sold. The defendant afterwards sold her to a person named Wilson, who purchased as agent for a person named Sugden of Leeds. At the trial before Lord Coleridge, C.J., it was proved that a person named Pearson, of Hull, who wrote to the plaintiffs to inquire about the Bessemer shortly after the auction, had met Sugden and had a conversation with him about the auction, and Sugden then stated that if he had been at the auction there would have been a bid. This conversation was previous to Sugden's purchase through Wilson. Lord Coleridge, C.J. ruled that there was evidence to go to the jury that Sugden was induced to make an offer in consequence of the plaintiffs' advertisements, and the jury found for the plaintiffs. A rule for a new trial was discharged by Lord Coleridge, C.J. and Denman, J. (ante, p. 453 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 740), and the defendant appealed.

Nov. 19 and 20.—Herschell, Q.C. and Reid for the defendant. There was no evidence to show that there was any immediate connection between the advertisements issued by the plaintiffs and the making of the offer by Sugden. The consequence must be proximate, and indirect consequences would not be included:

Ionides v. Universal Marine Assurance Company,
14 C.B. N. S. 259; 32 L. J. 170, C. P.

Gully, Q.C. and Edwyrn Jones for the plaintiffs.—There was a prima facie case, and it was rightly left to the jury. The obvious intention of the contract was to secure their commission to the plaintiffs in case the Bessemer should be disposed of by a private sale. There can be no doubt that the sale was effected to a certain extent in consequence of the plaintiffs' advertisement, and it was not necessary that the advertisement should be the entire or direct cause of the sale.

Herschell, Q.C. in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 7.—BRAMWELL, L.J.—This case was tried before Lord Coleridge, C.J., and he thought there was some evidence, and left the matter to the jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiffs. There was a motion for a new trial, and the rule was discharged. I am of opinion that there was no evidence. Certainly the parties in this case have done their best to create litigation, by expressing the contract between them in such a foolish document as that which is now before us. The question is, was there any evidence that the subsequent sale of the Bessemer was effected to a person who was led to make an offer in consequence of the plaintiffs' mention or publication of the ship for auction purposes? I am of opinion that there was no evidence. Sugden was the purchaser of the ship, and Sugden purchased through Wilson. There was evidence to show that Sugden may have been led to make an offer for the ship in consequence of his dealings with Pearson; but what led Pearson to have correspondence with the plaintiffs and to communicate what he knew to Sugden? This communication took place in consequence of Pearson's casually meeting Sugden in the market and saying that there had been an offer, and Sugden saying that if he had been at the auction there would have been a bid. Pearson might just as well have made the same remarks to Sugden if there had been no bid. The advertisement did not say that Pearson intended to know that the plaintiffs were persons who had the sale, but it did not say that Pearson and Sugden to walk together and have a conversation, nor did it cause Sugden to make the offer. If we look at the words of the advertisement it appears that the fact that Sugden was led to make an offer in consequence of the plaintiffs' mention or publication, &c., is what the plaintiffs have got to prove. It is obvious that Sugden was in no sense led to make his offer by this. The plaintiffs' advertisement was not in the train of causation. I think, therefore, that there was no evidence for the jury, and the judgment is that the judgment of the court below be reversed, and the verdict entered for the defendant.

BRETT, L.J. concurred.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It was not necessary that the plaintiffs' advertisement should be the only or immediate cause of the sale in order to entitle them to compensation. The advertisement must lead in some way to the offer by Sugden, and in my opinion there is evidence that it did so.

Judgment rendered

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Lowless and Co.
Solicitors for defendant, Chambers.

Friday, Nov. 23, 1877.

(Before BRAMWELL, BRETT, and COTTELL, J.
SHEPHERD AND OTHERS v. KOTTIGEN AND OTHERS

Shipping—Sacrifice—General average contribution

A shipowner is not entitled to general average for cargo in respect of the above (to save the whole adventure) of ship and cargo when the condition of the tackling was such that it must have been lost in any event.

Owing to the looseness of the rigging the vessel was swaying about during a heavy gale in such a manner as to endanger the vessel; the captain's order it was cut away and done. On the trial of an action by the owners against the owners of cargo for an average contribution in respect of the loss of the mast, the judge left it to the jury to say at the time of sacrifice, the mast was a wreck and valueless; but he did not ask the jury to find whether, if the storm had suddenly ceased, the mast might possibly have been saved.

Held (reversing the decision of the Common Division), that there was no misdirection.

(a) The effect of this finding of the jury is that the must was so hopelessly loose that it must have been if not untaway, and that it could not have been in other words, that it had no value to the ship, and hence there was no loss by him for the good. It is true that this precise question has been decided before; but the question whether a ship lost by a gale, and lying alongside a ship fast by which is cut away by the master to save the ship, is to be contributed for has often been the subject of very clear judgment on this point, citing authorities, was given by the Supreme Court in Teetsman v. Clamageran, 2 Louisiana 100. The case was as follows: "There is some sail

common Pleas Division.

was by shipowners against the to recover for a general average reason of the sacrifice of a ship's storm.

came on for trial before Manisty J.,
Bury, in London, during the Hilary are the material facts admitted proved at the trial:

her barque Rollo sailed from London with cargo, the defendants having on board of her.

was bound for Hong Kong, and between Scilly and Lisbon she encountered a storm; portions of the rigging gave way, this caused the mainmast to be lurching violently. His
"We wore the ship to try and save the mainmast was lurching violently.
It would not break. We wanted it to remain simple reason that it was lurching that I was afraid it would open the ordered the chief mate to cut away it, so that it might fall to starboard ship. The mate obeyed my order."
In examination he says: "As soon as the port rigging was gone I knew the ship, unless we could secure the port rigging. The whole difficulty the mast would not break. I was that it would break the ship out."

"The mast was lurching so much that it was in danger of opening up."

Whether under these circumstances masts are a subject of general average. The general opinion seems to be that they do; that is voluntarily sacrificed for the benefit being considered the subject of general average. The next inquiry in this case is, is it? Not sound masts certainly; for to cut away for the general safety, or termination was taken to cut them when broken by the tempest. In the case, at the time the rigging was cut, they were the subject of particular average.
Maintained previous to the time they were cut, general benefit cannot be the subject for that injury was not voluntarily sacrificed for the benefit of all compensation should be out of the loss sustained, and that their value at the time they were separated.

One of the English writers (Stevens) on why masts hanging over the sides of a subject of general average—that the fact that they are placed renders them of no value, they are, or may be, of some value, the extent of that value they are matter for judgment. Paty, in recognising the rule that under the head of avarie grosse, states that so for the value they had at the time they were cut. This appears to us to be the good rule; for it is quite unjust to make the value for the full value of masts, which were considered scarcely of any value by an insurer for which they were not responsible:
see 12, sect. 2, vol. 4, p. 446; Stevens on
ch. 1, sect. 31, art. 5; Emerigon, vol. 1,
p. 622; Phillips on Insurance.) The court settled in this case on the ground that the ship was bound to contribute his proportion of the new masts cost in the port where they were made. This we think an error for which must be reversed. The defendant is his proportion of the value the masts were broken by the storm, and at the time they were cut away.—[Ed.]

N. S.

Question: "If the mast had not been lurching so much, could you have secured the mast?"

Answer: "Yes."

The mate being asked, "Why did you want to cut the mast away?" says, "To save the ship and cargo and our lives, I should think. The mast was lurching about so violently I expected it would rip up the decks. If the decks were ripped up the (the ship) would fill with water." Cross-examined: "Some of the rigging had gone, and the ship was lurching violently. We thought, of course, then that the mast would go, or, if it did not go, that it would rip up the decks."

The second mate says: "The mast kept lurching; the rigging was ultimately cut away, and then the mast went over the side to starboard."

Question: "Why was the port rigging cut away?"

Answer: "To let the mast go."

Question: "Why did you want the mast to go?"

Answer: "Because it would have torn the ship's deck; it would have opened her up." Cross-examined, he says: "If it had broken off it would have been a different thing altogether. We were afraid of its ripping up the deck. I can't say if the mast would have gone whether we cut the port rigging or not. She might have gone steadier afterwards. I decline to speculate on what might have occurred. I know that if the mast had not gone the ship would have opened out."

The expert called first for the defendants said that, under the circumstances described in the evidence for the plaintiffs, he would have described the mast as a wreck—a gone mast. On cross-examination he said that, "if the mast had been lurched out of the ship, that would have been an extremely dangerous thing for the vessel."

The other experts gave evidence much to the same effect, one saying that "it (the mast) was an impediment to the adventure, and one that it was desirable in the interests of all to get rid of." Another, on cross-examination, said, that if the weather had moderated, it might have been possible to have saved the mast, but difficult.

The substance of the evidence was, first, that if the storm had continued, of which there was great probability, the mast would not have broken, but would have gone wholly overboard, tearing up the ship, and that in all probability the whole would have been lost; secondly, that the mast might possibly have been saved if the weather had moderated quickly, but this was very improbable; thirdly, that the mast was cut away not as a mere incumbrance like a mast or a board attached by rigging, but for the purpose of preventing its tearing up the ship and sacrificing the adventure.

The learned judge concluded his summing up as follows: "You must judge for yourselves, having regard to all the circumstances, the state of the weather, the state of the sea, the rigging gone, and all the circumstances as proved by the witnesses, and there is no evidence to contradict
it. Are you of opinion that that mast was virtually a wreck and valueless and gone at the time it went over?"

The jury found that the mast was a wreck; and, in answer to a further question by the learned judge, "Do you find whether it was hopelessly lost?"—"Yes."

The jury found for the defendants, and a rule was obtained for a new trial on the grounds of

2 N

CT. OF APP.]

SHEPHERD AND OTHERS v. KOTTGEN AND OTHERS.

[Ct. of App.]

misdirection, that there was no evidence to justify the verdict, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence.

The misdirection complained of was that the judge did not ask the jury, "Whether, if the weather had moderated, the mast could possibly have been saved."

The Common Pleas Division (Grove and Lopes, JJ.) thought there was a misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence, and made the rule absolute for a new trial, the following judgment being delivered:

July 12, 1877.—GROVE, J. (after stating the facts as above).—The rule before us was obtained on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. The misdirection complained of was, that the judge did not ask the jury, as was done by Cleasby, B. in the case of Corrie v. Coulthard, (a) "Whether,

(a) COURT OF APPEAL, WESTMINSTER.

Thursday, Jan. 17, 1877.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., Sir W. B. BRETT, and Sir R. BAGGALLAY.)

CORRIE v. COULTHARD.

THIS was an appeal by the defendants from a decision of the Court of Exchequer refusing a rule for a new trial, appealed from on the ground of misdirection, and on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence.

The action was brought by the owners of the steamship Star of Erin against the owner of cargo on board that vessel, to recover general average contribution in respect of a mast of the steamship alleged to have been sacrificed by the master of the steamship for the general benefit of ship and cargo.

The circumstances as stated by the master in a letter to his owners were as follows: "Since leaving the Lizard I have had nothing but gales of wind from W.S.W. to N.W. and very heavy sea, making little or no headway. On the 11th latitude 45° 35' north, longitude 8° 40' west, blowing a very heavy gale of wind and a very heavy sea. Ship hove to under the lower maintop-sail on the port tack, and rolling and straining very heavily; at 4 p.m. the mainmast settled down in the ship about 4 in., very suddenly slackening up the rigging and allowing the mast to roll about heavily; swifter the rigging together to try if possible to save it, but had no effect; cut away the maintopmast to lighten it, thinking to be able to save the lower mast, but the wreck not clearing properly, the mast still kept settling down in the ship. Being afraid of the heel of the mast working down to the plating and going through the bottom of the ship, cut away the mainmast also, which broke 3 ft. above the main deck and went over to leeward clear of the ship." In the evidence of the master taken before an examiner, he said: "As the ship rolled the mast was swaying from side to side; we tried to swifter the rigging in to steady the mast if possible; this did not steady the mast, but made it settle more into the ship; if the heel of the mast had got on one of the plates in the vessel's bottom, it would have gone through her, and in my judgment the ship would then have foundered; when I saw this, I determined to cut away the topmast." The mast was an iron cylindrical mast resting in the iron kelson plate, the edges of the mast going to the end of the plate. The violence of the storm caused the bottom of the mast to split up; iron forming the bottom of the mast kept gradually turning up, and the mast gradually settling down, and this gave the master the impression that the mast was working its way through the bottom of the ship. The mast would not actually have worked through the bottom of the ship, and would not have been lost without the ship was lost at the same time from some other cause.

The action was tried before Cleasby, B., and he left to the jury certain questions on which they found, first, that the mast was not valueless as a mast before it was cut away; secondly, that if the weather had moderated the mast might have been saved; and thirdly, that the master if the weather had moderated, the mast possibly have been saved." During the argument another question occurred to us in in cutting the mast away acted reasonably under the circumstances, although mistaken as to the danger the mast going through the ship's bottom.

C. Bowen for the appellants.—There is here a voluntary sacrifice, because there was nothing to be saved. The mast, when it was cut away was wrecked and there can be no sacrifice where there is nothing to be saved. It became necessary for the captain to cut away the mast as a matter of duty to his owners, to save the ship from destruction, and this is not a matter for general average. If goods or part of a ship are in such a condition as to be a source of danger to the ship, that they may be destroyed eventually by cutting them or throwing them overboard to save the ship, the master cannot establish a claim for general salvage:

Parsons on Insurance, 212;

Johnson v. Chapman, 35 L. J. 23, C. P.; 1 H. & C. 404.

If the mast was a source of danger to the ship, the master was bound, in his duty to the owners, to cut it away, and the loss falls on the owner. The master had no choice and made no selection of a thing to sacrifice. Cohen, Q.C., and H. Mathew, for the respondents, not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—Assuming the fact as the appellants wish to put them, can they get out of the difficulty there is a common adventure? Whatever is done for the benefit of the ship, with a view to save the ship, is pro tanto to save the cargo. It is one thing to say the mast is rubbish, and another that it was a source of danger to the ship. Suppose the mast had been cut away before the mast was thrown overboard, and the master had said, "It is useless; I will throw it overboard." Then it might be called rubbish; but it was not in that condition. It may have been a source of danger, but it was not useless. It was just like the case of a mast struck by lightning, which the mast would perish if it was left alone. It is the case of a mast which would still be a source of danger to the ship, and was a source of danger, and might damage the ship. Then to say that possible damage they cut it away, but it ceased to be valuable as a mast. When the ship is in such a condition that it is about to perish, there is no sacrifice; but here is a mast which is a source of danger, but it becomes a source of danger, and that danger it is cut away. The defendants contend there must be selection of the thing sacrificed; but it cannot always be a selection. This is not a case where there is a quantity to sacrifice, and the master chooses the throwing overboard of a certain thing will lighten the ship the most. When you have on board a thing which is a source of common danger, you cannot select, you sacrifice that particular thing. If your mast is a source of danger, and you know it is liable, as in this case, to be placed and do damage—to destroy the ship and the cargo, possibly, the only thing you can cut away is the mast; you cannot select. The true principle is that you voluntarily sacrifice a portion of the ship or cargo for the benefit of both. Suppose a ship carrying a quantity of iron, she strains in a very heavy sea, and it is necessary to lighten, and the master throws overboard the cargo; he does this to save the ship and the cargo remains. It is done for the common good, and not see any difference between a part of the ship or the rigging in such a condition as to cause danger to the cargo getting loose. One is the same as the other according to principle. If the mast was in such a condition that it would have gone overboard in time, and not have imperilled the vessel, the defendants' argument has some foundation, but if the mast had gone through the ship, and caused it to sink, and board to go the bottom, that would be quite different. It is not necessary that the judgment of the master should be borne out by the facts when they are examined into. It is enough if he exercises a sound judgment under all circumstances. If, in the judgment of the master, the mast was a source of danger to the ship, he would not have cut it away. It was not useless, for he could have saved it.

OF APP.]

SHEPHERD AND OTHERS v. KOTTGEN AND OTHERS.

[CT. OF APP.]

important bearing upon the case, which this: whether, at the time the mast was cut away, the purpose for which it was cut away was to save the adventure by preventing the mast from going up the ship, to which the evidence very strongly pointed; or, whether it was cut away as a mere incumbrance or lumber. The question was very much discussed by the Court of Appeal in Corrie v. Coulthard to which we presently refer. We are of opinion that both questions just alluded to should have been put to the jury; that, although the learned judge said to them, that if the mast had not been cut away, it would have been very dangerous for the ship, and that there was common danger to the ship and to the cargo, he does not put these as questions to the jury but leaves to them only the question of whether the mast was virtually a mere incumbrance. He says: "As to putting to you the question, if the weather had moderated, it might have saved in a storm amounting to a hurricane at all events a heavy gale, and the ship in the face of the sea, and the weather not showing signs of improvement, to ask you whether, if the weather had moderated, the mast might have been saved, seems somewhat out of place in this case." And he then puts the question which was put at the close of the summing up. We say; it would still serve as a mast. He would not have cut it away as useless or valueless if he had not been of that opinion. His then position was calculated to injure the case. The jury found he was right in supposing there was a danger, and but for that supposition he would not have cut the mast. The question in all this case is, whether the event shows the wisdom of what was done, whether, under all the circumstances, it was a wise and a reasonable, prudent, sound judgment. The master must exercise his judgment. Here the mast was cut away to and fro, and the rigging was loose; he cut away the mast, not because of its value or want of value as a mast, but because he thought its condition was so destructive to the vessel. Therefore it shows that he cut away the mast as a sacrifice for the benefit of ship and cargo. He sacrificed the mast because, if it had been left to remain where it was, it would, in his judgment, lead to the common destruction of mast, ship, and cargo. I agree that if a thing is in the act of burning, it cannot be saved, if it must go, as in the case of a house or mast on fire, and it is thrown overboard, it perishes without any intention of sacrifice; but here there is no such certainty of its perishing, except the event of the common destruction of the whole ship, if the master thinks it will cause the destruction of the ship, and he sacrifices it, that is a voluntary sacrifice, giving a right to a claim for general average.

V. B. BRETT.—If a sacrifice is made both for the ship and cargo, it is general average; that is the definition of general average. If it is both for the ship and cargo that the thing should be done, it is the duty of the master to make a general average sacrifice although he may have been bound to do so here, as it still been a sacrifice. If this had been a sound judgment and the rigging had been lost, what could the owners have said then? Their point is that the mast was cut away; that it was no loss at all. When masts are cut overboard, and are floating alongside, attached to the rigging, and are then cut away, it is settled that a general average loss if they are cut away for the benefit of ship and cargo. If, at the moment you sacrifice a mast, it is of no value, whatever future circumstances arise, then if there is a sacrifice there is no loss; and, if under a change of circumstances the thing becomes of value, there is not only a sacrifice but a are further of opinion that, assuming the question which we have stated to have been put to the jury, and the jury had found for the defendant, that finding would have been wrong and against the weight of evidence. In our judgment, the beneficial objects of the doctrine and law of general average would be frittered away if, where a sacrifice is made, as seems obviously the case here, to save the whole adventure, the sharing the burden of such sacrifice could be made to depend upon nice questions of probability, afterwards discussed, as to whether the thing might or might not have been saved. In ordinary questions of general average it is presupposed that great danger exists to the ship and cargo, and in those cases the probability is that the thing sacrificed would have gone with the whole venture, and therefore it would be the sacrifice of a probably valueless thing. Here, if the mast had gone, the ship would probably have gone with it. The ship was probably saved by the sacrifice of the mast. The evidence appears all one way on this point. The case differs in our judgment from those of cutting away wreck, as hypothetically put by Willes, J. in the case of Johnson v. Chapman (19 C. B. N. S. 563; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 404), where he supposes a case of part of a mast going overboard, with spars and sails attached to it, and hanging by a stay, battering and adding to the danger of a vessel. There the wreck is real not anticipatory, and, as Willes, J. observes, "you cannot keep it, there is no intentional sacrifice in cutting it away." Here the mast was sound and entire, and a mast it was in its usual place, though lurching from the rigging, being gone on one side. It would defeat the main utility of general average if, at a moment of emergency, the captain's mind were to hesitate as to saving the adventure through fear of casting a burden on his owners. What was the pressing necessity here at the time of the act? The prevention of the ship being torn up and lost. Wreck is hardly an accurate term for contingent wreck. The making the potential the same as the actual, we cannot help thinking, will much embarrass the law on this subject, and the judgment of experts as to probabilities after the event is a very dangerous criterion for a jury to be guided by. The case of Corrie v. Coulthard (see note, p. 546) is almost identical in facts with this case; indeed, in our judgment, it is identical in so far as the legal question is concerned. That case is not reported, but, by consent of counsel on both sides in this case, we have been furnished with the shorthand writer's notes of it. The Court of Appeal, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice of England, Sir V. B. Brett, and Sir R. Baggallay, gave no formal judgment, but their observations in the case on the motion by way of appeal from the Exchequer Division, are all one way, and wholly in point as to the present case. There the mast (an iron one) becoming loose, the captain feared (though it turned out afterwards without cause) that it would go through the bottom of the ship, and he cut it away. The same contention was put forward there as here, but the jury found for the plaintiff, i.e. in favour of general average, Baron Cleasby asking then whether, if the weather had moderated, the mast could possibly have been saved. But the observations of the court go much further than on the mere question, whether the direction of the judge was right. The Lord Chief

L. BAGGALLAY concurred.

L.—The above judgments were not delivered concisely, as given, but are compiled from the answers by the court to the arguments of counsel; and are from the shorthand writers' notes.—ED.]

Justice says: "It is not necessary that the judgment of the master should be borne out by the facts when they come to be examined into; it is enough if he exercise his judgment under all the circumstances. . . . He must exercise his judgment. He cuts away the mast, not because of its value as a mast, but because he thinks its condition is likely to be destructive of the vessel. . . . If the danger is that the mast will perish at the same time that it causes the perishing of the ship, and it is cut away for the purpose of preventing peril to the ship and its own destruction, is not that general average? . . . Whatever be the condition of the mast, it was a source of danger to the ship." The Lord Chief Justice says much more to the same effect. Sir Balol Brett says: "You do not mean to say it was so valueless that a man in a calm would have thrown it overboard; it was worth money. . . . Wreck means rubbish, I suppose. . . . If it is done for the benefit of the ship and cargo, then it is general average." In the present case, it appears to us, the evidence is greatly preponderating, that the mast was cut away for the benefit of the ship, cargo, and crew, that it was not actual wreck, and was not cut away as such. Mr. Phillips, a high authority on this subject, says (Phillips on Insurance, sect. 1271): "If the thing abandoned is so exposed to destruction that it cannot possibly be retrieved and saved, and its abandonment cannot possibly contribute to the safety of the crew and ship, cargo or freight, there may be grounds of objection to contribution; but, in case of such objection, the construction will be very liberal in favour of contribution." Being of opinion that the question of the mast being saved was put to the jury as one of probability and not of possibility, that no question was left to them as to the purpose for which the mast was cut away, and that contingent wreck was treated by the judge as though it were actual wreck, we think there should be a new trial. We also think that, although the learned judge is not dissatisfied with the verdict, yet, that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, regarding the evidence from the point of view we have regarded it in this judgment.

The defendants appealed from this decision.

Nov. 23, 1877.—Bull, Q.C. and J. C. Matthew for the defendants. — If the jury had said it was impossible to save the mast, then the verdict must have been for the plaintiffs. In Corrie v. Coulthard (see note, ante p. 546) a claim was allowed for general average; but then there the mast was not hopelessly lost. If a thing is cut or cast away, on the ground that it is endangering the whole adventure, and is itself in such a condition that it must perish, even if the rest of the adventure be saved, then its destruction gives no rise to general average contribution; for, if a thing must be hopelessly lost, it can make no difference if it be thrown overboard a few minutes before it would go of its own accord. They cited and referred to

2 Parsons on Insurance 212 (note);

Crocket v. Dodge, 3 Fairf. 130;

Slater v. Hayward Railway Company, 28 Conn.

128;

Lee v. Grinnell, 5 Duer. 400;

Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. N. S. 563; 35 L. J.

33 C. P.; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 404.

Cohen, Q.C. and McLeod (H. Rutlin with them) for plaintiffs.—In Johnson v. Chapman (ubi sup.)

the cargo was unstowed, and was breaking bulwarks, and there was therefore no chance of saving it. But in this case the mast was sound, and there was no fear of the rigging falling. It was lurching violently, and to the rest of the adventure they cut it away. It is admitted that the finding of the Common Law Division was right, that no verdict of law prevented what was an intentional sacrifice, in being anything else than a cause for general average contribution. They cited

Phillips on Insurance, 1718.

J. O. Matthew replied.

BRAYWELL, L.J.—I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed. I think that the question was left to the jury, and that their verdict was given on sufficient evidence. The Court below in their judgment found no difficulty in the law of the case, but thought my brother Matthew did not leave to the jury what he did leave to possibility. Now, I think that he left the question to them. From the evidence a captain, the mast was a lost mast, and was gone in a short time, and the jury found it was "hopelessly gone" before it was cut away. The question was, how was its destruction to be finished? My brother Brett has written a very useful definition of sacrifice, which I asked him to read in his judgment, but, for my part, I think that when the thing is sacrificed has some peculiar condition attaching to it, so that, if the rest of the whole adventure is saved or lost, the specific thing must yet be lost, then there is no sacrifice entitling to general average. This was the case here. The mast must have been lost whether the vessel was port or not. There was no sacrifice and no right to average contribution. Why did the mast go? On account of the imperfect manner in which the port rigging had given way. I cannot agree with the view the court below have taken of what my brother Manisty did say to the jury. I think he put the proper question well and precisely to them.

BARR, L.J.—I am also of opinion that the judge left the right question to the jury, and that their verdict was correct, and, therefore, that here there is no claim for general average. The question is, strange to say, a novel one. General average, and what must subsist to form a sacrifice, has never before been thoroughly considered, nor have the conditions necessary to constitute a sacrifice ever been laid down. The matter was before the court in Corrie v. Coulthard (see note, ante p. 546), but in that case it was not necessary to define sacrifice so accurately as now. I agree with my Lord that the question left to the jury by Manisty to the jury was substantially the question which the court below say ought to have been left to them. The word "possible" as used in the question of law does not mean "mathematically, or scientifically possible;" it is used in the same sense as is used in the ordinary concerns of life.

The sacrifice here is said to have consisted in the cutting of the rigging in order to cause the mast to fall, and the question here is whether this was an act of sacrifice. I will assume that the master, when he cut the rigging, did intend to sacrifice the mast in order to save the ship and cargo, and that he did not think it was

]

Ex parte STOREY.

[Q.B. Div.]

time (as, if he had not held that there would have been no question). sacrifice anything? Consistently with the decision of this court in Corrie v. Coulthard, as it seems to me, with the decision of the court in that case, the position may be stated: If anything is cut or cast away, because of the whole adventure, is in such a condition, or in such a condition from circumstances that it must itself certainly lose the rest of the adventure should the cutting or casting away, destruction of the thing gives no claim for general average. Or the proposition may be stated in the following terms: Where, whether upon the act of sacrifice had been the thing in respect of which contribution would, by reason of its own state of the condition in which it is, be of no value whatever, or been certainly or absolutely lost although the rest of the adventure remained, there is nothing lost to the owner and therefore there is nothing sacrificed, there is no sacrifice. The proposition of stating the result of these proceedings is that there is nothing in respect of general average contribution could be claimed for the thing, in respect of which the claim was made, when the act relied on, of no value whatever to its owner. Therefore, with regard to this case, there is no sacrifice, or, alternatively, that nothing in respect of which the claim contribution. They cannot claim for loss to themselves, for by the time they have lost nothing; there has been no sacrifice, for nothing has been sacrificed; nothing for which general average contribution could be claimed, for nothing was lost. It is left to the jury was, as I read it, the finding of the rigging took place in such a condition, through the slacken-board rigging and the violence of the destruction of the practical impossibility of the time to save the mast, that it must be found whether the ship was saved or not? It is found that it would have gone overboard whether the act relied on was done or not. Therefore the act relied on was not sufficient, and therefore has caused no loss to the shipowner, and he has no claim for general average. The case of Corrie v. Coulthard is consistent with this, because there the finding was that the mast was hopelessly

—I am of the same opinion. I think the ship was hopelessly gone at the time of the rigging, and by hopelessly I mean in common sense, according to the course of human events, it was impossible for the ship to be saved, and the jury found this and were justified in their finding by the evidence. The experts were clear that the ship was gone overboard anyhow, and that it was only hastened it by two or three things which justify a claim for general average. It is not. Where a part of a common adventure is abandoned to save the rest, then all property is saved must contribute to the loss of whose goods have been sacrificed, and the various portions of the ship must be considered as the goods of the master if they are sacrificed to save the cargo; there is no reason why he should bear the loss, and the question to be considered in estimating the value of his loss is what the value of his property would have been had it not been abandoned. It is necessary that there should be a voluntary abandonment, and this case must be decided by an application of that principle. But, where the thing abandoned was in such a condition that it must have been lost anyhow, the hastening on of its destruction is not a voluntary abandonment, and cannot be sufficient ground for contribution. This loss was not caused by the act of the master, but by the peculiar peril of the thing itself.

*Appeal allowed.*Solicitors for plaintiffs, *Lewis and Watson.*Solicitors for the defendants, Hollams, Son, and Coward.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Reported by J. M. LELY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, Feb. 4, 1878.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., MELLOR and MANISTY, JJ.)

Ex parte STOREY.

Wreck Commissioner—Stranding of ship without serious damage—Power of commissioner to suspend master's certificate—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 242, 432, 433—Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 23—Merchant Shipping Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), ss. 29, 32.

The Merchant Shipping Act of 1876 transfers to the Wreck Commissioners appointed under that Act the jurisdiction to suspend certificates conferred upon justices of the peace by prior Merchant Shipping Acts, and does not enlarge such jurisdiction.

By the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, ss. 242, 432, the Board of Trade might suspend the certificate of a master of a ship if upon investigation before justices it was reported that serious damage to the ship was caused by the wrongful act or default of such master.

By the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, s. 23, the jurisdiction of the Board of Trade to suspend the certificate was transferred to the justices themselves.

By the Merchant Shipping Act 1876, s. 29, a "wreck commissioner" has the same jurisdiction and powers as are conferred by the Act of 1854 on two justices, "and all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts of 1854 to 1876 with respect to investigations conducted under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 apply to investigations held by a wreck commissioner."

And by sect. 32 of the same Act, whenever any British ship has been "stranded or damaged," the Board of Trade may cause an inquiry to be made, "and all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act shall apply to any such inquiry as if it had been held under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854."

Held, that the Wreck Commissioner has no jurisdiction to suspend a certificate in a case where a ship has been stranded but not damaged, and a rule for a certiorari to quash the suspension by him of a certificate in such case made absolute.

Q.B. Div.]

Ex parte STORRY.

[Q.B.]

This was a rule for a certiorari to remove into this division the decision and judgment made by H. C. Rothery, Esq., Wreck Commissioner of the United Kingdom, on the 28th Nov. 1877, whereby he directed that the certificate of Mark Storey, the master of the steamship Ayton, should be suspended for six calendar months. The said ship had been stranded, but, according to the finding of the commissioner, neither seriously or materially damaged, off the west coast of the Morea. The question for this court was purely one of law, and turned upon the construction of the following sections of the Merchant Shipping Acts.

Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 242: (a)

The Board of Trade may suspend or cancel the certificate (whether of competency or service) of any master or mate in the following cases (that is to say):

(1) If upon any investigation made in pursuance of the last preceding section, he is reported to be incompetent, or to have been guilty of any gross act of misconduct, drunkenness, or tyranny.

(2) If upon any investigation conducted under the provisions contained in the eighth part of this Act, or upon any investigation made by a naval court constituted as hereinafter mentioned, it is reported that the loss of abandonment of, or serious damage to any ship, or loss of life has been caused by his wrongful act or default.

(3) If he is superseded by the order of any admiralty court or naval court constituted as hereinafter mentioned.

(4) If he is shown to have been convicted of any offence.

(5) If upon any investigation made by any court or tribunal authorised or hereafter to be authorised by the legislative authority in any British possession to make inquiry into charges of incompetency or misconduct on the part of masters or mates of ships, or as to shipwrecks or other casualties affecting ships, a report is made by such court or tribunal to the effect that he has been guilty of any gross act of misconduct, drunkenness, or tyranny, or that the loss or abandonment of or damage to any ship, or loss of life, has been caused by his wrongful act or default, and such report is confirmed by the governor or person administering the government of such possession.

And every master or mate whose certificate is cancelled or suspended shall deliver it to the Board of Trade, or as it directs, and in default shall, for each offence, incur a penalty not exceeding 50*l*; and the Board of Trade may at any subsequent time grant to any person whose certificate has been cancelled a new certificate of the same or of any lower grade.

Sec. 432.

In any of the cases following (that is to say):

Whenever any ship is lost, abandoned, or materially damaged, on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom.

Whenever any ship causes loss or material damage to any other ship on or near such coasts.

Whenever, by reason of any casualty happening to or on board of any ship on or near such coasts, loss of life ensues:

Whenever any such loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty happens elsewhere, and any competent witnesses thereof arrive or are found at any place in the United Kingdom.

It shall be lawful for the inspecting officer of the coast-guard, or the principal officers of customs residing at or near the place where such loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty occurred, if the same occurred on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, but, if elsewhere, at or near the place where such witnesses as aforesaid or are found, or can be consequently summoned, or any other person appointed for the purpose by the Board of Trade, to make inquiry respecting such loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty; and he shall for that purpose have all the powers given by the first part of this Act to the inspectors appointed by the said board.

(a) By s. 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, the power of cancelling or suspending the certificate of master or mate by the 242nd section of the principal Act conferred on the Board of Trade shall (except in the case provided for by the fourth paragraph of the said section) vest in and be exercised by the local marine board, magistrate, naval court, admiralty court, or other court or tribunal by which the case is investigated or tried, and shall not in future vest in or be exercised by the Board of Trade.

Sec. 433:

If it appear to such officer or person as aforesaid either upon or without any such preliminary inquiry as aforesaid, that a formal investigation is requisite or expedient, or if the Board of Trade so direct, he shall apply to any two justices or to a stipendiary magistrate to hear the case; and such justices or magistrate thereupon proceed to hear and try the same, and for that purpose, so far as relates to the attendance of witnesses, the regulation of the proceedings, have the same powers as if the same were a proceeding relating to a criminal cause of complaint upon which they or he have power to make a summary conviction or order, or as if he were a stipendiary magistrate; and it shall be the duty of the officer or person as aforesaid to superintend the management of the case, and to render such assistance to the said justices or magistrate as is in his power; and upon the conclusion of the case the said justices or magistrate shall send a report to the Board of Trade containing a full statement of the case and of their or his opinion thereon, accompanied by such report of or extracts from the evidence, and such observations (if any) as they or he may think fit.

Merchant Shipping Act 1876, sect. 29.

For the purpose of rendering investigations respecting casualties more speedy and effectual, it shall be lawful for the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain to appoint, from time to time, some fit person or persons to be a wreck commissioner or wreck commissioners for the United Kingdom, so that there shall not be more than three such commissioners at any one time, and to remove any such wreck commissioner.

It shall be the duty of a wreck commissioner, on request of the Board of Trade, to hold any formal investigation into a loss, abandonment, damage or casualty under this Act called a shipping casualty, under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, as amended, for the purpose he shall have the same jurisdiction and powers as are thereby conferred on two justices and the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 in relation to respect to investigations conducted under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, shall apply to investigations held by a wreck commissioner.

Sec. 32:

In the following cases:

(1) Whenever any ship on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, or any British ship elsewhere, has been stranded or damaged, and any competent witnesses are found at any place in the United Kingdom.

(2) Whenever a British ship has been lost or abandoned to have been lost, and any competent witnesses obtained in the United Kingdom as to the circumstances under which she proceeded to sea, or last heard of;

the Board of Trade (without prejudice to any powers) may, if they think fit, cause an inquiry to be made, or formal investigation to be held, and the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, as amended, shall apply to any such inquiry or investigation as if it had been made or held under the eighth part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.

C. S. Bowen, for the Board of Trade, read and adopted as his argument the following extract from the judgment of the Wreck Commissioner:—"The 432nd section of the eighth part of section of part VIII. of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, defines certain cases in which an inquiry may be held, these cases being, 'when any ship is lost, abandoned, or materially damaged, or when she has caused loss or material damage to any other ship, or when there has been loss of life;' and it goes on to provide for the appointment to hold the inquiry."

Trade. And sect. 242 of the same the Board of Trade may suspend the certificate of any master or mate if, gation conducted under the pro- gth part of this Act . . . it is loss, or abandonment of, or serious hip, or loss of life, is caused by his default.' Since then, the power spend the certificate has, by the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, from the Board of Trade to the al 'by which the case is investi- And by sect. 33 of the Merchant 76 it is provided that an inquiry whenever any ship on or near the United Kingdom or any British has been stranded or damaged,' rd 'materially;' and it goes on to he provisions of the Merchant 1854 to 1876 shall apply to any investigation as if it had been ler the eighth part of the Merchant 854.' Now it was contended on ster, that on the true construction s, the court has only power to d an officer's certificate if serious age had been done. It was ad- ad full power under the Act to a stranding, and might, if we censure the master for any mis- a we might deem him guilty, but the Legislature has given us no to suspend or cancel his certificate aterial or serious damage having vessel. To this it was first objected, Board of Trade, that in this case aterial or serious damage to the tion of 60 tons of coal. He said ssential that the damage should the vessel; that if, for instance, or rigging had been injured, that aterial or serious damage to the e coals supplied the motive power y must be regarded as a portion t, and that the loss of them would l serious loss. I can quite under- might be a case in which the loss ard a steamer might be a aterial to the vessel, but in this case e o have left Port Said with 200 tons her daily consumption, we are told, ns, and consequently the jettison ould hardly be regarded as a ial damage within the meaning of bound, therefore, to consider ts of Parliament which have been ve power to the court to cancel or cer's certificate in the case of the of a vessel, and without any rial damage having been done to 432nd section of the Merchant 1854, the only cases in which in- held were those in which there or abandonment of, or serious ship, or loss of life;' and in all 242nd section of the same Act ncel or suspend the officer's cer- ne of the objects contemplated tion of the Act of 1876 was to iries to cases of simple stranding, serious or aterial damage had vessel: and it declared that all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 to 1876 should apply to any such inquiry, as if it was an inquiry under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854. The Legislature clearly intended that an inquiry into a case of simple stranding without serious damage should stand in all respects upon precisely the same footing as inquiries under the Act of 1854; and that this is so is obvious from the words of the 29th section of the Act of 1876, which gives the wreck commissioner power to hold an investigation 'into a loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty (in this Act called a ship- ping casualty),' thus ranking them together under one name; and it says that the commis- sioner is to have the same jurisdiction and powers as belong to two justices, and that all the provi- sions of the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 to 1876 shall apply to inquiries held by a wreck com- missioner. If so, and if all the Merchant Shipping Acts from 1854 to 1876, both inclu- sive, are to be read together and to be taken as one Act, may it not be said that it was the intention of the Legislature that in every case in which an inquiry is held, whether aterial damage has or has not been done to the ship, the court should have the power if it thought fit to suspend or cancel the certificate of the master for misconduct? It being admitted that under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 the court would have the power to cancel or suspend the certificate of an officer in any case in which it could hold an inquiry, and the Legislature having decided that the court might hold inquiries in other cases than those contemplated in the Act of 1854, and that the inquiries in the new class of cases should be in all respects placed upon exactly the same foot- ing as inquiries in the old class of cases, it seems to follow that the power of suspending or can- celling the certificates, which is one of the powers referred to, applies to the new equally as to the old cases. The question, I admit, is not free from doubt or difficulty; but, upon the best considera- tion which I can give to it at the present moment, and with the desire to carry out what I believe to be the clear intention of the Legislature, that is the conclusion to which I have come."

MacLachlan, for Mr Storey, supported the rule. —The whole question in this case turns upon the meaning of the 32nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1876. That section no doubt speaks of a ship being "stranded or damaged," and omits any words like "serious or aterial;" but the section only designates the occasion of an inquiry, and confers no further jurisdiction upon the wreck commissioner to punish. Sects. 432 of the Act of 1854 and 29 of the Act of 1876 are in pari materia, and should be read together. In both of them the words "loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty" occur, and it is by them that the jurisdiction to punish is conferred. Sect. 32 is quite different, and only gives a jurisdiction to cause an inquiry to be made. [He was stopped by the Court.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute.

What we have to determine is the effect of the two Merchant Shipping Acts of 1854 and 1876. In consideration of this question, Part viii. of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 must be examined before we turn to sect. 242 of that Act, although sect. 242 precedes that part in respect of arrange- ment of the various sections. The power to annul

Q. B. Div.]

EVANS v. BULLOCK AND OTHERS.

[CP. 18.]

or suspend a certificate depends upon the result of an inquiry ordered under sect. 432. Now, sect. 432 authorises the holding of an inquiry in certain specified cases. Those cases are (1) loss or material damage to ship on or near coasts of the United Kingdom; (2) loss or damage caused to other ship on or near such coasts; (3) casualty causing loss of life on or near such coasts; and (4) loss or damage happening elsewhere, of which there are witnesses in the United Kingdom. The present case comes within none of these categories. Ex concessis no material damage has been done. Turning now to sect. 242, we find that the Board of Trade by that section "may suspend or cancel" the certificate of any master or mate, "if upon any investigation conducted under the provisions contained in the eighth part of this Act, it is reported that the loss or abandonment of or serious damage to any ship or loss of life has been caused by his wrongful act or default." So much for the Act of 1854. The provisions of the Act of 1876, which we have to consider, are sects. 29 and 32. Sect. 29, after providing for the appointment of a wreck commissioner, enacts "that it shall be the duty" of that officer "to hold any formal investigation into a loss, abandonment, damage, or casualty under the eighth part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and for that purpose he shall have the same jurisdiction and powers as are thereby conferred on two justices, and all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 to 1876, with respect to investigations conducted under the eighth part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, shall apply to investigations held by a wreck commissioner." Here we have a repetition of the words "loss and abandonment, damage, or casualty," and a direct reference to the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. We must therefore give the words the same meaning in both Acts.

At first I thought that an enlargement of jurisdiction was intended, but now I see that only a transfer of jurisdiction was intended. But it is said that an enlargement of jurisdiction is effected by sect. 32. To that I cannot agree. Sect. 32 of the Act of 1876 enables the Board of Trade to hold an inquiry only, but gives no power to suspend a master's certificate. If this had been intended by the Legislature specific words would have been used for that purpose. I do not say that it might not be right to extend the jurisdiction to meet those cases where the mere stranding of a ship, without more, may demonstrate the incompetency of a master. But I do say that we should take care not to strain the words of the statute so as to make it comprehend a case which is clearly not within it.

MELLOR, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. After the statement of the clauses of the statutes by the Lord Chief Justice, and his comments upon them, in which I quite concur, I will merely say that I can see no express words conferring the jurisdiction claimed. All that the 32nd section of the Act of 1876 does is to allow an inquiry to be instituted in the cases coming within that section.

MANISTY, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the object of the various sections of the two statutes has been rendered pretty plain by the discussion they have undergone. The words "without prejudice to any other powers" in the 32nd section of the Act of 1876 have reference to the powers given to the Board of Trade in respect to material damage. The section merely authorises an ex parte inquiry.

Rule absolute.

Solicitor for the Board of Trade, The Solicitor to the Board.

Solicitors for Mr. Storey, Oliver and Bates for Botterell and Roche, Sunderland.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION.

Reported by A. H. BITTLESTON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Nov. 9 and Dec. 21, 1877.

(Before DENMAN, J.)

EVANS v. BULLOCK AND OTHERS.

Charter-party—Damages for breach—Cause of action against ship's captain—Port Insurance.

A shipowner entered into a charter-party with a consignee of goods by which he was to deliver them at a good and safe port to be named by the consignee. The consignee named a port, which it was found that the ship could not safely unload, and the captain proceeded elsewhere to unload. The consignee brought an action against the captain for damages for breach of contract elsewhere; the consignee wrote to the shipowner, "We would recommend you to settle the matter in the best way you can." The shipowner defended the action and was ultimately successful; but incurred considerable costs in excess of the amount which the unsuccessful party had to pay. Held, in an action by the shipowner against the consignee, that, such costs not being damages flowing from the consignee's breach of contract, and the consignee not having given authority to the shipowner to incur such costs, the shipowner could not recover them; the amount recoverable by the shipowner is only of port dues was only the difference between what he would have paid had the ship unloaded at the port named, and what he actually did pay; that insurance on the voyage from the port named to a safe port must be taken to have been included in the claim for demurrage, which had been allowed in full.

This was an action tried at Liverpool Summer Assizes 1877, before Denman, J., and reserved for him for further consideration.

Russell, Q.C., Warr, and French for the plaintiff.

Herschell, Q.C. and Myburgh for the defendant. The facts of the case are fully stated in his Lordship's judgment.

DENMAN, J.—This was an action brought in the Common Pleas, and the pleadings were according to the system in force.

The declaration was on a charter-party, in which it was agreed that the plaintiff's ship should load at Akyab, from the factors of the defendants, a full cargo of rice, and then proceed to Queenstown or Falmouth for discharge at a good and safe port in the United Kingdom or on the continent between Hamburg, or so near thereto as she might get without breaking bulk, and deliver on being paid freight after a rate and therein provided, to be discharged with the possible despatch as customary. The declaration further stated that the cargo was not delivered within the stipulated time, 1

[Div.]

EVANS v. BULLOCK AND OTHERS.

[O.P. Div.]

arge at a good and safe port, but at a which was not such; that the ship pro- to such place, or as near as it could safely about breaking bulk; that the defendants not ready there to take delivery, but delayed ip an unreasonable time, and compelled the go to another port and there delayed her, y the plaintiff was deprived of the use of p and was put to expense in removing the a good and safe port, and became liable to es to which he would not otherwise have able, and the ship was damaged by rocks to he otherwise would not have been exposed, s compelled to defend certain proceedings ed against the captain in foreign courts equence of the breaches, and to appeal certain proceedings, and to pay large sums t to such proceedings.

us proved at the trial that on the 17th March e defendants entered into a charter-party rms set out in the declaration. On the Larch bills of lading were signed which ed that the goods were to be delivered at rt of discharge. On the 19th Aug. 1873 p arrived with her cargo of rice at Fal- where Ghent was named as the port of ge, and the captain proceeded on his

The vessel drew 20ft., and could not Ghent itself without lightening her load rably, and proceeding up twenty-one miles al not more than 21ft. deep in

She arrived on the 25th Aug. at e called Terneuyen, and there lay in en river, which was four or five miles at that spot, in a place which was ed was as near Ghent as she could about breaking bulk. On the 29th Aug. aps, who was the consignee of the bill of contended that he was entitled to have the elivered at Ghent proper, the bills of lading ing no express reference to the charter but only the term as to delivering at the discharge as above mentioned. After com- able discussion the plaintiff proposed to take k to the ship of discharging where the ship

Descamps would take the risk of lightering oods to Ghent. This was declined by ups, whereupon the plaintiff communicated e defendants, and being advised that he t able to discharge the whole cargo safely enuyen, sailed to Antwerp on the 18th Sept. rived on the 19th. In the meantime on the e had written to Descamps two letters in- g him that surveyors had reported the place ch the ship lay to be highly dangerous to t to discharge the whole cargo, and that he was the fact, given notice to the defendants f before a day named they did not name good and safe port to discharge at, he l send the ship to Antwerp, where he e ready to deliver the cargo, holding them ible for all loss or damage which had d or might result from non-compliance he charter-party. The defendants on receipt notice on the 17th Sept. wrote as follows plaintiff's broker, who had forwarded the t's notice to them: "Dear sir,—We have fer- the notice from the owners of the ve long ago sold the cargo and transferred arter, and we must therefore request the of the vessel to exercise his lien on the cargo for freight and all charges as he may be advised.—Bullock and Co." The ship having arrived at Antwerp on the 19th, the plaintiff on the 22nd wrote to the defendants announcing that fact, and stating that she was there moored in a safe place waiting to deliver her cargo, and that no application had been made for it. The letter then proceeded as follows: "If the cargo is not applied for within three days, the ship will be sent into dock and the cargo warehoused at the expense of whom it may concern, but with- out prejudice to my lien on the cargo, and also reserving my right to take legal steps to enforce the same by any means legally authorised for the recovery of the freight and all other charges which are or may become due." No answer was sent to this letter. On the 25th Sept. Descamps commenced proceedings in the court at Antwerp against the captain of the ship, claiming damages for non-delivery of the cargo at Ghent. The plaintiff, before being aware of these proceed- ings, made arrangements for unloading, which was commenced on the 29th. On the 30th the plaintiff wrote to the defendants as follows: "I beg to inform you that the freight on the Nydia's cargo has been arranged to be paid after the delivery of 100 tons, the demand for its de- livery at Ghent to be settled by the Antwerp tribunal. As regards the claim for loss of time, double port charges, expenses of moving to a safe port, an accident while moving, and all other charges, I am advised that any claim for the losses should be made, not on the consignee, but on you as charterers, &c." To this letter the defendants replied as follows: "Oct. 1st, 1873, Dear sir,—We have your favour of yesterday, and can only reply by referring you to our letter of the 17th ult. to your broker, requesting you to exercise your lien on the cargo for freight and all charges. At the same time we would recommend you to settle the matter the best way you can.—Yours, Bullock and Co." Descamps took delivery of the cargo, and paid the freight in the manner stipulated, under reserve of all his rights, the captain giving bail for 1400*l.* to get at his freight.

It was agreed at the trial that the opinion of the jury should be taken only on the question, viz., as to the number of days for which, and the rate at which, the plaintiff should be allowed damages for the detention of the vessel, and no question arises as to the liability of the defendants to pay the 504*l.* assessed by the jury on that account. As to the other heads of damage claimed, it was arranged that the principle upon which they were to be assessed should be laid down by me after argument on further consideration, and that if after my judgment any question of amount remained in dispute, it should be settled by an arbitrator to be agreed upon between the parties.

Upon the argument before me, the plaintiffs, in addition to the sum of 504*l.* assessed by the jury as damages for detention, claimed several other items of damage of which particulars had been de- livered. The most important of these was a claim of 596*l.* for the costs to which the plaintiff had been put in defending the litigation which took place at the suit of the consignee of the cargo in Belgium, and in his appeal from the deci- sion of the court of first instance, which was against the captain of the ship. The exact nature of this litigation was not very fully explained by the evidence, but it is enough to state that it was a claim by Descamps for damages alleged to have been sustained by him by not sending the ship to Ghent proper; and that the plaintiff, though ultimately successful on appeal, was 596l. out of pocket for the costs of the proceedings beyond the sum allowed by the court.

I am of opinion that he is not entitled to recover such costs as damages from the defendants in the action. The only grounds upon which damages could be claimed would be, first, if they were the natural or necessary consequences of the defendants' breach of contract; or, secondly, if there were evidence in the case of any authority from the defendants to the plaintiff to incur these costs.

As to the first of these grounds it appears to me that the refusal of the defendants to take delivery of the cargo at Terneuyen cannot be said to have any relation at all to the claim of Descamps in respect of which he brought his action and claimed damages for non-delivery at Ghent proper. That was an erroneous contention founded upon a supposed want of sufficient reference in the bill of lading to the charter-party to bind the consignee of the bill of lading to the stipulation of the charter-party as to not breaking bulk, and although it may be true that the proceedings of Descamps would never have been instituted if the defendants had not broken this contract, I can see nothing in that breach of contract either naturally leading to, or still less necessitating, Descamps' proceedings, or so connecting them with the defendants' breach of contract as to make them, or the resistance to them, a natural or necessary consequence of such breach. The costs incurred do not seem to me to be damages flowing from the defendants' breach of contract, but costs incurred by the plaintiff in defending himself against a totally independent and unfounded claim made by Descamps on a ground different from and unconnected with the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendants.

The second ground upon which it was sought to add the claim in question to the damages to be recovered was that it appeared upon the correspondence that the defendants had given actual authority to incur them. But I can find nothing in the correspondence or evidence to warrant me in so holding. The letters which I have set out above, so far as they are material to this question, instead of making out a request or authority to the plaintiff to defend the proceedings, seem to me to make out the very contrary. The defendants' letter of the 17th Sept., written after notice that the plaintiff would send the ship to Antwerp if the defendants did not name a good safe port within three days, and hold the defendants responsible for all loss and damage which had resulted or might result from non-compliance with the charter-party, goes on, "We long ago sold the cargo, and transferred the charter; we must therefore request the owner of the vessel to exercise his lien on the cargo for freight and all charges." This appears to me not in any way to contemplate such a litigation as afterwards ensued at the suit of Descamps, and even if it did, the answer of the defendants is anything but an authority to the plaintiffs to litigate. Descamps' proceeding, in fact, did not commence until the 25th Sept. In the plaintiff's letter of 30th Sept. there is no mention of the expenses of litigation; only an allusion to Descamps' demand for delivery at Ghent, in connection with the other arrangement made him about the payment of freight after a of each 100 tons. The expression "other charges" in that letter cannot, I think, be construed to include Descamps' claim, or anything else resisting it; and the expression in the defendants' letter of the 1st Oct., "we would recommend to settle the matter in the best way you see fit," seems to me to amount to no more than the "take your own course," used in the case of Hadley v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company (L. Rep. 10 Ex. 35), which appears to be in point upon this as well as upon the ground upon which it was contended that the damages were allowable. On the whole I am of opinion that they must be disallowed.

In addition to the above claims the plaintiff contended that he was entitled to a sum for port charges incurred. It was not contended that some damages would be recoverable under the bill of lading, but it was urged that the plaintiff's particulars had claimed too much by not making allowance for those port charges to which he would have been liable in any event, if the discharge had taken place at Terneuyen. The only rule that it is necessary to lay down in reference to this part of the case is that the arbitrator must ascertain the difference between the port charges actually incurred by the plaintiff at Antwerp and at Terneuyen (if any), and add to the plaintiff the difference between the amount of these and the total amount which he would have had to pay if the discharge had taken place at Terneuyen; such difference to be added to the damages found by the jury.

A claim was made for insurance on the cargo from Antwerp to Terneuyen, on the ground that it is a matter of course that cargo should be insured; and resisted on the ground, inasmuch as insurance being assumed to be provided for must be taken to be a part of the fair expenses of the shipowner, provided for in the claim for demurrage. I think the latter argument ought to prevail, especially in a case where, at the present, the whole amount per diem claimed for demurrage was allowed, and that this claim cannot be supported.

There was also a minor claim for damages by stranding on the voyage from Terneuyen to Antwerp, which was abandoned upon the argument before me, therefore I need not notice it. There was also a charge for extra expenses said to have been incurred by the plaintiff for those which would fairly be covered by the claim for demurrage, and it was not contended that if there were any such these should be assessed by the arbitrator and added to the damages.

As to the items not yet reduced to a sum from what passed on the argument I think there is not likely to be much dispute, and not even any necessity for going to the arbitrator at all. Probably it will be convenient for the court to suspend final judgment until I receive a report from the arbitrator, or a compromise between the parties as to the amount for which it is claimed.

Judgment for plaintiff for 504l.; and costs to residue.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Field & Co., agents for Bateson and Co., Ltd.
Solicitors for the defendants, Field & Co.
Coward.

P. Div.]

ELMORE AND ANOTHER v. HUNTER.

[O.P. Div]

Friday, Dec. 7, 1877.

(Before GROVE and LINDLEY, JJ.)

ELMORE AND ANOTHER v. HUNTER.

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

was towed by steam-tug — Worked or navigated" — "In charge of" — Thames Conservancy Act, bye-law 16—22 & 23 Vict. c. 33, s. 66.

66 of the Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act 1859 provides that no barge shall be "worked or navigated" unless "in charge of" a licensed lighterman.

that barges being towed by a steam-tug were "worked or navigated," and that, in order to comply with the Act, each of such barges must have a licensed lighterman on board.

was a case stated by a Metropolitan police magistrate, sitting at Southwark police court, - 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

the appellants, barge-owners, trading under the name of Elmore and Scott, were summoned by the respondent on a charge for that, on the 25th Aug. 1877, they did unlawfully and permit two barges, used for the carrying of goods and merchandise, to be "worked or navigated" within the limits of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 33, without having in charge each craft a licensed lighterman or qualified person, contrary to the provisions of the 66th section of that Act. Sect. 66 of 22 & 23 Vict.

(Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act) is as follows: "No barge, lighter, boat, or other like craft, for the carrying of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be worked or navigated within the limits of this Act (Teddington Lock to Lower Hope Point), unless there be in charge of such craft a lighterman, licensed in accordance with the provisions hereinafter mentioned; or an apprentice, qualified as hereinafter mentioned; and no such craft be navigated in contravention of the provisions of this section, the owner shall incur a penalty not exceeding 5l." It was proved that on the day in question six barges, the property of the appellant, were being towed together within the said limit, near London Bridge, by the steam-tug the Britain, and that on two of the six there was no such licensed lighterman or qualified person in charge. It was argued, on behalf of the appellants, that the barges in tow of a steam-tug were not being "worked" or "navigated" within the meaning of the Act, so as to necessitate the employment of a licensed or qualified man in charge of them. The magistrate being of opinion that the offence defined by sect. 66 had been committed, convicted and fined the appellant. The respondent, on the opinion of the court was, whether the barges were being "worked" or "navigated" within sect. 66. If the court should be of opinion that the barges were not being "worked" or "navigated" within sect. 66, then the conviction to be set aside, otherwise to stand. It appeared that, in a previous case, another magistrate had decided in favour of the appellants.—It is admitted by the respondent that there was a licensed lighterman on the tug. The bye-laws are passed under sect. 66 of the Act, which says that "the Court of Masters, Wardens and Assistants are hereby empowered from time to time to make such bye-laws as they may think proper . . . for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act . . . so that the same bye-laws be not inconsistent with any of the laws of this kingdom, or with this Act, or with any bye-laws, rules, orders or regulations made or to be made by the Conservators of the River Thames under the authority of the Thames Conservancy Act 1857, or of any Act for the time being in force relating to the conservancy of the river Thames." Looking at bye-law 16 of the Thames Conservancy Act, made by the Conservators of the River Thames under the authority of that Act, the words "work or navigate" in sect. 36 of the Watermen Act cannot refer to a barge being towed by a steam-tug. In bye-law 16 there is an express reservation in favour of a barge so being towed. The words are: "All barges, boats, lighters, and other like craft navigating the river, shall, when under way, have at least one competent man constantly on board for the navigation and management thereof . . . with the following exceptions: When being towed by a steam vessel," &c. [LINDLEY, J. referred to the bye-laws made under the Thames Watermen Act; the 60th providing that every steam-tug shall have one licensed waterman on board, and that "every barge, lighter, or craft, towed on the river by steamboats, shall have one licensed lighterman or licensed apprentice at least in charge thereof, to steer and navigate the same; and if the same shall be navigated in contravention of this section, the owner thereof, or the person in charge of any such craft, shall incur a penalty not exceeding forty shillings." GROVE, J.—By the Thames Conservancy bye-law there is to be a competent man on board, by the Thames Watermen bye-law a licensed lighterman; but that may mean the same thing.] The 60th bye-law under the Thames Watermen Act is clearly inconsistent with sect. 66 of the Act, the one imposing a penalty not exceeding 40s., the other a penalty not exceeding 5l.; or, if not inconsistent, the bye-law contemplates an offence not provided for by the section otherwise the penalty would be the same. [LINDLEY, J.—One may merely be a provision carrying out the other.] The 60th bye-law being confined to vessels being towed, would be unnecessary if sect. 66 covered those. [GROVE, J.—Why did they not proceed under the bye-law?] Because this bye-law is inconsistent with the bye-laws under the Thames Conservancy Act, and as it would, therefore, by sect. 80 of the Thames Watermen Act, have no force, they fell back upon this section in the Act. [GROVE, J.—Surely it is unsafe for a vessel being towed not to have someone to steer.] Their 16th bye-law—already quoted—shows that at all events the Conservators of the Thames did not think it necessary. Then nothing can be said to be "worked or navigated" unless it has a motive power of its own.

Bedford Pym, for the respondent, exhibited a model, and explained how the barges were fastened together and to the steamer. [He was stopped by the Court.]

GROVE, J.—The question we have to decide in this case turns upon the proper construction of sect. 66 of the Thames Watermen Act. I do not think that we can control that Act by any bye-laws. They may be inconsistent with the Act, in which case they are bad; or they may, without being absolutely inconsistent, be expressed less fully, as, for instance, where the bye-law says a competent man is necessary and the Act says a licensed lighterman. There is no inconsistency there, as all that the Act does is to add another condition to the bye-law, viz., that the competent man must be a licensed man. Therefore, the real point is the proper construction of sect. 66, which is as follows: [Reads it.]

The case finds that on the occasion in question six barges were being towed together by the steam-tug Little Britain, and that on two out of the six there was no lighterman in charge; in other words, no person to attend to either of them. The question is whether four persons can be said to be in charge of six barges. I am of opinion that they cannot. We must construe this provision according to its object; and it appears to us that there was no person in charge of this craft, so as to fulfil the object of the Act.

First, there was no person actually in physical charge of these two barges, and there is nothing to show that in case of sudden necessity the four men who were in charge of the other barges could get across to render assistance; secondly, there was no person in charge of them, so as to have thorough control over them—control such as in an emergency might prevent their being swamped or sunk or, being an object of danger to other vessels.

Then as to the meaning of "worked or navigated," those words do not seem to me to be limited to the mere propelling of the vessel by the tug; because, if that were so, there might be an indefinite number of barges being towed in a long line, and they would be wholly beyond the control of the tug on turning a corner in the river. Suppose the case I put to Mr. Sutton in argument of a horse towing along the tow-path. What difference is there between that case and a towing by a steamer? The barge, while being towed, is "worked and navigated," partly by the steamer that is towing it and partly by the person on the barge. I am of opinion, therefore, that the Act applies to barges so being towed, and that each of such barges should have one man in charge of it. Each barge must have, to a certain extent, an independent course, and therefore not be wholly navigated by the mere propelling power of the steamer. There may be cases where two barges are so substantially united as to form one barge, and where it might be arguable that the whole really formed one craft. That clearly was not so in the present case. Had it been, even then I am inclined to think that the Act would be infringed, unless there was a man on each barge.

LINDLEY, J.—The case submitted to us involves two questions: first, whether these barges were being worked or navigated within sect. 66 of the Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act; and if they were, whether they were in charge of a licensed lighterman within the meaning of that section.

As to the first question, whether these barges were being worked or navigated within the meaning of the section, it seems to be clear that they were. I say this with all respect for Mr. Arnold, who, we hear, came to a different conclusion when a similar case was before him. Being worked and navigated means being moved about no matter how. Assuming that to be so, was sect. 66 complied with in this case?

Now, there were here six barges and four men. It might happen that the barges should be so coupled together as that two of them would practically form one boat, and I can well imagine that in such a case four men might be sufficient for six barges. The Act does not say that there must be a lighterman on board of, but "in charge of such craft." Was there then a lighterman in charge of these two barges? Supposing that things went wrong, and it became necessary to set the barges adrift, it is obvious that it would be essential that each barge should have a qualified man on board of her.

Then, as to bye-law 16 of those made under the Thames Conservancy Act, it cannot override the words of this Act. As I read it, it is inconsistent with the Act, as it exempts barges being towed by a steam-vessel from the necessity of having a competent man on board. But we are construing the Act of Parliament, and have nothing to do with any bye-laws that are inconsistent with it.

The conviction must, therefore, be upheld.

GROVE, J.—I desire to add that I agree that the bye-law of the Thames Conservancy is inconsistent with the 66th section of the Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act.

Conviction upheld, with costs.
Solicitors for the appellants, Lowless and Co.
Solicitor for the respondent, William Ellis.

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

ADMIRALTY BUSINESS.

Reported by J. P. ASTFALL and F. W. RANKIN, Esq.
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, Nov. 16, 1877.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE SKIBLANDER.

Salvage—Skill—Infectious disease—Amount of Apportionment.

The loan of a navigator to a vessel in distress by reason of her own navigators being incapacitated by an infectious disease, is a service on the part of the ship lending navigator.

It is a salvage service of a very high order on the part of a navigator to go on board an enemy's vessel and navigate her.

This was an action of salvage brought by the owners, master, and crew of the Norwegian barque Hirundo against the Norwegian barque Skiblander, her cargo and freight, for services rendered to that vessel whilst on a voyage from Panama in the State of Florida, to Liverpool.

It appeared that the Hirundo, a barque of 360 tons register, was on a voyage from Tampico, Mexico, to Queenstown for orders, laden with cargo of mahogany, and was manned by a crew of eight hands, including her master and mate. There were the only two persons on board having knowledge of navigation; that her proper complement was nine hands, but that one man was ill, and that her master was, to a great extent, an invalid, incapable of great exertion.

On 26th Aug., in lat. 36deg. N., lon. 80deg. W., she fell in with the Skiblander, a Norwegian barque of 360 tons register, and laden with cargo of turpentine, and of the value, together with cargo and freight, of 5135*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* It appeared that her captain and his wife, and second mates, were all ill with yellow fever, so that there was no one on board capable of taking up the log or taking an observation of the position of the ship. The ok observations and communicated of the vessel to those on board the and kept company with her till night she was lost sight of. On let at. 37deg. 58min. N., long. 68deg. the Hirundo fell in with the Skib- a, with signals of distress flying, and that in the interval the captain's he first mate had died of yellow at, in addition to the captain and second f the seamen had fallen ill with it. circumstances, Osman Osmandsen, the Hirundo, went on board the to navigate her to England; he also oyage had to attend to the sick and seaman, the vessel being so short- uring the voyage the master, second o seamen of the Skiblander died of and the mate of the Hirundo himself erely. On the 11th Oct. the vessel verpool.

dants did not deny the services, but to court, with a tender of costs. The their reply, submitted that the sum art was not sufficient remuneration rice.

The cause came on for hearing t. Phillimore, assisted by two of the en of the Trinity House as assessors.

Phillimore (with him Barnes) for .—The sum of 515*l.* is quite insuff- perils incurred by the salvors; the nt on board did so at the imminent life continuing through the whole long voyage, and those who re- board the Hirundo ran great risk that they had only one navigator on is an invalid, besides the danger of m having held communication with ard an infected ship. In a similar xive (14 Jur. 606, Prit. Digest, 348), lue of 4300*l.*, an award of 1500*l.* the recent case of The See Nympha (a) 1876.—The See Nympha was a canoe d by the owners, master, and crew of man Empire of Peace against the German phs to recover salvage. The Empire of rith the See Nympha off the West Coast use 1876, and found that the captain of he and some of the crew had died of and that the mate and the rest of the ill as to be incapable of navigating her. he was bound from Opobo to Seilly for he second mate and two seamen of the ce volunteered to board the See Nympha, king some medicine with them, and they vessel to Seilly after fifty-two days on board. he at the time they went on board had stor in her hold, and, in consequence of board, the dirt and stench on board were the voyage another of the crew of the ed, and none of them were able to render except in steering. The value of the See greed to be 7500*l.*

J.C., and W. G. F. Phillimore appeared for e of the Empire of Peace.

the owners and some of the crew of the ee; Clarkson for the owners of the See

LMORE.—This is a case which appears to e one of extraordinary merit, in which unity, and skill in navigation are con- , in my opinion, the evidence establishes the services of these three men, the ship would certainly, and the lives of the crew an award of 1400*l.* was made on a value of 7500*l.*, and then the fever on board the salvaged ship was African and not yellow fever, and therefore not infectious.

B. O. Clarkson for defendants.—In the latitude in which the Skiblander was fallen in with, yellow fever is no longer infectious, and so the nature of the services is much exaggerated. The circumstances in The Active (ubi sup.) were very different; two-thirds of the crew were dead, and the vessel still in the tropics, and a seaman as well as an officer were lent. The tender is sufficient.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case, in the judgment of the court, of most meritorious salvage. It is almost impossible to praise too highly the gallantry of the man Osman Osmandsen under the circumstances, or to doubt that the preservation of the lives of those who were on board, and of the vessel itself, were due to his courage and skill. The navigation lasted, I think, for forty-two days, and for a distance of about 3000 miles. It is unnecessary that I should go over the facts, which have been clearly and properly stated in, and read to the court to-day from, the statement of claim. They constitute a case, as I have already said, of extraordinary merit. The peril of yellow fever, in the judgment of those who advise me, was by no means over at the time when the man Osman Osmandsen went on board, and it has been pointed out to me that it is no uncommon thing to require a vessel which comes into port with yellow fever on board to remain in quarantine for some days when she has been long out of the latitude and longitude where the fever was caught. Looking to all the circumstances of the case, I have to consider whether, out of 5,135*l.*, the sum of 515*l.* is a sufficient tender. I am of opinion that it is not. I shall award 900*l.* and costs.

Phillimore asked the court to apportion the award amongst the salvors.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I have to remember in the apportionment that the Hirundo parted with one of her navigators, and retained only one on board, and that he was in very bad health himself, and liable to have caught the yellow fever, for he had been, I think, twice on board the Skiblander. It was, under the circumstances, a serious peril to her to part with one of the only two persons on board capable of navigating. But the greater salvor—if I may use the expression, the hero of these services—was Osman Osmandsen, and I shall allot to him 600*l.*, and 300*l.* to the Hirundo, and, this being not a steamer but a sailing vessel, I shall, of the 300*l.*, allot 100*l.* to the owner, 50*l.* to the master, and the remainder to the crew, according to their ratings.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Bateson and Co.

Solicitors for defendants, Stone and Fletcher.

on board of her probably, have been lost. I bear in mind that the disease was not of a contagious or infectious character, and that the ship seems to have sustained very little injury, and to have encountered favourable weather. Bearing these circumstances in mind, I must endeavour to apply the principles always governing salvage awards in this court. I consider that in giving a liberal reward in cases of this description the interest of navigation, as well as of humanity, will be greatly benefited. I shall award 1400*l.*; 400*l.* to the mate, 300*l.* to each of the men, and 300*l.* to the master owners of the Empire of Peace.

ADM.]

THE OQUENDO.

Jan. 25, 26, 28, 29, and 30, 1878.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE OQUENDO.

Practice—Pleading—Counter-claim—Damage to cargo—Improper stowage—Delay—General average—Adjustment.

Damage to cargo occasioned by salt water does not come within the excepted perils when by reason of the place in which it is stowed it is exceptionally liable to such damage in severe weather.

Where to a claim for damage to cargo, a counter-claim of general average is set up, it is not necessary that such general average should have been adjusted; but if the evidence supports the fact of a general average loss having been sustained, the amount thereof together with the amount of loss sustained through damage to the cargo will be referred to the registrar and merchants to report.

Semble, since the passing of the Judicature Acts the Admiralty Division has acquired a right to entertain a claim for a general average loss which the High Court of Admiralty did not possess. (a)

THIS was an action in rem for damage to cargo, brought by Messrs. F. and A. Delcomyn against the Spanish barque Oquendo under the provisions of the Admiralty Court Act 1861.

The plaintiffs were indorsees of bills of lading for and owners of a cargo of sugar laden on board the Oquendo at Havana, and carried by her in the first instance into Queens-town and subsequently to London, where it was discharged in a damaged condition, occasioned, as the plaintiffs alleged, by the negligence of the defendants in stowing it and in delaying it at Queens-town. The defendants pleaded that there had been no negligence, but that the damage was caused by bad weather, an excepted peril of the sea; the defendants also counter-claimed for an amount of money which they alleged to be due to them from the owners of the cargo for a general average contribution in respect of certain property of the defendants jettisoned and cut away during the continuance of the bad weather for the good of the adventure.

The statement of claim, delivered 22nd Jan. 1878, besides alleging the plaintiffs' claim to the cargo as indorsees of the bill of lading, and that it was one of the terms of the said bill of lading that the ship should put into Falmouth for orders, and thence to a market, proceeded:

4. The said ship did not duly prosecute her said voyage in accordance with the said bill of lading, but deviated therefrom without sufficient cause, and wrongfully delayed the prosecution thereof, and put into Queens-town, and, although the said master applied to the plaintiffs for orders, and was duly ordered by the plaintiffs to proceed to London, being a market within the meaning of the said bill of lading, he neglected to do so, and delayed his said voyage, and stayed at Queens-town with his vessel for an unreasonable time, whereby the said cargo sustained damage, and the plaintiffs were put to loss and inconvenience, and were deprived of profits which they would otherwise have made by the sale of the said goods.

(a) The cases by which it has been held that the High Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for general average contribution, are not referred to by name in the arguments of counsel or the judgment of the court, but for convenience of reference are given here. They are: The Constantia (4 Notes of Cases, 677); and The North Star (1 Lush. 50; 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 264).

5. The defendants, although not prevented by danger or accident of the sea, did not deliver the sugar in accordance with the said bill of lading like good order and condition as that in which it was shipped, and, on the contrary, delivered the same to the plaintiffs in a greatly damaged condition.

And claimed damages for the breach of contract and breach of duty, and a reference to the registrar and merchants to assess the amount of such damage.

The statement of defence and counter-claim delivered the 23rd Jan. 1878, besides denying generally the allegations of the statement of claim, alleged that the cargo was not carried on the "terms of the bill of lading only, but on the terms of the said bill of lading and of the charter-party referred to in the said bill of lading," and that "it was a term of the said charter-party that the Oquendo should sail for Queens-town, Falmouth or Plymouth to receive orders," and that the damage that in consequence of bad weather, and the ship being thrown on her beam ends, it had been necessary, to enable her to right and for the safety of the ship and cargo, and of the adventure, to cut or let go "various ropes, in consequence of which several sails attached thereto were blown away and lost," and also to throw overboard a great number of articles, and that the Oquendo shipped a great deal of water. It then stated that the ship arrived into Queens-town on the 28th Nov., and that the master at once communicated with the plaintiffs and that he received orders to proceed to London on 5th Dec.; that she was detained at Queens-town till the 10th Dec., refitting, and by bad weather, and "that if any damage was done to the cargo, such damage was occasioned by matters excepted in the bill of lading, to wit, the dangers and accidents of the sea;" and then, by way of counter-claim, the defendants repeated the allegations of the defence as to loss sustained by the cargo, and alleged that "such loss was a general average loss, and that the plaintiffs by their admissions were bound to contribute to the same," and that they had signed a bill of lading to which the defendants referred, and continued:

3. The plaintiffs' proportion of such loss has not been ascertained, but is about 200%, and claimed:

1. Judgment against the plaintiffs for the amount of 200%, or such sum as shall be found to be the proportion of the said general average loss.
2. A reference, if necessary, to ascertain the amount of the said general average loss, and of the plaintiffs' proportion thereof.
3. The costs of this action.

To this defence and counter-claim the plaintiffs delivered a reply on the 24th Jan. 1878, which was a general denial of the allegations of the defence inconsistent with the claim, proceeded:

3. With regard to the defendants' counter-claim the plaintiffs say, that before this action was commenced, on the delivery of the cargo, the defendants were ordered to sign, and they did sign and deliver to the plaintiffs a bill of lading in the usual form, whereby it was agreed between the plaintiffs and defendants that all questions, if any, relating to general average should be referred to the arbitrator named in the charter-party, and that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendants any general average contribution to them by law, after the same had been ascertained, and the plaintiffs further say that they were always been ready and willing to carry out the agreement and to pay any general average contribution by law, but the defendants have not allowed a general average to be made up or ascertained, and have determined in accordance with the said bill of lading never given them any particulars thereon.

[.]

THE OQUENDO.

[ADM.]

ted to them any general average statement, nor by their said counter-claim made any application to the court for general average.

this reply the defendants, on the same day, 15th Jan. 1878, delivered a rejoinder, which was a simple joinder of issue.

bill of lading, dated Havana, 18th Oct. 1877, was, so far as is material to the question of general average, in the following form: "Shipped, &c. . . now lying in the port of Havana, and bound for Falmouth, and a market . . . to be sold, &c., . . . on paying freight for the goods as per charter-party. In witness, The charter-party referred to was of the date, 18th Oct. 1877, and was in the Spanish language. After the usual stipulations as to the condition of the ship, a certain translation proceeds: "with which cargo she will for Queenstown, Falmouth, or Plymouth, give orders, to go to discharge in a safe port will be named amongst those that are hereafter mentioned, or direct to one of the said ports;" and then follow various stipulations as to the order of freight payable in the event of proceeding direct, or after calling at a port for orders, in the United Kingdom, or on the coast between Bordeaux and Antwerp.

an average agreement or bond, referred to in the counter-claim and reply, was dated the 17th Oct. 1877, and made between Yeaves and Co., for the owners of the Oquendo, of the first part, and the owners of the cargo of the second part, and after setting out that it was alleged that a general average loss had been sustained by the cargo, continued:

"they, the said parties hereto of the second part, do hereby promise and agree to bear and pay on demand the said Yeaves and Co., or to such person or persons as they shall authorise to receive the same, the full amount of proportion which is due and payable by them, in respect of the second part, in respect of the cargo or averages, charges, and expenses. And, that, in case any dispute shall arise between the parties hereto of the second part, or any of them, and the said Yeaves and Co., touching the amount to be paid by the said parties hereto of the second part in respect of the average or averages, charges, and expenses, and, that, they the said parties hereto of the second part do hereby required, enter into and execute an agreement or engagement for referring the said disputes to the arbitration and determination of a proper competent person or persons, and competent persons.

25.—The cause came on for hearing before Sir R. Phillimore, assisted by two of the Elders of the Trinity House as assessors.

It appeared from the evidence that the damaged cargo was principally stowed either partially beneath the floor of the forepeak, which was raised from the hold by a bulkhead nearly up to the floor, and nearly underneath a scuttle which frequently opened during the voyage, or in the neighbourhood of the mainmast, chain plates, and pump well; there was also some cargo done to that stowed in other parts of the ship. On proof of the charter-party the claim on the part of deviation was given up. There was no contradictory evidence both as to the amount and nature of the damage.

29.—Butt, Q.C. (with him J. O. Mathew) for the plaintiffs.—The story of the weather contained in the log and protest, and given by the plaintiffs' witnesses, is inconsistent with the results of survey held on the ship. Had the weather been the cause of the damage we should not have found the damage at the bottom but at the sides of the ship, where the straining would take place, in the wake of the chain plates. The delay at Queenstown was quite unnecessary. The trifling repairs could be executed in two or three days, and the weather was not such as to detain the ship. They were pumping up sugar, and therefore the captain must have known that there was damage to the cargo, and that it would rapidly deteriorate, and therefore it was his duty to press on his voyage. The damage was caused by improper stowage of the cargo both as to place in which it was stowed and from insufficiency of dunnage. With regard to the counter-claim, even supposing that the evidence supports the allegation that a general average loss has been sustained, which I do not admit, such a claim cannot be recovered in this action. The proper method, even independently of an agreement to refer, is to have the amount settled before an average adjuster. An adjustment stating the amount due is a condition precedent to recovering it. The reason of the bond is, that whilst owners of cargo are liable at common law for general average, the mere consignees are not, but to get delivery, and as an inducement to the master to waive his lien on the cargo, they promise to take the liability on themselves instead of leaving the shipowner to his remedy against the owners of cargo resident abroad. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Do you contend that the claim made by the defendants in their counter-claim is bad altogether?] It does not matter whether the defendants can or cannot raise a claim for general average contribution in this court when the amount of their claim has been ascertained in the usual way. Until that time there is no cause of action. There has been no demand for payment at all, and therefore no refusal to pay. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—If you contend that the counter-claim raises no cause of action, should not that question have been raised by the pleadings or on a motion to strike out the counter-claim?] The question is raised by the reply. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—May it not be that, though the time has not come at which an action could be brought on the claim for a general average contribution, yet that, under the provisions of the Judicature Act, it is competent to a defendant to plead it by way of counter-claim to an action brought against him, in reference to the same transaction, by a person from whom he will ultimately be able to recover.] No, a counter-claim only lies for a matter which might be the subject of a cross action or of an original action. Here there is at present no cause of action. There is no breach of the provisions of the bond or agreement on which an action could be brought. As a matter of fact the question of general average does not arise, and as a matter of law there is no question to raise. Suppose, however, there should, in an adjustment of general average in the action, prove to be more money due to the defendants than there is to us for the damage done to our cargo, it would be most unjust that they should get their costs when we could not have paid the claim sooner if we would, and have never refused to pay it when due.

Milward, Q.C. (with him W. G. F. Phillimore) for the defendants.—It is perfectly competent for a defendant to raise a claim of this description by way of set-off or counter-claim. The average agreement is not a bond—it is not under seal. It is merely a promise on the part of the plaintiffs to give a true account of the value of the cargo, and a promise to pay general average, and, if we choose so to arrange, to refer any dispute we prefer under the circumstances not to an average adjuster, but to come to this court. The agreement to refer under certain circumstances does not oust the jurisdiction of the court. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Before the Judicature Acts I had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim of general average, but I understand that it is admitted that since the coming into operation of these statutes I have jurisdiction. Butt, Q.C.—I do not admit that this court has jurisdiction in such a matter; but I rely on the point that no court could have jurisdiction to entertain the claim in its present form.] On the facts is there any evidence to show that this is not a perfectly bona fide case? The evidence of those who must know most about the circumstances is not contradicted in any way. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Evidence which is not from its nature capable of direct contradiction may yet be discredited in two ways; either by its own inherent improbability, or by a subsequently ascertained state of facts not being consistent with it.] Yes; but our uncontradicted evidence is clearly not in itself so improbable as to induce the court to discredit it, and the subsequently ascertained state of facts is, that we did throw overboard a great variety of things from the deck of our ship, and it is inconceivable that we should have done so for the purpose of receiving a proportion only of their value as general average. The delay at Queenstown was reasonable; it would have been perilous to sail again in the middle of winter without sails to replace those we had lost before arrival; and after we had got the sails the wind and weather were not favourable for a prudent master to set sail.

ADM.]

THE OQUENDO.

[A

Butt, Q.C. in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 30.—Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE.—The Oquendo is a Spanish barque of 390 tons, of which no owner or part owner was at the time of the commencement of this action domiciled in England or Wales. The plaintiffs are merchants carrying on business in London, and were the owners of the cargo. The Oquendo left the Havana on the 20th Oct. last, and reached Queenstown on Nov. 28. Her cargo consisted of 2343 boxes of sugar, containing 958,219lb. net, Spanish weight. It was, according to the bill of lading, to be carried to Falmouth for orders; but according to the charter-party these terms were enlarged, and the vessel was to carry the cargo to Queenstown, Falmouth, or Plymouth, and there receive orders. The cargo was put on board in good condition, and was taken out in bad condition. It appears from the evidence supplied by the log, and the protest and the testimony of the Spanish master and crew, who were examined at great length, that the vessel encountered bad weather on her voyage from the Havana to Queenstown, more especially on the 17th and 24th Nov. [His Lordship then read a certified translation of the entries in the log for those two days, and proceeded:] In the protest, for some reason not satisfactorily explained, there is no account of the events which took place on the 17th, but there is of those of the 24th, much in the same terms and language as in the log. A good deal of discussion took place as to what was the proper translation of the Spanish word manguera—whether a cyclone or a squall appears to be doubtful; but it was, in effect, a violent storm of wind and rain, and the effect, according to the log, was to throw the vessel on her beam ends. I should say also that the evidence is that the vessel was on her beam ends on the 24th Nov. for a considerable time, varying from one to two hours according to the different statements. The vessel, being in this condition on the 24th, arrived at Queenstown on the 28th, apparently in no distress, without making no water, and requiring, as the bill of lading has been put in prove, very small repairs, refitting amounting strictly to not more than for work that was absolutely necessary.

Now the defence is that the weather, of which I have read a description from the log and protest, was the cause of the damage which, it is said, the cargo sustained, and that therefore the damage was caused by one of the excepted perils, and that the owner of the ship was not liable for it. It is stated also, with regard to the delay of delay, that it was caused by circumstances over which the defendants had no control, the badness of the weather, and the necessity of getting some of the sails, damaged, blown down or thrown overboard in the storm, refitted.

Then there is a counter-claim, by which the plaintiffs, being in that respect plaintiffs, claim an average agreement signed by the plaintiffs for a sum of 200*l.* to be paid to them, and that this shall be a reference to the registrar and arbitrator. This is the first time that in this court a counter-claim of general average loss has been made. The vessel remained at Queenstown from Nov. 28 till Dec. 10, and then went on to the Mill Docks in London, and, after arriving there, seven or eight days discharging her cargo.

It is said, and apparently proved, that the master and the master had no belief that any damage had been done by salt water until the discharge of the cargo took place.

The charge on the part of the plaintiffs is in substance as follows: That there was negligence on the part of the defendants in not securing the cargo, and a want of proper protection, and an undue delay in bringing the vessel to the port of destination after she arrived at Queenstown. I have, with the assistance of the learned Elder Brethren, examined the evidence very carefully, and I am prepared to state the conclusions which the court has arrived at.

First, the court is of opinion that the charge of undue delay is not proved, and the Elder Brethren entirely agree in this view of the case. We are of opinion that, looking at all the circumstances, the delay was not unreasonable.

There remains the other matter to be considered, namely, whether there was negligence on the part of the defendants in not providing sufficient protection for the cargo. In regard to this, the first point which comes upon the attention of the court is the bad weather which the vessel encountered, especially on the 17th and 24th Nov. This state of the weather is supported by the evidence of the master and crew, and is necessarily not contradicted by any positive evidence on the other side. At the time I have thought it my duty to call the attention of the Elder Brethren to the protest and the condition the vessel was in when she was known to have been in if she had been the weather represented, and to c on the 28th, only four days afterwards, signs of distress and the small expense, afflicting her. The Elder Brethren are, in opinion of these matters, decidedly of the statements both in the log and are grossly exaggerated. They think all allowances for the alteration may receive in course of translation,autical experience warrants them in if they were translated literally, the not, after sustaining such weather, at Queenstown in the condition in did arrive. Nevertheless, I am of the opinion there is not sufficient counter-evidence to altogether discredit the statement in the protest and confirmed by the fact that I accept the opinion that the terms are exaggerated, and that has had the effect to discredit which the court ought to be in the witnesses on these parts of point, in regard to the question of the protection of the cargo, or of dunnage, which has been much discussed. First of all, we are of opinion that the mainhold had two causes: (1) The butts at the partners, caused by and (2) from the chain-locker pipes not properly secured, which, though there is no notice of it, yet the Trinity Masters, from their experience as seamen leads to conclude was the case, and that the dunnage in such places as the chain-lump casing, if indeed there was any, was covered. It is to be observed that, sugar is sometimes called a very sensitive substance, inasmuch as water will rapidly cause it to move to the cargo forward, the Elder Brethren are clearly of opinion that it should not put there at all, and that it was stowed it under the fore-scuttle, which they resorted to for stores, coals, and others, and which therefore could not afford adequate protection to cargo stowed underneath. I think the matter must be referred to the arbitrators and merchants to ascertain the damage done.

In one word to say about the counter-claim, it has been contended on the one hand that the claim on the ground of general average is not to be entertained by the court, as the claim was ousted by the agreement of the parties; and, on the other hand, it is contended that this is a misapprehension and that in point of law and point of fact the court has jurisdiction. I am of the opinion that the answer is a good one. The substance, that "in case any dispute arises between the parties touching the amount of average, the parties shall enter into an agreement or other arrangement for referring the same to arbitration." It is the option of the defendant to require arbitration, and he has not done so, but has submitted the matter to this court. I am of opinion that the matter must also be referred to the arbitrators and merchants to state what proportion of average is to be defrayed by the defendant. I refer to the registrar and to the purposes I have mentioned. It will be reserved generally.

L., N.S.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, owners of the cargo, Wattons, Bubb, and Walton.

Solicitors for defendants, owners of the Oquendo, Lowless and Co.

Jan. 30 and Feb. 5, 1878.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE BLESSING.

County Court—Admiralty jurisdiction—Wages—Share of fishing adventure—Wrongful dismissal—Detention of chattels—Damages—36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 8—31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 3, sub-sect. 2.

A contract that a master mariner shall take a share of a fishing adventure and bear a share of certain disbursements is a contract of wages by the general law maritime, independent of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 8; and jurisdiction over such a contract is conferred on County Courts having Admiralty jurisdiction by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, sub-sect. 2.

A claim for damages for wrongful dismissal is within the cognizance of a court having original Admiralty jurisdiction, and, semble, of a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction by statute.

Quære, Whether a claim for damages for wrongful detention of personal chattels on board a ship is within the jurisdiction of a Court of Admiralty.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of the County Court of Durham, holden at Sunderland, on the 20th April 1877, by which the learned judge of that court had refused to hear a suit on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

The cause was instituted on behalf of Thomas Gillson, mariner, on the 17th Jan. 1877, against the fishing smack Blessing, and George S. Gulston, her owner, "for wages and wrongful detention, and carrying of certain goods," and a warrant of arrest issued on the 31st Jan. 1877. The particulars of the plaintiff's case, so far as they were material, were as follows:

1. On or about Oct. 4, 1876, the fishing smack Blessing being in the port of Sunderland, her owner, the above-named defendant George S. Gulston, hired the plaintiff Thomas Gillson to serve as master on board the said fishing smack, the said plaintiff to be subject to and obey the reasonable and proper rules of the said defendant on the terms following, that is to say:

- (a) The said agreement to be in force from the day of the date thereof up to Easter-day in the present year.
- (b) The plaintiff's wages or remuneration to be 11-64ths of the invoice price at which all the large fish sold, and also his share of the smaller fish divisible amongst the crew (in the fishing trade known as stock o'bates), and in addition to the said wages to have and be provided with food and provisions during the said term.
- (c) The plaintiff to pay for one-fifth of the provisions supplied for the use of the crew on board the said fishing smack.
4. The plaintiff did all things, and was always ready and willing to do all things, necessary on his part to entitle him to have the said agreement in all respects performed by the defendant. Yet, during the continuation of the said agreement, the defendant wrongfully removed and discharged the plaintiff therefrom, and from the said fishing smack, and refused to allow him board, lodgings, and provisions, according to the said agreement, in and on board the said fishing smack.

5. The defendant detained on board the said fishing smack, and refused to deliver up, the clothing of the plaintiff mentioned in the schedule to these particulars;

ADM.]

THE PRINCETON.

and the plaintiff claims as due to him the amounts set forth in the said schedule.

The Schedule referred to.

	£	s.	d.
Damages for wages from 8th Jan., when plaintiff was wrongfully discharged, to 1st April 1877, twelve weeks at £2 per week	24	0	0
Net board and lodgings after deducting one-fifth of plaintiff's proportion for victualling during the same period, at 10s. per week	6	0	0
Share of stock o'bate at 15s. per week	9	0	0
Value of clothing detained on board	2	14	0
	41	14	0

When the cause came on for hearing, an objection was taken to the jurisdiction, and the learned judge decided that he had no jurisdiction and dismissed the suit. The judge's notes, on which the appeal was heard, were as follows:

Mr. R. objects that it is not a suit for wages, that it is more in the nature of a partnership. Mr. H. referred to 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 8. Agreement put in not executed as provided by that section.

I hold, on Mr. R.'s objection, that this is not a suit for wages, or if within the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty at all, it is not within the jurisdiction of the County Court as a wages suit. I suggested that Mr. H. should ascertain whether the Court of Admiralty ever entertained a suit under such an agreement as a wages suit, and, if he found it had, he might apply to me again.

M'Clymont, for the plaintiff, on the 30th Jan. obtained a rule nisi to set aside this decision, and on 5th Feb. 1878 the rule came on for argument.

M'Clymont for the appellant.—There is jurisdiction for a judge of a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this description: sect. 3 County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71). The agreement is a contract of wages. This species of agreement is specially countenanced by sect. 8 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85). [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Is the agreement in writing?] Yes, but we have failed to obtain it; the original is in the possession of the defendant, and he has not given it up, though he has had notice to do so. But even if it was not executed in accordance with the statute, it is nevertheless a binding agreement for the payment of a share of the profits of the fishing adventure as wages. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The learned judge does not say he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit if it was a wages suit, but that under the circumstances it was not a wages suit, and that therefore he had no jurisdiction.] This method of payment of wages in the fishing trade has been recognised as a portion of the general maritime law long anterior to the Merchant Shipping Acts: (The Frederick, 5 Ch. Rob. 8.) It is sufficient if I show that this is, speaking generally, a wages suit. I am not bound to show that each item of the claim comes under that definition. That is a matter for the consideration of the County Court.

Clarkson.—I admit that an agreement to take a share of the profits of a fishing adventure is an agreement in the nature of a contract of wages, and that the County Court judge has jurisdiction in such a case; but the case is not confined to that; there is a claim for damages for wrongful dismissal. It has been held that this court has jurisdiction to entertain such a claim, but that is a consequence of its original jurisdiction:

The Great Eastern, L. Rep. 1 A. & E. 394, 22 Rep. N. S. 228;
The Northumbria. (a)

But the Admiralty jurisdiction of the County Courts is the creature of the statute, and therefore limited by the statute; and there is nothing in sect. 3, sub-sect. 2 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71) which gives such a jurisdiction as this, in a case of damages for wrongful dismissal. The other item of claim is clearly beyond the jurisdiction of the County Court. This court has never exercised jurisdiction to estimate damages in an action detinue.

M'Clymont in reply.—Our claim for wages under the contract which we have not been allowed to complete, therefore is a claim properly included in a claim for wages. As to the last item of the claim, the Court of Admiralty has exercised jurisdiction in cases of personal injury (The Buckers, 4 Cl. & F. 73); and in a recent case the petition alleged wrongful detention of clothes and other articles of the plaintiff's on board the ship (The Bala, 2 Asp. Mar. L. C. 387; 31 L. T. Rep. 1274). That pleading was not objected to, and the court made a general decree which showed that such a claim may be made in a Court of Admiralty. [Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—Supposing the High Court of Admiralty had such a jurisdiction, how do you show it to be conferred on the County Court?] Sect. 2, sub-sect. 1, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51) gives a County Court jurisdiction over "any claim in tort in respect of any goods carried in any ship," but I do not consider it necessary to press that part of the claim.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—I give no decision as to whether the court can entertain a claim in respect of wrongful detention of chattels, but I shall reserve this case to the judge of the court below, with intimation that the County Court has jurisdiction over the main portion of the claim. It is a question of wages, on the authorities on which there can be no doubt. It appears to me a matter of regret that the learned judge was not previously informed of the cases by those who argued the matter before him. I remit it to him to report the case. The appellants are entitled to have their costs below and of the appeal.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Belfrage and Maitland, agents for Holmes and Brewis.

Solicitors for defendants, Tuffnell and Sedgwick, agents for Dixon.

Feb. 22, 23, and 25, 1878.

THE PRINCETON.

Collision—Dragging—Duty of pilot—Breach—Compulsory pilotage—The Mersey Dock Consolidation Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 12)

(a) The Northumbria was an action brought by a master mariner to recover the balance of his disbursements, and damages for wrongful detention. The plaintiff was engaged for a voyage from South American ports and back, which would last about six months. The action was commenced when the vessel put back into port, and when the vessel put back into port, the plaintiff was discharged about a fortnight after the vessel was put back into port. The defence was drunkenness. The plaintiff alleged that he had not been drunk, and gave him damages for the wages he would have completed his voyage.—Ed.

.]

THE PRINCETON.

[ADM.]

138—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 c. 104), ss. 353, 362—Costs.

a vessel under the charge of a pilot is at or and drags, it is the duty of the pilot to inform himself of the condition of affairs, before it steps to avoid damage arising from it, and to wait till someone reports it to him.

a vessel coming from sea into the river Mersey with a pilot on board is prevented from doing so, in consequence of the violence of the wind, or want of water, and anchors, but is to be released as soon as circumstances permit, the employment of a pilot is, under the Mersey Docks Consolidation Act, compulsory.

the Admiralty Division will adhere to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty as to costs in cases of compulsory pilotage.

as an action brought by the owners of the barque Twes Zusters against the American ship Princeton, to recover for the damages sustained by the former vessel in two collisions happened between the vessels whilst at anchor in the river Mersey on the 25th Jan. 1878. The Princeton counter-claimed for the damages sustained by her in the same collision. The Twes Zusters was a barque of 375 tons register, and had been at Liverpool as a port of refuge. In consequence of the badness of the weather on her arrival she had been unable to get a pilot, and remained in, and to anchor, without one. The Princeton was a ship of 1349 tons register, laden with cargo of cotton, and had come into harbour under the charge of a pilot, who, at the time of the collision, was still on board.

on the vessels were anchored in the first in each gave the other a clear berth.

at 1 a.m., shortly after which time the first collision happened, the tide was ebb, running at 1½ knots, and the wind blowing a gale from N.N.W. against the tide. The Twes Zusters had anchored down with 45 fathoms of chain on the starboard side and 60 fathoms on the other. The Princeton had anchored down with 70 fathoms of chain. The vessels were riding to the tide with their bows up the river.

under these circumstances each vessel alleged that she had dragged, in consequence of the collision happened. The jibboom and the foremast of the Twes Zusters came into contact with the starboard mizen chains of the Princeton. Before the collision the Twes Zusters had let out cable and ported her helm. After the collision the Twes Zusters dropped clear to the starboard of the Princeton. On the following day the vessels swung clear of one another, and on the succeeding ebb, about 6 p.m., they came into collision, in much the same position as before, and remained in collision for a considerable time, doing considerable damage; ultimately the Twes Zusters parted from her stern. The Princeton slipped her cable before she came to dock, and when her anchor was weighed found it to be foul, the cable being round the anchor.

The pilot of the Princeton proved that he was engaged to take the vessel from sea into dock, and that she would have gone into dock as the weather permitted.

a vessel alleged the want of a proper lookout on board the other, and an insufficiency of the Princeton's tackle, and negligence. The Princeton raised in addition the defence of compulsory pilotage.

It was proved that the pilot of the Princeton had been paid the proper pilotage rate from sea to the docks, and also the sum of 10s., being at the rate of 5s. per diem for two days during which the Princeton lay in the river.

Butt, Q.C. (with him Myburgh) for plaintiffs, owners of the Twes Zusters.—It was negligence on the part of the Princeton to lie at single anchor in such weather. It is proved that the anchor was foul when weighed, and therefore it must have been foul before the cable was slipped; therefore it would not hold so well as if clear, consequently the Princeton dragged and occasioned the collision. She was also out of the control of her helm; had she been properly under control she could have avoided the collision. The question of compulsory pilotage does not arise. She had no proper lookout; had she had a proper lookout she would have been seen to have been approaching the Twes Zusters, and the fact would have been reported. It was not reported, and that has been held to be contributory negligence on the part of the crew.

Milward, Q.C. (with him Clarkson).—We never dragged at all, and therefore our anchor was sufficient to hold us. When weighed the chain was only under the stock, and that would make no difference in the holding power of the anchor, even if it was in that condition at the time of the collision.

Myburgh in reply.

Feb. 25.—Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a case of collision between two vessels at anchor in the river Mersey, either to the northward of Egremont Ferry or abreast of the Bramley Moore Dock. The vessels which came into collision were the Twes Zusters, a Dutch vessel of 375 tons register, and heavily laden, and which had come to anchor in a proper berth to the westward of mid-river on the 23rd Jan. in this year, and had, before the collision, dropped both her anchors the starboard one with forty-five fathoms of chain and the port one with sixty fathoms. The other vessel was the Princeton, an American ship of no less than 1349 tons register, laden with a cargo of cotton. She had come to anchor in a proper berth abreast of the Bramley Moore Dock, with her starboard anchor and seventy fathoms of chain. The Twes Zusters had anchored twenty-four hours before the Princeton. It is admitted, and also proved by the evidence, that in coming to anchor the Princeton did not give the Twes Zusters a foul berth, there being a cable's length distance between them; but, nevertheless, two collisions took place. It is also admitted that, whichever is responsible for the first collision is responsible also for the second, because the fouling of the berth which caused the first collision was the cause of the second also. In the first the jibboom of the Twes Zusters came into contact with the starboard side of the Princeton, and on the evidence it is plain that the collision must have been occasioned by one of the two vessels dragging her anchor on the tide, the wind at the time blowing in an opposite direction to the tide. The question which the court has discussed with the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House is, which of the two vessels dragged? After a careful consideration of the evidence, which is contradictory, we think that, on the whole, is established that the Twes Zusters remained at her anchor, and the Princeton drove upon her. We are clearly of opinion that the pilot in charge ought to have let go the second anchor, as that was a precaution which the state of the weather imperatively demanded. We think that the collision was caused by the dragging of the anchor of the Princeton, to prevent which proper measures, such as setting her staysail, were not taken. I pronounce the Princeton alone to blame.

Butt, Q.C. then contended that the pilot was not responsible for the collision. There ought to have been a proper look-out, and there was not, or if there was a look-out he neglected his duty; he ought to have given notice to the pilot or person in charge of the ship when the vessels were approaching one another; he must either have seen that they were approaching and neglected to report it, or he did not see it and ought to have done so. It was also negligence on the part of the ship's officers to leave her in an unmanageable condition.

Milward, Q.C. was not called on.

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—The Trinity Masters are of opinion, and I entirely agree with them, that the pilot himself ought to have seen the state of affairs. I therefore decree that the pilot alone is to blame for this collision.

The question whether under the circumstances the employment of the pilot on board the Princeton was such as to exempt the owners from liability was then argued. The statutes and sections on which the arguments were based were the following:

The Liverpool Pilot Act (5 Geo. 4, c. lxxiii.).

Sect. 32. Every pilot so to be licensed as aforesaid, who shall pilot or conduct any ship or vessel into the said port of Liverpool, is hereby required to take care (if need be) to cause such ship or vessel to be properly moored at anchor in the river Mersey, and afterwards to conduct such ship or vessel into one of the wet docks within the said port, without being paid any other rate or price than is hereby directed to be taken for the piloting or conducting such ship or vessel into the said port of Liverpool; but in case such attendance shall be required during such ship or vessel being at anchor in the river Mersey and before she is docked, five shillings per day shall be paid, provided, &c.

Sect. 34. If the owner, master, or commander of any ship or vessel shall require the attendance of a pilot, licensed as aforesaid, on board any ship or vessel during her riding at anchor, or being at Hoylake, or in the river Mersey, such pilot shall attend such ship or vessel, and be paid for every day he shall so attend five shillings and no more: provided always, that in case such pilot shall not be employed the whole day, but be dismissed in less time than a day, such pilot shall be paid five shillings for his attendance: provided also that the pilot, so to be licensed as aforesaid, who shall have the charge of any ship or vessel, shall be paid for every day of his attendance whilst in the river, except the day of going to sea with such ships or vessels as shall be outward bound, and the day of returning from sea and the day of docking for such as shall be inward bound.

The Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104).

Sect. 353. Subject to any alteration to be made by any pilotage authority in pursuance of the power hereinbefore in that behalf given, the employment of pilots shall continue to be compulsory in all districts in which the same was by law compulsory immediately before the time when this Act comes into operation, and all exemptions from compulsory pilotage then existing within such districts shall also continue in force, &c.

Sect. 362. An unqualified pilot may, within the pilotage district, without subjecting himself or his employer to any penalty, take charge of a ship as pilot under the following circumstances (that is to say) . . . For the purpose of changing the moorings of any ship in port, or of taking her into or out of any dock, in cases where such act can be done by an unqualified pilot who infringing the regulations of the port, or any act which the harbour master is legally empowered to do.

Sect. 388. No owner or master of any ship shall be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of such ship within any district where the employment of such pilot is compulsory by law.

The Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act 1891 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.) s. 6, repeals (inter alia) sections of the Liverpool Pilot Act set out above.

Sect. 123 enacts a penalty of 20*l.* for unlicensed persons piloting vessels in or out of the port of Liverpool.

Sect. 128. The pilot in charge of any inward-bound vessel shall cause the same (if need be) to be properly moored at anchor in the river Mersey, and shall pilot the same into some one of the wet docks within the port of Liverpool, whether belonging to the board or not, without making any additional charge for so doing, and attendance shall be required on board such vessel while at anchor in the river Mersey and before going into dock in which case he shall be entitled to receive five shillings per day for such attendance.

Sect. 129 enacts a penalty of 5*l.* on masters of inward-bound vessels omitting to fly a signal to the pilot on coming within the pilot stations, and giving reasonable assistance to a pilot to come aboard.

Sect. 130 enacts that masters of vessels of less than coasting vessels in ballast or under 100 tons shall be burthened refusing to accept the services of a pilot when offered shall pay full pilotage rates as set out for pilot.

Sect. 133 gives power to the board to fix pilotage rates for inward-bound vessels within certain limits.

Sect. 138. If the master of any vessel shall require the attendance of a pilot on board any vessel during her riding at anchor, or being at Hoylake or in the river Mersey, the pilot so employed shall be paid for every day or portion of a day he shall so attend the sum of five shillings, and no more, provided that the pilot who shall have the charge of any vessel shall be paid for every day of his attendance whilst in the river; but no such payment shall be made for the day on which such vessel, being outward bound, shall leave the river Mersey to commence her voyage, or being inward bound, shall enter the river Mersey.

Sect. 139. In case the master of any vessel being outward bound . . . shall proceed to sea and shall not take on board or to employ a pilot, he shall pay to the pilot who shall first offer himself to pilot the same the full pilotage rate that would have been payable had the vessel if the pilot had actually piloted the same been in port, as the case may be, of the said port of Liverpool together with all expenses incurred in recovering the same.

Bye-laws for the licensing and governing of the pilots under the jurisdiction of the Liverpool Pilotage Committee approved by Order in Council June 24th 1856.

5. Duties of individual pilots.—Every pilot on arrival from sea, either in charge of a vessel or as a pilot, shall give notice thereof to the master of the vessel in which he belongs as soon as possible, and shall remain on board his vessel until she is safely anchored in the river, or leave her without a written permission from the master, or on being relieved by a pilot of equal or higher rank, or order of one of the masters of the boat, &c.

Butt, Q.C. and Myburgh for plaintiffs, and the Twee Zusters.—Pilotage is not in this case compulsory. Admitting it to be so in general, that is that, with certain exceptions, not affecting this case, vessels entering the port of Liverpool are bound to employ a licensed pilot, the compulsion only refer to The Annapolis (ubi sup.), The Woburn Abbey (ubi sup.), and The City of Cambridge (ubi sup.) in support of the view I take. Looking to the principle to be extracted from those cases, and giving a reasonable interpretation to the sections of the Acts of Parliament, I am of opinion that the Princeton was still under the management of a compulsory pilot, who was taken on board by compulsion of law. To hold otherwise would be a harsh construction of the statute. The ship was at the time of the collision, in  itinere, making her progress towards the dock, and there was no discontinuance of the engagement of the pilot, or substitution of a voluntary for a compulsory service. The circumstances show that the vessel was compelled to remain where she was by a vis major. If she could have gone into dock sooner, I am not prepared to say that I should consider her entitled to the immunity to which she is under the existing circumstances entitled. I confine this construction of the law to the particular facts of this case, and I think that the pilot taken on board by compulsion of law was still in charge of the vessel at the time of the collision. With regard to the receipt of 5s. per diem, that has been disposed of by one of the cases to which I have referred, The City of Cambridge (ubi sup.), and the reception of it does not affect the construction I put upon the Act. I pronounce that the vessel was under the charge of a pilot, taken on board by compulsion of law, at the time the collision happened.

ADM.]

THE FALCON.

Milward, Q.C. then applied for costs.—Admitting that it was the practice of the High Court of Admiralty not to allow costs in a case where a defendant raised other defences in addition to that of compulsory pilotage, and succeeded only on the ground of compulsory pilotage, that is not the practice of the High Court of Justice, in which in all cases, including the present (see General Steam Navigation Company v. London and Edinburgh Shipping Company, ante p. 454; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 743; 2 Ex. Div. 467), a successful defendant gets his costs, and this division will follow the practice of the other divisions.

Butt, Q.C. was not called on.

Sir R. PHILLMORE.—I see no reason for altering the well-established practice of this court as to costs in cases of compulsory pilotage, and I shall, in accordance with that practice, make no order as to costs.

Suit dismissed, but without costs.

Solicitors for plaintiff, owners of the Twes Zusters, Bateson and Co.

Solicitors for defendants, owners of the Princeton, Duncan, Hill, and Dickenson.

Tuesday, Feb. 26, 1878.

THE FALCON.

Appeal from County Court—Amount under 50l.—Sect. 31 County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71).

A plaintiff claiming an amount not exceeding 50l. in an Admiralty cause in a County Court, is precluded from appealing from the decision of the court by sect. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71).

The Doctor Van Thunnen Tellow (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 960; 3 Mar. L. C. (O. S.) 244); and The

Elizabeth (L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 33; 21 L. T. N. S. 729), commented on and explained.

THIS was an appeal from the City of London in its Admiralty jurisdiction. The plaintiff, of the dumb barge Bromley, instituted an action in that court against the Falcon, a steam vessel belonging to the General Steam Navigation Company, for damages sustained by the barge in a collision between that vessel and the Falcon in the river Thames on the 24th Sept. 1877. The plaintiffs claimed in the sum of 30l. The cause was heard in the City of London Court on the 5th Feb. 1878, when the judge of that court, Mr. Commissioner, dismissed it with costs.

On the 12th Feb. 1878, Safford, for the plaintiff, moved ex parte to set aside the judgment and obtained a rule nisi.

On the 26th Feb. 1878 the rule came on for argument. The argument turned on the question whether sect. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 gave any appeal to a plaintiff who had claimed less than 50l. The question is the section in question:

No appeal shall be allowed unless the amount claimed or ordered to be due exceeds the sum of 50l.

E. C. Clarkson and C. Hall, for the respondent owners of the Falcon.—The court has no power to entertain the appeal. The action is only for 30l.; and therefore by sect. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71) there is no appeal. The Act is express that there is no appeal in such a case by defendant, and therefore by implication there is none by plaintiff. The Doctor Van Thunnen Tellow (L. T. Rep. N. S. 960; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 244) is not in point. That case only decided that the question in question did not apply to a case where the plaintiff recovered nothing; but it does not appear that the suit in that case was for less than 50l. Had it been so there could have been no appeal, as the plaintiffs could not have recovered more than 50l. The true interpretation of the section is that no appeal should be allowed where the amount recovered, or sought to be recovered, is less than 50l. That the section does not apply to appeals by the plaintiffs is shown by The Elizabeth (L. Rep. 3 A. & E. 33; 21 L. T. N. S. 729; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 320). It is contrary to equity that an appeal should be denied a defendant and allowed to a plaintiff. The spirit and purport of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act was to give a cheap remedy in these small cases, and the object of the Act would be defeated if in such a case a plaintiff has a right of appeal. Where the words of a statute are ambiguous, as in this case, the courts will construe them according to the intention of the Legislature.

E. Clark and Safford for appellant.—The question is decided by The Doctor Van Thunnen Tellow (ubi sup.) and The Elizabeth (ubi sup.). The latter case shows that the 31st section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act does not apply to plaintiffs, and does not in any way limit the right of appeal which a plaintiff has in all cases. In the latter case the defendant was plaintiff was dismissed, and he would have no appeal quod dicitur had a right of appeal quod dicitur plaintiff in cause. Some reasonable construction action, and the proper construction by reading it as if the words inserted, that is, "that no appeal unless the amount, if any, decreed shall exceed the sum of 50*l*." plaintiffs the effect of the Act y, for the plaintiff could always for a sum larger than 50*l*., even not to recover so much, and so of appeal. It is usual in statutes not claimed "to be used, and not to be done." The Legislature in the usual form of words must have given. If the statute is interpreted only apply to defendants; and it is the intention of the Legislature to leave the right of appeal untouched. If plaintiffs it must apply to them where they do not succeed, as not to be due to them.

Reply.—The fact that a plaintiff has a fictitious right of appeal by his claim over 50*l*., if my construction is correct, does not effect so much as would be created if the appellants were correct. In that case the plaintiff's claim just below 50*l*., is his own right of appeal and prevents him from appealing. The statute allows appeals when the amount of the claim does exceed 50*l*., i.e., when the claim is ordered to be due might be 50*l*."

RE.—In this case the appellant is the City of London Court. He claims for 30*l*., and he got a decision against him. The question before the court is into consideration of the true effect of sect. 31 of the County Courts Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 63) as not a right of appeal? The question is, "No appeal shall be allowed where the amount decreed or ordered to be due does not exceed 50*l*." I have no hesitation in saying to me that the whole purpose of the Act is to have been the intention of the Legislature to exclude appeals where the amount decreed is under 50*l*. The question is what construction can be put upon this question I will refer to the cases which have been cited. I have no note of The Doctor Van Thunnen Tellow and am represented as having said, "is badly drawn. In my opinion it must be held to apply to appeals where the amount decreed to be due, that is, to defendants only." It is clear from extra-judicial dictum, and not from the decision of that case. In the case of both (ubi sup.) the court certainly is competent to the plaintiffs or to the defendant on appeal. Now I think that decisions can be considered as binding before me, because the circumstance, plaintiff, who is the appellant, has brought his action for an amount less than 50*l*., which seems to me to be the effect of those judgments. At all events, the best construction I can give to the statute is bound to decide this question, and so has brought an action for only the decision of the judge of the court below to this court? Looking at the whole purport of the Act, and endeavouring, as it is my duty to do, to give a proper construction to the section of the statute, and having a strong opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude all appeals where the sum recovered did not exceed 50*l*., I think I must rule that there is no appeal in this case. I do so on the ground that the plaintiff having brought this action for 30*l*., by no process whatever could he have got a decree or order which would have exceeded 50*l*. I do not disguise from myself the difficulty of the construction of the statute, but, upon the whole, I think that this is a reasonable construction to arrive at. As I consider it a case of considerable difficulty, I shall give no costs.

Appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, but without costs.

Solicitor for appellant, Preston.

Solicitor for respondents, Batham.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 6 and Dec. 13, 1877.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns), LORDS PENZANCE, BLACKBURN, and GORDON.)

SIMPSON AND OTHERS v. THOMSON AND OTHERS.
ON APPEAL FROM THE FIRST DIVISION OF THE COURT OF SESSION IN SCOTLAND.

Ship—Collision between ships of same owner—Merchant Shipping Act 1862, sect. 54—Rights of parties.

The Merchant Shipping Acts, in giving shipowners power to limit their liability, do not create any new rights, but restrain existing rights by limiting liability.

The right of the underwriters of a lost ship for damages against a wrong-doer is merely to make the same claim that the insured might have made.

In the case of a collision between two ships belonging to the same owner, by which one was totally lost through the exclusive fault of the other:

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the underwriters of the policy on the lost ship could make no claim against the sum paid into court, under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, the insured being himself the person who had caused the damage.

Yates v. Whyte (4 Bing. N. C. 272) approved and followed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland (the Lord President Inglis, Lords Deas and Mure).

A Mr. William Burrell, a shipowner and shipping agent of Glasgow, was the owner of two steamships—the Dunluce Castle and the Fitzmaurice—trading between Leith and London. In Feb. 1876, while the former vessel was on her voyage to the northward, and the latter to the southward, they came into collision off Lowestoft, through the exclusive fault of those in charge of the Fitzmaurice, and in consequence of the collision the Dunluce Castle was totally lost.

Burrell admitted his liability as owner of the ship in fault, and petitioned the Court of Session to stop all actions and suits instituted against him as such owner in respect of the collision, and to limit his liability under sect. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63) to the sum of 3590*l.* which sum was paid into court.

Burrell had effected policies of insurance on the Dunluce Castle for the sum of 6000*l.*

The appellants, who were the owners of the cargo on board the ship, and the respondents, who were the underwriters of the policies, and had paid as for a total loss, both put in claims upon the sum paid into court. Burrell had claimed against the respondents as underwriters in respect of the total loss of the Dunluce Castle, and the underwriters had paid the amount due on the policies, 6000*l.* Upon receiving payment, Burrell assigned to the respondents all his right, title, and interest as owner of the Dunluce Castle to recover any sums due from the underwriters of the Fitzmaurice. The respondents claimed to be ranked and preferred to the fund for the sum of 6000*l.* with interest pari passu with such other claimants as should establish their claims, or to be ranked after payment of the claims of the cargo, owners, and seamen of the Dunluce Castle. By interlocutor of Nov. 24, 1876, the Court of Session limited the liability of Burrell in respect of the collision, holding him liable for the sum of 3590*l.* 8*s.* only, and ranked the claimants, including the appellants and respondents, pari passu on that fund.

From this judgment the owners of the cargo appealed to the House of Lords.

The case is reported in 4 Court of Session Cases (4th series) 177; 14 Scottish Law Rep. 120.

Watkin Williams, Q.C. and J. C. Mathew appeared for the appellants, and argued that as Burrell could not have maintained a claim upon the fund in court, as he was owner of the ship in fault, and could not have any redress against himself, so the underwriters, who had put themselves in the position of the assured by paying the amount of the policies, could be in no better situation.

Benjamin, Q.C. and E. C. Clarkson, for the respondents, contended that, as the underwriters would have been entitled to rank as claimants against the sum in question in the ordinary case of a collision between ships belonging to different owners, their rights could not be affected by the accidental circumstance that both the ships belonged to the same person.

At the conclusion of the arguments, their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

Dec. 13.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Cairns).—My Lords, the appellants in this claim dispute a claim which was made by the respondents (other than William Burrell) in the Court of Session, and allowed by them to rank as creditors upon a sum of 3590*l.*, which was paid into court under circumstances which I will shortly mention.

William Burrell was the owner of two ships, the Dunluce Castle and the Fitzmaurice, trading between Leith and London. The Dunluce Castle was insured by two time policies. The policies were in the usual form, and were against (among other things) the perils of the seas. They were underwritten by the respondents, other than William Burrell, and those respondents I will afterwards call the underwriters. The Dunluce

Castle, on her passage from London to Leith, 4th Feb. 1876, came into collision with the Fitzmaurice off Lowestoft, and in consequence of the collision the Dunluce Castle with her cargo was sunk and totally lost. The Fitzmaurice was entirely in the wrong, and it was through the negligent navigation of those in charge of her that the collision took place.

This being so, Burrell, as the owner of the vessel that was in fault, and admitting his liability, petitioned the Court of Session, under the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 and 1862, to stop actions instituted against him, paying into court the sum of 3590*l.* already mentioned, being the sum of the tonnage liability fixed by the Acts, and to allow those who had any claim or right of action against him to establish their claim or right against the sum.

In the proceedings consequent on this petition, the appellants, as owners of the cargo on board the Dunluce Castle, made and established claims against the fund, as did also the master and seamen of the ship in respect of their duties in the collision, and the respondents, the underwriters, also made a claim, on the ground that they had paid 6000*l.* to Burrell under the policies of insurance on the Dunluce Castle as upon a total loss, and ought to rank as creditors against the fund in medio for that amount. The appellants resisted the right of the underwriters to share in the distribution of the fund; but the Court of Session, by the interlocutors under appeal, sustained the right of the underwriters, and their Lordships have now to say whether that decision is correct.

My Lords, I ought in the first place to say that, in my opinion, the question must be considered just as if the underwriters had brought an action against Burrell. It is true that under the Merchant Shipping Acts all actions against Burrell have been restrained, and a limited sum of money has been paid into court to answer rateably, as far as will suffice, the claims of all persons who have brought, or may bring, actions against him. But the Merchant Shipping Acts do not profess to create any new right; on the contrary, they act in restraint of existing rights, substituting merely a limited and an unlimited liability. The question must be looked at, therefore, in the same way as it would be if, all other things remaining the same, the underwriters were not in competition with other claimants, but were suing Burrell for damages on the ground that his ship, the Fitzmaurice, had through careless navigation run down his other ship, the Dunluce Castle, which they, being the insurers, had paid for as a total loss.

My Lords, the learned counsel who appeared in this case at your Lordships' bar on behalf of the respondents could not suggest that such a claim had ever been brought, nor could they find it in any text book or in any decided case as authority that such an action could be maintained. In order, however, to determine whether such an action could be maintained it is necessary to ascertain the principle upon which the underwriters, having paid as upon a total loss, are to succeed to whatever can be recovered from the thing insured.

The Lord President states this principle. "It is necessary to consider very

[OF L.]

SIMPSON AND OTHERS v. THOMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

the effect of a total loss, either actual or constructive, as in a question between the owners and the underwriters of the lost vessel. There be no doubt that, whether the loss be actual or constructive, if it be a total loss, the property of the sunk vessel passes to the underwriters. And it is also quite settled that all the contents of that property pass with it. But it is necessary to go a little deeper than that general statement of principle in order to see what is the relation of the underwriters and the insured after the property of the vessel has so passed from the one to the other. It is quite clear that any transference, either of an heritable estate or of a corporeal movable by voluntary conveyance, nothing passes as an incident of the estate of the nature of a claim of damages. The estate of an heritable subject or the purchaser of a corporeal movable takes it just as it stands at the time of the conveyance, with, of course, all incidental rights belonging to it as a piece of property; but it is quite clear that in such a case a claim of damage for injury done to that property by transference takes place could never pass with the conveyance of the subject. Now, quite settled that, in that kind of vendition takes place by the operation of the law when the underwriter pays the contents of his policy upon a sunk ship, a claim of damages against a vessel which has caused the loss of the ship by collision does pass along with the property and remains of the vessel; and therefore it is obvious from that consideration alone, without saying any further, that the transference which is effected by force of law when the underwriter transfers his policy upon the lost ship is somewhat quite different from an ordinary voluntary conveyance of a corporeal movable." And, further, the Lord President continues thus: "Then, is it said that when the property of the sunk vessel is passed to the underwriters with all its incidents, losing the right to claim against the offending vessel for the damage done by the collision—is it said that the owner of the offending vessel can escape from this liability because he was also owner of the sunk ship? I confess I am quite unable to see any ground in law for holding that. It seems to me, on the contrary, to be quite clear that the operation of the legal assignment of the property from the owner to the underwriters is to carry with it all the rights which would have belonged to the owner of that vessel, no matter who he might be; and as soon as by that legal assignment the owner of the offending ship ceased to be owner of the Dunluce Castle, there was no longer any identity of persons between the party who was the claim and the party who is liable to satisfy the claim. That identity is put at an end by the operation of law, and therefore I think that the underwriters in these circumstances could have a perfectly good ground for action against the owner of the Fitzmaurice to make good the damage caused by the collision."

The view of the Lord President, therefore, appears that, after payment by the underwriters as on a total loss, there is effected, by some independent operation of law, a transfer of whatever, if anything, can be recovered in specie of the thing insured; and that there is also created by a similar operation of law, and by reason of the transfer of the thing insured, an independent right in the underwriters to maintain in their own name, and without reference to the person insured, an action for the damage to the thing insured, which was the cause of the loss.

My Lords, speaking with great respect for the Lord President and the other learned judges who followed his opinion, I feel bound to say I am not aware of any authority for the view of the case thus taken by him. The case cited by him of the North of England Insurance Company v. Armstrong (L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 224; 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 822; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 330) does not appear to me to touch the question. The reasoning of the Lord President would be inapplicable to the case of a partial loss, and yet no one would dispute the right of underwriters, after paying to A on a partial loss occasioned to his ship by the collision of the ship of B. to sue B if his ship was in fault. I know of no foundation for the right of underwriters, except the well-known principle of law that where one person has agreed to indemnify another he will, on making good the indemnity, be entitled to succeed to all the ways and means by which the person indemnified might have protected himself against or reimbursed himself for the loss. It is on this principle that the underwriters of a ship that has been lost are entitled to the ship in specie if they can find and recover it; and it is on the same principle that they can assert any right which the owner of the ship might have asserted against a wrongdoer for damage for the act which has caused the loss. But this right of action for damages they must assert, not in their own name, but in the name of the person insured; and if the person insured be the person who has caused the damage, I am unable to see how the right can be asserted at all.

The case of Yates v. Whyte (4 Bing. N. C. 272) involved questions analogous to, and, as it seems to me, decisive of the present. The plaintiff was there suing the defendants for damaging his ship by collision, and the defendants sought to deduct from the amount of damages to be paid by them a sum of money paid to the plaintiff by his insurers in respect of such damage, and if the insurers had possessed an independent right of action against the defendants, the defendants might no doubt have been right in their contention.

I think it desirable to read to your Lordships what was said by some of the learned judges in that case. Tindal, C.J., says: "I think this case is decided in principle by that of Mason v. Sainsbury (Marshall on Insurance, 3rd edit. 796; 3 Douglas' Reps. 61). There a party whose property had been burned by a mob, was allowed, after receiving the amount of his loss from an insurance office, to sue the hundred on the statute 1 Geo. 1, for the benefit of the insurers. The only distinction between that case and the present is, that there the action for the wrong was brought at the instance of the insurance office, which is not the case here. But it establishes that the recovery upon a contract with the insurers is no bar to a claim for damages against the wrong-doers." Lord Mansfield says (Marshall on Insurance, 3rd edit. 796): "Though the office paid without suit, this must be considered as without prejudice, and it is to all intents as if it had never been paid. The question comes to this: Can the owner of the house having insured it, come against the hundred under this Act. Who is first liable? If the hundred be first liable, still it makes no difference. If the insurbe first liable, then payment by them is a satisfaction, and the hundred is not liable. But the contrary is evident from the nature of the contract of insurance. It is an indemnity. We every day see the insured put in the place of the insurer. It is in abandonment so, and the insurer uses the name of the insured. It is an extremely clear case. The Act puts the hundred in the place of the trespassers, and on principles of policy I am satisfied it is to be considered as if the insurers had not paid a farthing. That the insurers may recover in the name of the assured after he has been satisfied appears from Randal v. Cochrane (17th June 1748, 1 Ves. sen. 97), where it was held that they had the plainest equity to institute such a suit. Such, therefore, is the situation of the underwriters here that this case has received its answer from it. If the plaintiff cannot recover, the wrong-doer pays nothing, and takes all the benefit of a policy of insurance without paying the premium. Our judgment must be for the plaintiff."

Park, J. says: "I am of the same opinion. This point has been decided since the time of Lord Hardwicke. So much so, that it has been laid down in text writers that where the assured, who has been indemnified for a wrong, recovers from the wrong-doers, the insurers may recover the amount from the assured. In Randal v. Cochrane it was said that they had the clearest equity to use the name of the assured, in order to reimburse themselves, and in Mason v. Sainsbury the judges were all unanimous; they held indeed that the insurers could not sue in their own name; but they confirm the general opinion that the wrong-doer should be ultimately liable, notwithstanding a payment by the insurers."

Vaughan, J. says: "No case has been cited which establishes the point contended for on the behalf of the defendants; while Randal v. Cochrane and Mason v. Sainsbury are in point for the plaintiff. In Mason v. Sainsbury it was argued, as here, that the plaintiff having received his indemnity from the insurers, could not recover a second time against the hundred; but Lord Mansfield said, 'Who is first liable?' If the hundred is first liable, still it makes no difference; if the insurers be first liable, then payment by them is a satisfaction, and the hundred is not liable. But the contrary is evident from the nature of the contract of insurance. It is an indemnity. We every day see the insured put in the place of the insurer. And in Clarke v. The Hundred of Blything (1823 2 B. and C. 254) the authority of Mason v. Sainsbury was expressly recognised by Lord Tenterden."

My Lords, these authorities seem to me to be conclusive that the right of the underwriters is merely to make such claim for damages as the insured himself could have made; and it is for this reason that (according to the English mode of procedure) they would have to make it in his name; and if this is so, it cannot of course be made against the insured himself.

It may be said that this view of the law inflicts considerable hardship upon the underwriters. I am not, however, satisfied that this is the case. Either the policy by which the underwriters are bound is an insurance against perils of the seas arising from the negligent navigation of any other vessel, even although that vessel belong to the person insured, or it is not. If it is not an insurance against such a peril of the seas, the underwriters should defend themselves accordingly and decline to pay for the loss. If, on the other hand, the insurance is a contract to indemnify against the consequences of the negligent navigation of any other ship of the insured, it would be little short of an absurdity that the underwriters should in the first place indemnify the insured for the consequences of that negligent navigation according to their contract, and immediately afterwards recover the amount back from the insured as damages occasioned by this negligent navigation.

I must therefore move your Lordships for the interlocutor of the 24th Nov. 1871 to be varied by inserting, after the words "rank with the whole of the other claimants," the words "other than the underwriters," and by inserting a finding that the underwriters, Thomson and others, are jointly and severally liable to the appellants, Simpson and Co. and others, with regard to the expenses occasioned by the discussion between the claimants Thomson and others, and Simpson and Co. and others, and that the interlocutor of the 10th Nov. 1877 should be reversed, with a declaration that the objections for Simpson and Co. ought to have been received, and with this declaration remain in case to the Court of Session; and I further move your Lordships that the respondents, the underwriters, be ordered to pay to the appellants the costs of this appeal.

Lord PENZANCE.—My Lords, the facts which give rise to the question in this case are undisputed, and are these.

Mr. Burrell was the sole owner of two vessels, the Dunluce Castle and the Fitzmaurice, which came into collision at sea. The collision was entirely to the negligence of those in charge of the Fitzmaurice, and the result of it was that the other vessel (the Dunluce Castle) and her cargo were wholly lost. Mr. Burrell, as owner of the ship in fault, instituted this suit under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts for the purpose of limiting his liability to those who suffered by the collision to a sum equal to the value of the ship in fault, calculated at 81 per cent. and has paid into a bank under order of the court that sum, to be distributed by the court among those entitled to it.

The respondents are underwriters who have insured the vessel which was sunk (the Dunluce Castle), and who have paid Mr. Burrell, the owner of that vessel, under a policy effected with them by him, the sum of 6000*l.* as for a total loss. For this sum they claimed to rank with the other claimants upon the fund in court; and the question is, whether they are entitled to do so? The court below affirmed their right and allowed the claim; it is from that decision that the present appeal is brought.

As the claim thus put forward is made under the provisions of the statutes above referred to, I will call attention to those provisions. The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63 (Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1862), s. 54, provides that the owner of any ship shall not (except in their actual fault and priority) be liable for damages in respect of loss or damage to goods in an amount exceeding 81 per cent. of the value of the ship doing the injury. And the

[L.]

SIMPSON AND OTHERS v. THOMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

s. c. 104 (the Merchant Shipping Act sect. 514 (which is incorporated with the mentioned Act), provides that "in cases where liability is alleged to have been incurred by the owner in respect of injuries to ships or goods, and several claims are made or apprehended, a suit may be instituted by such owner for the purpose of determining the amount of liability, and for distribution of such amount among the claimants."

these provisions it is, I think, clear that upon the fund can properly be made a respect of some "liability" of the owner claimant by reason of an injury or wrong done to the person claiming." And accordingly the action made to this claim by the appellants against the underwriters of the lost ship have no action against the owner of the ship that caused mischief, except such, if any, as they may have derived from the owner of the lost ship, in case they may claim to stand, and that he had and could have no such right of action inasmuch as being the owner of both the ship and the cargo, his right of action he had must be a right against himself, which is an absurdity and unknown to the law.

As to this objection it seems to have been considered by the court below that by the effect of a total loss, and the cession or transfer to the underwriters of the vessel (or whatever part of her) which followed thereupon, the action of law, some new right of action was created against the owner of the damaged ship in favour of the underwriters. I say "new" right of action, because the right of action contemplated is something different from and other than the right of action which existed in the owner of the injured ship, the right of which could only be made available against the underwriters by transference from that right and consequently could only be pursued in fact, I entirely agree with the reasoning of the Lord Chancellor on this head, and am of opinion that there is no warrant to be found in the decisions for such a proposition.

As to the argument at your Lordships' bar the counsel for the respondents took their ground on a much broader ground. They contended that the underwriters, by virtue of the fact that they entered into in respect of this cargo an interest of their own in her welfare, were bound to indemnify the owner, inasmuch as any injury or loss by her would indirectly fall upon them in consequence of their contract; and that this was such as would support an action by their own names and behalf against a third person. This proposition virtually affirms a principle which I think your Lordships will do well to consider with some care, as it will be found to have much wider application and signification which may be involved in the incidents of the law of insurance.

The principle involved seems to me to be this:—where damage is done by a wrong-doer to not only the owner of that chattel, but also a third person who by contract with the owner has assumed to himself obligations which are onerous, or have secured to themselves a benefit which is rendered less beneficial, by the fact that the chattel, have a right of action against the wrong-doer, although they have no immediate or reversionary property in the chattel, and no possessory right by reason of any contract attaching to the chattel itself, such as by lien or hypothecation.

This, I say, is the principle involved in the respondents' contention. If it be a sound one, it would seem to follow that, if by the negligence of a wrong-doer goods are destroyed which the owner of them had bound himself by contract to supply to a third person, this person as well as the owner has a right of action for any loss inflicted on him by their destruction.

But if this be true as to injuries done to chattels, it would seem to be equally so as to injuries to the person. An individual injured by a negligently-driven carriage has an action against the owner of it. Would a doctor, it may be asked, who had contracted to attend him and provide medicine for a fixed sum by the year, also have a right of action in respect of the additional cost of attendance cast upon him by that accident? And yet it cannot be denied that the doctor had an interest in his patient's safety. In like manner an actor or singer bound for a term to a manager of a theatre is disabled by the wrongful act of a third person, to the serious loss of the manager. Can the manager recover damages for that loss from the wrong-doer? Such instances might be indefinitely multiplied, giving rise to rights of action which in modern communities, where every complexity of mutual relation is daily created by contract, might be both numerous and novel.

My Lords, I have given these illustrations because I fail to see any distinction in principle between them and the right asserted by the underwriters in the present case; and if I am right in so regarding them they show at least how much would be involved in a decision by your Lordships whereby that right should be affirmed.

But the ground upon which I will ask your Lordships to reject this contention of the respondents' counsel is this—that upon the cases cited, no precedent or authority has been found or produced to the House for an action against the wrong-doer, except in the name, and therefore in point of law on the part, of one who had either some property in or possession of the chattel injured. On the other hand, the existence of authorities in which the suit has been brought in the name of the owner, though for the benefit of persons having a collateral interest, is somewhat strong to show that such persons had no right of action in themselves. For it is to be presumed that a person having such a right would pursue it directly, and not indirectly, through the name of another.

The observations of Lord Mansfield in the case of Mason v. Sainsbury, which was an action against the hundred for damage done to the petitioner's property, the value of which underwriters had already paid, throw some light on the subject:—"If the insurers be first liable, then payment to them is a satisfaction, and the hundred is not liable. But the contrary is evident from the nature of a contract of insurance. It is an indemnity. We every day see the insurer put in the place of the insured. In abandonment it is so, and the insurer uses the name of the insured."

Tindal, C.J. quotes this language in the case of Yates v. Whyte (4 Bing. N. C. 293), and adds, they confirmed the doctrine that the wrong-doer should be ultimately liable notwithstanding a payment by the insurers."

A question was raised in the course of the argument at your Lordships' bar, whether the underwriters could have defended themselves against an action brought on the policy by Mr. Burrell, on the ground that the loss was occasioned by a ship which belonged to himself, and was navigated by his agents and servants? The solution of this question, whichever way it be solved, does not seem to me to advance the claim now made by the underwriters. If they had a good defence against Mr. Burrell's claim, they were bound to avail themselves of it, and thus throw the loss upon Mr. Burrell, instead of paying him and claiming to throw the loss on the other creditors of the distributable fund. If, on the other hand, they had no such defence, I fail to see how that circumstance has any bearing upon or in any degree improves their position in the claim they now make.

In the result therefore I submit to your Lordships that the only liabilities in respect of which Mr. Burrell paid the fund into court under the statutes were those for which he was answerable in damages; and that, as he could not be answerable in damages to himself, no claim ought to be allowed against the fund in respect of any right derived from him, and enforceable only in his name; while, on the other hand, the underwriters have produced no authority or even judicial dictum for the proposition that, in their own right, and independently of Mr. Burrell in his character of assured, they could have sued him for damages in his character of owner of the Fitzmaurice. And for these reasons I concur in all respects in the motion placed before the House by the noble and learned Lord on the woolsack.

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords, I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of the noble and learned Lord who spoke last in this case, in which I completely agree. But as the judges in the court below have given a judgment the dent to the property retained by it must be considered.

But the right of the assured damages from a third person is no rights which are incident to the property; it does pass to the underwriters payment for a total loss, but on principle—and on this same principle pass to the underwriters who he claim for a partial loss, though the ship passes. This will appear suppose that the owner of the Dunluce had in this case been a different person from Burrell, and that the Dunluce of being totally sunk, had only to the extent of 50 per cent of the owner of the Dunluce Castle was a right of action to recover that from Mr. Burrell, not because he was of the Fitzmaurice, but because he was of the captain and crew whose negligence of their employment, caused damage. The underwriters could claim of an indemnity to the owner of the Castle, on the ground that he had against Mr. Burrell, but they were right, if he had already recovered from Mr. Burrell, to have that considered what that indemnity should be; or yet recovered from Mr. Burrell, the principle laid down in Bandal v. Cullen (97), have a right to get what Mr. Burrell in order to recoup them.

Mason v. Sainsbury (3 Dougl. 417) of partial loss only. The right of the underwriters could not arise in this case back to the passing of the property of the loss, for there was no such property. It could only arise, as from the fact that the underwriters were an indemnity, and so were subrogated to the rights of the assured person whom they had indemnified from the time of the

L.]

SIMPSON AND OTHERS v. THOMSON AND OTHERS.

[H. OF L.]

cannot be transferred unless it already or a fresh right created? The whole of the court below is applicable to the a total loss, and of a total loss only. It not be applicable to the case of a partial 99 per cent. or even more. I think, however, the reason of the law is not more applicable to those who have indemnified for a total loss than those who have indemnified for a partial we only further to observe, that if the law be that the owners of a ship were to be as a quasi corporation, and so the owners of the Dunluce Castle had had a right of action for damages against the owners of the Worcester, irrespectively of whether some whole of the shareholders in the two quasi corporations were identical, the case would have been different. But such is not the law, the Legislature in the Acts now in consideration did not intend to give any right of action which did not exist before, but only the amount recoverable under the exist-that the question whether the underwriter had or had not a defence against any on the policy by Mr. Burrell does not I prefer to say nothing about it.

GORDON—My Lords, this case is attended with some difficulty; but having given it that consideration to which the opinions of learned judges of the Court of Session well entitled, I have come to the opinion that it must be sustained.

we had the advantage of seeing and considering the opinions which have been delivered by your Lordships, and I concur in that of your Lordship on the woolsack. It is unnecessary, therefore, that I should detain your Lordships by further remarks.

The discussion arises with reference to a fund of limited amount, and beyond which no liability against the person who has insured the fund, viz., the owner of the Fitzmaurice, which was the vessel doing the injury to the Dunluce Castle, in respect of which all claims arise. There are several claimants on the fund, in particular the owners of the cargo which was on board of the Dunluce Castle at the time she was injured, and the underwriters on the policy. The fund is insufficient for payment of all the claims, and the owners of the cargo are entitled to object, to the right of the underwriters to rank on the fund. The difficulty in the case is, that the same person is owner of both ships—both the ship which was injured and that which did the injury. If the ship belonged to different owners I think there is no doubt that in such a case as here, viz., a case of a total loss, the underwriters have been entitled as in right of the owner of the injured ship to vindicate a claim of action against the owner of the vessel which caused the damage, and to participate in the fund pro rata which forms the measure of the shipowner's liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts. But that is not the case which your Lordships have to deal with; and we must consider the case on the facts as they are, that the same person was the owner of both ships.

It is there is nothing peculiar to Scotch law in the case, the systems of both countries in regard to marine insurance being the same, and the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts applying equally to both.

The view which I take of the case is a very short one, and it is this—I think the case must be looked at as if the owner of the Dunluce Castle had not been insured. His having effected insurance was a very proper and prudent act, but he did it for his own benefit, and the underwriters cannot complain that they have had to meet the risk against which they insured. Now, I think it is clear that if the owner of the Dunluce Castle had not been insured he could have had no claim against himself as the owner of the Fitzmaurice, which caused the injury to the Dunluce Castle. The injury to that ship was substantially caused by its own owner, and he could not be liable to himself for the damage so caused. And if he could not be liable to himself, he could not assign any right, either expressly or by implication of law, to any third person, as he had none to convey. No doubt the rights of underwriters are well established, and it is one of these that on payment of the risk as for a total loss they are entitled to all the rights in the injured ship which belonged to its owner, but they are not entitled to more. And if the owner of the Dunluce Castle had no right to sue the owner of the Fitzmaurice, neither can the underwriters on the Dunluce Castle, whose rights were derived from the owner of that vessel.

I therefore concur in the judgment which my noble and learned friend on the woolsack proposes.

Interlocutor of Court of Session, 24th Nov. 1876, varied by inserting after the words "rank and prefer the whole of the other claimants" the words "other than the underwriters," and by inserting a finding that the underwriters Thomas Thomson and others are jointly and severally liable to the applicants Simpson and Co. and others with regard to the expenses occasioned by the discussion between the claimants Thomas Thomson and others and Simpson and Co. and others; and interlocutor of the 10th March 1877 reversed, with a declaration that the objections for Simpson and Co. and Henderson, Hogg, and Co. ought to have been received; and cause remitted with this declaration to the Court of Session; and respondents, the underwriters, ordered to pay to the appellants the costs of this appeal.

Judgment appealed from reversed, and cause remitted to the Court of Session. The appellants to have the costs of this appeal.

Solicitors for the appellants, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

Solicitors for the respondents, Grahames and Wardlaw.

Supreme Court of Indicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by W. APPLETON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, Feb. 8, 1878.

(Before BRAMWELL, BRETT, and COTTON, L.JJ.)

FRENCH AND SONS v. NEWGASS AND CO.

Shipping—Charter-party—Classification of ship—Warranty.

In a charter-party the ship was described as newly classed "A 1½." Record of American and Foreign Shipping Book. The ship was chartered to New Orleans to load cotton. Soon after her arrival there the certificate of her classification was cancelled, and the charterers were in consequence unable to obtain insurances on the cotton, and they refused to load the ship. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for breach of the charter-party it was Held (affirming the decision of Denman, J.), that there was no breach of warranty by the plaintiffs, because the statement of the ship's classification in the charter-party was a warranty only that she was so classed at that time, and not that she was rightly, or would continue so classed, and that plaintiffs were entitled to maintain their action.

ACTION by shipowners to recover damages against charterers for breach of the charter-party.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the ship William Jackson, and on the 4th Sept. 1876 they chartered her to the defendants. The material part of the charter-party was: "A 1½, Record of American and Foreign Shipping Book. It is this day mutually agreed between the owners of the ship called the William Jackson, newly classed as above that, &c." The ship was chartered to New Orleans to load a cargo of cotton. The ship arrived at New Orleans on the 13th Nov. On the 25th Nov. the certificate of the classification of the ship (A 1½, Record of American and Foreign Shipping Book) was cancelled. The ship had been classed in the previous August in Liverpool. She was surveyed by a person employed by Lloyds' as having been newly reclassified, which it turned out was not the case.

In consequence of the cancellation, the defendants were unable to obtain marine insurance on the cotton, and they refused to load the ship.

At the trial before Denman, J., at the last Liverpool assizes, the judge entered judgment for the plaintiffs on the above facts.

The defendants appealed.

Herschell, Q.C. for defendants. — There was here a breach of warranty that the ship was as described in the charter-party, and the charterer was therefore not bound to load. Hurst v. Usborne (25 L. J. 209, C. P.; 18 C. B. 144) is different from this case; there the vessel was properly classed at the time the charter-party was made, and ran out of her class by effluxion of time during her voyage. The court held there was no breach of warranty, but the judgment went upon the fact that it was in the knowledge of both parties that the ship would become unclassified in course of time. Here the description charter-party is a warranty that the ship at the time is classed as described and will so remain until the time expires. [Bramwell, L.J. — Then if you could show that in fact it not to have been on the register, although kept on it, there would still be a breach of warranty.] I say that the ship as in the charter-party is offered to the charterer. She is an unclassified ship, and the defendant is not to pay freight or carry out the charterer's part. It is no unreasonable constraint between the shipowner and charterer, that the ship is to be such as she is described. The charterer is unable to obtain insurances on the cargo and goods by reason of her not being classed.

W. H. Butler followed. — The warranty in the charter-party is that the ship was classed as described, and rightfully so classed. He is to

Clover v. Roydon, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 17; L. T. Rep. N. S. 639; L. Rep. 17 Eq. 186; Jackson v. The Union Marine Insurance Co., 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 435; 31 L. T. Rep. 10 C. P. 125.

O. Russell, Q.C. and French, for plaintiffs, not heard.

BRAMWELL, L.J. — I am of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed. I really cannot find myself to entertain doubt about this. It appears to me a very clear one.

The statement in the charter-party is a warranty of some sort or kind that the ship was registered in the shipping books of Lloyd's. Now what is the warranty? Mr. Herschell says it is a warranty that the vessel is "so classed, and will continue so classed," until she goes out of her class by effluxion of time. Mr. Butler put it as a warranty that she was "so classed, and will continue so classed," at the time of the charter-party. I do not think it is possible to put either of these constructions upon the warranty; either, in my opinion, is unreasonable. It is not a warranty, it is also a statement of condition. The shipowner thinks well to get his vessel classed in the American registry. The charterer wants a vessel, but the matter is of no more importance to the one than to the other. Now, what is the true state of things, what is the true expansion of this undertaking? I think "I, the shipowner, warrant that the vessel, in association, having satisfied themselves of the matter, have put my vessel on the register as 'newly classed A 1½,' and she is so classed as such, but I do not undertake to induce them, rightly or wrongly, to change their minds on account of the matter coming to their knowledge, and to induce them, rightly or wrongly, to change their minds." How could he undertake to do so? It is to me impossible to hold that there was an undertaking on the part of the shipowner that the ship was rightfully on the register and would continue there.

If this is held to be a warranty that the ship was rightfully registered, then, although the register and continued the ship, the charterer could show that she was not so classed there, the terms of the charter-party could be complied with. I think this is a very important one, because the contention is right, policies

[OF APP.]

FRENCH AND SONS v. NEWGASS AND Co.

[CT. OF APP.]

goods, which contain similar warranties, be void in cases like the present. I think the mischief which would result from giving effect to Mr. Herschell's contention, are much greater could arise from holding the other way, be- shipping people may always guard them- selves by inspecting the ship on their own account.

It was said also in argument that, if this was decided against the charterer, he would be without remedy for all the loss he has sustained; for it is admitted that he may have had some loss by not being able to insure his cargo so favourably. It is said he has no remedy if no action would lie by him against the American Lloyd's Association if they have implicitly taken the vessel off their registry. But it is not seen how an action would lie by the charterer against them. They do not undertake to do any right, but they undertake to use due care; supposing they had failed in that duty as the plaintiff, could he say: "You put me on the register improperly; the charterer in consequence rejected the ship, and I lost thereby the amount of property." I think that would be remote. The mischief appears to be as to one party in this action as to the other. It is a misfortune to both that the ship should have been improperly put on the register, if it was ever put on.

My opinion the utmost warranty given in the charter-party was, that at that time the ship was classed A 1½.

Nothing was said about the proceedings of the American Lloyd's Association having rendered the charter-party void ab initio. I do not know that could be done except by some agreement between the parties, or by the operation of some legal principle. As I said before, this is the limit of the engagement by the shipowner is that his ship is on the American register "at this time," and "at this time" the American association are satisfied that it should be registered.

Mr. L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

The question is solely one of construction and the document must be construed according to the ordinary rules used in the construction of instruments. Now, this instrument is elliptical to begin with. The words in question are, "Newly classed, A 1½;" the ordinary meaning of that must be that it refers to the ship, and states that she is now classed on the register of the American and Foreign Flag Books, and that she is newly classed. I think that not only a warranty is given, but a condition is stated. Now, one rule of construction is, unless the words used in the instrument are to have some technical sense, they must be understood according to their ordinary and natural meaning; another rule is, that you cannot import into the contract inconsistent with the contract into the contract by evidence of custom; you may add evidence not inconsistent with those actually in the contract but without proof of custom you have no right to add any words at all. There is no evidence of custom, here, and the instrument must therefore be construed according to its ordinary and natural grammatical construction, which is a statement of a fact existing at the time. I think the statement is of what was the case at the time of the charter-party, viz., that the ship was classed as described. Mr. Herschell proposes to add words to the effect that she would continue so classed during the remainder of the time for which she was classed. It is obvious that the effect would be to add entirely new words. After they were added, it is manifest that the shipowners would fail in offering a proper ship under the charter-party, even although the registration were cancelled without cause. Mr. Butler, seeing this, wants to put in "and rightly so classed," which adds words to the charter-party, and also adds to the meaning of it, by implying as a fact against the shipowner that not only he but his surveyor had made a proper survey of the ship. I think we ought to stand by the ordinary meaning of the words used in the charter-party (there being no evidence of any different meaning) that the ship was, as a fact, classed as described at the time of the charter-party.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

We cannot consider whether there is any remedy against the American Lloyd's Association. The question for us turns upon a very few words, "newly classed A 1½, &c." Now what warranty is that? In my opinion it does not come to more than this, that at the time when the charter-party was entered into the ship was on the register as "A 1½," and had been newly so classed. Mr. Herschell contends that the words amounted to something more. He put it that, having regard to this document, the warranty was not only that the vessel was classed at that time, but should continue so classed until in course of time it should run out of its class. That, in my opinion, is not the meaning, because it would include a warranty against the wrongful act of the American Lloyd's Association. If that were meant, it should, I think, have been expressly provided for in the contract. We cannot import a further contract that the description in the charter-party shall not be altered by the wrongful act of third parties. Assuming that the ship did answer the description at the time, has the cancellation had the effect of making it a false description, or has the warranty been broken? It was said that the cancellation had the effect of making it as though the registration had never existed. In my opinion it had no such effect. If the ship was rightly taken off the register it is impossible to say that makes the description false as between other parties. Their rights no doubt are affected by it, but no question as to the cancellation arises between them.

I am of opinion that we cannot import into this contract the terms which are required if we give effect to Mr. Herschell's construction of it.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Smith, Williams, and Quiggin, Liverpool.

Solicitors for defendants, Haigh and Sons, Liverpool.

CHAN. DIV.]

Re QUEEN'S AVERAGE ASSOCIATION; Ex parte LYNES.

[CHAN. D.]

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Reported by J. R. BROOKS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 19 and Feb. 2, 1878.

(Before MALINS, V.C.)

Re QUEEN'S AVERAGE ASSOCIATION; Ex parte LYNES.Company—Mutual assurance—Illegal policies—Costs of winding-up—Past member.An unregistered mutual marine assurance association was ordered to be wound up in 1870.The 8th rule of the association provided that any policy-holder should cease to be a member forty-eight hours after the loss of his ship. A. had ceased to be a member under this rule in 1867, but a part of the sum insured by his policy was still due at the date of the winding-up. A. proved his debt in the winding-up, was put upon the list of contributories, and paid a call. In 1875 all the policies were held to be illegal, and all the debts of the company were consequently expunged, except 42l. due to outside creditors.On an application by A. to have his name removed from the list of contributories:Held, that it could not be so removed, and that he was liable to contribute to the costs of the winding-up.Re Arthur Average Association (ante p. 245; 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 388; 2 Ch. Div. 522) followed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The Queen's Average Association was a mutual assurance association for the assurance of members' ships exactly similar in its constitution to the Arthur Average Association.The 8th rule provided that every policy-holder should cease to be a member forty-eight hours after the loss of his ship. Charles Temple Lynes became a member of the association in May 1867 by insuring a ship called the Wye for 800l. The ship was lost on the 13th Dec. 1867.On the 18th March 1870, the association was ordered to be wound up. At that date a sum of 164l. 9s. 9d. was still due to Mr. Lynes on his policy. He proved a claim for that sum, and was put upon the list of contributories in respect of his policy.In April 1872 a first pro rata call was made for payment of costs and liabilities, the call on Mr. Lynes being 43l. 7s. 4d. which he was allowed to set off against his claim upon the association.In 1875 it was decided by the Master of the Rolls, in the case of the Arthur Average Association (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 539, 570; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 525, 723; L. Rep. 10 Ch. 542), that associations of this nature were illegal, and all their policies void under 30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7, because not signed by the insurers.The Court of Appeal, without going into the first point, affirmed his decision on the second. The policies issued by the Queen's Association being exactly similar to those of the Arthur, all debts to policy-holders were expunged. The debts to outside creditors amounted to 42l. only. This was an application by C. T. Lynes to have his name removed from the list of contributories.Pearson, Q.C. and Caldecott for C. T. Lynes.—Mr. Lynes had ceased to be a member of the association for more than a year before the date of the winding-up order, and was only put upon the list of contributories conditionally in respectof liabilities of the association due while he was a member. These now turn out to be nothing, it is attempted to retain him on the list and contribute to the costs of the winding-up. The rule as to costs laid down by James, J. in Re London Marine Assurance Association (L. T. Rep. N. S. 943; L. Rep. 8 Eq. 176) is that each payer or receiver must bear his pro rata according to the amounts to be paid and received by him respectively is correct and that laid down by Jessel, M.R., inRe Arthur Average Association (ante p. 245; 34 L. Rep. N. S. 388; L. Rep. 3 Ch. Div. 522)They also citedBrett's case, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 255; L. Rep. 18 Q.B. 800.Glasse, Q.C. and Everitt for the official liquidator.—The judgment of the Master of the Rolls in the Arthur Average Association meets every argument that has been urged against us. It is a common mistake of the law; all parties had a benefit (such as it was) of the winding-up, and must contribute to the costs of it. A moment's discharge the winding-up order in the Arthur Average Association has been refused by the Master of the Rolls. In the case before me, V.C. no question was raised as to the validity of the policies. If this application succeeds, all contributories will be able to have their names removed on the same grounds.Pearson in reply citedRe the National Permanent Benefit Building Society (L. Rep. 5 Ch. 309).MALINS, V.C.—Upon the ordinary principles of justice I entirely agree with Mr. Pearson in this case. By the rules of this society every member insured became a member and liable to contribute to the insurance fund. But every member whose ship ceased to be a member forty-eight hours after his loss. Mr. Lynes lost his ship on the 13th Dec. 1867. He therefore ceased to be a member on the 15th. In 1870 the association was ordered to be wound-up, and Mr. Lynes being an outside creditor, availed himself of the winding-up for the purpose of recovering his debt. He was put upon the list of contributories in Jan. 1871, and in April 1872 a call was made. That call Mr. Lynes paid by allowing the amount of it to be deducted from his claim, which is exactly the same thing as if he had paid it in cash. Then in 1875, to the surprise of every one connected with the society, the Master of the Rolls and the Court of Appeal decided that all these associations were illegal, and their policies void, because they were not signed as required by law. Under those circumstances I think the just view of the case would be that Mr. Lynes had only acted properly in the winding-up for the purpose of recovering his debt, and that when he failed to do so, he should not have been held to have retired from the association in 1867. But by paying the call and allowing his name to remain for seven years on the list of contributories he submitted to the winding-up order. The application to discharge the winding-up order has failed in the case of the Arthur Average Association, and would no doubt fail in this case. As the order is still in force, the costs must be paid, and the question is to pay them. If Mr. Lynes gets the order made, that all the contributories can be discharged, the question as to the costs of winding-up the association has been before two ness, V.O. the debts due in respect of were allowed in the winding-up. the Master of the Rolls was exactly wrong on one, and he, after going care-fully over the case, has decided that as the shipowner is not to be paid he cannot draw any distinction between different classes of contributories. I dissent from his decision. It is a hardship that a man who is contributory only to recover his debt, should be made liable for the winding-up. But it would also be a hardship to make the official liquidator pay out, therefore, come to any other conclusion than that Mr. Lynes is liable, and that the shipowner must fail. The official liquidator is not to be paid out of the estate. I cannot say any more.

the appellant, A. R. Steele.
the official liquidator, Lewis and

THE BENCH DIVISION.

W. McKILLIP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, May 24, 1878.

SCROSTER AND OTHERS v. FLETCHER.

go—Expenses of earning freight— assertions to save cargo—Commis- hipped chests of indigo on board the ship at Calcutta for London, the ship also of tea, jute, linseed, and other goods. The ship stranded on the French coast, and the defendant being informed immediately obtained the services of a local association, sent out his manager, account in his favour to provide for the expenses of earning freight, and the whole cargo saved and brought forward to London. An agreement was made by the consignees, amongst whom the defendant, and to the loss of those goods which could not be identified, according to adjustment to be prepared by certain persons. All the goods identified were given to the defendant, and the rest was sold through a broker, who received his brokerage. The average was paid by the defendant in their statement of account, arranging for salvage operations, meeting and arranging with the consignees, receiving and paying proceeds, by conducting the business. The case stated, that these were expenses of the shipowner in earning his freight, and to be charged as general average.

was the report of a referee in an order made the 20th Dec. 1877: on of the parties being called to the order, it was agreed that there was no dispute in the action except with reference to the matters hereinafter mentioned, and that the case be taken as an order to report as special case to the Supreme Court of Judicature.

a plaintiff is a merchant in London; sole owner of the ship Victoria Mary. The plaintiff shipped on board that ship at Calcutta, for delivery at London, under bills of lading, 135 chests of indigo, and the ship sailed for London, having on board a valuable cargo of indigo, tea, jute, and linseed, the indigo being the most valuable portion. On the 4th April 1874, the ship, while prosecuting her voyage, stranded at Etaples, near Boulogne.

5. The defendant was at once informed by telegraph of the disaster, and he forthwith communicated by telegraph with Messrs. G. H. Fletcher and Co., of Liverpool, a firm of which he had formerly been, but was not then, a member.

6. G. H. Fletcher and Co. at once communicated with the Liverpool Salvage Association, and obtained from that association the services of Captain Chisholm and Captain St. Croix, two gentlemen of experience in salvage operations, who on the 5th April started for Etaples.

7. G. H. Fletcher and Co. also on the 6th April sent out their own manager, Mr. Bromhead, to the same place, and the defendant sent him a power of attorney to act for him, and opened a credit of 5000*l.* in his favour at Boulogne to provide for expenses there. The defendant also procured the necessary pumps, tackle, and other appliances to be sent out from England for the purpose of salvage operations.

8. Under the directions of Mr. Bromhead, with the assistance of Captains Chisholm and St. Croix, a part of the cargo was taken out of the ship as she lay stranded (an operation of considerable difficulty) and sent to Boulogne. On the 15th April the ship was got off and towed into Boulogne harbour, whence she ultimately sailed to Liverpool.

9. The whole of the cargo was saved and transhipped at Boulogne, and brought forward by the defendant to London and the freight earned.

10. The first of the cargo reached London about ten days after the stranding, and the whole by the middle of May.

11. On the 25th of April 1874, an average agreement, a copy of which is annexed hereto, was entered into between the defendant and the several consignees of cargo. The several consignees in accordance with that agreement paid sums of money to the defendant, the plaintiffs paying 1212*l.*

12. The cargo as it arrived was landed and warehoused at the London Docks.

13. Some portions of the cargo proved difficult of identification, by reason of the shipping marks having become obliterated. Other parts of the cargo it was impossible to identify. All the goods which were identified were given up to the consignees, under the terms of the average agreement. The goods which were not identified were sold by the defendant by arrangement with the consignees thereof through a broker, who received his brokerage.

14. The defendant incurred considerable trouble in chartering ships to carry on the cargo from Boulogne to London, and in sending out lighters and necessary appliances to Boulogne, and in the identification of so much of the cargo as was identified, and in the endeavour to identify the residue, and in ascertaining and answering the inquiries of and arranging with the consignees, and in preparing for the sale of and selling the unidentified cargo and distributing the proceeds.

15. Mr. Elmalie, of the firm of Elmalie and Son, the average adjuster, mentioned in the average agreement heretofore mentioned, prepared an average agreement dated the 16th Nov 1875.

16. In that statement all disbursements by the defendant are included and duly distributed among the several interests, including charges for the services of Captains Chisholm and St. Croix and of the Liverpool Salvage Association, and of Mr. Bromhead, and the accounts paid to the dock company.

17. The statement also includes a charge as follows:—“G. H. Fletcher and Co. Agents.—Arranging for salvage operations, receiving cargo, meeting and arranging with consignees, receiving and paying proceeds, and generally conducting the business, 2500*l.*” This charge the plaintiffs object to, and seek to recover back their proportion thereof.

18. The sum of 2500*l.* does not represent any sum which the defendant has paid or rendered himself liable to pay to G. H. Fletcher and Co. It was arrived at and distributed in the following manner: Mr. Elmalie formed the opinion upon all the circumstances of the case that 2500*l.* was a reasonable remuneration to the defendant as shipowner in respect of his services hereinbefore mentioned, and in respect of his advances for disbursements; and he proceeded to distribute the sum as follows: He took thereout a sum amounting to 2½ per cent. on the proceeds of the unidentified goods sold, and debited this to cargo in the cargo column. He took thereout further a sum amounting to 3½ per cent. upon the total disbursements, and this he debited to the several interests rateably in their respective columns. The balance of the £5000. he debited to general average in the general average column.

19. The effect is that the sum of £5000. thus distributed was made up of three heads of charge—(1) a commission on the sale of unidentified cargo; (2) a commission on disbursements; (3) a charge by way of remuneration for trouble in respect of the matters mentioned in paragraph 14.

20. There was no contract on the part of the consignees or any of them to pay the defendant the remuneration claimed, or any part thereof under any of the heads above-mentioned, unless such a contract is to be found in the average agreement above-mentioned.

21. No custom was proved entitling a shipowner under such circumstances to any remuneration under any of these heads. But a charge for remuneration by the shipowner in respect of his trouble and labour in such cases has for the last few years been often inserted in average statements, and with increasing frequency. The charge has often been allowed, and sometimes resisted by underwriters.

22. Where unidentified goods have to be sold, and the sale is managed, not by the shipowner himself, but by the shipbroker, or some third person, a commission to such person (in addition to the selling broker's brokerage) is charged and allowed.

23. Where money for disbursements upon salvage of cargo is provided, not by the shipowner or shipbroker, but by some third person, commission upon such disbursements is charged and allowed.

24. Where, in case of wreck the shipowner abandons the voyage, and the Salvage Association of London, Liverpool, or elsewhere intervenes and saves the cargo, a sum by way of remuneration under the name of office charges, in addition to disbursements, analogous to the third head of charge in the present case, is always charged by and allowed to the association.

25. With reference to the first head of claim. If the defendant is entitled in point of law to charge a commission on the sale of unidentified goods, the commission of 2½ per cent. charged being an ordinary merchant's commission, is not an unreasonable commission to charge.

26. With reference to the second head of charge, the defendant was never out of pocket throughout the transaction hereinbefore mentioned to any large amount, or for any considerable length of time, and unless he was entitled by reason of any general rule to charge a commission on disbursements, there are no special circumstances in the present case making it reasonable to do so in this instance.

27. With reference to the third head of charge, if the defendant is entitled in point of law to any remuneration for his trouble in and about the matters hereinbefore mentioned, a sum of £200. is a reasonable remuneration in respect thereof.

The following was the agreement referred to in paragraph 11.

An agreement made and entered into this 25th April 1874, between George Hamilton Fletcher, of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, the owner of the ship Victoria Nyman of 102½ tons register or thereabouts, on the one part, and the respective other persons whose names and signatures, or the names and signatures of whose partnership firms are respectively hereto set and subscribed, such persons being respectively owners or consignees or persons duly authorised and entitled to take delivery of cargo by the said vessel, and who are hereinafter called "the said consignees" of the other part.

Whereas it is alleged by the said George Hamilton Fletcher that the said ship, whilst in the prosecution of a voyage from Calcutta to London with a general cargo of indigo, jute, and other produce, was, by perils and accidents of the sea, stranded on the French coast about twenty-five miles south of Boulogne, and that steps were at once taken by the master and the said owner of the said ship for the safety and preservation of the ship and cargo, and a large portion of the said cargo charged from the said ship and landed, and since been forwarded to London by the said Hamilton Fletcher, and other large portions of cargo have been saved and have arrived in port where in England, either in the said ship or other vessels, whereas the said George Hamilton Fletcher claims he has paid and expended, or has become liable and expended, large sums of money, and he great expenses and made certain sacrifices: the saving and preservation of the said ship and the forwarding of the same cargo to London otherwise in consequence of the said stranding, part of such sums of money, expenses, and will be a charge upon the cargo of the said ship, other portion thereof will be a charge on the cargo on the freight of the said goods, and that out thereof will be a charge in the nature of sums on the said ship, her cargo, and freight, and in the course of the aforesaid salvage operations may have been done to the said ship or to the cargo which may give rise to a claim for general average contribution in respect thereof. And whereas the said money, expenses, sacrifices, and damages must be ascertained and adjusted, and the respective contributions due from the respective owners of goods by the said ship is to be ascertained, cannot yet be ascertained. And whereas the said consignees have respectively applied to the said George Hamilton Fletcher for delivery of the goods charged thereon respectively by the said vessel, or vessels, and are respectively authorised to claim and be allowed the aforesaid, and the said (George Hamilton Fletcher) has agreed to deliver the said goods to them respectively, the freight due thereon being duly paid or secured, and upon receiving such payment or security for the amounts and contributions due from or in respect of the said goods as general average or charges or otherwise on account of the sums of money and expenses expended or incurred by the said George H. Fletcher as aforesaid, or incurred by the said sacrifices and damages as aforesaid mentioned. And whereas the said consignees in consideration of the delivery of their said goods in manner aforesaid have respectively agreed to pay and have paid to the said George Hamilton Fletcher or to Messrs Messrs Messrs and Co., of London, on his behalf, the said sums of money and contributions due from or in respect of their said goods, the sums of money respectively against their signatures hereto, and the receipt hereof is acknowledged by the initials of the said George Hamilton Fletcher, or by the said Messrs Messrs and Co. placed against the same, and the said consignees respectively agreed to sign the underwriting contained. Now, this agreement witnessed by the said considerations aforesaid the said consignees respectively promise and agree to and with the said George Hamilton Fletcher, that they will, as soon as conveniently may be, and within a reasonable time after the date of the said agreement, respectively give to the said George Hamilton Fletcher or his agents, true and correct particulars of the said sums of money and contributions which shall be so delivered to them respectively by the said George Hamilton Fletcher, and of the value of such goods for the purpose of adjustment of the general average and charges. And further, that when and so soon as the said sums of money, expenses, sacrifices and damages shall be duly adjusted, and the respective contributions due to the said George Hamilton Fletcher in respect of the goods so delivered to them respectively, whether for general average, or charges, or otherwise on account of the said sums of money and contributions expended or incurred by the said George Hamilton Fletcher as aforesaid, or on account of such sacrifices and damages as aforesaid, the said consignees shall, to the said ship or goods as aforesaid, be respectively liable, they will respectively pay to the said George Hamilton Fletcher the amount or proportion of the said sums of money and contributions in respect of their said goods, after deducting the amount so paid by them on account of such sacrifices and damages as aforesaid, for the considerations aforesaid, the said George Hamilton Fletcher does promise and agree to and with the said consignees respectively, that the said sums of money, expenses, sacrifices and damages shall be ascertained and adjusted, and the respective contributions due from the said consignees in respect thereof to be ascertained and

DEC. 21.—DEBBAS, v.—IN THIS CASE, which was tried before me at the last Liverpool Assizes, the plaintiffs were shipbuilders at Dumbarton. The defendant company was a trading company registered under the Acts of 1862 and 1867, and the defendants C. Grimshaw and Co. were a firm of cotton brokers at Liverpool consisting of two persons, Thompson and Lingham, Thompson also being the chairman and Lingham, the managing director of the company. On the 23rd Aug. 1873 the plaintiffs contracted with the company to build for them a steamer for 52,500*l.*, payable by instalments at different stages of the vessel's progress, the two last to be one-fifth by cash, when delivered, and one-tenth (i.e. 5250*l.*) "by company's fully paid-up shares at par, when delivered." It was agreed that "when delivered" meant "when the ship was delivered." The statement of claim alleged that, in consideration of the plaintiff entering into the contract, and thereby undertaking to accept the final instalment in shares of the company, it was further agreed that the defendants (the company) should sell or do their best to dispose of the stock before the said final instalment became due or within a reasonable time afterwards, so that the plaintiffs might be paid wholly in cash. It then set out the following letter, addressed to the plaintiffs, and signed "C. Grimshaw and Co.," dated on the same day as the contract, upon the construction of which the argument before me, on further consideration, mainly turned: "We hereby beg to say that we shall do our best to dispose of the stock we propose that you shall take in payment of the last instalment of the steamer, this day contracted for with you. It is not our expectation that we shall have to call upon you to take up these shares." The statement then alleged that this letter, though signed by Grimshaw and Co. only, was written by them as agents for and on behalf of the company. An attempt was made at the trial to prove this part of the statement of claim; but I do not think it necessary to say more than that, in my opinion, there was no such evidence as to fix the company with any liability founded on this letter:

shares, and that the vessel was built for the company. It was proved at the trial by one of the directors that on the 22nd Aug. 1873 he had called on the directors of the company (Messrs. Thompson and Lingham being present), where the proposed contract was discussed, and the directors said about payment being to be made in shares. On the 23rd the same day the contract was again discussed, and the directors at first objected to take the last instalment in shares; but after some further discussion Mr. Lingham said that the prospective company were so good that if the plaintiffs were willing to take the shares at the time of delivery of the ship, they (the firm of Grimshaw and Co.) would get them taken up. The statement of claim said he must have a guarantee of the company whereupon the letter of 23rd Aug. 1873 was put out in the claim, was given. On the 20th Oct. 1874 the vessel was delivered. On the 20th Nov. 1874, the plaintiffs sent in a statement claiming a final balance of 7477*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* at the time 40,000*l.* or thereabouts was due in payment of the earlier instalments, and bills had been rendered which were from time to time rendered. The fact a very much larger sum than the balance claimed in the letter of 20th Nov. 1874 remained due at the time of the action was proved in June 1877. The plaintiff, in his cross-examination, admitted that he was aware, on the 23rd Aug. 1873, that it would be necessary to find substantially all the money required in order to pay for the ship would have to be found in shares. On the 1st Dec. 1874 a letter was sent by the plaintiffs, in answer to their letter of the 20th Nov., signed "C. Grimshaw and Co.," and directed to the directors, per C. A. Webster (the managing director of the company), in which, after discussing the deductions claimed by the company, was said, "You also appear to forget that the cost of the ship you promised to take in payment of the cost of the ship you promised to take in payment at par." In answer to which, on the 1st Dec. 1874, the plaintiffs wrote: "With reference to the one-tenth in shares of the company."

C.P. Div.]

THE GLEANER.

sects. 3, 9, though the cause of action may be of less amount than the limit of the County Court jurisdiction. (a)

In such a case notice of the order made by the court should be given when the writ is served.

MOTION for leave to issue writ in the Superior Court, under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 9.

The plaintiff's claim was for damage to cargo by negligence, and the amount claimed was under 300*l.*, namely 47*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*

SECT. 3 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, provides that any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction under the 2nd section, shall have jurisdiction to try and determine inter alia, as to any claim for damage to cargo, or damage by collision, any cause in which the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l.*

By sect. 9 of the same Act it is provided that if any person shall take in the High Court of Admiralty of England or in any Superior Court proceedings which he might, without agreement, have taken in a County Court, except by order of the judge of the High Court of Admiralty or of such Superior Court, or of a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction, and shall not recover a sum exceeding the amount to which the jurisdiction of the County Court in that Admiralty cause is limited by the Act, he shall not be entitled to costs, and shall be condemned in costs, unless the judge of the High Court of Admiralty or of a Superior Court before whom the cause is tried or heard shall certify that it was a proper Admiralty cause to be tried in the High Court of Admiralty of England or in a Superior Court.

Hilbery moved for leave to issue a writ out of the Superior Court, on an affidavit that it would be necessary for the proper hearing of the cause that a commission to take evidence should issue abroad, and that this could not be done if the action were brought in the County Court. An application has already been made at chambers, but the master doubted whether under the above section he had jurisdiction to make the order, and

(a) This decision proceeds upon the assumption that the County Court has jurisdiction in all claims for damage to cargo. This assumption is, to say the least of it, not indisputable. It must be taken now as well-established law, requiring a decision of the Court of Appeal to alter it, that the County Court has jurisdiction in Admiralty only in cases in which the High Court of Admiralty before the Judicature Act had jurisdiction: (See Simpson v. Blues, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 326; Gunstead v. Price, Fullmore v. Wait, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 543). It is true that the Privy Council in Cargo ex Argos (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 519) decided otherwise, but the other decisions are decisions of courts which now form part of the High Court of Justice, and would undoubtedly be followed in any case of prohibition to a County Court. Now, the General Steam Navigation Company, the defendants in this action, are a company carrying on business in London, and therefore domiciled in England within the meaning of the 6th section of the Admiralty Court Act 1861. Hence the High Court of Admiralty would have had no jurisdiction to try any action against them or any of their ships for damage to cargo happening on board such ships, and consequently the County Court would have no such jurisdiction. It would appear then that the application for leave to bring this action in the Superior Court was unnecessary, as the action could not have been brought in the County Court, and hence there would have been no proceedings which might have been taken in a County Court within the meaning of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, sect. 9. —ED.]

whether it should not be made by the court submitted that, if such an order were not the plaintiff would be obliged to run the having to pay costs, even though he succeeded if the judge who tried the cause refused to a

Hewitt v. Cory, L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 418.

By the COURT.—You may take a rule about the first instance. Notice of the order is however be given to the defendant when the is served. Rule about Solicitors for the plaintiffs, F. W. and Hilbery.

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

ADMIRALTY BUSINESS.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. RAHER, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, May 29, 1878.

(Before Sir R. PHILLIMORE.)

THE GLEANER.

Practice—Costs—Unliquidated damages—Loss of fishing—Collision.

Where a plaintiff claimed unliquidated damages in respect of loss of the remainder of a season's fishing occasioned by a collision, and an order of reference to the registrar and merchant, the defendants objected to the claim altogether, but the plaintiff recovered, being awarded less than one third of the amount claimed by him as damages, the Court gave him costs in respect of the reference on the ground of the peculiarity of the plaintiff's claim, and without prejudice to the general rule as to costs of references.

THIS was an action brought against the fishing smack Gleaner by the owners of the fishing net fishing smack Maud and Florence and of the fishing gear, to recover damages in respect of collision between the vessels, whereby the fishing gear of the Maud and Florence was lost.

The Maud and Florence, of Scarborough, were on the 10th Oct. 1877, drift-net fishing in the North Sea; she had about sixty nets out. While she was so engaged the Gleaner of Hull, who was trawling, ran into and fouled her nets, and these nets, with the barrels, strops, and gear attached thereto, became so entangled, that in attempting to haul them in for some hours the crew of the Maud and Florence were obliged to cut them adrift, saving only ten nets out of the sixty. The Maud and Florence then made for Filey, and was there laid up for the winter, the fishing season only lasted four weeks longer, and the plaintiffs, as they alleged, were unable to procure in that time nets to enable them to resume their fishing. The plaintiffs during the negotiations before action claimed 155*l.* for the value of the nets and gear lost, and also compensation for loss of fishing, but the defendants set off against the amount claimed, the plaintiffs applied for leave to commence the action in the High Court upon an affidavit setting out the circumstances of the collision, and alleging that the value of the nets and gear lost was 155*l.*, and that in addition the plaintiffs had a claim for damages for loss of fishing, the amount of which was recoverable was uncertain, and that it was desirable to proceed in the High Court rather than in a County Court. Leave to com court was given, and the action was accordingly.

ants admitted liability, and paid 155*l*. satisfaction of the plaintiffs' claim. rejected the tender, and at the re the registrar and merchant made follows:

nets .. .. .	£105
and barrel strops .. .. .	15
.. .. .	38
four weeks' fishing from the 10th
7 to 7th Nov. 1877 .. .. .	200
	<hr/>
	355

rence the defendants altogether dis-plaintiffs' right to recover for loss of two grounds, first, because the e too remote; secondly, because, as ed, the plaintiffs might have proects and have continued the fishing.
ce first came on for hearing on the
, and the registrar not being satisfied ence as to the number of nets lost or sibility of procuring other nets, ad-reference to enable the parties to er evidence on these points. On the e reference proceeded, and on the nce the registrar made his report, um of 237*l*. due to the plaintiffs, that

nets .. .. .	£105
and strops .. .. .	15
.. .. .	38
four weeks' fishing from 10th
7th Nov. 1877 .. .. .	72
	<hr/>
	227 net at 4 per cent. per annum from 10th paid.

ar gave his reasons for his report, s follows: "The principal point in is case was a rather novel claim for z during the last four weeks of the 7, and which was objected to by the s being too remote a damage. It the plaintiffs' smack Maud and onging to Filey in Yorkshire, was lift-net fishing for herrings in the then the defendants' vessel Glamor, awling, fouled her nets during the .0th Oct. last. The result was that ed attempts to haul them in the ly able to save ten nets out of a fleet was compelled to return to port.
nable to procure before the close of high terminates early in November, r the purpose of continuing their plaintiffs were reduced to the necesup their smack at once, and taking less lucrative occupation of line or the loss arising from this intereir regular net fishing the plaintiffs special claim. It is well known that g with nets is systematically pursued of smacks during a certain portion and constitutes the main source of a large number of fishermen.

tiffs in this case were so employed at damage complained of was sustained.
tually engaged in operations from ble results might be anticipated with most with certainty, and the loss d by the interruption of their employment was directly consequent on the destruction of their nets by the wrongful act of the defendants.

"It is to be borne in mind that a smack of this class is solely used for net fishing, and if its nets are destroyed and cannot be renewed at once, the smack itself is necessarily laid up unemployed for a certain time at the very period of the year when it would otherwise be profitably employed.
According, therefore, to the ordinary principle on which demurrage and compensation for non-employment is allowed, in respect of a vessel disabled by injury to her hull or gear, some compensation is clearly due to the plaintiffs in this case under that head; and this being so, I have considered that the ordinary rule of allowing so much per ton per day is not applicable to a vessel of this class which is not constructed and is never employed for the conveyance of cargo or passengers, or in earning freight in the common sense of the term, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the probable net amount they were prevented from earning by the customary use of their smack and its fishing gear. With regard to the amount allowed under this head, viz., 72*l*., we formed our estimate from the evidence before us of what the gross earnings of the smack would have been if she had continued fishing for four weeks on her usual ground. From that estimate we have made deductions for the expenses that would have been incurred by them, also for wear and tear of the smack and of her nets and warps, &c., and further for the amount the plaintiffs did actually earn in the substituted occupation they had recourse to.
It is to be gathered from the evidence before us that herring fishery in what may be termed the Filey waters is less productive in the latter half of October and the beginning of November than in the Yarmouth waters. The season ends, in fact, for Filey smacks early in November, although it continues to a later period farther south, and for this reason the Yarmouth smacks which frequent the North Sea waters in the early part of the autumn return in the month of October to their own waters."

The defendants did not object to the report, which was taken up by the plaintiffs, and the registrar having made no recommendation as to costs, the plaintiffs gave notice that they should move the judge to certify that they were entitled to their costs of the action, and to condemn the defendants and their bail therein, and in the costs of the reference.

May 29.—James P. Aspinall for the plaintiffs in support of the motion. — The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs of the action, although they have recovered less than 300*l*., because they obtained leave to commence the action in the High Court under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, sect. 9. As to the costs of the reference, it is true that more than one-third has been struck off the amount claimed by the plaintiffs, but as the defendants paid into court the amount claimed by the plaintiffs for the loss of fishing gear, the only part of the plaintiffs' claim reduced is the plaintiffs' claim for unliquidated damages, and this was the only amount in dispute between the parties. The ordinary rule as to costs ought not to apply to a claim for unliqui-dated damages, where it is impossible for the plaintiffs to do more than estimate the amount of

ADM.]

DE BUSCHE v. ALZ.

[O. C.]

their loss; they must put down in their claim a sum sufficient to cover what the court may think enough to satisfy the loss sustained. The rule as to costs is intended to prevent exorbitant claims in respect of moneys alleged to be due or paid for work and materials for demurrage which can be accurately ascertained; it ought not to apply to claims for damages, the amount of which are greatly in the discretion of the court, and are not capable of exact estimation.

Gainsford Bruce for the defendants.—The plaintiffs ought to have brought this action in a County Court, and ought not to have their costs here. As to the reference, the payment into court was general, and not specifically for the value of fishing gear. The ordinary rule as to costs should apply; the plaintiffs have made out no exceptional case. The adjournment of the reference was occasioned by the plaintiffs not being fully prepared with their proofs at the first hearing.

J. P. Aspinall in reply.

Sir R. Phillimore.—In this case the plaintiffs ask for the costs of the action, and the costs of the reference. By the registrar's report, which has not been objected to, the plaintiffs recover less by more than one-third than they claimed, and the total amount recovered amounts to less than 300*l*. As to the costs of the action, I think the plaintiffs properly obtained leave to bring the action in this court, and that they are consequently entitled to those costs. As to the costs of the reference the plaintiffs ask for the costs upon the ground of the peculiarity of their claim. Their claims consisted of claims for loss of gear, and for loss of the season's fishing. The defendants tendered the amount claimed for loss of gear, but resisted altogether the claim for loss of fishing. This course of action on the part of the defendants has undoubtedly occasioned costs, and I am of opinion that, considering the peculiarity and nature of the claim of the plaintiffs, they are entitled to some costs; I think, however, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to full costs because, by reason of their not being prepared with their case on the first day of the hearing of the reference, they occasioned an adjournment; in respect of this adjournment they are not entitled to costs. Under the circumstances, I think justice will be done by awarding to the plaintiffs the sum of 40*l*, nomine expensarum, in respect of the costs of the reference, in addition to the costs of the action. My decision here turns upon the peculiarity of the case and claim, and must not be taken in any way to weaken the authority of the general rule as to the costs of references in cases of damage.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, H. C. Coote.

Solicitors for the defendants, Collyer-Bristow, Withers and Russell.

Supreme Court of India

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN

Reported by H. R. ROCHER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Dec. 10, 11, 1877; Jan. 14, 15, 18; and Feb. 1878.

(Before JAMES, BACCHALLAY and THURNER, JJ.)
DE BUSCHE v. ALZ.

Principal and agent—Sub-agent—Agent at a profit by sale to himself—Disclosure—Innocence—Delay.

In 1868 the plaintiff consigned a steamer to and Co., his agents at Shanghai, for sale at a minimum price of 90,000 dollars, and on cash payment. The defendant was a resident in Japan, and he undertook, as Co.'s agent, to sell the vessel in Japan, with a view of her not being sold to bad buyers for her. This was done with the sanction of the plaintiff. The defendant, being unable to sell the ship for cash at the price named, sold himself for 90,000 dollars, and resold to Japanese princes for 160,000 dollars, partly in cash and partly on credit. Information reached the plaintiff of speculation on the part of the defendant as to his character of agent for sale to his purchaser until June 1869, after the vessel with the princes was carried out. The plaintiff paid 90,000 dollars to G. and Co., who sold it to the plaintiff.

In the meantime the defendant, though at some trouble, had obtained the whole sum of 160,000 dollars from the princes.

In 1873 the plaintiff instituted proceedings to compel the defendant to pay over the sum realised by him in the resale of the vessel, on the ground that he was the plaintiff's agent in the transaction, and bound to account for the profit made.

Held (affirming the decision of Hall, V.C.) that this was one of those special cases in which privity arose between the principal and sub-agent, and the sub-agent became liable to the principal as if he had been employed by him. The relation of principal and sub-agent was established and existed between the defendant and the plaintiff at the time of the purchase and re-sale of the vessel, and the defendant therefore must account to the plaintiff for all the profit he had made in the transaction.

Held, further, that there had been no concealment or delay on the part of the defendant, and that he would disentitle him to maintain the action. Bombay, that mere submission to a wrong which has been completed without the knowledge or assent of the person whose right is infringed, cannot, without some conduct amounting to accord and satisfaction, or a release, or being shown, bar his right of action. Under the name of laches, it was no ground for refusing relief under the circumstances.

There was an appeal by the defendant from the decision of Hall, V.C. The

OF APP.]

DE BUSSCHE v. ALT.

[OT. OF APP.]

d Munster de Bussche, a merchant and owner of Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, against John Alt, a member of the firm of Alt & Co., merchants in Japan, and sought to make the defendant liable to account, as the plaintiff's agent for profits made by him in the purchase of a steamship called the Columbine. He alleged that in 1868 the plaintiff was the sole owner of two composite screw steamers, the Nymph and the Columbine, subject to a mortgage to Messrs. John Willis and Son, merchants in London, to secure an account in his favor. Each of the steamers was intended by the plaintiff, according to his usual course of business, for sale in some port in India, China, or Japan, and in the summer of 1868, by arrangement between the plaintiff and his mortgagees, the vessels were consigned for sale to Gilman & Co., a firm of merchants carrying on business in Hong Kong and Shanghai in China, and at Yokohama in Japan. It was admitted that John Willis and Son took the active part in the original consignment of the vessels to Gilman & Co., yet the relationship of principal and agent in the transaction was constituted in favor of the latter firm and the plaintiff. The amount of the mortgage debt was very much less than the selling value of the vessels, and Gilman & Co., throughout the transactions which followed upon the consignment, as a rule corresponded with the plaintiff rather than with Willis & Son. The consignment was announced by John Willis and Son to Gilman and Co. in a letter of July 1868, in which occurred the following passages:

Columbine is now at Bombay, and if she cannot be taken to cotton round to China, where, if a sale can be made, we must beg you to send her with a pilot to Shanghai, Nagasaki, or Yokohama, or all three places, so as to get her sold as soon as possible.

We understand that you have no establishment at Nagasaki, but no doubt you can appoint some agent to do the business; but we have to caution you to take great care should be taken in appointing an agent, as a sale is likely to be effected, as Mr. De Bussche will naturally look to us for the proceeds.

At that time the defendant was a partner in the firm of Alt and Co., an English mercantile house trading in Japan, having three different branches in that country—one at Nagasaki, one at Osaka, and a third at Hiogo—and had spent some time to time employed by the plaintiff for the sale of merchandise. The defendant was the managing partner at Osaka and had a Mr. Hunt was the manager of the Hiogo branch. The defendant hearing that the steamers had been consigned for sale, and seeing better opportunities than Gilman and Co. offered of selling them in Japan, suggested to that effect that he should be allowed to do so; and the plaintiff, also, having been informed that the defendant's house and another Japan house could dispose of the steamers, forwarded the information to Gilman and Co., in a letter of 10th Sept. 1868.

As a result Gilman and Co. authorized the defendant to sell the vessels, or, in the event of their not being sold, to find employment for them. The defendant undertook the duty, and the plaintiff corresponded with the defendant's manager at Yokohama, on the footing of the defendant having undertaken it. On the 23rd Oct. 1868 the defendant wrote to Gilman and Co. confirming a limit which he had previously mentioned for the price of each of the vessels, viz., 90,000 dollars net proceeds in England, and stating his willingness to allow some portion, suggesting one-third, to remain on credit, if good interest were allowed and covered by the guarantee of Gilman and Co.; and on the 5th Nov. in the same year the plaintiff wrote again to Gilman and Co., withdrawing the requirement of a guarantee from them, and expressing his willingness to allow a credit, if necessary, of 20,000 dollars or 25,000 dollars for six or nine months, secured on the vessel. The defendant, however, asserted that he was never made acquainted with the fact of the plaintiff's willingness to allow a credit, and that the instructions which were conveyed to him by Gilman and Co., as coming from Willis and Co., were to the effect that only cash was to be taken for the steamers. The evidence upon this point was not clear, but in the view of the court nothing really turned upon it, and they had treated the defendant's assertion as correct. For some time prior to the defendant's employment in connection with the two steamers he had business relations with a prince of a Japanese district called Geyshien; and the prince had become indebted to him in certain moneys, some of which were payable in the year 1868 and some in 1869. This Japanese prince was desirous of becoming the purchaser of a steamer, and the defendant appeared very early to have conceived the notion of selling either the Nymph or the Columbine to him. In the latter part of 1868 and the early part of 1869 several letters passed between the defendant and members of the firm of Gilman and Co., in which the difficulty of obtaining cash for the vessels was stated by the defendant, and in which he suggested that he should himself become the purchaser with a view of reselling on credit. Gilman and Co. in the answers to the defendant did not appear indisposed to accede to his suggestion, provided the plaintiff's limit of 90,000 dollars was obtained; but in the opinion of the court the correspondence failed to establish that any definite arrangement was come to until a date later than the 18th March 1869. It appeared, however, that before that date the defendant had brought his negotiations with the officers of the Prince of Geyshien for the sale of the Columbine by him to the prince to a close; and on the 24th Feb. 1869 an agreement in writing, purporting to be made between the defendant's firm and the prince's officers, was signed at Osaka, under which the defendant was to receive 160,000 dollars for the vessel, payable as to 75,000 dollars in cash, and as to the balance in two equal instalments in the fourth and eighth months (Japanese) of the then year; that is, in May and Sept. 1869. The contract was subject to confirmation by the Geyshien government, and complete possession of the vessel was not to be given over until full payment was received.

On the same day a further agreement between the same parties was signed, under which, in consideration of the purchase of the steamer, it was arranged that the prince should pay to the defendant in the second month of the year 22,400 rios due in the third month, 23,000 rios due in the fourth month, and in the eighth month 30,723 rios due in the tenth and eleventh months of the preceding year. These agreements were alleged by the defendant to have been mere inchoate arrangements, which were subsequently cancelled; but on the 17th March 1869 two admittedly binding and final agreements were concluded, which were in substance to the same effect, with the exception that possession of the vessel was to be given on payment of the 75,000 dollars, while the bill of sale was to be retained until payment of the whole purchase money. Upon these agreements being executed the crew of the Columbine was discharged, possession of the vessel was given to the prince, and on the 25th March a formal transfer to a trustee for the prince and the defendant was executed by the defendant. During the period over which the transactions with the prince extended, Mr. Hunt, the manager of the defendant's firm at Nagasaki, was corresponding from time to time with the plaintiff, mainly on matters of business unconnected with the sale of the Columbine, but incidentally also upon the subject of that vessel; and in a series of letters, coming down to as late a date as the 8th April 1869, Mr. Hunt invariably spoke of the sale of the vessel as about to be effected, or as having been effected, by the defendant under his employment for that purpose, and gave no intimation of any intention on the part of the defendant, either conceived or carried out, to change his position of agent for that of purchaser. In a postscript to a letter of the 10th March 1869 Hunt wrote as follows:

[Or. of App.]

DE BUSCHE S. ALT.

[Or.]

Since writing the above we are in receipt of advice from our Hiogo friends, who state that they are finding constant and remunerative employment for the Columbine, and that she was about to proceed on a trip to the Inland Sea for the purpose of being inspected with a view to purchase.

And when, on the 8th April, he mentioned the fact of a sale having been effected, it was in the following terms:

Columbine.—This vessel has been sold; particulars regarding the sale, Messrs. Gilman and Co., of Shanghai, will doubtless give you by this mail. Our firm at Osaka have informed their friends about this subject. Capt. Lobnitz, of the Columbine, is proceeding home by this mail.

It was admitted on the part of the defendant that Hunt was ignorant of the nature of the transactions resulting in the sale to the prince. While Hunt was writing to the plaintiff, as above stated, Gilman and Co. were also in correspondence with the plaintiff, and in none of their letters to him did they suggest that the defendant was to assume any other position than that of agent. On the 12th March 1869 the defendant, in the name of his firm, wrote to Gilman and Co. to the following effect:

We beg to advise having settled a sale of the steamer Columbine, which will enable us to remit you the net limit given our Mr. Alt for the vessel by your Mr. Lavers (one of the partners in the firm of Gilman and Co.), and we hold to your credit 3000 dollars as a deposit on account of the same, which will be forfeited should the arrangements we are making fall through, which please note. Our senior addresses Mr. Lavers on the subject, to which we refer you. Please hand us by return the necessary documents to make a legal transfer of the vessel, as we may have to give a bond to the consul here if we require to change the flag before such is received by us.

The defendant on the same day wrote privately to Mr. Lavers in the following terms:

We now write officially to say we will take the Columbine over at the limit named in your letter of the 10th Dec., which I hope will be satisfactory, and show you that I have been correct in my ideas as to the sale of the steamer, and induce you to be a little patient with reference to the Nymph, which I am sure we shall be able to settle very soon now. Please let us have documents by return, made out in the name of Alt. We shall remit you 90,000 dollars, in full, less commission, which we will divide with you in any instance, or will hand your Yokohama firm draft of 85,000 dollars at 4s. 6d., plus your commission, which comes to nearly the same thing.

Mr. Lavers replied on the 18th March as follows:

Yours of the 12th March reached us yesterday, and we are much pleased to hear that there is at last a prospect of selling the Columbine, although at the present limit of 85,000 dollars, it cannot be done. By telegram of the 30th Jan. to your firm, and the 21st Jan. to you, we did not fail to notice that the limit given on the 12th March was 90,000 dollars, free of commission. Our commission would be 5 per cent., but we should be glad to divide this with you, and give you 2 per cent. The steamer would be dirt cheap at this price. We accept 85,000 dollars net, with an addition of 2 per cent. as our commission. Our last instructions to Messrs. Busche are as follows:—"London, 24th Feb. Limit on the Columbine and Nymph is 85,000 dollars in England, with the 2000. per month added as Sept. for insurance and interest. No deduction above price of any earnings."

Some additional correspondence passed between the defendant and Gilman and Co., and the latter appeared ultimately to have agreed to the purchase by the defendant of the Columbine at the limit given by the plaintiff, and nothing to show that they were aware of the fact of the resale, or of the fact that the defendant had completed the arrangement for resale. He bound himself to become a purchaser. In the meantime Gilman and Co. were also in correspondence with the plaintiff, and in their letters they spoke of the defendant as acting as agent in the sale of the vessel. On the 17th March they wrote:

We have just received later advice from Hiogo, dated the 12th instant, by which we are glad to hear that the Japanese had entered into positive negotiations for the purchase of the Columbine, and paid a small sum of money as a guarantee of their good faith, and so that we trust a telegram will reach you in a few days of this letter advising actual sale of the vessel on satisfactory terms.

On the 30th March 1869 Gilman and Co. wrote to the plaintiff:

Columbine.—On the 17th instant we wrote to our friends in Japan had advised us that the vessel was in a fair way of being sold. We have since had from them to the effect that, as they found so much difficulty in making a sale at any price for prompt payment, we will take the steamer over at 90,000 dollars. I do not doubt understand it is unusual to sell steamers for cash, payment in most instances being made over some time. Our friends make the above statement having actually sold the steamer, but as they are making a re-sale on credit terms, as a precaution to reimburse them for loss arising out of interest &c. &c.

On the 12th April 1869 Gilman and Co. wrote to the plaintiff the sale of the Columbine on the following terms:

Columbine.—We telegraphed our friends in Japan on the 8th instant to advise Willis and Co. that the steamer had been sold for 90,000 dollars. They had effected the sale before receiving our communication, your increased limit to cover the month for marine insurance. As, however, the difference is not, the difference is fortunately covered by the 90,000 dollars we shall have pleasure in remitting to you, nearly cover the amount required for marine insurance in addition to your former limit of 85,000 dollars. The vessel was transferred at Hiogo, where she was taken up, as advised in our telegram.

On the 3rd June 1869 Gilman and Co. wrote to the plaintiff to the following effect:

[1877.]

DE BURGEON v. ALT.

[Ct. of App.]

me now to ask you for our commission on the sale of the Columbine. You are aware that the steamer was chartered by Messrs Alt and Co., in Japan, who afterwards took her over for your limit of 90,000 dollars.

The plaintiff was informed by Gilman that the defendant himself had become purchaser of the vessel, he appeared to have had some intimations from Japan which were suspicious as to the conduct of the sale in the matter of the sale; and he thereupon secured himself in communication on the subject with a Mr. Pitman, who had been captain of his vessels, and with Messrs. Walsh and Co. of merchants at Nagasaki, with whom at the time he had business relations. On the 21st of April Pitman wrote from Yokohama to the plaintiff as follows:

I am to understand from the best authority that the Columbine and Nymph have been sold for about 175,000 dollars each on credit; what price you have I cannot find out.

On the 31st April Walsh and Co. wrote as follows:

We have also been informed that the Columbine was sold to Prince of Geyashien for 175,000 dollars, mostly on credit, though the reported sale price at Hiogo was 175,000 dollars.

On the 29th April Pitman wrote again:

The Columbine price was 175,000 dollars on long credit. I still trust that Alt's have known their interests and to do what report accuses them of, viz., of taking you with 90,000 dollars.

The information so received the plaintiff took to have, although reluctantly, treated the defendant as an accomplished fact. He subsequently inquired of the defendant whether he would mind telling him the terms of the sale by the defendant of the Columbine, but he took no notice of the inquiry. The Columbine was paid or accounted for by the defendant to Gilman and Co., and through them the price was paid to the plaintiff or his mortgagee. The Nymph was subsequently sold, and her sale, so far as the plaintiff and Gilman were concerned, until shortly before the bill in the present suit was filed on the 10th April 1873. In the meanwhile the defendant received the agreed price for the Columbine from the Prince of Geyashien in the following manner: He received 75,000 dollars in payments extending from 9th Feb to 18th Sept. 1869; 4000 dollars on the 18th Sept.; balance of principal and interest, amounting to 2,750 dollars, in Dec. 1869, in rice which he had entered into an agreement to transmit, but which agreement, as stated by the defendant, was only obtained after the defendant, at considerable risk and expense to himself, had secured the price into compliance by a visit to the capital in a large American steamer. The defendant, in Dec. 1870, dissolved his connection with a firm of Alt and Co., and returned to Japan, where from time to time he met the plaintiff without hearing from him any complaints on the subject of the sale of the Columbine. It appeared, however, that the plaintiff did not hear from him or any other person any further information as to the terms of such sale, beyond what had been given by Pitman and Walsh and Co. The plaintiff instituted no proceedings until 1873, when he required the defendant to act as his agent, for the purchase money of the Columbine, and on the 10th April 1873 he filed this bill praying that the alleged purchase by Alt and Co. of the Columbine on their behalf was fraudulent and void, and that the defendant might be ordered to account to him for all moneys paid to him or his firm in respect of the sale of the vessel.

The defendant, in his answer to the bill, alleged that, as regarded the dealings of agents abroad, it was the common practice, where ships or other articles of commerce were consigned by merchants residing in England to their foreign agents for the purpose of sale, for the principal or consignor to fix a limit or reserved price as the minimum amount for which such ship or other article was to be sold, or as to merchants in Japan, at the minimum at which such might be taken over, or taken to and purchased by the merchant. He believed it was the fact that such limit or reserved price was not intended by the principal, or regarded by the agent, as relieving the latter from the obligation of disposing of the article consigned to him for sale at the highest price which he could obtain for it, or from the obligation to account for the full proceeds of sale, except where he informed the principal or consignor, or other person for whom he was acting, that he took to or purchased it at the price named, and such principal or other person agreed thereto, in which case the agent was wholly relieved from any and every such obligation as aforesaid, and had simply to pay or otherwise satisfy the price or sum named like any other purchaser, and dealt with and disposed of the ship or other article as he best could and thought most desirable for himself. The defendant subsequently put in a further answer to the plaintiff's amended bill in the following words:

I crave leave to refer to the practice or custom stated in the 18th paragraph of my former answer, and say that not only is there such a practice or custom as therein stated, and that the same is, as I submit and believe, a good, valid, and commercial custom; but it is also a further common and usual custom and practice in China and Japan, and one which I believe and submit is also a good, valid, and commercial custom, for goods to be taken over by commission agents as well as merchants, at the limit placed upon them by the consignor or principal, provided that price is not then below the then cash market value of the goods, and that even without any mention being made of the fact or notice thereof given to the consignor or principal, and the goods or price thereof are accounted for and remitted, and commission charged in the same way as if they had been sold to third parties.

In the court below, Dickinson, Q.C., J. O. Mathew, W. Barber, and Pollard, for the plaintiff.

Butt, Q.C., Bristowe, Q.C., and T. A. Roberts, for the defendant.

HALL, V.C. gave judgment for the plaintiff, concluding his judgment thus:—It seems to me, therefore, according to the plain principles upon which this court acts, that the agent appointed by Gilman and Co. was, under the circumstances, not selling according to what the defendant says were the instructions of the principal to sell for cash, but was departing from those instructions without express authority from the principal, and selling in a different manner, because he says he could not sell in the way in which he was directed, and doing that with a view to his own advantage and gain. How can it be contended that, if a profit results from that transaction, the agent is not liable, upon the ordinary principles of equity in respect of all profit made by him? The agent

CR. OF APP.]

DR. BUSCHKE v. ALT.

[CR.]

must be liable to somebody; and, as Gilman and Co. repudiated it, the original principal must be able to enforce payment of that which is his own money. Every agent must account for all profit which he makes out of a transaction, and cannot put it into his own pocket, and profit was made by Alt, an agent, and therefore must be accounted for. Gilman and Co. did not release him from that accountability, and, as I hold, they could not, and never did, release him effectually from any liability; and, being accountable for that profit, upon the ordinary principles of equity, it is enforceable by the plaintiff. The plaintiff is not precluded by anything that has taken place in the way of delay from asserting his claim. Acquiescence is out of the question. In fact, the term is inapplicable to the question, and what was said by Lord Octenham in the Duke of Leeds v. Earl Amherst (2 Phil. 123) shows there was no acquiescence in the case. Therefore the result is that "the defendant must personally account to the plaintiff for all moneys received by him by or on behalf of the firm of Alt and Co., from the purchasers of the steamship Columbine, in respect of the sale thereof effected. There must be an account of all moneys which he has received in respect of the sale, and an account of all moneys which have been paid by the said firm, to the plaintiff, in part payment of the purchase moneys received by the same firm or any member thereof in respect of the said sale of the said steamship, and that after allowing to the defendant the proper commission and other usual agent's charges, the defendant may be ordered forthwith to pay over to the plaintiff the balance." And in taking these accounts, all proper allowances must be made to the defendant in respect of any disbursements or expenses properly made or incurred by him in reference to the sale. Although these would be payable without being specifically mentioned, he must be entitled to every reasonable and proper disbursement which he has incurred, so as to ascertain what is the fair and clear profit derived from the transaction. The plaintiff must have his costs up to the hearing.

On the appeal from this decision,

Bull, Q.C., Bristow, Q.C., and T. A. Roberts, for the appellant, contended—First, that the relationship of principal and agent was not constituted between the plaintiff and the defendant; secondly, that even if it were at one time constituted, the relationship ceased before the sale of the Columbine took place; and, thirdly, that assuming the defendant to have been at one time constituted, and to have continued throughout the transaction of sale, the agent of the plaintiff, the latter had by acquiescence lost any right to follow the profits made by the defendant out of it. The defendant was the agent only of Gilman and Co., and accountable to them, and if the plaintiff had any real case, he ought to have proceeded against Gilman and Co., who were his agents. The plaintiff had given them authority to sell the vessel to anyone for cash at a definite price, and, consequently, to allow the defendant to purchase for cash at that price. The fact that the defendant had been asked to endeavour to find a purchaser would not affect the right of Gilman and Co. to sell to him; neither was it necessary, under the circumstances, that he should communicate with Gilman and Co. in respect of the negotiations for the resale of the vessel. There was no sale for the proposition urged in the court last sale between an agent and a sub-agent, and be recognised as legal. With regard to acquiescence, the plaintiff was aware of the sale of the Japanese prince shortly after it took place, and therefore, ought at once to have brought in a claim or repudiated the transaction, and remaining silent for a length of time, silence must operate as a presumptive acquiescence in the act. They referred to

Ramsell on Agency, 2nd edit. p. 14;
Story on Agency, par. 201, 212, 214, 215;
Tichel v. Short, 2 Ves. sen. 222;
Lockwood v. Abdy, 5 L. T. Rep. 123; 12 L.

Dickinson, Q.C. and W. Barber, in the reply submitted that when he agreed to the sale by Gilman and Co. of the defendant was the matter, the defendant became liable as such was bound to make a disclosure of the whole transaction in connection with the resale of the vessel. The plaintiff, if he would have allowed the defendant to make use of credit, but he knew nothing of the sale with the Japanese prince until after the transaction had been completed. There was no time to show that the defendant had discharged his agency before the conclusion of the sale of the vessel, and therefore, being in a minority, he could not make a profit out of the sale without the knowledge, and to the prejudice of his principal. The plaintiff could not be debarred from relief by acquiescence at that time, as there had been nothing in the nature of an accord and satisfaction on his part; nor had been any such delay as would debar him from maintaining an action. With regard to the alleged by the defendant in his answer to Japan, for an agent to purchase articles at a minimum price fixed by his principal, the consent of the latter, provided the price was below the market value of the goods, and nothing in the evidence to support such a proposition. They cited

Duke of Leeds v. Earl Amherst, 2 Phil. 123;
Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Bam. & M. 12;
Re Canadian Oil Works Corporation, 11
Rep. N. S. 466; L. Rep. 10 Ch. App. 28;
Dunne v. English, 31 L. T. Rep. 51 & 52;
18 Eq. 534.

Bull, Q.C. in reply.

The written judgment of the court was delivered by

THESSIER, L.J.—The question raised by the appeal is as to the liability of the defendant to account as agent for profits made by him in the purchase and sale of a steamship, which was alleged by the plaintiff, employed to sell the

After stating the facts his Lordship said:—Upon this state of facts the learned Vice-Chancellor decided that the plaintiff's claim to the profits made by the defendant out of the transaction of the sale of the Columbine was well founded, and decreed the necessary account to be given of ascertaining those profits. Against this decision this appeal is brought.

In support of the appeal it is contended on the part of the defendant that the relationship of principal and agent was not constituted between the plaintiff and the defendant; secondly, that even if at one time constituted, the

P. APP.]

DE BUSSCHE v. ALT.

[CT. OF APP.]

the sale of the Columbine took place; and, that assuming the defendant to have been time constituted, and to have continued about the transaction of sale, the agent of plaintiff, the latter has lost by acquiescence not to follow the profits made by the defendant of it. The first contention raises a question, as it appears to us, does not present difficulty. As a general rule, no doubt, the "delegatus non potest delegare" applies to prevent an agent from establishing the ship of principal and agent between his principal and a third person; but this maxim, analysed, merely imports that an agent without authority from his principal, upon another obligations to the principal as has himself undertaken to personally do that, inasmuch as confidence in the person employed is at the root of the contingency, such authority cannot be implied ordinary incident of the contract. But the uses of business do from time to time render the carrying out of the intentions of a principal by a person other than the agent originally constructed for the purpose, and where that is the reason of the thing requires that it should be relaxed, so as on the one hand to enable the agent to appoint what has been called a "sub-agent" or "substitute" (the latter in legal descriptions, although it does not denote the legal relationship of the agent, we adopt for lack of a better, and for the sake of brevity) and on the other to constitute in the interests and for the benefit of the principal a direct privity of contract between him and such substitute; and we are of opinion that an authority to the effect that it may and should be implied where, from the conduct of the parties to the original contract, the usage of trade, or the nature of the business which is the subject of the contract, it may reasonably be presumed that the agent to the contract of agency originally intended that such authority should exist; or in the course of employment unforeseen necessities arise which impose upon the agent the necessity of employing a substitute; and that such authority exists, and is duly exercised, if of contract arises between the principal and substitute, and the latter becomes as much bound to the former for the due discharge of the duties which his employment casts upon him as if he had been appointed agent by the principal.

The law upon this point is accurately stated in Story on Agency, sec. 201. A case like the present, where a shipowner employs an agent for the purpose of effectuating a sale of a ship at a time where the ship may from time to time, in the course of its employment under charter, be, is pre-eminently one where the employment of substitutes at ports other than where the agent himself carries on business is a necessity, and must reasonably be presumed to be in the contemplation of the parties; and in the present case we have, over and above that presumption, what cannot but be looked upon as an authority to appoint a substitute and a ratification of the actual appointment of the substitute in the letters which passed regularly between Willis and Sons and the defendant on the one side, and Gilman and Co. on the other. We are therefore of opinion that the relationship of principal and agent was, in respect of the sale of the Columbine, for a time at least constituted between the plaintiff and the defendant.

Next arises the question whether that relationship ceased before the actual sale of the vessel, and upon this question also we are of opinion that the contention of the appellant must fail. In the first place, it is clear that down to the time of the sale the plaintiff was no party to any termination of the defendant's agency, and we think that Gilman and Co. could not, after having once appointed and allowed the defendant to act as agent for the plaintiff in connection with the proposed sale of his vessel and without any authority from the plaintiff, change the defendant's position in the transaction from that of an agent to that of a purchaser from the plaintiff. All the reasons which would apply to prevent the original agent from changing his position without the assent of his principal would equally apply to the case of the substitute, and if such a transaction were held to be valid, so as to entitle the substitute to make a profit out of it, it would open the door in a variety of cases to agents who could not themselves directly become purchasers, indirectly doing the same thing through the intervention of substitutes, and to the commission of serious frauds upon principals. But in the present case we are also satisfied, by the evidence to which attention has already been directed, that Gilman and Co. themselves never assented to the termination of the defendant's employment as agent for the sale of the Columbine, and never assented to the defendant's taking the vessel himself until after the agreement for her sale to the Prince of Geyshien was complete. When that agreement was concluded, the defendant was still, in fact and in law, the plaintiff's agent, and on and from the conclusion of the agreement the plaintiff was entitled to have the benefit of it, and, as a consequence, has a right to maintain the present suit unless in some way by his conduct he has deprived himself of that right. This brings us to the consideration of the contention of the defendant founded upon what has been termed "acquiescence" on the part of the plaintiff. It has been urged that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to impeach the validity of the transaction in question or to follow the profits made out of it, after having, with knowledge that the defendant had become the purchaser of his vessel, assented to the transaction being completed on that footing, received by himself or his mortgagees through the hands of Gilman and Co. the purchase-money, allowed the defendant to incur risk and expense, which as agent he could not have been called upon to incur, in obtaining payment from the Prince of Geyshien, and finally to dissolve his connection with the firm of Alt and Co. upon—as it is suggested but not proved—the footing of his freedom from all outstanding claims, and to return to England and there reside for a considerable period without any intimation of proceedings being taken against him by the plaintiff. It is necessary, however to bring these circumstances to the test of legal principles. It is competent no doubt to a principal to ratify or adopt the act of his agent in purchasing that which such agent has been employed to sell, and to give up the right which he would otherwise be entitled to exercise of either setting aside the transaction or recovering from the agent the profits derived by him from it; and the non-repudiation for a considerable length of time of what has been done would at least be evidence of ratification or adoption, or might possibly by analogy to the Statute of Limitations constitute a defence; but before the principal can properly be said to have ratified or adopted the act of his agent, or waived his right of complaint in respect of such act, it should be shown that he has had full knowledge of its nature and circumstances, in other words, that he has had presented to his mind proper materials upon which to exercise his power of election, and it by no means follows that because in a case like the present he does not repudiate the whole transaction after it has been completed, he has lost a right actually vested in him to the profits derived by his agent from it. It appears to us also that, looking to the dangers which would arise from any relaxation of the rules by which in agency matters the interests of principals are protected, the evidence by which in a particular case it is sought to prove that the principal has waived the protection afforded by those rules should be clear and cogent. In the present case, so far from the plaintiff having had full knowledge of the nature and circumstances of the transaction relating to the sale of the Columbine, or the evidence of ratification or adoption being clear and cogent, it is apparent that he was kept in entire ignorance of the amount of purchase money payable by and the terms of the credit given to the Prince of Geyshien, and of the important fact that the defendant had abstained from binding himself as a purchaser of the vessel until he had obtained the contract for her resale. It is to be observed also that while the plaintiff did not in terms repudiate the transaction by which the vessel was sold, and appears to have grumblingly submitted to it as something which he could not help, he at the same time made no statement and did no act from which is to be inferred any condition, or stipulation, or promise, that upon becoming better acquainted with the circumstances of the transaction he would not enforce his legal rights against the defendant by claiming from him any profits made out of the transaction. We are of opinion, therefore, that there is no such evidence of ratification or adoption on the part of the plaintiff of the acts of the defendant as is sufficient to show that he waived the protection given him by the law, and dealt with the agent quoad these acts as a person discharged of his agency.

It still remains to be considered whether, short of such ratification or adoption the plaintiff can be held to have by his conduct in any way precluded himself from taking the present proceedings. The term "acquiescence," which has been applied to his conduct, is one which, as was said by Lord Cottenham in The Duke of Leeds v. Lord Amherst, ought not to be used; in other words, it does not accurately express any known legal defence; but if used at all, it must have attached to it a very different signification according to whether the acquiescence alleged occurs while the act acquiesced in is in progress, or only after it has been completed. If a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing, an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be held to complain of the act. This, as Lord Cottenham said in the case already cited, is the proper meaning of the term "acquiescence," and in that sense it may be defined as quiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from the conduct of the person, and is no more than an instance of the doctrine of estoppel by words or conduct. But when the act is completed without any knowledge of its nature and circumstances on the part of the person whose right is infringed, the matter is to be determined on different legal considerations. A right of action has then vested in him which, at all events, as a general rule, cannot be divested without compensation and satisfaction or a release under seal, and a submission to the injury for any time short of the period limited by statute for the enforcement of the right of action cannot take away such a right, although under the name of laches it may constitute a ground for refusing relief under some particular circumstances; and it is clear that even a promise by the person injured that he will not take any legal proceedings to redress the wrong done to him could not by itself constitute a bar to such proceedings, for the promise must be without consideration, and therefore not binding.

Applying, then, the principles above stated to the present case: First, it is clear that there was no acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in the defendant becoming the purchaser of the Columbine, and obtaining the profit of the sale of the Prince of Geyshien at any time before the sale to the prince was a complete transaction. He said nothing, did nothing, and did nothing which he abstained from saying or doing by which he induced the defendant to abstain from doing anything, or to alter his position before the transaction with the prince was completed. Prima facie, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to bring his action to recover the profit derived by the defendant out of the transaction. Secondly, there has been no release by the plaintiff of his right of action or anything which could be held to amount to accord and satisfaction. Thirdly, and most importantly, that under certain circumstances a person, by his conduct, whether constituting laches or amounting to an estoppel, entirely precludes himself from enforcing a vested right of action. In the present case no conduct having that effect can properly be imputed to the plaintiff. He made no representation to the defendant that he would not take proceedings. Even if his conduct could be held under any circumstances to be equivalent to such representation or to constitute laches, it was pursued, as already pointed out, in ignorance, due to the defendant's own misstatement of the terms of the sale to the Prince of Geyshien, and especially of the fact that the sale preceded the purchase by the defendant. Lastly, the principal element of an estoppel by conduct, viz., that it should have been intended with the intent or so as to induce the plaintiff to rely upon the estoppel to act in a particular manner, is here wholly wanting, for the plaintiff was quite unaware, until after the answer to the suit was put in, that he had run any risk or incurred any loss by obtaining payment of the price of the vessel paid by the Japanese prince. We are, therefore, that the plaintiff has cluded himself from taking these with the case we have put aside which was discussed in the argument, but which is beside the question between the parties, viz., the morality or unrighteousness of the transaction. The law under which an agent is acting from making a profit out of his position as a principal instead of as a wholly independent of consideration, and it is most important in the commercial honesty in general that the agent concerned in the particular should not be inquired into as to which its validity depends, for by this temptation to embark in what must be a doubtful transaction is removed. If he could have made out by the most honest means that 90,000 dollars in cash is more than full equivalent for the service he got from the Japanese prince, it is wholly irrelevant. At the same time we are not in the present case is one which comes within the mischief which the law is designed to obviate. Looking to the large price stipulated to receive upon his commission, and the amount which was asked, one cannot but feel some doubt whether the purchaser might not possibly, if the interest had been out of the way, to give, instead of 160,000 dollars, and partly on credit, a sum down in cash, at least to a small amount, the 160,000 dollars fixed by the plaintiff. But even were not so, it is at all events highly doubtful if the offer of the Japanese prince submitted to the plaintiff, he would have sold direct to him upon the terms made by the defendant with him. No doubt by the defendant that the transaction was fixed up with the terms of the contract by which the defendant was to be further time for payment of debts by hastening the period of payment now due; but when those terms are examined closely it becomes apparent that, under the circumstances, the prince was prepared to pay a sum of money with a considerable discount for the plaintiff's vessel; and when it has been in argument, "what was to do in the face of the alleged intention to sell for anything but cash?" the plaintiff. He might have said, and said, "I cannot get all cash, but I can get cash and so much credit from a bank, and if you do not like that, let it be offer for myself, and I will be limited in cash." Full opportunity for this course, either through the means of the telegraph, was open to the plaintiff, but instead of taking it he preferred to conceal altogether from the Gilman and Co., and even from his agent at Nagasaki, the real nature of the transaction in which he was engaged; and, in any case, they have acted without any fraudulent motive, he cannot reasonably be held responsible from blame or to have a right to the consequences which a more due regard towards his principal could easily have shown. There was one matter alleged by the defendant, and actually supported by evidence, although admitted to be untenable in argument, which ought not to pass without notice and reprobation, viz., an alleged custom or practice in the ports in which the defendant traded for an agent for sale with a minimum limit, himself to take at that limit and at his own option the thing he is employed to sell. We cannot but express a hope that the court will never again hear of such a contention or have before it such evidence. The fact that there has been a notion entertained by some commercial agents of the existence of such a custom or practice may go far to explain how such a transaction as that complained of in this suit came to be.

In conclusion, we are of opinion that, although some hardship may have been caused to the defendant by the delay of the plaintiff in taking these proceedings, he has nevertheless most properly been made liable in them, and that the decree of the Vice-Chancellor should in all respects be affirmed, and this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Tatham, Oblein, and Nash.

Solicitor for the defendant, G. Badham.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 17 and 22, and Feb. 18, 1878.

(Before BRAMWELL, BRETT, and COTTON, L.JJ.)

MIRABITA v. THE IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK.

Sale of goods—Passing of property—Unascertained goods deliverable to order.

P. shipped a cargo of lumber on board a ship chartered for plaintiff. The bills of lading stated that the cargo was shipped by P., to be delivered "to order or assigns." P. drew a bill of exchange on plaintiff, and handed it to the vendor of the lumber, who discounted it with defendants, and handed them the bills of lading, to be given up to plaintiff on payment by him of the bill of exchange at maturity. Plaintiff refused to accept the bill of exchange without receiving the bills of lading. A new bill of exchange was substituted for the former bill, and forwarded to defendants' agents with directions to give up the bills of lading when it was paid. The ship and the bills of exchange arrived on the same day. Plaintiff did not then accept the bill, and the cargo was entered at the Custom-house in defendants' name. Plaintiff afterwards offered to pay the bill of exchange, and receive the bills of lading, and give a guarantee for the freight, but defendants refused, and sold the cargo.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Exchequer Division, on a special case), that the property in the cargo had passed to plaintiff, and he was entitled to recover.

APPEAL from the Exchequer Division.

The following special case was stated by an arbitrator:—

The plaintiff is a merchant carrying on business at Malta and Constantinople. The defendants are a banking company, incorporated by a firman of the Sultan, and carrying on business at Constantinople, with agencies at London and Larnaca.

On the 26th June 1873 a contract was made between the plaintiff and Phateca and Pappa, a to London. The plaintiff approved of the charter-party. The Princess of Wales proceeded to Larnaca, where she took on board a cargo of 600 tons of umber. About the 9th Oct. the plaintiff sent 150*l.* to Phatsea and Pappa for ship's advances, of which sum 70*l.* was paid to the master.

On the 9th Oct. the master signed four bills of lading for the cargo, which stated the goods to be shipped by Phatsea and Pappa, and to be delivered "to order or assigns." The bills of lading were given to Phatsea and Pappa.

On the 10th Oct. the Princess of Wales sailed from Larnaca, and on the 14th Oct. Phatsea and Pappa informed the plaintiff by telegram that the vessel had left with 600 tons on the 10th inst.; that they would shortly receive bills of lading and draft at sixty days, and requesting them to insure the cargo. The plaintiff communicated with his son, F. Mirabita, trading in London as Mirabita Brothers, and through him effected an insurance on the cargo.

Phatsea and Pappa drew a bill of exchange for 280 Turkish liras on the plaintiff, and indorsed and handed it with the bills of lading to Corkji, from whom they had bought the umber which formed the cargo. Phatsea and Pappa had paid Corkji for the umber, and they handed him the bill of exchange by way of accommodation, to enable him to obtain an advance from the defendants, and in anticipation of future supplies of umber.

Corkji discounted the bill of exchange at the Larnaca agency of the defendants' bank, and with the bill of exchange handed them the bills of lading, saying that they were to be sent to Constantinople, and given up to the plaintiff on payment by him of the bill of exchange at maturity.

The Larnaca agency forwarded the bill of exchange and bills of lading to their bank at Constantinople, Pappa having come to Constantinople and handed to the plaintiff the charter-party and invoice of the cargo, which stated that the same was "shipped by order and on account of" the plaintiff. The defendants' bank at Constantinople presented the bill of exchange to the of exchange, and on the 20th Nov. 1891 the bill for 254*l.* 11*s.* to their agent and directed them "to give up the bill on payment of the inclosed bill of exchange."

At the time of making the agreement the plaintiff for the drawing of the bill for 254*l.* 11*s.* as already mentioned, full whether the bills of lading would be before the arrival of the ship. Pappa gave the plaintiff a letter, addressed of the Princess of Wales, to be used when the ship should arrive in England before the bills of lading, which letter purported to be from the master, if the bills of lading had not been delivered to the plaintiff.

On the 3rd Dec. the Princess of Wales reached Gravesend, and was ordered to the docks by F. Mirabita.

On the same day the bill of 254*l.* 11*s.*, together with the bills of lading, was delivered by post, and in the course of the day was left at the office of Mirabita Brothers. The following note attached: "Bill of lading for 600 tons, per Princess of Wales, to be given up against the payment of draft, 254*l.* 11*s.*, on Mirabita Brothers."

F. Mirabita returned the bill of exchange to the defendants' London agency, stating that he was ready to pay the bill at maturity, and then accepted it.

On the 8th Dec. the defendants' London agency gave orders to the ship's brokers in the name of the bank, and on the 10th Dec. was entered at the Custom-house in the name of the defendants; but the defendants took possession of the cargo on the 20th Dec.

On the 12th Dec. F. Mirabita Brothers, the defendants, offered to pay the bill of exchange for the bills of lading. The defendants refused to accept payment, alleging that they had not taken possession of the cargo, and made themselves liable for freight.

On the 18th Dec. F. Mirabita Brothers presented the bill of exchange to the

OF APP.]

MIRABITA v. THE IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK.

[CT. OF APP.]

far as it was a question for the jury, the ratio found as a fact that it was the intention of the vendors and Pappa, and of the plaintiff, that property in the cargo of umber should pass to the plaintiff upon its shipment on board the Wes of Wales, subject to a lien on the same payment of the price; and their intention that property in the cargo should be vested in the plaintiff continued from the time of shipment to the arrival of the ship in England.

The court to be at liberty to draw inferences from the evidence, and to disregard the above finding, if a conclusion could not have been justified in coming to that conclusion from the facts above stated. The question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages from the defendants for their failure to deliver the cargo as above mentioned.

Divisional Court (Cleasby and Hudson, BB.) gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

17 and 22.—H. Matthews, Q.C. and Arthur for the defendants.—The property in the cargo of umber did not pass to the plaintiff, and therefore he can have no claim against the defendants for dealing with it as they did. There was no specific goods, and the fact that the shippers issued bills of lading by which the umber was to be red to their order or assigns, and afterwards an interest to Corkji, which interest Corkji transferred to the defendants, would prevent any recovery from passing to the plaintiff :

Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1;
Garner v. The Trustees of the Liverpool Docks, 6 Ex. 548; 20 L. J. 393, Ex.;
Castel v. Booker, 2 Ex. 691; 18 L. J. 9, Ex.;
Eorshaw v. Magniac, 6 Ex. 570;
Leppard v. Harrison, 1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 66;
24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 857; L. Rep. 5 H. of L. 116;
Wait v. Shuter, 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 77; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 492; L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 47; 45 L. J. 24, C. P.;
Lebarron v. Kreeft, and Kreeft v. Thompson, 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 36; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 365; L. Rep. 10 Ex. 274; 44 L. J. 238, Ex.;
Abys v. Brown, 14 Q. B. 496.

F. White, Q.C. and Archibald for the plaintiff.—The question as to the passing of the property is a question of fact, and the exact point of time at which it passes varies according to the circumstances of the particular case. Here it is from the special case that it was the intention of the parties to pass the property to the plaintiff upon shipment of the cargo, subject to a lien on the price; this finding is borne out by the evidence, and the authorities show that it is a question of fact. See, in addition to the authorities referred to:

Samson on Sales, book 2, c. 5, pp. 265, 271, 2nd ed.;
notes to Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's L. C. 203, 2nd edit. (citing Kemp v. Westbrook, 1 Vesey 278, 2nd Franklin v. Neale, 13 M. & W. 481);
Case v. Hare, 3 H. & N. 484; 4 H. & N. 822, 27 L. J. 372, Ex.; 29 L. J. 6, Ex.;
Wait v. Bell, 5 E. & B. 772; 6 E. & B. 555; 25 L. J. 28 and 321, Q. B.;
Wait v. Swan, 17 C. B. N. S. 84.
See Wilson in reply.

Our. adv. vult.

18.—The following judgments were delivered:

SWELL, L.J.—This case has been argued on the ground that the law of England or a like law is applicable, and we must so deal with it. We must treat as the governing bargain between the parties, the bill of lading, and that whether plaintiff and Phatsea and Co., the one made at the time it was arranged that the payment should be made by a bill at two months, and that the vendees should not be entitled to the 600 tons of umber, or bills of lading of them, until payment of the bill of exchange. No question arises as to the defendants' rights, for it was admitted, and properly admitted, that the defendants did wrong in refusing the amount of the bill and selling the umber. On the other hand there is no contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, so that in the result the case is reduced to this: When the defendants tortiously disposed of the umber, had the plaintiff such a property therein, or right thereto, as to entitle him to maintain this action? It is argued that he had not, and the reason given is, that, as the umber bought was not specific and ascertained, and as on shipment the shippers took a bill of lading to order, and gave an interest in it to Corkji, who transferred it to the defendants, no property passed, and for this a long series of authorities, beginning with Wait v. Baker (ubi sup.) and ending with Ogg v. Shuter (ubi sup.), is cited. It is almost superfluous to say that by these authorities I am bound, that I pay them unlimited respect, and I may add I do so the more readily as I think the rule they establish is a beneficial one. But what is that rule? It is somewhat variously expressed, as being either that the property remains in the shipper, or that he has a jus disponendi. Undoubtedly he has a property or power which enables him to confer a title on a pledgee or vendee, though in breach of his contract with the vendor. This appears from Gabarron v. Kreeft (ubi sup.), Wait v. Baker (ubi sup.), and to some extent from Ellershaw v. Magniac (ubi sup.). In the first case Parke, B. expressly says that the vendee Baker could, under the circumstances, maintain an action against Lethbridge for having sold the barley to Wait. This property or power exists then; and therefore, if the vendors of the umber had sold it to the defendants, this action would not be maintainable. But in that case the defendants would have acquired a right, while, as I have said, it is admitted that no right in them can be relied on. I think it is not necessary to inquire whether what the shipper possesses is a property, strictly so called, in the goods, or a jus disponendi, because, I think, whichever it is, the result must be the same, for the following reasons: That the vendee has an interest in the specific goods as soon as they are shipped is plain. By the contract they are at his risk. If lost or damaged they must bear the loss. If specially good, and above the average quality which the seller was bound to deliver, the benefit is the vendee's. If he pays the price, and the vendor receives it, not having transferred the property, nor created any right over it in another, the property vests. It is found in this case that as far as intention went the property was to be in the plaintiff on shipment. If the plaintiff had paid, and the defendants had accepted, the amount of the bill of exchange, it cannot be doubted that the property would have vested in the plaintiff. Why? Not by any delivery. None might have been made, the defendants might have wrongfully withheld the bill of lading. The property would have vested by virtue of the original contract of sale. It follows that it vested on tender of the price, and that whether it, and never intended that the property should pass until he handed the bill of lading to the vendee on such terms as he chose to exact. Parke, B. says: "There is no pretence for saying that Lethbridge agreed that the property should pass. . . . There was nothing that amounted to an appropriation in the sense of that term which alone would pass the property. . . . There was no agreement between the two parties that that specific cargo should become the property of the defendant," the vendee. Here all the evidence shows that there was such an agreement. The arbitrator says it existed, in fact, at the time of shipment, but the subsequent conduct of both parties shows it. What seems decisive is this, the plaintiff must have a right against someone. Has he any against Phatsea? Now Phatsea has done nothing that he had no right to do, he has done everything he was bound to do, treating the altered agreement as governing. No action therefore would lie against him. It must then be the defendants who are in the wrong. I think they are, that the property was to pass on payment, and consequently on tender of payment of the bill of exchange, that the bill of lading was handed to the Larnaca Bank to be delivered to the plaintiff on payment of the bill of exchange, and that, therefore, the plaintiff can maintain this action, and judgment should be affirmed. I would add that I agree with the reasoning of my brother Cleasby in the court below; and I would further remark that I believe this is a question which would not have been open to the slightest doubt if the action had been brought after the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts. Cotton, L.J. has favoured me with a perusal of his judgment, and I entirely agree with it.

COTTON, L.J.—In this case the vendors, on shipping the goods, the subject of the contract, took a bill of lading requiring the delivery of the goods to be to their order, and dealt with that bill of lading in this way in order to secure payment of the bill of exchange which they then drew on the plaintiff. The bill of exchange was discounted with the defendants, and the bill of lading was contended were adverse to the decision, I think it better to consider to be the principle of the case, and to point out how far it is applicable to such cases as this. A contract for sale of chattels not specifically described does not pass to the purchaser afterwards an appropriation of the goods to pass under the contract; that the parties agree as to the specific cargo the property is to pass, and nothing is done in order to pass it. In the contract the delivery by the vendor to the carrier, or (unless the effect of the contract is restricted by the terms of the contract) shipment on board a ship of, or carriage by, the purchaser is an appropriation of the property. If, however, the vendor, in giving the articles which he intends to sell, the contract, takes the bill of lading to his order, and does so not as agent or purchaser but on his own behalf, he thereby reserves to himself the disposing of the property, and there is no final appropriation, and the property does not on shipment pass to the purchaser. When the vendor on shipment takes the bill of lading to his own order, he has absolutely disposing of the cargo, and the purchaser from ever asserting his property therein; and according to Baker, Ellershaw v. Magniac, and Kreeft (ubi sup.), in each of which the vendors had dealt with the bills of lading to their own benefit, the decisions were that they had no property in the goods, and they were offered to accept bills for, or had not. So, if the vendor deals with or claims the bill of lading in order to secure payment, as when he sends forward the bill of lading with a bill of exchange attached, with the bill of lading is not to be delivered to the purchaser till acceptance or payment of the bill of exchange, the appropriation is not 1877.]

CUNNINGHAM v. DUNN AND ANOTHER.

[Ct. of App.]

by the purchaser of the contract price vest

When this occurs there is a performance condition subject to which the appropriation is done, and everything which according to the view of the parties is necessary to transfer property is done, and in my opinion, under circumstances, the property does on payment of the price pass to the purchaser. These principles to the present case. Pappa attempted to make use of the power of disavowal which he had under the bill of lading for goods of entirely withdrawing the cargo from the contract. He dealt with it only for the purpose of securing payment of the price. It is stated in the special case that Mr. Pappa acted for Pappa, discounted the said bill of lading at the agency of the defendants' and with the bill of exchange handed them of lading, saying that they were to be sent to Constantinople, and given up to the defendants on payment of the bill of exchange at 100. Under these circumstances there was appropriation by the vendor of the cargo subject to payment of the price; this was done, and as it is conceded that the defendants were claiming anything more, the plain-purchaser, had done or offered to do all incumbent on him to make the appropriation absolute, and the property vested in him.

L.J. concurred.

Judgment affirmed.

For plaintiff, Stooken and Jupp.

For defendants, Clements.

Thursday, Feb. 14, 1878.

BRANWELL, BRETT, and COTTON, L.J.J.)

CUNNINGHAM v. DUNN AND ANOTHER.

Charter-party—Shipowner's liability—Action for breach—Prevention by act of foreign government and defendants agreed by charter-party that the ship, then on her way to Malta,

"after loading dead weight at Malta for benefit," sail to a first-class Spanish port whither should order, and load light cargo whither. A first-class port was described in the charter-party as "any port that a steamer may from a foreign port can load at by law without risk of detention by customs &c." Defendants had contracted to load military stores at Malta, and plaintiff knew that the ship was ordered to Valencia, but on arrival was unable to load there because the Spanish customs regulations prohibited ships from loading Government stores from foreign ports. A ship could not load any other kind of dead weight could not load.

Was there breach of the charter-party in not loading the judgment of Lord Coleridge, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

From the judgment of Lord Coleridge,

Appeal was brought by the plaintiff, against the defendants, owners of the ship Minstrel, for not loading a cargo pursuant to charter-party made between the plaintiff and defendants, by which the ship was demised "now on her way to Genoa and Malta," and agreed that she should

With all convenient speed, after loading dead weight at Malta for owner's benefit, sail and proceed to Messina, and one first-class Spanish port in the Mediterranean, or two first-class Spanish ports in merchant's option, or one Spanish port only, orders to be given at Malta twenty-four hours after steamer's arrival there, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and there load from the factors of the said affreighter the remaining measurement space of light cargo only, including all descriptions of fruit, cargo not to exceed 400 tons, nor to be less than 300 tons, which the said affreighter binds himself to ship, not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, apparel, provisions, and furniture, and being so loaded, shall therewith proceed to a safe place in the river Thames, London, as ordered on arrival at Gravesend, or so near thereto as she may safely get, and deliver the same on being paid freight . . . By first class is meant any port that a steamer with cargo from a foreign port can load at by Spanish law, without risk of detention by customs authorities.

The statement of claim further alleged that orders were duly given at Malta to sail to Valencia, and there load; that Valencia is a first-class Spanish port within the meaning of the charter-party, that the plaintiff had his cargo ready to be loaded at Valencia, and that the said steamship did not load the said cargo at Valencia, but, by and through the default and breach of agreement of the defendants, neglected so to do.

The statement of defence alleged that

At the time the said charter-party was entered into, the said steamship was on her way to Malta, and bound to load there certain military stores for the English Government as the plaintiffs then well knew, and the words in the said charter-party "after loading dead weight at Malta," referred to and were intended by the plaintiff and defendants to refer to the said military stores, and the defendants did not know of anything to prevent the fulfilment of the said charter-party, and did not know of anything to prevent the said steamship with the said military stores on board, loading merchandise at any first-class Spanish port, and the said steamship in pursuance of the said charter-party loaded the said military stores at Malta. And the customs' regulations which were in force at Valencia during all the times mentioned in the statement of claim, prohibited merchandise at that port from being put on board vessels having military stores on board, and by the regulations in force at Valencia at the times aforesaid, any attempt to load at Valencia merchandise on board a vessel having military stores on board would expose such vessel to the risk of detention and to detention by the customs authorities there, and by reason of the premises, Valencia was not a first-class Spanish port within the true intent and meaning of the said charter-party and the agreement therein contained.

The said steamship proceeded to Valencia, and was ready to take on board there the agreed cargo, but the plaintiff was prohibited by the custom's authorities there from loading the same, and neglected to load the same.

Even if the said steamship was not ready to take on board the agreed cargo, the plaintiff suffered no damage thereby, because, if the steamship had been ready, the plaintiff would have been prohibited and prevented by the customs authorities of the said port from loading the said cargo on board the said steamship, and was, in fact, prohibited and prevented by the said customs authorities from loading the said cargo on board the said steamship, and from performing the said charter-party on his part.

At the trial, which took place at Guildhall, on the 5th Dec. 1877, before Lord Coleridge, C.J., and a special jury, it was proved that the Minstrel loaded military stores at Malta and sailed to Valencia, in order to load there pursuant to the charter-party. She arrived at Valencia on the 16th Nov. 1875. At that time vessels, having military stores on board, were prohibited by the Spanish Custom-house regulations from loading at Spanish ports. The plaintiff's agent at Valencia, the British Vice-Consul at Valencia, and the was entered into, and, secondly, when he ordered the Rainton to proceed to Valencia. That he knew this fact would prevent the loading of the other cargo and subject the ship to embargo, and that he knew it when he ordered the ship to Valencia.

That the defendant knew these facts subsequently to receiving a telegram from the Foreign Office. (This was after the Rainton had gone to Malta.)

There were other findings not material to this report.

Lord Coleridge, C.J., gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

Murphy, Q.C. and Bray for the plaintiff.—Judgment was entered for the defendants wrongly on the construction of the charter-party, and on the findings of the jury. The parties must be bound by the written contract into which they have entered, and no evidence to show that there was a contract to carry Government stores from Malta can be admissible. A difficulty which was in existence before the contract was entered into, cannot excuse performance; it is only something arising after the contract which can have that effect. Here the defendant should have provided against the difficulty beforehand:

Parsons v. Jane, Alleyne, 27;

Medeiros v. Hill, 8 Bing. 231.

These cases are in point here, and Harris v. Dreesman (23 L. J. 210, Ex.) is not.

Cohen, Q.C. (Gainsford Bruce with him) for the defendants.—Macdonald v. Longbottom (1 E. & E. 977, 987; 28 L. J. 293, Q. B.; 29 L. J. 256, Q. B.) is in favour of the defendants; and so is Ford v. Cotterworth (3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 190; 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 634; L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 127; in the Exchequer Chamber, 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 468; 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 165; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 544). In that case Blackburn, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, says (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. at pp. 133, 134): "We agree that whenever a party to a contract undertakes to do some particular act, the performance of which depends shall use reasonable diligence part of the delivery at the port merchant being ready to receive in the usual manner, and the owner, by his to deliver in the usual manner," which was affirmed by the Exchequer Chamber on the consideration discharging a ship is something both parties to the contract. It follows that the defendants here Murphy Q.C., in reply refers Richardson (1 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. Rep. N. S. 513; L. Rep. 7 C. P. the Exchequer Chamber (2 Asp. 288; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 643; L.

BRAMWELL, L. J.—I think the to be affirmed. I think there is either party at Valencia. The ship was at Valencia would be g v. Cotterworth (ubi sup.), for I think were ready there. A point was Murphy that it was the fault of the ship, but she did not so proceed to Valencia. I know of no authority will deal with the charter-party, ship as "now on her way to Genoa and goes on to provide that she convenient speed, after loading Malta for owner's benefit, sail to certain ports named, and load affreighter. This provision was protect the shipowner, by entitling dead weight for himself before he to fulfil his engagement with and it does show that the ship is a voyage to Malta to load dead is no restriction as to the nature weight, and I think the fact that the ship was going on her and there was no general warranty ever, he suggested that, supposing general warranty of that sort, she

[APP.]

CUNNINGHAM v. DUNN AND ANOTHER.

[CT. OF APP.]

plaintiff gave a licence to the defendants the charter-party was entered into, to do they did, and though, strictly speaking, of the giving of that licence prior to the party might not be admissible, still it was giving licence, and the plaintiff knew how stood, and sent the ship to the Spanish without objection. I think there was a joint refusal, that there was no refusal by the defendant Valencia, that there was no warranty, and if it can be said the defendants had no disable themselves from performing their contract, the answer is that they did not, for they were disabling themselves, and had a licence from the plaintiff to do what they did, and therefore the judgment must be affirmed.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of opinion that, under a charter-party in the ordinary form to load at a port, the shipowner is bound to have the cargo ready to receive the cargo, and he is prevented by any unforeseen cause, capture, where there is no exception in the charter-party, he would fail to perform what he has undertaken, and would be liable to an action on the charter-party. The charterer is to have the cargo ready within a certain time, and if he is prevented by any misfortune is attributable to the cargo itself, that is misfortune, and he is liable to the owner, being the liability under an ordinary charter-party, it is clear that there can be no other way without proving that the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. Now, what is the condition according to the charter-party, the shipowner's voyage to Genoa and Malta, and was ordered to Messina or some Spanish port or ports to receive a cargo for the plaintiff; but then there is a usual term—"with all convenient speed loading dead weight at Malta for owner's use."

The first question is, what is the interpretation of this clause? I would go to the charter-party, L.J.; for the purpose of the terms in the charter-party, I think we should receive evidence of the facts that were to be proved, to show that they were acting with reference to particular facts. The facts were that the shipowners were under contract to load military stores at Malta, and the parties were negotiating with reference to the facts, one of which was that dead weight of military stores; so there is no reason why the cargo should be put in, except for this purpose, to show that as between the plaintiff and the defendants the ship was to be allowed to take military stores on board. No evidence could be adduced to show that military stores were not dead weight but measurement goods, for that would be to contradict the words of the charter-party; but the facts include stores, and Macdonald v. Long (ubi sup.) is an authority to show that the interpretation stated is correct. I therefore think the charter-party it was agreed that the ship should take military stores on board, and send them to England, that there should be a cargo ready to take cargo at Valencia, but she was not ready with military stores on board. The facts, according to the evidence, did take the ship to Valencia for the purpose of taking cargo on board, and, except for her having the military stores on board, it is admitted that she was ready for cargo. The defendants up to that time had done nothing which they were not entitled to do, but by reason of the law of Spain, and the refusal of the Spanish Government to permit the ship to load, the defendants were not ready to take the cargo, and by reason of the same law and the same refusal, the plaintiff was not ready to put the cargo on board. It seems to me, therefore, that the parties were prevented by the Spanish Government from carrying out the contract into which they had entered, and I think that Ford v. Cotesworth (ubi sup.), though not exactly a parallel case, is nearly in point; there it was decided that where both parties were bound by charter-party to use due diligence in unloading, and owing to a threatened bombardment of the port where the ship was discharging, the authorities refused to allow the unloading to proceed for several days, the charterer was not liable for the delay; that is only another way of saying that where both parties are bound to use reasonable diligence, if both are not ready because they are prevented, neither party can maintain an action against the other. I think, therefore, the judgment should be affirmed.

COTTON, L.J.—We must take it, for the purpose of this argument, that the plaintiff had a cargo which he was ready to put on board if he could when the defendants' ship was brought to Valencia, but he was subject to a prohibition. The plaintiff was ready to perform his part of the contract, and the ship was there ready for cargo, but the Spanish Government prevented the owners of the ship (the defendants) from taking the cargo, and prevented the owner of the cargo (the plaintiff) from putting it on board, because the military stores were on board the ship, so that the Spanish Government would not allow the cargo to be loaded. If there were nothing in the contract to the contrary, I should think that would be a breach, because the defendants prevent themselves from being ready and willing to carry out their undertaking. But we must look at the contract, and I think that parol evidence is admissible, not to explain the meaning of particular words, but because we must learn what the facts of the case are, and say what the true construction of the charter-party, dealing with those facts, is. The ship was on her way to Malta under a contract to take in cargo, and both parties knew the nature of the cargo to be such that unless the Spanish Government consented to the loading of the ship at Valencia, it would be impossible for her to load. The contract was for the whole capacity of the ship, subject to the cargo which was to be taken on board at Malta, and all that the shipowners have done which would tend to induce the Spanish Government to prevent the loading of the ship is done under the contract, and, therefore, the plaintiff cannot say to the defendants "you are in default so as to be answerable to me for not loading." The act of the Spanish Government would excuse both parties, unless either were in default, but the defendants are not in default, and, therefore, they are excused, and are not liable to the plaintiff, and the judgment ought to be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Lowless and Co.

Solicitors for defendant, Miller and Smith.

May 13 and 14, 1878.

(Before BRETT, COTTON, and THESIGER, L.JJ.)

WINGATE, BIRRELL, AND CO. v. FOSTER.

Marine insurance—Insurance to a place, while there, "and until again returned"—Risk covered by policy—Deviation.

Steam pumps were insured "at and from Ardrossan to the Alexandra steamer, ashore in the neighbourhood of Drogheda, and while there engaged at the wreck, and until again returned to Ardrossan by the Seamew salvage steamer . . . including all risk . . . while at the wreck."

After the Alexandra was raised, she made for Belfast Lough, which is not the way to return to Ardrossan, the pumps remaining on board her; on this voyage she sank, and the pumps were lost.

Held (affirming the judgment of Field J.), that the loss was not covered by the policy.

APPEAL from the judgment of Field, J.

The action was brought to recover for a total loss on a policy of insurance on some steam pumps, valued at 2000*l*. The risk was described in the policy as follows: "At and from Ardrossan to the Alexandra steamer, ashore in the neighbourhood of Drogheda, and while there engaged at the wreck, and until again returned to Ardrossan by the Seamew salvage steamer, beginning the risk from the loading on board the said ship or wreck, including all risk of craft, and for boats to and from the vessel and while at the wreck."

The pumps were taken on board the Seamew from Ardrossan to the place where the Alexandra was lying. The pumps were put on board the Alexandra, her bottom was platformed, and the water pumped out of her, and she was raised. It was then found necessary to make for the nearest safe port, and the Alexandra was taken in tow by two steam-tugs and made for Belfast Lough, with the Seamew in attendance, the pumps remaining on board the Alexandra. On the voyage to Belfast Lough the Alexandra sank with the pumps on board. At the trial these facts were stated in the opening speech of the plaintiffs' counsel, and were admitted.

Field, J. ruled that the loss was not covered by the policy, and gave judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Cohen, Q.C. and J. C. Mathew for the plaintiffs.

—The voyage to Belfast Lough was undertaken in order to carry out the purpose for which the pumps were used, and it was a necessary voyage; it must have been within the contemplation of the parties, and the risk is covered by the policy:

Rodocanachi v. Elliott, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 21, 319; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 840; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 649; affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 239; L. Rep. 9 C. P. 518.

Butt, Q.C. and Macleod for the defendants.—On the facts stated in the opening speech on behalf of the plaintiffs, and on the true construction of the policy, the pumps, while on board the Alexandra on the voyage to Belfast Lough, were not covered by the policy:

Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company, 2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 100; 3 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 275; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 442; 15 C. B. N. S. 304; 33 L. J. 85 C. P.; affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 279; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 548; and in the House of Lords, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445; L. Rep. 1 App. Cas. 498.

J. C. Mathew in reply.

BRETT, L. J.—I confess that, if I had had this case, I should hardly have ventured to what my brother Field did, but should have inclined to leave the case to the jury, and on any point of law that might arise; but, having heard the case discussed in the argument, and as it has taken place before us, I am now of opinion that my brother Field was right, and that the question could have been left to the jury. The result of the answer to which could have been bringing the case within the terms of the policy, in order to explain how I come to the conclusion that this case is not within the terms of the policy, I must state what, in my opinion, is within the terms. I think that the words by which the loss was intended to be covered by the policy is the mean loss at any part of the voyage, whether either on the ship or on the wreck. The pumps could not be on the wreck on the voyage described. The voyage to the wreck is described: "At and from Ardrossan to the Alexandra steamer, ashore in the neighbourhood of Drogheda." The policy then describes the risk as not part of the actual voyage, but is part of the voyage insured, as in Rodocanachi v. Elliott (sup.); the second part of the risk is described by these words, "and whilst there engaged at the wreck." Taking the other part, the policy does not have covered a loss which might occur on the voyage to the wreck; but it seems that the risk is confined to the place where the wreck was, does not extend to any other place; for instance, after the ship has left the place where she was wrecked. The risk is not to cease the moment the wreck is afloat; but it is to continue (as these words are concerned) only at that place where the wreck lay before she was raised. The only doubt which I have had was whether, on proof of certain facts, the next words in the policy might not have been held to cover the loss. I have a strong opinion that they would have covered it if the wreck had been taken back to Ardrossan direct. There was a good reason for not confined to the time when the pumps were on board the steamer. The words are, "and until again returned to Ardrossan." If the words "and back to Ardrossan," it would be clear that they only meant on the voyage back; but these words are larger, and might be construed so as to cover the view of time; but they may cover the voyage, and in order to hold that they cover the risk in the present case we must say that they would cover another voyage. But what is that voyage? It is undescribed as to direction, and it is undescribed as to direction. We are entitled so to construe the policy as to include a voyage which the words do not of themselves include? It seems to me we cannot do so. Rodocanachi v. Elliott (ubi sup.) no such voyage was added. In that case there was only a voyage to London, whichever was used. The court did was only applying the description of the journey. In Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company (ubi sup.) there was in the policy "with liberty to go in any direction." There was a description of the vessel was to follow, and it was provided that the policy would cover every usual voyage, including that track, if it would not cover any other mode; but anything that

OF APP.]

WINGATE, BIRRELL, AND CO. v. FOSTER.

[CT. OF APP.]

d say anything that is necessary, must not deduced if not covered by the words of the policy. If, even if it were proved that it was usual pumps to be carried as these were, or if it proved that it was necessary, it is not covered by the words of the policy. Therefore, assuming it is contended for as to its being necessary usual were proved, the voyage on which the risk place would be a part of the operation in a locality which was not described in the policy, and therefore, if we held that the loss, we should add to the policy to be done in a place of which there is no description. Therefore, we are called to do what the court cannot do, and my opinion is right. As to the question of order to a new trial, it is unnecessary in any opinion.

THE COURT, L.J.—The case on the part of the policy is put in two ways. We are asked either to give judgment for the plaintiffs, or to direct a trial in order to find the facts. The real question is, what have the defendants understood? On the question of construction, in the policy, as in the case of every other contract, we must have before us the facts as they were before the parties, not in order to add to the written document, but in order to find out what was intended; and this is especially so in the case of mercantile documents. The first question is as to construction, and we must see whether without any new facts the risk is within the words which have been entered into between the parties. I think there is nothing in the fact that the Alexandra is described as a salvage steamer.

There are three classes of risks insured against. The first is the voyage to the Alexandra steamer, as she was ashore near Drogheda, and the second is the time while there on board the wreck. I think that we should do violence to the policy if we were to hold that the description included this risk, for it is governed by the words "and there," &c.; that is, at the place where the wreck was lying. The third class of risk is "and until again returned to Ardrossan." The plaintiff can make out that the risk is included, it must be on those words. It was said that there was nothing against it, but the Court must show that it was within the contract. The vessel was to return to Ardrossan, but on the statement made on behalf of the plaintiffs, the risk and the voyage on which the loss took place were not undertaken in order to return the pumps to Ardrossan, but for another purpose. It is like the case in the House of Lords (Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company (ubi sup.)): the ship had abandoned the return to Ardrossan, and had undertaken a return voyage. Then ought we to send the case for a new trial? I should be very unwilling to do so in a case like the present, where both parties have come to this court on the statements of admissions which were made at the trial, and put the case on the construction of the policy without further evidence. I do not say under some circumstances we might not order a new trial; but here, in the exercise of our discretion, I think we ought not to do so. In favour of the appellants have not shown anything to lead to a different construction of the policy from that at which we have arrived. It is said if you insure the end you insure the means by which the end is to be attained, and that we must see what is usual for the transit. It is contended that this was so in Rodocanachi v. Elliot (ubi sup.), where the insurance prima facie covered only sea risk, but was held to include a risk on land as well. There it was right to admit parol evidence. The transit was partly by land, and it was well known that the carriage from Marseilles was by that way only; but here it is not shown that the risk was in any way one which the policy could be held to cover. Therefore in my opinion the judgment appealed from was right.

THE JUSTICE, L.J.—This case comes before us on appeal on facts stated at the trial and admitted, and two questions have been raised—first, what is the reasonable inference as to the intention of the parties to be drawn from the facts; and, secondly, what is the construction of the policy. Taking the opening in a liberal manner, it is only this: The steamer Alexandra was ashore near Drogheda, and some arrangement, which is not before us, was made to send pumps to raise her. It is a common practice to platform vessels, in order to raise them; but a vessel might be raised without doing this. I can well imagine certain circumstances where, after a vessel has been raised it would be right to keep the pumps on board and use them during the voyage to the port of refuge; but it is a common practice to raise vessels by pumps and stop the leak, and then there is no necessity for the pumps to remain on board. Therefore it is impossible to gather on the facts that it was contemplated by the parties that the pumps should be used on the wreck and kept there until arrival at the port of refuge. The other question is whether, on the construction of the policy the parties have contracted that the risk should not only include the voyage to the wreck, and the time while the pumps were being used on the wreck, and the voyage from the place where the wreck was raised back to Ardrossan, but should also take in a voyage to another port, which was foreign to the course back to Ardrossan. It seems to me that by holding that they have so contracted we should be doing violence to the plain meaning of the policy; the words are clear and distinct, "at and from Ardrossan to the Alexandra steamer ashore in the neighbourhood of Drogheda." According to these words, the terminus of the voyage out was where the wreck was situated. Then came the words, "and while there engaged at the wreck." If it stood there, there can be no doubt that this case would not come within the terms of the policy. The latter part adds the words, "and until again returned to Ardrossan." The policy does cover the use of the pumps on the wreck, but only on the spot where the wreck was stranded; this is made plain by the words, "risk of craft, &c." Then there is the provision as to the return voyage. What is the meaning of this? The word "return" imports a place from which the ship has returned. We must take the words preceding, and, if we do so, it is the terminus of the voyage out. Stopping there, it is impossible to think that the return voyage might take the vessel out of her course. Two cases have been cited, but neither of them assists the plaintiffs. Pearson v. The Commercial Union Assurance Company (ubi sup.) is strongly opposed to their contention. It was argued there that the risk was in the contemplation of the parties because it was usual and proper. The policy there covered loss by fire in the Victoria Docks and in the dry dock; and it was urged that the court might infer that it covered a further locality—that is, while going to and from the dry dock; it was found as a fact that it was an ordinary incident that the paddle wheels should be removed. Blackburn J. says in that case, in the Exchequer Chamber: "I do not think this is like the case of a voyage policy at all. The ship was insured while in the Victoria Dock or the dry dock, and probably while on her way between the two, going or returning. She was when lost moored in the Thames for purposes no doubt very usual and proper; but if the parties wished to cover the risk while she was so moored, they should have provided for it by appropriate words in the policy:" (L. Rep. 8 C.P. at page 551). In the House of Lords Lord Chelmsford says (L. Rep., 1 App. Cas. at page 506) "I agree with what was said by Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Exchequer Chamber that if the parties wished to cover the risk while the ship was so moored they should have provided for it by appropriate words in the policy. Whether the underwriters would have undertaken this risk it is impossible to say; as they were not aware that it would arise, there was of course no provision applicable to it." If they were not aware there, where it was usual to do what was done, the same reasoning applies even more forcibly to the present case. Lord Chelmsford then goes on to say, "It would be a strong implication to raise against the underwriters that they necessarily contracted by the policy to extend the locality to which the insurance against fire was expressly confined, upon the ground of a usual practice of dealing with large steam vessels under repair, which they did not know would have to be resorted to on the part of the assured. More especially is this the case when it appears that the whole work upon the paddle wheels might have been done in the Victoria Docks." That is entirely applicable here, and if any case could govern another where the decision turns on the words of a particular policy that case would govern this. Kodocanachi v. Elliott (ubi sup.) is distinguishable; there silk was insured from Shanghai to London, and several parts of the transit were mentioned in the policy, such as conveyance by the Messageries Impériales and Marseilles; and evidence was given to show that it meant to include the land journey from Marseilles across France. Therefore, the evidence did not show what the parties contemplated as different from their words, but showed what the words imported, and what they were intended to include. Therefore, I am of opinion that the learned judge was right, and I see no reason for a new trial, if we have the power now to order one.

[Ct. of App.]

THE UNION BANK OF LONDON v. LENANTON.

[Ct. 12]

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Hollams, Son, and Coward

Solicitors for defendants, Waltons, Bubb, and Walton.

Wednesday, Feb. 6, 1876.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., BRAMWELL, B., and COTTON, L.JJ.)

THE UNION BANK OF LONDON v. LENANTON.
Debtor and creditor—Sheriff—Sale of goods—and shipping—Transfer—Bills of sale—ship—Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 and (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 18, 19, 55, and 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3)—Bills of Sale Act
7 Vict. c. 36 s. 7.

The owner of goods which are in the custody of a sheriff under a fieri facias may make a sale and delivery of possession of them to a person other than the sheriff.
D., a shipbuilder, being indebted to plaintiffs for a large sum, as security made an equitable assignment to them, dated 21st May 1875, of all his right and interest in a steamship built for him and delivered to the Turkish Government, and retained by D. as having a lien on the vessel for its price. D. also agreed to execute an assignment of the ship to plaintiffs and to procure an assurance of the ship to plaintiffs which they might require. This assignment was not registered under the Bills of Sale Act, nor was the ship registered as a British ship under act of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. By agreement, dated 24th June 1876, D. agreed to assign to plaintiffs certain machinery, fixtures, and tools upon his business premises at a valuation, but this agreement was never signed by either party to it. On July 18, 1876, the vessel was under an execution issued upon a judgment obtained against D. by a creditor, took possession of the machinery, fixtures, and tools, and of the steamship. On Aug. 22, plaintiffs' sheriff's officer being still in possession, and on an authority from D., took formal possession of the articles comprised in the agreement of June 24, 1876. Defendant, having obtained judgment against D. a writ of fieri facias issued, and on Sept. 13, a levy on the machinery, fixtures, tools, &c., was made under the writ. On an interpleader issue to try plaintiff's title to the steamship, and to the machinery, fixtures, tools, &c., against defendant, it was Held (affirming the decision of Pollock, J.) that plaintiffs had a good title to the ship, and to the machinery, &c., as against defendant.

(1) The transfer of the ship by D. to plaintiffs, being within the exceptions in sect. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, was effectual without registration under that Act, and the ship was not a British ship so as to require registration under sect. 19 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.
(2) The possession taken by plaintiffs on Aug. 22, of the machinery, &c., constituted an actual acceptance and receipt to the extent of the assignment of May 21 out of sect. 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and the sale by D. to plaintiffs of the machinery, &c., was valid, notwithstanding that it was in the custody of the sheriff when plaintiffs took possession.

Per Bramwell and Brett, L.JJ.—A transfer of a ship, which has not been registered as a British ship under sect. 19 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, is good, although not made by a bill of sale under sect. 55 of that Act.

APPEAL from a decision of Pollock, B., made before him (without a jury) of an interpleader issue directed to be tried by order of the court.

The material parts of the issue were

[F. APP.]

THE UNION BANK OF LONDON v. LENANTON.

[CT. OF APP.]

Union Bank of London affirms, and John Lenanton denies, that the leasehold premises called as the Ship-building Yard, at Cubitt in the county of Middlesex, formerly in the occupation of Messrs. J. and W. Dudgeon, and now occupation of the said Union Bank of London, and which hereditaments are comprised, doth all buildings, machinery, and other fixtures erected on, or affixed to the said premises, particulars whereof are specified in the list or schedule to be delivered to the defendant, and the steamer Edhem being part of the goods and chattels, on the 13th Sept. 1876, seized in execution by the sheriff of Middlesex under a writ of fiat issued, &c., and issued out of the High Court of Justice, Common Pleas Division, for the purpose of a judgment of the said court recovered against the said John Lenanton, in an action at law against John Dudgeon, a person of unsound mind so found by inquisition, and Alexander Dudgeon, William Leigh Dudgeon, Robert Fletcher, committees of his estate, at the time of the said seizure the property was in the possession of the said Union Bank, as against the said John Lenanton; and it has been ordered by the Hon. Justice Field that the said question shall be referred to a jury," &c.

John and William Dudgeon were partners in a ship-building business at Cubitt Town, Millwall, and the steamship Edhem was built there for, and under a contract with, the Government, but was retained by the Dudgeon in their possession until the price could be paid. On the 1st of April 1875, Dudgeon died, leaving by will his share in the leasehold premises of the firm and also the ship Edhem to his brother John, and the same was carried on by John Dudgeon until Oct. 1875, when the firm suspended payment. About this time John Dudgeon became insane and was so found by inquisition, and Robert Fletcher was appointed receiver of his estate were duly appointed.

John and William Dudgeon kept a running account with the Union Bank of London, and at the death of William Dudgeon was indebted to the bank in a sum of more than £7000, being money that had been advanced from time to time upon the security of other securities (deposits of the leases, and relating to the ship-building yard at Cubitt and also leasehold property called the Sun Engine Works at Millwall. By an agreement, dated 21st May 1875, John Dudgeon charged the said debts and writings comprised in the schedule thereto with the repayment to the bank of £38,150, and the agreement proceeded:

"The said John Dudgeon doth hereby charge all the debts and premises comprised in the said schedule, and evidences respectively, and all buildings, and other fixtures whatsoever which already are, or during the continuance of this security are erected upon or affixed to the said hereditaments, or any of them, together with all the interests of the said John Dudgeon, or of the said John and W. Dudgeon in the said premises and the right to the payment to the said bank of the said £38,150, and of the interest thereon after the said date. And doth also agree at any time or from the continuance of this security, upon the part of the said bank or their assigns, but at the cost of the said John Dudgeon, to execute to the said bank or their assigns a legal mortgage of the said premises and the said fixtures in such form and with such power of sale and other powers as the said bank or their assigns may require for further securing the payment as aforesaid of the money which shall then be owing upon the security of this agreement, with interest for the same after the rate aforesaid. Provided always that nothing contained in this agreement, or in any mortgages to be executed in pursuance thereof, shall give to the said bank or their assigns any right or power to sever and sell apart from the hereditaments hereby charged, machinery, and other fixtures which now or hereafter shall be affixed to the said hereditaments or any part thereof respectively.

Then followed a schedule of the several leases and deeds referred to in the agreement.

By another memorandum of agreement of the same date John Dudgeon made an equitable assignment to the bank of all his and the firm's right and interest in the steamship Edhem as security for the repayment to the bank of the sum of £7000, with interest, and John Dudgeon further charged all his and his firm's right and interest in the ship with the repayment of that sum and interest, and agreed to execute any such further assurance of the ship and of the £7000, as the bank might require. Neither of the two agreements of the 21st May 1875 were registered under the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), and the steamship Edhem was not registered as a British ship under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 19).

Shortly after the death of William Dudgeon a bill was filed in Chancery by the Sultan of Turkey to obtain possession of the Edhem. An administration suit had also been commenced as to the estate of William Dudgeon, and also a partnership suit against the executors of William by John Dudgeon, and on the 9th Nov. 1875 Robert Fletcher was appointed receiver in the suit.

In Jan. 1876 Robert Fletcher and the two sons of John Dudgeon (who had then been declared of unsound mind) were appointed committees in lunacy of his estate.

On the 24th June 1876 an agreement was entered into between the executors, the receiver, and the committees of the estate of John Dudgeon of the one part, and the Union Bank of the other part, by which, after reciting that the parties thereto were desirous of making a final settlement of all claims and matters whatsoever relating to the principal sum and interest owing to the bank, it was agreed that the committee should forthwith execute to the bank a legal mortgage of the ship-building yard at Cubitt's Town, and the Sun Engine Works, Millwall, and an absolute assignment of the machinery and other fixtures thereon. By the 4th clause of the agreement it was provided that:

"The said committees and the said executor will sell to the said bank all (if any) machinery and other fixtures now in or upon the said Sun Engine Works and the said ship yard respectively, and not charged with the repayment of any part of the said principal sum and interest at a valuation to be made by two valuers or their umpire, one of such valuers being appointed, &c. Such valuation shall, as regards the said machinery and fixtures in and upon the said Sun Engine Works, proceed on the basis of the sale of a going concern; and as regards the said machinery and fixtures in or upon the said ship yard on the basis of an unreserved sale by public auction.

By clause 5 it was provided that "The said committees and the said executor will sell to the said bank all the loose tools and other implements now in and upon the said Sun Engine Works, and specified in a valuation list lately made by Mr. F. Lewis, surveyor, at the price of £2500

[Ct. of App.]

THE UNION BANK OF LONDON v. LEWANTON.

[O. 1212]

Clause 6:

The said committee and the said executor will, at their own expense, assign absolutely to the said bank, in such manner and form as the said bank shall require, all the interest of them or either of them, or of the said J. Dudgeon, or the estate of the said W. Dudgeon in the steamship Edhem, and in all payments and moneys which may be received in respect of the same from the Turkish Government, or from any other person or persons whatsoever.

The said committee and the said executor respectively will also take or concur in taking any proceedings in the suit of The Sultan of Turkey v. The Union Bank of London, which the said bank may require for the perfection of its title to or possession of the said premises or any part thereof.

The sum of 2500*l.* mentioned in clause 5 was before the next-mentioned facts paid by the bank.

This agreement was never signed by the parties to it, but it was confirmed by the Master in Lunacy on June 29th.

On the 16th July a creditor named Wilcox obtained a judgment against John Dudgeon; and on July 18th execution was issued, and the sheriff took possession of the shipbuilding yard, fixtures, and plant, and also of the ship Edhem, which was then in a dock forming part of the shipbuilding yard undergoing certain alterations after having taken her trial trip.

On the 22nd Aug. the Union Bank, under an authority from the receiver and committee, took formal possession under the agreement of the 24th June of everything comprised in clause 4 of that agreement, and took into their service the people in charge of the yard and works. At that time the sheriff's officer remained in possession. At that time all the instalments payable by the Turkish Government for the Edhem except the last had been paid, but the Union Bank retained the ship under the assignment for this last instalment and other moneys due in respect of other ships. The above-mentioned action of The Sultan of Turkey v. The Union Bank was brought to compel the delivery of the Edhem.

On the 2nd Sept. 1876 the defendant obtained a judgment against John Dudgeon for 870*l.* On the 12th Sept. a writ of fiat facias was issued, and on the 13th a levy was made.

On Sept. 29th the interpleader order before set out was obtained, and the 870*l.* was paid into court to abide the event.

On the hearing of the interpleader, Pollock, B. gave judgment for the plaintiffs, but granted a stay of execution to allow the defendant to appeal, which he now did.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 18 (the Merchant Shipping Act 1854) it is enacted that:

No British ship shall be deemed to be a British ship unless she belongs wholly either to (1) natural born British subjects, or (2) persons made denizens by letters of denization, or naturalised by or pursuant to any Act of the Imperial Legislature, or by or pursuant to any Act or ordinance of the proper legislative authority in any British possession; or (3) bodies corporate established under, subject to the laws of, and having their principal place of business in the United Kingdom, or some British possession.

By sect. 19:

Every British ship (with certain exceptions therein specified) must be registered in manner thereinafter mentioned, and no ship thereby required to be registered shall unless registered be recognised as a British ship; and no officer of customs shall grant a clearance or transit to any ship hereby required to be registered for the purpose of enabling her to proceed to sea as a British ship, unless the master of such ship, upon being required to do so, produces to him such entries in the registry as is hereinafter mentioned, and if he attempts to proceed to sea as a British ship without clearance or transit, such officer may detain her until such certificate is produced to him.

By sect. 55:

A registered ship, or any share therein, whether of to persons qualified to be owners of British ships, may be transferred by bill of sale, and such bill of sale shall contain such description of the ship as is contained in the certificate of the surveyor, or such other document as may be sufficient to identify the ship to the satisfaction of the registrar.

By sect. 57:

Every bill of sale for the transfer of any ship, or of any share therein, when duly executed, shall be produced to the registrar of the port at which the ship was registered, together with the declaration in writing before required to be made by a transferee, and the registrar shall thereupon enter in the register the name of the transferee as owner of the ship, and shall also enter in such bill of sale the fact of such entry having been made, the date and hour thereof: and all bills of sale for ships, or shares in a ship, shall be entered in the register in the order of their production to the registrar.

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, it is declared that

The expression "beneficial interest" wherever it occurs in the second part of the principal Act, includes any interest arising under contract or other equitable transaction, and the intention of the said Act is without prejudice to the provisions contained in the said Act relating to the exclusion of unqualified persons from the ownership of British ships, equities may in relation to the ownership of British ships, and mortgages of ships, be enforced against them in the same manner as equities in relation to personal property.

By the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 33) s. 7, it is enacted that the term "bill of sale" under that Act shall not include (inter alia) "transfers or assignments of any ships or shares thereof."

Butt, Q.C. and Will for defendant.—There was not a sufficient receipt and acceptance of the goods comprised in clauses 4 and 5 of the agreement of the 24th June 1876 to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds. Bentham v. Burns (1874) 423 is in point. There it was held that the receipt of a delivery order by the vendee of goods was not a sufficient acceptance of the goods under the statute. The property in the goods was not passed to the vendee until long after the 24th Sept., when the levy was made, because the sheriff's officer, being in possession, could not deliver the goods to the vendee until the vendor's agent to hold the goods until the vendee. The goods are in custodia legis until the owner, though no doubt he has a special property in them, cannot give possession to the vendee:

Benjamin on Sales, 2nd edit. 328, 229;

Gillett v. Hill, 2 Cr. & M. 330;

Ex parte Mutton; Re Cole, L. Rep. 145, 146;

41 L. J. 57, Bank;

Giles v. Gover, 9 Bing. 138.

As to the transfer of the Edhem, the vessel had not been registered under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 154), pt. 2, s. 12. The Edhem was a "ship," although not registered, and belonged to a British owner. The assignment of her was therefore void. Sect. 7 of the Bills of Sale Act 1854 defines "bills of sale," but does not include transfers or assignments of ships or shares in a vessel. By that expression is meant a "transfer," otherwise the mischief aimed at by the Bills of Sale Act would still exist. If the ship is not registered under the plaintiffs, the bank, became purchasers of a going concern expressly so found, and they were to take everything that constituted a part of that going concern, and unless they got one part, there was no reason for saying that they would have taken the other part, and, although it is a rule that where something remains to be done under the contract the property does not pass, that rule is admitted to exist only where there is nothing to show a contrary intention. Now I am of opinion here that both these parties intended that the property should pass, or, at all events, that all the articles comprised in clause 4 should pass, although it was necessary to take some steps to ascertain the precise amount which was to be paid. That being so, the Messrs. Dudgeon, the executors, and the committees, having agreed that the plaintiff should take and have possession, and as they did take and have possession, I cannot but agree that the property did pass; and I am clearly of opinion that the property mentioned in clause 4 did pass.

Then the question arises also whether there was a good contract under the Statute of Frauds. I will not deal with the point which was put by my Lord except to say that it was impossible to suppose that an execution debtor cannot make an effectual sale of his goods to a purchaser because they are in the possession of the sheriff. If he can make an effectual sale, and if there can be—not a delivery in one sense—but an actual acceptance of the goods within the Statute of Frauds, it certainly took place here. But I am also of opinion that the delivery and acceptance of the goods comprised in article 4 of the contract, and the payment of the sum mentioned in clause 5 was a sufficient acceptance of part and part payment to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Scott v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company (12 M. & W. 33) is in point. The marginal note is "where an order is given for goods, some of which were ready at the time of the contract, and the goods are to be manufactured according to order, officer of Customs shall grant a clear on. So that the consequence of no is that you do not get the benefit of ownership. Now what follows? Th not say "no ship or share therein i ferred except by bill of sale," but, ship, or any share therein, when d persons qualified to be owners of shall be transferred by bill of sale." applicable where the ship is a register ship was not, and if there was some register, which I think there was cl statute does not say that, because t has not been observed, the ship assigned. Moreover it should be that the whole of this is one piece. It proceeds to say, "every bill of sale of any registered ship or of any share duly executed shall be produced to th the port at which the ship is regist with the declaration hereinbefore r made by a transferee, and the r thereupon enter in the register bo of the transferee as owner of the : comprised in such bill of sale and sh fact of such entry having been m on, and all bills of sale of any ship ship shall be entered in the regist the order of their production to : I rather think that the consequence that is that a subsequent transfer brancer takes precedence; that is, w first on the register takes precedence I am of opinion here that the Dudge bound to register, and further, if the to register, there is no prohibition of : otherwise than by bill of sale, be only applicable to registered ships, no prohibition or assignment of ships. Further, and in addition : Justice Cotton pointed out that as section of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, i the plaintiffs would be entitled to interest in this ship without reg of Sale Act had been conterminous with the Merchant Shipping Act, so that you could have said that every ship which is not to be dealt with under the one Act must be dealt with under the other, then the ship would go under the Bills of Sale Act. But the Bills of Sale Act is not conterminous with the Merchant Shipping Act. The Bills of Sale Act excepts all ships; that is whether British ships or foreign ships, or whether registered ships or not registered ships. Therefore, although the ship is not registered, and although the transfer is not within the Merchant Shipping Act, yet it is a ship, and is excepted from the Bills of Sale Act. Therefore a ship unregistered is a thing the transfer of which is not dealt with either by the Merchant Shipping Act or the Bills of Sale Act, and goes according to the common law, and the transfer is good, although there has been no registration at all.

I think on every point of view the appeal must fail, and the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of opinion that the appeal must fail. I will first deal with the ship, because there are considerations affecting the other points which do not effect the ship.

The first question is this, whether, putting aside the Bills of Sale Act, the bank had a good and valid title to the ship. The instrument under which they claim is the instrument of the 24th May 1875, and that, after reciting (in my opinion incorrectly) what are supposed to be the interests of the Dudgeons, says this, "The said John Dudgeon hereby charges, &c., &c." (reading down to words "as they may require.") Now in a Court of Equity that would be a good contract not transferring the property of the ship, but giving the plaintiffs a right in equity to say that whatever interest the firm of Dudgeons had in the ship should be transferred to them as a security for their debt. Now I do not go into the question which has been dealt with as to whether this is a ship which, clause, but only in this way: also of Sale Act deals with bills of ments, and transfers (and that exclude that which is not as in law) the contract is nevertheless a real contract in equity, giving a right to the thing in specie. This exception, "this Act is not to affect the following documents, that is to say, assignments of any ship or vessel thereof." Does this document come under this exception? I am of opinion that it does. The contention is this, that we must read it in this way, "transfers or assignments of any vessel duly registered under the Act of 1875, or of any British ship." But such words to be found. It is true that in this Bills of Sale Act was passed were "transfers by registered bills of sale." Now they are "transfers affecting any ship or vessel." The Act is not to affect transfers or assignments of any ship or vessel thereof." They are not included in the Act. In that exception you must read the word "assignment," to that which does not port to be a transfer of the legal estate, but is one in equity, so as to give the right to have a transfer, and it is limited so as to exclude anything which would call a transfer or assignment of any Bill of Sale. My opinion, therefore, is that it is not within the Bills of Sale Act, and the transfer is valid to give the bank a title against the Dudgeons.

Now we come to the other things which have been claimed, and I confess I have some difficulty in seeing what the question argument before us was, except with the ship, because the interpleader was to ascertain what was the title to all the machinery, and other fixtures erected on the premises, the particulars whereof are a schedule to be delivered to the Dudgeons. The premises are those included in the schedule which are also mentioned in the co-

OF APP.]

THE CARNARVON CASTLE.

[OT. OF APP.]

to be this: "I do not claim any fixtures but are effectually comprised within the right granted by the equitable mortgagees of leaseholds. I do not claim what was purchased and paid for under the 4th clause of that act, but there is something else." Now the clause of the mortgage included every bit of machinery which was on the leasehold premises, the mortgage includes "all machinery erected or to be erected during the continuance of the act." Chattels would not be effectually passed, anything on the premises must either be included within the mortgage or not included in it. The mortgage covers, and effectually covers, all fixtures; everything else must be within this 4th clause. The fallacy of the whole argument consists in this: It was assumed that the valuers under the 4th clause were to select what should be found purchased by the bank. But that, in my opinion, is wrong. A good deal of the argument about the property passing is attributable to that.

But all that the valuers had to do was to select what under this 4th clause was to be purchased and identified. They were to go upon the things referred to, the ironworks, and the ship, and to value everything, which was effectually covered by the mortgage. That is what they were to do, and if the valuers have not valued all they were to have done, it is said that, in consequence of their mistake, the Act of Parliament does not apply.

Under the order made by Lush, J. there was express exclusion from the operation of the interpleader order of all loose tools, machinery, and goods at the ship-building yard at Millwall not included in the securities of the Union Bank of London. Now it is said that was only to exclude these loose chattels, which under clause 4 of the agreement were to be paid for by the bank.

That cannot be, because those loose chattels were in the Sun Iron Works; and, as I understand the agreement approved by a Court of Equity and in lunacy, a payment was to be made to the Union Bank for that which was not effectually comprised in the security, putting out of the account those chattels for which 2500*l.* was to be paid which are in the Sun Iron Works, that the interpleader order in the ship-building yard were to be so set aside. The learned judge (the parties being before him) excludes those from the interpleader order, and I rather think that the intention was to set aside this contention, that, although these were things which prima facie passed by the mortgage, yet that, as between landlord and tenant, they would not pass effectually under the mortgage so as to oust the execution creditor. It seems to me that the only question that can arise regards those things not expressly comprised in the mortgage which were not valued by the valuers. My opinion entirely agrees with that expressed by the other members of the court, that the property effectually passed by the contract. There is no written contract, but, assuming that the contract was one which, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, was valid, it was a contract that related to certain specific things, putting all things on the premises which were effectually covered by the mortgage. It excluded them all. All that was to be done by the valuers was to point them out. They were only to ascertain the value of those things which were included in the contract; they were to value the things that were not covered by the security held by the bank; and then, after that, so as to obviate the question under the Statute of Frauds, although the sheriff was in possession, there was an interest which the owner of the property could sell. The parties acting on behalf of the lunatic do give authority to the bank to go down and take possession. The bank, having taken possession under the authority, expressly directed to the gatekeeper, they tell him: "Now, you hold these things for us." In the other part of the case it was said that was a most effectual attornment. These parties did hold possession of the things, subject, it is true, only to the execution; they did hold possession of that which was the subject of the sale, and there was a receipt by the purchasers, so as to prevent a difficulty arising under the Statute of Frauds.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lyne and Holman.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard and Sons.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Reported by J. P. ASPINALL and F. W. BAILES, Esqrs.,
Barristers-at-Law.

Friday, May 31, 1878.

(Before JAMES, BAGGALLAY, and BRAMWELL, L.JJ.)

THE CARNARVON CASTLE.

APPEAL FROM PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY BUSINESS).

Practice — Security for costs of counter-claim —
Severance of action — Ship and cargo.

Where the owners of a ship which has sunk, and the owners of the cargo laden on board her, join as plaintiffs in an action against another ship for damages sustained by collision, the Court will order the claim by the owner of the ship to be dismissed, unless security for the counter-claim is given, but will allow the owner of cargo to proceed without security.

THIS was an appeal for an interlocutory order of the judge of the Admiralty Division.

On the 1st Dec. 1877 a collision occurred between the brigantine Hazard and the ship Carnarvon Castle, in consequence of which the Hazard sunk and the Carnarvon Castle sustained damage. A joint action was commenced against the Carnarvon Castle on behalf of the Hazard, and of the cargo laden on board the Hazard. Bail was given on behalf of the Carnarvon Castle, and she was released from arrest about the 6th Dec. 1877. A statement of claim on behalf of the owner of cargo on board the Hazard was delivered on the 9th Jan. 1878, and on behalf of the Hazard herself on the 17th Jan. On the 8th Feb. the defendants, owners of the Carnarvon Castle, applied to the assistant registrar of the Admiralty Division to compel the plaintiffs, owners of the Hazard, to give security to answer the defendants' counter-claim and for costs. The assistant registrar ordered security to be given in 1000*l.*: the security not being given on the 20th Feb., the assistant registrar, on the application of the defendants, ordered a stay of proceedings until bail for the amount should be given. On the 12th April 1878 the plaintiffs' solicitor applied for leave to continue the action so far as it concerned the cargo laden on board the Hazard notwith-

Carnarvon Castle, moved the judge in court to set aside the above order made in chambers, or in the alternative for leave to appeal from it. The judge gave leave to appeal.

On May 3, the defendants gave notice that they would move the Court of Appeal to reverse the said order, and to decree all further proceedings to be stayed, unless bail was given as directed by the order of the 20th day of Feb. 1878.

May 31.—The motion came on for hearing.

G. Bruce, for appellants, owners of the Carnarvon Castle.—In this case, the Hazard being sunk, I have had no opportunity of arresting her, and so obtaining bail to answer my claim. The order of the registrar of 20th Feb. was a perfectly good order; the interests of the cargo and of the ship in which it was laden were joined in one action, and we were entitled to security for our counter-claim or cross cause (sect. 34 Admiralty costs should be taken away.

Butt, Q.C., for respondents, wa

JAMES, L.J.—It is admitted the cargo, a British subject, had sued defendants would have had no claim; them, as they could have no count the innocent cargo. The fact that and inconvenience, and multiple owners of the ship and owners of one action, does not alter the case it would be most inequitable if the undoubted right of action of be defeated.

BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, L.J.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: for appellants, owners Castle, Parker and Clarke; owners of cargo taken on board Son, and Ooward.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

ACCOUNTS.

See Shipowner, Nos. 3, 5.

ACT OF GOD.

Carriage of Goods, No. 1—Damage, No. 3.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

of War—Collision, Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 39, 40, 41—ies, No. 3—Practice.

ADVANCE OF FREIGHT.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 10, 12.

ADVANCES.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 10, 12.

AGENTS.

r-party, No. 1—Marine Insurance, Nos. 1, 2, 5—Sale of Ship, Nos. 1, 2.

AGREEMENT, VALIDITY OF.

See Salvage, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

ALLOTMENT NOTE.

See Wages, No. 1.

APPEAL.

on, Nos. 22, 30, 31—Practice, Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11—Salvage, Nos. 20, 22, 23.

APPEARANCE.

See Practice, No. 5.

APPORTIONMENT.

See Salvage, Nos. 5, 6, 24.

APPROPRIATION.

ignor and Consignee, Nos. 1, 2—Marine Insurance, No. 13.

ARREST OF SHIP.

See National Character—Wages, No. 7.

ASSESSORS.

See Collision, Nos. 22, 23.

ASSIGNEES.

See Mortgage, No. 5.

ASSIGNMENT.

ies, No. 23—Stoppage in Transitu, No. 1.

AVERAGE.

al Average—Marine Insurance, No. 22.

BANKRUPTCY.

ice, No. 23—Stoppage in Transitu, Nos. 3, 4.

III, N. S.

BARGE.

See Collision, No. 14—Thames Navigation.

BARRATRY.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 3, 4.

BILL OF EXCHANGE.

See Sale of Goods, Nos. 5, 6.

BILL OF LADING.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 14—Sale of Goods, Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9—Stoppage in Transitu, Nos. 1, 2, 3.

BILLS OF SALE ACT.

See Sale of Ship, No. 5.

BOARD OF TRADE.

See Discipline, Nos. 1, 2—Salvage, No. 7.

BOOTY OF WAR.

Distribution—Order in Council—Admiralty Jurisdiction.—When the Crown grants to captors booty of war and by Order in Council, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 2, refers the claims of all parties whomsoever to the property captured to the Judge of the Admiralty Court, who is to take into consideration any capture which may have been made of any property during the operations by any of the claimants, and is to make such order as to him shall seem right, both in regard to the persons who are, and the proportions in which such persons are entitled to share . . . . reserving, however, to H.M. the right to direct the rates or scale of distribution according to which the property or the proceeds thereof is to be repaid to the several ranks of the force or forces to which such property may be adjudged, and the court proceeds to adjudge certain claimants entitled to share, and in pursuance thereof, sums of money on account of the booty are distributed among the successful claimants; the High Court has no jurisdiction, on the application of the successful claimants, complaining that the Government have refused to pay over and distribute the remainder of the booty, to order that such remainder be brought into the registry of the court to abide the event of the suit; under such an order the court has no power of distribution. (Adm.) Banda and Kirwee Booty .....page 66

BOTTOMRY.

1. Communication with owners of cargo—Extent of—Repairs.—A statement by the master of the injuries sustained by his ship and of the repairs necessary, is not a sufficient communication with the owners to justify him in giving a bottomry bond upon the ship and cargo, if unaccompanied

- by a statement that such bond is necessary. (P.C.) Kleinwort and others v. The Cassa Marittima of Genoa .....page 358
2. Communication with owners of cargo—Duty to supply funds.—The mere receipt by the owners of the cargo of general information that the ship is damaged and in need of repairs, does not impose upon them the duty of supplying money for such repairs without further information. The Onward (ante, vol. 1, p. 540; 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 206; L. Rep. 4 A. & E. 38) affirmed and followed. (P.C.) Kleinwort and others v. The Cassa Marittima of Genoa ..... 358
3. Practice—Original bond to be produced.—In all bottomry actions it is necessary that the original of the bond should be produced at the hearing. (Adm.) The Rouena..... 506

See Wages, No. 7.

BRITISH SHIP.

See National Character—Sale of Ship, No. 4.

BROKERS.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 1, 2, 4.

CARGO.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15—Charter-party, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5—Consignor and Consignee, Nos. 1, 2—Marine Insurance, Nos. 7, 8, 12, 13, 17, 18, 23, 33, 36—Mortgage, No. 6—Sale of Goods—Salvage, Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 19.

CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

1. Act of God—Definition of.—A loss occasioned by the act of God is a loss arising from and occasioned by the agency of nature, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence, so as to prevent its effect. (Ct. of App.) Nugent v. Smith ..... 198
2. Common carrier—Delivery beyond the realm—Liability.—The common law liability of a carrier attaches to a contract for carriage to a place without the realm. (C.P. Div.) Nugent v. Smith ..... 57
3. Common carriers—Steamship—Damage to mare—Negligence—Perils of sea.—Where a steamship company carrying goods as common carriers carry a mare, which during a storm is injured so that she dies, and the jury find that the injury was caused partly by bad weather and partly by the fright and struggling of the mare, and that there was no negligence on the part of the carriers, the latter are not liable for the loss of the mare. (Ct. of App.) Nugent v. Smith ..... 198
4. Bill of lading—Exemption—Rats.—A shipowner is liable for damage to cargo by rats unless expressly exempted by the bill of lading, such damage not being a peril of the sea. (Am. Rep.) The Barque Carlotta; Bliss v. Goss ..... 456
5. Bill of lading—"Leakage"—Damage to other goods.—The common form in a bill of lading "not accountable for leakage" exempts the shipowner only from liability for loss occurring to the leaky package, and not for damage done to other packages by a liquid escaping. (C.P. Div.) The P. v. P. ..... 357
6. Bill of lading—Fragility—Warranty of seaworthiness.—Time of shipment—Exemption.—In the absence of express words to the contrary, a bill of lading implies a warranty of seaworthiness at the time of the sailing of the ship, and all the exceptions in it must be taken to refer to a period subsequent to the sailing of the ship with the goods on board. (H. of L.) Steel and another v. The State Line Steamship Company ..... 513
7. Bill of lading—Fragility—Warranty of seaworthiness—Packing of cargo.—When goods are shipped under a bill of lading containing a reception of "perils of the seas, however caused" during the voyage, the goods are damaged by water getting to the cargo through a port negligently fastened by one of the crew, and the jury find to that effect, and no more, such finding is not enough to justify a verdict for the shipowner, as there must be a finding that the ship was unworthy on leaving the port of loading. (H. of L.) Steel and another v. The State Line Steamship Company ..... 513

8. Damage to cargo—Bill of lading—"Good order and condition"—Weight, contents, and measure unknown.—Onus of proof.—A master signing a bill of lading in which it is stated that the goods were "shipped in good order and condition," in which contains a memorandum of "weight, contents, and value unknown," admits that, as far as can be seen externally, the goods are shipped in good condition, and if they arrive damaged the onus lies upon the shipowner to excuse himself from the damage. The Peter der Green ..... 499
9. Damage to cargo—Charter-party—Vessel is cleaned—Mode of cleaning—Evidence.—Where a charter-party it is provided that "it is understood that the vessel is now bound to Bremen with a cargo of petroleum in barrels; vessel to be cleaned as customary previous to loading homeward cargo," and the homeward cargo is damaged by petroleum, the fact that otherwise can be and are cleansed so that their cargo has no signs of petroleum damage, is evidence to show that the vessel is not properly cleaned. (H. of L.) The Barque Carlotta; Bliss v. Goss ..... 456
10. Damage to cargo—Excepted perils—Plow storage.—Damage to cargo occasioned by water does not come within the excepted perils when by reason of the place in which it is stored it is exceptionally liable to such damage in such weather. (Adm.) The Oquendo ..... 500
11. Damage to cargo—Cesser of liability—Governing law.—Where by a bill of lading it is agreed that certain goods are "to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease, at the port of Montreal Railway Company, and by them forwarded to, and at the aforesaid station delivered to T. & Co. No damage that can be insured against shall be paid for, nor will any claim whatever be allowed unless made before the goods are received at the goods are damaged, no claim can be made unless the damage is discovered before removal from the station as T. & Co. even if the damage is latent; and this ruling is applicable in Canada although differing from French and Quebec law, if the ship and bill of lading are English. (P.C.) Mayer v. Harris ..... 456
12. Damages—Measure—Late delivery—Loss by sea—Loss of margin.—Where, through the negligence of a carrier by sea, goods sent by him are not delivered in a reasonable time to the owner of the goods or assignee of the bill of lading for the goods is not entitled to recover damages from the shipowner for the difference between the market value of the goods when they ought to have been delivered and the market value when they actually were delivered. (Ct. of App.) Reverend v. The P. v. P. ..... 357
13. Damages—Measure—Interest.—When a measure of damages recoverable in such a case is interest at the ordinary commercial rate on the value of the goods for the period of the delay. (Ct. of App.) Id. ..... 357
14. Damages—Delay in unloading—Bill of lading—Evidence of condition of goods.—Goods are carried under charter-party

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

by which they are to be taken from the consignees as they come to hand lading, the facts—that indorsees of the bill of lading have told the shipowner that they would pay the cargo and would pay the freight, that it had been remonstrated with for delay in lading, and had been told that there would be no claim for demurrage without their repudiation—these facts are evidence to show that indorsees took under the provisions of the bill of lading, and are liable for unreasonable delay. (C. P. Div.) Palmer v. Zarifi Brothers. page 540

ht—Charter-party—Delivery short of cargo—Non-acceptance by consignees.—Where a charter-party it is agreed that a ship shall load a cargo at an English port bound for Taganrog, in the Sea of Azov, or there to as she might safely get, and the same afloat at an agreed rate of freight, and the ship laden arrives at Kertsoh and finds the Sea of Azov frozen over, and is unable to reach Taganrog before April, and her cargo at the custom house at Kertsoh, notwithstanding the protests of the consignees, and the consignees afterwards at their expense carry the cargo on to its destination, the shipowner does not perform his contract, and deliver under the charter-party, and the consignees not accepting short of the destination, have no right to freight either under the charter-party or pro rata itineris. (Ct. of App., 18 Q.B.) Metcalf v. Britannia Ironworks. page 313, 407

ht—Sale of goods at intermediate port—Indemnity—Pro rata freight.—Where a master carrying goods under charter-party at an intermediate port for necessary repairs, the owners of the goods may either treat the goods as a forced loan, or claim an indemnity from the shipowner for the amount that would have been obtained at the port of destination; and if they elect to treat it as an enforced loan, the shipowner has no right for pro rata freight; hence, if the goods are taken more than they would have done at the port of destination, and the amount realised is over to the owner of cargo on demand of them, upon the figures stated in an invoice statement, which made no allowance for the shipowners, the latter cannot claim this pro rata freight in respect of the old. (C.P. Div.) Hopper v. Burness and 149

Passengers' luggage—Railway and Canal Traffic Act—Reasonable condition—Special contract.—Where a passenger by railway comes under sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. c 31), fixing the liability of railway companies for the loss of or injury to articles, goods, or things in the receiving, packing, or delivering thereof, and no contract limiting the company's liability in respect of such luggage is binding, unless it is set out and reasonable one, and be embodied in a special contract, signed by the passengers or person delivering such luggage to the company or carriage. (Ex. Div.) Cohen v. The Eastern Railway Company ..... 248

Passengers' luggage—Railway and Canal Traffic Act—Regulation of Railways Act—Railway companies owning steamships.—By sect. 16 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c 42), sect. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1890, and its provisions extended by the Railways Act 1902, the provisions are applicable to luggage conveyed by railway companies on board steam vessels used by them for the purpose of carrying on a communication between any towns or ports. Stewart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 302) discussed and distinguished. (Ex. Div.) Cohen v. The South-Eastern Railway Company ..... page 248

19. Practice—Damage to cargo—Particulars.—In a case of damage to cargo the court (Admiralty Division), contrary to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, made an order for particulars of the plaintiff's claim, so as to enable the defendant to pay into court in respect of those items of the claim for which he was prepared to admit liability. (Adm. Div.) The Wetterhorn... 168

20. Railway and Canal Traffic Act—Railway company—Steamships hired—Reasonable stipulations—Sea transit.—Where a railway company, having no steamships of their own, make a contract with a person to carry goods of that person by a route which involves a sea transit, and procure a steamship company to carry the goods over the sea transit for them, such contract is, as far as regards the sea transit, governed by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854, sect. 7, and any stipulation in it which is unreasonable is void, and hence the railway company cannot exempt themselves from the negligence of servants of the steamship company during the sea transit. (H. of L.) Doolan v. The Midland Railway Company ..... 485

21. Stevedores—Charter and sub-charter—Liability of shipowner.—Where a ship is chartered to carry goods under a charter-party containing a clause by which "the stevedore is to be nominated by the charterer but to be under the control of the captain and paid by the owners," and the charterer sub-charters the ship by a charter-party containing a similar clause, and the sub-charterer appoints the stevedore, who acts under the personal directions of the master and owner, the stevedore can recover from the shipowner the price of his labour, and is not deprived of his right by sending in his account to the sub-charterer by whom he is named, such account being addressed to "captain and owners." (Ct. of App.) Eastman v. Harry ..... 117

22. Warranty of seaworthiness—Shipowner's contract.—In whatever way a contract for the conveyance of merchandise be made, if there is no agreement to the contrary, the shipowner is by the nature of the contract impliedly and necessarily held to warrant that the ship is good and in a condition to perform the voyage then about to be undertaken, that is to say, that she is seaworthy or fit to meet and undergo the perils of the sea and other incidental risks to which she must of necessity be exposed in the course of the voyage. (Q. B. Div.) Kopitoff v. Wilson..... 163

23. Warranty of seaworthiness—Carriage of armour plates—Duty of shipowner.—Where a shipowner agrees to carry armour plates by his ship, and they are stowed by his servants, and in rough weather break loose and go through the ship and sink her and are lost, it is a proper direction, in an action to recover their loss, to tell the jury that a shipowner warrants the fitness of his ship when she sails, and it is proper to ask them whether she was (as regards the plates carried) reasonably fit to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage agreed upon. (Q. B. Div.) Kopitoff v. Wilson ..... 163

CARRIER.

See Carriage of Goods.

CERTIFICATE OF MASTER.

See Discipline, No. 2.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRY.

See Master, Nos. 1, 2.

LESSOR OF LIABILITY.

See Charter-party, Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19.

CHARTERED FREIGHT.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 10, 11, 12.

CHARTERERS.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 21—Charter-party—Practico, No. 20—Reinsurance, Nos. 18, 22—Wages, No. 1.

CHARTER-PARTY.

1. Agent—Owner—Evidence of liability.—Where a charter-party is made between charterers and persons who sign "for owners" of the ship, correspondence between the charterers and such persons is admissible in evidence to show that such persons are themselves the owners and not mere agents, and are liable under the charter-party. (C. P. Div.) Adams v. Hall . . . . . page 496
2. Cargo—Construction—Full and complete cargo.—Where a charterer agrees to load "a full and complete cargo, say about 1100 tons," these are words of contract, not expectation; and he does not contract to load any vessel that may be sent to her full capacity, but only to load as fully as can be done by providing about 1100 tons; hence he must load up to 1100 tons, but he need not fill the ship. (C. P. Div.) Morris v. Levison 171
3. Construction—Choice of different goods—Option of charterer—Reasonableness.—A charter-party containing the words "the ship to load the following cargo of lawful merchandises. . . . .; a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp, or compressed bales, and (or) measurement goods not exceeding what the vessel can reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle," gives the charterer the option in what form he will tender the cargo, provided he tenders some or all of the goods named and no others, and does not present a cargo of any kind, or of all kinds together, which is unreasonable as regards the nature of the goods he presents. (H. of L.) Stanton v. Richardson . . . . . 28
4. Construction—Obligation of shipowner—Seaworthiness.—A shipowner entering into a charter-party to carry such a cargo is bound to provide a ship which is reasonably suited to carry that particular cargo and is staunch and seaworthy for the purposes of that cargo, and must be kept so. Hence, if the charter-party allow wet sugar to be loaded and the ship is unfit to receive it, and her pumps become clogged by the moisture from the cargo, and she cannot be made fit to carry the cargo or seaworthy for that cargo in a reasonable time, the charterer may throw up the charter-party. (H. of L.) Id. . . . . . 23
5. Contract—Parties—Mistake—Name not struck out—Reforming contract.—Where a charterer sues on a charter-party and the shipowner answers that the charter-party was made between the defendant and a third party, not the plaintiff, it is a good reply to plead that the charter-party is made upon a printed form ordinarily used by and containing the name of the third party as a party thereto, and that the plaintiff and defendant had signed the document inadvertently omitting to alter or strike out the name of the third party. There is no necessity to reform the charter-party, as upon the facts being shown the court will treat it as reformed. (C. P. Div.) Braslauer v. Barwick . . . . . 355
6. Contract—Specified time—Right of cancellation.—The charterer of a vessel chartered for a specified time commencing on a named day, is not entitled to cancel the charter. (Q. B.) Tully v. Howling . . . . .

7. Damages—Action by shipowner—Brought by charter-party against charterer—Safe port—Of action brought by consignee.—In an action by shipowner against a charterer for breach of contract in not naming a safe port to which to send the cargo, the extra costs incurred by the charter-party, the extra costs incurred by the consignee against the shipowner, and the costs of unloading at the port named, and not fully contested by the master, are not recoverable as damages against the charterer, less he has expressly authorized the ship to incur the costs on his behalf. (C. P. Div.) Evans v. Bullock and others . . . . .

8. Damages—Action by shipowner against charterer—Safe port—Port dues.—But in such a case the shipowner is entitled to recover as damages the difference between the port dues at the port named and the port dues he actually paid (if in excess of the former) at the port to which he discharged the cargo, and no more, and no head. (C. P. Div.) Evans v. Bullock and others . . . . .

9. Damages—Action by shipowner against charterer—Safe port—Demurrage—Insurance.—Where a shipowner has in such a case recovered demurrage in respect of the delay so caused, he cannot recover for the cost of insuring the cargo (if he could in any event), as such being an ordinary expense of the shipowner, and not to be included in the demurrage. (C. P. Div.) Evans v. Bullock and others . . . . .

10. Demurrage—Detention—Default of charterer—Bad weather.—Where a ship, by the fault of the charterers, is prevented from loading, and is in consequence delayed several days, and during such days bad weather comes on, and she is still further delayed, the charterers are liable in damages as demurrage for the detention of the ship during the bad weather, and for the detention during the previous days consequent upon the default. (Ex. Div.) Adameon and another . . . . .

11. Demurrage—Detention at port of loading of loading not fixed—Charterer's liability.—The word "demurrage" in a charter-party means time for discharge and giving a lien for cargo, does not include detention at the port of loading, unless the time of loading is fixed, and can be gathered from the charter-party. If the charter-party contains a clause exempting the charterer from liability on the ground that the loading no action will afterwards be taken in respect of such detention. (Ex. Div.) Id. . . . . .

12. Demurrage—Lay days—Sundays—Counting.—In a charter-party by which it is agreed that the loading and discharging of the said cargo shall be done as fast as the steamer can work, but a maximum of seven days to be allowed the charterers, the charterers are liable for demurrage over and above the seven days at 25s. per day, "lying days" meaning days, and do not include Sundays. (Q. B.) Commercial Steamship Company v. B. & N. Co. . . . . .

13. Demurrage—Part of day.—A part of a day on demurrage is entitled to be counted for the whole of the day. (Q. B.) Id. . . . . .

14. Demurrage—Lay days—Bad weather—Charterer's liability.—Where by a charter-party a certain number of days is allowed to contract is implied on his part that time when the ship is at the usual socharge he will take the risk of any incidences, including bad weather, occur to prevent his releasing the expiration of the lay days. (Q.B. is and others v. Byers.....page 147 ge—Loading—“Stiffening”—Construct—Where a charter-party provides that a ship loaded at the average rate of 75 tons working day. . . . Stiffening coal, to be supplied at ship's expense at 40 tons per clear working day after notice is given to the charterer's agent is required, but all days on which coal is taken on board, or the ship is or the same, to be excluded in the on of the said working days allowed ;” the putting stiffening coal on “loading” within the charter-party, rage is payable under a demurrage respect of the neglect to supply coal, thus causing a detention of the of App.) Sanguinetti v. The Pacific Navigation Company ..... 300 of charterer to cease unloading—Lien—Exemption of charterer.—But charter-party further provides that the “to have a lien on the cargo for all demurrage due under this agreement that “all liability of the charterers as soon as the cargo is on board,” of the charterer for such demurrage he completion of the loading, and the s only remedy is by means of the lien. (Ct. of App.) Sanguinetti v. The Pacific Navigation Company ..... 300 of charterer to cease on loading—Lien for freight, demurrage, &c.—Effect of.—Where a charter-party he words, “This charter being con- he said A. and B. for and on behalf of rty, it is agreed that all liability of shall cease as soon as the cargo is iding excepted, the owners and master el agreeing to rest solely on their lien o for freight, demurrage, and all other ich lien it is hereby agreed they shall e charterer is liable for all undue efore the cargo is completely shipped, e shipowner has a lien on the cargo e not. (Q. B. Div.) Lister v. Van n ..... 145 of charterers to cease on loading—Option—Effect of.—A charter-party the clause, “The liability of the to cease as soon as the cargo is on ided the same is worth the freight at discharge, but the owners of the ship absolute lien on the cargo for all d freight, and demurrage, which they bound to exercise,” exempts the from all liability after the ship is in respect of breach of contract for shipowner's lien would give no remedy. .) French and another v. Gerber and ..... 403 of charterer to cease on loading—also consignees—Bill of lading—Where a charter-party provides for of liability of the charterers on payment of advance freight at the pment, and the bills of lading make aliverable “unto order or assigns, he ring freight and other conditions as -party,” and the cargo in loaded, and advances paid, and the charterers become consignees also, they are nevertheless exempted from the payment of freight, the bill of lading making no new contract. (P. C. Div.) Barwick v. Burnyeat, Brown, and Co. .....page 376

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

20. Lighterage—Contract—“Merchant's risk and expenses”—“Cargo at A. as customary”—Custom.—Where a charter-party stipulates that a ship shall load a full cargo at one of several ports, including A., the cargo “to be brought to, and taken from alongside at merchants' risk and expense,” and these words are in print, and the charter-party further contains the words “cargo at A. as customary” in writing, the latter words work an exception to the former, and if the custom at A. is for the shipowner to repay to the charterer any reasonable lighterage paid by him, the charterer can recover the same from the shipowner. (Q.B. Div.) Scrutton v. Childs ..... 373

21. Loading—Breach of charter—Foreign Government—Liability of shipowners.—Where a charter-party provides that a ship shall, after loading dead weight at a port, proceed to a first-class Spanish port where “a steamer with cargo from a foreign port can load at by Spanish law without risk of detention by Customs authorities,” and the ship having, as known to the charterer when making the charter-party, loaded Government stores at the first port, is ordered to Valencia, and is there unable to load, by Spanish regulations prohibiting ships carrying stores from loading; the shipowner commits no breach of charter in not loading, and the charterer cannot recover against him. (Ct. of App.) Cunningham v. Dunn and another ..... 595

22. Seaworthiness—Warranty—Time of sailing.—The warranty of seaworthiness implied in a charter-party attaches at the time of the ship's sailing on her voyage and is not exhausted on her proceeding in a seaworthy condition to her loading berth. (Q. B. Div.) Cohn v. Davison... 374

23. Shipowner—Charterer—Demise of ship—Liability of shipowner—Terms of contract.—Where a shipowner lets his ship to a charterer under a charter-party, by which the shipowner is to provide a full crew and pay them their wages, and to find all ship's and engine stores, and the charterer is to find coals for the engines, and to have the direction of the ship for the purposes of trading between certain ports, the shipowner remains responsible for the negligence of the crew who are his servants. (C. P. Div.) The Omoo and Cleland Coal and Iron Company v. Huntley ..... 501

24. Warranty of class—Time—Duration—Insurance on cargo.—Where a charter-party describes a ship as newly classed “A 1½, record of American and Foreign Shipping Book,” such description is only a warranty that she is so classed at the time of the making of the charter-party, but is not a warranty that she is rightly or will continue so classed. Hence, if shortly after the making of the charter-party the certificate of classification is cancelled and the charterers cannot insure on cargo, there is no action for breach of charter-party against the shipowner. (Ct. of App.) French and Sons v. Newgass and Co...... 574
See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 15, 21—Collision, No. 7—Marine Insurance, Nos. 10, 12—Wages, No. 1.

COLLISION.

1. Assistance to injured vessels—Merchant Shipping Act 1873.—The Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 16, having imposed upon the master of every ship, in case of collision with

- another ship, a duty, "if and so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew, and passengers (if any), to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel, her master, crew, and passengers (if any), such assistance as may be practicable and as may be necessary to save them from any danger caused by such collision;" this duty is not discharged by a steamship, where, it being practicable and safe to lower a boat to render assistance, although possibly dangerous to stay by the injured ship, she continues her voyage without lowering her boat, and merely hails and signals for other vessels to go to the assistance of the injured ship. (Adm.) The Adriatic ..... page 16
2. Assistance to injured vessels—Merchant Shipping Act 1873—Onus of proof—A ship failing to render assistance to another with which she has been in collision, and showing no reasonable cause for such failure, will be held to blame for the collision, unless proof be given to the contrary on her behalf. (Adm.) The Adriatic ..... 16
8. Compulsory pilotage—Burden of proof—Contributory negligence.—In cases of collision, if it be proved on the part of the defendants that the accident occurred through the fault of a pilot compulsorily employed, the burden of proving that the defendants have been guilty of contributory negligence lies on the plaintiffs, and they must show such negligence either by direct proof adduced by themselves or from facts proved in the defendants' evidence. The Iona (16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158; L. Rep. 1 P. C. 426; 2 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 479) explained. (H. of L.) Clyde Navigation Company v. Barclay and others ..... 390
4. Compulsory pilotage—Contributory negligence of defendants or their servants—Onus of proof.—When the defence of compulsory pilotage is relied upon in a collision case, the onus of proving negligence on the part of the defendants or their servants causing or contributing to the collision, is on the plaintiff. Clyde Navigation Company v. Barclay (1 App. Cas. 790; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 379) followed. The Iona (L. Rep. 1 C. P. 432; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158) disapproved. (Ct. of App.) The Daios ..... 477
5. Compulsory pilotage—Pilot—Duty of—Vessel dragging.—Where a vessel under the charge of a pilot is at anchor and drags, it is the duty of the pilot to inform himself of the condition of affairs before taking steps to avoid damage arising from it, and not to wait till someone reports it to him. (Adm.) The Princeton ..... 562
6. Compulsory pilotage—River Mersey—Vessel coming from sea—Docking.—Where a vessel coming from sea into the river Mersey with a pilot on board is prevented from docking, in consequence of the violence of the wind, or want of water, and anchors, but is to be docked as soon as circumstances permit, the employment of a pilot is, under the Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, compulsory. (Adm.) The Princeton ..... 562
7. Compulsory pilotage—Falmouth Harbour—Trinity outport—Compulsion—Merchant Shipping Acts.—Falmouth Harbour being within a Trinity outport district for which pilots were licensed by the Trinity House prior to 1854, pilotage is, by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, compulsory there for a vessel bound from a Mediterranean port to the port of Falmouth. (Adm. Div.) The Juno ..... 217
- Damages—Measure—Loss of charter-party—Deductions—Freight earned—Expenses—Wear and tear*.—In estimating the loss sustained by a ship in a collision, a charter-party, previously entered into contingent on the arrival of the ship on a fixed date at another place but cancelled by the charterers by reason of the delay occasioned by the collision, should be taken into consideration, the amount recoverable in respect thereof being the freight that would have been earned under the charter-party, less deduction for freight actually earned after repairs and expenses and saving of wear and tear, &c., which would have been incurred in the performance of the charter-party. (Adm.) The Star of India ..... 16
9. Damages—Measure—Demurrage.—In addition to such damages the shipowner is entitled to demurrage during the time he is detained for repairs at the usual rate allowed to ships. (Adm.) The Star of India ..... 16
10. Dock—Control of dockmaster—Duty of owner.—When a vessel enters dock with the permission and under the general directions of the dockmaster, and within the space over which his authority by statute extends, those on board of her are bound to use diligence and care to carry out the directions of the dockmaster in such manner as to avoid doing damage to other vessels. (Adm.) The Cynthia ..... 16
11. Latent defect—Absence of negligence—Liability.—The owners of a vessel are not liable for damage caused to another vessel in a collision occasioned by the sudden breaking down of an apparatus in which there is an inherent latent defect, in the absence of any negligence in the user of the apparatus. The William Lindsay (ante, vol. 2, p. 118; L. Rep. 5 P. C. 393; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355) followed. (Adm.) The Virgo ..... 16
12. Liability—Act causing collision—Must be negligent to create liability.—Before a plaintiff in a collision case can be deprived of his right of recovery against a negligent defendant by reason of an act done by the plaintiff, without which the collision would not have occurred, it must be shown that such act of the plaintiff was negligent. (Ct. of App.) The Sisters ..... 16
13. Liability—Dockmaster—Tug—Pilot.—A vessel leaving dock with a pilot on board, and within the space over which the dockmaster's authority extends by statute, is responsible for damage resulting from the use of a tug of insufficient power by her master, even when such tug is the general employment of the dock company, there being no obligation on the dock company to supply a tug. (Ct. of App.) The Belgic ..... 16
14. Lights—Dumb barge—Steamer—Negligence—Presumption.—When a collision occurs between a dumb barge without lights and a steamer at dark night in the river Thames, there is no presumption of law that the steamer is to blame. It is in all cases necessary for those who allege negligence, causing a collision, on the part of another vessel, to prove it. (Ct. of App., reversing Adm.) The Swallow ..... 16
15. Lights—Overtaking vessel—Light ahead—Signal.—It is prima facie the duty of an overtaking ship to keep out of the way of a ship ahead of her, but if the latter ship sees another approaching her from a direction where her lights are not visible, and which vessel she has reason to suppose does not, in fact, whether by a good look-out or not, see her and avoid collision, she is bound to give some warning to the overtaking ship, necessarily by exhibiting a light, but by any other means, such as the firing of a gun, the whistle, or otherwise, which will indicate her

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

- overtaking ship, and call the attention of up to the danger of a collision. (P. C. dm.) The Anglo-Indian ..... page 1
- s—Overtaking vessel—Light astern—Speed—Steamship—Sailing ship.— ph a ship is, under some circumstances, to keep a look-out astern, and to show a give a signal to another ship overtaking evidently unable to see her, nevertheless, steamer going at a high rate of speed in ray overtakes a sailing ship showing no signal, and does not see her until too avoid a collision, although keeping a good t, the steamer will be held alone to blame, er rate of speed would have given the time to have avoided the collision upon r the sailing ship. (P.C. from Adm.)
ri Spencer ..... 4
- Signal—Steamer coming to anchor—not visible.—A steamer manœuvring to an anchor in a place and manner such regulation lights cannot be seen by an ing vessel, is bound to give timely f her presence by showing a light or some efficient means. (Adm.) The Philotaze 512
- Ship aground—Duty to warn vessels.— vessel is aground in a place where her riding light cannot be distinguished by ing vessels, and where vessels are not to lie, it is her duty to exhibit a light on r some elevated position, and to have a to give warning to approaching vessels caution by the best means in her power.
The Thomas Lea ..... 260
- Signals—Overtaking vessels.—A vessel ound to show a light or signal astern to wing vessel, unless there is apparent from such vessel. (Ct. of App.) The Brooklyn ..... 230
- ut—Steamship—Roadstead.—A steam-nning through a roadstead should, in to her master on the bridge, carry a man in the daytime. (C. of App.) The ..... 233
- ice—Admiralty—Interrogatories—Preliact.—In an action of damage by collision Admiralty Division, interrogatories which obtain information given in the prelimi-t of the party interrogated are inadmisid will be struck out on the application arty sought to be interrogated. (Adm.)
la ..... 125
- ice—Appeal—Nautical assessors—Ques-fact.—On an appeal in a cause of collision Admiralty Division, the Court of Appeal, nagisted by nautical assessors, will not a finding of the court below upon a ques-fact depending upon the credibility of s regarded from a nautical point of view, i that there is evidence in support of that (Ct. of App.) The Sisters ..... 122
- ce—Assessors disagreeing.—Sembie, where ition cause the two assessors disagree, can call in a third, and, after submitting once already given to him, have the case d before the three assessors. (Adm.)
ilotaze ..... 512
- ice—Costs—Admiralty—Inevitable acci-
Where the defence of inevitable accident ined, the plaintiff will not be ordered to costs, unless he might have known that as, apart from the merits, a good legal (Adm.) The Virgo ..... 285
- ice—Costs—Compulsory pilotage.—Where nts in an action of collision raise the of compulsory pilotage only and succeed therein, they are entitled to their costs. (Adm.
Div.) The Turco ..... page 217 26. Practice—Costs—Compulsory pilotage.—The Admiralty Division will adhere to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, as to costs in cases of compulsory pilotage. The Princeton. ..... 562
27. Practice—Costs—Compulsory pilotage—Defence.—A defendant in an action (not in Admiralty) of collision succeeding in his defence on the plea of compulsory pilotage is entitled to his costs, although the rule in the Admiralty Division is uniform not to allow costs in such case, except where it is the sole defence raised. (Ex. Div.)
General Steam Navigation Company v. London and Edinburgh Shipping Company ..... 454
28. Practice—Costs—Compulsory pilotage—Defence.—When a suit (instituted in the Admiralty Division) is dismissed, or an appeal succeeds on the ground that the defence of compulsory pilot-age is established, no order will be made as to costs either below or on appeal. The Schwann (L. Rep. 4 Ad. & Ecc. 187; 30 L. T. Rep. N. S.
237) followed. (Ct. of App.) The Daicos ..... 477
29. Practice—Costs—Reference—Fishing vessel—Loss of fishing—Damages.—Where a plaintiff claimed unliquidated damages in respect of loss of the remainder of a season's fishing occasioned by a collision, and on a reference to the registrar and merchant, the defendants objected to the claim altogether, but the plaintiff recovered, being awarded less than two-thirds of the amount claimed by him as damages, the court gave him costs in respect of the reference on the ground of the peculiarity of the plaintiff's claim, and without prejudice to the general rule as to costs of references. (Adm.) The Gleaner ..... 582 30. Practice—Costs—Court of Appeal—Varying of decree—Both ships to blame.—Where the Court of Appeal varies a decision of the judge of the Admiralty Division, one vessel that is wholly to blame for a collision, by finding that both vessels were to blame, each party will pay its own costs, both in the court below and in the Court of Appeal. The Agra and The Elisabeth Jenkins (2
Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 532; L. Rep. 1 P. C. 501; 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755) followed. (Ct. of App.)
The Corinna ..... 307
31. Practice—Costs—Court of Appeal—Varying decree—Inevitable accident.—Where the Court of Appeal varied the decision of the judge of the Admiralty Division one vessel that is wholly to blame for a collision, by finding that the collision was an inevitable accident, the practice of the Privy Council that each party should, except under very exceptional circumstances, pay their own costs, will be followed. The Marpesia (ante, vol. 1, p. 261; L. Rep. 4 P. C. 212; 26 L. T.
Rep. N. S. 333) followed. (Ct. of App.) The City of Cambridge ..... 307
32. Practice—Costs—Inevitable accident.—It is the practice of the Admiralty Court in case of inevitable accidents that each party should pay its own costs. But if, from the circumstances of the collision, it must have been obvious that the collision was an inevitable accident, the court will use its discretion as to dismissing the suit with costs. (Adm.) The Innisfail; The Secret... 337 33. Practice—Counter-claim—Security for costs of resident out of jurisdiction.—A defendant in a collision cause making a counter-claim for the damage sustained by his own vessel must, if he be resident out of the jurisdiction, give security for the costs, not merely of his counter-claim, but of the whole action. (Adm.) The Julia
Fisher ..... 380

34. Practice—Counter-claim—Security for costs—Default.—If he make default in giving security for costs pursuant to order, he will have his counter-claim dismissed. (Adm.) Id...... page 380
35. Practice—Damage to cargo—Ship carrying cargo—Preliminary acts.—In an action for damage to cargo sustained in a collision between two ships where the action is brought against the ship carrying the cargo, the parties are not bound to file preliminary acts under the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XIX., rule 30. (Adm.) The John Boyne ..... 341
36. Practice—Jurisdiction—Admiralty Division—Lord Campbell's Act—Action in rem.—The High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) has jurisdiction to entertain an action in rem brought by the personal representatives of a deceased person killed by the negligence of those on board a foreign ship in a collision between that ship and a British ship on the high seas below high-water mark. (So decided in the Admiralty Division. On appeal the Court of Appeal was equally divided, and the appeal dismissed.) (Adm. and Ct. of App.) The Franconia ..... 415, 433
37. Practice—Inspection of documents—Compromise of action.—In an action by owner of cargo against shipowner for damage in consequence of collision with another ship, caused by the defendant's alleged negligence, the plaintiff has a right to inspect terms of compromise of cross-suits in the Admiralty Court, entered into by the respective owners of the two ships. (Q. B. and Ct. of App.) Hutchinson v. Glover ..... 85, 120
38. Practice—Joint action of ship and cargo—Security for counter-claim—Dismissal of ship's action—Leave to cargo to proceed.—Where the owners of a ship which has sunk, and the owners of the cargo laden on board her, join as plaintiffs in an action against another ship for damages sustained by collision, the court will order the claim by the owner of the ship to be dismissed, unless security for a counter-claim made by the defendants is given, but will allow the owner of cargo to proceed without security. The Carnarvon Castle ..... 607
39. Practice—Particulars of claim.—Where a ship was totally lost in a collision, the court (Admiralty Division), contrary to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, made an order, in an action by the shipowners against the vessel doing the damage, for particulars of the plaintiff's claim to be delivered to the defendants. (Adm. Div.) The N. P. Neilson ..... 169
40. Practice—Vice-Admiralty Courts—Preliminary acts.—The form of preliminary acts now in use in the High Court of Justice in collision cases should be used in similar cases in the Vice-Admiralty Courts. (P. C.) The Norma..... 272
41. Practice—Vice-Admiralty Courts—Vivâ voce examination of witnesses.—In collision causes in the Vice-Admiralty Courts witnesses should, as far as possible, be examined vivâ voce before the court, not upon written interrogatories before an officer of the court prior to the hearing. (P. C.) The Norma ..... 272
42. Regulations for preventing collisions—Infringement not contributing to collision—Liability—Merchant Shipping Act 1873.—A vessel, though infringing the "regulations for preventing collisions at sea," will not be "deemed to be in fault" within the meaning of sect. 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873, for a collision caused exclusively by the negligence of the other colliding vessel, if the infringement of the regulations could not, under the circumstance of the case, have contributed to the collision. Hence where a vessel carrying wrong lights is run into by another which is bound to keep out of the way, but the other vessel, having no look-out, could not have seen any lights if they had been there, the vessel carrying the wrong lights will not be deemed at fault. The Fanny Carvill (2 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 478, 565) followed. (Adm.) The Englishman .....
43. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 5—Lights—Fishing vessels—Stationary and moving.—Decked fishing vessels are bound to carry the coloured lights prescribed by Art. 5 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea so long as they are actually under weigh, and are only justified in substituting the white mast-head light prescribed by the 2nd cl. of Art. 9, when the nets are over, and they are kept stationary by them. The Esk and The Gitana (L. Rep. 2 A. & E. 350; 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 587; 3 Mar. Law Cas. O. S. 242) followed. (Adm.) The Englishman .....
44. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 19, 20)—Sailing ships—Crossing.—A vessel at the starboard tack close hauled approaching another, apparently on the port tack, is, nevertheless, bound to keep out of the way, so soon as she ascertains that the other vessel is unmanœuvrable and unable to obey the ordinary rule of the road at sea. (P. C.) The Lake St. Clair v. The Underwriter.....
45. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 19)—Sailing ship—Steamship.—A sailing vessel, meeting a steamer, is bound to keep her course, and it is not the rule of the road that she should port her helm on nearing the steamer, such a deviation from the rules being allowed only under circumstances of immediate danger. (P. C.) The Norma .....
46. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 17)—Sailing ships—Overtaking—Crossing.—When a close-hauled ship is on the lee-quarter of and sailing faster than one on the same tack having the wind free, and is consequently passing on her, and their courses are such as to occasion risk of collision, Art. 12 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applies, and not Art. 17; and it is the duty of the ship having the wind free to keep out of the way of the close-hauled ship. (Adm.) The Peckforton Castle .....
47. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 17)—Sailing ships—Overtaking—Crossing.—Semble, the proper manœuvre for the ship having the wind free to adopt is—if the vessels have the wind on the port side, to port; and if on the starboard side, to starboard the helm. (Adm.) .....
48. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 17)—Sailing ships—Crossing—Overtaking.—Sailing ships on converging courses are crossing within Art. 12, and the faster-sailing vessel is not an overtaking ship within Art. 17, if at the time was she abaft the beam of the slower vessel. Quære, what is the proper definition of an overtaking ship or steam-vessel. The Franconia (Rep. 2 P. Div. 8; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360; 3 Mar. Law Cas. 295) doubted. (Ct. of App.) .....
49. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 17)—Sailing ships—Crossing—Overtaking.—Close-hauled.—Semble, it is a well-recognized useful rule of navigation that in all cases a vessel going free should give way to one close-hauled. (Ct. of App.) Id. .....
50. Regulations for preventing collisions (Art. 17)—Sailing ship—Steamship—Overtaking.—Semble, the case of a faster-sailing vessel overtaking a slower steamer, in the ordinary rule of navigation, is governed by Art.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

CONSUL.

See Mortgage, No. 2—Wages, Nos. 4, 6.

CONTRIBUTION.

See General Average—Marine Insurance Association, Nos. 1, 2—Practice, No. 24—Salvage, Nos. 14, 15, 16.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Collision, Nos. 3, 4.

CO-OWNERS.

See Master, No. 2—Accessories, No. 1—Shipowner, No. 6.

COSTS.

See Collision, Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34—Limitation of Liability, No. 4—Marine Insurance Association, No. 4—Master's Wages and Disbursements, No. 2—National Character, No. 3—Practice, Nos. 4, 10, 14, 23, 24—Salvage, Nos. 21, 22, 25, 26.

COUNTER-CLAIM.

See Collision, Nos. 33, 34—Limitation of Liability, Nos. 1, 2—Practice, No. 6.

COUNTY COURTS ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION.

See Practice, Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11—Salvage, Nos. 8, 9, 22—Wages, Nos. 2—Wrongful Dismissal.

COUNTY COURT APPEALS.

See Practice, Nos. 1, 8, 9, 10, 11—Salvage, Nos. 20, 22.

CROSSING SHIPS.

See Collision, Nos. 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51.

CUSTOM.

See Charter-party, No. 20—Marine Insurance, No. 1—Salvage, No. 6.

DAMAGE.

1. Damage to realty abroad—Governing law—Lex loci—Liability of shipowner.—The question of the liability of a shipowner, proceeded against in the English Admiralty Court for an injury done by his ship to a pier projecting into the sea, but attached to the soil of a foreign country, is governed by the lex loci, and not by English law. (Ct. of App., reversing Adm.) The M. Moxham ..... page 95, 191
2. Damage to realty abroad by ship—Admiralty jurisdiction.—Quære, can an English Court of Admiralty entertain an action for damage to realty in a foreign country, apart from some agreement or contract of the parties. (Ct. of App., reversing Adm.) Id. ..... 191
3. Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847—Damage to pier—Abandoned wreck—Liability of owner.—Under the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act 1847, sect. 74, enacting that the owner of every vessel shall be answerable for any damage done by such vessel to the harbour, dock, or pier, or the quays or works connected therewith, the owner of a ship, which, abandoned by her crew through stress of weather, becomes a total wreck, and is driven against and damages the pier, is not liable for such damage. (H. of L., affirming Ct. of App., reversing Q.B.) The River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson ..... 242

DAMAGES.

Contract to repair ship—Delay—Measure of damages—Loss of earnings.—Where a defendant has undertaken to supply the plaintiff's steamship with a propeller shaft and other fittings, and supplies things that are useless, and by so means the plaintiffs in obtaining other ships lose the use of the ship for nine days, the lost earnings of the ship for those nine days will be taken into consideration in assessing the damages. (Q. B. Div.) Wilson and another v. General Screw Colliery Company..... pp.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 12, 13—Charter-party, Nos. 7, 8, 9—Collision, No. 3, 4.

DAMAGE TO CARGO.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11—Practice, No. 6.

DEFAULT.

See Practice, Nos. 12, 13—Shipowner, No. 1—Wages, Nos. 5, 7.

DELIVERY.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 12, 15—Stoppage in Transitu.

DEMURRAGE.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 14—Charter-party, Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16—Collision, No. 1—Damages—Practice, No. 20—Salvage, No. 21

DERELICT.

See Salvage, No. 10.

DETENTION.

See Charter-party, Nos. 10, 11, 17.

DEVIATION.

See Marine Insurance, No. 13.

DISBURSEMENTS.

See Master's Wages and Disbursements.

DISCHARGE.

See Master, Nos. 2, 3.

DISCIPLINE.

1. Board of Trade inquiry—Master—No inquiry made.—When an inquiry is instituted under the Merchant Shipping Acts into the conduct of a captain, the court may proceed with the inquiry, although the Board of Trade have no charge to make against the captain. (Q.B.) Ex parte Board of Trade.....
2. Wreck Commissioner—Jurisdiction—Certificate of master—Loss, damage, or serious damage—Merchant Shipping Acts.—Under the Merchant Shipping Acts 1854 to 1876, the Wreck Commissioner has no jurisdiction to suspend a master's certificate where a ship has been stranded and damaged, as his jurisdiction in that respect is derived from the Merchant Shipping Act 1876, sect. 242, which gives such jurisdiction in the event of loss, abandonment of, or "serious damage" to any ship. (Q. B. Div.) The Storey .....

DISCONTINUANCE.

See Practice, No. 14.

DISCOVERY.

See Collision, No. 21—Practice, No. 14.

DISTRIBUTION OF SALVAGE.

See Salvage, Nos. 5, 6, 21.

DIVISIONAL COURT.

See Practice, No. 14.

DOCK.

See Collision, No. 1.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

INSURANCE.

See Charter-party, Nos. 9, 24—Marine Insurance—Sale of Goods, No. 3.

INTEREST.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 13, 17, 18, 28—Salvage, No. 26.

JUDGMENT.

See Practice, Nos. 9, 13, 16, 17—Salvage, No. 26.

JUDICATURE ACTS.

See Limitation of Liability, No. 1—Practice, Nos. 3, 12, 13, 14, 19, 22, 24, 26, 27.

JURISDICTION.

See Booty of War—Collision, No. 36—Damage, No. 2—Discipline, Nos. 1, 2—Master, No. 1—Mortgage, Nos. 1, 2—Necessaries, No. 3—Practices, Nos. 3, 21, 22, 25, 28—Wages, No. 2—Wrongful Dismissal.

KIDNAPPING ACT 1872.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 3, 4.

LATENT DEFECT.

See Collision, No. 11.

LAY DAYS.

See Charter-party, Nos. 12, 13, 14.

LEAKAGE.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 5—General Average, No. 1.

LIEN.

See Charter-party, Nos. 11, 16, 17, 18—Consignor and Consignee, No. 1—Marine Insurance, No. 27—Master, No. 2—Necessaries, No. 2—Salvage, Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16—Stoppage in Transitu, No. 3.

LIFE SALVAGE.

See Salvage, Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17.

LIGHTERAGE.

See Charter-party, No. 20.

LIGHTS.

See Collision, Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 43.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

1. Practice—Collision action—Admission of liability—Counter-claim for limitation.—Under the system of pleading established by the Judicature Act and rules, the defendant, where he admits his liability for the damage done by a collision, but claims to have his liability limited to £8 or £15 per ton of his vessel under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, can so claim by counter-claim instead of by instituting a separate suit for limitation of liability. (Adm. Div.) The Clutha..... page 225
2. Practice—Collision—Counter-claim for limitation—Alternative.—Semble, when liability is not admitted, a similar course may be adopted in the alternative. (Adm. Div.) Id...... 225
3. Practice—Payment into court—Collision action—Transfer to limitation action not necessary.—Where a vessel under arrest in a cause of damage is liberated on payment into court of the amount to which her liability was limited under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, together with a sum to cover costs and interest, and subsequently is found solely to blame for the collision, and the owners, having instituted a suit for limitation of liability, move for a decree in that suit and that the money in court should be transferred to the credit of that suit, the court will grant the same but not the transfer of the money, as it is unnecessary by the practice of the court. (Adm. Div.) The Sisters..... page 225

4. Practice—Stay of proceedings—Reform—On—In a collision cause, although the defendant is entitled, upon admission of liability and payment into court of the amount of his liability under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, s. 54, to a stay of proceedings as against himself, plaintiffs having separate interests may, at the defendant's cost, proceed to a reference to settle the respective amounts due to them, and pay to their costs. (Adm.) The Expert..... page 225

See Maritime Insurance, No. 22.

LIS ALIBI PENDENS.

See Practice, No. 18.

LOADING.

See Charter-party, Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21—Marine Insurance, No. 12.

LOOK-OUT.

See Collision, No. 20.

LORD CAMPBELL'S ACT.

See Collision, No. 36.

LOSS OF MARKET.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 12.

MACHINERY.

See Damages.

MANAGING OWNER.

See Shipowner, No. 6.

MARINE INSURANCE.

1. Agents—London merchants—Custom—Discount on insurances.—By the custom of London merchants persons acting as agents for shipowners in insuring ships are entitled to retain the 1 per cent. discount allowed to them by underwriters and if the shipowner has assented to this in previous dealings with his agents he cannot object to them retaining any particular sum. (V.C.B. and Ct. of App.) Baring v. Stanton..... page 225
2. Agent—Revocation of authority—Commission.—But insurance brokers whose agency in respect of a particular ship is revoked has no right to withhold the policies on that ship, to collect the moneys due thereon, or to charge commission for collecting such moneys. (V.C.B.) Baring v. Stanton..... page 225
3. Barratry—Kidnapping Act 1872—Carrying Polynesian labourers without licence—Forfeiture.—The Kidnapping Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 86) having prohibited the carrying of Polynesian native labourers in ships without a licence, the penalty of forfeiture of the ship, a master without the authority of his owners, but with knowledge of the prohibition, ships and carrying native labourers, and so brings about the arrest and condemnation of his ship, commits an act of barratry in respect of which his owners may recover against their underwriters. (P.C.) Australian Insurance Company v. Townley Jackson (reap.)..... page 225
4. Barratry—Kidnapping Act 1872—Breach of knowledge of prohibition.—Where a master carries Polynesian native labourers without a licence, against the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, proof that the master has never seen the Act is

- writers on a policy "on rice;" nor can the purchasers make the underwriters liable by accepting bills of exchange against shipping documents signed after the loss and electing to be liable for the loss. (Ex. Ch. reversing C. P.; affirmed in H. of L., the Lords being equally divided.) Anderson v. Morice..... page 31, 240
14. Perils of the sea—Causa proxima—Loss.—In ascertaining whether a ship was lost by perils of the sea, causa proxima non remota spectatur; therefore any loss caused by the perils of the sea is within the policy, although it would not have occurred but for the concurrent action of some other cause which is not within it. (H. of L.) Dudgeon v. Pembroke..... 393
15. Policy—Risk—Description—Loss—Deviation.—Where steam pumps are insured "at and from Ardrossan to the A. steamer ashore in the neighbourhood of D., and while there engaged at the wreck and until again returned to Ardrossan by the s. steamer including all risk, while at the wreck," and after the A. steamer is raised she makes for Belfast Loch (which is not the way to Ardrossan) with the pumps on board, and on this voyage sinks, and the pumps are lost, the loss is not covered by the policy. (Ct. of App.) Wingate, Birrell, and Co. v. Foster ..... 598
16. Practice—United States Admiralty—Premiums—Libel—Pleading.—A libel in an Admiralty Court, in the United States, claiming payment of premiums against ship, should set out the dates and amounts of the policies, and also the name of the parties insured, and the character and extent of their interest. (U. S. Dist. Ct.) The Dolphin ..... 287
17. Profits—Policy on goods—Insurable interest.—A policy on goods without any mention of profits does not cover any interest in profits which might arise collaterally from a contract relating to the goods, although such contract exist at the time of the loss of the goods. (Exch. Ch., reversing C. P.) Anderson v. Morice ..... 31
18. Re-insurance—Policy on goods—Declaration of interest.—A policy of insurance "on goods" will cover a re-insurance. Hence an underwriter may re-insure the risk he has undertaken, and need only declare his interest to be in the original subject-matter, without declaring that he is re-insuring. (Ct. of App.) Mackenzie v. Whitworth ..... 81
19. Repairs—Extent of underwriter's liability—Election to repair—Total loss.—An underwriter's liability under a policy on ship when the ship has sustained damage which the assured although entitled to abandon elects to repair, must be measured by the cost of the repairs necessitated by the perils insured against, less one-third new for old, notwithstanding the underwriter is thereby made liable for more than the assured could have claimed for a total loss with benefit of salvage, and the assured obtains more than an indemnity for his loss. (Q. B. Div.) Lohre v. Aitchison and another ..... 445
20. Return of premium—Termination of risk—Arrival at place of discharge.—Underwriters are not bound to return premiums paid on a policy of insurance, unless the risk insured has terminated when the insurance is made, and on a voyage policy the voyage does not terminate (unless under an express stipulation) until the ship arrives, not merely at the port of discharge but at the usual place of discharge in the port, and is moored there. Where a ship on a voyage to Antwerp arrives there on Jan. 1, and enters the outer dock, and is insured on Jan. 2, before entering the inner dock, the usual place of dis-
- charge, the voyage is not terminated, and it is still a risk covered by the policy. (Ex. Ch.) Scott and others v. The Ocean Marine Insurance Company (Limited) of Gothenburg ..... 445
21. Seaworthiness—Loss by perils—Sinking & moorings—Evidence.—Where a ship, previously to all appearances staunch and sound, and recently thoroughly repaired, and a few days before thoroughly examined without any defects being discoverable, sinks suddenly at her moorings, when she has taken in five-sixths of her cargo, and no direct evidence can be given why she founders, and no certain cause assigned for her doing so, the question of seaworthiness and likely perils of the sea are proper questions for the jury in an action on a policy on cargo, and if evidence is given of her good condition and conduct prior to the loss, this will justify the jury in finding a loss by perils insured against. (Ex. Ch., from C. P.) Anderson v. Morice ..... 445
22. "Suing and labouring"—Expenses—Loss from particular average—Total loss.—Expenses recoverable under the suing and labouring clause in a policy "free from particular average" are such expenses as are necessary to avert a total loss, such as, in the case of a grain export, unshipping and warehousing, separating and conditioning the latter, but nothing beyond what is necessary for that object. (C. P. Div.) Hay and others v. Balli and others ..... 445
23. Time or voyage policy—"Fifteen days after arrival."—Where a ship is insured from A. to B., and "for fifteen days after arrival," and she duly arrives at B., discharges her cargo, and goes to another part of the port to take in another cargo, and is there lost by perils insured against before the expiration of the fifteen days, the underwriters are liable, because the policy must be considered, as to the fifteen days, as a voyage policy but a time policy. (Ct. of App. reversing Ex. Div.) Gambles and others v. The Ocean Marine Insurance Company of London ..... 445
24. Time policy—Seaworthiness—Warranty.—In an ordinary time policy there is no implied warranty that the vessel should be seaworthy at any part of the risk. (H. of L., reversing Ex. Ch. and Q. B.) Dudgeon v. Pembroke ..... 445
25. Total loss—Collision—Ships belonging to the owner—Underwriters' rights—Limitation of liability.—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, gives shipowners power to limit their liability, and does not create any new rights, but restrain existing rights by limiting liability. The right of the underwriters of a lost ship for damages against a wrongdoer is merely to make the same claim as the insured might have made. Hence, in the case of collision between two ships belonging to the same owner by which one is lost by the exclusive fault of the other, the underwriters of the policy on the lost ship can make no claim against the owner, but into court under the limitation of liability clause of the Merchant Shipping Act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, sect. 54), the insured being himself the person causing the damage. (H. of L.) Scots and others v. Thomson and others ..... 445
26. Total loss—Sale of goods by master—Notice of abandonment—Right of underwriter to salvage.—Where in the course of a voyage insured goods are so damaged that they are of no use to the master, there is without abandonment a total loss for which the underwriters are liable, subject to their right to receive the proceeds of the sale from those to whom it is paid. If the assured have possession of the proceeds, they are deducted from the total loss, but if they

of third parties the assured may recover total loss if they have nothing which would be chance of the recovery of the proceeds underwriters. A refusal by assured to send give a receipt in full of all demands proceeds of sale from the hands of the insurer, less pro rata freight claimed by him, the net amount less than the insured; not an act which will deprive the assured right to recover for a total loss. (Q. B. Saunders and another v. Baring and another ..... page 132)

Writer—Premiums—Lien—United States by United States law an underwriter upon a maritime lien for the premiums due to der marine policies upon the ship under by him, and can enforce payment by pro rem in Admiralty against the ship. (U.S. Dist. Ct.) The Dolphin ..... 287

Policy—Evidence of thing valued—Fraud.—Under a valued policy it may be what it was intended to be valued, view to disputing interest in the whole of valuation, though the amount of the same can be disputed only on the ground of (Ct. of App.) Williams and others v. the China Insurance Company ..... 342

Policy—Deviation—Description of—A ship which is insured for a voyage Liverpool to Philadelphia and the United States, and which by a subsequent memorandum indorsed on the policy, in consideration of a premium, obtains leave to go to Antwerp, must go either to a port in the United States or to Antwerp, but cannot within the voyage go to Antwerp first and thence proceed to the United Kingdom, and if she is lost in Antwerp and such port she is not covered by the policy. (Ex. Div.) Scott and another v. The Ocean Marine Insurance Company of Gothenburg ..... 152

Policy—Open policy on profits and losses—Without benefit of salvage—British 19 Geo. 2, c. 37.—Open policies on profits and losses on goods to be shipped contain clauses "warranted free from all average" without benefit of salvage," but to pay on such part as shall not arrive, are null and void under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, if the insured declares in British ships, and the assured are entitled to a return of premiums paid. (C. P. Allekins and another v. Jups, Pembroke, and another v. Choisy ..... 449)

Policy of seaworthiness—Vessel built for navigation—Ocean voyage.—Where a vessel built for inland navigation is insured for an ocean voyage there is an implied warranty that she shall be made as seaworthy for the voyage as such a vessel can be made by ordinary means. (Ct. of App.) Turnbull and another v. Janson ..... 433

See Charter-party, Nos. 9, 24.

MARINE INSURANCE ASSOCIATIONS.

Ship—Rules—Payment of contribution—Lien.—Where by the rules of a mutual marine insurance association no person can become a member except by signing the articles, the shipowner, having an equitable interest in the ship insured in the association by the owner (a member), pays the contribution from him by the association, the shipowner is estopped from disputing the shipowner's right in the policy and his right to sue on it, though he may not have complied with the rules as to membership. (Ex. Ch.) Edwards v. The Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society (Limited) ..... page 154

2. Rules—Effect of—Contributory not member.—The rules of such association, by which disputes are to be settled by the directors with an appeal to the whole society, and no action is to be brought for any claims on the society by its members, are not binding upon a person paying premiums under such circumstances, and do not preclude him from bringing an action after a refusal of his claims by the directors, but before an appeal to the whole society. (Ex. Ch.) Edwards v. Aberayron Mutual Ship Insurance Society (Limited) ..... 154

3. Unregistered association—Non-members taking policies—Manager's liability—Return of premium—Consideration.—When non-members take out special rate policies in an unregistered mutual assurance association, having power to issue special rate policies to members only, and such policies so issued are signed by the managers who become personally responsible for the amount insured, such non-members have no claim upon the members for their premiums on the association being wound-up, and the personal liability of the managers prevents failure of consideration. (M. R.) Re Arthur Average Association (De Winton and Co.'s case) ..... 245

4. Winding-up—Contributory—Non-member—Costs.—If a person claiming under the winding-up of a mutual assurance association allow his name to be put on the list of contributories and pay calls, he cannot afterwards obtain the removal of his name from the list of contributories upon the ground that he had prior to the winding-up ceased to be a member by the rules of the association, but will be held liable to contribute for costs. (V. C. M.) Re Queen's Average Association; Ex parte Lynes ..... 576

MARITIME LIEN.

See Marine Insurance, No. 27—Necessaries, No. 2.

MASTER.

1. Certificate of registry—Admiralty jurisdiction—Delivery up.—The High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) has power, upon the application of the owners of a ship, to order a master who has been dismissed from their employment to deliver up the certificate of registry and other papers and property belonging to the ship, where he refuses to surrender them. (Adm.) The St. Olaf ..... 268

2. Certificate of registry—Lien—Wrongful dismissal.—Sembler, a master, whether co-owner or not, can have no lien upon a certificate of registry or ship's papers in case of wrongful dismissal by the managing owners. (Adm.) The St. Olaf ... 268

3. Dismissal—Reasonable notice.—The master of a ship, in the absence of express stipulation in the contract of hiring, is entitled to reasonable notice of dismissal from the shipowner. (C. P. Div.) Green v. Wright ..... 254

See Discipline—Master's Wages and Disbursements—Necessaries, No. 1.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

See Damage, No. 3.

MASTER'S LIEN.

See Master, No. 2.

MASTER'S WAGES AND DISBURSEMENTS.

1. Collision—Bond given by master—No claim against owners.—Where a ship, through the default of her master, has run into and damaged another ship, and the master of the former has, in respect of such collision, given a bond for the amount of the damage binding himself and his owners and the ship, he, being himself a wrongdoer, cannot, in an action for wages and disbursements, claim the amount of such bond or to be indemnified against any claim to be made against him thereunder in respect of the collision.

(Adm. Div.) The Limerick ..... page 206

2. Lien—Company—Wound-up—Leave to proceed—Costs.—Where a master has a lien for disbursements on a ship which belongs to a limited company and the company is wound-up and all actions and proceedings stayed, the master must obtain leave in the winding-up to enforce his lien in Admiralty, and he will be entitled to recover the amount due to him, and also his costs in the winding-up proceedings. (Qt. of App.) Re The Rio Grande do Sul Steamship Company (Limited) ..... 424

3. Repairs to ship—Liability of master—Claims for disbursements.—Where shipwrights execute repairs to a ship at the order of the master, given under circumstances by which the shipwrights acquire a right to claim against either the owners or the master, and they elect to claim against the master, the latter may, in an action for wages and disbursements, proceed against the ship and recover for the amount of such shipwrights' claim as a disbursement made on ship's account. (Adm. Div.) The Limerick ..... 206

MATERIAL FACT.

See Marine Insurance, No. 6.

MATERIAL MEN.

See Master's Wages and Disbursements, No. 3—Necessaries, Nos. 2, 4.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 12, 13—Charter-party, Nos. 7, 8, 9—Collision, Nos. 8, 9—Damages.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT.

See Collision, Nos. 1, 2, 7, 42—Discipline, Nos. 1, 2—Limitation of Liability, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4—National Character—Protection of Seamen—Salvage, Nos. 3, 7, 10, 12, 14, 15—Unseaworthy Ships—Wages, No. 1.

MERSEY DOCKS ACTS CONSOLIDATION ACTS.

Dock dues—Ship in ballast—Cargo.—A vessel discharging her cargo at another port in England and there taking on board ballast to go to Liverpool to load a cargo for the West Indies, is not, by reason of her also taking on board a bale of cotton and a few articles for the express purpose, entitled to be treated as a vessel trading inwards, but is a vessel arriving in ballast within the meaning of the Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 92), sect. 30, and must pay dock dues accordingly. (C. P.) De Garleig v. The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board ..... 500

MERSEY PILOTAGE.

See Collision, No. 6.

MORTGAGE.

1. Admiralty jurisdiction—Arrest—3 & 4 Vict. c. 65—Foreign ship.—The arrest necessary to found the jurisdiction of the High Court of Justice (Admiralty Division) over claims by mortgagees of foreign ships under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, must be in a cause over which the court has jurisdiction; a mere de facto arrest is not sufficient. (Adm.) The Evangelistria ..... 264

2. Admiralty jurisdiction—Cause of possession—Foreign ship—Con Intervention of foreign representative.—Court of Justice (Admiralty Division), independently of the J and will entertain on the in representative of a foreign state sent of parties, a cause of possession of a foreign ship belonging to as to ascertain the true position and the nature of their title, as for the advantage of all parties to the ship. The See Reuter (11 (Adm.) The Evangelistria ...

3. Effect of mortgage—Transfer of gage of a ship transfers the o to entitle the mortgagees to mortgagee's interest as secur (C. P. Div.) Keith and another .....

4. Effect of mortgage—Omission only effect of the omission to r of a ship is to postpone it registered mortgage. (C. P. another v. Burrows and another .....

5. Freight—Mortgagee's right.—A mortgagee of the ship is as against an assignee of freight made after the mortgage registration. (C. P. Div.) It .....

6. Freight—Right of mortgagee—Shipowner's cargo.—The mort only entitled to such freight: contract existing when he tal where the cargo belongs to the shipped under bills of lading a but upon sale of the cargo voices the cargo at an increase such increased rate is not free of the cargo, and the mortgage more than the bill of lading fi and H. of L.) Keith and another .....

NATIONAL CHARACTER

1. Concealing British character—Act 1854—Forfeiture—Closing flag.—Where a British subject British ship, by a representative of customs at the port of registry has been sold to foreigners, in of the registry, and sails he certificate of registry and un whilst he continues to own her profits of working her, doing intent to conceal her British officers of customs, and prev unseaworthy, he commits an provisions of the Merchant (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103, his ship is liable to, and w forfeiture to Her Majesty. (A

2. Concealing British character—Attachment of forfeiture—Bond.—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—committed by a shipowner c 103 of the Merchant Ship cealing her national character forfeited to Her Majesty attaches, and the property out of the owners, and v the date of the commit person purchasing such out knowledge of the the commission there condemnation, cannot

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

the Crown. (Adm. and Ct. of Appeals)..... page 383, 489
Caracter—Forfeiture—Inspection—Shipping Acts—Costs— of a British vessel to sail abroad, to enable her to sail her former British owners control over her, and by such to evade the provisions with regard to the inspection ships, is an infringement
Shipping Act 1854, s. 103,
ship so transferred is forfeit
the original English owners, defendants by orders of the not appeared, condemned in
Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 269;
129) followed. (Ct. of App.)

504

JAL ASSESSORS.

tion, Nos. 22, 23.

GABLE RIVER.

mer—Adjoining owner—Ap-
The owner of a wharf on a the right of reasonable user to bring vessels up alongside of loading and unloading,
vessels are longer than his set over an adjoining wharf, it unreasonably obstruct the ining wharf, and the adjoin- ot entitled to put timber on the river, to prevent such osite his wharf. (M. R.)
Collieries Company (Limited)

411

CESSARIES.

aries—Colonial ports—Lia- ster in a colonial port, un- for necessities otherwise, range upon a firm of ship- ment, who accept and pay proceed against necessaries supplied in default amount due by the ship-
hus. 154) followed. (Adm.

The Anna ..... 237

ip—Material man—Lien—
ial man, who supplies stores
he equipment of a British time lien, cannot enforce his p in the hands of a subse- reef, even though such pur- the time of purchase that aid. (Adm.) The Aneroid sh colonial port — Foreign Division of the High Court action to entertain an action ies supplied to a foreign ship
port. The Wataga (Swab.
Div. and Ct. of App.) The 237 band—Payment by bill— recovery against co-owners.

repaired by the order of the
the cost of the repairs is,
the ship's husband, appor-
several co-owners, who pay, there in bills, and the bill of onoured, the material men unt so left unpaid from the ho, being bound by the ayment, cannot set up that the taking of the bill gave the defaulting co-owner time to their detriment. (Ex. Div.) Mould and another v. Andrews and others..... page 329

NOTICE.

See Master, No. 3—Practice, Nos. 19, 20.

NOTICE OF ABANDONMENT.

See Marine Insurance, No. 26.

NOTICE TO THIRD PARTIES.

See Practice, Nos. 19, 20.

OBSTRUCTION.

See Navigable River.

ONUS OF PROOF.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 8, 9.—Collision, Nos. 3, 4.

OPEN POLICY.

See Marine Insurance, No. 30.

OVERTAKING SHIP.

See Collision, Nos. 15, 16, 19, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52.

OWNERS.

See Shipowner.

PARTIAL LOSS.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 7, 12, 13, 22.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE.

See Salvage, No. 13.

PARTICULARS.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 19—Collision, No. 39.

PARTNERSHIP.

See Shipowner, No. 6.

PASSING OF PROPERTY.

See Marine Insurance, No. 13—Sale of Goods, Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9—Stoppage in Transitu.

PAYMENT OUT OF COURT.

See Wages, Nos. 5, 6.

PERILS OF THE SEA.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 4, 10—Marine Insurance, No. 14.

PERSONAL INJURY.

See Collision, No. 36.

PILOTAGE.

See Collision, Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 13, 25, 26, 27, 28.

PLEADING.

See Collision, Nos. 33, 34, 40—Practice, No. 13—Salvage, No. 27.

POLICY.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 8, 15, 17, 18, 23, 24, 28, 29, 30.

PORT DUES.

See Charter-party, No. 8.

POSSESSION.

See Mortgage, No. 2.

PRACTICE.

1. Appeals—County Court—Admiralty Division—
Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873.—
Although the Supreme Court of Judicature Act

- 1873, s. 45, provides that County Court appeals may be heard before a divisional court consisting of two or three judges (sect. 40), the Admiralty Division, having all the exclusive jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty before the passing of the Act, still retains the jurisdiction to hear and determine County Court Admiralty appeals. (Adm.) The Two Brothers ..... page 99
2. Appeal—Inferences of fact—Evidence—Reversing decrees.—The Court of Appeal has great reluctance in reversing a decision of a judge of first instance, where he has come to a conclusion of fact upon conflicting testimony and after hearing the witnesses; but where the court of first instance draws inferences from the facts proved before it, a decision founded upon such inferences will be reviewed, and if erroneous reversed, without great pressure, by the Court of Appeal. (Ct. of App.) The Transit ..... 233
3. Appeal—Jurisdiction—Discretion of judge—Supreme Court of Judicature Act.—Sect. 19 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 does not give the Court of Appeal jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a judge of the High Court with reference to a matter which, before the passing of the Judicature Acts, was in the absolute discretion of the judge. (Adm. and Ct. of App.) The Amstel ..... 488
4. Appeal—Security for costs—Special circumstances.—The Court of Appeal will not order security for costs of an appeal except under special circumstances. A plaintiff arresting a ship which is released on bail, and against which he obtains a decree, is not entitled to security for the costs of appeal, merely because the bail bond only covers the costs of the court below and not of the Court of Appeal. (Ct. of App.) The Victoria ..... 230
5. Appearance—District registry—London registry—Title of cause.—Where an action in rem is instituted against a ship in a district registry, and the shipowners, residing out of the jurisdiction of that registry, enter an appearance in the London registry, the appearance must show where the action was commenced, the title of the cause in the district registry, and that the defendants are resident out of the jurisdiction of that registry. (Adm.) The General Birch ..... 99
6. Counter-claim—General average—Damage to cargo—Adjustment—Reference.—Where to a claim for damage to cargo a counter-claim of general average is set up, it is not necessary that such general average should have been adjusted; but if the evidence supports the fact of a general average loss having been sustained, the amount thereof, together with the amount of loss sustained through damage to the cargo, will be referred to the registrar and merchants to report. (Adm.) The Oquendo ..... 558
7. County Court action—Leave to proceed in High Court—Commission—County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868.—When there are circumstances rendering it advisable that an action which a County Court has jurisdiction to try under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, should be commenced in the High Court, such as the necessity for a commission abroad, the court will grant leave for a writ to issue under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, sects. 3, 9, though the cause of action may be of less amount than the limit of the County Court jurisdiction. In such a case notice of the order made by the court should be given when the writ is served. (C. P. Div.) Ellis and Co. v. General Steam Navigation Company (Limited) 581
8. County Court appeal—Admiralty—Amount under £50.—A plaintiff claiming an amount not exceeding £50 in an Admiralty case in a County Court, is precluded from appealing from the decision of the court by sect. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71). (Adm.) The Palom ..... page 99
9. County Court appeal—Court of Appeal—Leave to appeal—Costs.—The reasons for judgment of the County Court judge, as well as for that of the High Court, should be before the Court of Appeal when a further appeal is made to that court. (Ct. of App.) The Swallow ..... 99
10. County Court appeal—Leave to appeal—Costs of appeal.—Costs not allowed when the Court of Appeal reversed the decision of the court below in an appeal for which permission was necessary. (Ct. of App.) Id. ..... 99
11. County Court—Appeal in Admiralty—Leave to appeal—Discretion of judge.—Leave to enter the time for appealing from a County Court is the exercise of its Admiralty jurisdiction, and not within the absolute discretion of the judge of the Admiralty Division, and from his decision an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal. (Adm. and Ct. of App.) The Amstel ..... 488
12. Default of appearance—Proceeding in rem—Supreme Court rules—Admiralty Court Additional Rules 1871.—Order XIII., rule 10, of the rules of the Supreme Court as to proceedings in rem by default being annulled by the rules of the Supreme Court, Dec. 1875, the effect of such annulment is to bring into force, under and by virtue of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1875, sect. 18, the Admiralty Court Additional Rules 1871, as to proceedings in rem by default. (Adm.) The Polymede ..... 230
13. Default of pleading—Signing judgment—Action in rem—Supreme Court Rules, Order XIII. r. 2.—Order XXIX., r. 2, of the Supreme Court Rules, as to signing judgment in default of pleading, does not apply to proceedings in rem, consequently in an action in rem for a liquidated sum for necessities supplied, if the defendant makes default in delivering his statement of defence, the plaintiff cannot at once sign judgment, but must bring the case on for hearing before the judge upon affidavit. (Adm.) The Sfactoria ..... 99
14. Discontinuance—Costs.—Where a plaintiff in an action, after succeeding in an interlocutory application, the costs of which are made costs in the cause, gives notice of discontinuance of the action, under Order XXIII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the defendant is entitled to his costs, including the costs of such application. (Adm.) The St. Olaf ..... 99
15. Discovery of documents—Action in rem—Foreign ship—Time.—In an action in rem against a foreign ship whose owners are resident abroad the court will make an order for discovery of documents against such owners, but will allow a reasonable time for making the affidavit of documents. (Adm. Div.) The Emma ..... 99
16. Foreign judgment—Estoppel—Res judicata—Lis alibi pendens.—In an action of collision judgment of a foreign court given in a case between the same parties cannot be pleaded as an estoppel unless such judgment was given prior to the institution of the action in this country; there being no res judicata, lis alibi pendens, when the plaintiff brings his action here, he can claim to proceed in this country if he chooses. (Ct. of App.) The Delta ..... 99

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACT.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 18, 20.

RAM.

See Collision, Nos. 55, 56.

RATIFICATION.

See Marine Insurance, No. 11.

RATS.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 4.

RECEIVER OF WRECK.

See Salvage, No. 10.

REFERENCE.

See Limitation of Liability, No. 4.

REGISTER.

See Shipowner, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 6.

REGISTERED OWNER.

See Mortgage, Nos. 4, 5—Shipowner, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 6
—Wages, No. 1.

REGISTRATION.

See Mortgage, Nos. 4, 5—Shipowner, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 6.

REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS.

See Collision, Nos. 42 to 53, 59.

RE-INSURANCE.

See Marine Insurance, No. 18.

REPAIRS.

See Necessaries, No. 4.

RES JUDICATA.

See Practice, No. 16.

RETURN OF PREMIUMS.

See Marine Insurance, No. 20.

RISK.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 9, 15, 20, 23, 29.

RIVER MERSEY.

See Collision, No. 6.

RULES OF SUPREME COURT.

See Practice.

SACRIFICE.

See General Average, Nos. 1, 3, 4.

SAILING SHIPS.

See Collision, Nos. 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53.

SALE OF CARGO.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 16—Marine Insurance,
Nos. 7, 26.

SALE OF GOODS.

1. Cargo—Vendor and purchaser—Right to whole cargo.—Where vendors abroad contract to supply purchasers in England with a cargo of from 2500 to 3000 barrels (seller's option) of petroleum, the shipment to be made abroad, and the vessel to proceed to a port of discharge to be determined by the purchasers; the purchasers are entitled to a whole cargo not exceeding 3000 barrels, and are not bound to accept 3000 barrels out of a ship chartered by the sellers, and loaded with 3000 barrels consigned to the purchasers, and 300 barrels differently marked and consigned to other parties. (Ct. of App.) Borven v. others v. Drayton .....

2. Contract—Shipment in month named—In and purchaser.—Where a merchant agent and a purchaser to buy goods, to be shipped on board a ship in the months of March and April and nine-tenths are shipped in February with rest in March, the shipment is not a March shipment, and the purchaser may refuse to accept. (H. of L., reversing Ct. of App., but dissenting Q. B. Div.) Bowes and others v. Shand and others .....

3. Contract—Specific quantity of goods—In quantity shipped—Mistake—Insurance.—The plaintiffs abroad agree to sell and deliver to this country a specific quantity of goods upon terms "cost, freight, and insurance" and through a mistake they ship double the quantity and send their agent a bill of lading for the double quantity and policy of insurance by which the double quantity is insured "free of particular average," the purchasers are not bound to accept half the amount so shipped as the goods, because the terms of the contract of sale and insurance were not complied with. (Ct. of App.) Hickox and another v. Adams and another .....

4. Contract—Time—"Ship at A."—Condition precedent—Warranty—Right of repudiation—Evidence.—Where goods are sold to arrive within a contract, in which it is said the "ship must be at A," evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which the contract was made, and that it was of vital importance that the ship should be at the place named at the time of the making of the contract, and those circumstances then bearing on the contract are questions for the jury, and if they find that it was a vital term of the contract that the ship should be at "A" at the time, the purchaser is entitled to repudiate the contract on the ground of failure of the performance of a condition precedent by the vendor. (Q. B. Div.) Oppenheim v. Fraser .....

5. Passing of property—Bills of lading—Vendor and purchaser.—The delivery, by the seller of goods contracted to be sold, on board a vessel chartered by the buyer, is not a delivery to the buyer but to the master of the vessel as bailee; the person indicated in the bills of lading, and consequently the property in the goods does not pass before the signing of the bills of lading, hence, where the seller chooses to make out the bills of lading to another person, and they are indorsed for value to some other than the buyer, there is no appropriation which will entitle the buyer to claim the goods as against the indorsee, even though the contract between buyer and seller is that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer on payment, and such goods are covered by funds in seller's hands; and if the payment is to be by bills of exchange drawn on the seller upon the buyer, the buyer might, in the ordinary course, and to protect himself, have bills of lading made out to his agents, and the master is not bound to inquire why he does so, and would be bound to sign them although the charter-party stipulated for delivery to the purchaser or assigns, because he, the master, knows nothing of the relations between the seller and the shipper was acting as agent for the purchaser; and hence no action will lie against the shipper for no delivery of the goods. (Q. B. Div.) Gabarron and another v. Kraft; Thomson .....

6. Passing of property—Bill of lading—Refusal of delivery.—Where goods

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

rd a vessel in execution of a contract of ad the shipper takes a bill of lading "to ' for the purpose merely of securing the at of the price, and not to prevent the from being considered as within the con- the property in the goods passes to the eer so as to entitle him to maintain an of trover against the holders of the bills ing and exchange, who refuse delivery ffer of payment of the price. (Ct. of App.) ita v. The Imperial Ottoman Bank ...page 591

ig of property.—Shipment against bills— location.—Plaintiff had arranged with a nt in Africa that the latter should pur- articles of produce and ship them for sale country by the plaintiff upon commission, f allowing the African merchant to draw him in order to purchase the articles, and uments of title of the shipments being eated to the plaintiff so as to enable him ide funds to meet the bills drawn upon him. y after the shipment of a cargo under this ement, the African merchant stopped pay- and his liquidator gave the bill of lading to 'endants with instructions not to part with as paid the value of the cargo. On action it to recover back the value paid by the f under protest, and damages for the de- of the bill of lading: Held, upon demurrer, ie plaintiff had an equitable title to the bill ng under the arrangement, and that the was maintainable. (Q. B. Div.) Lutscher ptoir d'Escompte de Paris ..... 209

ig of property.—Stoppage in transitu— and purchaser.—Where by the terms of a rt of sale the bill of lading is deliverable the vendee's fulfilling certain conditions, pper is entitled not only to retain posses- the goods under such bill of lading until onditions are fulfilled, but also in case of idee's default to dispose of the goods. (Ct. .) Ogg and another v. Shuter ..... 77

ig of property.—Cash against bill of "—Possession of vendor—Right of vendor. re a merchant in France contracts to sell r merchants in England certain goods, to vered "free on board" and "cash against lading," the vendor is entitled to retain ion until the purchaser complies with the ons of payment, and if on the arrival of ds in England, the plaintiffs erroneously ig that there has been a short shipment, to accept the full draft presented to them eptance by the vendor's agent, the latter led to dispose of the goods elsewhere, and on will lie against the person receiving them ie agent. (Ct. of App.) Ogg and another ler ..... 77

See Stoppage in Transitu.

SALE OF SHIP.

—Commission—Evidence of purchase being through agent.—When an agent is engaged a ship, and it is agreed that if a sale is o any person "led to make such offer in ience of " the agent's mention or publica- it, the agent shall have a commission, the ot that a purchaser has been told in ation by a person who had been in com- tion with the agent that the ship had been n put up to auction, and not sold, is not ! evidence that the purchaser has been led shase by the publication of it. (Ct. of overing C. P. Div.) Bayley and others lucick ..... 458, 548

2. Agent—Sub-agent—Accounting for price.—Where shipowner sends a ship to his agents abroad (Japan) for sale, and they, by reason of the impossibility of personally pressing on the sale at the different ports, necessarily employ a sub-agent to sell, that sub-agent becomes the agent of the shipowner, and is accountable to the shipowner for the proceeds of sale, and cannot take the ship himself at the limited price, and resell for his own benefit at a higher rate; if he does so, he is liable for the excess realised to the shipowner. (Ct. of App.) De Bussche v. Alt ...page 584

3. Statute of Frauds, sect. 17—Custody of sheriff—Acceptance and receipt.—The owner of a ship or other goods which are in the custody of the sheriff under a fi. fa. may make a valid sale thereof, and may deliver possession thereof to the purchaser, so as to constitute an acceptance and receipt within the meaning of the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds. (Ct. of App.) Union Bank of London v. Lenanton ..... 600

4. Transfer of ship—Registration—Merchant Shipping Act 1854—Bill of sale.—A transfer of a ship, which has been built in England, but has not been registered as a British ship, and is not intended to be so registered under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 19, is good, although not made by bill of sale under that Act. (Ct. of App.) Union Bank of London v. Lenanton ..... 600

5. Transfer of ship—Bills of Sale Act—Ship completed.—A ship completed by her builders, and ready for delivery, is within the exception of the Bills of Sale Act, and an interest in her may be transferred without the instrument being registered under that Act. (Ct. of App.) Union Bank of London v. Lenanton ..... 600
See Shipowner, Nos. 1, 2, 3.

SALVAGE.

1. Agreement—Compulsion—Setting aside as inequitable.—Where the master of a vessel found passengers of another vessel (550 pilgrims) wrecked on a rock in the Red Sea in fine weather, and refused to carry them to Jeddah for a less sum than £4000, and the master of the wrecked vessel was by such refusal compelled to sign an agreement for that amount, and the service was performed without difficulty or danger, the agreement was held inequitable and set aside. £1800 awarded in the place thereof. (Adm. Div. and Ct. of App.) The Medina ..... 219, 305

2. Agreement—Setting aside Government ship—Officers and crew—Right to reward.—Although the captains, officers, and crews of Government ships are entitled to be remunerated for salvage services to the same extent as officers and crews of merchant vessels would be rewarded under similar circumstances, they are not entitled to impose terms upon the persons whose property they save, or to refuse to render assistance unless those terms are accepted. (Ct. of App., reversing Adm.) Cargo ex Woosung ..... 50, 239

3. Agreement—Setting aside—Government ship—Officers and crew—Ship's services—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—An agreement so imposed by the captain of a Government ship upon the master of a ship in distress, by which the latter becomes bound to pay a fixed sum for services to be rendered, not merely by the officers and crew, but by the Government ship also, is invalid, as the services of the ship are not to be rewarded under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 484. (Ct. of App.) Id. ..... 50, 239

4. Agreement—Government ship—Officers and crew.—Seemle, that the officers and crew of a Govern-

- ment ship, ordered by Government to render salvage assistance, have no right to make any agreement with the master of the distressed vessel as to the amount of their reward. (Ct. of App.) Id......page 50, 239
5. Apportionment—Agreement—Further services—Persons entitled to share.—When persons agree to render a salvage service and to apportion the salvage in a particular way, and, whilst such services are being performed, further salvage services are rendered, not contemplated by the agreement, the whole body of salvors are entitled to share in the reward, and not only those actually engaged in the further salvage operations. (Adm.) The Cadis and The Boyne ..... 332
6. Apportionment—Custom—Greater risk—Greater reward.—Where there was a custom to share in salvage awards in a particular manner according to the ratings of the salvors on board their ship, but some of the salving crew had exposed themselves to much greater risks than the rest, the court gave them a larger share on equitable principles. (Adm.) The Sarah ..... 542
7. Board of Trade vessels—Right to salvage—Public harbour—"Her Majesty's ships"—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—The Board of Trade can claim salvage in respect of services rendered by vessels employed by them for commercial purposes in and about a public harbour, the property in which is vested in the Board of Trade. The expressions "ships belonging to Her Majesty," and "Her Majesty's ships," in sects. 484, 485 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, are used in their ordinary sense, and apply only to vessels in the Royal Navy, and, semble, those belonging to the public service of a dependency of the British Crown. (Adm. and Ct. of App.) The Cybele ..... 478, 532
8. County Court Admiralty jurisdiction—Property saved under £1000—Amount claimed under £300.—A County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act 1868, has jurisdiction under sect. 3, in claims for salvage wherein the property saved does not exceed £1000, or in the alternative where the amount claimed does not exceed £300. (Adm.) The Glannibanta..... 339
9. County Court Admiralty jurisdiction—Distribution of salvage—Amount recovered without action.—Where a sum of money under £300 has been paid for salvage services rendered, a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction has jurisdiction, in an action for distribution in case of dispute between the salvors, to apportion such sum among the salvors, although such sum has been recovered by agreement with the owners of the saved property and without action brought in the County Court. (Adm.) Id...... 339
10. Derelict—Wreck—Drifting barge—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—A laden barge accidentally breaking loose from her moorings in the river Thames, and drifting about with no one on board, is not derelict, and consequently not "wreck" within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), and persons finding her and mooring her in safety are not precluded from recovering salvage for so doing by reason of their neglecting to comply with the provisions of the 450th section of the above Act, and deliver the barge to the receiver of wreck. (Adm.) The Zeta ..... 73
11. Engagement to render assistance—Lying by ship—Right to reward—Service completed by another ship.—Where a ship is engaged to render assistance to another ship in distress, without a fixed sum being agreed upon, and does remain ready to give assistance, she cannot be deprived of her right to reward by reason of another vessel offering and being engaged to tow her for a less sum than the former ship is willing to accept, but will be entitled to recover a fair sum which will remunerate her for the service rendered, and compensate her for the loss she has sustained. (Adm.) The Maude.....page 50, 239
12. Government ship—Bombay Government—Services of ship—Merchant Shipping Act 1854—Leave to proceed.—A vessel owned by the Bombay Government, and manned by uncommissioned servants of that Government, whose officers carry no Queen's commission, is a "ship belonging to Her Majesty," within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and no salvage reward is recoverable in respect of services rendered by such a vessel, and it is necessary for her officers and crew to obtain the consent of the Lords of the Admiralty in writing before bringing an action for salvage. (Adm. and Ct. of App.) Cargo ex Woosung ..... 332
13. Lien on cargo—Employment by master—Liability of holder of bill of lading.—A person who is by the master of a stranded ship placed in possession of ship and cargo for the purpose of saving the cargo, and who saves the cargo by his exertions, has a lien upon the cargo for his charges, which are in the nature of particular average on the cargo, and the holder of the bill of lading, whose agent induces such person to deliver up the cargo on a promise to pay such charges, is liable for them. (Q. B. Div.) Hopston v. Wendt..... 332
14. Life salvage—Cargo—Liability to contribute—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—Where life salvage is performed, cargo, subsequently saved from the same vessel as the lives, but by persons wholly distinct from the life salvors, is liable to contribute towards the payment of the reward due to the life salvors under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 484. (Adm. Div.) Cargo ex Schiller ..... 332
15. Life salvage—Cargo subsequently saved—Contribution—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—When life salvage is performed, cargo, subsequently saved from the same vessel as the lives, but by persons employed by the owners for the purpose, and wholly distinct from the life salvors, is liable to contribute towards the reward due to the life salvors under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sects. 458, 459. (Ct. of App.) Cargo ex Schiller ..... 332
16. Life salvage—Cargo saved—Ship lost—Liable to contribute.—Where lives and cargo have been saved from a ship, but the ship has been totally lost, the owners of the cargo are liable to pay salvage in respect of the lives, and the owners of the lost ship are not liable to contribute to the payment. Life salvage awards can only be made out of the res saved, and not against owners of a ship personally. (Adm.) Specie ex Sarg..... 332
17. Life salvage—Persons wrecked and saved.—There is no salvage of life entitling a ship to recover reward in the Admiralty Court, if the ship takes off from an island on a bare but inhabited coast a ship's crew and passengers who have been wrecked there, but who previously got ashore in safety, and who are suffering from want of water and exposed to no immediate danger. (Adm.) Woosung..... 332

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

Commanding on station—Transport hars.—The senior naval officer on out of harbour a transport with d a number of men from one of ups, for the purpose of rendering l towing into harbour a ship in ed to share in the sum awarded and the naval officer (being also ficer of the station) who com- from H. M.'s ship is to be con- a charge of the whole expedition led to reward in that capacity. e .....page 11

Advants of value—Evidence.— age action, defendants have filed e of their ship, freight, and cargo, ive been accepted and agreed to , the defendants will not be al- ring to give evidence to decrease im.) The Hanna ..... 503

sal—Costs.—A successful appel- of salvage will get his costs of ig the ordinary custom of the al, notwithstanding the former rivy Council, in such appeals, to (Ct. of App. from Adm.) The ..... 491

sts—Separate actions.—Where : suits have been unnecessarily ourt will only allow one set of t the amount allowed to be dis- y amongst the plaintiffs in the (Adm.) The Sarah ..... 542

cal—Tender under £50—Amount d—County Courts Admiralty Juris- (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71).—No appeal lecision of a County Court in a here there is a tender of less than nder is upheld, the amount ten- amount "decreed or ordered" ty Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction t 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 31. (Adm. word. .... 218

peal—Increase of award.—The l will increase the amount of a f in their opinion, considering the perty saved and of the saving rd of the court below is insuffi- App. from Adm.) The City of ..... 491 ortionment—Agreement.—Where ered into an agreement as to the of salvage, which in the opinion equitable, and not obtained by irt will uphold the agreement and salvage awarded in accordance m.) The James Armstrong ..... 46

est—Demurrage—Damages and action.—Defendants in a salvage ight to recover damages for de- : plaintiffs, who, having bond fide re error of judgment arrested the sel, and carried on the suit to for their alleged salvage services, performed no salvage, but mere (P. C.) The Strathnaver ..... 113

gment debts—Interest—Costs.— poration of the High Court of e High Court of Justice, an award judgment debt, and as such bears e date of entry of judgment, the ring interest from the date of allocatur. (Adm.) The Jones ..... 478

27. Practice—Pleading—Information leading to employment.—A paragraph in a statement of claim for salvage stating that by rendering the salvage service the salving vessel had been prevented from obtaining information which would have resulted in profitable employment, ordered to be struck out. (Adm.) The Cybele .....page 478
28. Practice—Salvage suit—Towage service—Decree.—In a salvage suit, in which there has been no tender made by the defendants, a Court of Admiralty cannot, on finding that no salvage service has been performed by the plaintiffs, and their services were mere towage, make a decree for the amount of towage due to the plaintiffs. (P. C.) The Strathnaver ..... 113
29. Practice—Variation of decree—Mistake in values—Reduction of amount awarded.—Where the Admiralty Court has made a decree awarding salvage upon values furnished by the respective owners of the ship, freight, and cargo, and accepted by the salvors, and afterwards it is discovered by the owner of cargo that he has been ordered to pay upon the value of the cargo without deducting the freight due upon delivery, the court has power to, and will if it sees fit, reduce the amount of salvage, and vary the proportions payable by the respective owners. (Adm.) The James Armstrong ..... 46
30. Services—Carrying information of loss.—Carrying information to a vessel which enables her to render a salvage service is itself a service in the nature of salvage, and will be rewarded accordingly. (Adm.) The Sarah ..... 542
31. Services—Providing navigation—Infected ship.—The loan of a navigator to a vessel in distress by reason of her own navigators being incapacitated by an infectious disease, is a salvage service on the part of the ship lending the navigator. It is a salvage service of a very high order on the part of a salvor to go on board an infected vessel and navigate her. (Adm.) The Shiblender ..... 556
32. Towage—Definition of salvage.—Towage services (as distinguished from salvage services) are work done by one vessel in towing another to expedite her voyage, where nothing more is required than the accelerating her progress; and where a vessel is in neither actual nor imminent probable danger, another vessel engaged to tow her renders towage and not salvage services. (P. C.) The Strathnaver ..... 113
33. Transport—Government charter—Right to salvage.—A ship chartered to Government as a transport under a charter-party in the ordinary form used by Government for chartering ships in time of war, is not demised to the Government in a way which deprives her owners of the right to salvage reward for services rendered by her under the directions of the Queen's naval officers commanding at the place where she is stationed. (Adm.) The Nile ..... 11

SEAMEN.

See Protection of Seamen—Wages—Wrongful Dismissal.

SEA TRANSIT.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 20.

SEAWORTHINESS.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 6, 7, 23, 23—Charter-party, No. 22—Marine Insurance, Nos. 21, 24, 31.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

SECURITY FOR COSTS.

See Collision, Nos. 33, 34, 38—Practice, No. 23.

SECURITY FOR COUNTER-CLAIM.

See Collision, No. 38.

SERVICE.

See Practice, Nos. 25, 26, 27.

SEVERANCE OF ACTION.

See Collision, No. 38.

SHARE OF PROFIT.

See Shipowner, No. 6.

SHERIFF.

See Sale of Ship, No. 3.

SHIPBUILDING CONTRACT.

See Shipowner, No. 7.

SHIPMENT OF GOODS.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 21—Sale of Goods, No. 2.

SHIPMENT, TIME OF.

See Sale of Goods, No. 2.

SHIPOWNER.

1. Bond fide purchaser of shares—Fraud of vendor—Original owner—Registered owner.—An original owner of shares in a ship cannot enforce his title to those shares against a registered owner who has purchased them bond fide for value from a person whose name was on the register as owner, even though such person had been registered through fraud on the original owner. (Adm.) The Horlock ..... page 421
2. Bond fide purchaser of shares—Original owner—Registered owner—Action—Defence of fraud—Pleading—Demurrer.—A statement of defence alleging fraudulent registration of the plaintiff's predecessor in title was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained, on the ground that a fraudulent registration on the part of an intermediate transferee is no defence to an action for possession by a bond fide purchaser for value, without notice of the fraud. (Adm.) Id. ..... 421
3. Claim for account and sale—Mortgagee's right.—Where a part owner of a ship institutes a suit against the ship claiming as against his co-owner an account and a sale of the ship, a mortgagee holding a mortgage, which would not be satisfied by a sale of the ship, is entitled, on intervening in the suit, to a release of the ship and to his costs from the time of his claiming the release. (Adm.) The Eastern Belle ..... 19
4. Ownership action—Injunction—Dealing with shares pendente lite.—An injunction granted ex parte, on application of the plaintiff to prevent defendant dealing, and to restrain the registrar of shipping from registering any dealings, in shares of a ship the subject of a co-ownership action pendente lite. (Adm.) The Horlock ..... 421
5. Practice—Co-ownership action in rem—Default in appearance—Joinder of defendant—Accounts—Reference—Costs.—Where an action is brought in rem against a ship by the owners of certain shares therein claiming possession and as against the managing owner, and the latter in default in appearing, the court will order the managing owner to be joined as a defendant so that his accounts may be investigated, and will give possession to the plaintiffs if they hold a majority of shares; but will not order, inter alia, the reference, a sale of the defendant's share, satisfy the plaintiffs' costs and any sum due at the reference. (Adm.) The Sea Pearl .....

6. Registered managing owner—Matter how control—Agreement as to profits—Liability; negligence—Merchant Shipping Act 1875—3. owner of a ship, who, by a verbal agreement gives up all control over her to the captain, retains a right to one-third of the net profits, is subsequently to the agreement registered "managing owner" under the Merchant Shipping Act 1875, is liable for the negligent management of the vessel by the captain, ship occurring during her employment under charter-party of which the owner knew. Fraser v. March (13 East, 238) distinguished (C. P. Div.) Steel v. Lester and Liles .....
7. Shipbuilding contract—Company—Payment instalments—Shares—Mode of payment—Contract—Authority of directors.—Shipbuilders contracted with a trading company to build for it a steamer, to be paid for by instalments at different stages of the vessel's progress, one-tenth of the whole to be paid in fully paid shares in the company at par, on delivery of the ship. At a meeting between the directors of the company and the shipbuilders on the day that the above contract was signed, the latter had raised an objection to receiving any part of the purchase-money in shares, the chairman and managing director of the company, who had formed a firm carrying on a separate business as cotton brokers under the title of C. G. and Co., gave them the following letter, dated the next day: "We hereby beg to say that we shall do our best to dispose of the stock we propose to you shall take in payment of the last instalment of the steamer, this day contracted for with you. It is not our expectation that we shall have need upon you to take up these shares." The letter signed "C. G. and Co." Before the delivery of the ship an individual member of the firm of shipbuilders applied for some shares in the company on his own account, and the company declined to allot any to new applicants except at 5 per cent. premium. No shares were allotted to the shipbuilders until three years after the delivery of the ship, when the company was about to wind-up. Held, first, that, in the absence of express authority or some evidence of ratification, the letter of C. G. and Co. did not bind the company; secondly, that the shipbuilders having from the time of the delivery of the ship insisted upon payment of the instalment in cash, the company were not bound at that time to allot them shares; and thirdly, that the duty of C. G. and Co. as regards the shares did not arise until they had, vis., on the delivery of the ship, and that a resolution of the company to allot shares except at a premium, before the delivery of a ship, was no evidence as against the shipbuilders that they did not do their best to dispose of the shares; and that C. G. and Co. had in no way prevented shares being allotted to the shipbuilders on or after delivery of the steamer on their part until such allotment. (C. P. Div.) McMillan and Son v.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

Steamship Company (Limited) and C. Law and Co......page 579 e Damage, No. 3—National Character—Unseaworthy Ships—Wreck.

SHIPPING DOCUMENTS.

See Sale of Goods, Nos. 6, 7.

SHIP'S HUSBAND.

See Necessaries, No. 4—Shipowner, No. 6.

SHIPWRIGHT.

Master's Wages and Disbursements, No. 8.

SIGNALS.

See Collision, Nos. 15, 16, 17, 19.

SPEED.

See Collision, No. 54.

STEAMSHIP.

Age of Goods, Nos. 18, 20—Collision, Nos. 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59—Damages.

STEAM TUG.

e Collision, No. 59—Thames Navigation.

STEVEDORE.

See Carriage of Goods, No. 21.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

of lading—Assignment of—Past consideration—Defeat of right to stop.—The transfer of lading for a valuable consideration the rights of stoppage in transitu, and it no difference that no part of the consideration the transfer arose out of such bill of lading. Hence, where an advance is made on the security to be given, and a bill of lading is deposited to cover such advance, is a good transfer of the bill of lading will defeat the right of stoppage. (Ct. of reversing Q. B.) Leask v. Scott.....352, 469

of right—Place of destination—Bills of lading—Documents.—Where goods are shipped consigned to order for account and risk of Co., of B., and the consignors send to agents in L. bills of exchange and shipping notes, and the bills are accepted by W. and he thereupon receive the shipping documents. L. is the place of destination of the goods and the transaction is complete on signing of exchange and handing over the documents the right to stop in transitu ceases at L.

See Whitworth and Co.; Es parte Wain; Es parte Gibbs and Co...... 74

for shipment abroad—Lien on bills of lading and each shipment—Bankruptcy—Right to stop.—Where goods are sold by a merchant in London under a written contract, by which the goods are to be sent to a purchaser, who is to ship them direct to consignees abroad, for sale on his own account, and the vendor is to have a lien on the lading and each shipment; and goods are sold to the purchaser, who ships them and becomes bankrupt without having had the lading, the agreement does not deprive the vendor of his right to stop in transitu, and the goods does not end in London, but continues until the goods reach their destination. (Ct. of App.) Es parte Watson, Re

4. Wharfinger acting as agent for consignor and consignee—Bankruptcy of purchaser—Right to stop.—Where a consignor sends goods by ship to a consignee, and they are delivered by the ship to a wharfinger, who acts on the part of both carrier and consignee, and whose business it is to collect the freights, and not part with the goods until they are paid for, and also to act as wharfinger and carrier for the consignee, and the consignee commits an act of bankruptcy upon which he is adjudicated bankrupt, and the consignors, as unpaid vendors, claim the goods in the hands of the wharfinger before they are claimed by the trustee in bankruptcy, the right of stoppage in transitu is not lost. (Bank.) Es parte Barrow; Re Worsdell.....page 887

STRANDING.

See Discipline, No. 2.

SUING AND LABOURING.

See Marine Insurance, No. 22.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACTS.

See Practice.

SUPREME COURT RULES.

See Practice.

TENDER.

See Salvage, No. 22.

TERMINATION OF RISK.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 9, 23, 29.

THAMES NAVIGATION.

Barge in tow—Licensed lighterman—Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act.—Barges in tow of a steam tug in the river Thames are being "worked or navigated" within the meaning of the Thames Watermen and Lightermen Act 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 33), sect. 66, and must under that section have a licensed lighterman on board and in charge. (C. P. Div.) Elmore and another v. Hunter..... 555

TIME POLICY.

See Marine Insurance, No. 23, 24.

TOTAL LOSS.

See Collision, No. 39—Marine Insurance, Nos. 13, 14, 25, 26.

TOWAGE.

See Salvage, No. 32.

TRANSFER OF SHIP.

See Sale of Ship, Nos. 4, 5.

TRANSPORT.

See Salvage, Nos. 18, 33.

TRESPASS TO REALTY.

See Damage, Nos. 1, 2.

TRINITY OUTPOST.

See Collision, No. 7.

UNSEAWORTHINESS.

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 6, 22, 23—Charter-party, No. 22—Marine Insurance, Nos. 21, 31.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

UNSEAWORTHY SHIPS.

1. Merchant Shipping Act 1873, sect. 12—Complaint—Wording of.—It is not necessary that the complaint, made to the Board of Trade as to the condition of a ship under sect. 12 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), should state that the ship "cannot proceed to sea without serious danger to human life," but it is sufficient if by reasonable inference it can be ascertained from the wording of the complaint that this in fact is the case. Neither is it necessary that the report made upon a survey ordered by the Board should so state, but it is sufficient if it can be ascertained by reasonable inference therefrom that this in fact is the case. (a) (C. P. Div.) Lewis v Gray page 136
2. Merchant Shipping Act 1873—Detention of ship—Survey—Reasonable time.—Semble, that if the first survey held by the Board is unsatisfactory or insufficient, a second survey may be held, but that the Board, cannot upon an order for the detention of a ship for the purpose of holding a survey, justify a detention beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose. (C. P. Div.) Id. page 136

VALUES.

See Salvage, No. 19.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

See Marine Insurance, No. 13—Sale of Goods—Stoppage in Transit.

VIATICUM.

See Wages, Nos. 4, 7.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS.

See Collision, Nos. 40, 41.

VOYAGE POLICY.

See Marine Insurance, Nos. 23, 29.

WAGERING POLICY.

See Marine Insurance, No. 30.

WAGES.

1. Allotment note—Owner—Chartered ship—Merchant Shipping Act 1854, sect. 169—Liability of registered owner. The registered owner of a ship, who charters his ship to a charterer, so that the latter, having the sole use of the ship, finds the stores, pays the crew's wages, does repairs, and appoints the master, the owner only paying insurance on the ship, and having a lien on the cargo and freight for the hire, is not "the owner or any agent, who has authorised the drawing of the note" within the meaning of sect. 169 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, so as to be liable at the instance of the wife of a sailor upon an allotment note signed in her favour by the master and her husband. (Q. B. Div.) Meikleroid (app.) v. West (resp.) page 129
2. County Court Admiralty jurisdiction—Share of fishing adventure—Contract of wages.—A contract that a master mariner shall take a share of a fishing adventure and bear a share of certain disbursements is a contract of wages by the general law maritime, independent of the piling Amendment Act 1873 (36 s. 8, and jurisdiction over such referred on County Courts having dictation by the County Courts Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 2. (Adm.) The Blessing.....

3. Decree—Wages after action.—commences an action in rem for have a decree in that suit for money after the date of the suit, although retained in the master, but he will be entitled in the way of costs for detention money from the commencement date of the decree (Adm.) 7

4. Foreign seamen—Discharge—Consuls' certificate.—Foreign in Great Britain and recover against the foreign ship in which are not entitled as of course to return home, but will obtain it when they have gone or are to return. Semble, their shipping in another men, even for the voyage home them. (Adm.) The Rajahm

5. Practice—Default of appearance—Waive of proceedings.—When sold in a cause in which no appearance entered, and the proceeds remain all preliminary proceedings may be waived, and the matter sent to the court. (Adm.) The Juliana ..

6. Practice—Claim of foreign consul.—The court will not pay the claim of a consul at his request, but will of the parties to satisfy any claim before receiving the money. Juliana ..

7. Practice—Foreign ship—Arrest—Default of appearance—Payment.—When a foreign ship is under arrest and no appearance entered for her, the payment of wages and costs in the hands of a plaintiff in an order the discharge of the crew no suit instituted for their wages. Bridgewater ..

See Master's Wages and

WARRANT

See Carriage of Goods, Nos. 6, Nos. 22, 24—Marine Insurance of Goods, No. 4.

WHARF

See Navigable

WHARFING

See Stoppage in Transit

WINDING

See Master's Wages and

WORKING

See Charter-party

WRECK

Removal of wreck—Harbour Act—Owner—Insurance

(a) The Merchant Shipping Act 1873, sect. 12 is now repealed by the Merchant Shipping Act 1876, but the latter Act contains in sects. 8 and 13 provisions similar to those contained in sect. 12 of the former Act.—Ed.

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

ship obstructing the harbour, s owner at the time of the owner" under the Harbours, Clauses Act 1847, sect. 56, the ship who have paid for a
 the loss and the removal.
Earl of Eglinton v. Norman .....page 471

Salvage, No. 10.

COMMISSIONER.

Discipline, No. 2.

WRIT.

See Practice, Nos. 25, 26, 27.

WRONGFUL DISMISSAL.

Admiralty jurisdiction—County Court jurisdiction.

—A claim for damages for wrongful dismissal of a seaman is within the cognisance of a court having original Admiralty jurisdiction, and, semble of a County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction by statute. The Blessing .....page 561

